

THE ROUGH GUIDE TO INDIA

THE ROUGH GUIDE TO INDIA

This twelfth edition was updated by Nick Edwards, Maria Edwards, Rakhi Nayyar

Contents

INTRODUCTION

Where to go

When to go

Author picks

Things not to miss

Itineraries

BASICS

Getting there

Entry requirements

Getting around

Accommodation

Eating and drinking

Health

The media

Festivals and holidays

Sports

Trekking and outdoor activities

Yoga, meditation and ashrams

Culture and etiquette

Shopping

Travelling with children

Travel essentials

THE GUIDE

- 1 Delhi
- 2 Rajasthan
- 3 Uttar Pradesh
- 4 Uttarakhand
- 5 Madhya Pradesh and Chhattisgarh
- 6 Himachal Pradesh
- 7 Jammu and Kashmir and Ladakh
- 8 Punjab and Haryana
- 9 Gujarat
- 10 Mumbai
- 11 Maharashtra
- 12 Goa
- 13 Kolkata and West Bengal
- 14 Bihar and Jharkhand
- 15 Sikkim
- 16 The Northeast
- 17 Odisha
- 18 Andhra Pradesh and Telangana
- 19 The Andaman Islands
- 20 Tamil Nadu
- 21 Kerala
- 22 Karnataka

CONTEXTS

History.

Religion

Wildlife

Music

Books

Language

Glossary

SMALL PRINT

Introduction to India

India, it is often said, is not a country, but a continent. Stretching from the frozen summits of the Himalayas to the tropical greenery of Kerala, its expansive borders encompass an incomparable range of landscapes, cultures and people. Walk the streets of any Indian city and you'll rub shoulders with representatives of several of the world's great faiths, encounter temple rituals performed since the time of the Egyptian Pharaohs and spot onion-domed mosques erected centuries before the Taj Mahal, as well as quirky echoes of the British Raj on virtually every corner.

That so much of India's past remains discernible today is all the more astonishing given the pace of change since Independence in 1947. Spurred by the free-market reforms of the early 1990s, the economic revolution started by Rajiv Gandhi has transformed the country with new consumer goods, technologies and ways of life. Infrastructure has improved, too, making visiting the country easier than ever before. A growing number of cities boast gleaming new metro systems, and are linked by faster highways and speedier, more comfortable trains. The accommodation sector is blossoming, too, with homestays mushrooming in popularity and new breed of hostels opening up. Even your Indian visa can now be obtained online.

However, the presence in even the most far-flung market towns of ubiquitous wi-fi, the latest smartphones and Mahindra SUVs has thrown into sharp relief the problems that have bedevilled India since long before it became the world's largest secular democracy. Nearly twenty percent of India's inhabitants remain below the poverty line; no other nation on earth has slum settlements on the scale of those in Delhi, Mumbai and Kolkata, nor so many malnourished children, uneducated women and homes without access to clean water and waste disposal.

Many first-time visitors find themselves unable to see past such glaring disparities. Others come expecting a timeless ascetic wonderland and are surprised to encounter one of the most materialistic societies on the planet. Still more find themselves intimidated by what may seem, initially, an incomprehensible and bewildering continent. But for all its jarring juxtapositions, intractable paradoxes and frustrations, India remains an utterly compelling destination. Intricate and worn, its distinctive patina – the stream of life in its crowded bazaars, the ubiquitous filmi music, the pungent aroma of diesel fumes, cooking spices, dust and dung smoke – casts a spell that few forget from the moment they step off a plane. Love it or hate it – and most travellers oscillate between the two – India will shift the way you see the world.

Where to go The best Indian itineraries are the simplest. It just isn't possible to see everything in a single expedition, even if you spent a year trying. Far better, then, to concentrate on one or two specific regions and, above all, to be flexible. Although it requires a deliberate change of pace to venture away from the urban centres, rural India has its own very distinct pleasures. In fact, while Indian cities are undoubtedly adrenalin-fuelled, upbeat places, it is possible – and certainly less stressful – to travel for months around the Subcontinent and rarely have to set foot in one.

FACT FILE

- The Republic of India, whose capital is Delhi, is bordered by Afghanistan, China, Nepal and Bhutan to the north, Bangladesh and Myanmar (Burma) to the east and Pakistan to the west.
- It's the seventh largest country in the world, covering more than three million square kilometres, and has almost reached parity with China in terms of population, at just over 1.4 billion. Hindus comprising eighty percent of the population, Muslims 14 percent, and millions of Christians, Sikhs, Buddhists and Jains. Twenty-three official languages are spoken, along with more than a thousand minor languages and dialects. Hindi is the language of more than forty percent of the population; English is also widely spoken.
- The caste system is pervasive and, although integral to Hindu belief, it also encompasses non-Hindus. It holds special sway in rural areas and may dictate where a person lives and what their occupation is.
- Eighty-two percent of males over 15 are literate, compared to 65.5 percent of females: roughly 74 percent of the total adult population.
- Mawsynram, in the northeastern state of Meghalaya, is the wettest place on Earth, with an average annual deluge of 11,871mm.
- Indian Railways is India's largest employer, with around 1.25 million workers.
- Producing up to two thousand movies each year and turning over around US$4 billion, India's film industry is the largest in the world, in terms of ticket numbers if not box office receipts.

The most-travelled circuit in the country, combining spectacular monuments with the flat, fertile landscape that for many people is archetypally Indian, is the so-called Golden Triangle in the north: Delhi itself, the colonial capital; Agra, home of the Taj Mahal; and the Pink City of Jaipur in Rajasthan. Rajasthan is probably the single most popular state with travellers, who are drawn by its desert scenery, the imposing medieval forts and palaces of Jaisalmer, Jodhpur, Udaipur and Bundi, and by the colourful traditional dress.

East of Delhi, the River Ganges meanders through some of India's most densely populated regions to reach the extraordinary holy Hindu city of Varanasi, where to witness the daily rituals of life and death focused around the waterfront ghats (bathing places) is to glimpse the continuing practice of India's most ancient religious traditions. Further east still is the great city of Kolkata, the capital until early last century of the British Raj and now a teeming metropolis that epitomizes contemporary India's most pressing problems.

INDIA'S SACRED GEOGRAPHY IT'S HARD TO THINK OF A MORE VISIBLY RELIGIOUS COUNTRY THAN INDIA. THE VERY LANDSCAPE OF THE SUBCONTINENT – ITS RIVERS, WATERFALLS, TREES, HILLTOPS, MOUNTAINS AND ROCKS – COMPRISES A VAST SACRED GEOGRAPHY FOR ADHERENTS OF THE DOZEN OR MORE FAITHS ROOTED HERE. CONNECTING THE COUNTRY'S COUNTLESS HOLY PLACES IS A NETWORK OF PILGRIMAGE ROUTES ALONG WHICH TENS OF THOUSANDS OF WORSHIPPERS MAY BE MOVING AT ANY ONE TIME – ON REGULAR TRAINS, SPECIALLY DECORATED BUSES, TINSEL-COVERED BICYCLES, BAREFOOT, ALONE OR IN NOISY FAMILY GROUPS. FOR THE VISITOR, JOINING DEVOTEES IN THE TEEMING TEMPLE PRECINCTS OF THE SOUTH, ON THE GHATS AT VARANASI, AT THE SUFI SHRINES OF AJMER AND DELHI, BEFORE THE NAKED JAIN COLOSSI OF SRAVANABELAGOLA, OR AT ANY ONE OF THE INNUMERABLE RELIGIOUS FESTIVALS THAT PUNCTUATE THE ASTROLOGICAL CALENDAR IS TO EXPERIENCE INDIA AT ITS MOST INTENSE.

The majority of travellers follow the well-trodden Ganges route to reach Nepal, perhaps unaware that the Indian Himalayas offer superlative trekking and mountain scenery to rival any in the range. With travel in Kashmir still largely limited to its capital, Srinagar, and central valley area, Himachal Pradesh – where Dharamsala is the home of a Tibetan community that includes the Dalai Lama himself – and the remote province of Ladakh, with its mysterious lunar landscape and cloud-swept monasteries, have become the major targets for journeys into the mountains. Less visited, but possessing some of Asia's highest peaks, is the niche of Uttarakhand bordering Nepal, where the glacial source of the sacred River Ganges has attracted pilgrims for more than a thousand years. At the opposite end of the chain, Sikkim, north of Bengal, is another low-key trekking destination, harbouring scenery and a Buddhist culture similar to that of neighbouring Bhutan. The hill states of the Northeast, connected to eastern India by a slender neck of land, boast remarkably diverse landscapes and an incredible fifty percent of India's biodiversity.

INDIAN RAILWAYS INDIA'S RAILWAYS, WHICH DAILY TRANSPORT MILLIONS OF COMMUTERS, PILGRIMS, ANIMALS AND HESSIAN-WRAPPED PACKAGES BETWEEN THE FOUR CORNERS OF THE SUBCONTINENT, ARE OFTEN CITED AS THE BEST THING THE BRITISH RAJ BEQUEATHED TO ITS FORMER COLONY. AND YET, WITH ITS HIERARCHICAL LEGION OF CLERKS, COOKS, COOLIES, BEARERS, TICKET INSPECTORS, STATION MANAGERS AND MINISTERS, THE NETWORK HAS BECOME A QUINTESSENTIALLY INDIAN INSTITUTION.

Travelling across India by rail – whether you rough it in dirt-cheap second class or pamper yourself with starched cotton sheets and hot meals in an a/c carriage – is likely to yield some of the most memorable moments of your trip. Open around the clock, the stations in themselves are often great places to watch the world go by, with hundreds of people from all walks of life eating, sleeping, buying and selling, regardless of the hour. This is also where you'll grow familiar with one of the unforgettable sounds of the Subcontinent: the robotic drone of the chaiwala, dispensing cups of hot, sweet tea.

Heading south from Kolkata along the coast, your first likely stop is Konark in Odisha, site of the famous Sun Temple, a giant carved pyramid of stone that lay submerged under sand until its rediscovery at the start of the twentieth century. Tamil Nadu, further south, has also retained its own tradition of magnificent architecture, with towering gopura gateways dominating towns whose vast temple complexes are still the focus of everyday life. Of them all, Madurai, in the far south, is the most stunning, but you could spend months wandering between the sacred sites of the Kaveri Delta and the fragrant Nilgiri Hills, draped in the tea terraces that have become the hallmark of south Indian landscapes. Kerala, near the southernmost tip of the Subcontinent on the western coast, is India at its most tropical and relaxed, its lush backwaters teeming with simple wooden craft of all shapes and sizes, and red-roofed towns and villages all but invisible beneath a canopy of palm trees. Further up the coast is Goa, the former Portuguese colony whose 100km coastline is fringed with beaches to suit all tastes and budgets and whose towns hold whitewashed Christian churches that could almost have been transplanted from Europe.

North of here sits Mumbai, an ungainly beast that has been the major focus of the nationwide drift to the big cities. Centre of the country's formidable popular movie industry, it reels along on an undeniable energy that, after a few days of acclimatization, can prove addictive. Beyond Mumbai is the state of Gujarat, renowned for the unique culture and crafts of the barren Kutch region.

On a long trip, it makes sense to pause and rest every few weeks. Certain places have fulfilled that function for generations, such as the Himalayan resort of Manali, epicentre of India's hashish-producing area, and the many former colonial hill stations that dot the country, from Ootacamund (Ooty), in the far south, to that archetypal British retreat, Shimla, immortalized in the writing of Rudyard Kipling. Elsewhere, the combination of sand and the sea, and a picturesque rural or religious backdrop – such as at Varkala in Kerala, Gokarna in Karnataka, and the remoter beaches of Goa – are usually enough to loosen even the tightest itineraries, as is the interior wonderland of Hampi, also in Karnataka.

< Back to Intro

When to go

India's weather is extremely varied, something you must take into account when planning your trip. The most influential feature of the Subcontinent's climate is the wet season, or monsoon. This breaks on the Keralan coast at the end of May, working its way northeast across the country over the following month and a half. While it lasts, regular and prolonged downpours are interspersed with bursts of hot sunshine, and the pervasive humidity can be intense. At the height of the monsoon – especially in the jungle regions of the northwest and the low-lying delta lands of Bengal – flooding can severely disrupt communications, causing widespread destruction. In the Himalayan foothills, landslides are common, and entire valley systems can be cut off for weeks.

By September, the monsoon has largely receded from the north, but it takes another couple of months before the clouds disappear altogether from the far south. The east coast of Andhra Pradesh and Tamil Nadu, and the south of Kerala, get a second drenching between October and December, when the “northwest” or “retreating” monsoon sweeps in from the Bay of Bengal. By mid-December, however, most of the Subcontinent enjoys clear skies and relatively cool temperatures.

INDIAN FOOD

Indian cooking is as varied as the country itself, with dozens of distinctive regional culinary traditions ranging from the classic Mughlai cuisine of the north to the feisty coconut- and chilli-infused flavours of the south; these are often a revelation to first-time visitors, whose only contact with Indian food will probably have been through the stereotypical Anglo-Indian dishes served up in the majority of restaurants overseas. Best known is the cuisine of north India, with its signature biryanis, tandooris and rich cream- and yogurt-based sauces accompanied with thick naan breads, evidence of the region's long contact with Central Asia. The food of south India is light years away, exemplified by the ubiquitous vegetarian "meal" – a huge mound of rice served on a banana leaf and accompanied with fiery pickles – or by the classic masala dosa, a crisp rice pancake wrapped around a spicy potato filling. There's also a host of regional cuisines to explore – Punjabi, Bengali, Gujarati, Goan, Hyderabad, Keralan and Kashmiri, to name just a few of the most distinctive – each of which has its own special dishes, spices and cooking techniques.

AVERAGE TEMPERATURES AND RAINFALL

	Jan	Feb	Mar	Apr	May	Jun	Jul	Aug	Sep	Oct	Nov	Dec
CHENNAI (TN)
Max/min °C	28/20	31/21	33/23	36/26	38/27	37/27	35/26	34/26	34/25	32/24	29/22	28/21
Max/min °F	83/68	87/70	91/74	96/79	100/81	99/81	95/78	94/78	93/77	89/75	85/72	83/70
Rainfall (mm)	28	33	5	13	38	71	122	137	160	157	152	152
DELHI
Max/min °C	21/7	24/9	31/14	36/20	41/26	39/28	36/27	34/26	34/24	34/18	29/11	23/8
Max/min °F	70/63	75/48	88/57	97/68	106/79	102/82	97/81	93/79	93/75	93/64	84/52	73/46
Rainfall (mm)	23	18	13	8	13	74	180	173	117	10	3	10
KOLKATA (WB)
Max/min °C	27/13	29/15	34/21	36/24	36/25	33/26	32/26	32/26	32/26	32/24	29/18	26/13
Max/min °F	81/55	84/59	93/70	97/75	97/77	91/79	90/79	90/79	90/79	90/75	84/64	79/55
Rainfall (mm)	10	31	36	43	140	297	325	328	252	114	20	5
MUMBAI (M)
Max/min °C	28/19	28/19	30/22	32/24	33/27	32/26	29/25	29/24	29/24	32/24	32/23	31/21
Max/min °F	82/66	82/66	86/72	90/75	91/81	90/79	84/77	84/75	84/75	90/75	90/73	88/70
Rainfall (mm)	3	3	3	0	18	485	617	340	264	64	13	3
PANJIM (GOA)
Max/min °C	32/19	32/21	32/23	33/25	33/26	30/24	29/24	28/24	29/24	32/24	33/22	32/21
Max/min °F	90/66	90/70	90/73	91/77	91/79	86/75	84/75	82/75	84/75	90/75	91/72	90/70
Rainfall (mm)	0	0	0	0	50	580	650	400	150	90	10	0

Mid-winter sees the most marked contrasts between the climates of north and south India. While Delhi, for example, may see frost and be ravaged by chill winds blowing off the snowfields of the Himalayas, the Tamil plains and coastal Kerala, more than 1000km south, still stew under fierce post-monsoon sunshine. As spring gathers pace, the centre of the Subcontinent starts to heat up again, and by late March thermometers nudge 33°C across most of the Gangetic Plains and Deccan plateau. Temperatures peak in May and early June, when anyone who can retreats to the hill stations. Above the baking Subcontinental land mass, hot air builds up and sucks in humidity from the southwest, causing the onset of the monsoon in late June, and bringing relief to millions of overheated Indians.

The best time to visit most places, therefore, is during the cool, dry season, between November and March. Delhi and Agra can be chilly but are mostly mild, while Varanasi, Rajasthan and Madhya Pradesh are ideal at this time, and temperatures in Goa and central India remain comfortable. The constant heat of the south becomes stifling in May and June, so aim to be in Tamil Nadu and Kerala between January and March. From May onwards, the Himalayas grow more accessible, and the trekking season reaches its peak in August and September while the rest of the Subcontinent is being soaked by the rains.

< Back to Intro

Author picks

Our authors have crossed the length and breadth of India in search of the most impressive monuments, sumptuous food and memorable journeys. Here's a list of their personal highlights.

Naga knees-up The spectacular Hornbill Festival held in early December brings together the tribes of Nagaland dressed in astonishingly beautiful finery for shows of martial arts, dance, archery and music.

Microbrewery bars Beer aficionados should check out the wave of small bars brewing their own ales and lagers in Gurgaon, Chandigarh, Mumbai and Bengaluru.

The Buddha Trail Buddhism may be bigger elsewhere nowadays, but India is where it all began, and Buddhist pilgrims from across the world flock to sites such as Sarnath, Kushinagar, Bodhgaya and Nalanda.

Masked trance Nothing encapsulates the otherworldly feel of the deep south like the masked spirit possession theyyem rituals enacted in villages around the town of Kannur, Kerala.

Toy trains A marvel of Victorian engineering, the “toy train” from Siliguri to Darjeeling is just one of India's amazing narrow-gauge mountain railways. The others run from Kalka to Shimla, Pathankot to Joginder Nagar, Neral to Matheran and Mettupalayam to Ooty.

Gilded vision Hypnotic kirtans (hymns) mingle to magical effect with the reflections of the Sikhs' holiest shrine in Amrit Sarovar tank – an intoxicating image of spirituality.

To the source Follow a winding dirt trail through the Himalayas to the source of the sacred River Ganges, where yogis and sadhus bathe in icy water emanating from a glacier.

Slow cooking Savour the age-old recipes of the Muslim courts of Hyderabad and Awadh in Dum Pukht, Delhi's ITC Maurya and Mumbai's ITC Maratha hotels.

Our author recommendations don't end here. We've flagged up our favourite places – a perfectly sited hotel, an atmospheric café, a special restaurant – throughout the Guide, highlighted with the ★ symbol.

Tim Draper/Rough Guides
THEYYAM RITUAL, KERALA

Shutterstock

SIKHS BATHING IN THE HOLY WATERS AT AMRIT SAROVAR

< Back to Intro

things not to miss

It's not possible to see everything India has to offer in one trip, and we don't suggest you try. What follows is a selective taste of the country's highlights: outstanding buildings, natural wonders, spectacular festivals and unforgettable journeys. All entries have a page reference to take you straight into the Guide, where you can find out more.

iStock

1 JAISALMER

Honey-coloured citadel, emerging from the sands of the Thar Desert.

Shutterstock

2 HOT SPRING OF DIRANG

Set amidst apple and kiwi orchards, the tranquil Hot Springs in Dirang in Arunachal Pradesh revitalize body and soul.

Shutterstock

3 KONARK

A colossal thirteenth-century temple, buried under sand until its rediscovery by the British.

Shutterstock

4 GOKARNA

The beautiful beaches on the edge of this temple town are popular with budget travellers fleeing the commercialism of nearby Goa.

Shutterstock

5 TAJ MAHAL

Simply the world's greatest building: Shah Jahan's monument to love fully lives up to all expectations.

iStock

6 THRISSUR PURAM

More than one hundred sumptuously caparisoned elephants march in Kerala's biggest temple festival, accompanied by ear-shattering south Indian drum orchestras.

iStock

7 KHAJURAHO

Immaculately preserved temples renowned for their uncompromisingly erotic carvings.

Tim Draper/Rough Guides

8 BELUM CAVES

A mysterious underground world awaits in Andhra Pradesh and the second largest cave system on the Indian subcontinent.

Shutterstock

9 KEOLADEO NATIONAL PARK, BHARATPUR

Asia's most famous bird reserve, where millions of migrants nest each winter. The perfect antidote to the frenzy and pollution of nearby Agra and Jaipur.

Shutterstock

10 THIKSE

The most architecturally impressive of the many dramatic monasteries within striking distance of Leh.

11 ORCHHA

This semi-ruined former capital of the Bundela rajas is an architectural gem, rising up through the surrounding forest.

iStock

12 VARANASI

City of Light, founded by Shiva, where the bathing ghats beside the Ganges teem with pilgrims.

Shutterstock

13 MEHRANGARH FORT, JODHPUR

The epitome of Rajput power and extravagance, its apartments as sumptuous as the fort is imposing.

Shutterstock

14 AMRITSAR

The largest city in Punjab, and site of the fabled Golden Temple, the Sikhs' holiest shrine.

iStock

15 MAMALLAPURAM

A fishing and stone-carving village, with magnificent boulder friezes, shrines and the sea-battered Shore Temple.

iStock

16 KATHAKALI

Kerala is the place to experience kathakali and other esoteric ritual theatre forms.

Tim Draper/Rough Guides

17 ELLORA CAVES

Buddhist, Hindu and Jain caves, including the colossal Hindu Kailash temple, carved from a spectacular volcanic ridge at the heart of the Deccan plateau.

18 RATH YATRA, PURI

Three colossal chariots with brightly coloured canopies are pulled by crowds of devotees through the streets of eastern India's holiest town.

19 GANGOTRI AND THE GAUMUKH GLACIER

The holy and atmospheric village of Gangotri serves as a base for the trek into the heart of the Hindu faith – Gaumukh, the source of the Ganges.

20 HAMPI/VIJAYANAGAR

The capital of a great Hindu empire, sacked five centuries ago to leave a site strewn with ruins and medieval sculptures.

Shutterstock

21 UDAIPUR

Arguably the most romantic city in India, with ornate Rajput palaces floating in the middle of two shimmering lakes.

Shutterstock

22 PALOLEM

Exquisite crescent-shaped beach in Goa's relaxed south, famous for its dolphins and local alcoholic spirit, feni.

iStock

23 DURGA PUJA

An exuberant festival held in September or October, when every street and village erects a shrine to the goddess Durga. Kolkata has the most lavish festivities.

24 MANALI-LEH HIGHWAY

India's epic Himalayan road trip, crossing some of the highest mountain passes in the world, is the most popular approach to Ladakh, and revered by motorbikers, cyclists and drivers alike.

iStock

25 PUSHKAR CAMEL MELA

November sees the largest livestock market on earth, where thousands of Rajasthani herders in traditional costume converge on the desert oasis of Pushkar to trade and bathe in the sacred lake.

26 ZANSKAR

A barren moonscape with extraordinary scenery and challenging trails over the high passes.

iStock

27 MADURAI

Definitive south Indian city, centred on a spectacular medieval temple.

Shutterstock

28 DHARAMSALA

Perched on the edge of the Himalayas, this is the home of the Dalai Lama and Tibetan Buddhism in exile.

Tim Draper/Rough Guides

29 BOATING ON THE BACKWATERS OF KERALA

Lazy boat trips wind through the lush tropical waterways of India's deep south.

Tim Draper/Rough Guides

30 FATEHPUR SIKRI

The Mughal emperor Akbar's elegant palace complex now lies deserted on a ridge near Agra, but remains one of India's architectural masterpieces.

< Back to Intro

Simon Bracken/Rough Guides

Itineraries

India is simply too vast to explore in a single trip. It makes more sense to focus on one, two or perhaps three regions, depending on your time frame. The trips below give a flavour of what the country has to offer and what we can plan and book for you at roughguides.com/trips.

THE GOLDEN TRIANGLE

No other region of India packs in as many awe-inspiring monuments as the so-called “Golden Triangle” connecting Delhi, Agra and Jaipur. Allow at least a week to complete the circuit, with a diversion south to the tiger reserve at Ranthambore if you’ve time to spare.

- ① Delhi Start out at Shah Jahan's mighty Red Fort in Mughal Old Delhi, then work your way south through the medieval monuments of the city's southern suburbs.
- ② Agra Cross the Yamuna River by boat in the early morning for an unforgettable view of the Taj just after sunrise, then spend the rest of the day ticking off the city's other Mughal splendours.
- ③ Fatehpur Sikri Overnight at a guesthouse below the deserted capital of Emperor Akbar to see its deep-red sandstone architecture at its most ethereal, in the diffuse light of dusk and dawn.
- ④ Keoladeo National Park Bicycle safaris along the dirt tracks and banks that crisscross this teeming bird reserve offer a perfect antidote to the noise and traffic of India's northern cities.
- ⑤ Jaipur Climb up to the ochre-walled palace of Amber Fort, before spending a day in the textile and gemstone bazaars of the Rajasthani capital – a riot of quintessentially Indian colour.
- ⑥ Shekhawati Set on the fringes of the Thar Desert, the painted havelis (walled mansions) in the market towns of this once rich area make the ideal stopover on the journey back to Delhi.

AROUND THE “LAND OF KINGS”

India's dazzling desert state, Rajasthan, tends to be the destination of choice for most first-time travellers to India, and with good reason. You'll need at least a month to really do it justice, or three weeks at a pinch.

- ① Jaipur The Pink City, with its hectic streets and flamboyant Rajput architecture, is a real baptism of fire. Hilltop viewpoints such as the Tiger Fort and Monkey Temple offer welcome respite from the mayhem.
- ② Ranthambore If sighting a tiger is a priority, aim to spend at least a couple of nights at a camp near this world-famous reserve, where big cats prowl the shores of a ruin-studded lake.
- ③ Pushkar Ringed by the white domes and sacred ghats of Hindu shrines, Pushkar makes a perfect base for leisurely desert walks and souvenir hunts.
- ④ Udaipur Dine by candlelight on a haveli rooftop for the ultimate view of the Sisodia maharanas' fairytale palaces, rising from the banks of glassy Fateh Sagar lake.

⑤ Jodhpur Perched on the rim of sheer sandstone cliffs, Rajasthan's most spectacular medieval fortress, Mehrangarh, towers above the warren-like old city painted a hundred shades of sky blue.

⑥ Jaisalmer A long trip across the Thar is rewarded by the sublime vision of Jai Singh's yellow-stone citadel floating above the sand flats. Camel treks can take you deep into the surrounding desert.

⑦ Bikaner Some quirky early twentieth-century architecture and a temple where thousands of rats run free are two vestiges of this city's former prominence on the trans-Thar caravan route.

⑧ Nawalgarh After a succession of big cities, this small town on the fringes of the desert, famed for its elaborately painted merchants' houses, makes an enjoyable base for trips to nearby forts and havelis.

Create your own itinerary with Rough Guides. Whether you're after adventure or a family-friendly holiday, we have a trip for you, with all the activities you enjoy doing and the sights you want to see. All our trips are devised by local experts who get the most out of the destination. Visit www.roughguides.com/trips to chat with one of our travel agents.

THE DEEP SOUTH

From the boulder-strewn plains of Tamil Nadu to the lush, intensely tropical coastal strip of Kerala, India's deep south offers a succession of dramatic landscapes and world-class historic monuments. You'll need at least three weeks to cover this route comfortably, or two at a rushed pace travelling with your own transport.

① Chennai The old colonial hub of Fort St George is the standout sight of the Tamil capital, but there's also a wealth of succulent southern cuisine on offer.

② Mamallapuram Sculpted a dozen or more centuries ago by the Pallava kings, Mamallapuram holds a tempting combination of ancient stonework and breezy tropical beaches.

- ③ Puducherry Soak up the lingering Gallic ambience of France's former colony on the Coromandel Coast, ideally from the confines of a heritage hotel.
- ④ Thanjavur The mighty Brihadishwara Temple and famous collection of Chola bronzes in the town's art gallery make Thanjavur the perfect springboard for explorations of the Kaveri Delta region.
- ⑤ Tiruchirapalli \(Trichy\) Gaze from the summit of Trichy's exotic rock fort across the Kaveri River to the largest temple complex in India, on the island of Srirangam.
- ⑥ Madurai The shrine of the Fish-Eyed Goddess is Tamil Nadu's greatest living monument, renowned for its soaring, multicoloured, deity-encrusted gateway towers.
- ⑦ Periyar Scale the Western Ghat range to enter the jungles of Kerala's Cardamom Hills, where the Periyar Wildlife Sanctuary offers the chance to sight elephants from a punted raft.
- ⑧ Alappuzha This former colonial trading port provides the entry point for trips into the surrounding backwater region of Kuttanad – a watery world like no other in Asia.
- ⑨ Fort Cochin The heritage hotels, arty cafés and funky boutiques of Kerala's historic harbour town are the ideal end point for a tour of India's far south.

A HIMALAYAN ODYSSEY

Experience the contrasting landscapes of the world's greatest mountain range with this two- to three-week journey from the northern plains to the fringes of the Tibetan Plateau and idyllic Vale of Kashmir.

- ① Shimla Trundle on the toy train from Kalka through the foothills to this quintessentially Raj-era hill station, from where a magnificent spread of distant snow peaks is visible.
- ② Manali Lush forests of deodar cedars, apple orchards and giant, ice-dusted summits flank the hill resort of Manali, in the Kullu Valley – starting point of the trans-Himalayan highway.

③ Leh A breathless, two-day journey across a vast desert of scree and dizzying passes brings you to the capital of Ladakh, marooned in the high Indus Valley.

④ The Ladakhi lakes Charter a jeep for the trip southeast to the hypnotically beautiful altitude lakes of Pangong Tso and Tso Moriri.

⑤ Kargil Fairytale Buddhist monasteries and stupendous mountain scenery characterize the long haul to the mid-point on the journey to Kashmir, marked by this Shia Muslim market town.

⑥ Srinagar Laze on the deck of a houseboat sipping spiced tea while the shadows lengthen on the surrounding mountainsides and shikara canoes filled with fruit and flowers paddle past.

PRAYER FLAGS, RED PANDAS AND TRIBES

Kolkata, the capital of West Bengal, is the launch pad for this classic trip through the tea estates around Darjeeling, Sikkim and Northeast India, a beautiful, predominantly Buddhist region in the lap of the Himalayas. You could cover the route in three weeks.

① Kolkata Join the flood of commuters crossing the Howrah Bridge, admire the spectacular monuments of the British Empire and discover one of India's tastiest regional cuisines.

② Darjeeling Amazing views of distant Kanchenjunga, a quaint Raj-era vibe and the famous Toy Train ride up from the plains account for the perennial appeal of India's principal tea hub.

③ Rumtek A quiet alternative to the capital Gangtok, Rumtek is also the site of a spectacular Buddhist monastery.

④ Maenam Sanctuary Tackle the lung-stretching, 1000m ascent of Maenam mountain from Ravangla town for a tantalizing panoramic view of the snow peaks to the north.

⑤ Pemayangtse The poster boy for northeast Himalayan monasteries, Pemayangtse offers the added bonus of spectacular vistas of Kanchenjunga.

⑥ Nongriat Hike 3000 steps to gape at the incredible double decker living root bridge, and stay the night to experience Khasi village life without the crowds.

- ⑦ Tawang Stop by the Monpa villages of Bomdila and Dirang and their valleys strewn with century-old gompas, and then cross the glacial Sela Pass to reach the world's second biggest Buddhist monastery.
- ⑧ Majuli Island Explore the world's largest, and shrinking, riverine island on a bicycle and meet the Mising and Assamese peoples that peacefully cohabit it.
- ⑨ Dzukou Valley Short yet most rewarding hike to a high-altitude valley of rolling green mounds between Nagaland and Manipur, blooming with a myriad colourful flowers in the wet season.

THE DECCAN TRAIL

Despite its extraordinary wealth of historic monuments, the Deccan region of central India sees comparatively few visitors. The rewards for those who do make it are considerable: a succession of astonishing temple sites, crumbling tombs, mosques and deserted capitals spanning sixteen centuries of civilization. Allow at least three weeks for this unforgettable trip.

- ① Hyderabad The convoluted ruins of medieval Golconda, on the outskirts of the city, followed by a climb of the Charminar (“Four Minarets”) mosque and a slap-up Hyderabadi feast are the perfect preamble for what lies ahead.
- ② Bidar Resembling a town on the Central Asian Silk Route, Bidar’s rambling fort-palace, madrasa, tombs and metal workshops recall this region’s medieval Persian roots.
- ③ Vijayapura \(Bijapur\) For three centuries, Bijapur served as the capital of the Deccan. An unparalleled crop of monuments survive from the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, including India’s largest domed tomb, the mighty Gol Gumbaz.
- ④ Badami, Aihole and Pattadakal The Deccan’s ancient Hindu heyday is represented by this trio of wonderful sites – a feast of enigmatic rock-cut caves, monkey-infested temples and tumbledown forts – in the middle of nowhere.
- ⑤ Hampi Rent a bicycle to explore the expansive, beautifully carved remains of medieval India’s most splendid city, set amid a dreamy landscape of banana groves and boulder hills.

⑥ Gokarna This compact pilgrimage town on the Konkan coast holds plenty of traditional atmosphere, and a crop of gorgeous beaches around the headland to the south.

⑦ Goa For a self-indulgent spell soaking up the rays and surf of the Konkan, Goa's hard to beat. Aim for one of the less-developed resorts such as Agonda or Patnem in the south of the state.

ACROSS THE HEART OF INDIA

Travelling across central India from Mumbai on the Arabian Sea to Puri on the Bay of Bengal gives you the chance to see some of the country's most compelling attractions, relax by the beach, and then fly out from Kolkata. Realistically, you'll need a month for this route, though it could be done in three weeks at a canter.

① Mumbai Dynamic and exhilarating, this vast megalopolis bombards the senses with the extremes of urban India, and is an excellent place to sample some of the country's finest dining.

② Aurangabad A superb base from which to visit the breathtaking cave sculptures and carvings at Ellora and Ajanta. Check out, too, the city's own "false Taj", the Bibi-ka-Maqbara.

③ Khajuraho Hidden away in India's very centre, this medieval temple complex is decorated with the most eye-popping array of erotica you'll find on any religious building anywhere.

④ Lucknow Visit the now-ruined Residency in the capital of Uttar Pradesh, where a besieged British contingent famously held out for five months during the 1857 uprising. Don't leave without sampling the city's succulent dum pukht cuisine.

⑤ Varanasi The spiritual capital of India, and one of the oldest cities on earth, where you can see bathing and cremations by the sacred River Ganges, and watch the kids fly their kites from your terrace while monkeys scurry around the rooftops.

⑥ Bodhgaya The Buddha achieved enlightenment while sitting under a bodhi tree at Bodhgaya, one of a trio of sacred Buddhist sites within easy striking distance of Varanasi.

7 Puri Home of the famous annual Jagannath “Car Festival” (Rath Yatra), Puri is also a low-key beach resort, popular with Indian families and Western backpackers, and an excellent place to recharge your batteries.

< Back to Intro

Shutterstock

MUMBAI'S VICTORIA TERMINUS, ALSO KNOWN AS CST

Basics

Getting there

Entry requirements

Getting around

Accommodation

Eating and drinking

Health

The media

Festivals and holidays

Sports

Trekking and outdoor activities

Yoga, meditation and ashrams

Culture and etiquette

Shopping

Travelling with children

Travel essentials

Getting there

Although it's usually possible to arrive overland from neighbouring Nepal, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Bhutan, most visitors fly into India. There are numerous nonstop services from the UK, plus a few nonstop flights from North America and two from Australia. Most of these arrive at either Delhi or Mumbai, although from the UK it's also possible to reach Chennai, Hyderabad and Bengaluru without stopping.

Fares worldwide always depend on the season, with the highest being roughly from November to March, when the weather in India is best; fares drop during the shoulder seasons – April to May and August to early October – and you'll get the best prices during the low season, June and July. The most expensive fares of all are those coinciding with Diwali in October/November, when demand peaks as Indian emigrants travel home for holidays with their families.

For Goa or Kerala, you may find it cheaper to pick up a bargain package deal from a tour operator. A longstanding government prohibition on flight-only charters was lifted in 2019 and the restriction of 28 days on the period of time a charter ticket can cover was also dropped. It is also now possible to buy one-way charter flights.

If arriving overland, the border with Nepal is the least problematic and most popular, with the best crossing located at Sunauli (a long early morning bus journey from Kathmandu). You can walk across the border here 24-hours a day, but vehicles only pass through between 6am and 10pm, and you'll need US dollars with you to pay for your visa. The Phuentsholing-Jaigaon border crossing is the best option for entering from Bhutan, and the Benapole-Petrapole crossing is the most popular for those coming from Bangladesh. The Pakistan border is one of the most heavily guarded in the world and there are just five crossing points, the best of which is at Wagah, where a daily lowering of the flags ceremony is a popular tourist attraction.

Flights from the UK and Ireland

It takes between eight and eleven hours to fly from the UK direct to India. A number of carriers fly nonstop from London Heathrow to Delhi and Mumbai; these currently include Air India (www.airindia.com), Virgin Atlantic (www.virgin-atlantic.com) and British Airways (www.ba.com), who also fly nonstop to Chennai, Hyderabad and Bengaluru. Numerous other European and Middle Eastern carriers offer one-stop services via their home city in Europe or the Gulf. There are direct flights with Air India between Birmingham and Delhi, but if departing from elsewhere in the UK and Ireland you'll have to take an indirect flight, changing planes at either Heathrow or somewhere else in Europe, the Middle East or Asia. Indirect routes, especially those via the Gulf, offer the best bargains, especially at slack times.

Flights from the US and Canada

India is on the other side of the planet from the US and Canada. If you live on the east coast it's quicker to travel via Europe, while from the west coast it's roughly the same distance (and price) whether you travel via Europe or the Pacific. There are currently nonstop flights from New York to Delhi and Mumbai on Air India and United (www.united.com). Otherwise, you'll probably stop over somewhere in Europe (most often London), the Gulf, or both. Nonstop flights take around 15–16 hours, while indirect flights can take nearly twice as long. Apart from Air India's nonstop service from San Francisco to Delhi (16hr), you will have to change when travelling from the west coast.

Air Canada (www.aircanada.com) fly nonstop from Toronto to Delhi (14hr); otherwise, you'll have to travel via a connecting city in the US, Europe or Asia with a minimum travel time of around 20 hours.

Flights from Australia, New Zealand and South Africa

Air India offer nonstop services to Delhi from Melbourne and Sydney, each taking around thirteen hours; otherwise you'll have to make at least one change of plane in a Southeast Asian hub city (usually Hong Kong, Kuala Lumpur, Singapore or Bangkok) with airlines like AirAsia or Fly Scoot. There are no direct flights from Auckland, which is the cheapest departure point in New Zealand.

A BETTER KIND OF TRAVEL

At Rough Guides we are passionately committed to travel. We believe it helps us understand the world we live in and the people we share it with – and of course tourism is vital to many developing economies. But the scale of modern tourism has also damaged some places irreparably, and climate change is accelerated by most forms of transport, especially flying. We encourage all our authors to consider the carbon footprint of the journeys they make in the course of researching our guides.

There are no nonstop flights between South Africa and India, with most services routing via Addis Ababa, Nairobi or the Gulf.

Round-the-world tickets

If India is only one stop on a longer journey, you might want to consider buying a Round-the-World (RTW) ticket, valid for one year. Some travel agents can sell you an “off-the-shelf” RTW ticket that will have you touching down in about half a dozen cities (Delhi and Mumbai feature on many itineraries); others will have to assemble one for you, which can be tailored to your needs but is apt to be more expensive.

Packages and tours

Lots of operators run package holidays to India, covering activities ranging from trekking and wildlife-watching through to general sightseeing or just lying on the beach, not to mention more specialist-interest tours focusing on anything from motorbike adventures to food. In addition, many companies can also arrange tailor-made tours where you plan your own itinerary. Specialist trips such as trekking and tailor-made tours do not necessarily work out a lot more expensive than organizing everything independently, especially if you want a degree of comfort. Tour operators pay a lot less for better-class hotels and flights than you would, plus they save you time and hassle by knowing the best hotels, routes and sights to feature. On the other hand, a typical package tour can rather isolate you from the country, shutting you off in air-conditioned hotels and cars.

Agents and operators

TRAVEL AGENTS

North South Travel UK ☎01245 905 166, www.northsouthtravel.co.uk. Friendly, competitive travel agency, offering discounted fares worldwide. Profits are used to support projects in the developing world, especially the promotion of sustainable tourism.

Redtag Canada ☎1 866 573 3824; www.redtag.ca. Canadian youth and student travel firm.

Trailfinders UK ☎020 7084 6500, Ireland ☎01 677 7888, Australia ☎1300 780 212; www.trailfinders.com. One of the best-informed and most efficient agents for independent travellers.

TUI www.tui.co.uk. Package holiday giants who operate charter flights to Goa from 21 UK airports.

USIT Ireland ☎01 602 1906, www.usit.ie. Ireland's main student and youth travel specialists.

TOUR OPERATORS

Audley Travel UK ☎01993 460 996, www.audleytravel.com. Tailor-made and small-group tours that use interesting accommodation (homestays, tented camps and heritage properties); they're also strong on wildlife.

Cox & Kings UK ☎020 7873 5000, www.coxandkings.co.uk. Established in India in 1758, with upmarket group and private tours, many featuring Rajasthan and Agra, plus the Palace on Wheels private rail journey.

Exodus UK ☎020 3993 2193, Ireland ☎01 804 7153, US ☎1 844 421 0109, Canada ☎1 844 520 1090, Australia ☎1300 131 564, New Zealand ☎0800 643 997; www.exodus.co.uk. Experienced specialists in small-group itineraries, treks and overland tours.

Explore Worldwide UK ☎01252 240 457, US ☎1 888 866 7720, Australia ☎1300 439 756, New Zealand ☎0800 269 263; www.explore.co.uk. Wide range of small-group adventure holidays with exceptional local guides.

G Adventures UK ☎020 7313 6953; www.gadventures.com. Group tours for all budgets and ages, though some specifically geared towards 18–39-year-olds.

GeoEx US ☎1 888 570 7108, www.geoex.com. Unusual group and customized tours, ranging from Tamil Nadu temple trips to Sikkim village walks.

High Places UK ☎0114 352 0060, www.highplaces.co.uk. Sheffield-based trekking and mountaineering specialists; they also run an interesting sixteen-day tour through Kerala.

Insider Tours UK ☎07964 375 994, www.insider-tours.com. Some of the most original, “hands-on” and ethical itineraries on the market, taking visitors to wonderful off-track corners of Kerala, Goa, the Northeast and elsewhere.

Intrepid UK ☎0808 274 5111, www.intrepidtravel.com. Small group tours for varying budgets across India, including Rajasthan, South India and overland from Kathmandu to Delhi.

Jules Verne UK ☎020 3811 5784, www.vjv.co.uk. Classic heritage tours, including some by rail.

Kerala Connections UK ☎01892 722440, www.keralaconnections.co.uk. Itineraries in Kerala, as well as Tamil Nadu, Karnataka, Goa and the Andamans, for a wide range of budgets.

Mountain Kingdoms UK ☎01453 844400, www.mountainkingdoms.co.uk. Quality treks in Sikkim, Garhwal, Himachal Pradesh, Ladakh and Arunachal Pradesh, plus a Kerala spice trail.

Myths and Mountains US ☎1 800 670 6984, www.mythsandmountains.com. Special-interest trips (tailor-made or group) to some very unusual places, ranging from the mountains of Sikkim to deepest Gujarat, with the emphasis on culture, crafts and religion.

Pettitts Travel UK ☎01892 515 966, 🌐pettitts.co.uk. Established in 1988, India experts specialising in arranging unique and authentic tailor-made holidays to all regions of the country including Rajasthan, Kerala, Tamil Nadu and North East India.

SD Enterprises ☎020 8903 3411, 🌐indiarail.co.uk. Run by Indian rail experts, SD Enterprises put together itineraries for independent travellers wanting to explore India by train, plus a range of non-choo choo choices.

Unwind Worldwide UK ☎020 3282 7684, 🌐unwindworldwide.com. Wide range of group and tailor-made tours covering most of India.

< Back to Basics

Entry requirements

Almost everyone requires a visa before travelling to India, although online applications are now accepted for shorter visits. If you're going to study or work, you'll need to apply for a special student or business visa.

e-Tourist visas

Citizens of the UK, Ireland, the US, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and many other countries can apply online for an e-Tourist Visa (eTV) through the Indian government's official online portal (indianvisaonline.gov.in). These multiple-entry visas are valid for one year from the date of issue, allow a maximum stay of 90 days during each visit, and must be secured at least four days (and no more than thirty days) before travel. You have to fill in the application, upload your photo and pay the fee online, then carry a printed copy of the eTV with you to India; you'll be issued with your visa on arrival. For shorter visits, cheaper 30-day visas are also available online. Fees for the different types of visa vary between zero and over US$100, depending on your nationality, plus a small bank charge.

Tourist visas

Alternatively, or if you are a passport-holder from one of the few countries not covered by the eTV scheme, you can apply for a standard tourist visa, also valid for one year (or up to ten years for US citizens) from the date of issue, with a maximum stay during each visit of 180 days. Fees vary greatly for different nationalities – check on the respective websites. You're asked to specify whether you need a single-entry or a multiple-entry visa; as the same rates apply to both, it makes sense to ask for the latter to cover all eventualities. Your passport will need to have at least 180 days' validity.

Visas in the UK, US, Canada and Australia are no longer issued by Indian embassies themselves, but by various third-party companies or subcontractors (see below), for a small additional fee. The firms' websites give all the details you need to make your application. Read the small print carefully and always make sure you've allowed plenty of time. Processing time is usually five working days but it's wiser to leave at least a week. Postal applications take a minimum of ten working days plus time in transit, and often longer.

Elsewhere in the world, visas are still issued by the relevant local embassy or consulate, though the same caveats apply. Bear in mind too that Indian high commissions, embassies and consulates observe Indian public holidays as well as local ones, so always check opening hours in advance.

Visa agencies

In many countries it's possible to pay a visa agency or “visa expeditor” (see above) to process the visa on your behalf, which typically costs £60–70/US$100–120, plus the price of the visa. This is worth considering if you're not able to get to your nearest Indian High Commission, embassy or consulate yourself. Prices vary from company to company, as do turnaround times. Two weeks is about standard, but you can get a visa in as little as 24 hours if you're prepared to pay premium rates. For a full rundown of services, check the company websites, from where you can usually download visa application forms.

Visa extensions

It is no longer possible to extend a tourist visa in India, though exceptions may be made in special circumstances such as serious illness. Many travellers who want to spend more time in India go to a neighbouring country such as Nepal for a new visa when their old one expires, but there is no guarantee a new one will be issued right away, as you are not officially allowed to spend more than six months in the country within one year.

INDIAN EMBASSIES, HIGH COMMISSIONS, CONSULATES AND VISA-PROCESSING CENTRES ABROAD

Australia c/o VFS Global (www.vfsglobal.com). Offices in all states and territories except Tasmania and NT – see website for contact details.

Canada c/o BLS International (www.blsindia-canada.com). Nine offices countrywide – see website for contact details.

Ireland Embassy: 6 Leeson Park, Dublin 6 T01 206 0932, Windianembassydublin.gov.in.

Nepal c/o Indian Visa Service Centre (IVSC), Kapurdhara Marg 336, Kathmandu T01 442 3702, Windembkathmandu.gov.in.

New Zealand High Commission: 72 Pipitea St, Thorndon, Wellington T04 473 6390, Whciwellington.gov.in.

South Africa High Commission: 852 Francis Baard St, Arcadia 0083, Pretoria T012 342 5392, [W](http://www.hci Pretoria.gov.in)[hci Pretoria.gov.in](http://www.hci Pretoria.gov.in). Also consulates in Johannesburg, Cape Town and Durban.

Sri Lanka High Commission: 36–38 Galle Rd, Colombo 3 T011 232 7587, Whcicolombo.gov.in; consulate: 1A Mahamaya Mawatha, Kandy T081 222 3786, Wahcikandy.gov.in.

UK c/o VFS Global (www.vfsglobal.com). Offices in twelve cities in Britain and Northern Ireland, including three in London – see website for contact details.

US c/o Travisa (www.indiavisa.travisa.com). Offices in Washington, New York, San Francisco, Chicago, Houston and Atlanta – see website for contact details.

VISA AGENCIES

iVisa US www.ivisa.com.

CIBT Australia T 03 9673 1500, Canada T 1 888 665 9956, UK T 0844 800 4650, US T 1 800 929 2428; www.cibt.com.

Visa Connection US & Canada T 1 416 506 8787, www.visaconnection.biz.

Visa Genie UK T 020 8571 0883, www.visagenie.co.uk.

< Back to Basics

Getting around

Intercity transport in India may not be the fastest or the most comfortable in the world, but it's cheap and goes more or less everywhere. You generally have the option of train or bus, sometimes plane, and occasionally even boat. Transport around town comes in even more permutations, ranging in Kolkata, for example, from human-pulled rickshaws to a state-of-the-art metro system.

Whether you're on road or rail, public transport or your own vehicle, India offers the chance to try out some classics: narrow-gauge railways, steam locomotives, the Ambassador car and the Enfield Bullet motorbike – indeed some people come to India for these alone.

By train

Travelling by train is one of India's classic experiences. The national rail network covers almost the entire country; only a few places (such as the mountainous regions of Sikkim, Ladakh, Uttarakhand and most of Himachal Pradesh) are inaccessible by train. Although the railway system might look like chaos, it does work, and generally better than you might expect. Trains are often late, of course, sometimes by hours rather than minutes, but they do run, and when the train you've been waiting for rolls into the station, the reservation you made halfway across the country several weeks ago will be on a list pasted to the side of your carriage. You can now track live running statuses of trains with apps like Ixigo ( ixigo.com), as well as check fares on their website.

It's worth bearing in mind, with journeys frequently lasting twelve hours or more, that an overnight train can save you a day's travelling and a night's hotel bill, assuming you sleep well on trains. When travelling overnight, always padlock your bag to your bunk; a metal triangle for attaching chains is usually provided beneath the seat of the lower bunk.

Types of train

There are three basic types of passenger train in India. You're most likely to use long-distance inter-city trains (called "express" or "mail") along with the speedier "super-fast" air-conditioned trains – these include the long-established Rajdhani expresses, which link Delhi with cities nationwide, and Shatabdi expresses, daytime trains that connect major cities, mostly within an eight-hour travelling distance, plus the newer and faster still Duronto expresses, which also link major metropolitan areas and have fewer stops. There are also painfully slow local "passenger" trains, which stop everywhere, and which you'll only use if you want to get right off the beaten track. In addition to these three basic types of train, there are also a few dedicated tourist trains and other special services, such as the famous Palace on Wheels and the toy train to Darjeeling.

Classes of train travel

Indian Railways distinguishes between no fewer than eleven classes of travel, although only the eight described below are in common usage. Different types of train carry different classes of carriage, though you'll seldom have more than four to choose from any one service. The simplest and cheapest class, used by the majority of Indians, is second class (II or "second seating"), which are mostly unreserved. These basic carriages have hard wooden seats and often become incredibly packed during the day – bearable for shortish daytime journeys, but best avoided for longer trips and (especially) overnight travel, unless you're exceptionally hardy or unusually poor. On the plus side, fares in second-class unreserved are so cheap as to be virtually free. It also represents a way of getting on a train at the last minute if you haven't been able to secure a reserved seat.

Far more civilized, and only around fifty percent more expensive, is regular sleeper class (SL) consisting of carriages of three-tiered padded bunks that convert to seats during the day. All seats in these carriages must be booked in advance even for daytime journeys, meaning that they don't get horrendously overcrowded like second-class unreserved, although there's usually still plenty going on, with itinerant chai- and coffee-sellers, travelling musicians, beggars and sweepers passing through the carriages. Overnight trips in sleeper compartments are reasonably comfy. First class (FC) consists of non-a/c seating in comfortable if ageing compartments of two to four berths, though this class is being phased out and is now seldom found.

RAIL RECORDS

Comprising 115,000km (71,000 miles) of track and over 12,000 locomotives, which transport an average of 23 million passengers every day, India's rail network is the second largest in the world, with a workforce of around 1.25 million.

One record the country's transport ministers are somewhat less proud of, however, is Indian Railways' accident rate. In 2021 alone, nearly 12,000 people died in railway-related incidents, including those killed while crossing the tracks, which makes this the most dangerous rail network in the world by a long chalk. In 2023, a train collision in Odisha resulted in 288 fatalities and over 1,200 injuries, one of the country's worst single incidents in a decade. Having said that, travelling by rail is considerably safer than using the buses. In an average year around 150,000 people die on the roads – that's eighteen every hour.

The other five classes are all air-conditioned (available only on inter-city and super-fast trains). A/c chair class (CC) cars are found almost exclusively on super-fast services and consist of comfortable reclining seats; they're really designed for daytime travel, since they don't convert to bunks, and aren't generally found on overnight services. Shatabdi expresses are made up entirely of chair-car carriages – ordinary a/c chair car and, for double the price, an Executive a/c chair class (EC) car.

There are three classes of air-conditioned sleepers. The cheapest, a/c 3-tier (AC3 or 3A), has open carriages with three-tier bunks – basically the same as second-class sleeper, except with a/c and bedding. Less crowded (and found on more services) is a/c 2-tier (AC2 or 2A), which has two-tier berths. Most comfortable of all is a/c first-class (AC1 or 1A), which consists of two-tier bunks in two- or four-person private compartments, complete with carpeting and relatively presentable bathrooms – although fares can work out more expensive than taking a plane.

Note that bed linen is provided free on most a/c services, while bottled water, snacks and simple meals are included in the ticket price of Rajdhani, Shatabdi and Duronto services.

Ladies' compartments now only exist on suburban trains in big cities, though the number of families travelling means that single women are at least unlikely to end up in a compartment with only men. You can always ask the ticket inspector to change your seat if you feel uncomfortable. Some stations also have ladies-only waiting rooms.

Timetables and fares

Fares, timetables and availability of berths can be checked online at Indian Railways' cumbersome website (www.indianrail.gov.in), or via the more streamlined, privately run www.12go.asia. Indian Railways' Trains at a Glance (updated twice a year) contains timetables of all inter-city and super-fast trains and is available from information counters and newsstands at all main stations.

All rail fares are calculated according to the exact distance travelled. Trains at a Glance prints a chart of fares by kilometres, and also gives the distance in kilometres of stations along each route in the timetables, making it possible to calculate what the basic fare will be for any given journey.

Reserving tickets

It's important to plan your train journeys in advance, as demand often makes it impossible to buy a long-distance ticket on the same day that you want to travel – although the Tatkal quota system (see below) makes life a little easier. Travellers following tight itineraries tend to buy their departure tickets from particular towns the moment they arrive to avoid having to trek out to the station again. At most large stations, it's possible to reserve tickets for journeys starting elsewhere in the country.

Online booking is best done via www.12go.asia, which accepts foreign Visa cards and MasterCard (with a nominal fee, plus an additional booking charge), although they cannot reserve seats on all services; to book some of the more minor routes or access special quotas you will have to register with Indian Railways (www.irctc.co.in) – check out www.seat61.com/India.htm for a clear explanation of this convoluted procedure. Bookings may be made from 120 days in advance right up to four hours before the scheduled departure time of the train. Having booked your travel, you can then print out your own e-tickets, taking this along with some photo ID, such as a passport, when you board the train.

When reserving a ticket in person at a railway station, the first thing you'll have to do is fill in a little form at the booking office stating your name, age and sex, your proposed date of travel, and the train you wish to catch (giving the train's name and number). Most stations have computerized booking counters and you'll be told immediately whether or not seats are available. Reservation offices in the main stations are generally open from Monday to Saturday from 8am to 8pm with a short break for lunch, and on Sunday to 2pm. In larger cities, major stations have special tourist sections to cut queues for foreigners, with helpful English-speaking staff. Elsewhere, buying a ticket can often involve a longish wait, though women often have dedicated queues or can try simply walking to the head of the queue and forming their own "ladies' queue". A few stations also operate a number system of queueing, allowing you to repair to the chai stall until your number is called. A good alternative to queueing yourself is to get someone else to buy your ticket for you. Many travel agents will do this for a small fee; alternatively, ask at your accommodation if they can sort it out.

Quotas and late-availability tickets

If there are no places available on the train you want, you have a number of choices. First, some seats and berths are set aside as a “tourist quota” – ask at the tourist counter of the reservations hall if you can get in on this, or else try the stationmaster. This quota is available in advance but usually only at major or originating stations. Failing that, other special quotas, such as one for “emergencies”, only released on the day of travel, may remain unused – however, if you get a booking on the emergency quota and a pukka emergency or VIP turns up, you lose the reservation. Alternatively, you can stump up extra cash for a Tatkal ticket, which guarantees you access to a special ten percent quota on most trains, though certain catches and conditions apply. Bookable online and at any computerized office, these are released from 10am the day before the train departs and there’s a surcharge, which varies according to the class of travel.

RAC – or “Reservation Against Cancellation” – tickets are another option, giving you priority if sleepers do become available. The ticket clerk should be able to tell you your chances. With an RAC ticket you are allowed onto the train and can sit until the conductor can find you a berth. The worst sort of ticket to have is a wait-listed one – identifiable by the letter “W” prefixing your passenger number – which will allow you onto the train (though not Shatabdi, Rajdhani or Duronto trains) but not in a reserved compartment; in this case go and see the ticket inspector (TTI) as soon as possible to persuade him to find you a place if one is free. For short journeys or on minor routes you won’t need to reserve tickets in advance.

Luxury tourist trains

Inspired by the Orient Express, Indian Railways offers high-end holiday packages aboard luxury tourist trains. The flagship of the scheme is the Palace on Wheels (www.palaceonwheels.in), with sumptuous ex-maharajas' carriages updated into modern air-conditioned coaches, still decorated with the original designs. An all-inclusive, eight-day whistle-stop tour (Sept–April weekly) costs literally thousands of dollars, with the cheapest rates off-season (Sept and April). Note that the train is often booked up for months ahead, so early reservations are advised.

The Palace on Wheels has proved so popular that it has spawned a number of similar heritage trains, including the Maharaja's Express (www.maharajaexpress.co.uk) and Deccan Odyssey. Details of all these tours, including fares, can be found on the Palace on Wheels website.

By plane

Considering the huge distances involved in getting around the country, and the time it takes to get from A to B, flying is an attractive option, despite the cost – the journey from Delhi to Chennai, for example, takes a mere 2 hours 30 minutes by plane compared to 36 hours on the train. Delays and cancellations can whittle away the time advantage, especially over small distances, but if you're short of time and plan to cover a lot of ground, flying can be a godsend. Low-cost airlines have proliferated since the early years of the millennium and despite some high-profile failures, most notably Kingfisher Airlines in 2012 and Jet Airways in 2019, new ones always seem to pop up to replace them, a testament to India's robust economy, even during covid-19.

Booking flights is most easily done online via the airline's website. Larger carriers also have offices in major cities, as well as at the airports they fly to; these are listed in the relevant guide chapters. Children under twelve pay half fare and under-tuos (one per adult) pay ten percent.

DOMESTIC AIRLINES

Air Asia India www.airasia.co.in.

Air India www.airindia.com.

Air India Express www.airindiaexpress.in.

Akasa Air www.akasaair.com.

Alliance Air ✉allianceair.in.

Go First ✉flygofirst.com.

IndiGo Airlines ✉goindigo.in.

SpiceJet ✉spicejet.com.

Star Air ✉starair.in.

Vistara ✉airvistara.com.

By bus

Although trains are generally the most atmospheric and comfortable way to travel in India, there are some places, particularly in the Himalayas, not covered by the rail network, or where trains are inconvenient. By contrast, buses go almost everywhere, usually more frequently than trains (though mostly in daylight hours), and are also sometimes faster (including in parts of Rajasthan and other places without broad-gauge track). Going by bus also usually saves you the bother of reserving a ticket in advance.

Services vary enormously in terms of price and standard. Ramshackle government-run buses, packed with people, livestock and luggage, cover most routes, both short- and long-distance. In addition, popular routes between larger cities, towns and resorts are usually covered by private buses. These tend to be more comfortable, with extra legroom, tinted windows and padded reclining seats. Note, however, that smaller private bus companies may be only semi-legal and have little backup in case of breakdown.

The description of the service usually gives some clue about the level of comfort. “Ordinary” buses usually have minimally padded, bench-like seats with upright backs. “Deluxe” or “Luxury” are more or less interchangeable terms but sometimes the term deluxe signifies a luxury bus past its sell-by date; occasionally a bus will be described as a “2 by 2” which means a deluxe bus with just two seats on either side of the aisle. When applied to government services, these may hardly differ from “ordinary” buses, but with private companies, they should guarantee a softer, individual seat. It’s worth asking when booking if your bus will have a video or music system (a “video bus”), as their deafening noise ruins any chances of sleep. Always try to avoid the back seats – they accentuate bumpy roads.

Luggage travels in the hatch of private buses – for which you may have to pay extra for the safekeeping of your bags. On state-run buses, you can usually squeeze it into an unobtrusive corner, although you may sometimes be requested to have it travel on the roof (you may be able to travel up there yourself if the bus is too crowded, though it's dangerous and illegal); check that it's well secured (ideally, lock it there) and not liable to get squashed. Baksheesh is in order for whoever puts it up there for you.

In recent years, there has been a revolution in online booking services, which allow you to compare schedules and fares, buy tickets online and even to select your seat. The best of these is redbus.in, which has a downloadable app and is accessible worldwide. Buying a bus ticket at the bus station is usually less of an ordeal than buying a train ticket, although at large city bus stations there may be twenty or so counters, assigned to different routes. When you buy your ticket you'll be given the registration number of the bus and, sometimes, a seat number. As at railway stations, women can form a separate, quicker, "ladies' queue".

You can usually only pay on board on most ordinary state buses, and at bus stands outside major cities. Prior booking is usually available and preferable for express and private services, and it's a good idea to check with the agent exactly where the bus will depart from. You can usually pay on board private buses too, though doing so reduces your chances of a seat.

By shared jeep

Another common and useful means of transport, especially in mountain areas, is shared jeeps, whose size and four-wheel drives are ideal for the bumpy terrain. These ply fixed routes and tend to depart at fairly fixed times from designated locations, usually in town centres. The number of passengers varies from six to ten, according to the type of vehicle and how willing the owner is to cram people in. The two most commonly used models are the Tata Sumo and Tempo Traveller.

Prices are fixed, although it's wise to check the going rate with an independent source if possible. Expect to pay roughly 50–100 percent more than the bus fare and note that it sometimes costs a bit more to sit in the prime front seat next to the driver. Jeeps can also be rented directly or through an agency for customized trips, sometimes of several days.

By boat

Apart from river ferries, few boat services run in India. The Andaman Islands are connected to Kolkata and Chennai by boat – as well as to each other. Kerala has a regular passenger service with a number of services operating out of Alappuzha and Kollam, including the popular “backwater trip” between the two. The Sundarbans in the delta region to the south of Kolkata is only accessible by boat.

By car

It is much more usual for tourists to be driven in India than it is for them to drive themselves; car rental firms operate on the basis of supplying vehicles with drivers. You can arrange them through any tourist office or taxi firm, and local taxi drivers hanging around hotels and city ranks are also available for day hire. Car rental should include a maximum of 200km, with additional kilometres charged per kilometre. On longer trips, the driver sleeps in the car, for which his firm may charge an additional fee. You should generally tip the driver a modest amount too. It is important to confirm exactly what the terms and costs of the rental are before you set off. App-based ride-hailing services are widely used by locals in big cities and can be far cheaper than traditional cabs, but visitors should proceed with caution. While it's tempting to go for the easy fixed-price option, the quality of driver varies wildly. There are security concerns, too, as tension between taxi drivers and app-based drivers is rife, and there have been reports of violence. The situation is changing rapidly as drivers are demanding better working conditions and pay, so keep abreast of the local situation before hailing a ride. Uber (www.uber.com) and Ola (www.olacabs.com) are the two most common apps and both require an internet connection to do the initial ordering. If you don't have a phone, hotel staff may be willing to order via their own devices and add the cost onto your bill.

Tourists still occasionally succumb to the romance of that quintessentially Indian automobile, the Hindustan Ambassador Mark IV, based on the design of the old British Morris Oxford. Sadly, however, the car's appalling suspension and back-breaking seats make it among the most uncomfortable rides in the world. All in all, you'll be much better off in a modern two- or four-door hatchback – ask your rental company for the options. Air-conditioning adds considerably to the rate, and with larger cars such as SUVs, the daily rate is higher and tends only to cover the first 80km, after which stiff additional per-kilometre charges apply.

Self-drive

A handful of big international chains offer self-drive car rental in India, but unless you've had plenty of experience on the country's notoriously dangerous roads, we strongly recommend you leave the driving to an expert. If you do drive yourself, expect the unexpected, and expect other drivers to take whatever liberties they can get away with. Traffic in the cities is particularly undisciplined; vehicles cut in and out without warning, and pedestrians, cyclists and cows wander nonchalantly down the middle of the road. In the country the roads are narrow, often in terrible repair, and hogged by overloaded Tata trucks that move aside for nobody, while something slow-moving like a bullock cart or a herd of goats can take up the whole road. It is particularly dangerous to drive at night – cyclists and cart drivers hardly ever have lights. If you are involved in an accident, it might be an idea to leave the scene quickly and go straight to the police to report it; mobs can assemble fast, especially if pedestrians or cows are involved.

By motorbike

Riding a motorbike in India is not for the faint-hearted. Besides the challenging road and traffic conditions (see above) with the resultant stress and fatigue, simply running an unfamiliar bike can become a nightmare.

Buying a motorbike in India is only for the brave. If it's an old classic you're after, the 350- or 500cc Enfield Bullet, sold cheapest in Puducherry on the Tamil Nadu coast, leads the field, with models becoming less idiosyncratic the more recent they are. If low price and practicality are your priorities, a smaller model from the likes of Bajaj, built in India but based on dependable old Japanese designs, may fit the bill if not the image. Delhi's Karol Bagh area is renowned for its motorcycle shops and rental agencies. Obviously, you'll have to haggle over the price, but you can expect to pay half to two-thirds of the original price for a bike in reasonable condition. Given the right bargaining skills, you can sell it again later for a similar price – perhaps to another foreign traveller – by advertising it in hotels and restaurants. A certain amount of bureaucracy is involved in transferring vehicle ownership to a new owner but a garage should be able to put you on to a broker ("auto consultant") who, for a modest commission, will help you find a seller or a buyer and do the necessary paperwork.

Motorbike rental is available in many tourist towns and can be fun for local journeys, but the condition of the bike can be hit and miss. However, unless you know your stuff, this is a better strategy than diving in and buying a machine. Unlike with sales, it's in a rental outfit's interest to rent you a bike that works. Mechanically, the important thing to establish is the condition of the chain and sprockets, whether the machine starts and runs smoothly and, not least, whether both brakes and lights work (even so, riding at night is inadvisable). An in-depth knowledge of mechanics is not so necessary as every town has a bike mender who will be no stranger to Enfields.

A recommended firm in Delhi, both for purchasing bikes and for rental, is Bulletwallas (☎97 186 4 7447), at 7 Arakashan Rd, Multani Dhanda in the Paharganj district. An Aussie-run outfit, they specialize in Enfields, selling new, used and customized machines with only quality parts.

Without doubt the least stressful way of enjoying India on a motorbike, especially a temperamental but characterful Enfield, is joining one of several motorbike tours. They focus on the best locales with minimal traffic and amazing landscapes – the Himalayas, Rajasthan and Kerala – and remove much of the stress from what is still an adventure.

MOTORBIKE TOUR AGENCIES

Blazing Trails Tours UK ☎05603 666788, www.blazingtrails.world.

Classic Bike Adventure India Germany ☎49 251 2024 5995, www.classic-bike-india.com.

Himalayan Roadrunners US ☎802 738 6500, www.ridehigh.com.

Live India UK ☎07869 373 805, www.liveindia.co.uk.

World On Wheels Australia ☎02 9970 6370, www.ferriswheels.com.au.

By bicycle

In many ways a bicycle is the ideal form of transport in India, offering total independence without loss of contact with local people. You can camp out, though there are cheap lodgings in almost every village – take the bike into your room with you – and, if you get tired of pedalling, you can put it on top of a bus as luggage, or transport it by train.

Bringing a bike from abroad requires no special paperwork but spare parts and accessories may be of different sizes and standards in India, so you may have to improvise. Bring basic spares and tools, and a pump. Buying a bike in India couldn't be easier, since most towns have cycle shops and even entire markets devoted to bikes. The advantages of a local bike are that spare parts are easy to get, locally produced tools and parts will fit, and your bike will not draw a crowd every time you park it. Disadvantages are that Indian bikes tend to be heavier and less state-of-the-art than ones from abroad; mountain bikes are beginning to appear in cities and bigger towns, but with insufficient gears and a low level of equipment, they're not worth buying. Selling should be quite easy: you won't get a tremendously good deal at a cycle market but you may well be able to sell privately, or even to a rental shop.

Bicycles can be rented in most towns, usually for local use only, though better mountain bikes can be rented in some mountain areas: this is a good way to find out if your legs and bum can survive an Indian bike before buying one. Rates vary but are generally low; you may have to leave a deposit or your passport as security. Several adventure-tour operators offer bicycle tours of the country, with most customers bringing their own cycles.

As for contacts, International Bicycle Fund in the US (☎206 767 0848, ibike.org) publishes information and offers advice on bicycle travel around the world and maintains a useful website. In India, the Cycling Federation of India (☎011 2375 3528, cyclingfederationofindia.org) is the main cycle-sports organization.

City transport

Transport around towns takes various forms. City buses can get unbelievably crowded, so beware of pickpockets, razor-carriers, pocket-slitters and “Eve-teasers”; the same applies to suburban trains in Mumbai (Chennai is about the only other place where you might want to use trains for local city transport). Any visitor to Delhi or Kolkata will be amazed by the clean efficiency of the cities' two metro systems, with more now open or under construction in Bengaluru, Chennai, Hyderabad, Jaipur, Lucknow and elsewhere.

You can also take taxis, usually rather battered Ambassadors (painted black and yellow in the large cities) and Maruti omnivans. With luck, the driver will agree to use the meter; in theory you're within your rights to call the police if he doesn't, but the usual compromise is to agree a fare for the journey before you get in. Naturally, it helps to have an idea in advance what the fare should be, though any figures quoted in this or any other guide should be treated as being the broadest of guidelines only. From places such as main stations, you may be able to find other passengers to share a taxi to the town centre. Many stations, and certainly most airports, operate prepaid taxi schemes with set fares that you pay before departure; more expensive prepaid limousines are also available. App-based taxi-booking companies are also making their presence felt, with Uber (www.uber.com) now operating in 25 cities and India's own Ola (www.olacabs.com) becoming very popular.

That most Indian of vehicles, the auto-rickshaw – commonly referred to as just an “auto” – is the front half of a motor scooter with a couple of seats mounted on the back. Cheaper than taxis, better at nipping in and out of traffic, and usually metered (although in many cities few drivers are willing to use them – you should agree a fare before setting off if that is the case), auto-rickshaws are a little unstable and their drivers often rather reckless but that's all part of the fun. In major tourist centres rickshaw-walas can, however, hassle you endlessly on the street, often shoving themselves right in your path to prevent you from ignoring them, and once you're inside may try to take you to several shops before reaching your destination. In general it is better to hail a rickshaw than to take one that's been following you, and to avoid those that hang around outside posh hotels. Apps for booking auto-rickshaws are even starting to appear. Some towns also have larger versions of auto-rickshaws known as tempos (or Vikrams), with six or eight seats behind, which usually ply fixed routes at flat fares.

Here and there, you'll come across horse-drawn carriages, or tongas. Tugged by underfed and often lame horses, these are the least popular with tourists. Slower and cheaper still is the cycle rickshaw – basically a glorified tricycle. Foreign visitors often feel uncomfortable about travelling this way; except in the major tourist cities, cycle rickshaw-walas are invariably emaciated pavement-dwellers who earn only a pittance for their pains. In the end, though, to deny them your custom on those grounds is spurious logic; they will earn even less if you don't use them. As a foreigner you'll probably be quoted grossly inflated fares, but ask yourself if it's really worth haggling over tiny sums, which they could probably do with more than you. Kolkata is the only city where rickshaw-walas continue to haul pukka rickshaws on foot.

If you want to see a variety of places around town, consider renting a taxi, rickshaw or auto-rickshaw for the day. Find a driver who speaks English reasonably well and agree a price beforehand. You will probably find it a lot cheaper than you imagine: the driver will invariably act as a guide and source of local knowledge, so tipping is usually in order.

FIVE TOP BUDGET PLACES TO STAY

Backpacker Panda, Mumbai An excellent, modern hostel in the heart of Colaba.

Chachoo Palace, Srinagar Welcoming hotel right on the banks of Dal Lake.

Emerald Gecko, Havelock Island Laidback bamboo huts beside a pristine beach.

Garuda, Upper Pelling Favourite haunt of trekkers in Sikkim.

Walton's Homestay, Fort Cochin Beautifully converted mansion with lovely terrace and garden.

< Back to Basics

Accommodation

There are far more Indians travelling around their own country at any one time – whether for holidays, on pilgrimages or for business – than there are foreign tourists, and a vast infrastructure of hotels and guesthouses caters for their needs. On the whole, accommodation, like so many other things in India, provides good value for money, though in the major cities, especially, there are luxury establishments that charge international prices for providing Western-style comforts and service. In recent years, there has also been a dramatic increase in the number of homestays in some parts of the country. Most places to stay now offer wi-fi and this should be assumed, unless otherwise stated in a specific listing in the guide.

Budget accommodation

While accommodation prices in India are generally on the up, there's still an abundance of inexpensive hotels and hostels catering for foreign backpackers, tourists and less-well-off Indians. It's still easy to find very inexpensive double rooms, especially outside big cities and tourist centres. The rock-bottom option is usually in a dormitory of a hostel or lodge. Even cheaper still are dharamshalas, hostels run by religious establishments and used by pilgrims.

Budget accommodation varies from filthy fleapits to homely guesthouses and, naturally, tends to be cheaper the further you get off the beaten track. It's most expensive in Delhi, Mumbai, Goa and resorts of Kerala, where prices are at least double those for equivalent accommodation in most other parts of the country.

The cheapest rooms usually have flimsy beds and thin, lumpy mattresses. Most places now offer en-suite bathrooms (or “attached” rooms, as they're known locally) and hot water, either on tap or in a bucket, though shared showers and toilets with only cold water are still fairly common at the bottom of the range – in our reviews in the Guide we have assumed that establishments have attached rooms and noted exceptions. It's always wise to check out the state of the bathrooms and toilets before taking a room.

Bedbugs and mosquitoes are other things to check for – splotches of blood around the bed and on the walls where people have squashed them are tell-tale signs.

If a taxi or rickshaw driver tells you that the place you ask for is full, closed or has moved, it's more than likely that it's because he wants to take you to a hotel that pays him commission – added, in some cases, to your bill. Hotel touts operate in many popular tourist spots, working for commission from the hotels they take you to; this can become annoying and they should be given a wide berth unless you are desperate.

ACCOMMODATION PRICE CODES

Throughout this guide the following price codes are quoted for the cheapest double room during the main tourist season, where one exists, but not for short spikes during peak periods, such as those that occur in the hill stations from April to July or in Rajasthan, Goa and Kerala over Christmas and New Year.

₹ – under ₹1000

₹₹ – ₹1000-2500

₹₹₹ – ₹2500-7500

₹₹₹₹ – ₹7500+

Notable regional price fluctuations, including slack periods when great discounts can be had, are mentioned in the accommodation listings throughout the Guide chapters.

Where two prices are given, it denotes the cost of a double with shared bathroom first (“non-attached”), followed by the en-suite (“attached”) option. Dorm price codes per person are also quoted separately where applicable. If the review states that a hotel has some air-conditioned rooms, you can usually reckon on them costing 50–100 percent more than the non-a/c ones.

Not all hotels offer single rooms, so it can often work out more expensive to travel alone; in hotels that don't, you may be able to negotiate a slight discount. It's not unusual to find rooms with three or four beds, however – great value for families and small groups.

Like most other things in India, the price of a room may well be open to negotiation. If you think the price is too high, or if all the hotels in town are empty, try haggling. You may get nowhere – but nothing ventured, nothing gained.

Note that all hotels and guesthouses are required by law to have an official list of approved room prices. Some establishments, especially the cheaper ones, ignore this rule, while others do not display the rates. It is always worth asking for the “tariff list”, if you cannot see it, as a starting point for any bargaining. In cheap hotels and hostels, you needn’t expect any additions to your basic bill, but as you go up the scale, you’ll find taxes and service charges creeping in, sometimes adding as much as a third on top of the original tariff. Service is generally ten percent, but taxes are a matter for local governments and vary from state to state. We have endeavoured to include tax in the prices throughout this guide, but readers should always check in advance to avoid nasty, and expensive, surprises.

Mid-range hotels

Even if you value your creature comforts, you don’t need to pay through the nose for them. A large clean room, freshly made bed, your own spotless bathroom and hot and cold running water is still very reasonable in cheaper areas. Extras that bump up the price include local taxes (see box above), a TV, mosquito nets, a balcony and, above all, air-conditioning. Abbreviated in this book (and in India itself) as a/c, air-conditioning is not necessarily the advantage you might expect – in some hotels you can find yourself paying double for a system that is so dust-choked and noisy as to be more of a drawback than an advantage. Some offer air-coolers instead of a/c – these can be noisy and are less effective than full-blown a/c, but much better than just a fan. They’re only found in drier climes as they don’t work in areas of extreme humidity such as along the coasts of south India and the Bay of Bengal. Many medium-priced hotels also have attached restaurants, and also offer room service.

Most state governments run their own chain of hotels. They are usually good value but far less well run than comparable places in the private sector. We’ve reviewed such chain hotels throughout this guide. Bookings for state-run hotels can be made in advance through the state tourist offices throughout the country.

Upmarket hotels

Recent years have seen a proliferation in the number of luxury hotels throughout India. Roughly speaking, they fall into three categories. Pitched primarily at visiting businessmen, smart, Western-style hotels with air-conditioning and swanky interiors are to be found predominantly in towns and city centres. Because competition among them is rife, tariffs tend to represent good value for money, especially in the upper-mid-range bracket. Formal five-star chains such as Taj, India's premier hotel group, charge international rates – as most of their guests are on expense accounts or staying as part of discounted tour packages. Note that many top-end hotels offer significant reductions to their rack rates if you book online.

FIVE TOP LUXURY PLACES TO STAY

Chettinadu Mansion, Kanadukathan Delightful heritage mansion containing many original features.

Taj Falaknuma, Hyderabad Palatial luxury in the former nizam's residence.

Imperial, Delhi The capital's classiest hotel occupies an Art Deco building.

Lake Palace, Udaipur Lavishly converted palace in the middle of the lake.

Shergarh, Kanha National Park Eco-friendly and relaxing jungle hideaway.

Holding more appeal for foreign visitors are the heritage properties that continue to mushroom all across the country. Rajasthan started the trend, with old forts, palaces, hunting lodges, havelis and former hunting camps converted into accommodation for high-spending tourists. Brimming with old-world atmosphere, they deliver a quintessentially Indian “experience”, often in the most exotic locations, with turbaned bellboys and antique automobiles adding to the colonial-era ambience. Other states were quick to get in on the act, and these days you can stay in fabulous Tamil mansions; colonial tea bungalows in Coorg or the Nilgiris; wooden, gabled-roofed tharavadus (ancestral homes) in the Keralan backwaters; and Portuguese palacios in Goa. Quite a few wildlife sanctuaries also offer atmospheric, high-end accommodation in former hunting lodges, tented camps or treehouses, while down in Kerala, you can also experience the lakes and lagoons of the backwaters on a converted rice barge.

CHECKOUT TIMES

Checkout time is often noon, but confirm this when you arrive: some expect you out by 9am, but many others operate a 24hr system, under which you are simply obliged to leave by the same time as you arrived. Some places let you use their facilities after the official checkout time, sometimes for a small charge, while a few won't even let you leave your baggage after checkout unless you pay for another night.

The third category, which is gaining in popularity in cities and touristic areas, is boutique hotels, modelled on Western lines. With much less of a corporate feel than business hotels, these tend to be smaller and place a greater emphasis on service and modern design features; some may occupy heritage properties.

Other options

Unsurprisingly, India has fully embraced the new global sharing economy and it's increasingly possible to find great places to stay via websites such as www.airbnb.com and www.couchsurfing.org. Servas (www.servas.org), established in 1949 as a peace organization, is also devoted to providing places in people's homes, representing more than six hundred hosts in India; you have to join before travelling by applying to the local Servas secretary (via the website).

Homestays, often as organized as hotels but with a far more personal touch, have been established for some time in places like Mumbai, Goa and Kerala. These have now spread far and wide, encompassing other states such as parts of Himachal Pradesh, Ladakh, Karnataka and Tamil Nadu. Farmstays, rural villas and ecolodges have also all mushroomed in popularity in recent years. None of these options are especially cheap but all aim to provide a more authentic experience, whether that is the chance to literally feel part of the family or to learn something about the local wildlife and environment, or even to participate in projects.

YMCAs and YWCAs, mostly confined to big cities, can be plusher and pricier than mid-range hotels. They are usually good value but are often full and some are exclusively single-sex. Official and non-official youth hostels, some run by state governments, are spread haphazardly across the country. They give HI cardholders a discount but rarely exclude non-members, nor do they usually impose daytime closing. Prices match the cheapest hotels; where there is a youth hostel, it usually has a dormitory and may well be the best budget accommodation available – which goes especially for the Salvation Army ones. A more modern, Western-style breed of hostels has started popping up in major cities and tourist destinations from Rajasthan to Tamil Nadu. These are aimed directly at backpackers and tend to provide better facilities than the old-style hostels, as well as pleasant communal areas ideal for socializing. By far the most widespread and reliable chain is Zostel (www.zostel.com)

Camping is generally restricted to wildlife reserves, where the Forest Department lay on low-impact accommodation under canvas for visitors, and to beach resorts in which building is restricted by local coastal protection laws. Except on mountain treks, it's not usual simply to pitch a tent in the countryside. In some mountain areas, however, there are surprisingly upmarket tent camps, which provide spacious and luxurious options for staying in the great outdoors.

Many railway stations have “retiring rooms”: basic private rooms with a bed and bathroom (some stations have dorms, too). They can be handy if you're catching an early morning train, and are usually among the cheapest accommodation available anywhere, but can be noisy. Retiring rooms cannot be booked in advance and are allocated on a first-come-first-served basis; just turn up and ask if there's a vacancy.

Finally, religious institutions, particularly Sikh gurudwaras, offer accommodation for pilgrims and visitors, which may include tourists; a donation is often expected, and certainly appreciated, but some of the bigger ones charge a fixed, nominal fee. Pilgrimage sites, especially those far from other accommodation, also have dharamshalas where visitors can stay – very cheap and very simple, usually with basic, communal washing facilities; some charitable institutions even have rooms with simple attached bathrooms. Dharamshalas, like gurudwaras, offer accommodation either on a donations system or charge a nominal fee.

< Back to Basics

Eating and drinking Indian food has a richly deserved reputation as one of the world's great cuisines. Stereotyped abroad as the ubiquitous "curry", the cooking of the Subcontinent covers a wealth of different culinary styles, with myriad regional variations and specialities, from the classic creamy meat and fruit Mughlai dishes of the north through to the banana-leaf vegetarian thalis of the south.

For vegetarians, in particular, Indian food is a complete delight. Some of the Subcontinent's best food is meat-free, and even confirmed carnivores will find themselves tucking into delicious dhals and vegetable curries with relish. Most religious Hindus, and the majority of people in the south, don't eat meat or fish, while some orthodox Brahmins and Jains also avoid onions and garlic, which are thought to inflame the baser instincts. Veganism is not common, however; if you're vegan, you'll have to keep your eyes open for eggs and dairy products. Many eating places state whether they are vegetarian or non-vegetarian either on signs outside or at the top of the menu. The terms used in India (and throughout our eating listings) are "veg" and "non-veg". You'll also see "pure veg", which means that no eggs or alcohol are served. As a rule, meat-eaters should exercise caution in India: even when meat is available, especially in the larger towns, its quality can be poor, except in the best restaurants, and you won't get much in a dish anyway – especially in cheaper canteens where it's mainly there for flavouring. Hindus, of course, do not eat beef and Muslims shun pork, so you'll only find those in a few Christian enclaves such as the beach areas of Goa, and Tibetan areas. Note that what is called "mutton" on menus is in fact goat.

Where to eat Broadly speaking, eating establishments divide into three main types: cheap and unpretentious local cafés (known variously as dhabas, bhojanalayas and udupis); Indian restaurants aimed at more affluent locals; and tourist restaurants. Dhabas and bhojanalayas are cheap cafés, where food is basic but often good, consisting of vegetable curry, dhal (a kind of lentil broth), rice or Indian bread (the latter more standard in the north) and sometimes meat. Often found along the sides of highways, dhabas traditionally cater to truck drivers – one way of telling a good dhaba is to judge from the number of trucks parked outside. Bhojanalayas are basic eating places, usually found in towns (especially around bus stands and train stations) in the north and centre of the country; they tend to be vegetarian, especially those signed as "Vaishno". Both dhabas and bhojanalayas can be grubby – look them over before you commit yourself. The same is rarely true of their southern equivalent, udupi canteens, which offer cheap, delicious snacks such as masala dosa, idli, vada and rice-based dishes, all freshly cooked to order and served by uniformed waiters.

MORE ON FOOD AND DRINK WE GIVE MORE ADVICE ON DRINKING WATER IN THE HEALTH
SECTION. THERE'S A GLOSSARY OF FOOD TERMS IN THE LANGUAGE SECTION.

EATING PRICE CODES THROUGHOUT THIS GUIDE
THE FOLLOWING PRICE CODES ARE QUOTED FOR A STANDARD TWO-COURSE MEAL WITH A NON-ALCOHOLIC DRINK.

₹ – under ₹300

₹₹ – ₹300-1000

₹₹₹ – ₹1000-3000

₹₹₹₹ – ₹3000+

Note that the vast majority of cheap roadside dhabas and cheap restaurants frequented by the locals fall into the lowest category, while the cheaper hotel restaurants and travellers' joint will mostly be in the second. Only in the fancier city restaurants or those inside expensive hotels would you expect to pay prices in the higher two brackets.

There are all sorts of Indian restaurants, veg and non-veg and typically catering to Indian businessmen and middle-class families. These are the places to go for reliably good Indian food at bargain prices. The more expensive Indian restaurants, such as those in five-star hotels, can be very expensive by local standards, but offer a rare chance to try top-notch classic Indian cooking, and still at significantly cheaper prices than you'd pay back home – assuming you could find Indian food that good.

Tourist restaurants, found across India wherever there are significant numbers of Western visitors, cater specifically for foreign travellers with unadventurous taste buds, serving up a stereotypical array of pancakes, omelettes, chips, muesli and fruit salad, along with a basic range of curries. The downside is that they tend to be relatively pricey, while the food can be very hit and miss – Indian spaghetti bolognese, enchiladas and chicken chow mein can be every bit as weird as you might expect. International-style fast food, including burgers (without beef – usually chicken or mutton) and pizzas, is also available in major cities. Some restaurants offer wi-fi access but it's still not the norm. National and international chains such as Café Coffee Day, McDonald's and Starbucks are reliable options for finding internet access with your meal; this guide highlights independent establishments where good wi-fi is available.

Indian food The basic distinction in Indian food is between the cuisines of the north and south. North Indian food (which is the style generally found in Indian restaurants abroad) is characterized by its rich meat and vegetable dishes in thick tomato, onion and yogurt-based sauces, accompanied by thick breads. South Indian food, by contrast, is largely vegetarian, with spicy chilli and coconut flavours and lots of rice, either served in its natural state or made into one of the south's distinctive range of pancakes, such as the dosa, idli and uttapam, although coastal areas serve plenty of fish dishes.

What Westerners call a “curry” covers a huge variety of dishes, each made with a different masala, or mix of spices. Commonly used spices include chilli, turmeric, garlic, ginger, cinnamon, cardamom, cloves, coriander – both leaf and seed – cumin and saffron. Garam masala (“hot mix”) is a combination of spices often added to a dish at the last stage of cooking to spice it up. Chilli is another key element in the Indian spice cabinet, but the idea that all Indian food is fiery hot is a complete myth. North Indian food, in particular, tends to be quite mildly spiced, often more so than Indian food in restaurants abroad. South Indian food can be hotter but not invariably so. If you can't take the heat, there are mild dishes such as korma and biryani where meat or vegetables are cooked with rice. Indians tend to assuage the effects of chilli with chutney, dahi (curd) or raita (curd with mint and cucumber, or other herbs and vegetables). Otherwise, beer is one of the best things for washing chilli out of your mouth; the essential oils that cause the burning sensation dissolve in alcohol, but not in water.

Vegetarian curries are usually identified (even on menus in English) by the Hindi names of their main ingredients, such as paneer (cheese), alu (potatoes), chana (chickpeas) or mutter (peas). Meat curries are more often given specific names such as korma or dopiaza, to indicate the kind of masala used or the method of cooking.

North Indian food North Indian cooking has been heavily influenced by the various Muslim invaders who arrived in the Subcontinent from Central Asia and Persia. They gave Indian cooking many of its most popular dishes and accompaniments, such as the biryani and the naan bread, as well as its relatively greater emphasis on meat compared to the south. The classic north Indian fusion of native and Central Asian influences (although it can be found as far south as Hyderabad) is so-called Mughlai cooking, the creation of the Mughal dynasty. Mostly non-veg, the food is mildly spiced but extremely rich, using ingredients such as cream, almonds, sultanas and saffron – the classic korma sauce is the best-known example.

The other big northern style is tandoori. The name refers to the deep clay oven (tandoor) in which the food is cooked. Tandoori chicken is marinated in yogurt, herbs and spices before cooking. Boneless pieces of meat, marinated and cooked in the same way are known as tikka; they may be served in a medium-strength masala (tikka masala), one thickened with almonds (pasanda), or in a rich butter sauce (murg makhani or butter chicken). Breads such as naan and roti are also baked in the tandoor.

A main dish – which may be a curry, but could also be a dry dish such as a kebab, or a tandoori dish without a masala – is usually served with a dhal and bread. Rice is usually an optional extra in north India and has to be ordered separately. Bread comes in a number of varieties, all of them flatbreads rather than loaves. Chapatti is a generic term for breads, but tends to refer to the simplest, unleavened type. It's usually made from wheat flour. The term roti is likewise generic, and a roti can be exactly the same as a chapatti, but the term tends to refer more to a thicker bread baked in a tandoor. In good Muslim cooking, delicately thin rumali roti ("handkerchief" bread) often accompanies rich meat and chicken dishes. Naan is leavened, thick and chewy, and invariably baked in a tandoor; it's a favourite in non-veg restaurants as it best accompanies rich meaty dishes. You may also come across fried breads, of which paratha (or parantha) is rolled out, basted with ghee, folded over and rolled out again several times before cooking, and often stuffed with ingredients such as potato (alu paratha); it's popular for breakfast. Puris are little fried puffballs. Poppadum (papad) is a crisp wafer made from lentil flour and is typically served as an appetizer.

Many restaurants also offer set meals, or thalis. A thali is a stainless-steel tray with a number of little dishes in it, containing a selection of curries, a chutney and a sweet. In the middle you'll get bread and usually rice. In many places, waiters will keep coming round with refills until you've had enough.

There's an enormous variety of regional cuisines across the north. Bengalis love fish and cook a mean mangsho (meat) curry as well as exotic vegetable dishes such as mo-cha – cooked banana flower. They also like to include fish bones for added flavour in their vegetable curries – a nasty surprise for vegetarians. Tibetans and Bhotias from the Himalayas have a simple diet of thukpa (meat soup) and momo (meat dumplings), as well as a salty tea made with either rancid yak butter (where available) or with ordinary butter. In Punjab and much of northern India, home cooking consists of dhal and vegetables along with roti and less rice than the Bengalis. Food in Gujarat, predominantly veg, is often cooked with a bit of sugar. Certain combinations are traditional and seasonally repeated, such as makki ki roti (fried corn bread) with sarson ka sag (mustard-leaf greens) around Punjab and other parts of north India. Baingan bharta (puréed roast aubergine) is commonly eaten with plain yogurt and roti.

HOTEL OR RESTAURANT?

Somewhat confusingly, places serving traditional meals in India frequently call themselves “hotels”, even though they do not offer accommodation. This is particularly common in the south, where you'll often come across men waving signs on roadsides advertising a “hotel”, when it's no more than a lunch stop.

South Indian food The food of south India is a world away from that of the north. Southern cooking also tends to use a significantly different repertoire of spices, with sharper, simpler flavours featuring coconut, tamarind, curry leaves and plenty of dried red and fresh green chillies. Rice is king, not only eaten in its natural form but also made into regional staples such as idlis (steamed rice cakes), idiyyapams (steamed rice-noodle cakes) and dosas (fermented rice-batter pancakes), such as the ubiquitous masala dosa, a potato curry wrapped in a crispy lentilflour pancake. An alternative to the dosa is the uttapam, which is thicker, often with onions or another vegetable fried into its body. The lavish breads that are such a feature of north Indian cooking aren't usually available, apart from the fluffy little puri. Meat is comparatively uncommon in the brahmin-dominated temple towns of Tamil Nadu, but available throughout Kerala, where there are sizeable Christian and Muslim minorities.

FIVE TOP PLACES TO EAT: NON-VEG

Ahdoo's, Srinagar A great place to sample rich meat-based Kashmiri wazwan cuisine.

Karim's, Old Delhi Atmospheric spot for tasty kebabs and mouthwatering Mughlai dishes.

Le Club, Puducherry A stylish touch of French je ne sais quoi.

Paradise, Hyderabad Huge, plush restaurant serving wonderful biryanis and kebab dishes.

The Tibetan Kitchen, Leh Enjoy some of the best thukpas and momos you will find anywhere.

Set meals are another common feature in the south, where they are generally referred to simply as “meals”. They generally consist of a mound of rice surrounded by various vegetable curries, sambhar dhal, chutney and curd, and usually accompanied by puris and rasam, a thin, hot, peppery soup. Traditionally served on a round metal tray or thali (also found in north India), with each side dish in a separate metal bowl, set meals are sometimes presented on a section of banana leaf instead. In most traditional restaurants, you can eat as much as you want, and staff circulate with refills of everything.

In the south, even more than elsewhere, eating with your fingers is de rigueur and cutlery may be unavailable in cheap restaurants. Wherever you eat, remember to use only your right hand, and wash your hands before you start. Try to avoid getting food on the palm of your hand by eating with the tips of your fingers.

FIVE TOP PLACES TO EAT: VEG OR SEAFOOD

Annalakshmi, Chennai Recipes with Ayurvedic properties are available in this beautifully decorated place.

Apoorva, Mumbai Top-quality Mangalorean coconut-based delights, especially seafood.

Jina Resort, Little Andaman Exquisite fish and veg dishes in a simple, friendly environment.

Kewpie's Kitchen, Kolkata Superb fish and seafood in a private home.

Sri Krishna Café, Mattancherry Pure-veg Keralan meals at bargain prices.

Snacks and street food India abounds in snacks and street food. Chana puri, a chickpea curry with a puri (or sometimes another type of bread, a kulcha) to dunk, is a great favourite in the north; idli sambhar – lentil and vegetable sauce with rice cakes to dunk – is the southern equivalent. Street finger-food includes bhel puris (a Mumbai speciality consisting of a mix of puffed rice, deep-fried vermicelli, potato and crunchy puri with tamarind sauce), pani puris (the same puris dunked in peppery and spicy water – only for the seasoned), bhajis (deep-fried cakes of vegetables in chickpea flour), samosas (vegetables or occasionally meat in a pastry triangle, fried), and pakoras (vegetables or potato dipped in chickpea flour batter and deep-fried). In the south, you'll also come across the ever-popular vada, a spicy deep-fried lentil cake which looks rather like a doughnut.

Kebabs are common in the north, most frequently seekh kebab, minced lamb grilled on a skewer, but also shami kebab, small minced-lamb cutlets. Kebabs rolled into griddle-fried bread, known as kathi or kaati rolls, originated in Kolkata but are now available in other cities as well. With all street snacks, though, remember that food left lying around attracts germs – make sure it's freshly cooked. Be especially careful with snacks involving water, such as pani puris, and cooking oil, which is often recycled. Generally, it's a good idea to acclimatize to Indian conditions before you start eating street food.

You won't find anything called "Bombay mix" in India, but there's no shortage of dry, spicy snack mixes, often referred to as channa chur. Jackfruit chips are sometimes sold as a savoury snack – though they are rather bland – and cashew nuts are a real bargain. Peanuts, also known as "monkey nuts" or mumfuli, usually come roasted and unshelled.

Non-Indian food Chinese food is widely available throughout India and at least some dishes are included on most menus in hotels and tourist joints. It's generally cooked by Indian chefs and isn't exactly authentic, except in the few Indian cities (most notably Kolkata) that have large Chinese communities, where you can get very good Chinese cuisine.

Tourist restaurants and backpacker cafés nationwide offer a fair choice of Western food, from unpretentious little bakeries serving cakes and sandwiches to smart tourist restaurants dishing up fine Italian cooking on candlelit terraces. However, quality is variable. Cities such as Delhi, Mumbai and Bengaluru are also home to a range of specialist non-Indian restaurants featuring Tex-Mex, Thai, Japanese, Italian and French cuisines – these are usually found in luxury hotels.

PAAN YOU MAY BE RELIEVED TO KNOW THAT THE RED STUFF YOU STILL OCCASIONALLY SEE PEOPLE SPITTING ONTO THE STREETS ISN'T BLOOD, BUT JUICE PRODUCED BY CHEWING PAAN – A DIGESTIVE, COMMONLY TAKEN AFTER MEALS, AND ALSO A MILD STIMULANT, FOUND ESPECIALLY IN THE NORTHEAST, WHERE IT IS FRESH AND MUCH STRONGER.

Paan consists of chopped or shredded nut (always referred to as betel nut, though in fact it comes from the areca palm), wrapped in a leaf (which does come from the betel vine) that is first prepared with ingredients such as katha (a red paste), chuna (slaked white lime), mitha masala (a mix of sweet spices, which can be ingested) and zarda (chewing tobacco, not to be swallowed on any account, especially if made with chuna). The triangular package thus formed is wedged inside your cheek and chewed slowly. In the case of chuna and zarda paans, you should spit out the juice as you go.

Paan, and paan masala, a mix of betel nut, fennel seeds, sweets and flavourings, are sold by paan-walas, often from tiny stalls squeezed between shops. Paan-walas develop big reputations; those in the tiny roads of Varanasi are the most renowned, asking astronomical prices for paan made to elaborate specifications including silver and even gold foil. Paan is an acquired taste; novices should start off, and preferably stick with, the sweet and harmless mitha variety, which is perfectly all right to ingest.

In addition to these places, international fast-food chains such as Pizza Hut, Domino's, KFC and McDonald's serve the same standard fare as elsewhere in the world at much cheaper prices.

Sweets Most Indians have rather a sweet tooth and Indian sweets, usually made of milk, can be very sweet indeed. Of the more solid type, penda i, a kind of fudge made from milk which has been boiled down and condensed, varies from moist and delicious to dry and powdery. It comes in various flavours from plain creamy white to pista (pistachio) in livid green and is often sold covered with silver leaf (which you eat). Smoother-textured, round penda and thin diamonds of kaju katli, plus moist sandesh and the harder paira, both popular in Bengal, are among many other sweets made from chhana (boiled-down milk with whey). Crunchier mesur is made with chickpeas; numerous types of gelatinous halwa, not the Middle Eastern variety, include the rich gajar ka halwa made from carrots and cream.

Jalebis, circular orange tubes made of deep-fried treacle and dripping with syrup, are as sickly as they look. Gulab jamuns, deep-fried spongy dough balls soaked in syrup, are just as unhealthy. Another popular sweet is the round ladoo, essentially made from sugar, ghee and flour, though the ingredients may vary from region to region. Among Bengali sweets, widely considered to be the best are rasgullas, rosewater-flavoured cream-cheese balls floating in syrup. Ras malai, found throughout north India, is similar, but soaked in cream instead of syrup. Down south, payasam – a rice or vermicelli pudding flavoured with cardamom, saffron and nuts – is a popular dessert, with special versions served during major festivals.

Chocolate is improving rapidly in India and you'll find various Cadbury's and Amul bars. None of the various indigenous brands of imitation Swiss and Belgian chocolates are worth eating.

Among the large ice-cream vendors, Kwality (owned and branded as Wall's), Amul, Gaylord and Dollops stand out. Uniformed men push carts of ice cream around and the bigger companies have many imitators, usually quite obvious. Some have no scruples – stay away from water ices unless you have a seasoned constitution. Ice-cream parlours selling elaborate concoctions are very popular; Connaught Circus in Delhi has several. Be sure to try kulfi, a pistachio- and cardamom-flavoured frozen dessert which is India's answer to ice cream; bhang kulfi (popular during the festival of Holi) is laced with cannabis and has an interesting kick to it, but should be approached with caution.

Fruit What fruit is available varies with region and season, but there's always a fine choice. Ideally, you should peel all fruit, including apples, or at least make sure they are rinsed in purified water. Roadside vendors sell fruit which they often cut up and serve sprinkled with salt and even masala – don't buy anything that looks like it's been hanging around for a while.

Mangoes of various kinds are usually on offer but not all are sweet enough to eat fresh – some are used for pickles or curries. Indians are very picky about their mangoes, which they feel and smell before buying; if you don't know the art of choosing the fruit, you could be sold the leftovers. Among the species appearing at different times in the season, which lasts from spring to summer, look out for Alphonso and Langra. Bananas of one sort or another are also on sale all year round, and oranges and tangerines are generally easy to come by, as are sweet melons and thirst-quenching watermelons.

Tropical fruits such as coconuts, papayas (pawpaws) and pineapples are more common in the south, while things such as lychees and pomegranates are very seasonal. In the north, temperate fruit from the mountains can be much like that in Europe and North America, with strawberries, apricots and even rather soft apples available in season.

Among less familiar fruit, the chiku, which looks like a kiwi and tastes a bit like a pear, is worth a mention, as is the watermelon-sized jackfruit, whose spiny green exterior encloses sweet, slightly rubbery yellow segments, each containing a seed. Individual segments are sold at roadside stalls.

Nonalcoholic drinks India sometimes seems to run on tea, or chai, grown in Darjeeling, Assam and the Nilgiri Hills, and sold by chaiwalas on just about every street corner. Tea is usually made by putting tea leaves, milk and water in a pan, boiling it all up, straining it into a cup or glass with lots of sugar and pouring back and forth from one cup to another to stir. Ginger and/or cardamom are often added. If you're quick off the mark, you can get them to hold the sugar. English tea it isn't, but most travellers get used to it. Sometimes, especially in tourist spots, you might get a pot of European-style "tray" tea, generally consisting of a tea bag in lukewarm water – you'd do better to stick to the pukka Indian variety, unless, that is, you are in a traditional tea-growing area.

Coffee is becoming increasingly popular, with a growing number of cafés and restaurants now investing in proper coffee machines, especially in the major cities and tourist centres. There are now hundreds of branches of chains – Café Coffee Day (CCD) is by far the biggest, followed by Barista – and a growing number of independent outlets. In the south, coffee is just as common as tea, and generally far better than it is in the north. One of the best places to get it is in outlets of the Indian Coffee House chain, found in every southern town and occasionally in the north. A whole ritual is attached to the drinking of milky Keralan coffee in particular, poured in flamboyant sweeping motions between tall glasses to cool it down.

Soft drinks are ubiquitous. Coca-Cola and Pepsi have now largely replaced (or bought out) their old Indian equivalents such as Campa Cola and Thums Up, although you'll still find the pleasantly lemony Limca. All contain a lot of sugar but little else: adverts for Indian soft drinks have been known to boast "Absolutely no natural ingredients!" None will quench your thirst for long.

More recommendable is water, either treated or boiled tap water or bottled water (though quality may be suspect). You'll also find cartons of Frooti, Jumpin, Réal and similar brands of fruit juice drinks, which come in mango, guava, apple and lemon varieties. If the carton looks at all mangled, it is best not to touch it as it may have been recycled. At larger stations, there will be a stall on the platform selling Himachali apple juice. Better still, green coconuts, common around coastal areas especially in the south, are cheaper than any of these and sold on the street by vendors who will hack off the top for you with a machete and give you a straw to suck up the coconut water (you then scoop out the flesh and eat it). You will also find street stalls selling freshly made sugar-cane juice: delicious, and not in fact too sweet, but not always safe healthwise.

India's greatest cold drink, lassi, is made with beaten curd and drunk either sweetened with sugar, salted, or mixed with fruit. Varying widely from smooth and delicious to insipid and watery, it is sold at virtually every café, restaurant and canteen in the country. Freshly made milkshakes are also commonly available at establishments with blenders. They'll also sell you what they call a fruit juice, but which is usually fruit, water and sugar (or salt) liquidized and strained; also, street vendors selling fresh fruit juice in less than hygienic conditions are apt to add salt and garam masala. With all such drinks, however appetizing they may seem, you should exercise great caution in deciding where to drink them.

Alcohol Prohibition has been making something of a comeback in Modi's India and in 2016 Bihar joined Gujarat, Nagaland and Manipur in having a total alcohol ban for the general public. Other states such as Kerala, Tamil Nadu, Andhra Pradesh and some other states retain partial prohibition in the form of "dry" days, high taxes, very restrictive licences, and health warnings on labels.

Alcoholic enclaves in prohibition states can become major drinking centres: Daman and Diu in Gujarat, and Puducherry and Karaikal in Tamil Nadu are the main ones. Goa, Sikkim and Mahé (Kerala) join them as places where the booze flows especially freely and cheaply. Interestingly, all were outside the British Raj. Liquor permits – free, and available from Indian embassies, high commissions and tourist offices abroad, from tourist offices in Delhi, Mumbai, Kolkata and Chennai, at airports on arrival and even online – allow those travellers who bother to apply for one to evade certain restrictions in Gujarat.

Beer is widely available, if rather expensive by local standards. A pub culture, not dissimilar to that of the West, has taken root among the wealthier classes in cities like Bengaluru and Mumbai and also in Delhi. Kingfisher, King's Black Label and Foster's are still the leading brands but there are plenty of others, and microbreweries are increasingly making their presence felt in some metropolitan areas. The mainstream lagers tend to contain chemical additives, including glycerine, but are still fairly palatable if you can get them cold. In certain places, notably unlicensed restaurants in Tamil Nadu and Kerala, beer comes in the form of “special tea” – a teapot of beer, which you pour into and drink from a teacup to disguise what it really is.

A cheaper, and often delicious, alternative to beer in Goa and Kerala and other southern states is toddy (palm wine). In Bengal it is made from the date palm, and is known as taddy. Sweet and nonalcoholic when first tapped, it ferments within twelve hours. In the Himalayas, the Bhotia people (of Tibetan stock) drink chang, a beer made from millet, and one of the nicest drinks of all – tumba, where fermented millet is placed in a bamboo flask and topped with hot water, then sipped through a bamboo pipe.

Spirits usually take the form of “Indian Made Foreign Liquor” (IMFL), although the foreign liquor industry is expanding rapidly. Some Scotch, such as Seagram's 100 Pipers, is now being bottled in India and sold at a premium, as is Smirnoff vodka, among other known brands. Some of the brands of Indian whisky are not too bad and are affordable in comparison; gin and brandy can be pretty rough, while Indian rum is sweet and distinctive. In Goa, feni is a spirit distilled from coconut or cashew fruit. Steer well clear of illegally distilled arak (araq) however, which often contains methanol (wood alcohol) and other poisons. A look through the press, especially at festival times, will soon reveal numerous cases of blindness and death as a result of drinking bad hooch (or “spurious liquor” as it’s called). Licensed country liquor, sold in several states under such names as bangla, is an acquired taste. Indian wine – despite the challenging climate – is improving with each year thanks to efforts of a few pioneering vineyards in Maharashtra and Karnataka such as Sula and Grover Zampa. It's not as cheap as other Indian alcohol but is a good alternative to the wildly overpriced foreign wine available in upmarket restaurants and luxury hotels.

< Back to Basics

Health

There are plenty of scare stories about the health risks of travelling in India, but in fact cases of serious illness are very much the exception rather than the rule. Standards of hygiene and sanitation have increased greatly over the past couple of decades and there's no reason you can't stay healthy throughout your trip – indeed many travellers now visit the Subcontinent without even experiencing the traditional dose of “Delhi belly”. Having said that, it's still important to be careful, keep your resistance high and to be aware of the dangers of untreated water, mosquito bites and undressed open cuts. It's worth knowing, if you are ill and can't get to a doctor, that almost any medicine can be bought over the counter without a prescription.

Precautions

When it comes to food, be wary of dishes that appear to have been reheated. Anything boiled, fried or grilled (and thus sterilized) in your presence is usually all right, though seafood and meat can pose real risks if they're not fresh; anything that has been left out for any length of time, or stored in a fridge during a power cut, is best avoided. Raw unpeeled fruit and vegetables should always be viewed with suspicion, and you should steer clear of salads unless you know they have been washed in purified water.

Be vigilant about personal hygiene: wash your hands often, especially before eating. Keep all cuts clean, treat them with iodine or antiseptic (a liquid or dry spray is better in the heat) and cover them to prevent infection.

It's not just your stomach that needs protecting, though. India's air pollution reached an all-time high in 2018, with levels in Delhi quite literally off the government's pollution monitor chart. Big cities like Agra, Delhi, Lucknow and Srinagar are among the worst, but rural areas suffer too. It's most severe in the northern half of the country, and "pollution season" begins around October as a result of cooler temperatures and slow winds. Consider packing a facemask to filter the air as you breathe and avoid exercise like running or cycling in the worst-affected areas.

WHAT ABOUT THE WATER?

One of the chief concerns of many prospective visitors to India is whether the water is safe to drink. Tap water is best avoided, even though locals happily gulp it down, but many hotels and restaurants have modern filtration systems that remove most of the risks. Bottled water, available in all but the most remote places, is an even safer bet, though it has a major drawback – namely the plastic pollution it causes. Visualize the size of the pile of plastic you'd leave behind after getting through a couple of bottles per day, then imagine that multiplied by millions and you have something along the lines of the amount of non-biodegradable landfill waste generated each year by tourists alone.

The best solution as regards your health and the environment is to purify your own water. Chemical sterilization using chlorine is completely effective, fast and inexpensive, and you can remove the nasty taste it leaves with neutralizing tablets or lemon juice.

Alternatively, invest in some kind of purifying filter incorporating chemical sterilization to kill even the smallest viruses. An ever-increasing range of compact, lightweight products are available these days through outdoor shops and large pharmacies, but pregnant women or anyone with thyroid problems should check that iodine isn't used as the chemical sterilizer.

Advice on avoiding mosquitoes is offered under “Malaria”. If you do get bites or itches, try not to scratch them: it's difficult, but infection and tropical ulcers can result if you do. Tiger Balm and even dried soap may relieve the itching.

Finally, especially if you are going on a long trip, have a dental check-up before you leave home.

Vaccinations

No inoculations are legally required for entry into India, but tetanus, typhoid and hepatitis A jabs are recommended for travellers to many parts of the country, and it's worth ensuring that you are up to date with diphtheria, polio and other boosters. Vaccinations for hepatitis B, rabies, meningitis, Japanese encephalitis and TB are only advised if you're travelling to remote areas or working in environments with an increased exposure to infectious diseases.

Transmitted through contaminated food and water or through saliva, hepatitis A can lay a victim low for several months with exhaustion, fever and diarrhoea. Symptoms include yellowing of the whites of the eyes, general malaise, orange urine (though dehydration could also cause that) and light-coloured stools. If you think you have it, get a diagnosis as soon as possible, steer clear of alcohol, get lots of rest – and try to avoid passing it on. More serious is hepatitis B, transmitted like AIDS through blood or sexual contact.

Typhoid fever is also spread through contaminated food or water, but is rare in most parts of India. It produces a persistent high temperature with malaise, headaches and abdominal pains, followed by diarrhoea.

Cholera, spread the same way as hepatitis A and typhoid, causes sudden attacks of watery diarrhoea with cramps and debilitation. Again, this disease rarely occurs in India, breaking out in isolated epidemics; there is a vaccination but it offers very little protection. Most medical authorities now recommend immunization against meningococcal meningitis (ACWY) too. Spread by airborne bacteria (through coughs and sneezes for example), it is a very unpleasant disease that attacks the lining of the brain and can be fatal.

Rabies is widespread throughout the country, and the best advice is to give dogs and monkeys a wide berth – do not play with animals at all, no matter how cute they might look. If you're bitten or scratched and it breaks the skin, immediately wash the wound gently with soap or detergent, apply alcohol or iodine if possible, and go straight away to the nearest hospital for an anti-rabies jab.

For up-to-the-minute information, make an appointment at a travel clinic. These clinics also sell travel accessories, including mosquito nets and first-aid kits.

MEDICAL RESOURCES FOR TRAVELLERS

International Society for Travel Medicine  istm.org. A full list of clinics worldwide specializing in travel health.

IN THE UK AND IRELAND

Hospital for Tropical Diseases Travel Clinic UK ☎020 3456 7891, 🌐thehtd.org.

MASTA (Medical Advisory Service for Travellers Abroad) UK ☎0330 100 4200, 🌐masta-travel-health.com. Dozens of clinics across the UK.

Tropical Medical Bureau Ireland ☎01 271 5200, 🌐tmb.ie.

IN THE US AND CANADA

Canadian Society for International Health Canada ☎1 613 241 5785, www.csih.org. Extensive list of travel health centres in Canada.

CDC US ☎1 800 232 4636, www.cdc.gov. Official US government health site, including travel.

IN AUSTRALIA, NEW ZEALAND AND SOUTH AFRICA

Netcare Travel Clinics South Africa ☎082 911, www.netcare.co.za. Travel clinics in South Africa.

Travellers' Medical & Vaccination Centre Australia www.traveldoctor.com.au. Website listing travellers' medical and vaccination centres throughout Australia and New Zealand.

Heat trouble

The sun and the heat can cause a few unexpected problems. Before they've acclimatized, many people get a bout of prickly heat rash, an infection of the sweat ducts caused by excessive perspiration that doesn't dry off. A cool shower, zinc oxide powder (sold in India) and loose cotton clothes should help. Dehydration is another possible problem, so make sure you're drinking enough liquid, and drink rehydration salts frequently, especially when hot and/or tired. The main danger sign is irregular urination (only once a day for instance); dark urine definitely means you should drink more (although it could also indicate hepatitis).

The sun can burn, or even cause sunstroke; a high-factor sun block is vital on exposed skin, especially when you first arrive. A light hat is also a very good idea, especially if you're doing a lot of walking around in the sun.

Finally, be aware that overheating can cause heatstroke, which is potentially fatal. Signs are a very high body temperature, without a feeling of fever but accompanied by headaches and disorientation. Lowering body temperature (taking a tepid shower for example) and resting in an air-conditioned room is the first step in treatment; also take in plenty of fluids and seek medical advice if the condition doesn't improve after 24 hours.

Malaria

Though India has made some progress in its attempts to control malaria, the disease remains one of the Subcontinent's big killers. It's essential that you check with your doctor whether you'll need to take anti-malarial medication for your visit. The disease, caused by a parasite carried in the saliva of female Anopheles mosquitoes, can be found in many parts of India, and is especially prevalent in Odisha, Chhattisgarh and the northeast, although nonexistent in the high Himalayan regions (there's a useful malaria map of the country at bit.ly/MalariaMap, showing varying levels of risk across the country). Malaria has a variable incubation period of a few days to several weeks, so you can become ill long after being bitten – which is why it's important to carry on taking the tablets even after you've returned home.

Ideas about appropriate antimalarial medication tend to vary from country to country and prophylaxis remains a controversial subject; it's important that you get expert medical advice on which treatment is right for you. In addition, resistance to established antimalarial drugs is growing alarmingly – none of the following provides complete protection, so avoiding being bitten in the first place remains important. Chloroquine- and proguanil-resistant strains of malaria are particularly prevalent in Assam and the northeast; travellers to this region might consider taking a course of malarone, doxycycline or mefloquine instead.

The most established regime – widely prescribed in Europe, but not in North America – is a combination of chloroquine (trade names Nivaquin or Avloclor) taken weekly either on its own or in conjunction with a daily dose of proguanil (Paludrine). You need to start this regime a week before arriving in a malarial area and continue it for four weeks after leaving. In India chloroquine is easy to come by but proguanil isn't, so stock up before you arrive. Mefloquine (Lariam) is a stronger treatment. As a prophylactic, you need take just one tablet weekly, starting two weeks before entering a risk area and continuing for four weeks after leaving. Mefloquine is a very powerful and effective antimalarial, though there have been widely reported concerns about its side effects, including psychological problems.

Doxycycline is often prescribed in Australasia. One tablet is taken daily, starting a day or two before entering a malarial zone and continuing for four weeks after leaving. It's not suitable for children under ten and it can cause thrush in women, while three percent of users develop a sensitivity to light, causing a rash, so it's not ideal for beach holidays. It also interferes with the effectiveness of the contraceptive pill. Malarone (a combination of atovaquone and proguanil) is another alternative, which you only have to start taking two days before you enter a malarial zone and continue for just a week after leaving, meaning that, although it's expensive, it can prove economical for short trips.

Malarial symptoms

The first signs of malaria are remarkably similar to a severe flu, and may take months to appear: if you suspect anything go to a hospital or clinic for a blood test immediately. The shivering, burning fever and headaches come in waves, usually in the early evening. Malaria is not infectious, but some strains are dangerous and occasionally even fatal when not treated promptly, in particular, the chloroquine-resistant cerebral malaria. This virulent and lethal strain of the disease, which affects the brain, is treatable, but has to be diagnosed early. Erratic body temperature, lack of energy and aches are the first key signs.

Preventing mosquito bites

The best way of combating malaria is, of course, to avoid getting bitten: malarial mosquitoes are active from dusk until dawn and during this time you should use mosquito repellent and take all necessary precautions. Sleep under a mosquito net if possible, burn mosquito coils (widely available in India, but easy to break in transit) or electrically heated repellents such as All Out. An Indian brand of repellent called Odomos is widely available and very effective, though most travellers bring their own from home, usually one containing the noxious but effective compound DEET. DEET can cause rashes and a strength of more than thirty percent is not advised for those with sensitive skin. A natural alternative is citronella or, in the UK, Mosi-guard Natural, made from a blend of eucalyptus oils; those with sensitive skin should still use DEET on clothes and nets. Mosquito “buzzers” – plug-in contraptions that smoulder tablets of DEET compounds slowly overnight – are pretty useless, but wrist and ankle bands are as effective as spray and a good alternative for sensitive skin. Though active all night, female Anopheles mosquitoes prefer to bite in the evening, so be especially careful at that time. Wear long sleeves, skirts and trousers, avoid dark colours, which attract mosquitoes, and put repellent on all exposed skin.

Dengue fever and Japanese encephalitis

Another illness spread by mosquito bites is dengue fever, whose symptoms are similar to those of malaria, plus aching bones. There is no vaccine available and the only treatment is complete rest, with drugs to assuage the fever. Japanese encephalitis, a mosquito-borne viral infection causing fever, muscle pains and headaches, is most prevalent in wet, rural rice-growing areas. However, it only rarely affects travellers, and the vaccine isn't usually recommended unless you plan to spend much time around paddy fields during and immediately after the monsoons.

Intestinal troubles

Diarrhoea is the most common bane of travellers. When mild and not accompanied by other major symptoms, it may just be your stomach reacting to unfamiliar food. Accompanied by cramps and vomiting, it could well be food poisoning. In either case, it will probably pass of its own accord in 24–48 hours without treatment. In the meantime, it is essential to replace the fluids and salts you're losing, so take lots of water with oral rehydration salts (commonly referred to as ORS, or called Electrolyte in India). If you can't get ORS, use half a teaspoon of salt and eight of sugar in a litre of water, and if you are too ill to keep it down, seek medical help immediately. Travel clinics and pharmacies sell double-ended moulded plastic spoons with the exact ratio of sugar to salt.

A TRAVELLERS' FIRST-AID KIT

Below are items you might want to take, especially if you're planning to go trekking – all are available in India itself, at a fraction of what you might pay at home:

- Antiseptic cream
- Insect repellent and cream such as Anthisan for soothing bites
- Plasters/Band-Aids
- A course of Flagyl antibiotics
- Water sterilization tablets or water purifier
- Lint and sealed bandages
- Knee supports
- Imodium (Lomotil) for emergency diarrhoea treatment
- A mild oral anesthetic such as Bonjela for soothing ulcers or mild toothache
- Paracetamol/aspirin
- Multivitamin and mineral tablets
- Rehydration sachets
- Hypodermic needles and sterilized skin wipes

While you are suffering, it's a good idea to avoid greasy food, heavy spices, caffeine and most fruit and dairy products. Some say bananas and papaya are good, as are kitchri (a simple dhal and rice preparation) and rice soup and coconut water, while curd or a soup made from Marmite or Vegemite (if you happen to have some with you) are forms of protein that can be easily absorbed by your body when you have the runs. Drugs like Lomotil or Imodium simply plug you up – undermining the body's efforts to rid itself of infection – though they can be useful if you have to travel. If symptoms persist for more than a few days, a course of antibiotics may be necessary; this should be seen as a last resort, following medical advice.

Sordid though it may seem, it's a good idea to look at what comes out when you go to the toilet. If your diarrhoea contains blood or mucus and if you are suffering other symptoms including rotten-egg belches and farts, the cause may be dysentery or giardia. With a fever, it could well be caused by bacillary dysentery, and may clear up without treatment. If you're sure you need it, a course of antibiotics such as tetracycline should sort you out, but they also destroy gut flora in your intestines (which help protect you – curd can replenish them to some extent). If you start a course, be sure to finish it, even after the symptoms have gone. Similar symptoms, without fever, indicate amoebic dysentery, which is much more serious, and can damage your gut if untreated. The usual cure is a course of Metronidazole (Flagyl) or Fasigyn, both antibiotics which may themselves make you feel ill, and must not be taken with alcohol. Symptoms of giardia are similar – including frothy stools, nausea and constant fatigue – for which the treatment is again Metronidazole. If you suspect that you have either of these, seek medical help, and only start on the Metronidazole (750mg three times daily for a week for adults) if there is definitely blood in your diarrhoea and it is impossible to see a doctor.

Finally, bear in mind that oral drugs, such as malaria pills and the Pill, are likely to be largely ineffective if taken while suffering from diarrhoea.

Bites and creepy crawlies

Worms may enter your body through skin (especially the soles of your feet) or food. An itchy anus is a common symptom, and you may even see them in your stools. They are easy to treat: if you suspect you have them, get some worming tablets such as Mebendazole (Vermox) from any pharmacy.

Biting insects and similar animals other than mosquitoes may also aggravate you. The obvious suspects are bedbugs – look for signs of squashed ones around beds in cheap hotels. An infested mattress can be left in the hot sun all day to get rid of them, but they often live in the frame or even in walls or floors. Head and body lice can also be a nuisance, but medicated soap and shampoo (preferably brought with you from home) usually see them off. Avoid scratching bites, which can lead to infection. Bites from ticks and lice can spread typhus, characterized by fever, muscle aches, headaches and, later, red eyes and a measles-like rash. If you think you have it, seek treatment (tetracycline is usually prescribed).

Snakes are unlikely to bite unless accidentally disturbed, and most are harmless in any case. To see one at all, you need to search stealthily – walk heavily and they usually oblige by disappearing. If you do get bitten, remember what the snake looked like (kill it if you can), try not to move the affected part, and seek medical help: antivenins are available in most hospitals. A few spiders have poisonous bites too. Remove leeches, which may attach themselves to you in jungle areas, with salt or a lit cigarette: never just pull them off.

Altitude sickness

At high altitudes, you may develop symptoms of acute mountain sickness (AMS). Just about everyone who ascends to around 4000m or higher experiences mild symptoms, but serious cases are rare. The simple cure – descent – almost always brings immediate recovery.

AMS is caused by the fact that at high elevations there is not only less oxygen, but also lower atmospheric pressure. This can have all sorts of weird effects on the body: it can cause the brain to swell and the lungs to fill with fluid, and even bring on uncontrollable farting. The syndrome varies from one person to the next but symptoms include breathlessness, headaches and dizziness, nausea, difficulty sleeping and appetite loss. More extreme cases may involve disorientation and loss of balance, and the coughing up of pink frothy phlegm.

AMS strikes without regard for fitness – in fact, young people seem to be more susceptible, possibly because they're more reluctant to admit they feel sick and they dart about more energetically. Most people are capable of acclimatizing to very high altitudes but the process takes time and must be done in stages. The golden rule is not to go too high, too fast; or if you do, spend the night at a lower height ("Climb High, Sleep Low"). Above 3000m, you should not ascend more than 500m per day; take mandatory acclimatization days at 3500m and 4000m – more if you feel unwell – and try to spend these days day-hiking to higher altitudes.

The general symptoms of AMS can be treated with the drug acetazolamide (Diamox) but this is not advised as it will block the early signs of severe AMS, which can be fatal. It is better to stay put for a day or two, eat a high-carbohydrate diet, drink plenty of water (three litres a day is recommended), take paracetamol or aspirin for the headaches, and descend if the AMS persists or worsens. If you fly direct to a high-altitude destination such as Leh, be especially careful to acclimatize (plan for three days of initial rest); you'll certainly want to avoid doing anything strenuous at first.

Other precautions to take at high altitudes include avoiding alcohol and sleeping pills, drinking more liquid, and protecting your skin against UV solar glare.

HIV and AIDS

HIV/AIDS is as much of a risk in India as anywhere else, and in recent years the government has heeded WHO advice by setting up its own awareness and prevention campaigns. As elsewhere in the world, high-risk groups include prostitutes and intravenous drug users. It is extremely unwise to contemplate casual sex without a condom – carry some with you (preferably brought from home as Indian ones may be less reliable) and insist upon using them.

Should you need an injection or a transfusion in India, make sure that new, sterile equipment is used; any blood you receive should be from voluntary rather than commercial donor banks. If you have a shave from a barber, make sure he uses a clean blade and don't undergo processes such as ear-piercing, acupuncture or tattooing unless you can be sure that the equipment is sterile.

Covid-19

India did surprisingly well throughout the coronavirus pandemic by imposing quite severe restrictions early and at the time of writing had suffered a far lower fatality rate (378 per million) than just about all western countries and many other Asian ones. By late 2022 there were no more restrictions in place for entering or travelling within the country, although it is obviously wise to keep abreast of any developments that may be caused by future variants.

Getting medical help

Pharmacies can usually advise on minor medical problems, and most doctors in India speak English. Also, many hotels keep a doctor on call; if you do get ill and need medical assistance, take advice as to the best facilities around. Basic medications are made to Indian Pharmacopoea (IP) standards, and most medicines are available without prescription, but always check the sell-by date.

AYURVEDIC MEDICINE

Ayurveda, a Sanskrit word meaning the “knowledge for prolonging life”, is a five-thousand-year-old holistic medical system that is widely practised in India. Ayurvedic doctors and clinics in large towns deal with foreigners as well as their usual patients, and some pharmacies specialize in Ayurvedic preparations, including toiletries such as soaps, shampoos and toothpastes.

Ayurveda assumes the fundamental sameness of self and nature. Unlike the allopathic medicines of the West, which depend on finding out what’s ailing you and then killing it, Ayurveda looks at the whole patient: disease is regarded as a symptom of imbalance, so it’s the imbalance that’s treated, not the disease. Ayurvedic theory holds that the body is controlled by three forces, which reflect the forces within the self: pitta, the force of the sun, is hot, and rules the digestive processes and metabolism; kapha, likened to the moon, the creator of tides and rhythms, has a cooling effect and governs the body’s organs; and vata, wind, relates to movement and the nervous system. The healthy body is one that has the three forces in balance. To diagnose an imbalance, the Ayurvedic vaid (doctor) responds not only to the physical complaint but also to family background, daily habits and emotional traits.

Imbalances are typically treated with herbal remedies designed to alter whichever of the three forces is out of whack. Made according to traditional formulae, using indigenous plants, Ayurvedic medicines are cheaper than branded or imported drugs. In addition, the doctor may prescribe various forms of yogic cleansing to rid the body of waste substances. To the uninitiated, these techniques will sound rather off-putting – for instance, swallowing a long strip of cloth, a short section at a time, and then pulling it back up again to remove mucus from the stomach. Ayurvedic massage with herbal oils is especially popular in Kerala where courses of treatments are available to combat a wide array of ailments.

Hospitals have variable standards: private clinics and mission hospitals are often better than state-run ones but may not have the same facilities. Hospitals in big cities, including university or medical-school hospitals, are generally pretty good, and cities such as Delhi, Mumbai, Hyderabad and Bengaluru boast state-of-the-art medical facilities but at a price. Many hospitals require patients (even emergency cases) to buy necessities such as medicines, plaster casts and vaccines, and to pay for X-rays, before procedures are carried out. Remember to keep receipts for insurance reimbursements. Government hospitals, however, provide all surgical and after-care services free of charge and in most other state medical institutions charges are usually so low that for minor treatment the expense may well be lower than the initial “excess” on your insurance. You will, however, need a companion to stay, or you’ll have to come to an arrangement with one of the hospital cleaners, to help you out in hospital – relatives are expected to wash, feed and generally take care of the patient. Beware of scams by private clinics in tourist towns such as Agra where there have been reports of overcharging and misdiagnosis by doctors to claim insurance money. Addresses of foreign consulates (who will advise in an emergency), as well as clinics and hospitals, can be found in the Directory sections in the accounts of major cities and towns in this book.

< Back to Basics

The media With well over a billion people and a literacy rate approaching 75 percent, India produces in excess of a staggering 5000 daily papers in more than three hundred languages, plus another 40,000 journals and weeklies. There are a large number of English-language daily newspapers, both national and regional.

Newspapers and magazines The most prominent of the nationals are the Times of India (🌐timesofindia.indiatimes.com), The Hindu (🌐thehindu.com), The Deccan Herald (🌐deccanherald.com), The Hindustan Times (🌐hindustantimes.com), The Economic Times (🌐economictimes.indiatimes.com) and the New Indian Express (🌐newindianexpress.com), usually the most critical of the government. All are pretty dry and sober, concentrating on Indian news, although Kolkata's The Telegraph (🌐telegraphindia.com) tends to have better coverage of world news than the rest. The Asian Age (🌐asianage.com), published simultaneously in Delhi, Mumbai, Kolkata and London is a conservative tabloid that sports a motley collection of the world's more colourful stories. The Times of India, The Hindu and The Hindustan Times provide the most up-to-date and detailed online news services.

India's press is the freest in Asia and attacks on the government are often quite outspoken. However, as in the West, most papers can be seen as part of the political establishment, and are unlikely to print anything that might upset the "national consensus".

There are also a number of Time/Newsweek-style news magazines, with a strong emphasis on politics. The best of these are India Today (🌐indiatoday.in) and Frontline (🌐frontline.thehindu.com), published by The Hindu. Others include Outlook (🌐outlookindia.com), which presents the most readable, broadly themed analysis, and The Week (🌐theweek.in). As they give more of an overview of stories and issues than the daily papers, you will probably get a better insight into Indian politics, and most tend to have a higher proportion of international news, too. Also worth checking out are 🌐samachar.com, one of the best news gateway sites, featuring headlines and links to leading Indian newspapers, and alternative news webzine 🌐tehelka.com, famous for exposing corruption scandals in government.

Film fanzines and gossip mags are very popular – Filmfare (🌐filmfare.com) is the best, though you'd have to be reasonably au fait with Indian movies to follow a lot of it. Other magazines and periodicals in English cover all sorts of popular and minority interests, so it's worth having a look through what's available. Expat-oriented bookstalls, such as those in New Delhi's Khan Market, stock slightly out-of-date and expensive copies of magazines like Vogue.

Foreign publications such as the International Herald Tribune, Time and The Economist are all available in the main cities, though it's easier (and cheaper) to read the day's edition for free online. For a read through the British press, try the British Council in Delhi, Mumbai, Kolkata, Chennai and six other cities; the USIS is the American equivalent. The UK's Guardian website (🌐guardian.co.uk/world/india) is one of the best online news resources, with an extensive archive of articles and an excellent dossier on Kashmir. Access is free.

Radio and TV

BBC World Service radio (bbc.co.uk/worldservice) can be picked up at 94.3FM in most major cities, on short wave on frequencies ranging from 5790–15310kHz, and more sporadically on medium wave (AM) at 1413KHz (212m). It also broadcasts online. The Voice of America (voa.gov) can be found on 15.75MHz (19) and (75.75MHz (39.5m), among other frequencies. Radio Canada (rcinet.ca) broadcasts in English on 6165 and 7255KHz (48.6 and 41.3m) at 6.30–7.30am and on 9635 and 11,975 KHz (31 and 25m) at 8.30–9.30pm.

The government-run TV company, Doordarshan, which broadcasts a sober diet of edifying programmes, has tried to compete with the onslaught of mass access to satellite TV. The main broadcaster in English is Rupert Murdoch's Star TV network, which incorporates the BBC World Service and Zee TV (with Z News), a progressive blend of Hindi-oriented chat, film, news and music programmes. Star Sports, ESPN and Ten Sports churn out a mind-boggling amount of cricket, extensive coverage of English Premier League football, plenty of tennis and a few other sports. Other channels include CNN, the Discovery Channel, the immensely popular Channel V, hosted by scantily clad Mumbai models and DJs, and a couple of American soap and chat stations. There are numerous local-language channels as well, many of them showing magnificently colourful religious and devotional programmes.

< Back to Basics

Festivals and holidays

Virtually every temple in every town or village across the country has its own festival. The biggest and most spectacular include Puri's Rath Yatra festival in June or July, the Hemis festival in Ladakh (also held in June or July), Pushkar's camel fair in November, Kullu's Dussehra, Madurai's three annual festivals and, of course, the Kumbh Mela, held in turn at Prayagraj, Haridwar, Nashik and Ujjain. While mostly religious in nature, merrymaking rather than solemnity are generally the order of the day, and onlookers are invariably welcome. Indeed, if you're lucky enough to coincide with a local festival, it may well prove to be the highlight of your trip.

There isn't space to list every festival in every village across India here, but local festivals are featured at the start of each chapter and throughout the body of the Guide. The calendar below includes details of the main national and regional celebrations. Hindu, Sikh, Buddhist and Jain festivals follow the Indian lunar calendar and their dates therefore vary from year to year – we've given the lunar month (Magha, Phalguna, Chaitra, and so on), where relevant, in the listings below. The lunar calendar adds a leap month every two or three years to keep it in line with the seasons. Muslim festivals follow the Islamic calendar, whose year is shorter and which thus loses about eleven days per annum against the Gregorian.

In recent years, there has been an explosion in the number of contemporary, pop and fusion music festivals, as India develops a circuit something like the UK and other parts of Europe. Examples include Festa de Diu (www.diutourism.gov.in), Ragasthan (www.ragasthan.com), Jodhpur RIFF (www.jodhpurriff.org) and Magnetic Fields (www.magneticfields.in).

PRINCIPAL INDIAN HOLIDAYS

India has only four national public holidays as such: Jan 26 (Republic Day); Aug 15 (Independence Day); Oct 2 (Gandhi's birthday); and Dec 25 (Christmas Day). Each state, however, has its own calendar of public holidays; you can expect most businesses to close on the major holidays of their own religion. The Hindu lunar calendar months are given in brackets below.

Key: B=Buddhist; C=Christian; H=Hindu; J=Jain; M=Muslim; N=non-religious; P=Parsi; S=Sikh.

Jan–Feb (Magha)

N Hampi Utsav: Government-sponsored music and dance festival..

H Pongal (1 Magha): Tamil harvest festival celebrated with decorated cows, processions and rangolis (chalk designs on the doorsteps of houses). Pongal is a sweet porridge made from newly harvested rice and eaten by all, including the cows. The festival is also known as Makar Sankranti, and celebrated in Karnataka, Andhra Pradesh and the east of India.

H Sagar Mela: Pilgrims come from all over the country to Sagardwip, on the mouth of the Hooghly 150km south of Kolkata, to bathe during Makar Sankranti..

N International Kite Festival/Uttarayan (Jan 14). Coinciding with Makar Sankranti, Ahmedabad (Gujarat) hosts the most spectacular of all of India's kite festivals..

H Vasant Panchami (5 Magha): One-day spring festival in honour of Saraswati, the goddess of learning, celebrated with kite-flying, the wearing of yellow saris and the blessing of schoolchildren's books and pens by the goddess.

N Republic Day (Jan 26): A military parade in Delhi typifies this state celebration of India's republic-hood, followed on Jan 29 by the "Beating the Retreat" ceremony outside the presidential palace in Delhi.

H Teppa Floating Festival (16 Magha). Meenakshi and Shiva are towed around the Vandiyur Mariamman Teppakulam tank in boats lit with fairy lights – a prelude to the Tamil marriage season in Madurai, Tamil Nadu..

N Elephanta Music and Dance Festival. Classical Indian dance performed with the famous rock-cut caves in Mumbai harbour as a backdrop.

INDIAN WEDDINGS

You may, while in India, be lucky enough to be invited to a wedding. These are jubilant affairs, always scheduled on auspicious days. A Hindu bride dresses in red for the ceremony, and marks the parting of her hair with red sindur and her forehead with a bindi. She wears gold or bone bangles, which she keeps on for the rest of her married life. Although the practice is officially illegal, large dowries often change hands. These are usually paid by the bride's family to the groom, and can be contentious; poor families feel obliged to save for years to get their daughters married.

Feb–March (Phalguna)

B Losar (1 Phalguna): Tibetan New Year celebrations among Tibetan and Himalayan Buddhist communities, especially at Dharamsala (HP).

H Shivratri (10 Phalguna): Anniversary of Shiva's tandav (creation) dance, and his wedding anniversary. Popular family festival but also a sadhu festival of pilgrimage and fasting, especially at important Shiva temples.

H Holi (15 Phalguna): Water festival held during Dol Purnima (full moon) to celebrate the beginning of spring, most popular in the north. Expect to be bombarded with water, paint, coloured powder and other mixtures; they can permanently stain clothing, so don't go out in your Sunday best.

N Khajuraho Festival of Dance: The country's finest dancers perform in front of Madhya Pradesh's famous erotic sculpture-carved shrines..

N Goa Carnival: Goa's own Mardi Gras features float processions and feni-induced mayhem in the state capital, Panjim.

March–April (Chaitra)

H Gangaur (3 Chaitra): Rajasthani festival (also celebrated in Bengal and Odisha) in honour of Gauri (Parvati), marked with singing and dancing.

H Ramanavami (9 Chaitra): Birthday of Rama, the hero of the Ramayana, celebrated with readings of the epic and discourses on Rama's life and teachings.

C Easter (moveable feast): Celebration of the resurrection of Christ. Good Friday in particular is a day of festivity.

P Pateti: Parsi new year, also known as Nav Roz, celebrating the creation of fire. Feasting, services and present-giving.

P Khorvad Sal (a week after Pateti): Birthday of Zarathustra (aka Zoroaster). Celebrated in the Parsis' fire temples, and with feasting at home.

April–May (Vaisakha)

HS Baisakhi (1 Vaisakha): To the Hindus, it's the solar new year, celebrated with music and dancing; to the Sikhs, it's the anniversary of the foundation of the Khalsa (Sikh brotherhood) by Guru Gobind Singh. Processions and feasting follow readings of the Granth Sahib scriptures.

H Chithirai: Lively procession at Madurai in Tamil Nadu..

J Mahavir Jayanti (13 Vaisakha): Birthday of Mahavira, the founder of Jainism. The main Jain festival of the year, observed by visits to sacred Jain sites, especially in Rajasthan and Gujarat, and with present-giving.

H Puram: Frenzied drumming and elephant parades in Thrissur, Kerala..

B Buddha Jayanti (16 Vaisakha): Buddha's birthday. He achieved enlightenment and nirvana on the same date. Sarnath (UP) and Bodhi Gaya (Bihar) are the main centres of celebration.

May–June (Jyaishta)

H Ganga Dussehra (10 Jyaishta): Bathing festival to celebrate the descent to earth of the goddess of the Ganges..

June–July (Ashadha)

H Rath Yatra (2 Ashadha): Festival held in Puri (and other places, especially in the south) to commemorate Krishna's (Lord Jagannath's) journey to Mathura..

H Teej (3 Ashadha): Festival in honour of Parvati to welcome the monsoon. Particularly celebrated in Rajasthan.

B Hemis Tsechu Held sometime between late June and mid-July, this spectacular Ladakh festival features chaam (lama dances) to signify the victory of Buddhism over evil..

July–Aug (Shravana)

H Naag Panchami (3 Shravana): Snake festival in honour of the naga snake deities. Mainly celebrated in Rajasthan and Maharashtra.

H Raksha Bandhan/Narial Purnima (16 Shravana): Festival to honour the sea god Varuna. Brothers and sisters exchange gifts, the sister tying a thread known as a rakhi to her brother's wrist. Brahmins, after a day's fasting, change the sacred thread they wear.

N Independence Day (Aug 15): India's biggest secular celebration, on the anniversary of Independence from the UK.

Aug–Sept (Bhadrapada)

H Ganesh Chaturthi (4 Bhadrapada): Festival dedicated to Ganesh, especially popular in Maharashtra. In Mumbai, processions carry images of the god to immerse in the sea..

H Onam: Kerala's harvest festival, celebrated with snake-boat races. The Nehru Trophy Snake Boat Race at Alappuzha (held on the 2nd Sat of Aug) is the most spectacular, with long boats crewed by 150 rowers.

H Janmashtami (23 Bhadrapada): Krishna's birthday, an occasion for fasting and celebration, especially in Agra, Gujarat, Mumbai, Mathura and Vrindavan (UP).

Sept–Oct (Ashvina)

H Dussehra/Dasara (1–10 Ashvina): Ten-day festival (usually two days' public holiday) associated with vanquishing demons, in particular Rama's victory over Ravana in the Ramayana, and Durga's over the buffalo-headed Mahishasura (particularly in West Bengal, where it is called Durga Puja). Dussehra (known as Dasara in south India) celebrations include performances of the Ram Lila (life of Rama). Best in Mysuru (Karnataka;), Ahmedabad (Gujarat) and Kullu (Himachal Pradesh;). Durga Puja is best seen in Kolkata where it is an occasion for exchanging gifts, and every locality has its own competing street-side image.

N Mahatma Gandhi's Birthday (Oct 2): Solemn commemoration of independent India's founding father.

Oct–Nov (Kartika)

H Diwali (Deepavali) (15 Kartika): Festival of lights, and India's biggest, to celebrate Rama's and Sita's homecoming in the Ramayana. Festivities include the lighting of oil lamps and firecrackers, and the giving and receiving of sweets and gifts. Diwali coincides with Kali Puja, celebrated in temples dedicated to the wrathful goddess, especially in Bengal, and often accompanied by the ritual sacrifice of goats.

J Jain New Year (15 Kartika): Coincides with Diwali, so Jains celebrate alongside Hindus.

S Nanak Jayanti (16 Kartika): Guru Nanak's birthday marked by prayer readings and processions, especially in Amritsar and in the rest of the Punjab, and at Patna (Bihar).

Nov–Dec (Margashirsha or Agrahayana)

H Sonepur Mela World's largest cattle fair at Sonepur (Bihar)..

N Pushkar Camel Fair Camel herders don their finest attire for this massive livestock market on the fringes of the Thar Desert in Rajasthan..

Dec–Jan (Pausa)

N Poush Mela (Dec 22–25): Held in Shantiniketan near Kolkata, this festival is renowned for its musical performances by Bauls (mystic minstrels;).

CN Christmas (Dec 25): Popular in Christian areas of Goa and Kerala, and in big cities.

Moveable

H Kumbh Mela: Major festival held at four holy cities in rotation, with each location hosting once every twelve years: Prayagraj (UP), Nashik (Maharashtra), Ujjain (MP) or Haridwar (Uttarakhand). The Prayagraj event is the most important and you can expect the 2025 attendance to exceed the 120 million in 2013; there are also Ardh (half) Kumbh Melas in between, with the most recent held in Prayagraj during early 2019..

M Ramadan: The month during which Muslims may not eat, drink or smoke from sunrise to sunset, and should abstain from sex. Muslim areas tend to come alive in the evenings as locals break their fast after prayers (iftar) and shop for Id. The most recent dates were March 22 to April 20, 2023.

M Id ul-Fitr: Feast to celebrate the end of Ramadan. The precise date of the festival depends on exactly when the new moon is sighted, and so cannot be predicted with complete accuracy. The most recent was on April 21, 2023.

< Back to Basics

Sports

Cricket is by far the most popular sport in India, and a fine example of how something quintessentially British (well, English) has become something quintessentially Indian. Indian cricket now dominates the global game, responsible for as much as 80 percent of its revenue. Travellers to India will find it hard to get away from the game – it's everywhere, especially on television.

Cricketing heroes such as current captain Rohit Sharma live under the constant scrutiny of the media and public; expectations are high and disappointments acute. India versus Pakistan matches are especially emotive, with rivalries often spilling out into bloodshed. Besides spectator cricket, you'll see games being played on open spaces all around the country.

Test matches are rare, but inter-state cricket is easy to catch – the most prestigious competition is the Ranji Trophy. Occasionally, in cities like Kolkata, you may even come across a match blocking a road, and will have to be patient as the players begrudgingly let your vehicle continue.

Football (soccer) has undergone a revolution since the establishment of the eight-team (now eleven) Indian Super League (ISL) in 2013, which attracts the fourth highest average attendances in the world as well as a massive TV audience. Teams employ high-profile international coaches such as the Delhi Dynamos' Roberto Carlos of Brazil, while the players include a number of internationals, mostly from Africa. Goa and Kolkata have always been strongholds of the game, and Atlético de Kolkata won the inaugural trophy in 2014; but their city rivals Mohun Bagan won the title in 2023.

Horse racing can be a good day out, especially if you enjoy a flutter. The racecourse at Kolkata is the most popular, often attracting crowds of more than fifty thousand, especially on New Year's Day. There are several other racecourses around the country, mostly in larger cities such as Mumbai, Delhi, Pune, Hyderabad, Mysuru, Bengaluru and Ooty. Other (mainly) spectator sports include polo, originally from upper Kashmir, but taken up by the British to become one of the symbols of the Raj. Certain Rajasthani princes, such as the late Hanut Singh of Jodhpur, were considered to be the best polo players in the world between the 1930s and 1950s, but since the 1960s, when the privy purses were abolished, they have been unable to maintain their stables, and the tradition of polo has declined. Today, it's mainly the army who plays the game; the best place to catch a match is at the Delhi Gymkhana during the winter season. Polo, in more or less its original form, is still played on tiny mountain ponies in Ladakh; a good place to see a game played in traditional style is in Leh during the Ladakh Festival in early September.

After years in the doldrums, field hockey, which used to regularly furnish the country with Olympic medals, is making a strong comeback. The haul of medals dried up in the 1960s when international hockey introduced Astroturf – which was, and still is, a rare surface in India. However, hockey remains very popular, especially in schools and colleges and, interestingly, among the tribal girls of Odisha, who supply the Indian national team with a regular clutch of players. India hosted the Hockey World Cup in 2010 and again in 2018.

Tennis in India has always been a sport for the middle and upper classes. The country has produced a number of world-class players, such as the men's duo of Mahesh Bhupathi and Leander Paes, who briefly achieved a world number-one ranking in the men's doubles in 1999, and Sania Mirza, the first Indian woman to break into the singles top 50. At the time of writing no Indian player was in the top 200 ATP ranking for either sex.

Volleyball is very popular throughout India, especially in the resorts of Goa. Standards aren't particularly high and joining a game is quite easy. Since the arrival on the Formula 1 scene of Kingfisher tycoon Vijay Malia's Force India team, motor racing has also grown in popularity and three Grand Prix races were hosted at the track at Noida outside Delhi between 2011 and 2013, though tax disputes have led to the race being shelved since. Golf is widely followed, too, again among the middle classes; the second oldest golf course in the world is in Kolkata, and one of the highest in the world is at Shimla.

One indigenous sport you're likely to see in north India is kabaddi, played on a small (badminton-sized) court, and informally on any suitable open area. The game, with seven players in each team, consists of a player from each team alternately attempting to "tag" as many members of the opposing team as possible in the space of a single breath (cheating is impossible; the player has to maintain a continuous chant of "kabaddikabaddikabaddikabaddi" etc), and getting back to his/her own side of the court without being caught. The game can get quite rough, with slaps and kicks in tagging allowed, and the defending team must try to tackle and pin the attacker so as not to allow him or her to even touch the dividing line. Tagged victims are required to leave the court. Although still an amateur sport, kabaddi is taken very seriously with state and national championships, and has featured in the Asian Games since 1990.

Popular with devotees of the monkey god, Hanuman, Indian wrestling, or kushti, has a small but dedicated following. Wrestlers are known as pahalwaans or “strong men” and can be seen exercising early in the morning with clubs and weights along river ghats such as those in Varanasi or Kolkata.

INDIA’S TWENTY20 VISION

Over the last fifteen years, the whole global cricket scene has been massively shaken up by the brashness and glamour of the Indian Premier League (www.iplt20.com), the world’s biggest Twenty20 cricket tournament. Held annually in April and May since 2008, the IPL features a mix of young up-and-coming locals, established Indian players and international cricketing megastars such as AB de Villiers and Chris Gayle. Each of the league’s ten city team franchises supplements their home-grown playing staff by signing up star “icon players”, whose services are auctioned off via a series of sealed bids. In 2022 the Punjab Kings paid around $2.25 million for England all-rounder Sam Curran.

With such staggering sums of money changing hands, it’s perhaps no surprise that the IPL has become as well known for its off-field controversies and financial irregularities as for the action and drama on the pitch.

< Back to Basics

Trekking and outdoor activities

India offers plenty of opportunities for adventure sports, including trekking, mountaineering, whitewater rafting, caving and diving – just make sure you’ve got comprehensive insurance before getting stuck in.

Trekking

Though trekking in India is not nearly as commercialized as in neighbouring Nepal, the country can claim some of the world’s most spectacular routes, especially in the Ladakh and Zaskar Himalayas, where the mountain passes frequently top 5000m. Himalayan routes are not all extreme, with relatively gentle short trails exploring the Singalila Range around Darjeeling, low-level forest walks through the rhododendron-clad hillsides of Sikkim and the well-beaten pilgrim trails of Garhwal. Trekking is also becoming more popular in the Western Ghats and Nilgiris of the south.

Hiring a guide-cum-cook is recommended whenever possible, especially on more difficult and less frequented routes, where the consequences of getting lost or running out of supplies could be serious. Porters (with or without ponies) can also make your trip a lot less arduous, and on longer routes where a week or more’s worth of provisions have to be carried, they may be essential. You’ll usually be approached in towns and villages leading to the trailhead by men touting for work. Finding out what the going day-rate is can be difficult, and you should expect to haggle.

You’ll need a permit also for trekking. These can be obtained from various government agencies. The Indian Mountaineering Foundation (IMF) issues permits for mountaineering and trekking expeditions in restricted and regulated areas, including specific regions in the Himalayas. The State Forest Departments provide permits for trekking in protected areas, national parks, wildlife sanctuaries, and forest reserves. These permits are usually required to conserve flora and fauna and regulate visitor activities. In some cases, the district administration or deputy commissioner's office may issue permits for trekking in specific areas under their jurisdiction. If you’re going to head to an international border area, contact the Border Security Force (BSF). Finally, the Archeological Survey of India (ASI) deals with permits in historical and archaeological areas, such as treks to heritage sites or ancient trade routes.

If the prospect of organizing a trek yourself seems too daunting, consider employing a trekking company to do it for you. Agencies at places like Manali, Leh, Darjeeling and Gangtok are detailed in the Guide, while specialist tour operators abroad also offer trips based around trekking. Himachal Pradesh is the easiest state in which to plan a trek. Uttarakhand sees fewer trekkers, and there are plenty of opportunities to wander off the beaten track and either escape the hordes of pilgrims or, alternatively, to join them on their way to the sacred sites of the Char Dham. There are also exciting and exotic high-mountain trekking opportunities in the ancient Buddhist kingdoms of Ladakh and Zaskar, where trails can vary in length from relatively short four-day excursions to epics of ten days or more. At the eastern end of the Himalayas, Darjeeling makes a good base from which to explore the surrounding mountains. Neighbouring Sikkim has the greatest variations in altitude, from steamy river valleys to the third highest massif in the world. Shorter and less strenuous treks are available in the Ghats and the Nilgiri hills of southern India, with Munnar and Wayanad in Kerala, the Kodagu region of Karnataka and Ooty in Tamil Nadu proving the main springboards.

FIVE TOP TREKS

Naggar to the Parvati Valley via Malana Short but beautiful and culturally fascinating route in lush Himachal Pradesh..

Padum to Lamayuru Legendary and tough (ten-day minimum) trek through the rugged Zaskar Range to Ladakh..

The Dzongri Trail This eight-day hike through rhododendron forests and glaciers in Sikkim offers stunning views of Kanchenjunga..

Amarnath Trek Medium-length hike to a cave with a natural ice lingam in the mountains of Kashmir..

Kolukkumalai to Meesapulimalai Great three-day trek through tea plantations to the Western Ghats' second highest peak..

ELEPHANTS IN INDIA

Elephants play a central role in Indian life thanks to the Hindu god, Ganesha, and the animal's cultural importance throughout history. The country is home to around 50% of the world's wild Asian elephants, but it's also home to 20% of the continent's domesticated pachyderms. Some temples keep a captive elephant for religious reasons, and in some places in India such as the Amber Fort in Jaipur, elephant rides are a popular activity for tourists; however, for animal welfare reasons Rough Guides doesn't want to encourage this practice. While we will not recommend elephant rides in this Guide, the situation is not black and white. We will acknowledge where a temple keeps a captive elephant, but we would encourage you to learn more about the ethical implications before you decide whether to visit the sight and/or take an elephant ride. For more information, visit responsibletravel.com/holidays/elephant-conservation/travel-guide/elephant-sanctuaries-which-we-do-and-dont-support or roughguides.com/article/the-truth-about-elephant-tourism-in-asia (which has tips on what to look for in an ethical operation).

Having the right equipment for a trek is important, but high-tech gear isn't essential – bring what you need to be comfortable but keep weight to a minimum. You can rent equipment in places such as Leh and Darjeeling, but otherwise you'll have to buy what you need or bring it with you. Make sure everything (zips, for example) is in working order before you set off. Clothes should be lightweight and versatile, especially considering the range of temperatures you might encounter: dress in layers for maximum flexibility.

Mountaineering

Mountaineering is a more serious venture, requiring planning and organization; if you've never climbed, don't start in the Himalayas. Mountaineering institutes at Darjeeling, Uttarkashi and Dharamsala run training courses. The Nehru Institute of Mountaineering at Uttarkashi in Uttarakhand (www.nimindia.net) is popular with foreigners: you can learn rock- and ice-climbing skills and expedition techniques for a fraction of what you'd pay in the West. Permission for mountaineering expeditions should be sought at least six months in advance from the Indian Mountaineering Federation in New Delhi (☎011 2411 1211, 🌐indmount.org).

Skiing

Despite the mammoth spread of the Himalayas, skiing in India remains relatively undeveloped. The only options for organized skiing are the western Himalayas, in particular Uttarakhand, Himachal Pradesh and Kashmir; the eastern Himalayas have unreliable snowfall at skiing altitudes.

The ski area at Auli, near Joshimath in Uttarakhand, has had money poured into it but suffers from a short season, limited (though cheap) skiing and nonexistent après-ski activity. In Himachal Pradesh, the skiing in the vicinity of Shimla is far too underdeveloped to warrant a detour, but the possibilities around Manali are more enticing because of the prospect of virgin powder: two or three surface tows operate in the Solang Nala for three months every winter. By far the most promising prospect at present, however, is Gulmarg in Kashmir. On a plateau at 2600m, the former British hill station boasts the highest cable car in the world – and some of the most dependably fine powder snow to be had anywhere. Skiers are dropped at nearly 4000m by a French-built gondola, from where the off-piste possibilities are truly world class.

Whitewater rafting

Though not as well-known as some of the mighty rivers of Nepal, the rivers Chenab and Beas in Himachal Pradesh, the Rangit and Teesta in Sikkim, the Zaskar and Indus in Ladakh, and the Ganges in Uttarakhand all combine exciting waters with magnificent scenery. Kullu, Manali, Leh, Gangtok and Rishikesh are among the main rafting centres. Prices include food but it's worth sounding out a few agents to find the best deals. For more details see the relevant accounts in the Guide.

Caving

Meghalaya has the best caving potential of all the Indian states. The three main areas are the East Khasi hills, the South Garo hills and the Jaintia hills (home to the 21.4km-long Krem Kotsati–Umlawan cave, the longest system in mainland Asia). Meghalaya Adventurers' Association in Shillong offers caving trips.

Diving, snorkelling and other watersports

Because of the number of rivers draining into the sea around the Subcontinent, India's coastal waters are generally silt-laden and too murky for decent diving or snorkelling. However in many areas abundant hard coral and colourful fish make up for the relatively poor visibility. India also counts two beautiful tropical-island archipelagos in its territory, both surrounded by exceptionally clear seas. Served by well-equipped and reputable diving centres, the Andaman Islands and Lakshadweep offer world-class diving on a par with just about anything in Asia. Don't expect rock-bottom prices though. India's dive schools cost at least as much as anywhere else.

For independent travellers, the most promising destination for both scuba diving and snorkelling is the Andaman Islands in the Bay of Bengal, around 1000km east of the mainland. Part of a chain of submerged mountains that stretch north from Sumatra to the coast of Myanmar (Burma), this isolated archipelago is ringed by gigantic coral reefs whose crystal-clear waters are teeming with tropical fish and other marine life. Havelock Island has by far the most dive centres, while its smaller neighbour Neil is slowly developing a scene; you can also dive on North Andaman or around Chiriyap and Cinque Island, both accessed from Port Blair. If you want to do an open-water course, book ahead as places tend to be in short supply especially during the peak season, between December and February.

Lakshadweep is a classic coconut-palm-covered atoll, some 400km west of Kerala in the Arabian Sea. The shallow lagoons, extensive coral reefs and exceptionally good visibility make this a perfect option for both first-timers and more experienced divers – though transportation and accommodation are very pricey.

PADI-approved dive schools also work out of a handful of resorts in Goa. Although the waters off the Goan coast have poor visibility, these schools take clients further south to an island off the shores of neighbouring Karnataka where conditions are much better.

Other niche watersports such as kitesurfing, which has a centre in Rameshwaram, are also beginning to make an appearance.

Camel trekking

The way to experience the desert in style is from the top of a camel. The one-humped Arabian camel, or dromedary, common in desert regions of Rajasthan, is well adapted to the terrain, with long double eyelashes to keep sand out of its eyes, nostrils that it can close, and broad, soft, padded feet that are ideal for walking on sand. Riding on a camel is smoother than riding on a horse because the camel moves its left and then right legs together, rather than front and then back legs, giving it a more rolling gait. They are usually docile, good-tempered animals, but the male goes into rut in spring, when it becomes rather grumpy and can kick and bite, and spit its regurgitated stomach contents in anger.

Camel treks can be arranged at Jaisalmer, Bikaner and many other places in Rajasthan. Some treks stick to the beaten track and take you to the popular tourist sights. Others specialize in heading off deep into the desert for a feeling of isolation and remoteness. Typically, camel treks include two days in the saddle and a night spent camping in the desert, but you can opt for longer or shorter trips.

Hot Air Ballooning

Hot air ballooning offers a unique way to experience the landscape from a bird's-eye view. Pushkar in Rajasthan, Jaipur in Rajasthan, and Hampi in Karnataka are popular spots.

< Back to Basics

Yoga, meditation and ashrams The birthplace of yoga and the spiritual home of the world's most famous meditation traditions, India offers unrivalled opportunities for spiritual nourishment, ranging from basic yoga and pranayama classes to extended residential meditation retreats.

Yoga is taught virtually everywhere in India and there are several internationally known centres where you can train to become a teacher. Meditation is similarly practised all over the country and specific courses are available in temples, meditation centres, monasteries and ashrams. Ashrams are communities where people work, live and study together, drawn by a common, usually spiritual, goal.

Details of yoga and meditation courses and ashrams are provided throughout the Guide. Most centres offer courses that you can enrol on at short notice, but many of the more popular ones need to be booked well in advance.

Yoga (Sanskrit for “to unite” and root of the word “yoke”) aims to help the practitioner unite his or her individual consciousness with the divine. This is achieved by raising awareness of one's self through spiritual, mental and physical exercises and discipline. Hatha yoga, the most popular form in the West, is based on physical postures called asanas, which stretch, relax and tone the muscular system of the body and also massage the internal organs. Each asana has a beneficial effect on a particular muscle group or organ, and although they vary widely in difficulty, consistent practice will lead to improved suppleness and health benefits. For serious practitioners, however, Hatha yoga is seen simply as the first step leading to more subtle stages of meditation which commence when the energies of the body have been awakened and sensitized by stretching and relaxing. Other forms of yoga include raja yoga, which includes moral discipline, and bhakti yoga, the yoga of devotion, which entails a commitment to one's guru or teacher. Jnana yoga (the yoga of knowledge) is centred around the deep philosophies that underlie Hindu spiritual thinking.

Rishikesh, in Uttarakhand, is India's yoga capital, with a bumper crop of ashrams offering all kinds of courses. The country's most famous teachers, however, work from institutes further south. Iyengar yoga is one of the most famous approaches studied today, named after its founder, B.K.S. Iyengar (a student of the great yoga teacher Sri Tirumalai Krishnamacharya), who died in 2014. Its main centre, the Ramamani Iyengar Memorial Yoga Institute, is in Pune, Maharashtra (www.bksiyengar.com), but there are many branches elsewhere. Iyengar's style is based upon precise physical alignment during each posture. With much practise, and the aid of props such as blocks, straps and chairs, the student can attain perfect physical balance and, the theory goes, perfect balance of mind will follow. Iyengar yoga has a strong therapeutic element and has been used successfully for treating a wide variety of structural and internal problems.

Ashtanga yoga is an approach developed by K. Pattabhi Jois of Mysuru (www.sharathyogacentre.com), who also studied under Krishnamacharya. Unlike Iyengar yoga, which centres around a collection of separate asanas, Ashtanga links various postures into a series of flowing moves called vinyasa, with the aim of developing strength and agility. The perfect synchronization of movement with breath is a key objective throughout these sequences.

The son of Krishnamacharya, T.K.V. Desikachar, established a third major branch in modern yoga, emphasizing a more versatile and adaptive approach to teaching, focused on the situation of the individual practitioner. This style became known as Viniyoga, although Desikachar has long tried to distance himself from the term. In the mid-1970s, he co-founded the Krishnamacharya Yoga Mandiram (www.kym.org), now a flagship institute in Chennai.

The other most influential Indian yoga teacher of the modern era has been Swami Vishnu Devananda, an acolyte of the famous sage Swami Sivananda, who established the International Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Center (www.sivananda.org), with more than thirty branches in India and abroad. Sivananda-style yoga tends to introduce elements in a different order from its counterparts – teaching practices regarded by others as advanced to relative beginners. This fast-forward approach has proved particularly popular with Westerners, who flock in their thousands to intensive introductory courses staged at centres all over India – the most renowned of them at Neyyar Dam, in the hills east of the Keralan capital, Thiruvananthapuram.

Meditation Meditation is often practised after a session of yoga, when the energy of the body has been awakened, and is an essential part of both Hindu and Buddhist practice. In both religions, meditation is considered the most powerful tool for understanding the true nature of mind and self, an essential step on the path to enlightenment. In Vedanta, meditation's aim is to realize the true self as non-dual Brahman or godhead – the foundation of all consciousness and life. Moksha (or liberation – the nirvana of the Buddhists), achieved through disciplines of yoga and meditation, eventually helps believers release the soul from endless cycles of birth and rebirth.

Vipassana meditation (www.dhamma.org) is a technique, originally taught by the Buddha, whereby practitioners learn to become more aware of physical sensations and mental processes. Courses last for a minimum of ten days and are austere – involving 4am starts, around ten hours of meditation a day, no solid food after noon, segregation of the sexes, and no talking for the duration (except with the leaders of the course). Courses are free for all first-time students, to allow everyone an opportunity to learn and benefit from the technique. Vipassana is taught in nearly 75 centres throughout India.

Tibetan Buddhist meditation is attracting more and more followers around the world. With its four distinct schools, Tibetan Buddhism incorporates a huge variety of meditation practices, including Vipassana, known as shiné in Tibetan, and various visualization techniques involving the numerous deities that make up the complex and colourful Tibetan pantheon. India, with its large Tibetan diaspora, has become a major centre for people wanting to study Tibetan Buddhism and medicine. Dharamsala in Himachal Pradesh, home to the Dalai Lama and Tibetan government-in-exile, is the main centre for Tibetan studies. Other major Tibetan diaspora centres in India include Darjeeling in West Bengal and Bylakuppe near Mysuru in Karnataka. For further details of courses available locally, see the relevant Guide chapters.

Ashrams and centres Ashrams can range in size from just a handful of people to several thousand, and their rules, regulations and restrictions vary enormously. Some offer on-site accommodation, others will require you to stay in the nearest town or village. Some charge Western prices, others local prices, and some operate on a donation basis. Many ashrams have set programmes each day, while others are less structured, teaching as and when requested. In addition to these traditional Indian places to learn yoga and meditation techniques, dozens of smaller centres open in the coastal resorts of Goa and Kerala during the winter, several of them staffed by internationally famous teachers. The more prominent of these are listed below.

COURSES AND ASHRAMS ASHIYANA TROPICAL RETREAT CENTRE MANDREM, GOA @ ASHIYANA-YOGA-GOA.COM.
WORLD-CLASS YOGA, MASSAGE, MEDITATION AND SATSANG

TUITION – FROM RESIDENT AND VISITING TEACHERS – WITH TREEHOUSE ACCOMMODATION AND GORGEOUS VIEWS..

Ashtanga Yoga Nilayam Gokulam, Mysuru, Karnataka www.ashtangayoganilayam.net. Run by students of Pattabhi Jois, and offering tuition in dynamic yoga, affiliated with martial arts..

Brahmani Centre Anjuna, Goa www.brahmaniyoga.com. Offers drop-in yoga classes – mainly Ashtanga, with a few taster sessions in other styles, plus pranayama and bhajan devotional singing – by top-notch teachers..

Divine Life Society Garhwal, Uttarakhand www.sivanandaonline.org. The original Sivananda ashram, with several retreats and courses on all aspects of yoga..

International Society for Krishna Consciousness (ISKCON) www.iskcon.org. Large and well-run international organization with major ashrams and temples in Mayapur, north of Kolkata, Vrindavan in west UP, Bengaluru and centres in numerous other locations, both in India and abroad. Promotes bhakti yoga (the yoga of devotion) through good deeds, right living and chanting – a way of life rather than a short course.

Osho Commune International Pune, Maharashtra www.osho.com. Established by the enigmatic Osho, this “Meditation Resort” is set in 31 acres of beautifully landscaped gardens and offers a variety of courses in personal therapy, healing and meditation..

Prasanthi Nilayam Puttaparthi, Andhra Pradesh www.sathyasai.org. The ashram of Satya Sai Baba, one of India’s most revered and popular gurus, who died in 2011. There is still a worldwide following of millions, with numerous international branches. Visitors sometimes comment on the strict security staffing and rigid rules and regulations. Cheap accommodation is available in dormitories or “flats” for four people. There is no need to book in advance, though you should phone to check availability.

Purple Valley Centre Anjuna, Goa www.yogagoa.com. Lovely retreat now run by Sharath Rangaswamy, grandson of the illustrious Ashtanga guru, Shri K. Pattabhi Jois..

Root Institute for Wisdom Culture Bodhgaya, Bihar www.rootinstitute.ngo. Regular seven- to ten-day courses on Tibetan Buddhism and meditation are held here (Oct–March), and there are facilities for individual retreats. Accommodation for longer stays should be booked well in advance..

Saccidananda Ashram Thannirpalli, Kulithalai, near Tiruchirapalli, Tamil Nadu www.saccidanandaashramshantivanam.com. Also known as Shantivanam (meaning Peace Forest in Sanskrit), it is situated on the banks of the sacred River Kaveri. Founded by Father Bede Griffiths, a visionary Benedictine monk, it presents a curious but sympathetic fusion of Christianity and Hinduism. Visitors can join in the services and rituals or just relax here. Accommodation is in simple huts dotted around the grounds and meals are communal. Very busy during the major Christian festivals.

Sivananda Yoga Vedanta Dhanwantari Ashram Neyyar Dam, Thiruvananthapuram, Kerala www.sivananda.org.in. An offshoot of the original Divine Life Society, this yoga-based ashram focuses on asanas, breathing techniques (pranayama) and meditation. They also run month-long yoga teacher-training programmes, but book well in advance. There are branches in Madurai, Chennai, Delhi, Uttarkashi and worldwide – see the website for details.

Tushita Meditation Centre McLeod Ganj, Dharamsala, Himachal Pradesh www.tushita.info. Offers a range of Tibetan meditation courses; book well in advance.

< Back to Basics

Culture and etiquette

Cultural differences extend to all sorts of little things. While allowances will usually be made for foreigners, visitors unacquainted with Indian customs may need a little preparation to avoid causing offence or making fools of themselves. The list of dos and don'ts here is hardly exhaustive: when in doubt, watch what the Indian people around you are doing.

Eating and the right-hand rule

The biggest minefield of potential faux pas has to do with eating. This is usually done with the fingers, and requires practice to get absolutely right. Rule one is: eat with your right hand only. In India, as right across Asia, the left hand is for wiping your bottom, cleaning your feet and other unsavoury functions (you also put on and take off your shoes with your left hand), while the right hand is for eating, shaking hands and so on.

Quite how rigid individuals are about this tends to vary, with brahmins (who, at the top of the hierarchical ladder, are one of the two “right-handed castes”) and southerners likely to be the strictest. While you can hold a cup or utensil in your left hand, and you can get away with using it to help tear your chapatti, you should not eat, pass food or wipe your mouth with your left hand.

This rule extends beyond food. In general, do not pass anything to anyone with your left hand, or point at anyone with it either; and Indians won't be impressed if you put it in your mouth. In general, you should accept things given to you with your right hand – though using both hands is a sign of respect.

The other rule to beware of when eating or drinking is that your lips should not touch other people's food – jhutha, or sullied food, is strictly taboo. Don't, for example, take a bite out of a chapatti and pass it on. When drinking out of a cup or bottle to be shared with others, don't let it touch your lips, but rather pour it directly into your mouth. This custom also protects you from things like hepatitis. It is customary to wash your hands before and after eating.

Temples and religion

Religion is taken very seriously in India; it's important always to show due respect to religious buildings, shrines, images, and people at prayer. When entering a temple or mosque, remove your shoes and leave them at the door (socks are acceptable and protect your feet from burning-hot stone ground). Some temples – Jain ones in particular – do not allow you to enter wearing or carrying leather articles, and forbid entry to menstruating women. In the southern state of Kerala, most Hindu temples are closed to non-Hindus, but those that aren't require men to remove their shirts before entering (women must wear long dresses or skirts).

In a mosque, non-Muslims would not normally be allowed in at prayer time and women are sometimes not let in at all. In a Hindu temple, you are often not allowed into the inner sanctum; and at a Buddhist stupa or monument, you should always walk round clockwise (ie, with the stupa on your right). Hindus are very superstitious about taking photographs of images of deities and inside temples; if in doubt, desist.

Funeral processions are private affairs, and should be left in peace. In Hindu funerals, the body is normally carried to the cremation site within hours of death by white-shrouded relatives (white is the colour of mourning). The eldest son is expected to shave his head and wear white following the death of a parent. At Varanasi and other places, you may see cremations; such occasions should be treated with respect and photographs should not be taken.

Dress

Indian people are very conservative about dress. Women are expected to dress modestly, with legs and shoulders covered. Trousers are acceptable, but shorts and short skirts are offensive to many. Men should always wear a shirt in public, and avoid skimpy shorts away from beach areas. These rules are particularly important in temples and mosques. Cover your head with a cap or cloth when entering a dargah (Sufi shrine) or Sikh gurudwara; women in particular are also required to cover their limbs. Men are similarly expected to dress appropriately with their legs and head covered. Caps are usually available on loan, often free, for visitors, and sometimes cloth is available to cover up your arms and legs.

Never mind sky-clad Jains or Naga Sadhus, nudity is not acceptable in India. Topless bathing is not uncommon in Goa (though it is in theory prohibited), but you can be sure the locals don't like it.

Staying well-groomed and dressing "respectably" vastly improves the impression you make on local people and reduces sexual harassment for women, too.

Other possible gaffes

Kissing and embracing are regarded in India as part of sex: do not do them in public. In more conservative areas (ie outside Westernized parts of big cities or tourist enclaves), it is still rare for couples to hold hands, though Indian men can be seen holding hands as a sign of "brotherliness". Be aware of your feet. When entering a private home, you should normally remove your shoes (follow your host's example); when sitting, avoid pointing the soles of your feet at anyone. Accidental contact with one's foot is always followed by an apology.

Indian English can be very formal and even ceremonious. Indian people may well call you "sir" or "madam", even "good lady" or "kind sir". At the same time, you should be aware that your English may seem rude to them. In particular, swearing is taken rather seriously, and casual use of the f-word is likely to shock.

Meeting people

Westerners have an ambiguous status in Indian eyes. In one way, you represent the rich sahib, whose culture dominates the world, and the old colonial mentality has not completely disappeared. On the other hand, as a non-Hindu, you are an outcaste, your presence in theory polluting to an orthodox or high-caste Hindu, while to members of all religions, your morals and your standards of spiritual and physical cleanliness are suspect.

As a traveller, you will constantly come across people who want to strike up a conversation. English not being their first language, they may not be familiar with the conventional ways of doing this, and thus their opening line may seem abrupt if at the same time very formal. "Excuse me, gentleman, what is your native place?" is a typical one. It is also the first in a series of questions that Indian men seem sometimes to have learnt from a single book in order to ask Western tourists. Some of the questions may baffle at first ("What is your qualification?" "Are you in service?"), some may be queries about the ways of the West or the purpose of your trip, but mostly they will be about your family and your job.

You may find it odd or even intrusive that complete strangers should want to know that sort of thing, but these subjects are considered polite conversation between strangers in India, and help people place one another in terms of social position. Your family, job, even income, are not considered “personal” subjects, and it is completely normal to ask people about them. Asking the same questions back will not be taken amiss – far from it. Being curious does not have the “nosey” stigma in India that it has in the West.

Things that Indian people, especially if they are older or more traditional, are likely to find strange about you are lack of religion, travelling alone, leaving your family to come to India, being an unmarried couple (letting people think you are married can make life easier), and travelling second class or staying in cheap hotels when, as a tourist, you are relatively rich. You will probably end up having to explain the same things many times but take it as an opportunity to ask more about India. English-speaking Indians and members of the large and growing middle class, are in particular, usually extremely well informed and well educated.

< Back to Basics

Shopping

No country in the world produces such a tempting array of arts and crafts as India. Intensely colourful, delicately worked, exquisitely ornate and immensely varied, India's crafts have the added advantage of being amazingly inexpensive. Every part of the country has its specialities – textiles in Rajasthan, metalwork in Karnataka, carpets in Kashmir, thangkas in Ladakh, leatherware in Maharashtra and batik in Odisha – but everywhere you'll see beautiful souvenirs that you'll find hard to resist buying. On top of that, all sorts of things (such as made-to-measure clothes or semi-precious gems) that would be vastly expensive at home are much more reasonably priced. Even if you lose weight during your trip, your baggage might well put on quite a bit – unless of course you post some of it home.

Where to shop

Quite a few items sold in tourist areas are made elsewhere and, needless to say, it's more fun (and cheaper) to pick them up at source. Best buys are noted in the relevant sections of the Guide, along with a few specialities that can't be found outside their regions. India is awash with street hawkers, often very young kids. Although they can be annoying and should be dealt with firmly if you are not interested, do not write them off completely as they sometimes have decent souvenirs at lower than shop prices and are open to hard bargaining.

Virtually all the state governments in India run handicraft “emporia”, most with branches in the major cities. Delhi, Kolkata, Chennai, Bengaluru, Varanasi and Patna also have Central Cottage Industries Emporiums ( cottageemporium.in). Goods in these emporiums are generally of a high quality, even if their fixed prices are a little expensive, and they are worth a visit to get an idea of what crafts are available and how much they should cost.

Bargaining

Whatever you buy (except things like food, tickets and other daily items), you will almost always be expected to haggle over the price. Bargaining is very much a matter of personal style, but should always be lighthearted, never acrimonious. There are no hard and fast rules – it's really a question of how much something is worth to you. It's a good plan, therefore, to have an idea of how much you want to pay. Bid low and let the shopkeeper argue you up. If they'll settle for your price or less, you have a deal. If not, you don't, but you've had a pleasant conversation and no harm is done.

Don't worry too much about the first quoted prices. Some people suggest paying a third of the opening price, but it really depends on the shop, the goods and the shopkeeper's impression of you. You may not be able to get the seller much below the first quote; on the other hand, you may end up paying as little as a tenth of it. If you bid too low, you may be hustled out of the shop for offering an "insulting" price, but this is all part of the game, and you'll no doubt be welcomed as an old friend if you return the next day. More often, however, if you start to walk away, the price will magically come down, so that's a useful tactic. "Green" tourists are easily spotted, so try and look like you know what you are up to, even on your first day, or leave it till later; you could wait and see what the going rate is first.

Haggling is a little bit like bidding in an auction, and similar rules apply. Don't start haggling for something if you know you don't want it, and never let any figure pass your lips that you are not prepared to pay – having mentioned a price, you are obliged to pay it. If the seller asks you how much you would pay for something and you don't want it, say so.

Sometimes rickshaw and taxi drivers stop unasked at shops where they get a small commission simply for bringing customers. In places like Jaipur and Agra where this is common practice, tourists sometimes even strike a deal with their drivers – agreeing to stop at five shops and splitting the commission for the time wasted. If you're taken to a shop by a tout or driver and you buy something, you pay around fifty percent extra. Stand firm if you have no appetite for such shenanigans. If you want a bargain, shop alone, and never let anybody on the street take you to a shop – if you do, they'll be getting a commission and you'll be paying it.

< Back to Basics

Travelling with children

Travelling with kids can be both challenging and rewarding. Indians are very tolerant of children so you can take them almost anywhere without restriction, and they always help break the ice with strangers.

Most children will enjoy the vibrancy of just being in India, with festivals and temples likely to exert a special appeal. Similarly, you can't go far wrong taking them to beaches and wildlife sanctuaries, although not all Indian zoos are very happy places; the one in Mysuru is an honourable exception. There are, however, relatively few attractions aimed especially at kids beyond a rash of rather cheesy family theme parks, usually located in areas popular with new Indian middle-class holidaymakers, such as the coast south of Chennai. On the other hand, the more modern museums are increasingly introducing interactive displays aimed at the young that are both educational and fun.

As for the difficulties of travel, the main problem with children, especially small ones, is their extra vulnerability. Even more than their parents, they need protection from the sun, unsafe drinking water, heat and unfamiliar food. All that chilli in particular may be a problem, even with older kids, if they're not used to it. Remember too, that diarrhoea, perhaps just a nuisance to you, could be dangerous for a child: rehydration salts are vital if your child goes down with it. Make sure too, if possible, that your child is aware of the dangers of rabies; keep children away from animals and consider a rabies jab.

For babies, nappies (diapers) are available in most large towns at similar prices to the West, but it's worth taking an additional pack in case of emergencies, and bringing sachets of Calpol or similar, which aren't readily available in India. And if your baby is on powdered milk, it might be an idea to bring some of that: you can certainly get it in India, but it may not taste the same. Dried baby food could also be worth taking – any café or chaiwala should be able to supply you with boiled water.

For touring, hiking or walking, child-carrier backpacks are ideal; some even come with mosquito nets these days. As for luggage, bring as little as possible so you can manage the kids more easily. If your child is small enough, a fold-up buggy is also well worth packing, even if you no longer use a buggy at home, as kids tire so easily in the heat. If you want to cut down on long train or bus journeys by flying, remember that children under 2 travel for ten percent of the adult fare, and under-12s for half-price.

< Back to Basics

Travel essentials

Costs

For Western visitors, India is still one of the world's less expensive countries. A little foreign currency can go a long way, and you can be confident of getting good value for your money, whether you're setting out to keep your budget to a minimum or to enjoy the opportunities that spending a bit more will make possible.

What you spend obviously depends on where you go, where you stay, how you get around, what you eat and what you buy. Outside the tourist resorts of Kerala and Goa, you can still survive on a budget of as little as ₹1500 (£15/US$18) per day, if you eat in local dhabas, stay in the cheapest hotels and don't travel too much. In reality, most backpackers nowadays tend to spend up to double that. On ₹3000 (£30/US$36) per day you'll be able to afford comfortable mid-range hotels, and meals in smarter restaurants, regular rickshaw or taxi rides and entrance fees to monuments. Spend over ₹6000 (£60/US$72) per day and you can stay in smart hotels, eat in the top restaurants, travel first class on trains and afford chauffeur-driven cars. Although it is possible to travel very comfortably in India, it's also possible to spend a great deal of money if you want to experience the very best the country has to offer, and there are plenty of hotels now charging at least US$500 per night.

Budget accommodation is still very good value, however. Cheap double rooms start from around ₹400 (£4/US$4.80) per night, while a no-frills vegetarian meal in an ordinary restaurant can still cost no more than ₹100. Long-distance transport can work out to be phenomenally good value if you stick to state buses and standard non-a/c classes on trains, but soon starts to add up if you opt for air-conditioned carriages on the super-fast inter-city services. The 200km trip from Delhi to Agra, for example, can cost anywhere from ₹80 (£0.80/US$0.96) in second-class unreserved up to ₹1255 (£12/US$20) in AC first-class.

Where you are also makes a difference: Mumbai is notoriously pricey, especially for accommodation, and Delhi is also substantially more expensive than most parts of the country. Upscale visitor accommodation in Kerala costs almost as much as it does in Europe, although fierce competition tends to keep prices at the lower end of the budget spectrum down in the tourist towns of Rajasthan. Out in the sticks, on the other hand, and particularly away from your fellow tourists, you will often find things incredibly cheap, though your choice will obviously be more limited.

Don't make any rigid assumptions at the outset of a long trip that your money will last for a certain number of weeks or months. On any one day it may be possible to spend very little, but cumulatively you won't be doing yourself any favours if you don't make sure you keep yourself well rested and properly fed. As a foreigner in India, you will find yourself penalized by double-tier entry prices to museums and historic sites (see box below) as well as in upmarket hotels and airfares, both of which are levied at a higher rate and in dollars.

ASI ENTRANCE FEES

The Archeological Survey of India (ASI), who manage many of India's most popular monuments, such as the Taj Mahal, currently operates a two-tier entry system at all its sites, whereby foreign visitors, including non-resident Indians (NRIs), pay a lot more than Indian residents. Some private attractions follow a similar policy; we've listed entrance fees for both foreigners and Indian residents (in parenthesis) throughout the Guide.

Some independent travellers tend to indulge in wild and highly competitive penny-pinching, which Indian people find rather pathetic – they have a fair idea of what you can earn at home. Bargain where appropriate, but don't begrudge a few rupees to someone who is after all far worse off than you. Even if you get a bad deal on every rickshaw journey you make, it will only add a minuscule fraction to the cost of your trip. Remember what great value you are getting in most cases and that luxury items or services at home can be affordable here. At the same time, don't pay well over the odds for something if you know what the going rate is. Thoughtless extravagance can, particularly in remote areas that see a disproportionate number of tourists, contribute to inflation, putting even basic goods and services beyond the reach of local people.

Crime and personal safety

In spite of the crushing poverty and the yawning gulf between rich and poor, India is, on the whole, a safe country in which to travel. As a tourist, however, you are an obvious target for the tiny number of thieves (who may include some of your fellow travellers), and stand to face serious problems if you do lose your passport and money or bank cards. Common sense, therefore, suggests a few precautions.

Beware of crowded locations, such as packed buses or trains, in which it is easy for pickpockets to operate – slashing pockets or bags with razor blades is not unheard of in certain locations, and itching powder is sometimes used to distract the unwary. Don't leave valuables unattended on the beach when you go for a swim; backpacks in dormitory accommodation are also obvious targets, as is luggage on the roof of buses. Even monkeys rate a mention here, since it's not unknown for them to steal things from hotel rooms with open windows, snatch bags from unsuspecting shoulders or even sunglasses from your face.

Budget travellers would do well to carry a padlock, as these are usually used to secure the doors of cheap hotel rooms and it's reassuring to know you have the only key. You can also use them to lock your bag to seats or racks in trains, for which a length of chain also comes in handy. Don't put valuables in your luggage but keep them with you at all times. If your baggage is on the roof of a bus, make sure it is well secured. On trains and buses, the prime time for theft is just before you leave, so keep a particular eye on your gear then, beware of deliberate diversions, and don't put your belongings next to open windows. Remember that routes popular with tourists tend to be popular with thieves too. Druggings leading to theft and worse are rare but not unheard of, so you are best advised to politely refuse food and drink from fellow passengers or passing strangers, unless you are completely confident it's the family picnic you are sharing or have seen the food purchased from a vendor.

DRUGS

India is a centre for the production of cannabis and to a lesser extent opium, and derivatives of these drugs are widely available. Charas (hashish) is produced all along the Himalayas, while ganja (marijuana) is the more common form in the south. The use of cannabis is frowned upon by respectable Indians – if you see anyone in a movie smoking a chillum, you can be sure it's the baddie. Sadhus, on the other hand, are allowed to smoke it legally as part of their religious devotion to Shiva, who is said to have originally discovered its narcotic properties.

Bhang (a preparation made from marijuana leaves, which it is claimed sometimes contains added hallucinogenic ingredients such as datura) is legal and widely available in bhang shops: it is used to make sweets and drinks such as the notoriously potent bhang lassis which have waylaid many an unwary traveller. Bhang shops also frequently sell ganja, low-quality charas and opium (chandu), mainly from Rajasthan and Madhya Pradesh. Opium derivatives morphine and heroin are widespread too, with addiction an increasing problem among the urban poor. “Brown sugar” that you may be offered on the street is number-three heroin; Punjab has become notorious for its heroin problem, the drugs smuggled across the border from Pakistan. Use of other illegal drugs such as LSD, ecstasy and cocaine is largely confined to tourists in party locations such as Goa.

All of these drugs except bhang are strictly controlled under Indian law. Anyone arrested with less than five grams of cannabis, which they are able to prove is for their own use, is liable to a six-month maximum, but cases can take years to come to trial (two is normal, and eight not unheard of). Police raids and searches are particularly common in the Kullu and Parvati valleys (and on vehicles leaving them, especially at harvest time) and the beach areas of Goa. “Paying a fine now” may be possible on arrest (though it will probably mean all the money you have), but once you are booked in at the station, your chances are slim; a minority of the population languishing in Indian jails are foreigners on drugs charges.

However, don't get paranoid; the best way of enjoying the country is to stay relaxed but with your wits about you. Crime levels in India are a long way below those of Western countries and violent crime against tourists is almost unheard of. Virtually none of the people who approach you on the street intend any harm: most want to sell you something (though this is not always made apparent immediately), some want to practise their English, others to chat you up, while more than a few just want to add your address to their book or have a snap taken with you. Anyone offering wonderful-sounding moneymaking schemes, however, is almost certain to be a con artist.

If you do feel threatened, it's worth looking for help. Tourism police are found sitting in clearly marked booths in the main railway stations, especially in big tourist centres, where they will also have a booth in the main bus station. In addition, they may have a marked booth outside major tourist sites.

Be wary of credit-card fraud; a credit card can be used to make duplicate forms by which your account is then billed for fictitious transactions, so don't let shops or restaurants take your card away to process – insist they do it in front of you or follow them to the point of transaction. It's not a bad idea to keep US$200 or so separately from the rest of your money, along with your insurance policy number and phone number for claims, and a photocopy of the pages in your passport containing personal data and your Indian visa. This will cover you in case you do lose all your valuables.

If the worst happens and you get robbed, the first thing to do is report the theft as soon as possible to the local police. They are very unlikely to recover your belongings but you need a report from them in order to claim on your travel insurance. Dress smartly and expect an uphill battle – city cops in particular tend to be jaded from too many insurance scams.

Losing your passport is a real hassle, but does not necessarily mean the end of your trip. First, report the loss immediately to the police, who will issue you with the all-important “complaint form” that you need to be able to travel around and check into hotels, as well as claim back any expenses incurred in replacing your passport from your insurer. The next thing to do is telephone your nearest embassy or consulate in India. Normally, passports have to be applied for and collected in person, but if you are stranded, it is usually possible to arrange to receive the necessary forms in the post. However, you still have to go to the embassy or consulate to pick up your new passport. Emergency passports are the cheapest form of replacement, but are normally only valid for the few days of your return flight. If you're not sure when you're leaving India, you'll have to obtain a more costly full passport; these can only be issued by high commissions, embassies and larger consulates, although they can be arranged through consulates in Chennai, Kolkata, Mumbai or Panjim (Goa), and in the case of the UK, Bengaluru, Hyderabad and Ahmedabad.

Duty-free allowance

Anyone over 17 can bring in one US quart (0.95 litre – but nobody’s going to quibble about the other 5ml) of spirits, or a bottle of wine and 250ml spirits; plus 200 cigarettes, or 50 cigars, or 250g tobacco. You may be required to register anything valuable on a tourist baggage re-export form to make sure you can take it home with you, and to fill in a currency declaration form if carrying more than US$10,000 or equivalent.

Electricity

Generally 220V 50Hz AC, though direct current supplies also exist, so check before plugging in. Most sockets are triple round-pin (accepting European-size double round-pin plugs). British, Irish and Australasian plugs will need an adaptor, preferably universal; American and Canadian appliances will need a transformer too, unless multivoltage. Power cuts and voltage variations are very common; voltage stabilizers should be used to run sensitive appliances such as laptops.

Insurance

It’s imperative that you take out proper travel insurance before setting off for India. A typical travel insurance policy usually provides cover for the loss of baggage, tickets and – up to a certain limit – cash, as well as cancellation or curtailment of your journey. Most of them exclude so-called dangerous sports unless an extra premium is paid: in India this can mean scuba diving, whitewater rafting, windsurfing and trekking with ropes, though probably not jeep safaris. Many policies can be chopped and changed to exclude coverage you don’t need – for example, sickness and accident benefits can often be excluded or included at will. If you do take medical coverage, ascertain whether benefits will be paid as treatment proceeds or only after return home, and whether there is a 24hr medical emergency number. When securing baggage cover, make sure that the per-article limit – typically under £500 – will cover your most valuable possession. If you need to make a claim, you should keep receipts for medicines and medical treatment, and in the event you have anything stolen, you must obtain an official statement from the police.

Internet

Broadband has now reached more or less everywhere, leading to a proliferation of wi-fi connections. The majority of hotels and guesthouses, at least those in touristic areas, will offer wi-fi, usually free but occasionally chargeable; we have noted exceptions in our accommodation reviews. Many cafés and restaurants also have wi-fi facilities and chains such as McDonald's, Café Coffee Day and Starbucks offer connection. The number of internet outlets has declined but you can usually still find somewhere with inexpensive public computers in any sizeable town, although prices are still a lot higher in more remote places such as the Andaman Islands. Speeds can sometimes be slow and computers rather antiquated, making it difficult to load complex websites or to perform online transactions (like booking a train ticket).

ROUGH GUIDES TRAVEL INSURANCE

Looking for travel insurance? Rough Guides partners with top providers worldwide to offer you the best coverage. Policies are available to residents of anywhere in the world, with a range of options whether you are looking for single-trip, multi-country or long-stay insurance. There's coverage for a wide range of adventure sports, 24-hour emergency assistance, high levels of medical and evacuation cover and a stream of travel safety information. Even better, roughguides.com users can take advantage of these policies online 24/7, from anywhere in the world – even if you're already travelling. To make the most of your travels and ensure a smoother experience, it's always good to be prepared for when things don't go according to plan. For more information go to roughguides.com/bookings/insurance.

Laundry

Although some hotels have washing machines and independent laundrettes are starting to appear, most places still send laundry to a dhobi, either in-house or nearby. The dhobi will take your dirty washing to a dhobi ghat, a public clothes-washing area (the bank of a river for example), where it is shown some old-fashioned discipline: separated, soaped and given a damn good thrashing to beat the dirt out of it. Then it is hung out to dry in the sun and taken to the ironing sheds where every garment is endowed with razor-sharp creases and then matched to its rightful owner by hidden cryptic markings. Your clothes will come back absolutely spotless, though this kind of violent treatment does take it out of them: buttons get lost and eventually the cloth starts to fray.

Left luggage

Most stations in India have “cloakrooms” (sometimes called parcel offices) for passengers to leave their baggage at minimal cost. These can be extremely handy if you want to go sightseeing in a town and move on the same day. In theory, you need a train ticket to deposit luggage, but staff don’t always ask; they may, however, refuse to take your bag if you can’t lock it. If you lose your reclaim ticket expect a lot of bureaucracy before you can get your bag back. Many cloakrooms in large stations operate 24 hours but smaller ones may not.

LGBTQ+ travellers

The LGBTQ movement in India had a big win in 2018 when homosexuality was made legal again, having been made illegal by the conservative Modi government in 2013. However, homosexuality is not hugely open or widely accepted in India and prejudice is still ingrained, especially in conservative areas such as Rajasthan.

For lesbians, making contacts is difficult; even the Indian women’s movement does not readily promote lesbianism as an issue that needs confronting. The only public faces of a hidden scene are the few organizations in major cities (see below). For gay men, homosexuality is no longer solely the preserve of the alternative scene of actors and artists, and is increasingly accepted by the upper classes, though Mumbai remains much more a centre for gay life than Delhi, let alone traditionalist Rajasthan. Despite the legal uncertainties, however, gay pride events and clubs are becoming more common in many cities; in recent years Delhi, Mumbai, Bengaluru, Chennai and some smaller cities have all hosted prides.

One transgender group of people you may come across are hijras, who were officially recognized as third gender by the Supreme Court in 2014. Many hijras are born with genitals that are neither fully male nor female, but some are male-to-female transsexual. They live in their own “families” and have a niche in Indian society, but not an easy one. At weddings, their presence is supposed to bring good luck, and they are usually given baksheesh for putting in a brief appearance. Generally, however, they have a low social status, face widespread discrimination, and many make a living by begging or prostitution.

LGBTQ+ CONTACTS AND RESOURCES

Chennai Dost wchennai-dost.blogspot.com. Useful blog aimed at the LGBTQ community in Chennai.

Galva-108 wgalva108.org. Interesting website set up by gay and lesbian Vaishnavas and Hindus.

Gay Bombay wgaybombay.in. Comprehensive online resource for the LGBTQ community in Mumbai.

Gay Tours India wgaytripindia.com. Tour operator specialising in tours for gay and lesbian travellers.

Gay Delhi wgaydelhi.tripod.com. Weekly social meetings and other events for gay men in Delhi.

Humsafar Trust whumsafar.org. Set up to promote safe sex among gay men, with lots of links and up-to-date information.

Indian Dost windiandost.com. LGBTQ networking and info.

Outright Action International woutrightinternational.org. Latest news on the human rights situation for LGBTQ people worldwide, including regular bulletins on India.

Trikone wtrikone.org. Organization campaigning for LGBTQ rights in South Asia.

Maps

Getting good maps of India, in India, can prove to be pretty difficult. The government – in an archaic suspicion of cartography, and in spite of clear coverage of the country on Google – forbids the sale of detailed maps of border areas, which includes the entire coastline.

It therefore makes sense to bring a full country map of India with you. Freytag & Berndt produce the best country map, while Nelles covers parts of the country with 1:1,500,000 regional maps. These are generally excellent, but cost a fortune if you buy the complete set. Their double-sided map of the Himalayas is useful for roads and planning and has some detail but is not sufficient as a trekking map. Ttk, a Chennai-based company, publishes basic state maps which are widely available in India, and in some specialized travel and map shops in the UK such as Stanfords; these are poorly drawn but useful for road distances. The Indian Railways map at the back of the publication Trains at a Glance is useful for planning railway journeys.

If you need larger-scale city maps than the ones we provide in this guide you can sometimes get them from tourist offices, though the plans published free online at Google Maps (maps.google.com) or OpenStreetMap (openstreetmap.org) are vastly superior and many can be downloaded for offline use. Also try the Navmii app (navmii.com) for offline directions. Eicher has a growing series of glossy City Maps and city Road Maps produced in India and available at all good bookstores.

As for trekking maps, the US Army Map Service produced maps in the 1960s which, with a scale of 1:250,000, remain sufficiently accurate on topography, but are of course outdated on the latest road developments. Most other maps you can buy are based on these, and they're still the best available for most of the Himalayan regions. Leomann Maps (1:200,000) also cover the northwest Himalayan regions. These are not contour maps and are therefore better for planning and basic reference than for trekking. The Survey of India publishes a rather poor 1:250,000 series for trekkers in the Uttarakhand Himalayas – simplified versions of their own infinitely more reliable maps, produced for the military, which are absolutely impossible for an outsider to get hold of.

Money

India's unit of currency is the rupee, usually abbreviated ₹ and divided into a hundred paise. Almost all money is paper, with notes of 5, 10, 20, 50, 100, 500 and 1000 rupees. Coins in circulation are 1, 2, 5 and 10 rupees, the latter two gradually replacing the paper versions. Note that it's technically illegal to take rupees in or out of India (although they are widely available at overseas forexes), so you might want to wait until you arrive before changing money.

Banknotes, especially lower denominations, can get into a terrible state. Don't accept torn banknotes, since no one else will be prepared to take them and you'll be left saddled with the things, though you can change them at the Reserve Bank of India and large branches of other big banks. Don't pass them on to beggars; they can't use them either, so it amounts to an insult.

Large denominations can also be a problem, as change is usually in short supply. Many Indian people cannot afford to keep much lying around, and you shouldn't necessarily expect shopkeepers or rickshaw-walas to have it (and they may – as may you – try to hold onto it if they do). Larger notes can be changed for smaller denominations at hotels and other suitable establishments.

EXCHANGE RATES

At the time of writing in May 2023, the exchange rate was approximately ₹103 to £1, ₹90 to €1 and ₹83 to US$1. You can check current exchange rates online at www.xe.com.

ATMs and banking cards

The easiest way to access your money in India is with plastic, though it's a good idea to also have some backup in the form of cash. You will find ATMs at main banks in all major towns, cities and tourist areas, though your card issuer may well add a foreign transaction fee, and the Indian bank will also levy a small charge. Your card issuer, and sometimes the ATM itself, imposes limits on the amount you may withdraw in a day – typically ₹10,000–20,000.

Credit cards are accepted for payment at major hotels, top restaurants, some shops and airline offices, but virtually nowhere else. American Express, MasterCard and Visa are the likeliest to be accepted. Beware of fraudsters making extra copies of the receipt in order to try and bill you a second time later; always insist that the transaction is processed in front of you and that they don't take away your card out of sight.

Visa, American Express and some other financial institutions offer prepaid cards that you can load up with credit before you leave home and use in ATMs like a debit card – effectively replacing the increasingly defunct travellers' cheques.

One big downside of relying on plastic as your main access to cash, of course, is that cards can easily get lost or stolen, so take along a couple of alternatives if you can, keep an emergency stash of cash just in case, and make a note of your home bank's telephone number and website addresses for emergencies.

US dollars are the easiest currency to convert, with euros and pounds sterling not far behind. Major hard currencies can be changed easily in tourist areas and big cities, less so elsewhere. If you enter the country with more than US$10,000 or the equivalent, you are supposed to fill in a currency declaration form.

Changing money

Changing money in regular banks, especially government-run banks such as the State Bank of India (SBI), can be a time-consuming business, involving lots of form-filling and queueing at different counters, so it's best to change substantial amounts at any one time. You'll have no such problems, however, with private companies such as Thomas Cook, American Express or forex agents. Major cities and main tourist centres usually have several licensed currency exchange bureaux; rates usually aren't as good as at a bank but transactions are generally a lot quicker and there's less paperwork to complete.

Outside banking hours (Mon–Fri 10am–2/4pm, Sat 10am–noon), large hotels may change money, probably at a lower rate, and exchange bureaux have longer opening hours. Banks in the arrivals halls at most major airports stay open 24 hours.

Wherever you change money, hold on to exchange receipts (“encashment certificates”); they will be required if you want to change back any excess rupees when you leave the country and to buy air tickets and reserve train berths with rupees at special counters for foreigners. The State Bank of India now charges for tax clearance forms.

Opening hours

Standard shop opening hours in India are Monday to Saturday 9.30am to 6pm, with Sunday openings increasingly common. Most big stores, at any rate, keep those hours, while smaller shops vary from town to town, region to region, and one to another, but usually keep longer hours. Government tourist offices are open Monday to Friday 9.30am to 5pm, Saturday 9.30am to 1pm, closed on the second Saturday of the month; state-run tourist offices are likely to be open Monday to Friday 10am to 5pm.

Phones

Since the mobile phone revolution, privately run phone international direct-dialling facilities – STD/ISD (Standard Trunk Dialling/International Subscriber Dialling) places – have become far less common so you can't always rely on finding one. In addition, calling from them will cost more than dialling from a mobile if you have an Indian SIM card. Most visitors bring their own phones and buy an Indian SIM to cover their trip (ensure your phone isn't locked to a specific network).

SIM cards are sold through most cellphone shops and network outlets, and there are often stalls located in airport arrivals terminals. You have to provide a photocopy of your passport (photo and visa pages), and you may be required to declare an Indian address, though the hotel you are staying in usually suffices. There is an initial connection fee that varies depending on the dealer and network.

Coverage varies from state to state, but the largest national network providers are best (Vodafone, Airtel and Idea) and have 3G connectivity. Once you have paid for the initial card, it can be topped up (“re-charged” as it’s known) by paying specific amounts (check with the retailer) in order to get the full amount in credits. You can also opt for a package including data, calls and texts. Call charges to the UK and US from most Indian networks cost are very reasonable – check with your vendor. Also, ask your card supplier to turn on the “do not disturb” option, or you’ll be plagued with spam calls and spam texts from the phone company.

CALLING HOME FROM ABROAD

To make an international call, dial the international access code (in India it’s 00, then the destination’s country code, before the rest of the number. Note that the initial zero is omitted from the area code when dialling the UK, Ireland, Australia and New Zealand from abroad.

Australia international access code + 61

New Zealand international access code + 64

UK international access code + 44

US and Canada international access code + 1

Ireland international access code + 353

South Africa international access code + 27

Indian mobile numbers are ten-digit, starting with a 7, 8 or (most commonly) a 9. However, if you are calling from outside the state where the mobile is based (but not from abroad), you need to add a zero in front of that.

Calling an Indian mobile or landline from a UK landline, you can save a lot of money by signing up cost-free with a VoIP provider such as 18185 (18185.co.uk). In the US you can make cheap calls via reasonable monthly deals on Phone.com (phone.com).

Photography

Beware of pointing your camera at anything that might be considered “strategic”, including airports and anything military. Remember to respect people’s privacy and ask before you take a photo of any locals or religious men (you may occasionally be asked to pay a few rupees to the subject). More likely, you’ll get people, especially kids, volunteering to pose and it’s quite common for Indians to ask you to be in their snaps. Almost all photo shops can now transfer digital images onto a memory stick or CD – useful in order to free up memory space.

Post

Post can take anything from six days to three weeks to get to or from India, depending on where you are and the country you are posting to; ten days is about the norm. Most post offices are open Monday to Friday from 10am to 5pm and Saturday from 10am to noon, but town GPOs keep longer hours (usually Mon–Sat 9.30am–1pm & 2–5.30pm). Stamps are not expensive, but you’ll have to stick them on yourself as they tend not to be self-adhesive (every post office keeps a pot of evil-smelling glue for this purpose). Aerogrammes and postcards cost the same to anywhere in the world. Ideally, you should also have mail franked in front of you.

Sending a parcel from India can be a performance. First take it to a tailor to have it wrapped in cheap cotton cloth, stitched up and sealed with wax. Next, take it to the post office, fill in and attach the relevant customs forms, buy your stamps, see them franked and dispatch it. Surface mail is incredibly cheap, and takes an average of six months to arrive – it may take half, or four times that, however. It’s a good way to dump excess baggage and souvenirs, but don’t send anything fragile this way.

Sexism and women’s issues

India is not a country that provides huge obstacles to women travellers. In the days of the Raj, many upper-class women travelled through India alone, as did the female flower children of the hippie era. Plenty of women travel solo today, but few get through their trip without any hassle, so it's good to be prepared.

Indian streets are often dominated by male groups and you may find yourself subjected to incessant staring, whistling and cat-calling. Most of your fellow travellers on trains and buses will be men, who may start up most unwelcome conversations about sex, divorce and the freedom of relationships in the West. These cannot often be avoided, but demonstrating too much enthusiasm to discuss such topics can lure men into thinking that you are easy about sex, and the situation could become threatening. At its worst in larger cities, all this can become very tiring. You can get around it to a certain extent by joining women in public places.

If travelling with a man, expect Indian men to approach him (it will be assumed he is your husband) and talk about you quite happily as if you were not there. Beware, however, if you are (or look) of Indian origin with a non-Indian male companion: this may well cause you harassment, as you might be seen to have brought shame on your family by adopting the loose morals of the West.

In addition to staring and suggestive comments and looks, sexual harassment, or “Eve teasing” as it is bizarrely known, is likely to be a nuisance. It's not unlikely that you will get groped in crowds and not unusual to have men “accidentally” squeeze past you at any opportunity. It tends to be worse in cities than in small towns and villages, but being followed can be a real problem wherever you are.

Local women tend to dress modestly in items such as a salwar kameez with loose trousers, and many cover their hair (usually for religious reasons). Smoking or drinking in public may also cause unwanted attention.

RAPE, MURDER AND AN “EVERYDAY EXPERIENCE”

On December 16, 2012, a 23-year-old female physiotherapy student and a male friend boarded a bus at Munirka in South Delhi. Unknown to her, the driver was on a joyride and the five other male passengers were his friends. Beating her friend unconscious, they gang-raped and brutally abused her in the back of the bus. They then dumped the unfortunate couple naked on a road near the airport. The rape victim was rushed to hospital with serious internal injuries, and was even flown for emergency treatment to Singapore, but ten days after the attack she died. The incident suddenly brought to public attention the high frequency of rape and sexual assault in Delhi, and sparked off violent protests that lasted for several days. The perpetrators were arrested and the government hurriedly brought in the death penalty for rape, but real change will need a shift in public attitudes. As another female medical student told the press, sexual harassment in Delhi is an “everyday experience” for women in the city. The shocking story of the rape, and subsequent protests, is retold in the powerful 2015 documentary India’s Daughter (www.indiasdaughter.com).

In the aftermath, more rape cases gained publicity, perhaps because the victims were emboldened to report the crimes and the press eager to continue focusing on the now hot issue. In a celebrated case in Mumbai in 2013, for example, the perpetrators of a gang rape received the death penalty, reinforcing the shift in attitudes and legal action since the South Delhi incident.

Despite these horrific cases, India remains a generally safe destination, especially if sensible precautions are taken.

You may see Indian women become mildly aggressive when offended (a slap or a punch on the arm, for example) – it might be effective but try this at your own risk. It will also likely attract attention and urge someone to help you, or at least deal with the offender – a man transgressing social norms is always out of line and any passer-by will want to let him know it.

Going to watch a Bollywood movie at the cinema is a fun and essential part of your trip to India but, at cheap cinemas especially, such an occasion is rarely without hassle. As an all-round rule, sticking to slightly more upmarket or touristy restaurants, bars and cinemas will likely result in less hassle.

Violent sexual assaults on tourists are extremely rare but the number of reported cases of rape is slowly rising, and you should always take precautions: avoid quiet, dimly lit streets and alleys at night, as well as remote rural locations; if you find a trustworthy rickshaw/taxi driver in the day keep him for the night journey. While Indian women are still quite timid about reporting rape – it is considered as much a disgrace to the victim as to the perpetrator – Western victims should always report it to the police. Letting other tourists, or locals, know of any incident in the hope that pressure from the community may uncover the offender and see him brought to justice is also likely to be effective.

The practicalities of travel take on a new dimension for solo female travellers. In hotels watch out for “peep-holes” in your door (and in common bathrooms), and note that tampons are not widely available outside main cities.

There are many situations in which it's beneficial to be a woman or group of women in India, though. For example, you might well be more welcome in some private houses than a group of Western males, and women frequently get preference at bus and railway stations where they can join a separate “ladies’ queue”, and use ladies’ waiting rooms. On trains the enclosed ladies’ compartments are peaceful havens (unless filled with noisy children); you could also try to share a berth section with a family where you are usually drawn into the security of the group and are less exposed to staring.

Time

India is all in one time zone and remains the same year round: GMT+5hr 30min. This makes it 5hr 30min ahead of London, 10hr 30min ahead of New York, 13hr 30min ahead of LA, 4hr 30min behind Sydney and 6hr 30min behind New Zealand; however, daylight saving time in those places will change the difference by an hour. Indian time is referred to as IST (Indian Standard Time, which cynics refer to as “Indian stretchable time”).

Tipping and baksheesh

As a well-off visitor you’ll be expected to be liberal with your tips. Low-paid workers in hotels and restaurants often accept lower pay than they should in the expectation of generous tips during the tourist season. Ten percent, or a simple rounding up, should be regarded as acceptable if you’ve received good service – more if the staff have really gone out of their way to be helpful. Taxi and auto-rickshaw drivers will not expect tips unless you’ve made unplanned diversions or stops. What to tip your driver at the end of long tours, however, is a trickier issue, especially if you’ve been forking out for their daily allowance, as well as paying for meals. The simple answer is to give what you think they deserve, and what you can afford. Drivers working for tour operators, even more than hotel staff and waiters, depend on tips to get through the off-season – many are paid abysmal daily wages because their bosses know that foreign customers tend to tip well).

Alms giving (baksheesh) is common throughout India; people with disabilities and mutilations often congregate in city centres and popular resorts, where they survive from begging. In such cases a few coins should be sufficient. Kids demanding money, pens, sweets or the like are a different case: yielding to any request only encourages them to pester others.

Toilets

Western-style toilets are becoming much more common in India now, especially in hotels and lodges in touristy areas, though you'll probably still come across a few traditional "squat" toilets – basically a hole in the ground. Paper, if used, often goes in a bucket next to the loo rather than down it. Instead, Indians use a jug of water and their left hand or the hose provided, a method you may also come to prefer, but if you do use paper, keep some handy, especially if staying in basic accommodation or going too far off the beaten track. Travelling is especially difficult for women as facilities are limited or nonexistent, especially when travelling by road rather than by rail. However, toilets in the a/c carriages of trains are usually kept clean, as are those in mid-range and air-conditioned restaurants. You might also find tourist toilets at every major historical site, where you get water, mirrors, toilet paper and a clean sit-down loo.

Tourist information

The main tourist website for India is www.incredibleindia.org. The Indian government also maintains a number of tourist offices abroad, whose staff are usually helpful and knowledgeable; addresses and contact details can be found on www.tourism.gov.in/about-us/overseas-tourism-offices. Other sources of information include the websites of Indian embassies and tourist offices, travel agents (who are in business for themselves, so their advice may not always be totally unbiased), and Indian Railways representatives abroad.

Inside India, both national and local governments run tourist information offices, providing general travel advice and handing out an array of printed material, from city maps to glossy leaflets on specific destinations. The Indian government's tourist department, whose main offices are on Janpath in New Delhi and opposite Churchgate railway station in Mumbai, has branches in most regional capitals. These, however, operate independently of the state government information counters and their commercial bureaux are run by the state tourism development corporations, usually referred to by their initials (e.g. MPTDC in Madhya Pradesh, RTDC in Rajasthan, and so on), which offer a wide range of travel facilities, including guided tours, car rental and their own hotels. A list of state tourist office websites is given below.

Just to confuse things further, the Indian government's tourist office has a corporate wing, too. The Indian Tourism Development Corporation (ITDC) is responsible for the Ashok chain of hotels and operates tour and travel services, frequently competing with its state counterparts.

There's all sorts of information available about India online – we've listed the best websites in relevant places throughout the Guide. One particularly good general site is www.indiamike.com, which features lively chat rooms, bulletin boards, photo archives and banks of members' travel articles.

TRAVEL ADVICE

Australian Department of Foreign Affairs www.smartraveller.gov.au.

Canadian Department of Foreign Affairs www.voyage.gc.ca.

Irish Department of Foreign Affairs www.dfa.ie.

New Zealand Ministry of Foreign Affairs www.safetravel.govt.nz.

South African Department of Foreign Affairs www.dirco.gov.za.

UK Foreign, Commonwealth & Development Office www.fco.gov.uk.

US State Department www.travel.state.gov.

STATE TOURISM WEBSITES

Andaman and Nicobar Islands www.go2andaman.com.

Andhra Pradesh www.aptdc.gov.in.

Arunachal Pradesh www.arunachaltourism.com.

Assam www.assamtourisonline.com.

Bihar www.tourism.bihar.gov.in.

Chandigarh www.chandigarhtourism.gov.in.

Chhattisgarh www.chhattisgarhtourism.in.

Daman www.ddd.gov.in.

Diu www.diutourism.com.

Goa www.goa-tourism.com.

Gujarat www.gujarattourism.com.

Haryana 🌐 haryanatourism.gov.in.
Himachal Pradesh 🌐 hptdc.in.
Jammu & Kashmir 🌐 tourismjk.in.
Jharkhand 🌐 tourism.jharkhand.gov.in.
Karnataka 🌐 karnatakaturism.org.
Kerala 🌐 keralaturism.org.
Lakshadweep 🌐 lakshadweeptourism.com.
Madhya Pradesh 🌐 mpstdc.com.
Maharashtra 🌐 mtdc.co.
Manipur 🌐 manipurtourism.gov.in.
Meghalaya 🌐 meghalayatourism.in.
Mizoram 🌐 tourism.mizoram.gov.in.
Nagaland 🌐 tourismnagaland.com.
Odisha 🌐 orissa-tourism.com.
Puducherry 🌐 tourism.py.gov.in.
Punjab 🌐 punjabtourism.punjab.gov.in.
Rajasthan 🌐 tourism.rajasthan.gov.in.
Sikkim 🌐 sikkimtourism.gov.in.
Tamil Nadu 🌐 tamilnadutourism.tn.gov.in.
Telangana 🌐 tourism.telangana.gov.in.
Tripura 🌐 tripuratourism.gov.in.
Uttarakhand 🌐 uttarakhandtourism.gov.in.
Uttar Pradesh 🌐 uptourism.gov.in.
West Bengal 🌐 wbtourism.gov.in.

Travellers with disabilities

Disability is common in India; many conditions that would be curable in the West, such as cataracts, are permanent disabilities here because people can't afford the treatment. Those with disabilities are unlikely to receive the best treatment available, and the choice is usually between staying at home to be looked after by your family and going out on the street to beg for alms.

For travellers with a disability, this has its advantages and disadvantages. Disability doesn't get the same embarrassed reaction from Indian people that it does from some able-bodied Westerners. On the other hand, you'll be lucky to see a state-of-the-art wheelchair or a disabled loo, and the streets are full of all sorts of obstacles that would be hard for a blind or wheelchair-bound tourist to negotiate independently. Kerbs are often high, pavements uneven and littered, and ramps nonexistent. There are potholes all over the place and open sewers. Some of the more expensive hotels have ramps for the movement of luggage and equipment, but if that makes them accessible to wheelchairs, it is by accident rather than design. Nonetheless, the 1995 Persons with Disabilities Act specifies access for all to public buildings, and is sometimes enforced. A visit to Delhi by Professor Stephen Hawking in 2001 resulted in the appearance of ramps at several Delhi tourist sights including the Red Fort, Qutub Minar and Jantar Mantar, and most major Indian airports and metro systems have also been made a lot more accessible for chair users.

If you walk with difficulty, you will find India's many street obstacles and steep stairs hard going. Another factor that can be a problem is the constant barrage of people proffering things (hard to wave aside if you are, for instance, on crutches), and all that queueing, not to mention heat, will take it out of you if you have a condition that makes you tire quickly. A light, folding camp-stool is one thing that could be invaluable if you have limited walking or standing power.

Then again, Indian people are likely to be very helpful if, for example, you need their help getting on and off buses or up stairs. Taxis and rickshaws are easily affordable and very adaptable; if you rent one for a day, the driver is certain to help you on and off, and perhaps even around the sites you visit. If you employ a guide, they may also be prepared to help you with steps and obstacles.

If complete independence is out of the question, going with an able-bodied companion might be on the cards. There are some specialist operators for tourists with limited mobility – Enable Holidays (enableholidays.com) offer a good “Golden Triangle” tour, for example – and some mainstream package-tour operators try to cater for travellers with disabilities but you should always contact any operator and discuss your exact needs with them before making a booking. You should also make sure you are covered by any insurance policy you take out.

For more information about disability issues in India, check the government website disabilityaffairs.gov.in.

Volunteering

It is illegal for a foreign tourist to work in India, although some tourists do manage to obtain a business visa to work in TEFL, business or high-tech fields. Many visitors, however, do engage in voluntary, charitable work. Several charities accept volunteers for a medium-term commitment, for instance for spouts of two months or so, but there will be many more that will be happy to offer stints over a much shorter term with a less formal involvement. In addition to the list that follows, other local organizations are mentioned in the relevant chapters throughout the book.

If you want to spend your time working as a volunteer for an NGO (non-governmental organization), you should make arrangements well before you arrive by contacting the body in question, rather than on spec. Special visas are generally not required unless you intend to work for longer than six months. For information about which NGOs are operating across the country, log on to www.csridentity.com/india/index.asp and select options from a drop-down list, or see what's available through the worldwide VSO organization at www.vsointernational.org.

VOLUNTEERING RESOURCES

Animal Aid Unlimited www.animalaidunlimited.org. Animal welfare group working to alleviate animal suffering in Udaipur, Rajasthan. No special skills are required, though volunteers with veterinary knowledge are especially welcome.

Concern India Foundation www.concernindiafoundation.org. Charitable trust supporting grassroots NGOs working with disadvantaged people, with offices in seven cities.

Darjeeling Children's Trust www.darjeelingchildrenstrust.org.uk. UK-based charity, supporting eight primary schools, all within walking distance of the Chowrasta. Volunteers welcome for a week or more.

DISHA Foundation www.dishafoundation.org. Jaipur-based resource centre for children with cerebral palsy and other disabilities. Needs donations, sponsors and volunteers with time or specific skills.

Goa Animal Welfare Trust (GAWT) www.gawt.org. GAWT does sterling work with stray and mistreated animals, and welcomes volunteers in centres around Goa.

Indicorps www.indicorps.org. US-based charity, contactable in Mumbai, with various projects for people of Indian origin to volunteer on.

Mandore Medical and Relief Society www.mandore.com. Guesthouse which takes on volunteers for periods as short as a week to work in health awareness and education projects in rural areas around Jodhpur.

Mango Tree Goa www.mangotreegoa.org. A British-run operation that works with disadvantaged children in Goa.

Mother Teresa of Calcutta Center www.motherteresa.org. Charity that carries on the work of the most famous volunteer of them all.

My Name Is Kumar www.girlsnotbrides.org. Women-led foundation that educates the children of poor families in rural Tamil Nadu and campaigns to prevent female child brides.

Salaam Baalak Trust www.salaambaalaktrust.com. Charity working to help street children in and around Delhi's Paharganj.

Sambhali Trust www.sambhali.org. Jodhpur-based NGO dedicated to providing education, training and empowerment to girls and women from underprivileged backgrounds in rural Rajasthan.

Seva Mandir  sevamandir.org. Nonprofit organization working in tribal villages in the Udaipur district; takes interns to help with development projects.

< Back to Basics

Shutterstock
THE LOTUS TEMPLE, A BAHÁ'Í HOUSE OF WORSHIP

Delhi

Old Delhi and around

New Delhi

South Delhi

Delhi

Delhi is the symbol of old India and new... Even the stones here whisper to our ears of the ages of long ago, and the air we breathe is full of the dust and fragrances of the past, as also of the fresh and piercing winds of the present.

Jawaharlal Nehru A buzzing international metropolis home to seventeen million people (and counting), sprawling Delhi is India's capital and functions as the prime hub of wider South Asia. While this may conjure visions of urban chaos, and while those visions may be almost precisely accurate in teeming Paharganj and other older districts, much of the city is low-lying and surprisingly green, as best witnessed from the elevated sections of the excellent metro system. Delhi boasts a rich and varied history, and you'll come across tombs, temples and ruins dating back centuries; on the flip side, a burgeoning youth scene is exemplified by designer bars, chic cafés and decent clubs. The result is a city full of fascinating nooks and crannies that you could happily spend weeks, or even months, exploring.

From a tourist's perspective, Delhi is divided into two main parts. Old Delhi is the city of the Mughals and dates back to the seventeenth century. It's the capital's most frenetic quarter, and its most Islamic, a reminder that for more than seven hundred years Delhi was a Muslim-ruled city. Old Delhi's greatest monuments are undoubtedly the magnificent constructions of the Mughals, most notably the mighty Red Fort, and the Jama Masjid, India's largest and most impressive mosque.

To the south, encompassing the modern city centre, is New Delhi, built by the British to be the capital of their empire's key possession. A spacious city of tree-lined boulevards, New Delhi is also impressive in its own way. The Rajpath, stretching from India Gate to the Presidential Palace, is at least as mighty a statement of imperial power as the Red Fort, and it's among the broad avenues of New Delhi that you'll find most of the city's museums and its prime shopping area, centred around the elegant, colonnaded facades of Connaught Place. Meanwhile, at opposite ends of Lodi Road lie constructions marking two ends of the great tradition of Mughal garden tombs: Humayun's Tomb, its genesis, and Safdar Jang's Tomb, its last gasp.

As the city expands, many shops, restaurants and other businesses are moving into South Delhi, the vast area beyond the colonial city; here, among the modern developments, you'll find some of Delhi's most ancient and fascinating attractions, including remains of the six cities that preceded Old Delhi, most notably the Qutb Minar and the rambling ruins of Tughluqabad.

Brief history Delhi is said to consist of seven successive cities, with British-built New Delhi making an eighth. In truth, Delhi has centred historically on three main areas: Lal Kot and extensions to its northeast, where the city was located for most of the Middle Ages; Old Delhi, the city of the Mughals, founded by Shah Jahan in the seventeenth century; and New Delhi, built by the British just in time to be the capital of independent India.

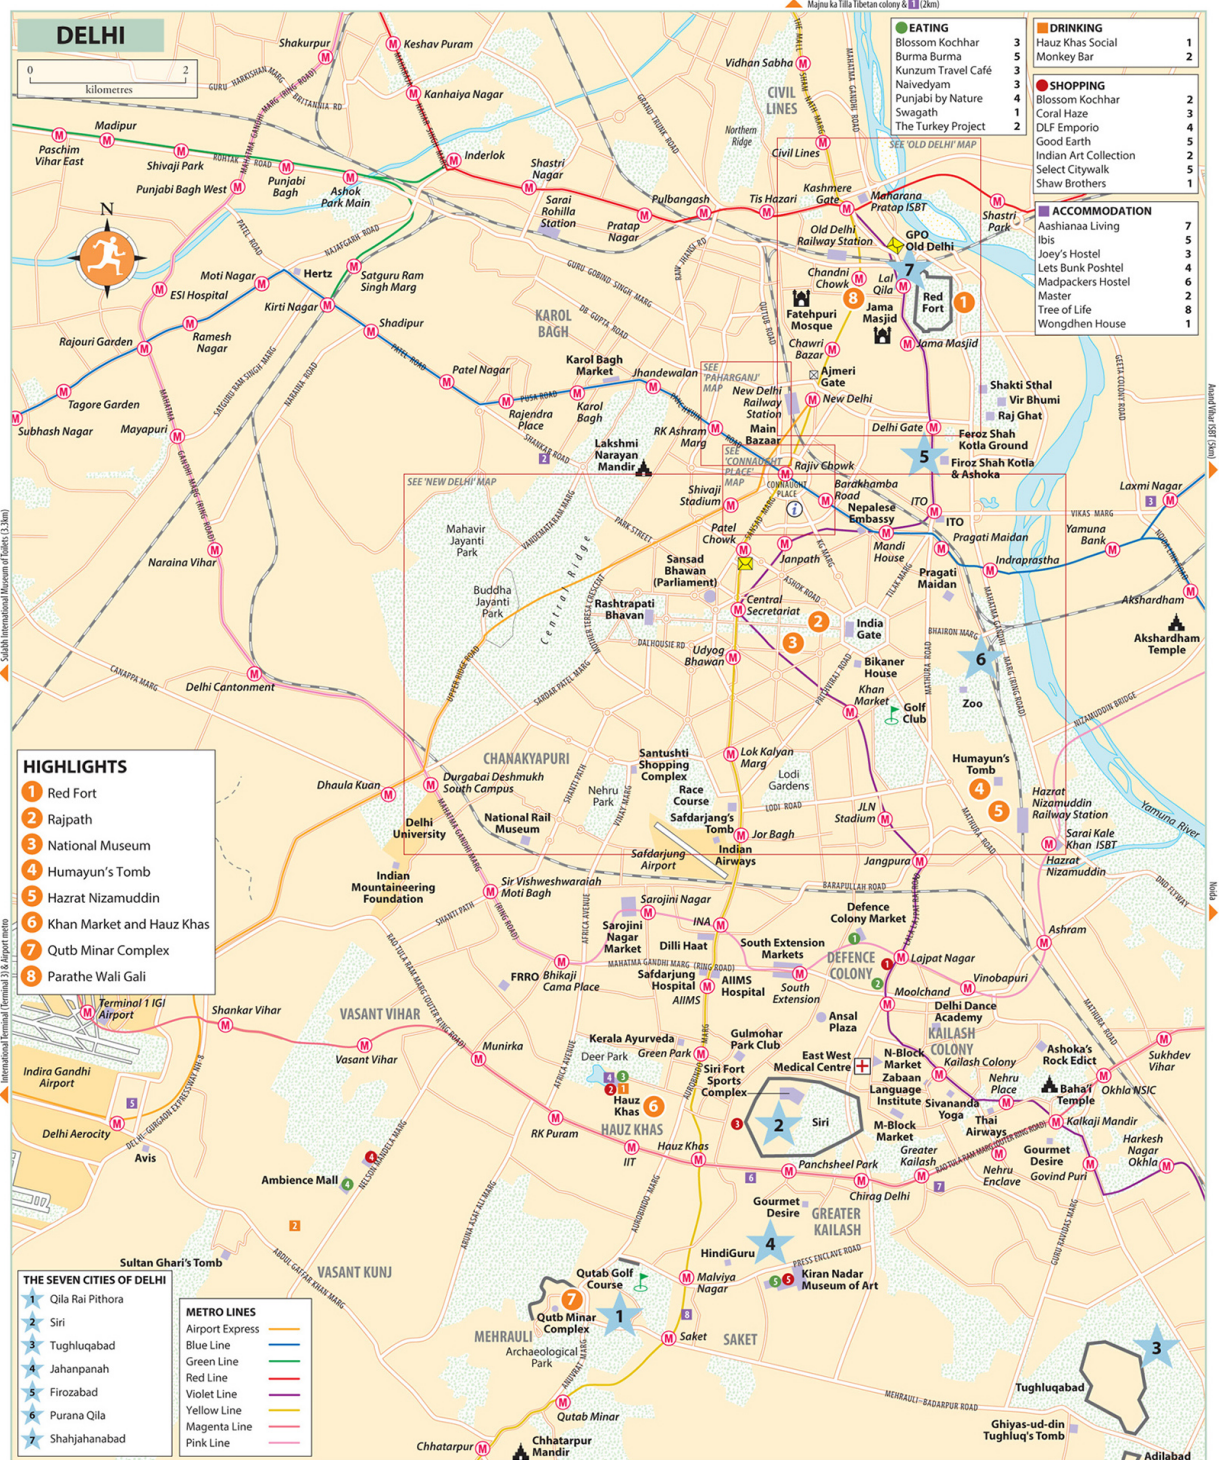

Shutterstock

LAL QILA OR THE RED FORT, DELHI HIGHLIGHTS

- ① Red Fort Delhi's most famous monument, this imposing sandstone fort is a ghostly vestige of Mughal splendour.
- ② Rajpath The centrepiece of Lutyens' imperial New Delhi, this wide boulevard epitomizes the spirit of the British Raj.
- ③ National Museum The country's finest museum, with exhibits spanning more than five thousand years of Indian culture.
- ④ Humayun's Tomb An elegant red-brick forerunner of the Taj Mahal, it is surrounded by lovely gardens that offer a welcome escape from the heat.
- ⑤ Hazrat Nizamuddin A Sufi shrine in a deeply traditional Muslim quarter, where hypnotic qawwali music is performed every Thursday.
- ⑥ Khan Market and Hauz Khas These trendy districts offer a sneak preview of the Delhi of the future.
- ⑦ Qutb Minar Complex The ruins of Delhi's first incarnation, a thirteenth-century city dominated by an impressive Victory Tower.
- ⑧ Parathe Wali Gali This atmospheric Old Delhi alley features several small outlets making parathas to order – a cheap meal and a rich experience, all in one.

HIGHLIGHTS ARE MARKED ON THE MAP

Early Delhi According to the Mahabharata, the heroic Pandavas had their capital at Indraprastha, near Purana Qila, circa 1450 BC. However, Delhi proper really got started in 1060 AD, when the Tomars (of the Rajput clan) founded Lal Kot, considered to be the first city of Delhi. They were ousted in 1180 by the Chauhans, a rival Rajput clan who renamed the city Qila Lal Pithora. This in turn fell to Muhammad of Ghor's Afghan Muslim armies in 1191, and evidence from this time can be seen in the Qutb Minar complex; just over a decade later, Muhammad's general, Qutb-ud-din Aibak, set up as an independent ruler, founding the Delhi Sultanate.

The Delhi Sultanate From 1211–36, the Sultanate expanded, with its third leader – Sultan Iltutmish – making Delhi the capital of lands stretching from Punjab to Bengal. In 1290, the Khaljis arrived from Central Asia, overthrowing Qutb-ud-din's "Slave Dynasty", taking over as sultans, and in 1303 commissioning Siri, the second city of Delhi. 1321 saw Ghiyas-ud-din Tughluq ousting Khaljis to found the Tughluq dynasty, and also Tughluqabad, the third city of Delhi; five years later Sultan Muhammad Tughluq founded Delhi's fourth city, Jahanpanah, as an extension of Lal Kot, joining it to Siri. The fifth city, Firozabad, was founded in 1354 during a time of decline, though there was plenty of time for the Sayyids to come and go before the First Battle of Panipat in 1526; Mughal emperor Babur defeated Sultan Ibrahim Lodi, thereby ending the Delhi Sultanate.

Mughal rule The Mughals took over where the sultans left off, with the addition of yet another city: in 1540, Sher Shah Suri ousted Babur's son Humayun, and founded the sixth, Purana Qila. Humayun retook Delhi in 1556, but died the following year. In 1565, Humayun's son Akbar shifted the Mughal capital from Delhi to Agra, but just after work had got going on the Taj Mahal, his grandson Shah Jahan shifted the capital back to Delhi in 1638, creating its seventh city at Shahjahanabad (Old Delhi). 1739 saw Persian emperor Nadir Shah sack Delhi, slaughtering 15,000 of its inhabitants as Mughal power crumbled; the Marathas subdued Delhi in 1784, making the emperor their vassal, but greater changes were afoot.

British rule 1803 saw Britain's East India Company defeat the Marathas in the Battle of Delhi, and take over as effective rulers; they had already established their capital to the east in Calcutta. In 1857's First War of Independence, Delhi supported the insurgents, but the British retook the city with bloody reprisals, deposing the Mughals and expelling Muslim Delhiites for two years. With opposition to colonial rule mounting in Calcutta, the British decided to create a new capital in 1911, though it was two decades before New Delhi was officially inaugurated as capital of the Raj.

Delhi under independent India In 1947, the British handed over power to India's first elected government. The twenty-first century has seen Delhi develop at an even greater pace than the rest of India. The first metro line opened in 2002 (though Kolkata had one in the 1980s), and the city proudly hosted the Commonwealth Games in 2010. This, however, was beset by substandard preparation; many competitors, appalled by the state of the Athletes' Village, demanded to be moved into hotels. 2013 saw the international reputation of Delhi – and India – sullied further, with the gang rape and murder of a student paramedic sparking worldwide protests. Since then, stringent safety policies have been put in stringent and quick. Police assistance helplines are available 24X7 to report any mishap in just seconds.

BEST TIME TO VISIT AT THE NORTHWESTERN END OF THE GANGETIC PLAIN, WITH THE HIMALAYAS

TO THE NORTH AND THE THAR DESERT TO ITS WEST, DELHI CAN GET VERY HOT IN SUMMER (APRIL THROUGH JUNE) AND SURPRISINGLY COLD IN WINTER (DECEMBER AND JANUARY), WHEN HEAVY FOGS CAN DISRUPT TRAIN TIMETABLES QUITE SEVERELY. JULY TO SEPTEMBER IS THE WET SEASON, MAKING FEBRUARY, MARCH, OCTOBER AND NOVEMBER OPTIMUM TIMES TO VISIT CLIMATE-WISE.

FESTIVALS IN DELHI
REPUBLIC DAY (JAN 26). BIG, LARGELY MILITARY PARADE ON RAJPATH, COMMEMORATING THE ADOPTION OF INDIA'S CONSTITUTION IN 1950.

Garden Tourism Festival (Feb). Three-day flower and gardening show put on in one of Delhi's parks (the venue changes from year to year), with cultural and kids' activities.

International Mango Festival (July). A celebration of Indian mangoes held at Talkatora Stadium, with over five hundred varieties to try.

Id ul-Fitr (July/Aug). The area around the Jama Masjid becomes a huge market of live goats to be slaughtered for the annual Muslim festival.

Delhi International Arts Festival (Nov/Dec; www.diaf.in). Lasting more than a week, DIAF is an extravaganza of music, dance and other arts from India and worldwide, held at venues around central New Delhi.

Qutub Festival (Nov/Dec). A three-day festival of arts and culture put on by Delhi Tourism around the Qutb Minar.

These days, Delhi NCR comes across as increasingly ambitious – its metro network now has eleven lines with 286 stations (and counting). An easy search facility online will tell you what route to take on www.delhimetrorail.info.

Old Delhi and around Though it's not in fact the oldest part of Delhi, the seventeenth-century city of Shahjahanabad, built for the Mughal emperor Shah Jahan, is known as OLD DELHI. Construction began on the city in 1638, and within eleven years it was substantially complete, surrounded by more than 8km of ramparts pierced by fourteen main gates. It boasted a beautiful main thoroughfare, Chandni Chowk; an imposing citadel, the Red Fort (Lal Qila); and an impressive congregational mosque, the Jama Masjid. Today much of the wall has crumbled, and of the fourteen gates only four remain, but it's still a fascinating area, crammed with interesting nooks and crannies, though you'll need stamina, patience, time, and probably a fair few chai (tea) stops along the way to endure the crowds and traffic. The same is true of Paharganj, the district just across the rail tracks – somehow Delhi in a nutshell, despite being rather unrepresentative of the city as a whole.

The Red Fort Netaji Subhash Marg • Fort Tues–Sun 9.30am–4.30pm • Charge • Audio tour • Museums 10am–5pm • Free •

Lal Quila The largest of Old Delhi's monuments is Lal Qila, known in English as the Red Fort because of the red sandstone from which it was built. It was commissioned by Shah Jahan to be his residence and modelled on the fort at Agra. Work started in 1638, and the emperor moved in ten years later. The fort contains all the trappings you'd expect at the centre of Mughal government: halls of public and private audience, domed and arched marble palaces, plush private apartments, a mosque and elaborately designed gardens. The ramparts, which stretch for more than 2km, are interrupted by two gates – Lahori Gate to the west, through which you enter, and Delhi Gate to the south. Shah Jahan's son, Aurangzeb, added barbicans to both gates. In those days, the Yamuna River ran along the eastern wall, feeding both the moat and a "stream of paradise" which ran through every pavilion. As the Mughal Empire declined, the fort fell into disrepair. It was attacked and plundered by the Persian emperor Nadir Shah in 1739, and by the British in 1857. Nevertheless, it remains an impressive testimony to Mughal grandeur. It has been a symbol of power, has witnessed the change in Indian history to British rule, and was the place where Indian independence was first celebrated, and is still celebrated today. Keep your ticket stub, as you may have to show it several times.

Chatta Chowk The main entrance to the fort from Lahori Gate opens onto Chatta Chowk, a covered street flanked with arched cells that used to house Delhi's most talented jewellers, carpet-makers, goldsmiths and silk-weavers, but is now given over to souvenir-sellers. At the end, a path to the left leads to the Museum of the Struggle for Independence, depicting resistance to British rule.

Diwan-i-Am The Naubhat Khana ("Musicians' Gallery") marked the entrance into the royal quarters. Beyond it, a path leads ahead through wide lawns to the Diwan-i-Am, or "Hall of Public Audience", where the emperor used to meet commoners and hold court. In those days it was strewn with silk carpets and partitioned with hanging tapestries. Its centrepiece is a marble dais on which sat the emperor's throne, backed by twelve panels inlaid with precious stones, mostly depicting birds and flowers. The most famous of them, in the middle at the top (and not easy to see), shows the mythological Greek Orpheus with his lute. The panels themselves were made by a Florentine jeweller and imported all the way from Italy at great expense, but the surrounding inlay work was done by local artisans.

Mumtaz Mahal The Mumtaz Mahal, south and east of the Diwan-i-Am, and thought to have been built for Arjumand Banu Begum (also known as Mumtaz Mahal) – the Taj Mahal is her mausoleum. It now houses an Archaeological Museum, displaying manuscripts, paintings, ceramics and textiles, with a section devoted to the last Mughal emperor, Bahadur Shah II; exhibits include his silk robes and silver hookah pipe.

Rang Mahal The pavilions along the fort's east wall face spacious gardens and overlook the banks of the Yamuna River. Immediately east of the Diwan-i-Am, Rang Mahal, the "Palace of Colour", housed the emperor's wives and mistresses. Originally, its ceiling was overlaid with gold and silver and reflected onto a central pool in the marble floor. Unfortunately, it was heavily vandalized while the British used it as an Officers' Mess after the 1857 uprising.

Khas Mahal On the northern side of Rang Mahal, the marble Khas Mahal was the personal palace of the emperor, split into separate apartments for worship, sleeping and sitting. The southern chamber, Tosh Khana (“Robe Room”), has a stunning (though broken, at the time of writing) marble filigree screen on its north wall, surmounted by a panel carved with the scales of justice. The octagonal tower projecting over the east wall of the Khas Mahal was where the emperor appeared daily before throngs gathered on the riverbanks below.

Diwan-i-Khas North of Khas Mahal, in the large Diwan-i-Khas (“Hall of Private Audience”), it is here where the emperor would address the highest nobles of his court. Today it’s still the finest building in the fort, a marble pavilion shaded by a roof raised on stolid pillars, which meet in wonderfully ornate scalloped arches and are embellished with delicate inlays of flowers made from glittering semiprecious stones. On the north and south walls if you look closely you can still make out the inscription of a couplet in Persian attributed to Shah Jahan’s prime minister, which roughly translates as: “If there be paradise upon this earthly sphere/It is here, oh it is here, oh it is here”. More than just a paean, the verse refers to the deliberate modelling of the gardens on the Koranic description of heaven.

SOUND-AND-LIGHT SHOWS EACH NIGHT EXCEPT MONDAY, A SOUND-AND-LIGHT SHOW TAKES PLACE IN THE RED FORT: THE PALACES ARE DRAMATICALLY LIT, AND A HISTORICAL COMMENTARY BLARES FROM CRACKLY LOUDSPEAKERS. THE SHOW STARTS AFTER SUNSET AND LASTS AN HOUR (CHARGE; FOR TIMING, VISIT ITDC.CO.IN/SOUND-LIGHT-SHOW/, AS IT CHANGES MONTHLY). HEAVY MONSOON RAINS MAY AFFECT SUMMER SHOWS, AND THE MOSQUITOES CAN ALSO BE FEROCIOUS SO BRING REPELLENT.

The hammams and Moti Masjid A little further north are the hammams, or baths, sunk into the marble floor inlaid with patterns of precious stones, and dappled in jewel-coloured light that filters through stained-glass windows. The western chamber contained hot baths while the eastern apartment, with fountains of rosewater, was used as a dressing room; access is not currently allowed to either interior.

Next to the hammams, the sweetly fashioned Moti Masjid, or Pearl Mosque, triple-domed in white marble, was added by Aurangzeb in 1659, but unfortunately the interior is closed to the public.

Kashmiri Gate and around Just north of the tracks, Kasmiri Gate – also written as Kashmere Gate, the spelling used by its metro station – is these days of greatest significance for its jalopy of a bus. It's not the most pleasant of areas, but there are a couple of minor sights here if you've time to while away before your bus, or are changing metro lines.

Lothian Cemetery Lothian Rd • Daily 10am–6pm • Free • 🚶🏻 Lal Quila Netaji Subhash Marg leads north from the Red Fort and under a railway bridge to Old Delhi GPO. Just before the post office on the east side of the road, Lothian Cemetery was the burial ground for officers of the East India Company from 1808 until just after the 1857 uprising. Many locals believe that the ghost of one of these officers, a lovelorn fellow who shot himself in the head, wanders the cemetery at night.

St James's Church Lothian Rd • 🌐 stjameschurchdelhi.com/ • 🚶🏻
Kashmere Gate A few hundred metres north of the GPO is the rather fine cream-and-white baroque facade of St James's Church, commissioned in 1836 by James Skinner, the son of a Scottish Company-wala and a Rajput princess. Because of his mixed ancestry, and the increasing racism of the British regime, Skinner was refused a commission in the Company's army, but set up his own irregular cavalry unit and made himself pretty much indispensable. His victories over the forces of the maharaja of Jaipur and the great Sikh leader Maharaja Ranjit Singh eventually forced the Company to begrudgingly grant him the rank of Lieutenant Colonel and absorb his cavalymen into its ranks. Skinner died in 1842 and is buried just in front of the altar.

Qudsia Gardens Yamuna Marg • Daily 9am–5.30pm • Free •

Kashmere Gate The double-arched Kashmiri Gate, on the west side of Lothian Road just 300m north of St James's Church, was where the Mughal court would leave Delhi every summer bound for the cool valley of Kashmir. To its north is Maharana Pratap ISBT, beyond which, across the busy Lala Hardev Sahai Marg, the peaceful Qudsia Gardens are a fading remnant of the magnificent pleasure parks commissioned in the mid-eighteenth century by Queen Qudsia, favourite mistress of Muhammad Shah, and mother of Ahmed Shah. The park isn't visited in great numbers, and as such is not the best place for lone females.

Nicholson Cemetery Lala Hardev Sahai Marg • Daily 24 hours • Free •

Kashmere Gate Just west of the Qudsia Gardens is Delhi's oldest burial ground, Nicholson Cemetery, named after Brigadier General John Nicholson, who was shot down at the Kashmiri Gate while leading the British attack to regain Delhi from the 1857 insurgents. It's mostly overgrown these days (bar the twenty-first-century graves at the west end), and you may have to prise open the gate yourself.

Paharganj Just west of New Delhi station is the hectic, somewhat infamous Paharganj area; centred around its Main Bazaar, a great number of travellers call it home for much – or all – of their time in the city. It's a real love-it-or-hate-it area, packed with cheap hotels, restaurants, cafés and dhabas, and a busy fruit and vegetable market; it's also a paradise for shoestring shoppers seeking psychedelic clothing, joss sticks, bags and oils of patchouli or sandalwood. There aren't actually any major things to see here, but most would argue that Paharganj is a sight in itself, and its umpteen neon hotel signs look rather stunning by night, especially from the vantage point of the many rooftop restaurants, cafés and bars. Be sure to watch out for pickpockets, not to mention the racing motorbikes and auto-rickshaws, which somehow contrive to be even more dangerous here than elsewhere in Delhi.

Chandni Chowk and around Old Delhi's main thoroughfare, Chandni Chowk was a sublime canal lined with trees and some of the most opulent bazaars in the whole of Asia, until the British paved over the canal after 1857 – and before India fell in love with the combustion engine. Auto-rickshaws operate along the road, but since traffic is extremely congested, the best way (in other words, the “least worst” way) to take it in is on foot. Along the way, look out for numbered “heritage buildings” signposted at intervals, with placards outside explaining their historical importance, especially during the 1857 uprising. Perhaps more notable is the presence, halfway along, of Paranthé Wali Gali, an alley that's arguably Delhi's most atmospheric place to eat.

Lal Mandir Netaji Subhash Marg • Daily 6am–noon & 5:30–9pm • Free but donations appreciated, especially for the bird hospital • bit.ly/3ZZAGfJ •  Lal Qila At Chandni Chowk's eastern end, opposite the Red Fort, the Lal Mandir Jain temple is not quite as ornate as the Jain temples in Rajasthan , but it does boast detailed carvings, and gilded paintwork in the antechambers surrounding the main shrine. Remove your shoes and leave any leather articles at the kiosk before entering. The attached bird hospital puts into practice the Jain principle that all life is sacred by rescuing injured birds, with each type having its own ward; the sparrow ward is largely occupied by victims of ceiling fans, with which these poor critters frequently collide.

Jama Masjid Urdu Bazaar Rd • Daily 7am–noon & 1.30–6.30pm • Entry free, photo permit charge • No shorts, short skirts or sleeveless tops •  Jama Masjid A wonderful piece of Mughal pomp, the red-and-white Jama Masjid is India's largest mosque – its courtyard is wide enough to accommodate the prostrated bodies of 25,000 worshippers.

Designed by Shah Jahan, the mosque was built by a workforce of five thousand people between 1644 and 1656. Originally called Masjid-i-Jahanuma (“mosque commanding a view of the world”), this grand structure stands on Bho Jhala, one of Shahjahanabad’s two hills, and looks east to the sprawling Red Fort, and down on the seething streets of Old Delhi. Broad, red-sandstone staircases lead to gateways on the eastern, northern and southern sides, where worshippers and visitors alike must remove their shoes (the custodian will guard them for you for a small tip).

PAHARGANJ WALKING TOURS PAHARGANJ PROVIDES THE FIRST EXPERIENCE OF THE SUBCONTINENT FOR MANY BUDGET TRAVELLERS, BUT THERE IS ALSO A LESS VISIBLE UNDERSIDE TO LIFE HERE, IN THE SHAPE OF THE STREET CHILDREN. MOST ARE RUNAWAYS WHO’VE LEFT DIFFICULT HOMES, OFTEN HUNDREDS OF KILOMETRES AWAY; MOST SLEEP ON THE STREETS, AND SOME INHALE SOLVENTS TO NUMB THEIR PAIN. THE SALAAM BAALAK TRUST (🌐 SALAAMBAALAKTRUST.COM), A LOCAL NGO, ORGANIZES WALKING TOURS OF THE AREA CONDUCTED BY FORMER STREET CHILDREN. TOURS LAST TWO HOURS AND USUALLY START AT 10AM (DAILY EXCEPT SUN); THERE IS NO FIXED PRICE BUT A MINIMUM DONATION OF ₹300 IS SUGGESTED; PROCEEDS GO TOWARDS PROVIDING SHELTER, EDUCATION AND HEALTHCARE FOR THE CHILDREN THEMSELVES.

Once inside the courtyard, your eyes will be drawn to the three bulbous marble domes crowning the main prayer hall on the west side (facing Mecca), fronted by a series of high cusped arches, and sheltering the mihrab, the central niche in the west wall indicating the direction of prayer. The pool in the centre is used for ritual ablutions. At each corner of the square yard, a slender minaret crowned with a marble dome rises to the sky, and it's worth climbing the tower (women must be accompanied by a man) south of the main sanctuary for a view over Delhi. In the northeast corner a white shrine protects a collection of Muhammad's relics, including his sandals, a hair from his beard and his "footprint" miraculously embedded in a marble slab.

Delhi Gate and around The area around Delhi Gate is a symphony in two parts – to its west lies a scruffy slice of Old Delhi, and to its east a greener, quieter area featuring a museum and memorial pertaining to Gandhi, each within easy walking distance of each other. Together with the Firoz Shah Kotla ruins, it's possible to while away half a day here, and there are some good lunch spots around.

Raj Ghat Mahatma Gandhi Marg • Daily 6:30am–6pm; Fri weekly special prayer 5:30pm • Free • 🚶 Delhi Gate When Shah Jahan established his city in 1638, its eastern edges bordered the Yamuna River, and a line of ghats – steps leading to the water – were installed along the riverbanks. Ghats have been used in India for centuries, for mundane things like washing clothes and bathing, but also for worship and funeral cremation. Raj Ghat, east of Delhi Gate – really more a park than a ghat, since the river is now some way to the east – is the place where Mahatma Gandhi was cremated, on the day after his assassination in 1948. The Mahatma's samadhi (cremation memorial), a low black plinth inscribed with his reputed last words – "Hai Ram", meaning "Oh God" – receives a steady stream of visitors, and he is remembered through prayers here every Friday evening at 5pm, and on the anniversaries of his birth and death (Oct 2 & Jan 30).

North of Raj Ghat, within the same park, memorials also mark the places where Jawaharlal Nehru (at Shanti Vana), his daughter Indira Gandhi (at Shakti Sthal), and his grandson Rajiv Gandhi (at Vir Bhumi) were cremated.

National Gandhi Museum Jawaharlal Nehru Marg, opposite Raj Ghat's southwest corner • Tues–Sun 9am–5pm • Films on Sat & Sun 4pm • Free • www.gandhimuseum.org • Delhi Gate The National Gandhi

Museum houses some of the Mahatma's writings, as well as hundreds of photographs that offer a chronology of his life right up until his funeral. Other personal artefacts of interest here include some of his old spinning wheels and leather sandals. Indeed, one of the most absorbing and sobering items on display has to be the blood-stained dhoti he was wearing when he was assassinated, together with one of the three bullets that killed him. At the top of the staircase you'll see four old telephones, and through their receivers you'll hear Gandhi's voice, which is quite entertaining in its own way. A half-hour film biography is shown alternatively in Hindi and English, and at weekends there is a longer film on Gandhi's political and personal life.

Firoz Shah Kotla Mahatma Gandhi Marg, 1.5km south of Delhi Gate • Daily 8:30am–7pm • Charge •  Delhi Gate Supposedly, Firoz Shah (sultan of Delhi from 1351 to 1358) had a whole fifth city of Delhi built in his name – Firozabad, founded in 1354. Today few traces survive of what was in any case probably never more than a suburb of the main city, but what does remain is the fortified palace of Firoz Shah Kotla, now a crumbling ruin with ornamental gardens. Its most incongruous and yet distinctive element is the third-century BC polished sandstone Ashokan pillar, carried down the Yamuna River by raft from Ambala. For a reasonable view of the column, you'll need to climb to the top of the building, entering the compound through a gate on the west side, then mounting a stairway in the northeast corner. From the top you also get a view of the neighbouring mosque and baoli (step-well), as well as the lawns that make the site such a pleasant place to visit – plus an eponymous stadium, famed as Delhi's home of IPL cricket.

New Delhi The modern area of NEW DELHI, with its wide, tree-lined avenues and solid colonial architecture, has been the seat of central government since 1931. At its hub, the royal mall, Rajpath, runs from the palatial Rashtrapati Bhavan, in the west, to the India Gate war memorial in the east. Its wide, grassy margins are a popular meeting place for families, picnickers and courting couples. North of the Rajpath lies busy Connaught Place, one of the city's most important hubs for dining and drinking; further south, Khan Market is a more chilled-out version of the same, with some great sights on its periphery.

Connaught Place and around At the north edge of the new capital lies its thriving business centre, Connaught Place (more commonly referred to by locals as "CP"). With its classical colonnades, the area is radically different from the bazaars of Old Delhi, which it superseded; named after a minor British royal of the day, it takes the form of a circle, divided by eight radial roads and three ring roads into blocks lettered A–N, each crammed with restaurants, bars, shops, cinemas and the like. You'll get pestered regularly here, with gentlemen sidling up using the "approximo walk" and letting you know which block you're on – they usually want to usher you into a shop or travel agency, and are pretty harmless.

Hanuman Mandir Baba Kharak Singh Marg • Daily 24hr • Free • Rajiv Chowk A short walk from the centre of CP is the area's largest temple, the Hanuman Mandir. Despite its busy location and throngs of devotees (especially on Tuesdays and Saturdays), some parts of the interior can be surprisingly calm. Look out for the crescent sitting atop the temple's spire – an Islamic motif rare in Hindu places of worship. It's also a popular place for tourists to plaster themselves with henna, and for Indians to consult the services of a clairvoyant.

Jantar Mantar Sansad Marg • Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge •  jantarmanantar.org •  Rajiv Chowk or Shivaji Stadium The Jantar Mantar was built in 1725, the first of five open-air observatories designed by the ruler of Jaipur, Jai Singh II, and a precursor to his larger one in Jaipur. The huge slanting red-and-white stone structures, looming over palm trees and neat flowerbeds, were used to calculate time, solar and lunar calendars and astrological movements, achieving an admirable degree of accuracy.

Gurudwara Bangla Sahib Ashok Rd • Daily 24hr • Free • Cover head and dress conservatively; deposit shoes at information centre • dsgmc.in • Shivaji Stadium The vast, white marble structure of Bangla Sahib Gurudwara is Delhi's biggest Sikh temple, topped by a huge, golden, onion-shaped dome that's visible from some distance. The temple commemorates a 1664 visit to Delhi by the eighth Sikh guru, Hare Krishan, and welcomes visitors. Live devotional music (vocals, harmonium and tabla) is relayed throughout the complex, and everybody is invited to share a simple meal of dhal and chapattis, served three times daily.

Lakshmi Narayan Mandir Mandir Marg • Daily 4.30am–1.30pm & 2.30–9pm • Free; deposit cameras, shoes and mobile phones at entrance •  RK Ashram Marg or Shivaji Stadium Lakshmi Narayan Mandir is a modern Hindu temple that also welcomes tourists. With its white, cream and red brick domes, it was commissioned by a wealthy merchant family, the Birlas (hence its alternative name, Birla Mandir). The main shrine is dedicated to Lakshmi, goddess of wealth (on the right), and her consort Narayana, aka Vishnu, the preserver of life (on the left, holding a conch). At the back is a tiny, ornate chamber decorated with coloured stones and mirrors and dedicated to Krishna, one of Vishnu's earthly incarnations. Devotional music is played throughout, and quotes from Hindu scriptures, many translated into English, adorn the walls.

Rajpath and around Vijay Chowk, immediately in front of Rashtrapati Bhavan, leads into the wide, straight Rajpath, flanked with gardens and fountains that are floodlit at night, and the scene of annual Republic Day celebrations (Jan 26). The Rajpath runs east to India Gate; designed by Lutyens in 1921, the high arch – reminiscent of the Arc de Triomphe in Paris – commemorates ninety thousand Indian soldiers killed fighting for the British in World War I, and bears the names of more than three thousand British and Indian soldiers who died on the North-West Frontier and in the Afghan War of 1919. The extra memorial beneath the arch honours the lives lost in the Indo-Pakistan War of 1971.

Rashtrapati Bhavan Rajpath • Tours of main buildings Thurs–Sun 9am–4pm; museum Tues–Sun 9am–4pm, gardens Aug–Mar Thurs–Sun • Charge • Book tours at  rashtrapatisachivalaya.gov.in; bring passport •  Central Secretariat After King George V, emperor of India, decreed in 1911 that Delhi should replace Calcutta as the capital of* India, the English architect Edwin Lutyens was commissioned to plan the new governmental centre. Rashtrapati Bhavan, the official residence of the president of India, is one of the largest and most grandiose of the Raj constructions, built by Lutyens and Herbert Baker between 1921 and 1929. Its majestic proportions can be appreciated on guided tours, the most interesting of which run around the main buildings, or (in season) the Mughal gardens at the west side (entrance via gate 35, accessed from Church Road); modelled on Mughal pleasure parks, the latter are a typically ordered square pattern of quadrants dissected by waterways and refreshed by fountains, including tennis courts, butterfly enclosures, vegetable and fruit patches, and a swimming pool.

National Museum 11 Janpath, just south of Rajpath • Tues–Sun 10am–6pm • Charge • Free guided tour Tues–Fri 10.30am & 2.30pm, Sat & Sun 11.30am, 2.30pm & 3pm • nationalmuseumindia.gov.in •  Udyog Bhawan The National Museum provides a good overview of Indian culture and history. At a trot you can see the museum in a couple of hours, but to get the best out of your visit you should set aside at least half a day. Guided tours are available, though they cover a rather random selection of exhibits.

The most important displays are on the ground floor, kicking off in room 4 with the Harappan civilization. The Gandhara sculptures in room 6 betray some very obvious Greco-Roman influence, while room 9 around the corner has some very fine bronzes, most especially those of the Chola period (from south India, between the ninth and the thirteenth centuries), and a fifteenth-century statue of Devi from Vijayanagar in south India. Among the late medieval sculptures in room 10 is a fearsome, vampire-like, late Chola dvarapala, also from south India, and a couple of performing musicians from Mysore. Room 12 is devoted to the Mughals, and in particular their miniature paintings – look out for two depicting the nativity of Jesus, a subject you might not expect. It's worth popping upstairs to the Central Asian antiquities collection, which includes a large number of paintings, documents, ceramics and textiles from Eastern Turkestan (now the Chinese province of Xinjiang) and the Silk Route, dating from between the third and twelfth centuries; another floor up are the textile exhibits, and an outstanding collection of musical instruments. On your way out, take a look at the massive twelve-tiered temple chariot from Tamil Nadu, an extremely impressive piece of woodwork in a glass shelter just by the southern entrance gate.

National Gallery of Modern Art Jaipur House, India Gate • Tues–Sun 11am–6pm • Charge • Free guided tours 11.30am, 1.30pm & 3.30pm • ngmaindia.gov.in • Khan Market Once the residence of the maharaja of Jaipur, the extensive National Gallery of Modern Art is a rich showcase of Indian contemporary art. The permanent displays, focusing on post-1930s work, exhibit many of India's most important modern pieces, including work by the “Bengali Renaissance” artists Abanendranath Tagore and Nandalal Bose, the great poet and artist Rabindranath Tagore, and Jamini Roy, whose work, reminiscent of Modigliani's, reflects the influence of Indian folk art. Also on show are the romantic paintings and etchings of Thomas Daniell and his nephew William, British artists of the Bombay or Company School, which combined Indian delicacy with Western realism. The ground-floor galleries are used for temporary exhibitions.

Sunder Nagar and around The affluent, low-key area around Sunder Nagar market makes quite a change from the rest of New Delhi; most of the cars you'll see parked here are large, foreign models, and some fellas wear designer shirts and loafers as they play cricket in the many small parks. The market itself has long been famed for handicrafts, replica “antiques” and jewellery, and there's a chic restaurant here (Basil & Thyme;), but for most visitors the prime attractions are just to the north, in the form of appealing Purana Qila fort – now illuminated rather pleasingly at night – and the excellent Crafts Museum.

Purana Qila Mathura Rd • Daily 7am–5pm • Charge • Pragati Maidan, or buses from New Delhi railway station (gate 2) The majestic fortress of Purana Qila, whose crumbling ramparts dominate busy Mathura Road, is thought to stand on the site of Indraprastha, the Pandava city of Mahabharata fame. Considered to be the sixth city of Delhi, it was begun by Humayun, the second Mughal emperor, as Din-Panah, and renamed Shergarh by Sher Shah Suri, who displaced him in 1540 and oversaw most of the construction.

Most of the fortress interior is taken up by pleasant lawns and gardens, but two important buildings survive. Of them, the Qila-i-Kuhna Masjid is one of Sher Shah's finest monuments. Constructed in 1541 in the Afghan style, it has five elegant arches, embellished with white and black marble to complement the red sandstone. The geometric patterns and carved Arabic calligraphy around the main doorway all represent a more sophisticated degree of decorative artwork than anything seen before in Delhi. Previous decorative carving on buildings had been in plaster, but here it's in stone, a more serious affair as it's obviously much harder to work.

The Purana Qila's other main building, the Sher Mandal, is a red-sandstone octagonal observatory and library built for Sher Shah. It was here in 1556 that the emperor Humayun died. He stumbled down its treacherously steep steps while hurrying to answer the muezzin's call to prayer, just a year after he had defeated Sher Shah's son Sikander Suri and regained power.

Crafts Museum Pragati Maidan, Bhairon Marg • Tues–Sun 10am–6pm • Charge • www.nationalcraftsmuseum.nic.in •  Pragati Maidan, or buses from New Delhi railway station (gate 2) The Crafts Museum is a dynamic exhibition of the rural arts and crafts of India, divided into three sections. The exhibition galleries show a range of textiles, carvings, ceramics, painting and metalwork from across India, while the village complex displays an assortment of traditional homes from different parts of the country. The craft demonstrations do feature a few artisans actually at work, but mostly double as shops selling crafts typical of different Indian regions. There's also a library and the excellent Café Lota, as well as a good shop.

Nizamuddin and around Most visit the Nizamuddin area in order to have a look at Humayun's Tomb, one of Delhi's foremost historical sights. However, there's a lot to be said for the self-contained mahalla (village) to the west of the tomb; with its meat-filled butchers, ancient mosques and tombs and relatively slow pace of life, it's so different from the surrounding city that to enter it is like passing through a time warp (or, given the attire of its populace, crossing into Pakistan). At its heart, surrounded by a tangle of narrow alleyways lined with shops and market stalls, lies one of Sufism's greatest shrines, the Hazrat Nizamuddin Dargah, which draws a constant stream of devotees from far and wide.

Humayun's Tomb Off Mathura Rd; entrance on western side of complex • Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge • 🚶Hazrat Nizamuddin, or prepaid auto from Connaught Place Close to the centre of Nizamuddin stands Humayun's Tomb, best photographed in late afternoon. Delhi's first Mughal mausoleum, it was constructed to house the remains of the second Mughal emperor, Humayun, and was built under the watchful eye of Haji Begum, his senior widow (and mother of Akbar), who camped here for the duration, and is now buried alongside her husband. The grounds were later used to inter several prominent Mughals, and served as a refuge for the last emperor, Bahadur Shah II, before his capture by the British in 1857.

The tomb's sombre, Persian-style elegance marks this as one of Delhi's finest historic sites. Constructed of red sandstone, inlaid with black and white marble, and set on a commanding podium looking towards the Yamuna River, it stands in the centre of the formal charbagh, or quartered garden. The octagonal structure is crowned with a double dome that soars to a height of 38m. Though it was the very first Mughal garden tomb – to be followed by Akbar's at Sikandra and, of course, the Taj Mahal at Agra, for which it can be seen as a prototype – Humayun's mausoleum has antecedents in Delhi in the form of Ghiyas-ud-din Tughluq's tomb at Tughluqabad, and that of Sikandar Lodi in Lodi Gardens. It adopted its octagonal shape from the Taj, as well as the high central arch that was to become such a typical feature of Mughal architecture – you'll also see this style at Delhi's Jama Masjid, for example.

Within the grounds southeast of the main mausoleum, another impressive square mausoleum, with a double dome and two graves bearing Koranic inscriptions, is that of Humayun's barber, a man considered to be important because he was trusted with holding a razor to the emperor's throat.

Nearby Humayun's Tomb but outside the compound (so you'll have to walk right round for a closer look) stands the Nila Gumbad ("blue dome"), an octagonal tomb with a dome of blue tiles. It was supposedly built by one of Akbar's nobles to honour a faithful servant, and may possibly predate Humayun's Tomb. Additionally, the blue-domed structure in the middle of the road junction in front of the entrance to Humayun's tomb is a seventeenth-century tomb called Sabz Burj – the tiles on its dome are not original, but the result of a recent restoration.

Hazrat Nizamuddin Dargah Boali Gate Rd; entrance at east side of compound, down some narrow alleys • Daily 24hr • Free • Qawwali music usually Thurs evenings 7pm; 🌐 nizamuddinaulia.org • 🌐 Sarai Kale Khan - Nizamuddin The marble dargah is the tomb of Sheikh Nizam-ud-din Aulia (1236–1325), fourth saint of the Chishtiya Sufi order founded by Khwaja Muin-ud-din Chishti of Ajmer, and was built the year the sheikh died, but has been through several renovations, and the present mausoleum dates from 1562. Lattice screens and arches in the inner sanctum surround the actual tomb (closed to women), which is surrounded by a marble rail and a canopy of mother-of-pearl. Sheikh Nizam-ud-din's disciple, the poet and chronicler Amir Khusrau – considered to be the first Urdu poet and the founder of khyal, the most common form of north Indian classical music – lies in a contrasting red-sandstone tomb in front of his master's mausoleum. In the evenings qawwali music is performed here, in the form of chanting accompanied by a harmonium, dholak (barrel drum) and tabla (hand-drum). Its hypnotic rhythm is designed to lull its audience into a state of mast (spiritual intoxication), which is believed to bring the devotee closer to God. Spectators are welcome but should dress respectfully.

NIZAMUDDIN WALKING TOURS THE HOPE PROJECT, A SELF-HELP NGO FOR LOCAL SLUM-DWELLERS (🌐 HOPEPROJECTINDIA.IN), RUNS EVENING WALKING TOURS (1HR 30MIN) OF NIZAMUDDIN. THEY'RE BEST JOINED ON DAYS

WHEN YOU CAN GO STRAIGHT ON TO THE QAWWALI SESSION AT THE DARGAH AFTERWARDS.

The oldest building in the area, the red-sandstone mosque of Jamat Khana Masjid, looms over the main dargah on its western side. It was commissioned in 1325 by Khizr Khan, the son of the Khalji sultan Ala-ud-din. It's a bit empty inside, bar some nice Koranic carving on the walls. Enclosed by marble lattice screens next to Amir Khusrau's mausoleum, the tomb of Princess Jahanara, Shah Jahan's favourite daughter, is topped by a hollow filled with grass in compliance with her wish to have nothing but grass covering her grave. Just east of the dargah compound, the elegant 64-pillared white marble Chausath Khamba was built as a mausoleum for the family of a Mughal politician who had been governor of Gujarat, and the building, with its low, wide form and elegant marble screens, bears the unmistakable evidence of Gujarati influence. The compound is usually locked, but the caretaker should be on hand somewhere nearby to open it up should you want to take a closer look.

Southern New Delhi A range of sights are dispersed throughout southern New Delhi, in the wide area between Khan Market and Chanakyapuri. Khan Market itself is a U-shaped affair, with restaurants, cafés and shops running along its fringes, and more of the same on the pedestrianized path running through its middle; it's like a far calmer, more refined version of CP. An easy walk away, you'll find Mughal tombs and a park full of ancient monuments, while pressing on west you can mop up a series of interesting museums: it's quite possible to see everything here in one full day.

Lodi Gardens Lodi Rd • Daily 6am–7:30pm • Free •  Khan Market or  Jor Bagh; auto ride from Connaught Place If Delhi's noise and bustle are getting to you, make for the leafy, pleasant Lodi Gardens. A favourite with picnicking families, trysting couples and curious squirrels, they form part of a belt of fifteenth- and sixteenth-century monuments that now stand incongruously amid the golf greens and large bungalows of Delhi's elite. The park is especially full in the early mornings and early evenings, when fitness enthusiasts come to jog (or walk briskly) through the manicured gardens against a backdrop of medieval monuments. The gardens also contain the National Bonsai Park, which has a fine selection of diminutive trees, and a series of rose and herbal gardens. The best time to visit is at sunset, when the light is soft and the tombs are all lit up.

Near the centre of the gardens, the imposing Bara Gumbad ("large dome") is a square, late fifteenth-century tomb capped by the eponymous dome, its monotonous exterior relieved by grey and black stones and its interior adorned with painted stuccowork. Shish Gumbad ("glazed dome"), a similar tomb 50m north, still bears a few traces of the blue tiles liberally used to form friezes below the cornice and above the entrance; inside, meanwhile, you'll see plasterwork inscribed with ornate Koranic inscriptions.

The octagonal tomb of Muhammad Shah (ruled 1434–45) of the Sayyid dynasty stands 300m southwest of Bara Gumbad, surrounded by verandas and pierced by arches and sloping buttresses. In the northeast of the park, and enclosed within high walls and a square garden, the tomb of Sikandar Lodi (ruled 1489–1517) repeats the octagonal theme, with a central chamber – anointed daily, and copiously, by the pigeons – encircled by a veranda. Almost adjacent is the Athpula ("eight piers"), a sixteenth-century ornamental bridge, right by the park's northeastern exit.

Safdarjang's Tomb Aurobindo Marg (opposite Lodi Rd) • Daily 7am–5pm • Charge • 🚶 Jor Bagh The two-storeyed tomb of Safdarjang was the very last of India's great Mughal garden tombs. Built between 1753 and 1774, it dates from the period after Nadir Shah's sacking of the city, by which time the empire was reduced to a fraction of its former size and most of the capital's grander buildings lay in ruins. Safdarjang was the Mughal nawab (governor) of Avadh who briefly became vizier before being overthrown for his Shi'ite beliefs. Emblematic of the decadence and degeneracy that characterized the twilight of the Mughal era, the mausoleum sports an elongated, tapered dome and absurdly ornate interior filled with swirling plasterwork. Facing east, it's at its most photogenic in the morning.

Gandhi Smriti Tees January Marg • Tues–Sun (partially closed on 2nd Sat of each month) 10am–5:30pm • Free • 🚶♂️Race Course • 🌐
gandhismriti.gov.in/

A pilgrimage place of sorts, Gandhi Smriti is the house where the Mahatma lived his last days. He had come to Delhi to quell the sectarian rioting that accompanied Partition, but Hindu sectarian extremists hated him for protecting Muslims, and on January 30, 1948, one of them shot him dead. Visitors can view an exhibition about his life, and follow in his last footsteps to the spot where he died.

Indira Gandhi Memorial Museum Safdarjang Rd • Tues–Sun 9.30am–4.45pm • Free • 🚶♂️Race Course Despite her actions during the 1975–77 Emergency, Nehru’s daughter, Indira Gandhi (no relation to the Mahatma), is still remembered by many with respect and affection. The Indira Gandhi Memorial Museum occupies the house where she was assassinated by her Sikh bodyguards in 1984; her bloodstained sari, chemically preserved, is on display, and there’s a section devoted to her son Rajiv, including the clothes he was wearing when Sri Lankan Tamil separatists killed him in 1991.

Nehru Memorial Museum Teen Murti Marg • Museum Tues–Sun 9am–5.00pm • Free • 🌐nehrumemorial.nic.in Planetarium 40min astronomy shows in English Tues–Sun 11.30am & 3pm • Charge • 🌐
nehruplanetarium.org

The Nehru Memorial Museum occupies the former official residence of India’s first prime minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, and is now preserved in his memory. One of Nehru’s passions was astronomy, and there’s a planetarium in the grounds of the house.

National Rail Museum Service Rd, Chanakyapuri • Tues–Sun 10am–5pm • Charge • 🌐nrmindia.com • 🚶♂️Durgabai Deshmukh South Campus, on the pink line, but a short cab ride from easier-to-access yellow line stations including Lok Kalyan Marg The cream of India’s royal coaches and oldest engines are on permanent display at the National Rail Museum in the embassy enclave of Chanakyapuri. Some 27 locomotives and seventeen carriages – including the teak carriage of the maharaja of Mysore, trimmed in gold and ivory, and the cabin used by the Prince of Wales in 1876 – are kept in the grounds. A steam-hauled miniature “Joy Train” does a circuit of the grounds whenever it has enough passengers.

The covered section of the museum houses models of famous engines and coaches, displays of old tickets, and even the skull of an elephant hit by a train near Bombay in 1894. The pride of the collection, however, is a model of India’s very first train, a steam engine that made its inaugural journey of 21 miles from Bombay to Thane in 1853.

South Delhi Most of the early settlements of Delhi, including its first city at Qila Rai Pithora (around the Qutb Minar), are to be found not in “Old Delhi” but in South Delhi, the wide area south of Lutyens’ carefully planned boulevards. The rapid expansion of suburban Delhi has swallowed up what was previously countryside, whole villages being embedded within it, and the area is now home to some of the city’s newest and most happening locales, most pertinently Hauz Khas Village, a lakeside area filled with shops, bars and restaurants.

Hauz Khas 4km south of Safdarjang’s Tomb •  Green Park Set amid parks and woodland, the wealthy suburban development of Hauz Khas is typical of South Delhi in being a thoroughly modern area dotted with remnants of antiquity. The modern part takes the form of Hauz Khas Village, a shopping area packed with chic boutiques and smart restaurants. There's also a very pleasant deer park and a rose garden, but of most interest to visitors, apart from the upmarket drinking and shopping possibilities, are the ruins of a fourteenth-century reservoir at the western end of the village.

Sultan Ala-ud-din Khalji had the reservoir (or “tank”) built in 1304 to supply water to his citadel at Siri, Delhi’s “second city”, and it became known as Hauz-i-Alai. Half a century later, it was expanded by Firoz Shah, who added a two-storey seminary and a mosque at its northern end. Among the anonymous tombs scattered throughout the area is that of Firoz Shah himself, directly overlooking the southern corner of the tank. Its high walls, lofty dome, and doorway spanned by a lintel with a stone railing outside are fine examples of Hindu Indian traditions effectively blended with Islamic architecture.

Siri

Just west of Panchsheel Forest • 9am–5pm • Free •  Panchsheel Park Siri itself was located a couple of kilometres east of Hauz Khas, and the remains of its ramparts can be seen from August Kranti Marg. Much of the site has been given over to parkland, which makes it pleasant enough to visit, but part of it was subsumed by a village built to house athletes competing in the 1982 Asian Games.

Greater Kailash and around One of New Delhi's more affluent areas, Greater Kailash – increasingly referred to as “GK” by Delhi folk – is a sprawling, occasionally calm expanse featuring several component neighbourhoods, including trendy Kailash Colony, and the popular shopping district of Lajpat Nagar. East of Greater Kailash proper is delightful Astha Kunj Park; one of Delhi's most beautiful sights, the Baha'í Temple, sits pretty at its eastern end.

The Baha'í Temple Off Lotus Temple Rd; entrance on eastern side of compound • Tues–Sun: April–Sept 9am–7pm; Oct–March 9am–5pm

(you may be asked to wait briefly outside during services) • Free •  bahaihouseofworship.in •  Okhla NSIC

Often compared visually to the Sydney Opera House, Delhi's Baha'í Temple is an iconic piece of modern architecture that dominates the surrounding parkland and suburban sprawl. You'll be urged into single file on the approach to the temple, inching closer to the twenty-seven spectacular giant white petals of marble, forming the shape of an unfolding lotus, springing from nine pools, to symbolize the nine unifying spiritual paths of the Baha'í faith. Groups are allowed into the building in bursts and told to keep silent, though you can stay inside for as long as you like; each petal alcove contains an extract from the Baha'í holy scriptures. Set amid well-maintained gardens, the temple is at its most impressive at sunset; some of the prettiest views are from adjacent Astha Kunj Park, though there's sadly no way through the fence separating the park from the temple.

Ashoka's Rock Edict Off Raja Dhirsain Marg •  Nehru Place Ashoka's Rock Edict is a ten-line epigraph inscribed in ancient Brahmi script on a smooth, sloping rock. The rock, now protected by a shelter in its own little park, was used as a slide by neighbourhood kids until 1966, when local residents noticed the ancient inscription, which was promulgated by the Mauryan emperor Ashoka the Great in the third century BC and shows there must have been an important settlement nearby. It states that the emperor's exertions in the cause of dharma (righteousness) had brought the people closer to the gods, and that through their efforts this attainment could be increased even further.

Saket and around Like Greater Kailash, Saket is a relatively well-to-do part of New Delhi, perhaps best exemplified by the large Select Citywalk Mall. Thanks to the presence of nearby sights – most pertinently the wonderful Qutb Minar monuments – it has long been on the tourist radar, though recent years have seen travellers making more use of the area itself, thanks to the opening up of several excellent places to stay.

Qutb Minar Complex Ladha Sarai, Mehrauli • Daily 7am–5pm
• Charge •  Qutab Minar Above the foundations of Lal Kot, the “first city of Delhi” founded in the eleventh century by the Tomar Rajputs, stand the first monuments of Muslim India, known as the Qutb Minar Complex, 13km south of Connaught Place. Pride of place goes to the fluted red-sandstone tower of the Qutb Minar itself, which has become one of Delhi’s most famous landmarks.

Covered with intricate carvings and deeply inscribed verses from the Koran, the Qutb Minar tapers upwards from ruins to a height of just over 72m. In times past it was considered one of the “Wonders of the East”, second only to the Taj Mahal, but historian John Keay was perhaps more representative of the modern eye when he claimed that the tower had “an unfortunate hint of the factory chimney and the brick kiln; a wisp of white smoke trailing from its summit would not seem out of place”.

Work on the Qutb Minar started in 1202; it was Qutb-ud-din Aibak’s victory tower, celebrating the advent of the Muslim dominance of Delhi (and much of the Subcontinent) that was to endure until 1857. For Qutb-ud-din, who died four years after gaining power, it marked the eastern extremity of the Islamic faith, casting the shadow of God over east and west. It was also a minaret, from which the muezzin called the faithful to prayer. Only the first storey has been ascribed to Qutb-ud-din’s own short reign; the other four were built under his successor Iltutmish, and the top was restored in 1369 under Firoz Shah, using marble to face the red sandstone.

The Quwwat-ul-Islam mosque Adjacent to the tower lie the ruins of India’s earliest extant mosque, Quwwat-ul-Islam (“the Might of Islam”), commissioned by Qutb-ud-din and built using the remains of 27 Hindu and Jain temples with the help of Hindu artisans; their influence can be seen in the detail of the masonry and the indigenous corbelled arches. Steps lead to an impressive courtyard flanked by cloisters and supported by pillars unmistakably taken from a Hindu temple and adapted to accord with strict Islamic law forbidding iconic worship – all the faces of the decorative figures carved into the columns have been removed. Especially fine ornamental arches, rising as high as 16m, remain of what was once the prayer hall. Beautifully carved sandstone screens, combining Koranic calligraphy with the Indian lotus, form a facade immediately to the west of the mosque, facing Mecca. The thirteenth-century Delhi sultan Iltutmish and his successors had the building extended, enlarging the prayer hall and the cloisters and introducing geometric designs, calligraphy, glazed tiles set in brick, and squinches (arches set diagonally to a square to support a dome).

In complete contrast to the mainly Islamic surroundings, an Iron Pillar (7.2m) stands in the precincts of Qutb-ud-din's original mosque, bearing fourth-century Sanskrit inscriptions of the Gupta period attributing it to the memory of King Chandragupta II (ruled 375–415 AD). Once topped with an image of the Hindu bird god, Garuda, the extraordinarily pure but rust-free pillar has puzzled metallurgists. Its rust resistance is apparently due to its phosphorous content – as much as one percent – which has acted as a chemical catalyst to create a protective layer of an unusual compound called misawite around the metal. The pillar was evidently transplanted here by the Tomars, but it's not known from where.

Alai Minar The Khalji sultan Ala-ud-din had the mosque extended to the north, and aimed to build a tower even taller than the Qutb Minar, but his Alai Minar never made it beyond the first storey, which still stands, and is regarded as a monument to the folly of vain ambition. Ala-ud-din also commissioned the Alai Darwaza, an elegant mausoleum-like gateway with stone lattice screens, to the south of the Qutb Minar.

Archaeological Park Anuvrat Marg, Mehrauli • Daily sunrise–sunset • Free • 🚶 Saket or Qutab Minar, and a short walk from Qutb Minar itself; turn right out of the exit then right at the fork, and look for a small footpath to your right about 300m on The area south of the Qutb Minar Complex, rich with remains from all sorts of historical periods, has been turned into a two hundred-acre Archaeological Park. Here, within a very pleasant stroll of each other, you'll find: the tomb of Ghiyas-ud-din Balban, one of the Slave Dynasty sultans (reigned 1265–87), believed to be the first building in India constructed with true arches; the beautiful 1528 mosque and tomb of the poet Jamali Kamali (you may need to find the caretaker to open up the tomb for you); and the octagonal Mughal tomb of Muhammad Quli Khan, one of Akbar's courtiers. This last was occupied in the early nineteenth century by Sir Thomas Metcalfe, the East India Company's resident at the Mughal court, who rather bizarrely converted it into a country house. The park contains more than eighty monuments, including tombs, mosques, gateways and baolis, dating from every century between the thirteenth and the twentieth.

Kiran Nadar Museum of Art 145 DLF South Court Mall • Tue–Sun 10.30am–6.30pm • Free • knma.in • Malviya Nagar The Kiran Nadar Museum of Art became India's first private contemporary art museum when it opened in 2010, and it's still the biggest. Its main collection highlights artists from the decades around independence (anger, striving and joy, always good food for art), but exhibitions usually feature works of a more contemporary nature, often accompanied by artist talks, film screenings and the like – well worth the trip out to Saket, and if you've enjoyed the place, they've another wing just outside the city limits in Noida.

Further afield A number of interesting sights – some architecturally or historically significant, others a little more quirky – lie dotted around the wide periphery of South Delhi, and with time on your hands it's certainly worth making the effort required to get to at least one or two of them. Over the river to the east is the striking, modern Akshardham Temple; south of the city centre you'll find Tughluqabad, the third city of ancient Delhi, and yet another massive temple; and out west, the Sulabh International Museum of Toilets has become a popular left-field sight.

Akshardham Temple Noida Link Rd, Akshardham • Campus Tues–Sun 10am–6.30pm last entry: Mandir 10am–8pm; Exhibitions 11am–6pm; Water Show after sunset • Free • No mirrors or electronic equipment, which should be deposited at the cloakroom outside, and no shorts or skirts above the knee • www.akshardham.com •  Akshardham On the east side of the Yamuna River, the opulent Akshardham Temple was erected in 2005 by the Gujarat-based Shri Swaminarayan sect. The largest place of worship in India, the temple is also a stunning piece of art, embellished with wonderful carvings made using the same tools and techniques as in ancient times. The main shrine is surrounded by a pink sandstone relief (you must walk round it clockwise) whose theme is elephants – wild, domesticated or in legend. Inside, the centrepiece and main object of devotion is a 3m-high gold statue of the sect's founder, Bhagwan Shri Swaminarayan, attended by four disciples, and behind it are paintings depicting scenes from his life, and also personal objects such as his sandals and even some of his hair and nail clippings. The four subsidiary shrines are devoted to conventional Hindu gods.

Tughluqabad Mehrauli–Badarpur Rd; the entrance is 1km east of the junction with Guru Ravidas Marg • Fort and tomb daily 7am–5pm • Charge; Free for Adilabad •  Tughlakabad Some 15km southeast of Connaught Place, a rocky escarpment holds the crumbling, 6.5km-long battlements of the third city of Delhi, Tughluqabad, built during the short reign of Ghiyas-ud-din Tughluq (1320–24). After the king's death the city was deserted, probably due to the lack of a clean water source nearby. The most interesting area is the high-walled citadel in the southwestern part of the site, though only a long underground passage, the ruins of several halls and a tower now remain.

The southernmost of Tughlaqabad's thirteen gates still looks down on a causeway, breached by the modern road, which rises above the flood plain to link the fortress with Ghiyas-ud-din Tughluq's tomb. The tomb is entered through a massive red-sandstone gateway leading into a courtyard surrounded by cloisters in the defensive walls. In the middle, surrounded by a well-kept lawn, stands the distinctive mausoleum, its sloping sandstone walls topped by a marble dome, and in its small way a precursor to the fine series of garden tombs built by the Mughals, which began here in Delhi with that of Humayun. Inside the mausoleum are the graves of Ghiyas-ud-din, his wife and their son Muhammad Shah II. Ghiyas-ud-din's chief minister, Jafar Khan, is buried in the eastern bastion, and interred in the cloister nearby is the sultan's favourite dog.

The later fortress of Adilabad, built by Muhammad Shah II in much the same style as his father's citadel, and now in ruins, stands on a hillock to the southeast.

TRAVEL AGENTS AND TOUR OPERATORS DON'T BOOK FLIGHTS OR EXCURSIONS THROUGH ANY AGENCY THAT YOU'RE DIRECTED TO BY A STREET TOUT, AND NOTE THAT MANY LOCAL AGENCIES TRY THEIR BEST TO PUT FORWARD THE APPEARANCE OF BONA FIDE OFFICIAL TOURIST INFORMATION OFFICES. FOR TICKETING, YOU MAY AS WELL BOOK YOUR FLIGHTS ONLINE THESE DAYS (ESPECIALLY DOMESTIC), BUT AGENCIES CAN COME IN HANDY FOR TRAIN AND BUS TICKETS.

Ashok Travels and Tours 3rd floor, Jeevan Vihar Building, 3 Sansad Marg Domestic ☎011-24307535; International ☎011 2436 4913, 🌐 itdc.co.in/travels-tours. The India Tourism Development Corporation's commercial arm, Ashok Travels, sells excursions and air tickets.

Delhi Tourism Coffee Home, Baba Kharak Singh Marg ☎011 2336 5358, 🌐 delhitourism.gov.in. The DTTDC offers day-trips to Agra (daily) and three-day "Golden Triangle" excursions to Agra, Bharatpur Bird Sanctuary (winter only) and Jaipur (every Tues & Fri; including accommodation).

Rajasthan Tourism Bikaner House, Pandara Rd ☎011 2338 3837 or ☎011 2338 6069, 🌐 rtdc.tourism.rajasthan.gov.in. Organizes package tours including wildlife tours and trips on the Palace on Wheels trains.

STIC G-55 Connaught Place ☎011 4620 6600. Represents STA Travel in India, sells tickets and issues or renews ISIC cards.

Chhatarpur Mandir Main Chhattarpur Rd • Daily 6am–10pm • Free •
🌐chhattarpurmandir.org • 📍Chhattarpur Some 7km south of CP as the crow flies, the sprawling seventy-acre Chhaatarpur Mandir complex, built in 1974, was the country's biggest until it was superseded by the Akshardham Temple. It isn't really so much a temple as a pleasant park-like compound, straddling the main road (there's a pedestrian underpass), with several temples within its boundaries. The site is overlooked by a red, 30m-high image of Hanuman, but there are lots of other sculptures too – some of them very good, and not all especially religious. The central temple is devoted to Ma Katyayani (Durga), and the whole development was financed by followers of a saintly guru known as Babaji, who died in 1998; although he forbade any personal reverence to him in his lifetime, his ashes are kept in a memorial temple here.

Sulabh International Museum of Toilets Palam Dabri Larg • Mon–Sat 10am–6pm, Sun & hols 10am–5pm • Free •
🌐sulabhtoiletmuseum.org • 📍Dashrathpuri A relatively new addition to the city's roster of sights, the Sulabh International Museum of Toilets has proven a bit of a hit, despite its slightly out-of-the-way location. The museum traces the history and evolution of human waste disposal, from the pit-toilets of the Harrapan civilisation to the modern day, via some highly decorative exhibits from the Victorian period.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE DELHI'S INTERNATIONAL DELHI AIRPORT IS INDIA'S MAIN POINT OF ARRIVAL FOR OVERSEAS VISITORS, AND THE CITY ALSO FUNCTIONS AS NORTH INDIA'S MAJOR TRANSPORT HUB, WITH FOUR LONG-DISTANCE RAILWAY STATIONS AND THREE INTERCITY BUS TERMINALS. SCORES OF TRAVEL AGENTS SELL BUS AND TRAIN TICKETS, WHILE MANY HOTELS – BUDGET OR OTHERWISE – WILL BOOK THEM FOR YOU TOO. THERE'S AN EVER-EXPANDING NETWORK OF INTERNAL FLIGHTS, BUT IT'S STILL BEST TO BOOK THESE (FOR PRICE REASONS) AND

TRAIN TICKETS (FOR REASONS OF CAPACITY) AS FAR AHEAD AS POSSIBLE; AT PEAK TIMES SUCH AS DIWALI, DEMAND IS VERY HIGH.

BY PLANE INDIRA GANDHI INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT (☎0124 337 6000, 🌐NEWDELHIAIRPORT.IN), 20KM SOUTHWEST OF THE CENTRE, IGI CURRENTLY HAS THREE SEPARATE TERMINALS (ANOTHER THREE ARE PLANNED). T1 AND T2 ARE DOMESTIC TERMINALS, WHILE T3 IS THE MAIN HUB FOR INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS, PLUS AIR INDIA AND VISTARA DOMESTIC SERVICES. THERE ARE ATMS IN ALL ARRIVALS HALLS, BUT FOR CURRENCY EXCHANGE YOU'LL GET BETTER RATES IN TOWN. T2 AND T3 ARE CLOSE TO EACH OTHER (10MIN ON FOOT), AND THERE ARE FREE SHUTTLE BUSES BETWEEN T1 AND T3, THOUGH ONLY FOR THOSE ABLE TO PROVE THAT THEY'RE TRANSFERRING. AS ALL OVER INDIA, YOU WILL NOT BE ALLOWED INTO THE TERMINAL WITHOUT A PRINTOUT, OR AN E-TICKET (PHONES AND TABLETS BOTH FINE) WITH YOUR NAME AND DESTINATION VISIBLE.

GETTING INTO TOWN BY METRO THE QUICKEST AND EASIEST OPTION IS THE AIRPORT EXPRESS LINK METRO LINE, WHICH TAKES TRAVELLERS BETWEEN THE AIRPORT (T2 & T3) AND NEW DELHI RAILWAY STATION (20MIN) OR SHIVAJI STADIUM (FOR CONNAUGHT PLACE); NOTE THAT THE METRO ENTRANCE IS JUST EAST OF THE RAILWAY STATION (THE OPPOSITE SIDE TO PAHARGANJ). T1 IS ON THE MAGENTA LINE, WHICH IS USEFUL FOR SOUTH DELHI; FOR THE CENTRE YOU CAN CHANGE TO THE YELLOW LINE AT HAUZ KHAS, BUT IN THEORY YOU'RE NOT ALLOWED BULKY LUGGAGE ON EITHER. T1 IS ALSO CONNECTED BY SHUTTLE BUS TO AEROCITY STATION ON THE AIRPORT EXPRESS LINE.

Taxis Taking a taxi is particularly advisable if you leave or arrive late at night. There are official prepaid taxi kiosks at the airport arrivals areas; kiosk prices vary, but the fare will be around ₹450 to the city centre, with a 25 percent surcharge between 11pm and 5am. Many hotels and guesthouses offer pick-up services, which you'll find to be the smoothest and most reliable method of getting to your hotel from the airport; prices vary considerably, but expect ₹350–600, and the same for a return leg. Uber and other apps usually cost less.

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM DELHI THE TRAINS BELOW ARE RECOMMENDED AS THE FASTEST AND/OR MOST CONVENIENT FOR SPECIFIC CITIES, AND RUN DAILY UNLESS MARKED. FOREIGNERS (INCLUDING NRIS) HOLDING A VALID PASSPORT CAN AVAIL OF THE FOREIGN TOURIST QUOTA FACILITY TO BOOK RAIL TICKETS ONLINE WIRCTC.CO.IN. INTERNATIONAL USERS CAN BOOK TICKETS UP TO 365 DAYS IN ADVANCE.

Destination	Name	No.	From	Departs	Arrives
Agra	Bhopal Shatabdi*	#12002	ND	6.00am	7.57am
	Taj Express	#12280	ND	6.45am	9.24am
	Gatimaan Express	#12050	HN	8.10am	9.50am
					(exc Fri)
Ahmedabad	Kerala Express	#12626	ND	8.10pm	10.20pm
	Ashram Express	#12916	OD	3.20pm	6.20am+
	Adi SJ Rajdhani*	#12958	ND	7.55pm	8.45am+
Ajmer	Shatabdi Express*	#12015	ND	6.10am	12.55pm
	Ashram Express	#12916	OD	3.20pm	10.30pm
Attari (for Pakistan)	Delhi-Attari Express*	#14001	OD	11.50pm	7.30am+
					(Sun & Wed)
Chandigarh	Kalka Shatabdi	#12011	ND	7.40am	10.57am

Chennai	Paschim Express	#12925	ND	11.05am	3.20pm
	Kalka Shatabdi	#12005	ND	5.15pm	8.30pm
	Tamil Nadu Express	#12622	ND	9.05pm	6.15am++
	GT Express	#12616	ND	6.40pm	6.20am++
Haridwar	Dehradun Shatabdi	#12017	ND	6.45am	11.33am
	Dehradun Janshatabd*	#12055	ND	3.20pm	7.33pm
Jaipur	Ajmer Shatabdi	#12015	ND	6.10am	10.45am
	Ashram Express	#12916	OD	3.20pm	8.15pm
Jhansi	Bhopal Shatabdi *	#12002	ND	6.00am	10.45am
Kolkata	Kolkata Rajdhani*	#12302	ND	4.50pm	9.55am+ (exc Fri)
	Sealdah Rajdhani*	#12314	ND	4.30pm	10.10am+
	Sealdah Durgam*	#12260	ND	7.45pm	1.15pm+ (Mon, Tues, Thurs, Fri)
Mumbai	Mumbai Rajdhani *	#12952	ND	4.55pm	8.35am
Udaipur	Mewar Express	#12963	HN	6.25pm	7.15am+
	Chetak Express	#12981	SR	7.40pm	7.50am+

Varanasi	Shiv Ganga Express	#12560	ND	8.05pm	6.10am+
	Swatantras Express	#12562	ND	9.15pm	8.05am+
	Manduadih Express	#12582	ND	10.50pm	10.00am+
Vasco da Gama (Goa)	Goa Express	#12780	HN	3.15pm	7.00am++
OD Old Delhi, ND New Delhi, HN Hazrat Nizamuddin, SR Sarai Rohilla
*a/c only, + next day, ++ two days later

Auto-rickshaws The auto-rickshaws waiting in line at the departure gate constitute the least reliable form of transport from the airport, especially at night, though they're cheaper than a taxi; fares are ₹200–250, while for the return a prepaid auto from CP costs ₹205.

BY TRAIN DELHI HAS FOUR MAJOR RAILWAY STATIONS. ALL ARE NOTORIOUS FOR THEFT: DON'T TAKE YOUR EYES OFF YOUR LUGGAGE FOR A MOMENT. OLD DELHI, NEW DELHI AND ANAND VIHAR STATIONS ARE SERVED BY STOPS ON THE METRO, BUT TRAVELLING ON IT WITH BULKY BAGGAGE IS PROHIBITED (YOU MAY GET AWAY WITH IT OUT OF PEAK HOURS). MANY SOUTHBOUND TRAINS DEPART FROM NEW DELHI, BUT MOST TRAINS TO RAJASTHAN LEAVE FROM EITHER OLD DELHI OR SARAI ROHILLA STATIONS. QUITE A FEW TRAINS TO SOUTH AND CENTRAL INDIA LEAVE FROM HAZRAT NIZAMUDDIN STATION, SO CHECK CAREFULLY WHEN YOU BUY YOUR TICKET. BOOKINGS FOR ALL TRAINS CAN BE MADE AT NEW DELHI STATION.

New Delhi station At the eastern end of Paharganj, New Delhi station has two exits: take the Paharganj exit for Connaught Place and most points south, and the Ajmeri Gate exit for Old Delhi. Both exits have prepaid auto-rickshaw booths (₹50 to CP, ₹80 to Chandni Chowk, plus ₹8 for large baggage). The station has an efficient booking office for foreign tourists (Mon–Sat 8am–8pm, Sun 8am–2pm), on the first floor of the departure building; bring your passport, and ignore touts' claims that it has moved or closed.

Old Delhi station Officially called Delhi Junction, and west of the Red Fort, this well connected to the city by taxis, auto-rickshaws and cycle rickshaws, while Chandni Chowk – on the metro's Yellow Line – is just to the south. For autos there's a booth selling fixed-price prepaid tickets. – Connaught Place is ₹80, plus ₹8 for baggage.

Hazrat Nizamuddin station Southeast of the centre (and a stop on the metro's Pink Line), serving most trains from Agra, and long-distance Rajdhani Express services from major cities nationwide. Connaught Place is a ₹105 ride (plus ₹8/piece of baggage) from the prepaid auto booth, though auto-walas often try to demand extra.

Sarai Rohilla station 4km west of Old Delhi station, serving some trains from Rajasthan. Prepaid autos to Connaught Place cost ₹80, and Shastri Nagar on the metro's Red Line is quite close.

Anand Vihar station One or two long-distance services arrive at this station in East Delhi, served by a metro station on the Blue Line, but it's expected to increase greatly in capacity in due course.

BY BUS BUSES ARE MOST USEFUL FOR TRAVELLING TO MOUNTAINOUS AREAS OF NEIGHBOURING STATES THAT AREN'T SERVED BY TRAINS, BUT MAY ALSO BE FASTER THAN TRAINS ON SHORTER ROUTES. ON LONGER ROUTES THERE'S USUALLY A CHOICE BETWEEN THE RAMSHACKLE STATE-RUN SERVICES AND MORE COMFORTABLE PRIVATE BUSES, WHICH SOME SEE AS POTENTIALLY MORE DANGEROUS AS THEY TRAVEL FASTER AND OFTEN OVERNIGHT.

STATE BUSES MAHARANA PRATAP ISBT ALSO KNOWN AS KASHMIR GATE, THIS WHOPPER OF BUS TERMINAL NORTH OF OLD DELHI RAILWAY STATION (M KASHMERE GATE, 20MIN AND ₹100 FROM CONNAUGHT PLACE BY PREPAID AUTO) HOSTS ALL KINDS OF SERVICES, INCLUDING MOST STATE-RUN INTERCITY BUSES TO AND FROM THE NORTHERN STATES, AND MANY FROM RAJASTHAN, AS WELL AS AN INCREASING NUMBER OF PRIVATE SERVICES. THE PLACE CAN BE VERY CONFUSING, AND YOU SHOULD ARRIVE WELL AHEAD OF YOUR SCHEDULED DEPARTURE TIME.

DELHI SCAMS DELHI CAN BE A HEADACHE FOR THE FIRST-TIME VISITOR BECAUSE OF SCAMS TO ENTRAP THE UNWARY. THE OLD ACCOMMODATION WHEEZE – WHEREBY TAXI DRIVERS OR TOUTS TRIED TO CONVINCE YOU THAT THE HOTEL YOU’VE CHOSEN IS FULL, CLOSED OR HAS JUST BURNED TO THE GROUND SO AS TO TAKE YOU TO ONE THAT PAYS THEM COMMISSION – HAS DIMINISHED OF LATE, THANKS TO THE FACT THAT MOST TRAVELLERS RESERVE THEIR ACCOMMODATION IN ADVANCE; MANY HOTELS WILL ARRANGE FOR A CAR AND DRIVER TO MEET YOU AT YOUR POINT OF ARRIVAL, IF YOU LIKE. IT’S STILL PRUDENT TO WRITE DOWN YOUR TAXI’S REGISTRATION NUMBER (MAKE SURE THE DRIVER SEES YOU DOING IT), AS THIS CAN HELP FOR SECURITY PURPOSES.

Outside New Delhi railway station, on Connaught Place and along Janpath, steer clear of phoney “tourist information offices” (which touts may try to divert you to), and never do business with any travel agency that tries to disguise itself as a tourist information office. For the record, India Tourism is at 88 Janpath, and the DTTDC is on Baba Kharak Singh Marg; all other “tourist offices” are private operators.

Finally, be aware that taxi, auto and rental-car drivers get a hefty commission for taking you to certain shops, which will be added to your bill should you buy anything. You can assume that auto-walas who accost you on the street do so with the intention of overcharging you, or of taking you to shops which pay them commission. Always hail a taxi or auto-rickshaw yourself, rather than taking one whose driver approaches you, and don’t let them take you to places where you haven’t asked to go.

Destinations Amritsar (2–3 hourly; 8hr); Chandigarh (1–2 hourly; 5hr); Dehradun (every 30min; 6hr); Haridwar (every 30min; 5–7hr); Jammu (9 daily; 12hr); Manali (hourly; 13–15hr); Rishikesh (every 30min; 5hr 30min–7hr); Shimla (1 – 2 hourly; 8–10hr).

Anand Vihar ISBT Services for some Uttarakhand hill stations such as leave from this terminal in East Delhi (🚇 Anand Vihar). Take the Blue Line from Connaught Place, or a prepaid auto (₹125 plus ₹8 for baggage from CP).

Destinations Almora (4 daily; 12hr); Nainital (3 daily; 9hr); Ramnagar (for Corbett National Park; 18 daily; 7–8hr).

Sarai Kale Khan ISBT For destinations in Rajasthan, this terminal has the best services, including some deluxe buses. It's adjacent to Hazrat Nizamuddin railway station, and also on the metro's Pink Line.

Destinations Ajmer (14 daily; 9hr); Jaipur (over 40 daily; 6hr); Jodhpur (4 daily; 12hr); Udaipur (3 daily; 20hr).

PRIVATE AND INTERNATIONAL BUSES PRIVATE BUSES PRIVATE SERVICES DEPART FROM VARIOUS AREAS, INCLUDING PAHARGANJ, MAJNU KA TILA, RK ASHRAM MARG METRO STATION AND THE RED FORT; TICKETING SITES SUCH AS 🌐 REDBUS.IN ARE USUALLY QUITE COMPREHENSIVE WITH THEIR SCHEDULE INFORMATION. POPULAR DESTINATIONS INCLUDE KULLU, MANALI AND DHARAMSALA, WHICH ARE NOT ACCESSIBLE BY TRAIN, AS WELL AS PUSHKAR AND THE UTTARAKHAND HILL STATIONS. YOU CAN BOOK TICKETS A DAY OR TWO IN ADVANCE THROUGH AGENCIES IN PAHARGANJ OR CONNAUGHT PLACE.

International buses Dr Ambedkar Terminal (near Delhi Gate) has services to Lahore in Pakistan (daily except Sun 6am; 12hr) and Kathmandu in Nepal (daily except Sun 10am; 28hr). You'll need to book at least a day ahead, and preferably more, and check in for the journey an hour early for Kathmandu and two hours (at 4am!) for Lahore (📞11-23370236, 🌐 dct.delhi.gov.in).

GETTING AROUND EVEN WITH THE ADDITION OF A VERY DECENT METRO SYSTEM, PUBLIC TRANSPORT IN DELHI IS STILL INADEQUATE FOR THE CITY'S POPULATION AND SIZE, AND INCREASED CAR OWNERSHIP IS ADDING TO THE GENERAL CHAOS. COWS HAVE BEEN BANNED FROM MUCH OF CENTRAL DELHI, BUT NOT THE MORE TRADITIONAL DISTRICTS.

By metro Delhi's metro system (delhimetrorail.com) is still expanding, with twelve colour-coded lines so far – the choice of colours is curious to say the least, and it's easy to get confused between the Violet, Pink and Magenta lines (stay confusing, Delhi!). Fares are ₹10–60 depending upon distance travelled, and trains run from around 5am–midnight; during peak hours, trains can be very full indeed. If you're going to be using the metro a lot, it's worth getting a Smart Card (available at any metro station for ₹150, including ₹100 of credit); this gets a 10% discount from all fares, and will save you a lot of queuing (₹200 minimum recharge). Tourist Cards are also available (₹200 for a day's unlimited travel), but are unlikely to be worth your while. The metro is generally wheelchair accessible, and women have reserved carriages (either the first or last) to themselves. Children under 90cm (3ft) tall travel free if accompanied by an adult. You'll have to go through security at all stations, and baggage weighing more than 15kg, or measuring more than 60cm x 45cm x 25cm, is prohibited, except on the Airport Express Line.

By bus With auto- and cycle rickshaws so cheap and plentiful, few tourists use Delhi's crowded buses, but they do prove useful from time to time, and some are even a/c. Fares are ₹5–20, and at the time of writing Smart Cards were not useable.

By auto-rickshaw Auto-rickshaws are often the most effective form of transport around Delhi. South of Connaught Place (where Janpath begins), as well as at stations and bus terminals, there are prepaid auto-rickshaw kiosks, charging certified official fares. Otherwise you'll need to negotiate a price before getting in; prices for foreigners vary according to your haggling skills, but as a sample fare, it should cost about ₹40–100 from Connaught Place to Old Delhi.

By cycle rickshaw Cycle rickshaws are not allowed in Connaught Place and parts of New Delhi, but are handy for short journeys to outlying areas and around Paharganj. They're also nippier than motorized traffic in Old Delhi. Rates should be roughly half that demanded by autos, but remember that your rickshaw-wala will be among Delhi's poorest citizens; see how hard they work, and unless they give you reason not to, be prepared to tip generously.

By taxi Delhi's taxis (white, or black and yellow) cost around 50% more than auto-rickshaws. Drivers belong to local taxi stands, where you can make bookings and fix prices; if you flag a taxi on the street you're letting yourself in for some haggling. A surcharge of around 25 percent operates between 11pm and 5am. The app-based taxi services Uber and Ola operate in Delhi, and can be as cheap as auto-rickshaws.

Chauffeur-driven cars For local sightseeing and journeys beyond the city confines, chauffeur-driven cars are very good value, especially for groups of three or four. Many budget hotels offer cars and drivers, as does Delhi Tourism, and the booths at the southern end of the Tibetan Market on Janpath. Delhi Tourism rates are ₹2240/2800 for an 8/10hr day within Delhi (more in an a/c vehicle), which includes 80/100km mileage. Alternatively, there's Kumar Tourist Taxi Service, K-14 Connaught Place (☎0931 221 5180).

Car rental If you do feel like giving it a go, try Avis, Khasra no. 802, K Block, Part II, Mahipalpur Extension ☎011 4155 5959 or ☎1860 500 0099; or Hertz, Plot 11a, Shivaji Marg, Moti Nagar ☎0124 301 4724.

Motorbike dealers The Karol Bagh area has many good bike shops selling new or secondhand Enfields. Reliable dealers include Inder Motors, 1744-A/55, Hari Singh Nalwa St, Abdul Aziz Rd (☎011 2875 0869, 📍 lallisingh.com; closed Mon); go two blocks east of Ajmal Khan Rd, turn right at the chowki, then take the third alley on the left.

By bicycle Cycling along the large avenues of New Delhi takes some getting used to for those not used to chaotic traffic. Bicycle rental is hard to come by, but you can buy bikes pretty cheaply at Jhandewalan market (by  Jhandewalan); alternatively join a bike tour.

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION THERE ARE REASONABLY HELPFUL DELHI TOURISM OFFICES AT THE INTERNATIONAL AND DOMESTIC AIRPORTS, RAILWAY STATIONS AND BUS TERMINALS, AND INDIA TOURISM AT 88 JANPATH, JUST SOUTH OF CONNAUGHT PLACE (MON–FRI 9AM–6PM, SAT 9AM–2PM; ☎011 2332 0005 OR ☎011 2332 0008), HAS INFORMATION ON HISTORICAL SITES, CITY TOURS, SHOPPING AND CULTURAL EVENTS, AS WELL AS FREE CITY MAPS. DTTDC HAVE A CENTRAL OFFICE ON BABA KHARAK SINGH MARG (DAILY 7AM–9PM; ☎011 2336 5358,  DELHITOURISM.GOV.IN), PLUS A KIOSK NEARBY. BEWARE OF ANY OTHER FIRMS THAT LOOK LIKE OR CLAIM TO BE TOURIST OFFICES.

Listings It can be surprisingly hard to find decent info regarding upcoming exhibitions and cultural events; the most reliable listings can be found on Delhi Events ( delhievents.com), and there are some things worth seeing on the Insider.in website ( insider.in).

ACCOMMODATION DELHI HAS A VAST RANGE OF ACCOMMODATION TO SUIT ALL TASTES AND BUDGETS, FROM DIRT-CHEAP LODGES TO EXTRAVAGANT INTERNATIONAL HOTELS THAT HAVE ALL THE LUXURIES YOU COULD WISH FOR OR IMAGINE. IT'S GENERALLY REALLY EASY TO BOOK ROOMS ONLINE, EVEN FOR THE CHEAPER PLACES. IT'S HIGHLY RECOMMENDED THAT EVEN INDEPENDENT BUDGET TRAVELLERS BOOK AT LEAST THEIR FIRST NIGHT'S ACCOMMODATION IN ADVANCE BEFORE ARRIVAL IN THE CITY, SINCE HAULING A BACKPACK FROM PLACE TO PLACE AROUND PAHARGANJ IS NOT ONLY STRESSFUL, IT WILL ALSO LEAD YOU TO BECOMING A TARGET FOR TOUTS, WHOSE ADVICE IS TO BE AVOIDED AT ALL COSTS.

HOTELS AND B&BS OLD DELHI AND AROUND, MAP AND THIS MAP

★Bloomrooms @ New Delhi 8591 Arakashan Rd, Ram Nagar, ☎ staybloom.com; ☎ New Delhi. A real cut above the other mid-range options in this area, with spotlessly clean rooms akin to those of a Japanese business hotel. The rooms, the lobby and the pleasing upper-level courtyard are all painted white fringed with yellow – which seems almost futuristic in scruffy Paharganj. ₹₹

CITY TOURS ALL FIVE-STAR HOTELS OFFER THEIR OWN PACKAGES, AND SOME HOTELS IN AND AROUND PAHARGANJ, SUCH AS NAMASKAR AND METROPOLIS, CAN ARRANGE CITY TOURS BY TAXI FOR AROUND ₹1000, WHICH IS GOOD VALUE WHEN SHARED BETWEEN THREE OR FOUR PEOPLE. THERE ARE ALSO WALKING TOURS OF PAHARGANJ AND NIZAMUDDIN.

Delhi by Cycle ☎0981 172 3720 ☎ delhibycycle.com. Five different three-and-a-half-hour bicycle tours (₹2000), mostly starting from Old Delhi's Delite Cinema, either at a bright-and-early 6.45am, or a more reasonable 1.15pm.

Delhi Tourism Coffee Home, Baba Kharak Singh Marg ☎011 2336 5358 ☎ delhitourism.gov.in. Organizes a/c bus tours of New Delhi (Tue–Sun, 9am & 2.15pm; ₹290 each or ₹475 together, plus admission fees), starting outside their office. Depending on demand, they have several packages for Heritage Walks and Delhi Local Sight Seeing Tours.

Delhi Transport Corporation Scindia House, Connaught Place ☎011 2375 2772 ☎ dtc.nic.in. Morning or afternoon tours (₹290 each, or ₹475 for both), starting from Scindia House at 9.15am & 2.15pm, picking up at India Tourism on Janpath and the DTTDC kiosk on Baba Kharak Singh Marg.

HoHo At the kiosk, 100m southwest of the Delhi Tourism office on Baba Kharak Singh Marg, ☎9958966566 🌐hohodelhi.com. A hop-on, hop-off tour (5 daily, departing 8.30–11.30pm) on a circular route; tickets cost ₹1000 (₹500) for one day, or ₹1200 (₹600) for two days, and can be bought on the bus or from the DTTDC kiosk.

INTACH 71 Lodi Estate ☎011 2463 2267 🌐intachdelhichapter.org. The Indian National Trust for Art and Cultural Heritage runs heritage walks every weekend (₹200), though for schedules, their Facebook page is of more use than their website.

WHERE TO STAY IN DELHI AS IF YOU DIDN'T KNOW ALREADY, DELHI IS A RATHER BIG PLACE, SO IT'S IMPORTANT TO GIVE SOME THOUGHT TO WHERE YOU'D LIKE TO STAY. PROXIMITY TO SIGHTS CAN BE A FACTOR, AND PRICES VARY BY AREA, BUT YOU MAY ALSO WANT TO BE NEAR TO A RAILWAY STATION – OR TO BE SOMEWHERE FAR FROM THE HUBBUB.

Few tourists stay in Old Delhi, which many find dirty, noisy and overcrowded, with hotels geared mostly to Indian visitors rather than foreigners. The hotels around Delhi station are particularly bad value, but there are a couple of good options. Just west of Old Delhi, and also New Delhi railway station, the Paharganj area is prime backpacker territory, with innumerable lodges offering inexpensive and mid-range accommodation. Some are good value; others offer very little for very little, and many suffer from slamming-door syndrome and people shouting till dawn, so choose carefully if you value peace and quiet. However, of all the areas in town to stay in, this is by far the most colourful.

New Delhi is focused on Connaught Place, but you pay a premium to stay here, so if you want value for money, stay elsewhere. South of “CP”, grander hotels on and around Janpath and along Sansad Marg cater mainly for business travellers and tour groups, but there are some very good ones among them, and some charming outliers too.

More and more travellers are staying in South Delhi, a wide area home to some very pleasing mid-range hotels and guesthouses, and an increasing number of hostels for backpackers – the area is a great choice for those who want to stay somewhere quiet, and it makes an ideal introduction for those who’ve never been to Delhi (or even India) before.

Broadway 4/15A Asaf Ali Rd, 📍hotelbroadway.chobs.in; 📍Delhi Gate. On the southern edge of Old Delhi, close to Delhi Gate, this mid-range hotel has a lot of old-fashioned charm and an excellent restaurant (Chor Bizarre;), plus a bar. Rooms are a little sombre, but they’re clean and well equipped, and some look out to the Jama Masjid. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹

City Star 8718 DB Gupta Rd, Ram Nagar; 📍hotel-citystar.com; 📍New Delhi. Good for a bit of comfort: rooms here are all well-appointed and well maintained, with central a/c, and the “executive” ones are pretty huge. They’ve an on-site restaurant, and even a little gym. Rates include breakfast. ₹₹₹

Hari Piorko 4775 Main Bazaar, by Tooti Chowk, 📍hotelharipiorkodelhi.com; 📍RK Ashram Marg. This bright hotel, slap-bang in the middle of the Paharganj action, with a balcony restaurant overlooking it all, generally gets a thumbs-up from budget travellers who don’t want to slum it too much. The rooms, all attached, are nice and fresh, and there’s lots of marble and mock stone cladding about the place. BB ₹₹

★Maidens 7 Sham Nath Marg, Civil Lines, 📍maidenshotel.com; 📍Civil Lines. Stylish, understated luxury in a lovely old colonial mansion dating back to Company days; quiet and relaxing with comfortable period rooms, big bathrooms and leafy gardens as well as a swimming pool and a good restaurant. ₹₹₹₹

Rehanam Palace 1025 SF Pai Walan, 📍hotelrehanampalace.com; 📍Chawri Bazar. Behind the Jama Masjid, in the heart of Old Delhi, this is a place that tries to please, and provides better value than more expensive places in the area. Nice, fresh rooms with a common veranda and a restaurant, but a rather slow elevator. ₹₹

NEW DELHI, MAP, MAP AND THIS MAP

Bright M-85, Connaught Place, 📍hotelbrightdelhi.in; 📍Rajiv Chowk or Barakhamba Road. A former budget hotel reborn, given a new lease of life as an impressive upper-range option. Rooms are on the small side (some things just can't be changed), but feature tasteful silver decor with marble and mosaic-tile bathrooms, and the price includes breakfast. ₹₹₹₹

The Claridges 12 Aurangzeb Rd, www.claridges.com; 📍Race Course. One of Delhi's oldest and finest establishments, oozing elegant 1930s style from its facade to its rooms – and that includes the bathrooms. Facilities include three restaurants, a coffee shop, vodka bar and swimming pool. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹₹

★Imperial Janpath, www.theimperialindia.com; 📍Janpath. Delhi's classiest hotel, in a beautiful 1933 Art Deco building set amid large, palm-shaded gardens. The rooms are stylish, as is the cool lobby done out in cream and gold, while corridors double up as galleries exhibiting fascinating eighteenth- and nineteenth-century prints of India. Staff maintain just the right degree of courteousness, and there are a number of excellent restaurants including the renowned Spice Route. Note that tax adds over a third to the listed price. ₹₹₹₹

The Lalit Off Barakhamba Rd, www.thelalit.com; 📍Barakhamba Rd. A stylish, modern hotel, with cool, elegant rooms and a spacious lobby decorated with some impressive works of art, not to mention a 24hr bar and a 24hr café. It's pretty affordable, as far as the city's top hotels go, and expect hefty discounts when business is slack. ₹₹₹₹

La Sagrta 14 Sunder Nagar 📞011 2435 8572, www.la-sagrta-new-delhi.h-rez.com; 📍Khan Market. A former pension, now upgraded to a boutique hotel with lovely, spacious rooms (including two penthouse rooms with their own terraces), in a quiet, upscale neighbourhood. Wheelchair access, and buffet breakfast included. ₹₹₹₹

★Master R-500 New Rajendra Nagar 📞011 2874 1089; 📍Karol Bagh. Located in a fairly quiet residential neighbourhood, this is an excellent choice for those who have just landed in India – or who just want a change from Delhi's busier quarters. It's a lovely little pension-style guesthouse – comfortable, secure, friendly and family-run – with four a/c double rooms of different sizes and a secluded roof terrace. Located on the edge of the green belt just 10min by auto-rickshaw from Connaught Place, and not far from the metro. Vegetarian meals available. ₹₹₹₹

Maurya Sardar Patel Marg, Chanakyapuri, www.itchotels.in/itcmaurya. An extremely plush hotel on the edge of Chanakyapuri, opposite the Ridge forest, with an imposing range of luxury rooms and two of the best restaurants in Delhi. It regularly hosts visiting heads of state (presidents Obama, Bush and Clinton have all stayed here, as have prime ministers of the UK, Canada, Australia and New Zealand). Promotional rates often available. ₹₹₹₹

★The Park 15 Sansad Marg ☎011 2374 3000, 🌐theparkhotels.com; 📍Rajiv Chowk. They don't come much snazzier than this place, just off Connaught Place, with its super-cool lobby, sleek, modern rooms, and bathrooms screened off by frosted glass walls. Service is snappy, the atmosphere relaxed, and all the facilities you'd expect are here, including a bar, good restaurant and pool. A cut above your run-of-the-mill five-star, and prices often dip to ₹8000. ₹₹₹₹

SOUTH DELHI, MAP AND THIS MAP

★Aashiana Living 82 Gurdwara Rd ☎09811033113; 📍Greater Kailash. Remarkably good value in this well-to-do area, this homely B&B provides most of the amenities you'd expect of a decent hotel room, providing that tricky mix of luxury and a personal touch at an extremely reasonable price. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹

Bloomrooms @ Link Rd 7 Link Rd, Jangpura, 🌐staybloom.com; 📍Jangpura. Like its sister establishment in Paharganj, this is a modern affair with rooms following a sleek, white-and-yellow design scheme. It's just about the best-value place to stay in the entire New Delhi area, and set on the fringe of a rather charming – and almost entirely tourist-free – neighbourhood; Nizamuddin and Humayun's Tomb are both within walking distance. ₹₹₹

Ibis Asset #9, Hospitality District, Delhi Aerocity, 🌐accorhotels.com; 📍Delhi Aerocity. Best value of the chain hotels – clean, reliable and handy for a night's sleep before your flight out. The rooms are well appointed and functional, with bed, desk and everything you need (the bathroom is a futuristic pod, not unlike a deluxe version of a portalo), and there's a swimming pool. Prices usually up to ₹2000 under the rack rates. ₹₹₹₹

★Tree of Life D-193, Saket ☎98102 77699; 📍Saket. Friendly little B&B in a quiet neighbourhood close to the Qutb Minar and Archaeological Park, with seven immaculate and spacious rooms, a lounge and a kitchen – ideal if you're looking for somewhere clean and tranquil away from the hustle and bustle of the city centre, and perfect for first-time arrivals to Delhi. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹

Vivanta Ambassador Sujan Singh Park, off Subramaniam Bharti Marg, vivantahotels.com; Khan Market. Low-key but well-run and classy, this is a friendly place with comfortably sized rooms and huge bathrooms, plus a couple of good restaurants and free use of the pool and health club at the nearby Taj Mahal hotel. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹₹

HOSTELS AND BUDGET GUESTHOUSES OLD DELHI AND AROUND, MAP, MAP AND THIS MAP

Backpacker Panda 22/1 Main Bazaar Rd, backpackerpanda.com; RK Ashram Marg. This hostel is worth a mention for its surprisingly cheap private rooms – the beds aren't the best, but the rooms are large, and ones with private bathrooms only cost ₹100 more. There's also a rooftop for drinking and socialising. Dorm ₹, doubles ₹

GoStops Hostel 4/23-B Asaf Ali Rd, gostops.com; Delhi Gate. Decent hostel with a communal vibe where young travellers hang out together – no real surprise, since the surrounding area is more than a little scruffy. There's a kitchen on site for cooking, a bar for drinking, and activities such as guided walks; as with most hostels in the city, private rooms are overpriced. Breakfast included. Dorm ₹, doubles ₹₹

Namaskar 917 Chandiwalan, off Main Bazaar T088006 58080; RK Ashram Marg. Popular family-run budget hotel off the Main Bazaar with a variety of attached rooms, some large with a/c (₹800), but not all the cheaper ones have outside windows. Staff are very attentive and helpful, and they also run car tours. Currently the best value of the Paharganj cheapies. ₹

New City Palace 726 Jama Masjid Motor Market 011 2327 9548; Chawri Bazar. Though it doesn't live up to its billing of "a home for palatial comfort", this budget hotel is well situated, directly behind the Jama Masjid; reserve ahead if you want a room with a view. Rooms are usually clean (check before you pay), showers are hot and the best rooms have a/c, though not all the cheaper ones have outside windows; staff can be tetchy, and don't dare order anything from the restaurant. ₹

★Wongdhen House 15-A New Aruna Nagar, Majnu ka Tilla, wongdhenhouse.com; Majnu ka Tilla. Friendly guesthouse with a choice of rooms, some overlooking the Yamuna River, just north of Paharganj in the Tibetan colony of Majnu Ka Tila. The cheapest ones have shared bathrooms, but there's solar-powered hot water and a good restaurant (Tibetan food, or breakfast items), plus a terrace with a great river view. ₹

Zostel 5 Arakashan Rd, www.zostel.com;  New Delhi. The best hostel option in Paharganj, with a range of decent dorms and affordable private rooms. The common areas are great for socialising, and there are games available if you need a way to break the ice. Breakfast included. Dorm ₹, double ₹₹

NEW DELHI, MAP

Joey's Hostel 1/49 Lalita Park, Laxmi Nagar, www.joeyshostel.com;  Laxmi Nagar. Located out across the river, this homely hostel is a good choice if you want to keep your distance from Delhi, but remain within a metro or cab ride of the centre; it's also within walking distance of Akshardham temple. Dorms range from four to fourteen beds, and there's a good atmosphere, particularly when they throw barbecue parties up on the roof. Rates include breakfast. Dorm from ₹, double ₹₹

SOUTH DELHI, MAP

Lets Bunk Poshtel T-40 Hauz Khas Village, www.poshtel.live;  Green Park. An upper-end hostel, located in trendy Hauz Khas – the concept couldn't really lose, but thankfully it has been very well executed, with admirable thought put into everything from the lighting to the furnishings. Dorm ₹, double ₹₹

Madpackers Hostel 3rd floor, S-39A Panchsheel Park, www.madpackers.com;  Hauz Khas. Clean, friendly hostel, reasonably close to the metro (400m), and on a ring road with fast access to the airport. Dorms range from six- to twelve-bed, including one reserved for women only, and each has a bathroom. There's also a kitchen, communal spaces and a great roof terrace. Breakfast included. Dorm ₹, double ₹₹

EATING MOST RESTAURANTS AROUND DELHI CLOSE AROUND 11PM, BUT THIS AND THE GENERAL VIBE VARIES BY NEIGHBOURHOOD. MANY PLACES DELIVER FOR A MINIMUM PRICE WITHIN 1–2 KM, AND IF YOU FEEL LIKE GETTING SOME LONG-DISTANCE ROOM SERVICE, YOU CAN ALSO

ORDER VIA APPS SUCH AS SWIGGY, ZOMATO AND UBER EATS. THERE ARE ALSO PLENTY OF COOL CAFÉS KNOCKING AROUND.

RESTAURANTS AND EATERIES OLD DELHI AND AROUND, MAP AND THIS MAP

Chor Bizarre Hotel Broadway, 4/15 Asaf Ali Rd, www.chorbizarre.com; Delhi Gate. A wide selection of excellent Indian cuisine including specialities from around the country, but above all from Punjab and Kashmir – it's considered to have the best Kashmiri food in town, with dishes such as gushtaba (slow-cooked mutton in yogurt and cardamom). The delightful, eccentric decor features a four-poster bed, sewing table and a servery made from a 1927 vintage Fiat. ₹₹

★Darbar Restaurant 9003 Multani Dhanda Chowk 99996 61413; RK Ashram Marg. A moderately-priced Paharganj veg restaurant, serving tasty thalis and north Indian veg dishes such as malai kofta as well as great golgappe. It's surprisingly attractive for the area, with tiled tables, mirrored walls, chandeliers, and smartly-dressed waiters. ₹₹

Everest Kitchen 1171/75 Main Bazaar 011 2356 1456; RK Ashram Marg. The best of the rooftop restaurants clustered around the Paharganj Main Bazaar junction, and also the most distinctive – rather than serving the usual Western breakfasts, Israeli snacks and lame curries, they focus on Nepali and Tibetan food. Prices are cheap. ₹

Karim's Gali Kababian, off Urdu Bazaar Rd, www.karimhotels.com; Jama Masjid. A perennial Delhi favourite, consisting of four eating halls (same kitchen) down a side street opposite the south gate of the Jama Masjid. The meat dishes are the best in the old city, at moderate prices, and including delicious fresh kebabs, hot breads and great Mughlai curries. ₹₹

Kholas Café 5024 Main Bazaar; RK Ashram Marg; 09212035448. Tiny, long-established backpacker restaurant – a relic of the overland trail. For breakfast there are hippie-traveller favourites such as banana pancakes. ₹

Moti Mahal 3704 Netaji Subhash Marg, 90135 25539; Jama Masjid. Renowned for its tandoori chicken, this basic-looking restaurant was one of the first Punjabi restaurants in town, and luminaries such as JFK, Indira Gandhi and Gordon Ramsey have all eaten here. Their speciality is murg

musallam (chicken with kidney, egg and mincemeat), and on occasion they also have live qawwali and ghazal music. ₹₹

★Paranthe Wali Gali Off Chandni Chowk; 📍Chandni Chowk. Not a restaurant, but an alleyway – super-crowded though it may be, don’t leave Delhi without eating here. Signed off Chandni Chowk, it’s famed for parathas filled with anything from paneer and gobi to mutter and mooli, all cooked to order and served with a small selection of curries. There are several basic, generations-old paratha-walas in the alley; Pandit Gaya Prasad at #34 has the best selection of fillings, including bitter gourd, cashew and even lemon. ₹₹

Rustom’s Parsi Bhonu 2243 Raj Guru Marg 📞80107 75577; 📍Delhi Gate. If you’re visiting Raj Ghat or the Gandhi Museum, this Parsi restaurant is just down the road, and belies its compound location with exceptionally pretty colonial-style decor. Even without the breakfasts and starters, the choice of mains is quite prodigious, so they’re best sampled in thali form – choose from veg, chicken, mutton, prawn and paneer, and maybe add a homemade raspberry soda. ₹₹

★Shimtur 644 Moala Baoli, off Main Bazaar; 📞09810386717; 📍RK Ashram Marg. Meaning “shelter” in Korean, this secluded rooftop spot was designed as a haven for the Paharganj area’s many Korean visitors. However, it has recently become extremely popular with young locals, on account of its affordable, acceptably authentic Korean food – try the ojingeo deop-bap (squid in a spicy sauce, on rice), or a tuna bibimbap. Most main dishes are of moderate cost, and you can drain a beer (or a soju, which at 19% ABV is like a diluted vodka) while you eat. ₹₹₹

★Sita Ram Diwan Chand 2243 Raj Guru Marg; 🌐 sitaramdiwanchand.co.in 📍RK Ashram Marg. If you’ve visited Paharganj without coming to this basic but extraordinarily popular place, you haven’t really been to Paharganj at all. Chole bhature (spicy chickpeas and spongy bhatura bread) is the name of the game here, and the only thing on the menu, bar lassis and kulfi – portions are doled out for a meagre cost, and eaten standing up, like a horse, from the tables out back. Cheap, tasty, extremely local, and highly recommended. ₹

Sonu South Indian Restaurant 8849/2 Multani Dhanda Chowk, off Desh Bandhu Gupta Rd, Ram Nagar 📞09811999652; 📍RK Ashram

Marg. Basic south Indian grub (masala dosa, idlis, vadas and the like) at low prices. Daily 8am–11pm. ₹₹

Tadka 4986 Ramdwara Rd (Nehru Bazaar) ☎011 3291 5216; 📍RK Ashram Marg. Safe dining in Paharganj: a clean, bright, modern little restaurant serving breakfast in the morning, then low-priced Indian veg dishes such as palak paneer or shahi (tomato) paneer. ₹₹

NEW DELHI, MAP AND THIS MAP

Basil & Thyme 28 Sundar Nagar 📍basilandthyme.in; 📍Khan Market. Somewhat out of the way in the Sundar Nagar complex, this bistro-style restaurant offers Mediterranean dishes like moussaka, pastas and slow-roast lamb with apple and mint sauce, and tasty desserts including tiramisu and lemon marscapone tart. ₹₹₹

Bukhara Maurya Hotel, Sardar Patel Marg, Chanakya-puri, 📍itchotels.in/bukhara. Delhi's top restaurant, specializing in succulently tender tandoori kebabs (₹2195 for a Peshwari lamb kebab, ₹2150 for tandoori pomfret), with a menu that's short but very sweet, and a kitchen separated from the eating area by a glass partition, so you can watch the chefs at work. Hillary and Bill Clinton are among the celebs who have flocked here. At lunchtime there's a set meal. ₹₹₹₹

Burger Singh H-45 Connaught Place; 📍burgersinghonline.com; 📍Rajiv Chowk. Worth mentioning for the name alone, this is a relic of the pre-Westernization days. Most of the burgers are pretty Indian in nature, with patties including mutton, chicken and veg options; save room for their spicy fries too. ₹₹

Café Lota 2 Bhairon Marg; 📍meltingpotfood.in; 📍Pragati Maidan. Tucked into the Craft Museum complex, this is an attractive little spot, and very popular with locals on account of it serving “fusion” food at reasonable prices – quite a rarity here. Some dishes hit the spot, others don't, but even if mustard fish tikka or jackfruit biryani don't float your boat, there'll be something of appeal on the menu, and they've good coffee and saffron lassis. ₹₹

Caffe Tonino H-9 Connaught Place; 📍toninoindia.com; 📍Rajiv Chowk. Relaxed upper-level Italian joint popular with expats and local well-heeled sorts, even though it isn't all that pricey. It's particularly appealing for breakfast, with options ranging from meaty Sicilian omelettes to quinoa-flour pancakes; at other times go for their panini, pizzas or pasta dishes. ₹₹

Dum Pukht Maurya Hotel, Sardar Patel Marg, Chanakyapuri 011 2611 2233. Bukhara isn't the only gourmet eatery in the Maurya Hotel: this place, which specializes in dum (slow-cooked casserole) Mughlai cuisine, is also among the city's best restaurants, offering super-elegant surroundings and absolutely punctilious service. The house speciality is raan-e-dum-pukht, a dum-cooked leg of lamb so tender it falls off the bone and melts on the tongue. ₹₹₹₹

Fire Park Hotel, 15 Sansad Marg 011 2374 3000; 0Rajiv Chowk. Scintillating if expensive modern restaurant whose contemporary Indian cuisine bears a strong hint of European influence. The menu is seasonal, with lighter dishes in summer, fierier ones in winter. Typical dishes include nasli nihari (slow-braised mutton, Delhi-style) or Narangi black cod (orange-scented tandoori rock-cod). Booking is advisable for the evening sitting, less so for lunchtime, which is cheaper too. ₹₹₹

Ghalib Kebab Corner Nizamuddin West, 09810786479; 0Jawaharlal Nehru Stadium. The Nizamuddin area has few reliable places to eat, but this little kebab shop is just the treat if you're in the area – and it's Nizamuddin through and through. Try some of their delicious mutton tikka rolls. ₹₹

★Kake Da Hotel 67 Municipal Market, Outer Ring, Connaught Place; 0kakedahotel.com; 0Rajiv Chowk. A perennially popular diner that has become a real Delhi institution for unpretentious but reliably good Punjabi curries. Butter chicken and palak mutton are safe options, but if you really want to see your social media account catch fire, try a brain curry, or even gurde kapure, made with testicles; since you ask, the former “meat” has a delicate, melt-in-the-mouth texture and very little flavour, while if you have the balls to try it (so to speak), the latter has a taste and consistency similar to liver. ₹₹

Khanchacha 50 Khan Market, 0khanchacha.com; 0Khan Market. Specialising in delectable rolls, this simple-looking eatery is almost the antithesis of trendy, modern-day Khan Market, but the market was actually named after the restaurant – proof of the esteem that locals hold it in. Take your pick from a lengthy list of wrap-like rolls, including chicken tikka, mutton or veg aloo. ₹₹

Nizam's Kathi Kebab Plaza Building, H-5 Connaught Place, ☎ nizams.com; 📍Rajiv Chowk. Kebab rolls (mutton egg roll ₹180) are the speciality, but the biryanis are also superb in this little diner, an old-school place whose walls are hung with photos of CP in bygone times. ₹₹

Parikrama Kasturba Gandhi Marg ☎011 2372 1616; 📍Rajiv Chowk or Janpath. Indian (mainly tandoori), Chinese and Western cuisine in a revolving 24th-floor restaurant affording superb views over Delhi. Specialities include interesting appetisers such as murg pasandey parikrama (chicken breast stuffed with minced chicken and nuts in a cashew-nut sauce), and there's a bar another floor up. Booking advisable at mealtimes. ₹₹₹

Q'BA E-42/43 Connaught Place ☎ qbacp.com; 📍Rajiv Chowk. Stylish upmarket bar-restaurant on two floors and two terraces, with views over CP. Its "world cuisine" largely boils down to Indian, Italian and Thai, but the choice is still impressive, with a Goan fish curry and paneer tikka tacos), plus cheap local beer on draught. ₹₹₹

Rodeo A-12 Connaught Place ☎011 2371 3781; 📍Rajiv Chowk. Attractive establishment serving very decent Mexican food including tacos, enchiladas, fajitas and quesadillas; portions can be a little small, but they're lovingly made, and there are even some curious options fusing Indian and Mexican tastes. They also dole out pitchers of beer, Michelada (beer with lime, salt and chilli) and tequila slammers. ₹₹

Sagar Ratna K-15 Connaught Place ☎ sagarratna.in; 📍Rajiv Chowk. Ubiquitous Delhi chain serving good, inexpensive veg meals; this CP branch will ensure that travellers don't have to go too far out of their way to get their fix. ₹₹

Saravana Bhavan 46 Janpath ☎011 2334 7755; 📍Janpath. Excellent low-priced south Indian snacks and meals, including thalis (noon–4pm & 7–10.30pm) and quick lunches (10am–3pm), as well as the usual dosas, idlis and uttapams. The mini tiffin has a taste of everything. ₹₹

★Sodabottleopenerwala 73B Khan Market ☎ sodabottleopenerwala.in; 📍Khan Market. Khan Market contains a branch of this lengthy-named Bombay legend, serving yummy Parsi breakfasts and mains in a stylish, tongue-in-cheek environment. Many of the staff are deaf or hard of hearing, so there's a flip-book on the table if you want to learn some sign language, and they've also a very healthy selection of alcoholic drinks. ₹₹

Spice Route Hotel Imperial, Janpath 📍theimperialindia.com; 📞Janpath. This beautifully decorated restaurant, rarefied and expensive, specializes in spicy Southeast Asian and Keralan cuisine. A sumptuous Thai tiger prawn curry will set you back, a nadan kozhi (Keralan chicken curry with star anise), or there's a tasting menu. If you want to eat really well in the CP vicinity, this is one of your best bets. ₹₹₹₹

Veda H-27 Connaught Place 📞011 4151 3535; 📍Rajiv Chowk. Swanky restaurant that is heavy on the ambience (all smoochy red and black decor with low lights), though the food isn't at all bad either, with main dishes such as makhani chicken and fish mooli. ₹₹₹

SOUTH DELHI, MAP

★Burma Burma Select CityWalk Mall, Saket; 📍Malviya Nagar, 📍burmaburma.in. By far the best choice in Saket, and very handy if you're visiting the nearby art museum, this Burmese restaurant is extremely attractive for a mall eatery. The menu simply bursts with tempting options; gorgeously presented mains such as Burmese curries or mohinga noodles; there are plenty of teas to try too. ₹₹

★Naivedyam 1 Hauz Khas Village 📞011 4175 4984; 📍Green Park. This beautiful, charmingly broody place is the most esteemed restaurant in the Hauz Khas area, creating such demand that there are now six other branches across Greater Delhi. They've a wide variety of South Indian food on offer at surprisingly low prices – try your hand at a dosa, uthappam five ways, or a very Insta-friendly thali. ₹₹

Punjabi by Nature T-305, 3rd floor, Ambience Mall, Nelson Mandela Marg, Vasant Vihar, 📍punjabibynature.in. It's quite a haul from the centre (₹125 by prepaid auto from CP), but this restaurant has made a big name for itself among Delhi foodies with its fabulous Punjabi and north Indian cuisine. The Amritsari fish tikka is succulent, but for something really special, try the raan-e-Punjab (leg of lamb). ₹₹₹

Swagath 14 Defence Colony Market 📞011 2433 0930; 📍Lajpat Nagar. There are Indian and Chinese meat dishes on the menu of this stylish, intimate space, but ignore those and go for the Mangalore-style seafood – the Swagath special (chilli and tamarind), gassi (coconut sauce) and malabari (green masala) dishes are all great (all with squid or prawns). ₹₹
₹

The Turkey Project C-27 Defence Colony 📍011 4034 9066; 🍷 Moolchand. Relaxed venue specialising in Western dishes, including some meat choices involving the humble turkey. It pops up in some of the interestingly-named burgers – try the Lamb of God, which contains a lamb patty and turkey bacon; or the Supreme Leader, which is much the same, with a fried egg thrown in. Pizzas and pasta dishes round out the picture, and it's a decent place for coffee or a cold drink. ₹₹

CAFÉS, SWEETSHOPS AND TEAROOMS OLD DELHI, MAP AND THIS MAP

Bikaner Sweets Corner 9002 Multani Dhanda Chowk, just off Desh Bandhu Gupta Rd 📍011 2353 1322; 🍷RK Ashram Marg. A wonderful sweets emporium, with all sorts of multi-coloured Bengali and Rajasthani confections (plain barfi is the least of them), plus tasty namkeens and savouries, including assorted veg samosas. ₹

Chaina Ram 6499 Fatehpuri Chowk, next to Fatehpuri Mosque 📍011 2395 0747; 🍷Chandni Chowk. Established in Karachi in 1901, and forced to relocate in 1947, this little shop is well known for its Sindhi-style sweets; the delicately aromatic Karachi halwa with almonds and pistachios is the best in town. ₹

Haldiram's 1454 Chandni Chowk 🍷haldiramsonline.com; 🍷Chandni Chowk. Good branch of the low-priced snack chain, serving sweets and samosas downstairs, and drinks and snacks upstairs. If you've never tried one, the raj kachori, a crunchy pastry shell enclosing a tangy chickpea curry with yogurt, is a must. ₹₹

WHERE TO EAT IN DELHI ALTHOUGH YOUR CHOICE OF WHICH PART OF DELHI TO EAT IN IS LIKELY TO BE DICTATED BY WHERE YOU'RE STAYING AND WHAT SIGHTS YOU CHOOSE TO SEE, CHEAP TRANSPORT PRICES ENABLE ACCESS TO THE WHOLE CITY'S CULINARY SCENE.

Old Delhi's crowded streets contain numerous simple food-halls serving surprisingly good local dishes for next to nothing. Upmarket eating is thin on the ground, but some of the mid-range places serve food every bit as good as the posh restaurants elsewhere, and the sweets and snacks here are the best in town. There are now some good options in Paharganj too, though avoid the dhabas opposite New Delhi station.

Those seeking to dine in New Delhi usually make a bee-line for Connaught Place (“CP”), which has a real mix of upmarket restaurants, cheap and cheerful local options, and Western-style fast-food places. There’s also a good emerging scene in Khan Market.

The enclaves and villages spread across the vast area of South Delhi offer countless eating options, and most of its upmarket shopping zones (Hauz Khas, Defence Colony, Ansal Plaza and the like) contain several good restaurants.

DELHI’S TOP TEN BEST FOR BIRYANIS AND NON-VEGETARIAN FOOD NIZAM’S KATHI KEBAB.

Best for testicle and brain curry Kake Da Hotel.

Best for splashing the cash Bukhara.

Best thalis Naivedyam.

Best interior Spice Route.

Best for Delhi street food Sita Ram Diwan Chand.

Best food experience Paranthé Wali Gali.

Best ice creams Naturals.

Best for mutton rolls Khanchacha.

Best for fancy coffee United Coffee House.

DELHI CHAIN RESTAURANTS AND CAFÉS BIKANERVALA 🌐 BIKANERVALA.COM. THIS FAMILY-FRIENDLY CHAIN, NOW SPREAD ALL OVER ITS HOME CITY OF DELHI, SERVES SNACKS, ICE CREAMS, SWEETS AND NAMKEEN, ALL AT REASONABLE PRICES.

Café Coffee Day 🌐 cafécoffeeday.com. India’s answer to Starbucks, with branches all over Delhi, and even in Prague, Vienna and Kuala Lumpur. The coffee’s decent. ₹ Haldiram’s 🌐 haldiramsonline.com. Though actually from Maharashtra, this chain has spread all over Delhi on account of its thick sweet lassis, pao bhajis, Indian sweeties (low-sugar and sugar-free options usually available) and light Indian meals. There's a good branch in CP. ₹

Keventer's 🌐keventers.com. This milkshake chain is no modern creation, having been kicking about in one form or another since the 1920s; branches all over town sell shakes, made with ice cream and doled out in fetching little glass bottles. ₹

Sagar Ratna 🌐sagarratna.in. Delicious, inexpensive South Indian vegetarian food, with vadas, idlis, ravas and dosas, plus great Northern or Southern thalis. There's a conveniently located branch on CP. ₹

Kitchen Café Hotel Shelton, 5043 Main Bazaar; 📍RK Ashram Marg. This rooftop spot is more of a restaurant than a café – despite the name – but is best utilised as a café. The views are the best in Paharganj, the espresso here is the best in the area, and they do good banana pancakes. There's also a pool table, and unlike almost every other rooftop place in the area, a functional lift. ₹₹

NEW DELHI, MAP

Bengali Sweet House Bengali Market 📞011 2332 2222; 📍Mandi House. The Bengali Market isn't really a market, more a semi-circle of sweetie shops. This is the best, and almost like an Italian café in appearance thanks to its decor; their Bengali treats are delicious, and try the weird masala cola. ₹

★Big Chill Cakery 1B Khan Market 📞011 4175 7577; 📍Khan Market. Originally a single restaurant, Big Chill is quite apparently trying to colonize the whole of Khan Market. Their cakery wing is the most appealing of several options; styled like an English tearoom (though one, disappointingly, using paper plates and cups), they serve truly sinful-looking cupcakes, cheesecakes, brownies and pies. The cramped seating space will at least remind you to hold back a little on the calorie intake. ₹₹

Haldiram's L-6 Connaught Place 📞011 4768 5300, 🌐haldiramsonline.com; 📍Rajiv Chowk. Well-positioned branch of the sweet and snack house chain. ₹₹

Indian Coffee House 2nd floor, Mohan Singh Place Shopping Complex, Baba Kharak Singh Marg 📞011 2334 2994; 📍Rajiv Chowk. When the Indian Coffee Board closed its coffee houses, a group of ex-workers formed a co-op to take them over; this branch, opened in 1957, was the first. A real relic of Nehruvian India, though sadly nowhere near as cool as it looks from outside, it serves coffee, snacks and basic meals to an eclectic cross-section of downtown New Delhi's daytime population, including a fair few hipsters. ₹

★Naturals L-12 Connaught Place ☎011 6537 0007 🌐 naturalicecreams.in; 📍Rajiv Chowk. If you're in need of a sugar fix on your way around CP, head for this ice-cream parlour; delectable options include sitaphal (sugar apple), watermelon and lychee, and sinfully divine mango ice-cream milkshakes. ₹

Triveni Garden Café 205 Tansen Marg ☎99715 66904; 📍Mandi House. Very popular with young, artsy sorts, this café's outdoor section looks over gardens and galleries. There's French press coffee and sweet lassis, but if you've never had one, go for a jaljeera, which is something like a curry-flavoured cooler. Good desserts too, including beetroot helwa. ₹

United Coffee House E-15 Connaught Place ☎011 2341 6075, 🌐 unitedcoffeehouse.in; 📍Rajiv Chowk. By far the fanciest place for coffee in CP, with walls painted baby blue, salmon and gold; starched-collar waiters; and a whacking great chandelier dangling overhead. They've a global range of beans, including some from South Indian estates, and a clientele that's mainly moneyed locals. ₹₹

SOUTH DELHI, MAP

Blossom Kochhar 1 Hauz Khas Village ☎011 4081 7655; 📍Green Park. Set above a cosmetics shop, and boasting an air of relaxed refinement, this is a delightful place for tea and cake, or something more modern like a Nutella latte. ₹₹

Kunzum Travel Café T-49 Hauz Khas Village ☎08800200268; 📍Green Park. Basic Hauz Khas café run by an Indian travel writer; full of photographs and books, and host to regular events, it's a good place to hobnob, though the drinks themselves (payment by donation) aren't always the best. ₹₹

DRINKING WITH AN EVER-INCREASING NUMBER OF PUBS AND CLUBS, DELHI'S NIGHTLIFE SCENE IS IN FULL SWING. LOUNGEY AND INDUSTRIAL-CHIC BARS WITH LAIDBACK MUSIC HAVE BECOME VERY POPULAR ACROSS THE CITY,

AND QUITE A FEW HAVE LONG HAPPY HOURS. UNFORTUNATELY, LICENSING LAWS MEAN THAT DECENT MICROBREWERIES ARE STILL THIN ON THE GROUND HERE, EXCEPT ACROSS STATE LINES IN SATELLITE CITIES SUCH AS GURGAON, WHICH IS A SHORT METRO RIDE FROM DELHI. COME THE WEEKEND, THE CITY'S CLUBS REALLY TAKE OFF, BUT NOTE THAT SOME PLACES DON'T ALLOW "STAG ENTRY" (MEN UNACCOMPANIED BY WOMEN). IMPORTANTLY, NOTE THAT THE MINIMUM DRINKING AGE IN DELHI IS 25. LASTLY, THERE ARE PLENTY OF SEEDY, ALMOST EXCLUSIVELY MALE BARS IN DELHI; WHILE FEMALE DRINKERS CAN ATTRACT UNWANTED ATTENTION ANYWHERE, THE ESTABLISHMENTS LISTED HERE CAN AT LEAST BE DESCRIBED AS RELATIVELY FEMALE-FRIENDLY.

BARS OLD DELHI, MAP

My Bar 5136 Main Bazaar, Paharganj; mybarindia.com  RK Ashram Marg. A large, lively and popular bar with loud dance music – and often people dancing, especially when the Bhangra songs come on. It's quite a fun hangout, and also serves food, although it's the cheap beer that most people come for.

NEW DELHI, MAP

Bunta Bar 76 Janpath Rd  981 074 7934;  Rajiv Chowk or Janpath. Industrial-chic space with a fun quirk – many of their cocktails are served in distinctive soda bottles, with options such as thyme, cardamom and rose adding Indian flavours to the rum, vodka and gin bases. Ladies' night on Thursdays, live bands on Fridays, Bollywood nights on Saturdays, and DJs from 8.30pm on other nights. Also a decent place for a hookah session.

Excuse Me Boss F-14 Connaught Place  874 588 1999;  Rajiv Chowk. There are a clutch of bars on F-Block attempting to undercut each other's prices – good news for budget drinkers. At the time of writing this wasn't quite the cheapest of the cheap, but close enough, and certainly the best looking of the lot.

★ Junkyard Café N-91 Connaught Place  959 994 7643;  Rajiv Chowk. A large, fun venue in which cheap drinks are doled out by waiters wearing what look like orange Super Mario overalls, amid a panoply of

tyres, crates and oil drums. A small Kingfisher will set you back a few dollars, or go for their Edison-bulb cocktails, including elderflower, rum, rosemary and lime (wasn't that a Simon & Garfunkel song?), served with dry ice billowing out the bottom. Live music most nights.

Ministry of Beer M-44 Connaught Place 📞88000 12060; 📍Rajiv Chowk. This place looks promising, with its beer-making paraphernalia by the entrance, and line of taps on the counter. In reality, they usually only have bottles available (domestic or cheaper international ones), but it's still a highly popular place, with an open-air courtyard out back, and an insanely noisy hookah lounge up top.

United Coffee House E-15 Connaught Place 📞011 2341 6075, 🌐unitedcoffeehouse.in; 📍Rajiv Chowk. Though primarily a swanky café, this is also an atmospheric place for an evening drink, with a range of well-made cocktails and highballs, plus a decent roster of wines and spirits.

Unplugged L-23/7 Connaught Place 📞0999 939 6662; 📍Rajiv Chowk. With its gently-lit courtyard, this is one of the more visually pleasing places to drink in CP, and there's live music four nights a week (from 9.30pm onwards, Wed, Fri, Sat & Sun). Negative points include a rather boring drinks menu, from which your first few choices will usually be unavailable, and a tendency to turn away single males.

SOUTH DELHI, MAP

★Hauz Khas Social 12 Hauz Khas Village; 🌐socialoffline.in; 📍Green Park. The undisputed uber-cool hub of this busy drinking area. There are several spaces to plonk yourself around this large, industrial-chic building, but for a quieter drink and a view of the lake, head on up to the terrace; much of the drinks list will be familiar, but try your hand at something more left-field, like the loaded goti sodas, the banarsi patiala (sugarcane juice and a triple shot of rum), or the super-tall "Longest Island Iced Tea".

Monkey Bar C-6 Vasant Kunj 📞011 4109 5155; 📍Vasant Vihar. Claims to be a "gastrobar", but don't worry: set in a striking glass pyramid, this South Delhi venue is pretty cool, though to make the most of the unusual architecture it's actually best to get there before dark. DJs spin jolly retro sounds after sunset, and you can shoot a game of pool. Also does decent food.

CLUBS NEW DELHI, MAP

Kitty Su Lalit Hotel, Fire Brigade Lane; 🌐kittysu.com; 📍Barakhamba Rd. The only club in India to have made it onto DJ Mag's global Top 100, an opulent place split into four separate areas, each with their own vibe. Prices vary according to the night, but there's typically a ₹1000–2000 entry fee (ladies often free), and sometimes no “stag entry” allowed.

Privee Eros Hotel, Ashoka Rd 📞0859 520 2020; 📍Janpath. Decent club that stands out for one big reason – it is open past 1am! This is where to go if you feel like dancing into the wee hours with all the “bad” boys and girls, plus the light and sound systems are pretty state-of-the-art. Usually ₹2000 entry fee per couple, sometimes no “stag entry” allowed.

ENTERTAINMENT DANCE AND DRAMA KAMANI AUDITORIUM
1 COPERNICUS MARG, 🌐KAMANIAUDITORIUM.ORG; 📍MANDI HOUSE. WORLD-CLASS AUDITORIUM HOSTING MUSIC, DANCE AND THEATRICAL PERFORMANCES (ALTHOUGH THE THEATRE IS USUALLY IN HINDI). THEIR PROGRAMME FOR THE MONTH IS POSTED ON THEIR WEBSITE.

Sangeet Natak Akademi Rabindra Bhavan, 35 Firoz Shah Rd; 🌐sangeetnatak.gov.in; 📍Mandi House. Delhi's premier performing arts institution, staging performances of classical dance and music from across India.

Triveni Kala Sangam 205 Tansen Marg; 🌐trivenikalasangam.org; 📍Mandi House. A cultural complex incorporating two theatres and four art galleries, which puts on assorted dance shows and art exhibitions as well as running art, dance and music classes. There's also the excellent Triveni Terrace Café on site.

CINEMAS BOLLYWOOD MOVIES WITHOUT SUBTITLES ARE SHOWN AT SOME CINEMAS, AND SOME ALSO SHOW THE LATEST HOLLYWOOD MOVIES IN ENGLISH (FOR A LIST OF WHAT FILMS ARE CURRENTLY ON WHERE AND IN WHICH LANGUAGE, SEE 🌐FILMIBEAT.COM).

Odeon D-Block, Connaught Place 📞011 3954 1564; 📍Rajiv Chowk. The best cinema in CP, with a good selection of major Bollywood and Hollywood flicks, and a great bar upstairs for afterwards.

Shiela DB Gupta Rd 📞011 4350 4751; 📍New Delhi. There's usually only one film on at a time here (six showings through the day, and always Bollywood), but the exterior is highly attractive, and it's probably the best place in Delhi for a "local" movie-going experience.

SHOPPING ALTHOUGH THE TRADITIONAL PLACES TO SHOP IN DELHI ARE AROUND CONNAUGHT PLACE (PARTICULARLY THE UNDERGROUND PALIKA BAZAAR) AND CHANDNI CHOWK, A NUMBER OF SUBURBS HAVE EMERGED AS FASHIONABLE SHOPPING DISTRICTS. TO CHECK PRICES AND QUALITY FOR CRAFTS, YOU CAN'T DO BETTER THAN THE STATE EMPORIUMS ON BABA KHARAK SINGH MARG, BUT BEWARE OF TOUTS OUTSIDE TRYING TO SWEET-TALK YOU INTO VISITING SHOPS WHICH PAY THEM COMMISSION. UNLIKE THE MARKETS OF OLD DELHI, MOST SHOPS IN NEW DELHI TAKE CREDIT CARDS; IN ALL BAZAARS AND STREET MARKETS, THE RULE IS TO HAGGLE.

ART, ANTIQUES, CRAFTS AND JEWELLERY FOR CRAFTS AND JEWELLERY, THE GOVERNMENT EMPORIUMS ON BABA KHARAK SINGH MARG SHOULD BE YOUR FIRST STOP, ESPECIALLY IF YOU WANT TO CHECK PRICES. PAHARGANJ AND JANPATH'S TIBETAN MARKET ARE GOOD FOR TRINKETS SUCH AS CHEAP JEWELLERY, DECORATED BOXES AND SANDALWOOD CARVINGS. FOR UPMARKET ART, ANTIQUES (REMEMBER THAT TO EXPORT ANYTHING MORE THAN A HUNDRED YEARS OLD YOU WILL NEED A PERMIT) AND JEWELLERY, THERE'S SUNDER NAGAR MARKET.

Central Cottage Industries Emporium Jawahar Vyapar Bhawan, Janpath, opposite Imperial Hotel 🌐cottageemporium.in; 📍Janpath; map. Popular and convenient government-run complex, with numerous floors of handicrafts, carpets, leather and reproduction miniatures at fixed (if fractionally high) rates. Jewellery ranges from tribal silver anklets to costume pieces and precious stones.

Crafts Museum Shop Bhairon Marg 📞011 2337 1269; 📍Pragati Maidan; map. The shop adjoining the Crafts Museum has an excellent selection of high-quality handicrafts, from terracotta horse figurines to dhurries, rugs and grass mats, combs made of ebony or neem wood, and wooden boxes inlaid with brass or copper. Not the cheapest prices you'll ever find (they're marked and fixed), but not inflated either, and certainly reliable in quality.

Good Earth 9 Khan Market 📍goodearth.in; 📍Khan Market; map. Fancy homeware at fancy prices, with tea and coffee mugs, incense holders and diffusers, lamps and the like, and almost all original designs – it's no exaggeration to state that some Delhi folk have decorated their entire home using this shop.

Indian Art Collection 1 Hauz Khas Village 📞011 2685 1624; 📍Green Park; map. Old Bollywood film posters are the speciality here, mostly in the ₹1000–5000 range. You can buy them framed, but it's generally easier to have them rolled up and slipped into a protective tube. They also sell a variety of superior bric-a-brac including old metal trays, maps and advertising placards – well worth a browse.

Neemrana Shop A-26 Khan Market 📞011 4358 7183, 📍neemranahotels.com; 📍Khan Market; map. This shop has a chic clientele and offers a range of clothes and a small collection of antiques and objets d'art.

State Emporiums Baba Kharak Singh Marg; 📍Rajiv Chowk; map. The two wings of this building sell goodies from all over India, all lined up in a row – dodge the pests outside and take your pick from Kashmiri rugs, Odishan stone carvings, Rajasthani paintings and the like, all at fixed prices (and, since they're government-run establishments, there's more in the way of apathy than hard sell).

Tribes India 9 Mahadev Rd 📍tribesindia.com; 📍Patel Chowk; map. Crafts by indigenous “tribal” peoples from across India, often very different from other traditional Indian products. It's a fair-trade outlet, guaranteeing a decent rate to the artisans who make the items on sale.

BOOKS DELHI CAN BE A VERY GOOD PLACE TO STOCK UP ON BOOKS, BOTH NEW AND USED. ON SUNDAYS THERE'S ALSO DARYAGANJ MARKET BY DELHI GATE IN OLD DELHI – AN EXCELLENT PLACE TO SEARCH FOR BOOK BARGAINS.

Bahrison's 20 Khan Market; 📞booksatbahri.com; 📍Khan Market; map. The best bookstore in the Khan Market area, with its walls and shelves groaning under the weight of innumerable books, many pertaining to Delhi.

Jacksons Books 5106 Main Bazaar, Paharganj 📞989 908 9274; 📍RK Ashram Marg; map. The best address in Paharganj for used books – expect to find the sort of novels that backpackers like to read, plus travel guidebooks to India and neighbouring countries.

Oxford Bookstore N-81 Connaught Place; 📞oxfordbookstore.com; 📍Rajiv Chowk; map. Large, attractive all-round bookshop, selling a wide selection of fiction and non-fiction from India and elsewhere. There's even a decent café on site.

CLOTHING AND FABRICS DELHI'S FABRIC AND CLOTHES SHOPS SELL ANYTHING FROM HIGH-QUALITY SILKS, HOMESPUN COTTONS, SARIS, KASHMIRI SHAWLS AND TRADITIONAL KURTA PYJAMAS TO MULTICOLOURED TIE-DYED T-SHIRTS AND OTHER HIPPIE GEAR. FOR T-SHIRTS AND TIE-DYED CLOTHING, TRY PAHARGANJ OR THE TIBETAN MARKET OFF JANPATH; STALLS BEHIND THE LATTER SELL LAVISHLY EMBROIDERED AND MIRRORED SPREADS FROM RAJASTHAN AND GUJARAT.

Anokhi 32 Khan Market; 📞anokhi.com; 📍Khan Market; map. Hailing from Jaipur, this shop sells soft cotton and raw silk clothes and soft furnishings, and is particularly renowned for hand-block printed cottons combining traditional and contemporary designs. There are branches all over the city, but the best located is the one at Khan Market.

Coral Haze D-24/385, 100 Ft Road, Chhattarpur Hills 📞coralhaze.com; 📍Chhattarpur; map. Embodying the air of its newly hipster-fied neighbourhood, this beautiful little shop sells fetching shoes with Indian motifs and patterns, all own-brand, at fair prices.

DLF Emporio 4 Nelson Mandela Marg, Vasant Kunj 📞dlfemporio.com; 📍Vasant Vihar; map. A designer-label mall whose ground floors feature all the international big-hitters; more interesting, however, is the third level, where the brightest lights in Delhi's burgeoning fashion scene – including AMPM, Ranna Gill and Namrata Joshipura – are all lined up for your perusal.

Fabindia A-1 Connaught Place; 🌐fabindia.com; 📍Rajiv Chowk; map. The best-located Delhi branch of this now international chain is located in CP, selling everything from furnishings and interiors to chic cotton clothing for men, women and children and wearable block-printed cottons, all sourced from villages across India. They also sell organic spices, jams and pickles. There's another handy branch in Khan Market.

Khadi India 24 Regal Building, Connaught Place; 🌐kvic.org.in; 📍Rajiv Chowk; map. This government-run store is a great place to pick up hardy, lightweight travelling clothes. Reasonably priced, ready-made traditional Indian garments include salwar kameez, woollen waistcoats, pyjamas, shawls and caps, plus rugs, cloth by the metre, tea, incense, cards and tablecloths.

People Tree 8 Regal Building, Sansad Marg, Connaught Place; 📍Rajiv Chowk; map. An interesting selection of alternative designs, with an emphasis on T-shirts, ethnic chic and jewellery.

Rainbow 1 Janpath Market, Janpath; 📍Rajiv Chowk; map. A wide range of T-shirts with witty Indian designs and slogans – not designed for tourists particularly, but great as souvenirs.

Shaw Brothers D-47 Ground Floor, Defence Colony 📞011 4123 2000; 📍Rajiv Chowk; map. Upmarket purveyors of shawls, rugs, pashminas and silks. They also have a smaller but more conveniently located branch at Palika Bazaar, Connaught Place.

Vedi Tailors M-60 Connaught Place 📞011 2341 6901; 📍Rajiv Chowk; map. Originally established in Rangoon in 1926, this gents' tailor can run you up a made-to-measure suit for anything from ₹8000 to ₹30,000, depending on fabric and cut. They usually take a week, but for a little extra they can do it in 24hr.

HERBAL PRODUCTS BLOSSOM KOCHHAR 1 HAUZ KHAS VILLAGE 📞011 4081 7655; 📍GREEN PARK; MAP. ATTRACTIVE SHOP SELLING ESSENTIAL OILS (INCLUDING GIFT PACKS), NATURAL PERFUMES, JOSS STICKS, SCENTED CANDLES AND AROMA DIFFUSERS. THERE'S ALSO A LOVELY TEAROOM ON THE UPPER LEVEL.

MALLS SELECT CITYWALK SAKET DISTRICT CENTRE, NEW DELHI 📞011 4211 4200; 📍MALVIYA NAGAR; MAP. IF YOU'RE IN THE MOOD FOR SOME WESTERN-STYLE RETAIL THERAPY, OR SIMPLY SOME NEW CLOTHING FROM A LABEL YOU'RE FAMILIAR WITH, THIS LARGE, MODERN MALL IS A GOOD CHOICE. THERE'S A GREAT ART GALLERY RIGHT NEXT DOOR, AND GOOD RESTAURANTS INSIDE, INCLUDING THE WONDERFUL BURMA BURMA.

MUSIC AND MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS LAHORE MUSIC HOUSE 3705 NETAJI SUBHASH MARG, OLD DELHI 📞011 2327 1305; 📍JAMA MASJID; MAP. LONG-ESTABLISHED NORTH INDIAN MUSICAL INSTRUMENT MAKERS WITH A REPUTATION FOR QUALITY.

Rikhi Ram G-8, Connaught Place 🌐rikhiram.com; 📍Rajiv Chowk; map. Once sitar-makers to the likes of the late Ravi Shankar, and still maintaining an exclusive air, with prices to match. Check out the display of their own unique instrumental inventions.

SPICES KANSHI RAM CHUNI LAL 6628 KHARI BAOLI RD 🌐KCDRYFRUIT.COM; 📍CHANDNI CHOWK; MAP. A GOOD CHOICE AMONG THE SPICE SHOPS LINING KHARI BAOLI'S MAIN DRAG, EXCELLENT FOR SUPER-FRESH BIG GREEN CARDAMOMS, FAT BLACK PEPPERCORNS AND SACKFULS OF OTHER SPICES, ALL SOLD BY WEIGHT. ALSO GOOD FOR A KILO OR TWO OF EXTRA-STRONG ASSAM TEA AT GOOD RATES.

SPORTS AND OUTDOOR ACTIVITIES THE RECREATIONAL ACTIVITY MOST LIKELY TO APPEAL TO VISITORS IN THE PRE-MONSOON MONTHS HAS TO BE A DIP IN ONE OF DELHI'S SWIMMING POOLS. UNFORTUNATELY MOST PUBLIC POOLS REQUIRE YOU TO TAKE OUT MEMBERSHIP. LUXURY HOTELS USUALLY RESTRICT THEIR POOLS TO RESIDENTS, BUT MAY ALLOW OUTSIDERS TO JOIN THEIR HEALTH CLUBS.

SPECTATOR SPORTS DELHI RACES KAMAL ATATURK RD 0011 2379 2869; 📍RACE COURSE. REGULAR HORSE RACING TUES FROM 1.30PM, SOMETIMES THURS TOO. ENTRY USUALLY WITHIN ₹100, AND MOBILE PHONES NOT ALWAYS ALLOWED INSIDE (YOU CAN DEPOSIT THEM AT THE ENTRANCE).

Indian Premier League 🌐iplt20.com. The IPL is the world's most lucrative cricket competition, usually running through April & May. The Delhi Daredevils (🌐delhidaredevils.com) have been a fixture since the birth of the league in 2008; catch them at the Feroz Shah Kotla ground.

OUTDOOR ACTIVITIES DELHI GOLF CLUB DR ZAKIR HUSSAIN RD; 🌐DELHIGOLFCLUB.ORG; 📍KHAN MARKET. VAUNTED, HISTORIC, LOVINGLY-DESIGNED COURSE THAT WAS FORMERLY THE HAUNT OF VICEROYS AND PRINCES (INCLUDING THE AGHA KHAN). LOCALS WAIT YEARS – SOMETIMES OVER A DECADE – FOR MEMBERSHIP, BUT WITH PRIOR RESERVATION, FOREIGNERS CAN PLAY A ROUND FOR AROUND ₹7000 (OR FOR THE SURPLUS OF ₹9250 ON WEEKENDS).

Gulmohar Park Club Block C, Gulmohar Park; 🌐gulmoharcentre.com; 📍Green Park. This is one of the only pools in the city allowing visitors to swim without becoming a member (₹275/hr); in addition, it's large and has a decent deep end. Open Apr–Dec.

Indian Mountaineering Foundation 6 Benito Juárez Marg (on the Delhi University campus); 🌐indmount.org; 📍Dhaura Kuan. Official organization governing mountaineering and permits throughout India. Some equipment can be rented here, there's an outdoor climbing wall, and you can get information on local crags and climbing groups.

COURSES AND ACTIVITIES AYURVEDA AND YOGA KERALA AYURVEDA E-2 GREEN PARK EXTENSION 🌐KERALAAYURVEDA.BIZ; 📍GREEN PARK. A “WELLNESS CENTRE” RUN BY A KERALAN FIRM MARKETING COSMETICS AND SUPPLEMENTS BASED ON AYURVEDIC PRESCRIPTIONS. YOU CAN CHOOSE FROM A VARIETY OF TREATMENTS, INCLUDING OIL MASSAGES, FOR SPECIFIC AILMENTS OR GENERAL WELLBEING.

Sivananda Yoga A-41 Kailash Colony 🌐sivananda.org.in; 📞Kailash Colony. Classes and courses in yoga at all levels. A single class costs ₹400, but courses and packages work out at rather less per class.

COOKING CLASSES GOURMET DESIRE C-511 SHEIK SARAI PHASE 1; 🌐GOURMETDESIRE.COM; 📞HAUZ KHAS. COOKERY CLASSES FROM ₹3450, INCLUDING A MEAL (3–4HR). WITH ADVANCE WARNING THEY MAY BE ABLE TO RUN MARKET TOURS TO BUY THE INGREDIENTS BEFOREHAND.

DANCE CLASSES DELHI DANCE ACADEMY E-238 AMAR COLONY; 🌐DELHIDANCEACADEMY.IN; 📞LADY SHRI RAM COLLEGE. LARGE ACADEMY WITH ALL SORTS OF CLASSES, BUT SINCE YOU'RE TRAVELLING IN INDIA THEIR BOLLYWOOD DANCE LESSONS MAY BE MOST PERTINENT – BEGINNERS WELCOME.

LANGUAGE COURSES HINDIGURU H-5/1-2, LOWER GROUND FLOOR, MALVIYA NAGAR; 🌐HINDIGURU.ORG; 📞MALVIYA NAGAR. RELAXED AND EASY-GOING LANGUAGE SCHOOL OFFERING COURSES IN HINDI AND OTHER INDIAN LANGUAGES AT ₹500/HR.

Zabaan Language Institute A-15 Kailash Colony 🌐zabaan.com; 📞Kailash Colony. This well-run, serious language school offers courses in Hindi, Urdu, Sanskrit and more, including four-week intensive Hindi courses.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE ALMOST EVERY BLOCK ON CONNAUGHT PLACE HAS AN ATM, AS DO METRO STATIONS, AND THERE ARE SEVERAL ALONG CHANDNI CHOWK AND ASAF ALI RD IN OLD DELHI. YOU CAN ALSO CHANGE MONEY AT NUMEROUS EXCHANGE OFFICES IN CONNAUGHT PLACE AND PAHARGANJ, AND ALL MAJOR HOTELS HAVE EXCHANGE FACILITIES.

Embassies, consulates and high commissions Australia, 1/50-G Shanti Path, Chanakyapuri 📞011 4139 9900; Bangladesh, EP-39, Dr S. Radha Krishan Marg, Chanakyapuri 📞011 2412 1392; Canada, 7/8 Shanti Path, Chanakyapuri 📞011 4178 2000; China, 50-D Shanti Path, Chanakyapuri 📞011 2611 2345 (visa application office in Saket; see www.visaforchina.org); Ireland, C-17 Malcha Marg, Chanakyapuri 📞011 4940 3200; Malaysia, 50-M Satya Marg, Chanakyapuri 📞011 2415 9300; Maldives, B-16, Vasant Vihar 📞011 4143 5701; Myanmar (Burma), 3/50-F Nyaya Marg, Chanakyapuri 📞011 2467 8822; Nepal, Barakhamba Rd 📞011 2347 6200; New Zealand, Sir Edmund Hillary Marg, Chanakyapuri 📞011 4688 3170; Pakistan, 2/50-G Shanti Path, Chanakyapuri 📞011 2611 0601; Singapore, E-6 Chandragupta Marg, Chanakyapuri 📞011 4600 0800; South Africa, B-18 Vasant Marg, Vasant Vihar 📞011 2614 9411; Sri Lanka, 27 Kautilya Marg, Chanakyapuri 📞011 2301 0201; Thailand, 56 N, Nyaya Marg, Chanakyapuri T11124197200; UK, Shanti Path, Chanakyapuri 📞011 2419 2100; US, Shanti Path, Chanakyapuri 📞011 2419 8000.

Hospitals All India Institute of Medical Sciences (AIIMS), Ansari Nagar, Aurobindo Marg (📞011 2658 8500, www.aiims.edu), has a 24hr emergency service, as does Dr Ram Manohar Lohia Hospital, Baba Kharak Singh Marg (📞011 2334 8200, www.rmlh.nic.in). Private clinics include Indraprastha Apollo Hospital, Sarita Vihar, Delhi–Mathura Rd (📞011 2987 1090, www.apollohospdelhi.com). The US embassy maintains a list of hospitals and doctors on its website (www.in.usembassy.gov).

Left luggage ₹15–20/day at the railway station cloakrooms, but you'll need ID and possibly a rail ticket. New Delhi station on the Airport Express Line also has a cloakroom, and most hotels offer left-luggage services to departing guests.

Money transfers Western Union and MoneyGram transfers can be picked up at post offices including the Old and New Delhi GPOs, and also the branch post office in Connaught Place (but Mon–Fri 10am–4pm only). Be sure to specify the correct post office.

Pharmacies Apollo, G-8 Connaught Place (📞011 2371 1838) and at New Delhi station (Ginger Hotel; 📞011 2323 2878) is open 24hr.

Police 📞100 (national number). Delhi has a dedicated squad of tourist police based at the airport, main stations and major tourist sights and hotel areas, whose aim is specifically to help tourists in trouble. If you need to involve the police, your hotel reception or the Government of India tourist office will direct you to the appropriate station.

Post offices Delhi GPO is in Old Delhi, Lothian Rd (north of the railway line), and not to be confused with New Delhi (Gole Market PO), on the roundabout at the intersection of Baba Khark Singh Marg and Ashoka Rd. There is a branch office at A-6 Connaught Place, and others all over the city.

Visa extensions and exit formalities Tourist visas cannot normally be extended, but in exceptional cases you may be able to get an exemption from the Ministry of Home Affairs, Foreigners' Division (mha.gov.in). If your total stay will exceed six months, you will need to register at the Foreigner's Regional Registration Office (FRRO), East Block 8, Level 2, Sector 1, Ramakrishna Puram (☎011 2671 1443). Further information can be found at boi.gov.in.

< Back to Delhi

iStock
PICHOLA LAKE, UDAIPUR

Rajasthan

Alwar and around

Jaipur and around

Amber

Ajmer and around

Pushkar

Shekhawati

Mandawa

Bikaner and around

Jaisalmer and around

Jodhpur and around

Mandor

Mount Abu

Udaipur and around

Nagada

Chittaurgarh

Bundi

Kota

Sawai Madhopur and around

Bharatpur and around

Rajasthan

Rajasthan, the ‘Land of Kings’, is unquestionably king of colour in a land that’s not exactly short of vivid quarters. Jaipur is known as the ‘Pink City’ on account of its rosy facades and palaces, and Jodhpur likewise the ‘Blue City’ thanks to its old town’s sky-blue mass of cubic houses. Udaipur’s limewashed waterside palaces gleam white by a distant vista of sawtooth hills, while Jaisalmer’s golden fort stands proud over the shifting sands of the mighty Thar Desert. Then there are the Rajasthanis themselves, the ladies glinting with heavy silver anklets or circular golden nose ornaments, and the men bearing bulky red, yellow or orange turbans. Add to this the multi-faceted history of a mosaic of twenty-two feudal kingdoms, and the sum total is perhaps the most fascinating, absorbing state in India.

Rajasthan’s extravagant palaces, forts and finely carved temples comprise one of the country’s richest crops of architectural monuments. But these exotic buildings are not the only legacy of the region’s prosperous and militaristic history. Rajasthan’s strong adherence to tradition is precisely what makes it a compelling place to travel around. Swaggering moustaches, colourful turbans, pleated veils and mirror-inlaid saris may be part of the complex language of caste, but to most outsiders they epitomize India at its most exotic.

The route stringing together Rajasthan’s four main staging posts has become one of the most heavily trodden tourist trails in India, and with good reason: Jaipur, the largest of the lot, has stacks to see; Jodhpur is smaller but perhaps even more distinctive; the magical desert city of Jaisalmer, out west, is largely built from local sandstone; and Udaipur down south is undeniably romantic. In addition, all are surrounded by a number of out-of-town sights; you could easily eat up a week in any of these cities, and you’ll most likely emerge with a clear favourite.

Primary sights aside, it's easy to escape into more remote areas. Northwest of Jaipur, the desert region of Shekhawati is dotted with atmospheric market towns and innumerable richly painted havelis, while the desert city of Bikaner is also well worth a stopover for its fine fort, havelis and the unique 'rat temple' at nearby Deshnok. The same is true of Bundi, in the far south of the state, with its magnificent, muralled fort and blue-washed old town, as well as the superbly prominent fort at Chittaurgarh nearby, not to mention the engaging hill station and remarkable Jain temples of Mount Abu.

Another attraction is Rajasthan's wonderful wildlife sanctuaries. Of these, the tiger sanctuary at Ranthambore is deservedly the most popular, while the Keoladeo National Park at Bharatpur, on the eastern border of Rajasthan near Agra, is unmatched in South Asia for its incredible avian population, offering a welcome respite from the frenetic cities that inevitably dominate most visitors' itineraries.

BEST TIME TO VISIT RAJASTHAN'S CLIMATE REACHES THE EXTREMES ASSOCIATED WITH DESERT REGIONS, WITH TEMPERATURES TOPPING 45°C DURING THE HOTTEST MONTHS OF MAY AND JUNE. THE MONSOON BREAKS OVER CENTRAL AND EASTERN RAJASTHAN IN JULY AND USUALLY CONTINUES UNTIL SEPTEMBER, ALTHOUGH IN RECENT YEARS RAINFALL HAS BECOME INCREASINGLY UNPREDICTABLE AND SPORADIC. THE FIERCE SUMMER HEAT LINGERS UNTIL MID-SEPTEMBER OR OCTOBER, WHEN NIGHT TEMPERATURES DROP CONSIDERABLY. THE BEST TIME TO VISIT IS BETWEEN NOVEMBER AND FEBRUARY, WHEN DAYTIME TEMPERATURES RARELY EXCEED 30°C; IN MIDWINTER, YOU'LL NEED A SHAWL OR WARM JUMPER IF YOU'RE OUTDOORS AT NIGHT.

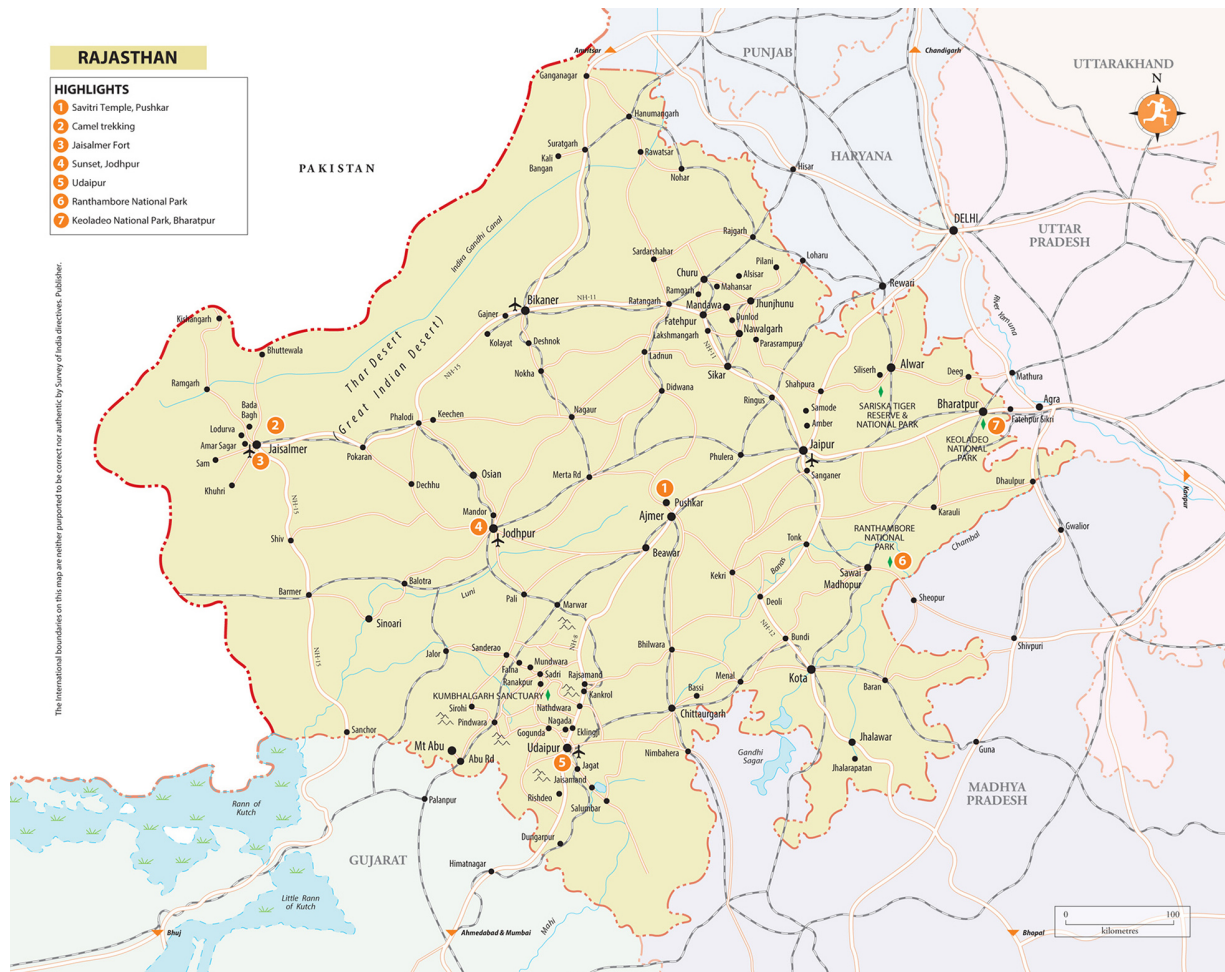

Shutterstock

STREET MARKET AT JAISALMER FORT

Highlights

- ① Savitri Temple, Pushkar For optimum views of the famous lake and whitewashed holy town, climb to the hilltop Savitri Temple at sunset.
- ② Camel trekking There's no better way to experience the Thar Desert than by riding a camel through it.
- ③ Jaisalmer Fort One of India's most beautiful forts, its massive, honey-coloured bastions enclose a labyrinth of narrow streets dotted with sandstone havelis and temples.
- ④ Sunset, Jodhpur Watch the sun set over the Blue City, with the day's final rays lighting up its spectacular backdrop, the imperious Mehrangarh Fort.
- ⑤ Udaipur The most romantic city in Rajasthan, if not all India: a fairy-tale ensemble of lakes, floating palaces and sumptuous Rajput architecture ringed by dramatic green hills.
- ⑥ Ranthambore National Park One of the easiest places in the world to see tigers in the wild, thanks to its large and exhibitionist population of big cats.
- ⑦ Keoladeo National Park, Bharatpur Flocks of rare birds – and birdwatchers – travel from across Asia and Europe each winter to visit this remarkable wetland sanctuary.

HIGHLIGHTS ARE MARKED ON THE MAP

Brief history The turbulent history of Rajasthan only really begins in the sixth and seventh centuries AD, with the emergence of warrior clans such as the Sisodias, Chauhans, Kachchwahas and Rathores – the Rajputs ('sons of Kings') Never exceeding eight percent of the population, they were to rule the separate states of Rajputana for centuries. Their code of honour set them apart from the rest of society – as did the myth that they descended from the sun and moon.

The Rajput codes of chivalry that lay behind endless clashes between clans and family feuds found their most savage expression in battles with Muslims. Muhammad of Ghor was the first to march his troops through Rajasthan, eventually gaining a foothold that enabled him to establish the Sultanate in Delhi. During the 350 years that followed, much of central, eastern and western India came under the control of the sultans, but, despite all their efforts, Rajput resistance prevented them from ever taking over Rajputana.

Ghor's successors were pushed out of Delhi in 1483 by the Mughal Babur, whose grandson Akbar came to power in 1556. Aware of the futility of using force against the Rajputs, Akbar chose instead to negotiate in friendship, and married Rani Jodha Bai, a princess from the Kachchwaha family of Amber. As a result, Rajputs entered the Mughal courts, and the influence of Mughal ideas on art and architecture remains evident in palaces, mosques, pleasure gardens and temples throughout the state.

When the Mughal empire began to decline after the accession of Aurangzeb in 1658, so too did the power of the Rajputs. Aurangzeb sided with a new force, the Marathas, who plundered Rajput lands and extorted huge sums of protection money. The Rajputs eventually turned for help to the Marathas' chief rivals, the British, and signed formal treaties as to mutual allies and enemies. Despite growing British power, the Rajputs were never denied their royal status, and relations remained largely amicable.

The nationwide clamour for Independence in the years up to 1947 eventually proved stronger in Rajasthan than Rajput loyalty; when British rule ended, the Rajputs were left out on a limb. With persuasion from the new Indian government they agreed one by one to join the Indian Union, and in 1949 the 22 states of Rajputana finally merged to form the state of Rajasthan.

FESTIVALS AND FAIRS IN RAJASTHAN RAJASTHAN'S VIBRANT LOCAL COSTUMES ARE AT THEIR MOST DAZZLING DURING THE STATE'S FESTIVALS. FOR DATES OF SPECIFIC EVENTS, ASK AT TOURIST OFFICES; MOST FESTIVALS FALL ON DAYS DETERMINED BY THE LUNAR CALENDAR.

Nagaur Cattle Fair (late Jan/early Feb). Thousands of farmers and around seventy thousand steers, cows and bullocks descend on Nagaur, south of Bikaner.

Desert Festival (Feb). Three-day event in Sam, near Jaisalmer. .

Elephant Festival (Feb/March). Parades of brightly painted elephants march through the streets of Jaipur, concluding with an extraordinary elephant-versus-mahout tug of war.

Mewar Festival (March/April). The ranas of Udaipur welcome the onset of spring with three days of traditional dances, the lighting of a sacred fire, and music by the city's famous bagpipe orchestra. Women play a prominent role.

Gangaur (March/April). In homage to Gauri, the consort of Lord Shiva, wives pray for their husbands, and unmarried girls wish for good suitors. At its best in Jaisalmer and Mount Abu.

Tilwara Cattle Fair (held over a fortnight in March or April). One of Rajasthan's biggest livestock markets, held at Tilwara, 93km southwest of Jodhpur.

Urs Ajmer Sharif (April/May). India's largest Islamic festival, held in Ajmer, an easy trip from the more popularly-visited town of Pushkar. .

Rani Sati Mela (Aug). Vast crowds gather in Jhunjhunu for a day of prayers and dances in memory of a merchant's widow who committed sati in 1595.

Pushkar Camel Fair (Nov). More than three hundred thousand visitors converge on the world's largest livestock market and Rajasthan's most colourful festival. .

Magnetic Fields (Dec; 🌐magneticfields.in). A mite more modern than other festivals on this list, this three-day contemporary music and art event is held at the Alsisar Mahal in Shekhawati.

Modern Rajasthan remains among the poorest and most staunchly traditional regions of India, although attempts to raise educational and living standards are gradually bearing fruit. Although the state still languishes somewhere near the bottom of the national literacy rate list, several major universities have been established and are now churning out graduates; Rajasthan has also crawled up India's GDP-per-capita list, and is now on the cusp of 'mid-table', and rising. Irrigation schemes have also improved crop production in this arid region, although the severe threat of drought remains an acute problem, and the greatest single threat to Rajasthan's future prosperity.

GETTING AROUND AND INFORMATION BY TRAIN RAJASTHAN AND BUS TRAINS CONNECT ALL MAJOR CITIES AND MANY

SMALLER TOWNS, WHILE THE RELIABLE STATE-RUN BUS COMPANY, RSRDC (RSRTC.ONLINE.RAJASTHAN.GOV.IN), AND VARIOUS PRIVATE OPERATORS HAVE REGULAR SERVICES BETWEEN CITIES. PRIVATE COMPANIES TEND TO OPERATE THE MOST COMFORTABLE, MODERN COACHES.

By plane You can save plenty of travel time by taking a flight or two. Jaipur receives plenty of flights from around India; Jodhpur and Udaipur both have decent connections; while Bikaner and Jaisalmer have recently opened their airports to passenger traffic.

On a tour Some turn their noses up at tours, though it's quite common for travellers in Rajasthan – especially those moving around as a couple or in a small group – to plump for one after weighing up their pros and cons. Smaller operators, such as Intense India Tours (intenseindiatours.com), can be more conducive to individual requirements.

Alwar and around Roughly halfway Delhi and Jaipur, the large, bustling town of ALWAR sprawls across a valley beneath one of eastern Rajasthan's larger and more impressive forts, whose massive ramparts straggle impressively along craggy ridges above. The town is mostly visited as a jumping-off point for Sariska National Park, though it has a number of fantastic attractions in its own right, including a fine palace, a string of colourful bazaars, and the gorgeous waterside Moosi Maharani Chhatri.

City Palace

Mohalla Ladiya • Palace • Tues–Sun 10am–5pm • Charge Alwar's principal attraction is its rambling and atmospheric City Palace, or Vinai Vilas Mahal, a sprawling complex of ornate but slightly dilapidated buildings, covered in crumbling ochre plaster and studded with endless canopied balconies. Most of the palace's innumerable rooms are now put to more mundane use as government offices; you'll often see lawyers prosecuting their business under the trees south of the main building.

The palace's time-warped museum, on the top floor, has extensive collections of weapons and miniature paintings, alongside a medley of objects belonging to former maharajas ranging from musical instruments to stuffed animals.

Steps at the left-hand end of the main facade lead up to a large, rather beautiful tank, flanked by symmetrical ghats, pavilions and a terrace on which stands the delicate Moosi Maharani Chhatri, built in memory of the mistress of Bhaktawar Singh, a local maharaja; after his death in 1815, she immolated herself on his funeral pyre.

Bala Qila

6km from Alwar by road, or 1–2hr each way on foot (take the path heading northwest from the city palace tank) • Daily 10am–5pm • Free • The tourist office can arrange a 2hr 30min tour by gypsy Perched high above Alwar is Bala Qila fort, whose well-preserved walls climb dramatically up and down the thickly wooded hillsides that rise above the town. There's not much actually to see inside the fort – besides a temple and a few old cannons – but it's a pleasant walk up from town, with fine views and fresh hill breezes. It takes about two hours to make the return trip on foot up to the fort's outermost gate, or about twice that to reach the topmost point of the fortifications.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY TRAIN THE RAILWAY ALWAR STATION IS ON THE EASTERN CUSP OF TOWN, AROUND 1.5KM FROM THE CENTRE. TRAINS RUN TO AND FROM DELHI, JAIPUR, JODHPUR, AJMER AND AHMEDABAD. FOR JAIPUR, THE BEST SERVICE IS THE AJMER SHATABDI #12015 (DAILY; DEP. 8.45AM, ARR. 10.50AM); FOR DELHI, THE DOUBLE DECKER #12985 (DAILY; DEP. 7.43AM, ARR. 10.25AM) IS THE FASTEST SERVICE.

By bus Alwar's bus stand is right in the middle of town. Buses depart for Bharatpur, many of them stopping at Deeg (every 15min; 4hr), Sariska (every 30min; 1hr 30min), Delhi (every 30min; 5hr) and Jaipur (hourly; 4hr).

Tourist information The helpful RTDC office is across the road, south of the railway station (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm; ☎0144 234 7348, 🌐tourism.rajasthan.gov.in).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Aravali Clark's Inn Nehru Marg ☎0144 233 2883. Recently redecorated with a wide variety of rooms (fan, air-cooled and a/c) and bar, gym and a guests-only pool in summer. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹

Ashoka Manu Marg ☎98288 33300. Best of a cluster of more or less indistinguishable cheapies near the bus station, offering a range of simple but cheap, tolerably clean and reasonably comfortable fan and a/c rooms. It's on a few of the main online booking engines, too. ₹

Lemon Tree Shanti Kuni, 🌐lemontreehotels.com. Located to the south of town, this is Alwar's smartest hotel, with friendly and helpful staff. Rooms (all a/c) are bright, cosy and clean, with spotless modern bathrooms, and there's also a licensed bar and decent in-house restaurant. It's worth paying a little extra for buffet breakfast. ₹₹₹

AROUND ALWAR HILL FORT KESROLI 12KM EAST OF ALWAR, 🌐NEEMRANAHOTELS.COM. INDIA'S OLDEST HERITAGE
HOTEL, OCCUPYING A RUGGED FIFTEENTH-CENTURY FORT, IMPECCABLY RESTORED AND CENTRED ON A LUSH INNER COURTYARD FILLED WITH PLANTS AND BIRDS. ROOMS ARE PLEASANTLY RUSTIC AND HAVE GREAT VIEWS OVER
KESROLI VILLAGE AND THE SURROUNDING COUNTRYSIDE,
AS DOES THE PRETTY POOL. DISCOUNTS IN SUMMER. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Alwar is famous throughout Rajasthan for its milk cakes (palang torh), which you can buy at the stalls around Hope Circus.

Inderlok Company Bagh Rd, near Nangli Circle ☎0144 270 0398. Popular a/c vegetarian restaurant, serving good pan-India dishes, including unusual paneer varieties, along with a few Oriental mains. ₹

Prem Pavitra Bhojanalya Shri Hans Tower ☎0144 233 5284. This cosy little restaurant dishes up the best cheap food in town, with a very short menu of north Indian staples such as palek paneer and aloo paratha. The entrance is easily missed. ₹

Siliserh Palace 15km south of Alwar • Daily, no set hours • Charge • Paddle boats ₹300 for 30min, motorboats ₹800 for 15min • Taxis from Alwar ₹3000–3500 return Siliserh Palace is easily visited en route to or from Sariska if you've got your own vehicle (there's no public transport here). Maharaja Vijay Singh had the palace built in 1845 to win over a beautiful commoner, a certain Sheela, who agreed to marriage on the condition that she live within sight of her family's modest home. The whitewashed palace itself is fairly humdrum, but the Shangri-La setting, on the edge of a ten-square-kilometre lake ringed by jungle-clad hills, is idyllic. It's a nice spot to while away an afternoon, and you can rent out boats.

Sariska Tiger Reserve and National Park Daily • Opening hours vary seasonally. Refer, fmdss.forest.rajasthan.gov.in • Park entry Charge • Guide Charge • Gypsy Safari Charge • Canter Safari Charge • Video permit Charge Alwar is the access point for Sariska Tiger Reserve and National Park, a former maharaja's hunting ground managed since 1979 by Project Tiger. Accustomed to being overshadowed by the more famous Ranthambore, Sariska was suddenly thrust into the headlines in 2005 when it was discovered that its tiger population, estimated at around 28 in 2003, had all but vanished due to poaching – one of India's biggest-ever conservation scandals. As a result, tigers were reintroduced to Sariska in 2008, with the arrival of one male and two females airlifted from Ranthambore, followed by a further two tigers in 2009 and 2010. Fortunately, these desperate measures have reaped rewards, and Sariska's current tiger population stands at 28 once again.

For birders and wildlife enthusiasts put off by the crowds and hassle of Ranthambore, Sariska's relative serenity comes as a welcome relief. The 881-square-kilometre sanctuary is home to abundant wildlife including sambar, chital, wild boar, nilgai and other antelopes, jackals, mongooses, monkeys, peacocks, porcupines, and numerous birds. The park is also dotted with a number of evocative ruins and other man-made structures, including the old Kankwari Fort, and a Hanuman temple deep within the park that gets surprisingly lively on Saturdays and Tuesdays, when Indian visitors are allowed into the park for free.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS SARISKA TIGER RESERVE
THE PARK LIES 35KM SOUTHWEST OF ALWAR ON THE MAIN ALWAR–JAIPUR ROAD; BUSES BETWEEN THE TWO (EVERY 30MIN; 1HR) WILL STOP, ON REQUEST, AT THE SARISKA PALACE HOTEL, A FIVE MINUTE WALK FROM THE PARK.

By taxi Alternatively, you may be able to arrange a taxi through a hotel in Alwar, which also gives you time to visit Siliserh on the way back.

ACCOMMODATION TIGER’S DEN NEAR FOREST REST HOUSE;
📍RTDC.TOURISM.RAJASTHAN.GOV.IN. ATTRACTIVE, STONE BUILDING HOTEL CONVENIENTLY SITUATED RIGHT NEXT TO THE PARK ENTRANCE, WITH SPACIOUS, OLD-FASHIONED FAN-COOLED AND A/C ROOMS, PLUS A NICE GARDEN. RATES ARE HALF-BOARD. LICENSED. ₹₹₹

Sariska Palace A couple of minutes’ drive down the main road from the park entrance 📞011 2841 325, 📍thehotelsariskapalace.net. This former maharaja’s residence has plenty of atmosphere, though rooms in the main building are surprisingly shabby given the hefty price, while those in the various modern annexes scattered around the grounds are poky and boring. There’s also a pool, clay tennis court and large swathes of manicured lawns to loll around on. ₹₹₹₹

Jaipur and around A flamboyant showcase of Rajasthani architecture, JAIPUR has long been established on tourist itineraries as the third corner of India's 'Golden Triangle', along with Agra and Delhi. At the heart of Jaipur lies the Pink City, the old walled quarter, whose bazaars rank among the most vibrant in Asia, renowned for their textiles, jewellery and Rajasthani handicrafts. For all its colour, however, Jaipur's heavy traffic, dense crowds and pushy traders make it a taxing place to explore, and many visitors stay just long enough to catch a train to more laidback destinations further west or south. If you can put up with the urban stress, however, the city's modern outlook and commercial hustle and bustle offer a stimulating contrast to many other places in the state.

Jaipur's attractions fall into three distinct areas. At the heart of the urban sprawl, the historic Pink City is where you'll find the fine City Palace and the Hawa Mahal. The leafier and less hectic area south of the Pink City is home to the Ram Niwas Gardens and Central Museum, while the city's outskirts are dotted with a string of intriguing relics of royal rule, most notably Nahargarh Fort, the cenotaphs at Royal Gaitor, and the temples (and monkeys) of Galta.

Additionally, forts, palaces, temples and assorted ruins from a thousand years of Kachchwaha history adorn the hills and valleys near Jaipur. The superb palace at Amber provides the most obvious destination for a day-trip, easily combined with a visit to the impressive fort of Jaigarh.

Brief history Established in 1727, Jaipur is one of Rajasthan's youngest cities, founded by (and named after) Jai Singh II of the Kachchwaha family, who ruled a sizeable portion of northern Rajasthan from their fort at nearby Amber. The Kachchwaha Rajputs had been the first to ally themselves with the Mughals, in 1561, and, by the time of Jai Singh's accession, the free flow of trade, art and ideas had won them great prosperity. Jai Singh's fruitful 43-year reign was followed by an inevitable battle for succession, and the state was thrown into turmoil. Much of its territory was lost to Marathas and Jats, and the British quickly moved in to take advantage of Rajput infighting. Following Independence, Jaipur became state capital of Rajasthan in 1956.

Today, with a population of more than three million and as the tenth most populous city in the country, Jaipur is the state's most advanced commercial and business centre and its most prosperous city – some estimates put it among the world's fastest growing cities, with lively annual population growth, and gleaming new high-rises springing up on an almost weekly basis. Evidence of Jaipur's severe growing pains can be seen in older parts of the city, however, with creaking infrastructure and traffic-choked roads frequently approaching gridlock during the morning and evening rush hours.

The Pink City At the heart of Jaipur lies Jai Singh's original city, popularly known as the Pink City, enclosed by walls and imposing gateways. Though certainly not all pink, many buildings here are painted a distinctively rosy colour – one that was actually intended to camouflage the poor-quality materials from which they were originally constructed. Chromatics aside, one of the Pink City's most striking features is its regular grid-plan, with wide, straight streets, broadening to spacious squares (choupads) at major intersections – a design created in accordance with the Vastu Shastra, a series of ancient Hindu architectural treatises. To make the most of your visit, buy a ‘composite’ city ticket.

City Palace

Daily; Day visit 9.30am–5pm; night visit 7pm–10pm (Night visit) • Charge; same ticket also valid for Jaigarh Fort at Amber if used within 24hr; on composite ticket

At the heart of the Pink City stands the magnificent City Palace, originally built by Jai Singh in the 1720s and having lost none of its original pomp and splendour. The royal family still occupies part of the palace, advancing in procession on formal occasions through the grand Tripolia Gate on its southern side. Less exalted visitors enter through a modest gate on the eastern side of the palace that leads into the first of the two main courtyards, centred on the elegant Mubarak Mahal. Built as a reception hall in 1899, the building now holds the museum’s textile collection, housing some of the elaborately woven and brocaded fabrics that formerly graced the royal wardrobe. On the north side of the courtyard, the Armoury is probably the finest such collection in Rajasthan, a vast array of blood-curdling but often beautifully decorated weapons.

Diwan-i-Khas City Palace, Mubarak Mahal Courtyard • Daily 9.30am–5pm, 7pm–10pm • ☎0141088888 • Charge Beyond the Mubarak Mahal, an ornate gateway flanked by a pair of fine stone elephants leads into the palace’s second main courtyard, painted deep salmon pink. In its centre the raised Diwan-i-Khas (Hall of Private Audience) is an open-sided pavilion where important decisions of state were taken by the maharaja and his advisers. The hall contains two silver urns, or gangajalis, listed in the Guinness Book of World Records as the largest crafted silver objects in the world, each more than 1.5m high with a capacity of 8182 litres. When Madho Singh II went to London to attend the coronation of King Edward VII in 1901, he was so reluctant to trust the water in the West that he had these urns filled with Ganges water and took them along with him.

Pritam Niwas Chowk and the Chandra Mahal 9.30am–5pm • Charge

On the left (west) side of the courtyard, a small corridor leads through to the Pritam Niwas Chowk, or ‘Peacock Courtyard’, adorned with four superbly painted doorways representing the four seasons. This courtyard also gives the best view of the soaring yellow Chandra Mahal, the residence of the royal family, who allow costly private tours of their quarters. Its heavily balconied seven-storey facade rises to a slope-shouldered summit, and views across the city from its peak are stunning. When the maharaja, Kumar Padmanabh Singh, is in residence his flag is flown from the topmost pavilion.

Diwan-i-Am

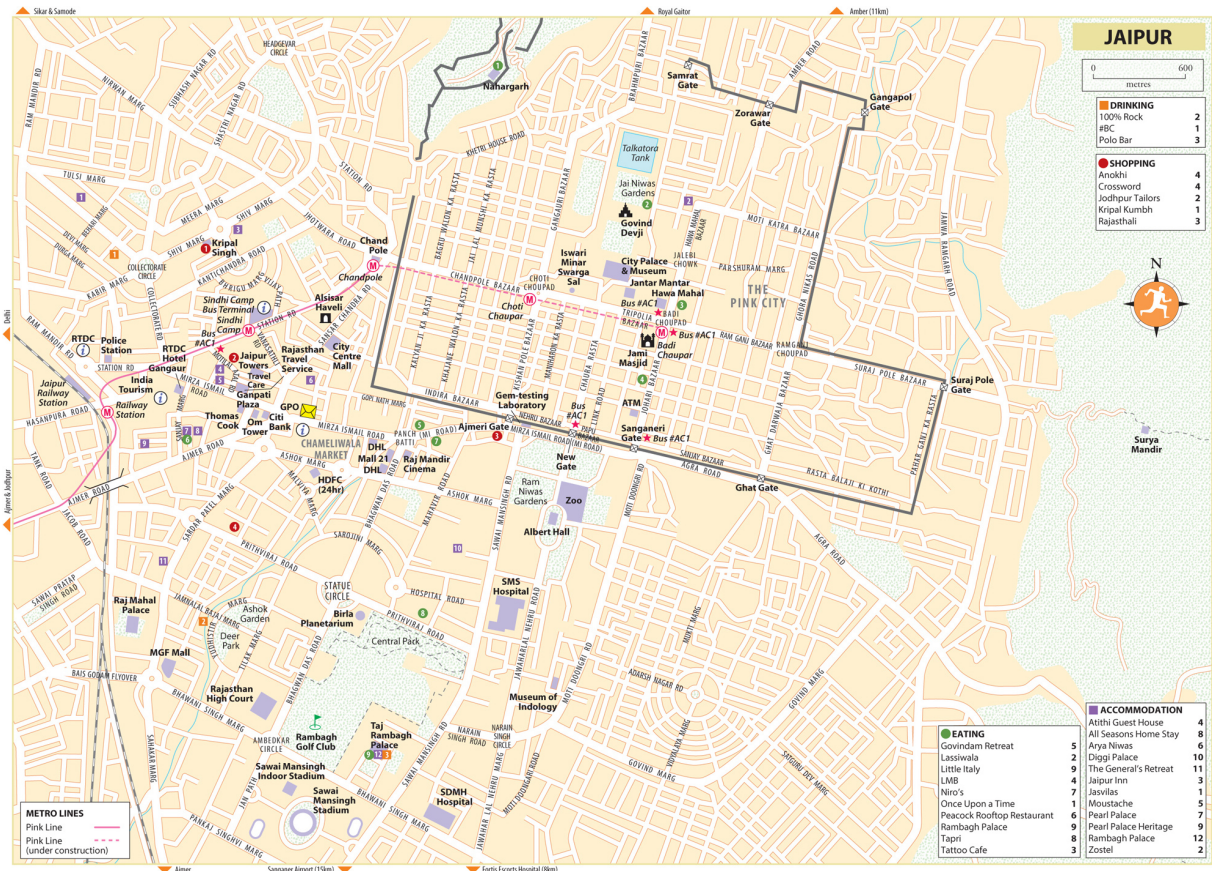

On the east side of the Diwan-i-Khas courtyard, beneath a large clock tower, sits the ornate Sabha Niwas, the Hall of Public Audience (or Diwan-i-Am), bare except for a pair of thrones in the middle and portraits of various former maharajas around the walls. Beyond here is the small Diwan-i-Am courtyard, with a collection of old carriages tucked into one end.

Jantar Mantar jantarmantar.org • Daily 6am–6pm, last entry 4pm • Entry Charge • Audioguide Charge; on composite ticket

Immediately south of the City Palace lies the remarkable Jantar Mantar, a large grassy enclosure containing eighteen huge stone astronomical measuring devices constructed between 1728 and 1734 at the behest of Jai Singh, who invented many of them himself. Their strange, abstract shapes lend the whole place the look of a weird futuristic sculpture park. The Jantar Mantar is one of five identically named observatories created by the star-crazed Jai Singh across north India, including the well-known example in Delhi, though his motivation was astrological rather than astronomical.

It’s a very good idea to pay for the services of a guide to explain the workings of the observatory, which was able to identify the position and movement of stars and planets, tell the time and even predict the intensity of the monsoon. Probably the most impressive of the observatory’s constructions is the 27m-high sundial, the Samrat Yantra, which can calculate the time to within two seconds. A more original device, the Jaiprakash Yantra, consists of two hemispheres laid in the ground, each composed of six curving marble slabs with a suspended ring in the centre, whose shadow marks the day, time and zodiac symbol – vital for calculating auspicious days for marriage.

Hawa Mahal

Hawa Mahal Road • Daily 9am–5pm, last entry 4pm • Charge, audioguide and guided tours available; composite ticket

Jaipur's most instantly recognizable landmark, the Hawa Mahal, or 'Palace of Winds', stands to the east of the City Palace – it's best appreciated from the outside (or, even better, the rooftop of Tattoo Cafe;) during the early morning, when it glows orange-pink in the rays of the rising sun. Built in 1799 to enable the women of the court to watch street processions while remaining in purdah, its five-storey facade, decked out with hundreds of finely screened windows and balconies, makes the building seem far larger than it really is; in fact, it's little more than a facade. To get inside the palace itself you need to walk for five minutes around the rear of the building, following the lane that runs north from Tripolia Bazaar. Once inside, you can climb up the back of the facade to the screened niches from where the ladies of the court would once have looked down, and which still offer superb views over the mayhem of Jaipur below.

Govind Devji Kanwar Nagar, near the Pradeep Rawat Memorial Hospital • Daily 4.30–11.30am & 5.45–9.30pm • Free •  govinddevji.net

North of the City Palace is the Govind Devji, the family temple of the maharajas of Jaipur. The temple is dedicated to Krishna in his character of Govinda, who is considered to be the guardian deity of the rulers of Jaipur. The principal shrine houses a sacred image of Govinda thought to be five thousand years old, which was brought from Vrindavan (near Agra) in 1735. Exit through the north gate and you'll be in the very pleasant, monkey-filled Jai Niwas Gardens.

Iswari Minar Swarga Sal Tripolia Bazaar; entrance on side-road running parallel to main road • Daily 24hrs • Charge; composite ticket

Just west of the City Palace, the slender Iswari Minar Swarga Sal, or Ishwar Lat (Heaven-Piercing Minaret), was built by Jai Singh II's son and successor, Iswari Singh, to celebrate a minor victory over a combined Maratha–Rajput force in 1747. Its summit offers the definitive view of the Pink City.

Outside the Pink City Immediately south of the Pink City, the wide road leading out from New Gate is flanked by the surprisingly lush Ram Niwas Gardens, named after their creator, Maharaja Ram Singh (1835–80). Standing sentinel in among these gardens is the florid Albert Hall, while pressing on south again you'll get to the Museum of Indology. The Pink City is bookended to its north by the looming Nahargarh, while some distance to its east, and over a little rise, is the hugely enjoyable 'Monkey Palace'.

Albert Hall

Central Museum Daily 9am–5pm & 7–10pm • Charge, audioguide; composite ticket •  alberthalljaipur.gov.in • Entry free on Rajasthan Day (30 March), World Heritage Day (18 April), World Museum day (18 May), World Tourism Day (27 September) A prominent city landmark, the Albert Hall was built in 1867, exhibiting a whimsical mix of Venetian and Mughal styles (Italian below, Indian on top). It today houses the city's Central Museum, with the bulk of its collection focusing on regional and Indian themes, including fine displays of Jaipur pottery, Hindu statuary and Mughal and Rajasthani miniature paintings, supported by an eclectic array of artefacts from around the globe – everything from Egyptian antiquities to decorative tiles from Stoke-on-Trent, with forays into Japan, Myanmar and Persia.

Museum of Indology 24 Gangawal Park, off Jawaharlal Nehru Road • ☎094 1405 0688 • Daily 8am–5pm • Charge The Museum of Indology is home to assorted curiosities collected by the late Acharya Vyakul, stuffed into a rambling suburban house. Exhibits include oddities such as a map of India painted on a grain of rice, letters written on a hair and a glass bed, alongside other artefacts and literary treasures, all enjoyably arranged without any real organization.

Nahargarh

Daily 10am–6pm • Charge • Taxis will charge around ₹300 to go up, but sometimes ₹200 to get back down; local youths will ask for around ₹100 each way on a scooter Teetering on the edge of the hills north of Jaipur is the dramatic Nahargarh, or 'Tiger Fort', built by Jai Singh II in 1734 and offering superb views of Jaipur, best enjoyed at sunset. The fort's imposing walls sprawl for nearly 1km along the ridgetop and envelop a step-well among other features, but the only significant surviving structures within are the palace apartments, built inside the old fort by Madho Singh II between 1883 and 1892 as a love nest in which he kept his most treasured concubines away from the disapproving eyes of his courtiers and four official wives.

Four-wheeled vehicles can only get to the fort along a road that branches off Amber Road, a 13km-plus journey from Jaipur; as such taxis cost more than you'd expect, but it's fairly easy to walk the shorter – but steep and winding – road to the top. Try to avoid going up too late in the day or returning after dark; the fort is popular with delinquent teenagers and other unsavoury types, and the atmosphere can be a tad seedy at the best of times. Views of the sunset are pretty spectacular, either from the palace rooftop, various ramparts, or the Padao Restaurant, which charges for entry.

Royal Gaitor Gaitor Ki Chhatriyan • Daily 10am–5pm • Charge On the northern edge of the city centre, the walled funerary complex of Royal Gaitor contains the stately marble mausoleums (chhatris) of Jaipur's ruling family. The compound consists of two main courtyards, each crammed full of imposing memorials. The first (and more modern) courtyard is dominated by the grandiose twentieth-century cenotaph of Madho Singh II (d. 1922), a ruler of famously gargantuan appetites, whose four wives and fifty-odd concubines bore him ‘around 125’ children. The second, older, courtyard is home to the elaborate tomb of Jai Singh II (d. 1743), the founder of Jaipur and the first ruler to be interred at Gaitor.

On the ridgetop above Gaitor (reachable via a steep set of stairs) lies the Ganesh Mandir, the second of the city’s two major Ganesh temples – a huge building instantly recognizable from the huge swastika painted on its side.

Galta Ji

3km east of Jaipur on foot • Daily sunrise–sunset • Free • Camera charge; temple is free, despite what ticket sellers may say about ‘donations’ • 10km around the hills from Jaipur by vehicle, or a stiff 20min walk over the rise from the eastern edge of the Pink City Nestling in a steep-sided valley, the ‘Monkey Palace’ of Galta Ji comprises a picturesque collection of 250-year-old temples squeezed into a narrow rocky ravine. Galta owes its sacred status in large part to a freshwater spring that seeps constantly through the rocks in the otherwise dry valley, keeping two tanks full. Surreally, these ponds are now the domain of more than five thousand macaque monkeys, which have earned Galta its nickname. For many tourists the sight of splashing locals – the tanks are gender-segregated, and you’ll always see fellas in the upper tank having a good gawp at the ladies down below – outstrips the attraction of the temples themselves, though the assorted shrines, dedicated variously to Krishna, Rama and Hanuman, are attractively atmospheric. It’s also worth walking up to the spectacularly situated Surya Mandir, perched above the tanks on the ridgetop, which boasts dramatic views of the city below.

JAIPUR BUS SCAM

Most buses arriving from Delhi or Agra skirt the southern side of the city, stopping briefly at Narain Singh Circle, where rickshaw-walas frequently board the bus and, with the connivance of the bus driver, announce that it’s the end of the line (‘bus going to yard’) – a ploy to get you aboard their rickshaws and into a hotel that pays them commission.

Sisodia Rani-ka-Bagh 11km east of Jaipur • Daily 8am–4.30pm • Charge On your way to Galta, if you’re going by road, it’s worth stopping off at the small royal pleasure palace and lush gardens of Sisodia Rani-ka-Bagh, built by Maharaja Sawai Jai Singh in 1728 as a gift to his second queen, Sisodia, a princess from Udaipur. The walls of the garden are adorned with Radha-Krishna murals and its design exhibits both Mughal and Indian influences.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE JAIPUR IS RAJASTHAN'S JAIPUR MAIN TRANSPORT HUB, WITH FREQUENT BUS AND TRAIN SERVICES TO ALL MAJOR DESTINATIONS AROUND THE STATE, AS WELL AS NATIONWIDE INTERNATIONAL AIR CONNECTIONS. SHORT JOURNEYS TO DESTINATIONS LIKE BHARATPUR, AJMER (FOR PUSHKAR) AND TOWNS IN SHEKHAWATI ARE USUALLY BEST MADE BY BUS; ONE EXCEPTION IS SAWAI MADHOPUR, WHICH IS MOST EASILY REACHED BY TRAIN.

By plane Jaipur's Sanganer airport is 15km south of the city centre and is served by a number of international airlines, as well as numerous local carriers. There are regular airport buses to and from town; alternatively, a rickshaw will cost around ₹500, or a taxi under ₹1000.

Destinations Ahmedabad (4 daily; 1hr 20min); Bengaluru (7 daily; 2hr 25min); Bikaner (1 daily; 1hr); Chennai (3 daily; 2hr 30min); Delhi (8 daily; 1hr); Hyderabad (5 daily; 2hr); Jaisalmer (1 daily; 1hr 15min); Kolkata (4 daily; 2hr 15min); Mumbai (8 daily; 1hr 40min); Pune (2 daily; 1hr 50min); Udaipur (3 daily; 1hr).

By train The city's railway station, Jaipur Junction lies 1.5km west of the Pink City. Bookings for trains should be made at least a day in advance at the reservations hall just outside the main station (Mon–Sat 8am–8pm, Sun 8am–2pm); go to the special foreigners' counter. When departing, note that there's a nice little 'executive lounge'; minimal fees gets you entry, water and a hot drink, and a couple of another hundred rupees will allow a go at the buffet.

By bus State buses from all over Rajasthan and further afield pull in at the Inter-state Bus Terminal (also known as 'Sindhi Camp') on Station Rd; you'll usually be fine just turning up (destinations are listed outside each cabin), perhaps bar direct buses to Pushkar, which leave daily at 4.15pm. For longer journeys, faster but less frequent deluxe Gold Line ('Volvo') and Silver Line government services guarantee seats, best reserved through your accommodation, though at the stations there's a dedicated booking hatch open 24hr. Many prefer the private buses, many of which leave from roads just south of Sindhi Camp; you can book tickets at the string of agents on Station Rd.

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM JAIPUR ALL THE FOLLOWING TRAINS RUN DAILY.

Destination	Name	No.	Departs	Arrives
Abu Road	Aravali Express	14701	9.30am	4.55pm
Agra	UDZ Kurj Express	19666	5.35am	10.20am
Ajmer	Shatabdi Express	12015	10.50am	12.55pm
Alwar	Shatabdi Express	12016	5.50pm	7.45pm
Bikaner	Bikaner Intercity	12468	4.35pm	11.15pm
Chittaurgarh	Udaipur Express	12992	2.30pm	7.22pm
Delhi	Shatabdi Express	12016	5.50pm	10.40pm
Jaisalmer	Ranikhet Express	15014	10.10am	10.30pm
Jodhpur	Ranikhet Express	15014	10.10pm	4.40pm
	Ranthambore Express	12465	4.50pm	10.15pm
Kota	Mumbai Superfast	12956	2.00pm	5.10pm
Sawai Madhopur	Intercity Express	12466	9.55am	12.25pm
Udaipur	Udaipur SF Special	09721	6.15am	1.20pm
	Udaipur Express	12992	2.30pm	10.00pm

Varanasi	Marudhar Express	14854	1.50pm	10.15am
-----------------	-----------------------------	-------	--------	---------

Destinations for private buses Agra (regular bar 7am–2pm gap; 4–6hr); Ajmer (3–5 hourly; 3hr); Bharatpur (regular bar 7am–2pm gap; 4hr); Bikaner (2–5 hourly; 5–6hr); Bundi (regular from 6pm; 3hr 15min–5hr); Chittaurgarh (regular from 7pm; 6hr); Delhi (1–5 hourly; 6hr); Jaisalmer (3 nightly; 12hr); Jodhpur (regular from 6pm; 6–7hr); Kota (regular from 6pm; 5hr); Pushkar (1–2 early morning; 3hr); Udaipur (2–4 hourly; 9hr).

GETTING AROUND JAIPUR IS VERY SPREAD OUT, AND ALTHOUGH IT'S POSSIBLE TO EXPLORE THE PINK CITY ON FOOT DESPITE THE CROWDS, YOU MAY NEED SOME FORM OF TRANSPORT TO AND FROM YOUR HOTEL. IT'S BEST TO AVOID TRAVELLING DURING THE MORNING AND EVENING RUSH HOURS.

By rickshaw Auto-rickshaws are available all over the city. There are 24hr prepaid kiosks in front of the railway and bus stations, offering rates much cheaper than you're likely to get on the street – ₹500/₹300 for a full/half-day's rental, for example, or just ₹200 to Amber (or ₹400 for a roundtrip, including waiting time).

By taxi Cars with driver can be rented through most hotels or through any RTDC office, usually costing from ₹1300 for a half-day, or ₹2500/day. For private tours and taxi services, try the knowledgeable Shalutour (🌐 shalutour.com).

By bus You're unlikely to want to navigate Jaipur by bus, but the #AC1 route is quite useful for getting to Amber.

By metro Jaipur's metro system (🌐 jaipurmetrorail.in) is quite modern, yet almost comically rubbish; trains on the single Pink Line are extraordinarily slow, and the primary use of most of the nine stations in use seems to be as public toilets for pigeons; in due course, two more stations will be added in the Pink City, which will make the system more useful (but probably still rubbish), and a second line has been proposed. Trains run every 10min from 6.30am to 9pm.

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURIST INFORMATION THE RTDC (www.rajasthan-tourism.gov.in) HAS TOURIST INFORMATION OFFICES AT THE RAILWAY STATION (DAILY 7AM–10PM; ☎0141 220 0778); ON MI RD OPPOSITE THE GPO (DAILY 10AM–5PM; ☎0141 237 5466); AND AT THE STATE BUS TERMINAL (DAILY 7AM–10PM; ☎0141 220 6720). RTDC TOURS CAN BE BOOKED THROUGH ANY OF THESE OFFICES.

THERE'S AN INDIA TOURISM (www.tourism.rajasthan.gov.in) OFFICE AT THE KHASA KOTHI HOTEL ON MI ROAD (MON–FRI 9.30AM–6PM, SAT 9AM–2PM; ☎0141 237 2200).

Attraction tickets A great-value way to see eight of Jaipur's biggest attractions (including Amber Fort, Jantar Mantar, Hawa Mahal, Nahargarh Fort and Albert Hall) is to buy a composite ticket. You can buy these passes at the ticket offices of each named attraction, and they are valid for two consecutive days.

Guided tours One inexpensive, albeit very rushed, way to see Jaipur's main attractions is on one of the two guided tours run by the RTDC, which cram in most of the major city sights. They also run occasional 'Pink City by Night' tours, which include vegetarian dinner at Nahargarh Fort. Tours depart from, and can be booked through, any of the RTDC offices listed here. Lastly, despite the crowds, it can be pleasant to tour some parts of the city by bicycle; see www.cyclinjaipur.com for guided tours.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Jaipur has a wide range of accommodation, mostly found west of the city centre, on or close to MI Rd and in the calm upmarket suburb of Bani Park. It's a good idea to book ahead, particularly around the Elephant Festival (first half of March). Note that almost all the places listed below offer free pick-up from the bus or train station.

LUXURY AND BOUTIQUE HOTELS ★DIGGI PALACE SMS HOSPITAL RD, www.hoteldiggipalace.com. ONE OF THE CITY'S MOST UPMARKET HERITAGE HOTELS, OCCUPYING A CHARACTERFUL OLD HAVELI SET AMID HUGE GARDENS – HOME TO SQUIRRELS AND EVEN PEACOCKS, WITH SUCH

NATURAL CHARM BELYING ITS CONVENIENTLY CENTRAL LOCATION. EXPECT HEFTY ONLINE DISCOUNTS ON THE RIDICULOUS RACK RATES. ₹₹₹₹

Jasvilas C-9, Sawai Jai Singh Highway, Bani Park @jasvilas.com. Welcoming family-run guesthouse in a gracious old suburban mansion, with spacious and comfortable a/c rooms, a lovely little pool and attractive enclosed gardens. ₹₹₹

★Rambagh Palace Bhawani Singh Marg, @tajhotels.com. This opulent palace complex, set amid 47 acres of beautiful gardens, is indisputably the grandest hotel in Jaipur, and one of the most romantic places to stay in India. Rooms are superbly equipped, with Rajasthani artworks, reproduction antique furniture and all mod cons. Facilities include a clutch of fine restaurants and bars, indoor and outdoor pools, and a Jiva spa. Even if you can't afford to stay, call in for afternoon tea. Check the website for discounts, especially in summer. ₹₹₹₹

MID-RANGE HOTELS AND GUESTHOUSES ★ALL SEASONS HOME STAY 63 HATHROI FORT, BEHIND VIDHAYAKPURI POLICE STATION @ALLSEASONSHOMESTAYJAIPUR.COM. THE ROOMS IN THIS FAMILY HOUSE EACH COME WITH A/C, TVS, PRIVATE BATHROOMS AND GARDEN-VIEW TERRACES OR BALCONIES. SOME ALSO HAVE ATTACHED KITCHENS, BUT EVEN BETTER ARE THE TASTY HOME-COOKED MEALS ₹₹₹₹

Arya Niwas Sansar Chandra Rd (behind Amber Tower), @aryaniwas.com. Dependable old haveli hotel arranged around a couple of intimate courtyards, with a lovely expanse of lawn and spacious veranda out front. Rooms are nicely furnished; all come with TVs and a/c, apart from a few air-cooled singles. They also offer city tours, including a 3hr guided stroll of the Pink City. ₹₹

The General's Retreat 9 Sardar Patel Marg, nr Chomu Circle, @generalsretreat.com. Dating back to the 1960s, this quaint ex-general's mansion with lush garden is home to eleven clean, bright and cosy a/c rooms, adorned with old photographs, period furnishings and gorgeous Rajasthani fabrics, plus a convivial rooftop dining room. ₹₹₹₹

Jaipur Inn Shiv Marg, Bani Park, 🌐 jaipurinn.com. Reliable, pleasantly old-fashioned lower-budget option, with comfortable and well-equipped rooms with TV and a/c (the rear garden rooms are nicest), plus breezy rooftop terrace and café. They've got games to play, including ping-pong and Indian Monopoly, and they often offer Bollywood dance lessons. ₹₹

★ Pearl Palace Heritage 54 Gopal Bari, Lane no.2, Ajmer Rd, 🌐 pearlpalaceheritage.com. Striking sister hotel to the excellent Pearl Palace, with a much more upmarket heritage theme – each of the spacious, painstakingly designed a/c rooms is highly unique and features traditional wooden doors, assorted artworks and artefacts. There's a superb sequence of stone carvings adorning the first-floor corridors – a miniature museum in itself. Rooms have TVs and spotless bathrooms, some of which feature Jacuzzi tubs. ₹₹₹

HOSTELS AND BUDGET GUESTHOUSES ★ ATITHI GUEST HOUSE 1 Park House Scheme, just off MI Rd, 🌐 JATITHIJAIPUR.COM. Long-established red-brick guesthouse and still one of the nicer budget places in town, with pleasant, modern tiled rooms (air-cooled and a/c) and an attractive rooftop terrace. There's a smart café, and the popular restaurant Mohan's is a 2min stroll away. ₹₹

Moustache 7 Park House, near Ganpati Plaza, 🌐 moustachehostel.com. Close to the bus station yet tucked into a tangle of quiet side-streets, this is an excellent choice, with well-informed staff, an attractive common area, and super-cheap dorm beds. What else could you want? Dorm ₹

★ Pearl Palace Hari Kishan Somani Marg, Hathroi Fort, 🌐 hotelpEARLpalace.com. One of the best guesthouses in Rajasthan, with a selection of spotless and excellent-value, modern air-cooled and a/c rooms (a few with shared bathroom) attractively decorated with local arts and crafts, plus a mixed dorm. The well-drilled staff can take care of all your needs, and facilities include a silver shop and travel ticketing, plus an excellent rooftop restaurant. Advance bookings recommended. Dorm ₹, double ₹₹

★ Zostel 85A Rajamal Ka Talab, Pink City, 🌐 zostel.com. Finally, some decent accommodation in the Pink City! Part of a nationwide chain, this chilled hostel is a great place to stay, with a cushion-filled common room by reception, travel and culinary advice all over the place, and very decent dorm rooms. Dorm ₹, double ₹₹

EATING

MAP

RESTAURANTS ★GOVINDAM RETREAT UDYOG KANWAR NAGAR, NEAR GOVIND DEVJI TEMPLE 099299 49258. THERE ARE FEW NOTABLE PLACES TO EAT IN THE PINK CITY, SO CIRCLE THIS ONE ON YOUR MAP – A CHARMINGLY DECORATED, SECOND-FLOOR PLACE SERVING PURE-VEG RAJASTHANI DISHES; TRY THE SARSO SHAG, LIKE A GARLICKY PALAK PANEER WITHOUT THE PANEER, WITH A CORN-BASED MAKHA ROTI. THEY ALSO SELL CHEAPER SOUTH INDIAN DOSAS, IDDLI AND UPMAS, AND OFTEN OFFER A LUNCH BUFFET, WHICH IS GREAT IF YOU'RE HUNGRY. ₹₹

Little Italy KK Square Mall, Prithviraj Rd 0141 402 2444. Svelte modern restaurant serving passable – if not particularly authentic – pizza, pasta, salads, risotto and a few Italian-style meat dishes, plus assorted Mexican snacks. Also has a selection of Indian wines. ₹₹

Niro's MI Rd 0141 237 4493, nirosindia.com. This profusely mirrored restaurant has some of the best non-veg food in Jaipur, with Rajasthani specialities such as sula (lamb), lal maans (mutton) and gatta along with a big choice of tandoori dishes and other meat and veg curries, plus Western and Chinese. Try a goat brain masala, if you dare! Licensed. ₹₹

Once Upon a Time Palace Complex, Nahargarh Fort 091160 48101. While people usually head to the nearby Padao restaurant for sunset views, this fort restaurant is far nicer, even though all the views are interior or courtyard-based. The food is a little dear, with Indian mains and tandoor dishes – perhaps worth the splurge, and you'll almost never have to book ahead. ₹₹

★Peacock Rooftop Restaurant Pearl Palace hotel, Hari Kishan Somani Marg 0141 237 3700. The city's most appealing rooftop restaurant, with quirky original decor featuring cute metal chairs and striking peacock motifs. There's a big menu of veg and non-vegetarian North Indian options, all well prepared, with flavoursome sauces, crisp breads and cold beers,

plus Chinese dishes and great burgers – try the ‘farmer’s’ one, a chicken patty with fried egg and bacon on top. It’s a good idea to book ahead for dinner, since the place is particularly pretty after dark. ₹₹

Rambagh Palace Bhawani Singh Marg, 📍tajhotels.com. Jaipur’s most opulent hotel serves up a handful of memorable dining options. Choose between Suarna Mahal, offering Indian fine-dining (and afternoon tea from 3–6pm) in a superbly over-the-top, Neoclassical-style dining room, or tuck into Italian food at the more laidback Steam restaurant, built in and around the carriages of an old steam train in the hotel’s grounds. Mains at both start at around, and reservations are strongly recommended. ₹₹₹

★Tapri B4-E Prithviraj Rd 📍0141 236 0245. A little out of the way, but so, so worth tracking down, this rooftop tearoom (see below for more on the tea) is one of the most enjoyable places to eat in Jaipur. Much of the menu is taken up with Indian street food, served in a manner far more beautiful than you’d ever see on the actual streets – samosas, chana chaat, dhal patties and the like, all super cheap. The concept has really caught on with locals, and you’ll most likely have to queue a while for a table. ₹

CAFES, TEAROOMS AND SNACKS ★LASSIWALA 312 MI RD. A JAIPUR INSTITUTION FOR ITS SUBLIME LASSIS, SERVED IN OLD-STYLE TERRACOTTA MUGS, WITH ECO-FRIENDLY WOODEN SPOONS. ITS POPULARITY HAS SPARKED A SMALL LASSI-WALA-WAR, WITH TWO IMPOSTORS SETTING UP SHOP ALONGSIDE – CHECK FOR THE CORRECT STREET NUMBER (CLEARLY DISPLAYED). ₹

LMB Johari Bazaar 📍0141 265 5844. The sweet counter here outshines the restaurant, so come for the tooth-rotting goodies, not the mains next door. Try the famous paneer ghewar (honey-comb cake soaked in treacle) and piping hot tikkis in spicy mango sauce. ₹

Tapri B4-E Prithviraj Rd 📍0141 236 0245. An awesome place to eat (see above), this is, in theory, actually a tearoom, with all sorts of brews – including herbal and iced varieties – from India and abroad. ₹

Tattoo Cafe 30 Hawa Mahal Rd 📍98280 65533. An okay-ish cafe-restaurant with one gigantic claim to fame – its rooftop is the vantage point for many of the best shots of the Hawa Mahal, which sits bang opposite. As such it’s only really worth swinging by in the morning, before the movement of the sun puts the famous frontage into relatively dull shadow; the meals here are so-so and the service is slow, so stick to their drinks, which include lassis, shakes, smoothies and coffee. ₹

DRINKING

MAP

100% Rock Hotel Shikha, R-14 Yudhister Marg ☎95711 11456. Located in what's effectively Jaipur's best nightlife area (which isn't saying much – there are just a few bars), this is an appealing, slightly quirky spot. Most of the menu is filled with odd cocktails named after Janis Joplin, Bob Dylan or CCR songs, though despite this the music playing is mostly 80s and 90s rock; however, running contrary to the name of the place, when there are enough local guys about, things can go all Bollywood or Punjabi very fast. Happy hour runs pretty much all day; buy one, get one free, repeat.

★#BC Traditional Heritage Haveli, Gayatri Marg ☎0141 400 3300. Although this cellar bar is a little hard to find, to the degree that some people in the neighbourhood have no idea it's there, plenty of Jaipur folk know precisely where this place is – one reason why it's heaving most nights, especially for the DJ nights on Sat, and the live bands on Sun. The music's loud on weekday nights too, beers and cocktails are fairly priced, and almost everyone's sucking on various flavours of hookah.

Polo Bar Rambagh Palace, Bhawani Singh Marg, 🌐tajhotels.com. For a truly enchanting evening, sink old-fashioned tipples in this memorable hotel's swanky, colonial-style bar. Hardly cheap, but quite surprisingly, not all that wallet-busting either.

SHOPPING

MAP

If you come across an Indian handicraft object or garment abroad, chances are it will have been bought in Jaipur. As a regular tourist, you'll find it harder to hunt out the best merchandise here, but as a source of souvenirs, perhaps only Delhi can surpass it. In keeping with Maharaja Jai Singh's original city divisions, different streets are reserved for purveyors of different goods. Bapu Bazaar, on the south side of the Pink City, is the best place for clothes and textiles, including Jaipur's famous block-print work and bandhani tie-dye. On the opposite side of town, along Amber Rd just beyond Zorawar Gate, rows of emporiums are stacked with gorgeous patchwork wall-hangings and embroidery; these places do a steady trade with bus parties of wealthy tourists, so be prepared to be hassled; haggle hard. For old-style Persian-influenced vases, along with tiles, plates and candleholders, visit the outlets of the city's renowned blue potteries along Amber Rd or the workshop of the late Kripal Singh.

★Anokhi 2nd Floor, KK Square Mall, Prithviraj Rd 🌐anokhi.com. This is the place to buy high-quality 'ethnic' Indian evening wear, salwar kameez and shirts. They also do lovely bedspreads, quilts, tablecloths and cushion covers.

Crossword 1st Floor, KK Square Mall, Prithviraj Rd ☎0141 237 9400. This big bookshop has a superb selection of English-language local fiction, and India-related titles.

Jodhpur Tailors Moti Lal Atal Rd (behind Hotel Neelam) ☎93515 84026. One of the best tailors in town. Hand-stitched suits, or you could just pick up a shirt, trousers or jodhpurs.

Kripal Kumbh Shiv Marg 🌐kripalkumbh.com. The former workshop-cum-home of Jaipur's most famous ceramicist, the late Kripal Singh, full of attractive and affordable examples of the city's traditional blue-and-white pottery. They also claim to be the only workshop in Jaipur producing entirely lead-free pottery that can safely be used with hot food (as well as featuring colours such as red and orange, which are impossible with lead glazes).

Rajasthali MI Rd, opposite Ajmeri Gate 🌐rajasthali.gov.in. This large, government-run emporium gives you an idea of the range of handicrafts available and approximate costs – although you'll probably find similar items at cheaper prices in the Pink City bazaars.

ENTERTAINMENT AND ACTIVITIES THEME PARK CHOKHI DHANI, 22KM SOUTH OF JAIPUR ON THE TONK RD, 🌐 CHOKHANIDHANI.COM. THIS RAJASTHANI THEME-PARK-CUM-RESTAURANT ATTRACTS DROVES OF WELL-HEELED JAIPURIS, ESPECIALLY AT WEEKENDS, WHEN THE WHOLE PLACE GETS WILDLY BUSY. THE ENTRANCE FEE INCLUDES AN EVENING MEAL PLUS ACCESS TO A WIDE RANGE OF ATTRACTIONS (THOUGH TIPS ARE EXPECTED AT MANY) – ELEPHANT, CAMEL AND BULLOCK-CART RIDES, FOLK DANCES, PUPPET SHOWS, MAGICIANS AND CHAPATTI-

MAKING DEMONSTRATIONS, TO NAME JUST A FEW. WHEN YOU'VE DONE WITH THE ENTERTAINMENT, MAKE FOR THE MUD-WALLED DINING HALL WHERE YOU'LL BE SAT ON THE FLOOR AND SERVED AN AUTHENTICALLY ORIGINAL RAJASTHANI VILLAGE THALI QUITE UNLIKE ANYTHING YOU'LL FIND IN THE RESTAURANTS OF JAIPUR, WITH LOTS OF RUSTIC RURAL DELICACIES LIKE CORNFLOUR CHAPATTIS, GATTA AND UNUSUAL CURRIED VEGETABLES. IT'S ALL A BIT HOKEY, BUT FUN. THE HIGHER ENTRANCE FEE INCLUDES A MEAL IN THE POSHER A/C FOOD HALL.

★Cinema The Raj Mandir Cinema (🌐therajmandir.com) on Bhagwan Das road is the place to go if you visit just one cinema while you're in India. Boasting a stunning Art Deco lobby and a 1500-seat auditorium, there are four screenings a day (usually at 12.30pm, 3.30pm, 6.30pm and 9.30pm). There's always a long queue for tickets, so get yours at least an hour before the show starts – or, if possible, the day before. Hollywood movies are often shown in English during the first week of their release.

Events The Zee Jaipur Literature Festival (🌐jaipurliteraturefestival.org) is one of Asia's biggest bookfests, held over five days in late January at the Diggi Palace hotel. Jaipur's SMS Stadium (🌐smsstadium.com) hosts Indian Premier League cricket fixtures in season.

Meditation The Dhamma Thali Vipassana Centre (🌐thali.dhamma.org), located in beautiful countryside on the road to Galta, is one of just fifty centres across the world set up to promote the practice of Vipassana meditation. Courses generally run for ten days (see website for schedule and details) and are free, but a donation is expected.

Swimming pools The nicest hotel pool currently open to non-guests is at the Alsisar Haveli (🌐alsisarhaveli.com); cheaper options include the pools at Shahpura House.

Yoga Kalpana Yoga Homestay, 69 Harikishan Somani Marg (🌐kalpyoga.com) offers proper courses in Bani Park; you don't actually have to stay here, but it helps. There are also free daily yoga classes from 6–7am at the Madhavanand Girls College, along Behari Marg (also in Bani Park), and 6.30–7.30am near the temple in Central Park (use Gate 3).

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE THERE ARE STACKS OF ATMS AROUND TOWN, AND MANY PRIVATE EXCHANGE PLACES IN JAIPUR (TRY THOMAS COOK ON MI RD; MON–SAT 9.30AM–5.30PM) OFFERING MORE OR LESS THE SAME RATES AS THE BANKS.

Hospitals For emergencies, the government-run SMS Hospital (☎0141 251 8422), on Sawai Ram Singh Rd, is best; treatment is usually free for foreigners, and it's open 24hr. Private hospitals include the Santokba Durlabhji Memorial Hospital (Bhawani Singh Marg; 🌐sdmh.in).

Left luggage The left luggage counter at the main bus station costs ₹50 per bag for 24 hours.

JEWELLERY AND GEMSTONES IN JAIPUR THE TWO BEST PLACES FOR SILVER JEWELLERY ARE JOHARI BAZAAR, THE BROAD STREET RUNNING NORTH OF SANGANERI GATE IN THE PINK CITY, AND CHAMELIWALA MARKET, JUST OFF MI ROAD IN A TANGLE OF ALLEYWAYS. THE LATTER ALSO HAS THE CITY'S BEST SELECTION OF GEMS, THOUGH IT'S ALSO A HARD PLACE TO SHOP IN PEACE, THANKS TO A PARTICULARLY SLIPPERY BREED OF SCAM MERCHANT, KNOWN LOCALLY AS LAPKARS. THESE YOUNG MEN – USUALLY SMARTLY DRESSED AND SPEAKING EXCELLENT ENGLISH – WILL REGALE YOU WITH BEGUILING TALES ABOUT HOW YOU CAN BUY GEMS IN JAIPUR AND SELL THEM BACK HOME FOR A MASSIVE PROFIT. THIS IS NONSENSE, OF COURSE, BUT BY THE TIME YOU REALIZE THIS YOU'LL BE THOUSANDS OF KILOMETRES AWAY WITH A HANDFUL OF WORTHLESS CUT-GLASS 'GEMS' WONDERING WHERE ALL THE MYSTERIOUS ENTRIES ON YOUR CREDIT-CARD BILL CAME FROM. IF YOU'RE PAYING FOR GEMSTONES OR JEWELLERY WITH A CREDIT CARD IN JAIPUR, DON'T LET IT OUT OF YOUR SIGHT.

There's a government-sponsored gem-testing laboratory (Mon–Fri & every first and third Sat of month 10am–5pm; ☎0141 256 8221) at the Gem and Jewellery Export Promotion Council, Rajasthan Chamber Bhavan, MI Rd near Ajmeri Gate, where you can have gemstones tested for authenticity. The cost is ₹1000 per stone, with reports delivered the following working day (or ₹1600 per stone for a same-day report if you deliver the stone before 1pm).

HOT AIR BALLOONING FOR BIRD'S-EYE VIEWS OF THE PINK CITY, SKY WALTZ (☎SKYWALTZ.COM) OFFERS HOT AIR BALLOON SAFARIS (1HR) BETWEEN APRIL AND FEBRUARY. THEY HAVE A NUMBER OF LAUNCH SITES IN AND AROUND THE CITY INCLUDING AMBER AND SAMODE, AN HOUR NORTH OF JAIPUR.

Police station The main police post is on Station Rd opposite the railway station (☎police.rajasthan.gov.in).

Post and couriers Jaipur's GPO is on MI Rd (Mon–Sat 10am–6pm), and the DHL office is at G-8 Geeta Enclave, C Scheme, Vinobha Marg, behind Standard Chartered Bank (Mon–Sat 9.30am–7.30pm; ☎0141 236 1159).

Volunteering Local NGO TAABAR (☎taabar.org), opposite the railway station, provides street children and runaways with shelter, food and education, and also operates a mobile health clinic. Volunteers are welcome.

Amber

On the crest of a rocky hill 11km north of Jaipur, AMBER (or Amer) was the capital of the leading Kachchwaha Rajput clan from 1037 until 1727, when Jai Singh established his new city at Jaipur. Amber's palace buildings are less impressive than those at Jaipur, but the natural setting – perched high on a narrow rocky ridge above the surrounding countryside and fortified by natural hills and high ramparts – is unforgettably dramatic.

Visit Amber early in the day if you want to avoid the big coach parties; if you're there in the afternoon, stay on to watch the atmospheric Amber sound-and-light show from the lakeside Kesar Kiyari complex below the fort.

Below the palace, the atmospheric but little-visited Amber town is full of remnants of Kachchwaha rule. One of the most striking local landmarks is the unusual Jagat Shiromani Temple, a large and florid structure located to the south of Amer Road; built by Man Singh after the death in battle of his son and would-have-been successor, its shrine is topped by an enormous shikhara and fronted by an unusually large, two-storey mandapa with a curved roof inspired by those on Mughal pavilions.

The palace complex Palace Daily 8am–5.30pm, 6.30pm–9.15pm; Shri Sila Devi temple closed noon–4pm • Entry Charge, audioguide Charge; on composite ticket • Sound-and-light show Daily 7.30pm in English (Charge); 8pm in Hindi (Charge) • www.amberfort.org

A path climbs from Amber village to Suraj Pole (Sun Gate) and the large Jaleb Chowk courtyard at the entrance to the main palace complex, where you'll find the ticket office and assorted official guides. On the left-hand side of the courtyard is the Shri Sila Devi temple, dedicated to Sila, an aspect of Kali. The statue within is one of the most revered in Jaipur, framed by an unusual arch formed from stylized carvings of banana leaves.

Next to the Shri Sila Devi temple, a steep flight of steps ascends to Singh Pole (Lion Gate), the entrance to the main palace. The architectural style is distinctly Rajput, though it's clear from the mirrored mosaics covering the walls that Mughal ideas also crept in.

Singh Pole leads into the first of the palace's three main courtyards, on the far side of which stands the Diwan-i-Am (Hall of Public Audience), constructed in 1639. This open-sided pavilion is notably similar in its overall conception to contemporary Mughal audience halls in Delhi and Agra, even if the architectural details are essentially Rajput.

Diagonally opposite, the exquisitely painted Ganesh Pole marks the entrance to a second courtyard, its right-hand side filled with a miniature fountain-studded garden, behind which lie the rooms of the Sukh Mahal, set into the side of the courtyard. The marble rooms here were cooled by water channelled through small conduits carved into the walls, an early and ingenious system of air-conditioning – the central room has a particularly finely carved example.

On the opposite side of the courtyard, the dazzling Sheesh Mahal houses what were the private chambers of the maharaja and his queen, its walls and ceilings decorated with intricate mosaics fashioned out of shards of mirror and coloured glass. On the far side of the courtyard beyond the Sheesh Mahal, a narrow stairwell winds up to the small Jas Mandir, decorated with similar mosaics and guarded from the sun by delicate marble screens.

From the rear of the Sheesh Mahal courtyard, a narrow corridor transports you into a further expansive courtyard at the heart of the Palace of Man Singh I, the oldest part of the palace complex. The buildings here are plain and austere compared to later structures, though they would originally have been richly decorated and furnished. The pillared baradari in the centre of the courtyard was once a meeting area for the maharanis, shrouded from men's eyes by flowing curtains.

Anokhi Museum of Hand Printing Kheri Gate • Tues–Sat 10.30am–5pm, Sun 11am–4.30pm • Charge • Camera/video camera charge • anokhi.com • Museum close between mid-May–mid-july for maintenance The town is also home to the excellent Anokhi Museum of Hand Printing, a ten-minute walk northwest from the temple towards Sagar Lake (look out for the blue-and-white signs). Housed in an attractive old haveli, the museum has an interesting collection of hand block-printed textiles and garments, along with live demonstrations of printing and carving by resident craftsmen.

Jaigarh

Daily 9am–4.30pm • Charge • A steep 15–20min climb on a path starting just below entrance to Amber palace • Chargeable Jeeps, including 2hr waiting time, from Amber town Perched high on the hills behind Amber Palace, the rugged Jaigarh Fort offers incredible vistas over the hills and plains below. The fort was built in 1600, though as the Kachchwahas were on friendly terms with the Mughals, it saw few battles. At the centre of the fort, a small museum has the usual old maps and photographs, plus a selection of cannons dating back to 1588. None of them, however, can hold a candle to the immense Jaivana cannon, the largest in Asia, which sits in solitary splendour at the highest point of the fort, five minutes' walk beyond the museum. Needing one hundred kilos of gunpowder for a single shot, the Jaivana could supposedly hurl a cannonball 35km – though its true military value was never gauged since it was never fired in battle.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION IT'S A 15MIN UPHILL AMBER WALK FROM THE TOURIST OFFICE TO THE PALACE. ALTERNATIVELY, YOU COULD RENT A JEEP; THEY HANG OUT ALONG THE MAIN ROAD AND AROUND THE TOURIST OFFICE AND CHARGE FOR THE RETURN TRIP, INCLUDING 1HR 30MIN WAITING TIME. A FAIR NUMBER OF TOURISTS WADDLE UP ON AN ELEPHANT, THOUGH GIVEN THEIR TREATMENT DURING 'TRAINING', THIS CANNOT BE ENCOURAGED.

By bus You can pick up the #AC1 at Ajmeri Gate, Sanganeri Gate or by the Hawa Mahal as it heads up to Amber (around 40min in moderate traffic).

By auto-rickshaw An auto from Jaipur will cost around ₹500 return, including a couple of hours' waiting time.

Samode

Palace entry charge for non-guests, redeemable against food and drink inside Hidden among the Aravalli Hills 42km northwest of Jaipur, SAMODE is notable for its impeccably restored eighteenth-century palace, now an award-winning heritage hotel, the Samode Palace (non-guests have to pay to visit). Some three hundred steps lead up from the palace to a hilltop fort, with panoramic views.

ARRIVAL AND ACCOMMODATION BY BUS AND TAXI SAMODE LOCAL BUSES TO SAMODE DEPART JAIPUR'S MAIN BUS STATION (SINDHI CAMP) BETWEEN 5AM AND 10PM (EVERY 30MIN; 2HR). TAXIS (1HR) COST FROM ₹2800, INCLUDING WAITING TIME.

★Samode Palace 🌐samode.com. Uncompromisingly romantic rooms covered with murals and filled with antiques. It's popular with groups, but the lovely rooftop pool and Indian fusion restaurant is for independent travellers only. Rates drop by 30 percent May–Sept. ₹₹₹₹

Sanganer

SANGANER, 16km south of Jaipur, is the busiest centre for handmade textiles in the region, and the best place to watch traditional block printers in action. There are a couple of large factories here, but most of the printing is done as a cottage industry in family homes. The town itself has ruined palaces and a handful of elegant Jain temples, including the Shri Digamber temple near Tripolia Gate.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS GOVERNMENT SANGANER BUSES AND MINIBUSES TO SANGANER FROM JAIPUR RUN FROM CHAND POLE VIA AJMER RD (EVERY 15MIN; 1HR), OR YOU CAN CATCH GOVERNMENT BUS #3A FROM AJMERI GATE.

Tonk

Long seen as little more than a rest-stop between Jaipur and Bundi or Udaipur – indeed, the name of the Midway restaurant on Highway 12 bears witness to the main reason the city is on the tourist radar at all – the city of TONK nonetheless has more than enough to warrant stopping for a look around. As well as the large Jama Masjid, it's also a good starting point to discover the nearby Bisalpur Dam, gorgeous step-wells at Hadi Rani Kund, and the Govinddeoiji Temple near the Dhakar Colony. The city has also found fame on account of being home to the largest hand-written quran shareef in the world, which is an impressive 125 inches long and 90 inches wide and contains 64 pages, each with 41 lines of immaculately written text. Unfortunately, it's rarely put on display.

Jama Masjid Moti Bagh Rd • Daily sunrise–sunset • Free In the southern part of town, the beautiful Jama Masjid is one of the larger mosques in India, with meenakari – a metal-colouring decoration process – adorning the walls. The construction of the mosque dates back to 1246 when Amir Khan, the first Nawab of Tonk, started the project, which was later completed in 1298 by his son, Nawab Wazirudhoula.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE

TONK

By bus Government buses (some non-a/c) run four times daily from Jaipur's Durgapura bus stand and take two hours. A large number of buses between Jaipur and Bundi/Kota also stop off at Tonk.

Ajmer and around The Nag Pahar ('Snake Mountain'), a steeply shelving spur of the Aravallis west of Jaipur, forms an appropriately epic backdrop for AJMER, home of the great Sufi saint Khwaja Muin-ud-din Chishti, who founded the Chishtiya Sufi order. His tomb, the Dargah Khwaja Sahib, remains one of the most important Islamic shrines in the world. The streams of pilgrims and dervishes (it is believed that seven visits here are the equivalent of one to Mecca) especially pick up during Muharram (Muslim New Year) and Eid, and for the saint's anniversary day, or Urs Mela.

Although Ajmer's dusty modern roads are choked with traffic, the narrow lanes of the bazaars around the Dargah Khwaja Sahib retain an almost medieval character, especially around Naya Bazaar, home to lines of rose-petal stalls and shops selling prayer mats, beads, perfumes and lengths of gold-edged green silk offerings. Finely arched Mughal gateways still stand at the main entrances to the old city, whose skyline of mosque minarets and domes is overlooked from on high by the crumbling Taragarh – for centuries India’s most strategically important fortress.

While most of Rajasthan consisted of princely states, Ajmer fell under British rule, and colonial-era relics can be found scattered across the city, among them the Jubilee clock tower opposite the railway station. The famous Mayo College, originally built as a school for princes and now a leading educational institution, is known in society circles as the ‘Eton of the East’.

For Hindu pilgrims and foreign travellers, Ajmer is important primarily as a jumping-off place for Pushkar, a twenty-minute cab ride away, and most stay only for as long as it takes to catch transport out. As a day-trip from Pushkar, however, it’s a highly worthwhile excursion, and as a stronghold of Islam, Ajmer is unique in Hindu-dominated Rajasthan.

Brief history A fort was first established at Ajmer in the tenth century by local Rajput chieftain Ajay Pal Chauhan, whose clan, the Chauhans, went on to become the dominant power in eastern Rajasthan until they were beaten in 1193 by Muhammad of Ghor. The Delhi sultans allowed the Chauhans to carry on ruling as their tributaries, but in 1365, with Delhi on the wane as a regional power, Ajmer fell to the kingdom of Mewar (Udaipur).

During the sixteenth century, the city became the object of rivalry between Mewar and the neighbouring kingdom of Marwar (Jodhpur). The Marwaris took it in 1532, but the presence of Khwaja Muin-ud-din Chishti’s dargah made Ajmer an important prize for the Muslim Mughals, and Akbar’s forces marched in just 27 years later.

The Mughals held onto Ajmer for more than two centuries, but as their empire began to fragment, the neighbouring Rajput kingdoms once again started giving the city covetous looks. It was eventually taken in 1770 by the Marathas, who subsequently sold the city to the East India Company for ₹50,000 in 1818. Thus, while most of Hindu-dominated Rajasthan retained internal independence during the Raj, Ajmer was a little Muslim enclave of directly ruled British territory, only reunited with Jodhpur and Udaipur, its former overlords, when it became part of Rajasthan in 1956.

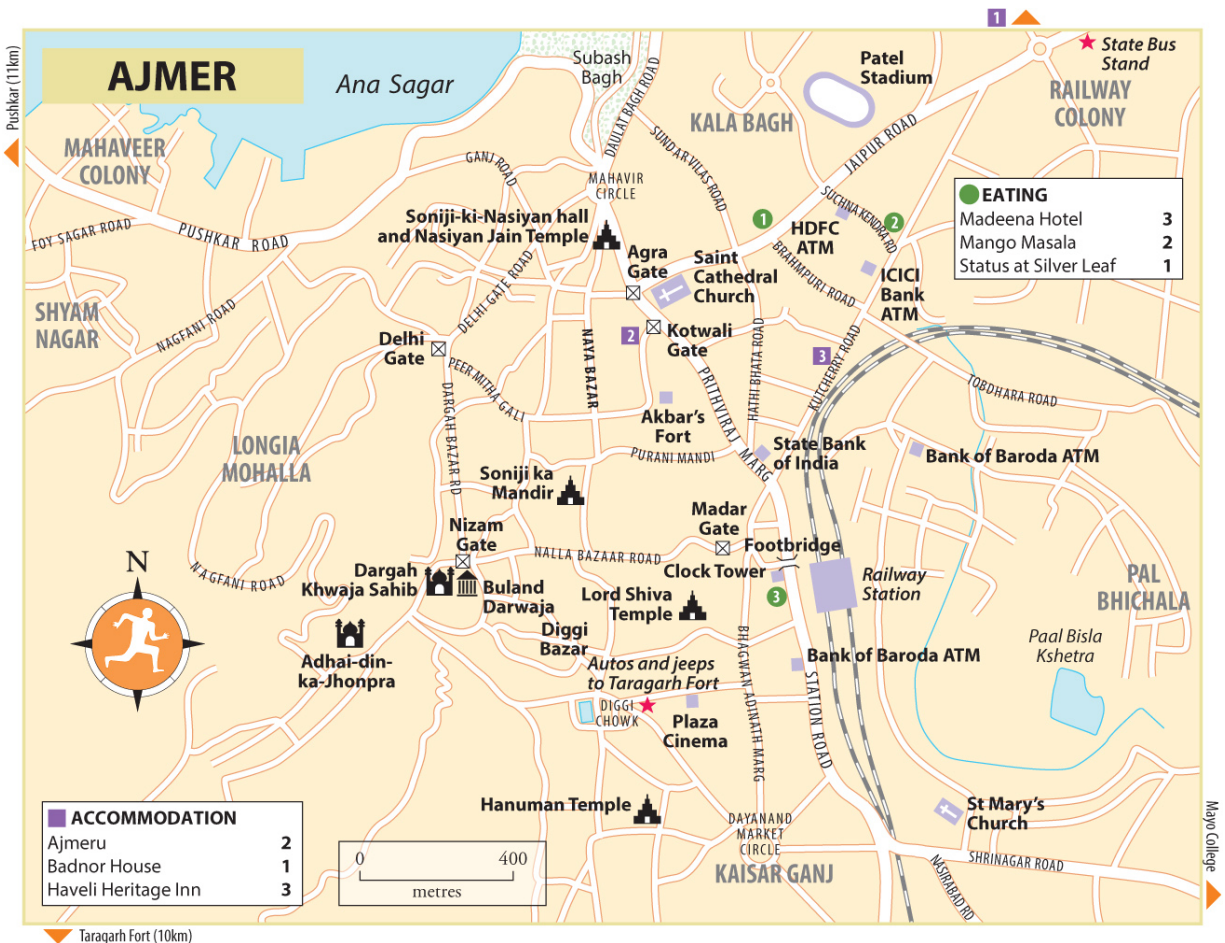

Dargah Khwaja Sahib Dargah Bazaar • Daily 5am–midnight; tomb closed Fri–Wed 3–4pm, Thurs closed 2.30–3.30pm •

Qawwali recitations from an hour or so before sunset–9pm •
dargahajmer.com

Housing the tomb of the revered Sufi saint, Khwaja Muin-ud-din Chishti, the Dargah Khwaja Sahib, or Dargah Sharif, is the most important Muslim shrine in India, attracting thousands of pilgrims each day. Founded in the thirteenth century, the dargah contains structures financed by many Muslim rulers, particularly the three great Mughals – Shah Jahan, Jahangir and, especially, Akbar, who came to the dargah to pray for a male heir and rewarded it with a new mosque when his wish was granted.

You enter the complex through the lofty Nizam Gate, donated by the nizam of Hyderabad in 1911. Once inside, you may be accosted by stern-looking young men claiming they are ‘official guides’. In fact, they are khadims, hereditary priests who lead pilgrims through rituals in the dargah in exchange for donations. Their services are not compulsory, whatever they may say.

Beyond the Nizam Gate lies the smaller Shajahani Gate, commissioned by Shah Jahan. Carry on through this to reach a courtyard, from where steps lead up on the right to the Akbari Masjid (Akbar’s Mosque), built by a grateful Akbar following the birth of his son Salim, the future emperor Jahangir.

Just beyond the Shahjahani Gate is a third gateway: the imposing, blue-and-green Buland Darwaza. After passing through it, you'll see, resting on raised platforms on either side, two immense cauldrons, known as degs, into which pilgrims throw money to be shared among the poor. The larger of the two, on the right, was donated by Akbar in 1567; the other was a gift from Jahangir upon his accession in 1605.

Beyond the khanas is an inner courtyard where the tomb of Khwaja Sahib lies inside the Mazar Sharif, a domed mausoleum made of marble. Nightly recitations of qawwali are held in the courtyard here, an exuberant form of religious singing, accompanied by harmonium and drums, which aims to lull the participants into a trance-like state called mast. The tomb inside is surrounded by silver railings and surmounted by a large gilt dome. Devotees file past carrying brilliant chadars, gilt-brocaded silk covers for the saint's grave, on beds of rose petals in flat, round head-baskets. Visitors are blessed, lightly brushed with peacock feathers and given the chance to touch the cloth covering the tomb in return for an offering.

Subsidiary shrines in the inner courtyard include one belonging to a daughter of Shah Jahan, plus a handful of generals and governors, and some Afghani companions of the saint. The delicately carved marble mosque behind the saint's tomb, the Jama Masjid or Shahjahani Masjid, was commissioned by Shah Jahan in 1628 and took nine years to build. Despite its grand scale, the emperor deliberately had it built without a dome so as not to upstage the saint's mausoleum next door.

Adhai-din-ka-Jhonpra Andar Kot Rd • Daily dawn–dusk • Free
The Adhai-din-ka-Jhonpra – or ‘two-and-a-half-day hut’ – to the south of town is the oldest surviving monument in the city, and one of the finest examples of medieval architecture in Rajasthan. Originally built in 660 AD as a Jain temple, and converted in 1153 into a Hindu college, it was destroyed forty years later by the Afghan chieftain Muhammad of Ghor, who had it renovated as a mosque. Tradition holds that its name derives from the speed with which it was constructed, but in fact the reconstruction took fifteen years, using materials plundered from Hindu and Jain temples; the name actually refers to a fakirs’ festival that used to be held here in the eighteenth century, a jhonpra (hut) being the abode of a fakir (Sufi mendicant). Defaced Hindu motifs are still clearly discernible on the pillars and ceilings, but the mosque’s most beautiful features are Koranic calligraphy decorating its seven-arched facade.

KHWAJA MUIN-UD-DIN CHISHTI AND THE URS MELA
BORN IN AFGHANISTAN IN 1156, KHWAJA MUIN-UD-DIN CHISHTI, INDIA’S MOST REVERED MUSLIM SAINT, BEGAN HIS RELIGIOUS CAREER AT THE AGE OF 13, WHEN HE DISTRIBUTED HIS INHERITANCE AMONG THE POOR AND ADOPTED THE SIMPLE LIFE

OF AN ITINERANT SUFI FAKIR (THE EQUIVALENT OF THE HINDU SADHU). ON HIS TRAVELS, HE SOAKED UP THE TEACHINGS OF THE GREAT CENTRAL ASIAN SUFIS, WHOSE EMPHASIS ON MYSTICISM, ECSTATIC STATES AND PURE DEVOTION AS A PATH TO GOD WERE REVOLUTIONIZING ISLAM DURING THIS PERIOD. KHWAJA SAHIB AND HIS DISCIPLES SETTLED IN AJMER AT THE BEGINNING OF THE THIRTEENTH CENTURY. WITHDRAWING INTO A LIFE OF MEDITATION AND FASTING, HE PREACHED A MESSAGE OF RENUNCIATION, AFFIRMING THAT PERSONAL EXPERIENCE OF GOD WAS ATTAINABLE TO ANYONE WHO RELINQUISHED THEIR TIES TO THE WORLD. MORE RADICALLY, HE ALSO INSISTED ON THE FUNDAMENTAL UNITY OF ALL RELIGIONS: MOSQUES AND TEMPLES, HE ASSERTED, WERE MERELY MATERIAL MANIFESTATIONS OF A SINGLE DIVINITY. KHWAJA SAHIB THUS BECAME ONE OF THE FIRST RELIGIOUS FIGURES TO BRIDGE THE GAP BETWEEN INDIA'S TWO GREAT FAITHS. AFTER HE DIED AT THE AGE OF 97, HIS FOLLOWERS LAUDED THE BHAGAVAD GITA AS A SACRED TEXT, AND EVEN ENCOURAGED HINDU DEVOTEES TO PRAY USING NAMES OF GOD FAMILIAR TO THEM, EQUATING RAM WITH 'RAHMAN', THE MERCIFUL ASPECT OF ALLAH – A SPIRIT OF ACCEPTANCE WHICH EXPLAINS WHY KHWAJA SAHIB'S SHRINE IN AJMER CONTINUES TO BE LOVED BY ADHERENTS OF ALL FAITHS.

The anniversary of Khwaja Sahib's death is celebrated with the Urs Mela, one of Rajasthan's most important religious festivals, held on the sixth day of the Islamic month of Rajab (around April). Pilgrims flock to the town to honour the saint with qawwali (Sufi devotional) chanting, while kheer (rice pudding) is cooked in huge vats at the dargah and distributed to visitors. At night religious gatherings called mehfils are held. It isn't really an affair for non-religious tourists, but the city does take on a festive air, with devotees from across the Subcontinent and beyond converging on Ajmer for the week leading up to it.

Akbar's Fort Museum Rd; access is from western side of complex • Museum Tues–Sun 10am–5pm • Charge • Near Ajmer Railway Station The small but attractive Akbar's Fort encloses a rectangular pavilion made of golden sandstone; here, in 1616, Akbar's son Jahangir received Sir Thomas Roe, the first British ambassador to be granted an official audience, after four years of trailing between the emperor's encampments. Today, the old palace houses a small museum, displaying mainly Hindu and Jain statues.

Nasiyan Jain Temple Prithivi Raj Marg • Daily 9am–5pm • Charge Perhaps the most bizarre sight in Ajmer is the mirrored Soniji-ki-Nasiya hall adjoining the Nasiyan Jain Temple, or 'Red Temple', in the heart of town. Commissioned in the 1820s by an Ajmeri diamond magnate, the Swarna Nagari 'City of Gold' hall on the upper level contains a huge diorama-style display commemorating the life of Rishabha (or Adinath), the first Jain tirthankara. The glowing tableau, containing a tonne of gold, features a huge procession of soldiers and elephants carrying the infant tirthankara from Ayodhya to Mount Sumeru to be blessed, while musicians and deities fly overhead.

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM AJMER ALL THE FOLLOWING TRAINS RUN DAILY.

Destination	Name	No.	Departs	Arrives
Abu Road	Yoga Express	19032	5.50am	10.35am
	Ashram Express	12958	1.50am	5.25pm
Agra Fort	Ajmer–Agra Superfast	22987	5.55am	12.30pm
	Sealdah Express	12988	12.45pm	8.25pm
Alwar	Ranikhet Express	15013	1.10pm	5.42pm
	Ajmer Shatabdi	12016	4.00pm	7.45pm
Delhi	Ashram Express	12915	2.35am	10.00am
	Ranikhet Express	15013	1.10pm	9.15pm
Jaipur	Sealdah Express	12988	12.45pm	2.30pm
	Ajmer Shatabdi	12016	4.00pm	5.45pm
Jodhpur	Ranikhet Express	15014	12.25pm	4.40pm
Udaipur	Udaipur Daily Special	19665	12.55am	6.35am
	Jaipur–Udaipur Express	12992	4.35pm	10.00pm

Ana Sagar

Laid out in the twelfth century, the artificial lake northwest of Ajmer known as Ana Sagar is worth a visit to see the exquisite marble pavilions called baradaris, or summer shelters, erected by Shah Jahan on the lake's eastern shore. Modelled on the Diwan-i-Am in Delhi's Red Fort, four of the five pavilions remain beautifully preserved, standing in the shade of trees and ornamental gardens laid out by Jahangir – particularly beautiful an hour before sunset.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN AJMER AND AROUND
AJMER'S RAILWAY STATION IS ON THE MAIN DELHI– AHMEDABAD RAILWAY LINE AND SLAP-BANG IN THE CENTRE OF TOWN. THE RESERVATIONS HALL (DAILY 8AM– 10PM) IS ON THE FIRST FLOOR OF THE SOUTH WING; GET THERE EARLY IN THE MORNING TO AVOID QUEUES OR SHELL OUT A LITTLE EXTRA FOR A TRAVEL AGENT.

By bus The State Bus Stand (☎0145 242 9398) lies 2km to the northeast of the train station on the Jaipur Rd. The majority of travellers visit Ajmer on a day-trip from Pushkar, but note that buses to and from Pushkar don't travel through the centre of Ajmer en route to the bus stand. State buses to Pushkar (40min) depart roughly every 15min until about 8.30pm, and afterwards hourly until dawn; deluxe buses operate to Jaipur (5 daily; 5hrs) and Delhi (4 daily; 10hr). Seats on private buses – many of which have connecting services from Pushkar – can be reserved at travel agents along Kutchery Rd towards Prithviraj Marg.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Ajmer's hotels aren't great value; you're better off staying in Pushkar and visiting from there. Accommodation also tends to get chock-full during the Urs Mela.

Ajmeru Off Prithviraj Marg, just inside Kotwali Gate ☎0145 243 1103. This comfortable hotel is one of the best-value places to stay in town, with bright and well-kept fan, air-cooled and a/c rooms with attached bathrooms and cable TV. 24hr check-out. ₹₹

Badnor House New Civil Lines, near RTDC Hotel Khadim ☎
badnorhouse.com. Tucked into a residential area, this friendly homestay offers clean modern rooms in a block away from the owner's house, all with a/c, attached bathrooms and TVs. ₹₹₹

★Haveli Heritage Inn Kutchery Rd, Phul Nawas ☎
haveliheritageinn.com. In a house from the 1870s that was once used as the state HQ of the Indian Congress Party – Nehru and Gandhi both stayed here (in Room 2). It actually sounds grander than it is, but if you think of this as a pension rather than a haveli, you'll get the right idea – the big attractions are the peaceful atmosphere and the delightful family that runs it. Rooms (air-cooled and a/c) are bright, spacious and attractively furnished, and there's great home-cooking. ₹₹

EATING

MAP

Note that none of the following serves alcohol; if you want a drink, find a local bottle shop.

Madeena Hotel Station Rd 📞01452625115. Muslim establishment serving tasty non-veg Mughlai curries, mostly involving 'mutton' (i.e. goat), in the form of korma, keema, masala or biryani, in full or half portions with freshly baked tandoori breads. There are also chicken, egg and veg options. ₹₹

★Mango Masala Sardar Patel Marg 📞mangomasala.com. Popular, rambling, studenty place serving all sorts, including meals like pizzas, veg burgers and salads, shakes, sundaes and ice-cream sodas, average coffee, and pastries like tasty little lemon tarts. ₹₹

Status at Silver Leaf Embassy Hotel, Jaipur Rd 📞01452425519. Tucked under street level, this sedate veg restaurant has tried its hardest to look plush, though it's usually quite empty. The food's good, though, with a big selection of curries; the paneer tufani—a creamy number served on a hotplate—is highly recommended. Chinese and Italian dishes also available. ₹₹

Taragarh Fort Daily sunrise–sunset • Free • 90min hike from Ajmer • Autos and jeeps leave from near Plaza Cinema on Diggi Chowk, west of the train station Three kilometres to the southwest of Ajmer, and just visible on the ridge high above the city, Taragarh (the Star Fort) was for two thousand years the most important strategic objective for invading armies in northwest India. Any ruler who successfully breached its walls, rising from a ring of forbidding escarpments, effectively controlled the region's trade. The fort is now badly ruined but is still visited in large numbers by pilgrims, who come to pay their respects at what must be one of the few shrines in the world devoted to a tax inspector. The Dargah of Miran Sayeed Hussein Khangsawar honours Muhammad of Ghor's chief revenue collector, slain in the Rajput attack of 1202 when, following one of the fort's rare defeats, the entire Muslim population of the fort was put to the sword.

The best way of getting to Taragarh is to trek along the ancient paved pathway from Ajmer, with superb views across the plains and neighbouring hills; to pick up the trailhead, follow the lane behind the Dargah Khwaja Sahib, past the Adhai-din-ka-Jhonpra and on towards the saddle in the ridge visible to the south.

Pushkar

Relaxed little PUSHKAR, 15km northwest of Ajmer, has become one of Rajasthan's prime chill-out spots – small enough to minimise that Indian city stress, yet with plenty to see and do (and, importantly, eat), travellers of a certain persuasion – typically young, hippie-ish types, mainly from France, Italy and Israel – often end up staying here for a week or more. Everything centres around the holy lake, surrounded by whitewashed temples and bathing ghats, and revered as one of India's most sacred sites: Pushkaraj Maharaj, literally 'Pushkar King of Kings'. There are also more than five hundred temples in and around Pushkar, although some, like the splendid Vishnu Temple, are out of bounds to non-Hindus; sat atop a hill southwest of town, Savitri Temple is of little historical or architectural importance, but makes a popular visit for its wonderful views out over the parched landscape.

According to legend, Pushkar came into existence when Lord Brahma, the Creator, dropped a lotus flower (pushpa) to earth from his hand (kar). At the three spots where the petals landed, water magically appeared in the midst of the desert to form three small blue lakes, and it was on the banks of the largest of these that Brahma subsequently convened a gathering of some 900,000 celestial beings – the entire Hindu pantheon. During the auspicious full-moon phase of October/November (the anniversary of the gods' mass meeting, or yagya), its waters are believed to cleanse the soul of all impurities, drawing pilgrims from all over the country. Alongside this annual religious festival, Rajasthanis villagers also buy and sell livestock at what has become the largest camel market (unt mela) in the world, when more than 150,000 dealers, tourists and traders fill the dunes west of the lake.

The lake and ghats Daily 24hr • Free • No footwear, smoking or photography allowed near ghats Everything in Pushkar revolves around the lake. Five hundred beautiful, whitewashed temples encircle the lake, connected to the water by 52 ghats – one for each of Rajasthan's maharajas, who built separate guesthouses in which to stay during their visits here. Primary among the ghats is Gau Ghat, sometimes called Main Ghat, from which ashes of Mahatma Gandhi, Jawaharlal Nehru and Shri Lal Bahadur Shastri were sprinkled into the lake. Brahma Ghat marks the spot where Brahma himself is said to have worshipped, while at the large Varaha Ghat, just off the market square, Vishnu is believed to have appeared in the form of Varaha (a boar), the third of his nine earthly incarnations. At all the ghats, visitors should remove their shoes at a reverential distance from the lake, and refrain from smoking and taking photos, though in general it's pretty relaxed.

Don't miss the 'shows', which take place at sunset time most days in season at Jaipur Ghat, to the east of the lake; this is where free-spirited travellers come to say goodnight to Lord Ra with the aid of dancing, fire juggling, yoga, tai chi and the like, blending seamlessly into the fabric of India (sort of) with dreadlocks, tie-dye and baggy pants. Their posturing usually ends up of immense amusement to Indian visitors, which is great fun to watch in itself.

Brahma Temple Daily 6am–8pm • Free, small fee for footwear storage outside Pushkar's most important shrine, the Brahma Temple, houses a four-headed image of Brahma in its main sanctuary, and is one of the few temples in India devoted to him. Raised on a platform in the centre of a courtyard, the inevitably crowded chamber is surrounded on three sides by smaller subsidiary shrines topped with flat roofs providing views across the desert.

Savitri Temple Daily 6am–6pm • Free • Charge Cable car 7.30am–6pm On the other side of town to the Brahma Temple, Savitri Temple sits on the summit of a nearby hill. The half-hour pant to the top (cable cars also available) is rewarded by matchless vistas over the town, surrounded on all sides by desert, and is best done before dawn, to reach the summit for sunrise, though it's also a great spot to watch the sun set. The temple itself is modern, but the image of Savitri is thought to date back to the seventh century.

ARRIVAL AND GETTING AROUND BY TRAIN PUSHKAR
PUSHKAR'S RAILWAY STATION IS TO THE NORTHEAST OF TOWN. THE SERVICE RUNNING BETWEEN PUSHKAR AND AJMER (DAILY BAR TUES & FRI; 45MIN) IS MORE OF A TOURIST TRAIN; IT DEPARTS AJMER AT 9.50AM, AND PUSHKAR AT 4.15PM. FOR ALL OTHER DESTINATIONS, YOU NEED TO TAKE A TRAIN FROM AJMER.

By bus There are two bus stands; buses to Ajmer (every 15min or so; 40min) leave from the Ajmer Bus Stand in the east of town, while government and some private inter-city buses for destinations further afield leave from the Marwar Bus Stand (☎0145 242 9398), located to the north of town. Most of the latter also stop en route at Ajmer, which has more connections, but it's not unknown for people who have bought tickets at agencies in Pushkar to find their seats double-booked when they try boarding in Ajmer; it's best to book in Ajmer itself. Lastly, some buses leave from outside private offices around Pushkar – basically, it's best to shop around.

Destinations from Marwar stand Bikaner (9 daily; 6hr 30min); Bundi (2 daily; 5hr); Delhi (2–4 daily, including overnight sleeper service; 10hr); Jaipur (2–4 daily; 3hr 30min); Jodhpur (1 daily plus 1 nightly; 6hr); Jaisalmer (2 nightly; 10hr).

By taxi Your accommodation will be able to call you a cab to Ajmer, or book with an agency in town. Those same agencies advertise rates – very tempting if you're in a small group – to other destinations around Rajasthan, including Bundi, Jaipur, Jodhpur and Udaipur.

Getting around There are very few cycle rickshaws and autos in Pushkar, so you'll probably have to walk to your hotel or hop on the back of a scooter. A number of places around the Ajmer Bus Stand rent out scooters and motorbikes.

Travel agents EKTA Travels acts as Indian Railways' agent in Pushkar and can arrange tickets for train journeys out of any station in India, and also handles bus and plane tickets. Their office is by the Ajmer bus stand (0145 277 2888).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Prices rise dramatically during the camel fair, with increases of anything from two to five times the normal rate.

HOTELS ★BRAHMA HORIZON OFF PANCH KUND RD, ☎
BRAHMAHORIZON.COM. ONE OF THE TOWN'S NEWER OPTIONS, THIS BOUTIQUE HOTEL IS RATHER WONDERFUL – SOME OF THEIR SUPREMELY COMFORTABLE ROOMS FACE
THE POOL, WHILE AFTER DARK THE OTHERS RECEIVE A SNAZZY NOT-TOO-DISTANT-FUTURE PINK GLOW FROM THE LIGHTS OUTSIDE. STAFF ARE EXTREMELY WELL DRILLED, AND RATES INCLUDE BREAKFAST. ₹₹₹

PUSHKAR PASSPORTS INDIAN AND WESTERN TOURISTS ALIKE ARE URGED BY LOCAL BRAHMIN PRIESTS TO WORSHIP AT THE LAKE; THAT IS, TO MAKE PUSHKAR PUJA. THIS TRADITIONAL RITUAL INVOLVES THE REPETITION OF PRAYERS WHILE SCATTERING ROSE PETALS INTO THE LAKE, AND THEN BEING ASKED FOR A DONATION. ON COMPLETION OF THE PUJA, A RED THREAD TAKEN FROM A TEMPLE IS TIED AROUND YOUR WRIST.
LABELLED THE 'PUSHKAR PASSPORT' BY LOCALS,
THIS SIMPLE TOKEN MEANS THAT YOU'LL NO LONGER ATTRACT PUSHY PUSHKAR PRIESTS AND CAN WANDER UNHINDERED ONTO THE GHATS.
INDIANS USUALLY GIVE A SUM OF ₹21 OR ₹31; ₹51
OR, AT MOST, ₹101 SHOULD SUFFICE FOR A

FOREIGN TOURIST. (HINDUS NEVER GIVE MONETARY GIFTS ENDING IN '0'; THE NUMBER '1' IS CONSIDERED AUSPICIOUS AND BELIEVED TO SYMBOLIZE NEW BEGINNINGS.) A FAVOURITE TRICK OF PHONEY PRIESTS IS TO ASK HOW MUCH YOU WANT TO PAY, THEN SAY A BLESSING FOR ASSORTED MEMBERS OF YOUR FAMILY, AND DEMAND THE AMOUNT YOU STATED TIMES THE NUMBER OF FAMILY MEMBERS BLESSED; DON'T BE BULLIED BY SUCH CHEAP TRICKS INTO GIVING ANY MORE THAN YOU AGREED.

BRAHMA, SAVITRI AND GAYITRI ALTHOUGH BRAHMA, THE CREATOR, IS ONE OF THE TRINITY OF TOP HINDU GODS, ALONG WITH VISHNU (THE PRESERVER) AND SHIVA (THE DESTROYER), HIS IMPORTANCE HAS DWINDLED SINCE VEDIC TIMES AND HE HAS NOTHING LIKE THE FOLLOWING OF THE OTHER TWO. THE STORY BEHIND HIS TEMPLE HERE IN PUSHKAR SERVES TO EXPLAIN WHY THIS IS SO, AND ALSO REVEALS THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE TEMPLES HERE NAMED AFTER BRAHMA'S WIVES, SAVITRI AND GAYITRI.

The story goes that Lord Brahma was to marry Savitri, a river goddess, at a sacrificial ritual called a yagna, which had to be performed at a specific, astrologically auspicious moment. But Savitri, busy dressing for the ceremony, failed to show up on time. Without a wife, the Creator could not perform the yagna at the right moment, so he had to find another consort quickly. The only unmarried woman available was a shepherdess of the untouchable Gujar caste named Gayitri, whom the gods hastily purified by passing her through the mouth of a cow (gaya means 'cow', and tri, 'passed through'). When Savitri finally arrived, she was furious that Brahma had married someone else and cursed him, saying that henceforth he would be worshipped only at Pushkar. She also proclaimed that the Gujar caste would gain liberation after death only if their ashes were scattered on Pushkar lake – a belief that has persisted to this day. After casting her curses, disgruntled Savitri flew off to the highest hill above the town. To placate her, it was agreed that she should have her temple on that hilltop, while Gayitri occupied the lower hill on the opposite, eastern side of the lake, and that Savitri would always be worshipped before Gayitri, which is exactly how pilgrims do it, visiting Savitri's temple first, and Gayitri's temple afterwards.

Greenhouse Resort Kishanpura Rd, Tilore, about 8km from Pushkar, thegreenhouseressort.com. A gorgeous eco-resort set in ten acres featuring twenty chic tents with attached bathrooms, pretty gardens, a huge pool, spa, licensed bar and an eco-styled restaurant. The resort's greenhouses supply the hotel with fresh veg, seasonal strawberries and roses. Packages available during the camel fair. ₹₹₹

★Inn Seventh Heaven Chhoti Basti, inn-seventh-heaven.com. Beautiful hotel in a 100-year-old haveli, mixing traditional and contemporary styles to memorable effect, with vine-draped balconies around a spacious interior courtyard and a range of beautifully furnished rooms. Rooms here really should cost a lot more than they do, and they've a decent restaurant, as well as meditation sessions and massage options. ₹₹

Pushkar Palace Choti Basti, hotelpushkarpalace.com. Attractive hotel occupying an old maharaja's palace in a plum position overlooking the lake. The place has lots of charm, with period-style rooms (most with lake views), a pretty courtyard and a rooftop restaurant, though one gets the sense that the owners have rested on their laurels a tad. Rates include breakfast but are exorbitant during the camel fair. ₹₹₹

Pushkar Resort Motisar Rd, Ganehra, sewara.com. Tranquil resort, inconveniently situated 5km out of town in the desert, with forty a/c cottages in pristine gardens and a kidney-shaped pool. Their restaurant has a non-veg menu and an alcohol licence. Booking recommended. ₹₹₹

HOSTELS AND BUDGET HOTELS ★EVEREST NEAR MAIN GAU (GHANDI GHAT), PUSHKARHOTELEVEREST.COM.

COLOURFUL, CHARACTERFUL GUESTHOUSE RUN BY A FRIENDLY AND KNOWLEDGEABLE FAMILY IN A PEACEFUL RESIDENTIAL LOCATION ABOVE TOWN. ROOMS (ALL ATTACHED BATHROOMS, SOME A/C) ARE SPOTLESSLY CLEAN, WITH MODERN BATHROOMS AND A LOVELY ROOFTOP RESTAURANT. ₹

★Madpackers Off Panch Kund Rd 📞0145 277 3444. Most of India's hostel chains have made a roost in Pushkar, and this is the best of the bunch, a beautifully decorated place with impactful haveli stylings – even the dorm rooms are gorgeous. It's de rigueur for guests to clamber up to the rooftop space for sunset. Rates include breakfast. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹

Zostel Off Panch Kund Rd, 🌐zostel.com. Above-average hostel which isn't quite as nice as Madpackers, on the same alley – then again, it's a bit cheaper, staff are perhaps better at organising special events, and with what may be the clincher for some, it does have a pool. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹

EATING

MAP

As Pushkar is sacred to Lord Brahma, all food within city limits is strictly veg: meat, eggs and alcohol are banned (at least, in theory). Pushkar's sweet speciality is malpua, which is basically a chapati fried in syrup, sold at sweetshops around town, and on Halwai Gali, the street directly opposite Gau Ghat.

RAJASTHAN'S ETHNIC MINORITIES LIKE MOST INDIAN STATES, RAJASTHAN HAS A NUMBER OF 'TRIBAL' PEOPLES WHO LIVE OUTSIDE THE SOCIAL MAINSTREAM. MANY ARE NOMADIC, AND OFTEN CALLED 'GYPSIES' – INDEED THE ROMANIES OF EUROPE ARE THOUGHT TO HAVE ORIGINATED AMONG THESE RAJASTHANI GYPSY TRIBES. THE MOST PROMINENT ARE THE KALBELIYAS, FOUND LARGELY IN PUSHKAR. THE KALBELIYAS DISCOVERED HOW TO CHARM SNAKES, AND THEY USED TO SING AND DANCE FOR ROYALTY, AS THEY

NOW DO FOR TOURISTS; BUT LIVING ON THE MARGINS OF SOCIETY, THEY SUFFER SIMILAR DISCRIMINATIONS TO THEIR BRETHREN IN EUROPE.

The Bhopas are a green-eyed tribe of nomads who used to work as entertainers to the maharajas, and to this day they make a living as itinerant poets and storytellers. They are asked to perform particularly where someone is sick, as their songs are believed to aid recovery.

In the Jodhpur region, many tourists take an excursion into the countryside to visit the Bishnoi, a religious rather than strictly ethnic group, whose tree-hugging beliefs chime with those of hippies in the West. Living in close proximity to them, though with a very different lifestyle, are the Bhils, great hunters who used to hire themselves out as soldiers in the armies of the Rajput kingdoms. They have their own language and religion, and their dances have become very popular, especially at Holi.

A Blue Star Jammi Kund Rd 0982 8355 263. Peaceful painted restaurant on the outskirts of town serving good Israeli dishes such as falafel, hummus and aubergine pita wraps, plus shakshuka, toasted sandwiches and excellent wood-fired pizzas. ₹

★Honey & Spice Laxmi Market, Main Bazaar 0145 510 55505. Tucked into an alley, this is much more imaginative than your average Pushkar backpacker café, a simple-looking place with an eyebrow-raisingly creative health-food menu. Try one of their salad bowls or ‘energising dishes’ featuring ingredients such as brown rice, miso, yak cheese, tofu and shiitake mushrooms; gluten-free options are also available. For drinks, they’ve excellent cardamom coffee or lassis made with saffron and almond, or fig, sesame and honey. ₹

Laura’s Cafe Main Bazaar 095291 05018. Something a little different, this cafe-restaurant prides itself on Spanish food including paella and gazpacho, though oddly most customers opt for the pizzas and shakshukas they could have almost anywhere else in Pushkar. You’ll pay to fill up; lake views come free, and they sometimes (shhh!) have alcohol available. ₹₹

The Sixth Sense Inn Seventh Heaven, Chhoti Basti, www.sixth-sense-heaven.com. The stylish restaurant atop this lovely haveli has a carefully chosen range of Indian and Italian food made using fresh seasonal ingredients. Food is hauled up from ground level by pulley; have a go at a Rajasthani thali, or the interesting thali salads, which feature at least a dozen types of fruit and veg. ₹₹

Sonu Juice Main Bazaar. Almost every juice combination you can think of is sold at this little stall, along with great muesli (or even porridge with banana milk), so it makes a great spot for breakfast. Small juices and shakes, or the monster including strawberry, banana, dates, coconut, muesli, cocoa and smashed-up Oreos. ₹₹

Sunset Café East side of lake 0145 277 2382. The perfect place to enjoy Pushkar's legendary lakeside sunsets and accompanying 'shows', with great views – though the outside seats fill up quickly towards dusk – and a selection of juices, lassis and shakes; most people, sensibly, avoid the meals. ₹

DRINKING

MAP

Despite Pushkar's sacred status, it's usually quite possible to find places surreptitiously serving alcohol – options are limited, you may not get to see a menu as such, and your drink may arrive wrapped in something or disguised as something else, but this all makes for a rather pleasing speakeasy atmosphere.

★Funky Monkey Jamni Kund Rd 98298 73439. This place started life as a tiny café in town; it's still there, but their new garden venue is a simply enchanting place to be at night. Dimly lit, it's decorated with 70s-rock paintings and posters, though the soundtrack is usually more blissed out, even dipping into dream pop – the likes of Mazzy Star and Cigarettes After Sex are often on the playlist. The food – pizzas, pasta and the like – is merely okay, but knowing smiles and winks from the staff suggest that more interesting things are on offer, often including strong mojitos and Cuba Libres.

Om Shiva Garden Choti Basti 0145 277 2305. The most brazen of the restaurants serving alcohol (they often even have a signboard indicating so outside); cocktails and cans of Kingfishers, though you'll need to keep a tissue wrapped around the latter. The food's pretty good, too, with pizza and curries the best options. The atmosphere is pleasant, with sand to scrunch your toes in, and fairy lights and Tibetan prayer flags overhead, but unfortunately staff often try to rush diners when there's demand for their table.

SHOPPING THOUGH IT ISN'T A CRAFT CENTRE AS SUCH, PUSHKAR IS A GOOD PLACE TO PICK UP TOURISTY SOUVENIRS, WITH ITS SHOPS CONVENIENTLY STRUNG OUT ALONG THE MAIN BAZAAR. AS WELL AS LOTS OF HIPPIE-TYPE CLOTHES, T-SHIRTS, SILVER JEWELLERY AND HINDI MUSIC, NOT TO MENTION CERAMIC CHILLUMS (PUSHKAR'S RIVAL THOSE OF HAMPI AND PUDUCHERRY IN THE SOUTH), YOU'LL FIND LAC BANGLES, RAJASTHANI TEXTILES, INCENSE, ESSENTIAL OILS AND – ALWAYS HANDY FOR A PAINT FIGHT – HOLI DYES. FOR NEW AND USED BOOKS, THERE'S A SLEW OF SHOPS ON THE MAIN BAZAAR, JUST SOUTH OF VARAHA CHOWK.

ACTIVITIES CAMEL AND HORSE RIDES A NUMBER OF PLACES ARRANGE SHORT CAMEL RIDES IN THE AREA AROUND TOWN; TRY AMBAY CAMEL SAFARI (☎94146 67148) OPPOSITE BRAHMA PALACE. FOR LONGER TRIPS IN THE DESERT AROUND PUSHKAR, INCLUDING RIDES ON HARDY MARWARI STEEDS, IT'S BETTER TO GO WITH SPECIALISTS SUCH AS BABU DESERT SAFARI (☎BABUDESERTSAFARIPUSHKAR.IN), WHO RUN FULL-DAY EXCURSIONS, AND OVERNIGHT JAUNTS.

Dance The Colleena Shakti Dance Center (☎colleenashakti.com) in the old Rangji Temple runs intensive courses in Odissi dance (Jan–May), plus drop-in sessions covering a range of styles.

Yoga and meditation Experienced teachers run yoga and meditation courses (3–30 days), and twice-daily Hatha yoga sessions, at Pushkar Yoga Garden (☎98282 79835), in a nice area out of town on Vamdev Rd, behind the Sikh gurudwara.

KARTIKA PURNIMA AND PUSHKAR CAMEL FAIR HINDUS VISIT PUSHKAR YEAR-ROUND TO TAKE A DIP IN THE REDEMPTORY WATERS OF THE LAKE, BUT THERE'S ONE PARTICULAR DAY WHEN BATHING HERE IS BELIEVED TO RELIEVE DEVOTEES OF ALL THEIR SINS. THAT DAY IS THE FULL MOON (PURNIMA) OF THE KARTIKA MONTH
(USUALLY NOV). DURING THE FIVE DAYS LEADING UP TO AND INCLUDING THE FULL MOON, PUSHKAR HOSTS THOUSANDS OF CELEBRATING DEVOTEES, FOLLOWING PRESCRIBED RITUALS ON THE LAKESIDE AND IN THE BRAHMA TEMPLE.

At the same time, a huge, week-long camel fair is held west of the town, with hordes of herders from all over Rajasthan gathering to parade, race and trade more than forty thousand animals. With the harvest safely in the bag and the surplus livestock sold, the villagers have a little money to spend enjoying themselves, which creates a light-hearted atmosphere that's generally absent from most other Rajasthani livestock fairs, backed up with entertainments including camel races, moustache competitions and a popular funfair, complete with an eye-catching sequence of enormous big wheels.

The popularity of Pushkar's fair, which now attracts three hundred thousand people annually, has – inevitably – had an effect on the event, with camera-toting package tourists now bumping elbows with the event's traditional pilgrims and camel traders. But while the commercialism can be off-putting, the festive environment and coming together of cultures does produce some spontaneous mirth: in 2004, the second prize in the moustache contest was won by a Mancunian and nowadays the winning 'taches are so long that it is not uncommon for competitors to arrive with their moustaches rolled up into buns and fixed to the side of their faces before unleashing them and whipping them around in the air like a lasso.

INFORMATION WHEN TO GO THE FESTIVAL IS HELD EACH NOVEMBER; FOR SPECIFIC DATES, SEE www.pushkarcamelfair.com. IT'S BEST TO GET HERE FOR THE FIRST TWO OR THREE DAYS TO SEE THE MELA IN FULL SWING; BY THE FINAL FEW DAYS OF THE FESTIVAL MOST OF THE BUYING AND SELLING HAS BEEN DONE AND THE BULK OF THE HERDERS HAVE PACKED UP AND GONE HOME. THE DAY BEFORE THE FESTIVAL OFFICIALLY STARTS IS ALSO GOOD – PRETTY MUCH ALL THE TRADERS AND LIVESTOCK HAVE ARRIVED, BUT THERE ARE RELATIVELY FEW TOURISTS AROUND.

Booking accommodation It's best to book a room as far ahead as possible, though if you arrive early in the day – and prepared to hunt – securing accommodation shouldn't be a problem. If you get stuck, you could try the RTDC Tourist Village close to the fairgrounds – ask at the tourist office or check www.rtdc.in.

Shekhawati

Northwest of Jaipur, the land becomes increasingly arid and inhospitable, with farms and fields gradually giving way to wind-blown expanses of undulating semidesert dotted with endless khejri trees and isolated houses enclosed in stockades of thorn. Although now something of a backwater, this region, known as Shekhawati, once lay on an important caravan route connecting Delhi and Sind (now in Pakistan) with the Gujarati coast, before the rise of Bombay and Calcutta diverted the trans-Thar trade south and eastwards. Having grown rich on trade and taxes, Shekhawati's Marwari merchants and landowning thakurs spent their fortunes competing with one another to build the grand, ostentatiously decorated havelis that still line the streets of the region's dusty little towns – an incredible concentration of mansions, palaces and cenotaphs plastered inside and out with elaborate and colourful murals. Wandering the streets of many of its towns, the mind marvels at just how grand these remote-feeling outposts must have looked back in the day.

Considering the wealth of traditional art here, and the region's proximity to Jaipur, however, most of Shekhawati still feels surprisingly far off the tourist trail; foreigners who pass this way tend to be older Europeans on group tours, which is understandable since travelling independently here can be time-consuming, and the region forms a logical start or finish line to a wider trip around Rajasthan. If you're doing Shekhawati under your own steam, it's a good idea to base yourself in one of the nicer, better-connected towns – such as Nawalgarh or Mandawa – and fan out from there; group tours tend to chalk off haveli after haveli, which can quickly start to feel repetitive, but for many the real pleasure of Shekhawati lies not in visiting specific places of interest, but simply strolling around, taking in the highly distinctive atmosphere.

ARRIVAL AND GETTING AROUND BY BUS AND SHEKHAWATI JEEP GETTING AROUND IS BEST DONE BY ROAD. REGULAR LOCAL BUSES, OFTEN OVERCROWDED, CONNECT SHEKHAWATI'S MAIN TOWNS, WHILE JEEPS ALSO SHUTTLE BETWEEN TOWNS AND VILLAGES, PICKING UP AS MANY PASSENGERS AS THEY CAN CRAM IN.

By train At the time of writing, the only decent train access to the region is on Delhi–Bikaner services, some of which (5 daily) stop at Ratangarh and Churu; there are also two daily services heading from Delhi to Jhunjhunu and Nawalgarh. The line from Churu to Jaipur has been out of action for some time, but will hopefully reassume service before too long.

On a tour The majority of foreign visitors to Shekhawati go with a tour of some kind; you can book these with Delhi-based agencies such as Intense India Tours (www.intenseindiatours.com), though many of the havelis listed in this section offer their own tours once you're there, including options in Nawalgarh and Mandawa.

Nawalgarh

At the centre of Shekhawati, surrounded by desert and khejri scrub, the lively little market town of NAWALGARH makes – along with nearby Mandawa – the most convenient and congenial base for exploring the region, with a bumper crop of painted havelis and a picturesque bazaar, along with a decent range of accommodation.

VISITING SHEKHAWATI'S HAVELIS A NUMBER OF SHEKHAWATI'S HAVELIS, TRADITIONAL TOWNHOUSES COMMON TO THE REGION, HAVE NOW BEEN RESTORED AND OPENED AS MUSEUMS, PARTICULARLY IN NAWALGARH. MOST, HOWEVER, REMAIN IN A STATE OF PICTURESQUE DILAPIDATION AND ARE STILL OCCUPIED BY LOCAL FAMILIES, WHILE OTHERS HAVE BEEN ABANDONED, AND ARE NOW EMPTY APART FROM A SOLITARY CHOWKIDAR (CARETAKER-CUM-GUARD). VISITORS ARE WELCOME TO LOOK AROUND INSIDE SOME HAVELIS IN RETURN FOR A SMALL TIP, WHILE OTHERS REMAIN CLOSED TO OUTSIDERS. IF IN DOUBT, JUST STICK YOUR HEAD IN THE FRONT DOOR AND ASK, BUT REMEMBER THAT YOU'RE EFFECTIVELY ENTERING SOMEONE'S PRIVATE HOME, SO NEVER GO INSIDE WITHOUT PERMISSION. VISITING TIMES ARE USUALLY BETWEEN SUNRISE AND SUNSET. BE AWARE OF 'GUIDE TOUTS', WHO ACCOST YOU ON THE STREET WITH OFFERS OF HAVELI TOURS. THEY MIGHT TAKE YOU TO A HAVELI OR TWO, BUT THEY ARE NOT LICENSED GUIDES, AND THEIR SOLE OBJECTIVE IS TO GET YOU TO A SHOP THAT PAYS THEM COMMISSION.

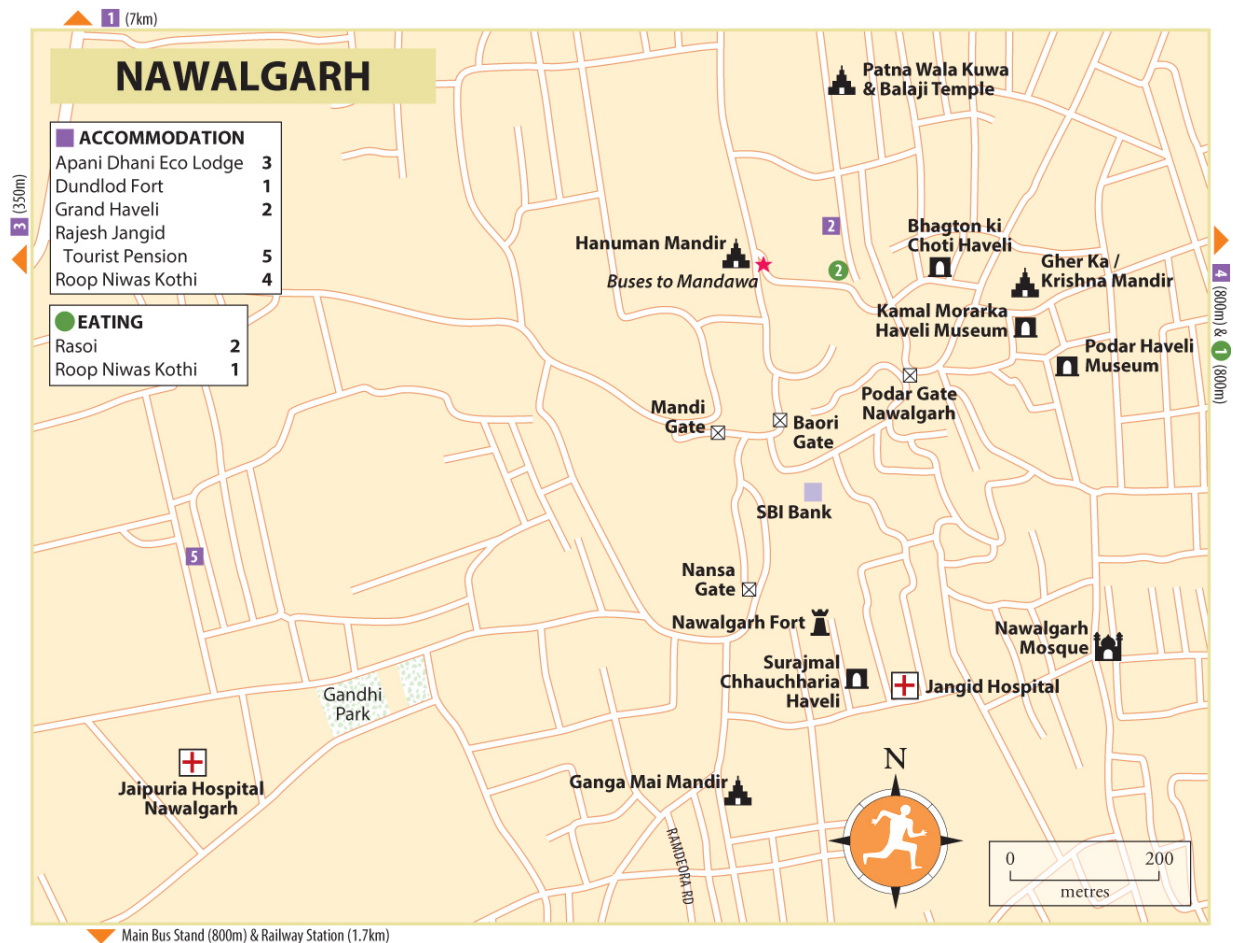

Podar Haveli Museum Rambilas Podar Rd • Daily: summer 8am–8pm; winter 8.30am–6.30pm • Entry Charge, camera/video camera charge • www.podarhavelimuseum.org

The logical place to start a tour of Nawalgarh is on the east side of town at the magnificent Anandi Lal Podar Haveli, which now houses the Podar

Haveli Museum. Built in 1920, this is one of the few havelis in Shekhawati to have been restored to its original glory, and boasts the most vivid murals in town, including steam trains, soldiers drilling with rifles, and a clever 3D-like panel of a bull's head that transmogrifies into that of an elephant as you move from left to right. There's also a mildly diverting series of exhibits showcasing aspects of Rajasthani life, including musical instruments, turbans and traditional costumes, and one hall has some fun models of Rajasthan's most famous forts.

Kamal Morarka Haveli Museum Naya Bazaar • Daily 8am–6pm • Charge A short walk to the north of the Dr Ramnath A. Podar Haveli Museum lies the fine Kamal Morarka Haveli Museum, decorated with murals of Shiva, Parvati, Krishna and Jesus, plus a baithak complete with a fine old hand-pulled fan (punkah). Directly opposite the Morarka Haveli lies the eye-catching Krishna (Gher Ka) Mandir, dating from the mid-eighteenth century, a florid mass of delicate chhatris.

Bhagton ki Choti Haveli Near Podar Gate • Daily 8am–6pm • Charge About 200m east of the Morarka Haveli, the unrestored, 150-year-old Bhagton ki Choti Haveli has an unusually varied selection of murals including a European-style angel and Queen Victoria (over the arches by the right of the main door). On the left, a trompe-l'oeil picture shows seven women in the shape of an elephant, while other pictures show Europeans riding bicycles, along with a steamboat and a train.

The fort

At the heart of town, the fort (Bala Qila) has more or less vanished under a clutch of modern buildings huddled around a central courtyard that now hosts the town's colourful vegetable market. The dilapidated building on the far left-hand side of the courtyard (by the Bank of Baroda) boasts a magnificent, eerily echoing Sheesh Mahal, covered in mirrorwork, which once served as the dressing room of the maharani of Nawalgarh, its ceiling decorated with pictorial maps of Nawalgarh and Jaipur. You'll have to pay minimal fees to see the room; if no one's around, ask at the sweet factory on the opposite side of the courtyard.

Surajmal Chhauchharia Haveli Near Nansa Gate • Daily 8am–6pm •
Charge Havelis dot the streets south and southeast of the Nansa Gate, one of the quietest and most atmospheric parts of town. These include the Surajmal Chhauchharia Haveli, whose murals feature two small pictures of Europeans floating past in a hot-air balloon. The painter took some playful licence as to the mechanics involved, with the passengers keeping their balloons aloft by blowing into them through small pipes. The place is poorly signed and a little hard to find by yourself; ask around.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN THE NAWALGARH RAILWAY STATION IS 2.5KM WEST OF THE TOWN CENTRE. TRAINS LINK NAWALGARH WITH JHUNJHUNU (2–4 DAILY; 45MIN), SIKAR (2–4 DAILY; 45MIN) AND DELHI (2 DAILY; 6–7HR), AND THERE ARE ERRATIC SERVICES TO BIKANER AND JAIPUR.

By bus Nawalgarh's bus and jeep stand is 1.5km west of the main area of interest, by auto-rickshaw to the town's various hotels and guesthouses. Few buses start or finish here, so schedules are usually best guesses, and for destinations like Jaipur (3hr 30min) and Delhi (6hr 30min) you might as well just stand on the road and flag down whatever passes; there are also buses to Ajmer (7 daily; 3hr 30min) and Jodhpur (4 daily; 6hr 30min). Local buses (all 1–2 hourly), including services to Fatehpur (1hr 30min), Mandawa (1hr 30min) and Jhunjhunu (1hr) leave from the bus stand just past Baori Gate on the northern edge of town.

GETTING AROUND AND INFORMATION GETTING AROUND FOR TRIPS AROUND THE REGION, YOU CAN EITHER JUMP ON AND OFF CHEAP, CRAMPED VILLAGE-TO-VILLAGE JEEPS OR RENT A VEHICLE THROUGH APANI DHANI (SEE BELOW) OR THE RAJESH JANGID TOURIST PENSION. CYCLES CAN ALSO BE RENTED AT BOTH OF THESE PLACES FOR ₹50/DAY.

Tours The owners of the Apani Dhani and the Rajesh Jangid Tourist Pension run socially responsible tours of Shekhawati including jeep tours of nearby towns and other places of interest; walking tours of Nawalgarh; and tours by camel cart. The Roop Niwas Kothi hotel also offers horseriding jaunts on its stable of pure-bred Marwari steeds, as well as short camel rides and more extended horse and camel safaris (see royalridingholidays.in).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

★Apani Dhani Eco Lodge Northwest edge of town, apanidhani.com. Occupying a fetching cluster of mud-walled Rajasthani village-style huts (with clean attached bathrooms) dripping with bougainvillea, this eco-resort offers a perfect example of sustainable local tourism – 5% of room rates go to support environmental and educational projects, and local artisans earn some income through involvement in the resort’s stimulating programme of craft and cultural activities. Guests share the premises with the owner’s extended family, giving it the feel of a homestay, and rooms – especially those in the slightly more expensive superior category – have plenty of rustic charm. There’s also excellent organic pure-veg food, with nearly all of the fresh produce plucked from the garden, as well as activities including tie-dye and cookery classes, plus tours (see above). No alcohol. Book ahead; you may find it locked otherwise. ₹₹

Grand Haveli Baori Gate grandhaveli.com. Occupying the beautifully restored, century-old Patnawalo ki Haveli, the individual rooms and suites here are a mixed bag; some feature jharokas and coloured frescoes, others are plain and poky – ask to see a couple first. Staff are not exactly on the ball here, and wi-fi is only available in the first courtyard (often full of mosquitoes), but there’s a so-so licenced restaurant on site. ₹₹₹

Rajesh Jangid Tourist Pension On the western edge of town, just north of Maur Hospital, touristpension.com. Homely guesthouse offering simple but spotless and good-value rooms in a sociable Brahmin family home; all have solar-heated water and the most expensive boast beautiful murals. There’s also excellent pure-veg food while activities include jeep tours, Hindi classes and workshops in tie-dying, cooking and bangle-making. ₹₹

Roop Niwas Kothi 1km east of the town centre, roopniwaskothi.com. This rambling Raj-era mansion has a certain faded elegance, old-fashioned rooms, a nice swimming pool and plenty of period charm at a fairly modest price. The restaurant’s good, too (see below). ₹₹₹

OUT OF TOWN DUNDLOD FORT DUNDLOD, 7KM NORTH OF NAWALGARH 0159 425 2519. THE TINY TOWN OF DUNDLOD IS HOME TO AN OLD FORT THAT HAS BEEN TURNED INTO A HERITAGE HOTEL; THE ROOMS ARE A BIT SHABBY AND OVERPRICED, THOUGH THE PUBLIC AREAS ARE

ATMOSPHERIC AND IT'S A GOOD PLACE TO ORGANIZE HORSERIDING TOURS (3–12 DAYS) ON ONE OF THE CASTLE'S THOROUGHBRED MOUNTS. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

There are very few decent places to eat in Nawalgarh, whose population mostly dines at home, or at the many, many puri stands dotted around the bazaar – there's a really good one just east of the Podar Gate.

Rasoī Just south of Grand Haveli 📞77260 00211. At last, Nawalgarh has a proper restaurant! It's not bad, either, and popular with locals and domestic tourists, particularly at night, when fairy lights magic up the garden. Veg mains, include a lot of paneer choices; there are (oddly) Mexican dishes on the menu too, and cheap dosas (usually lunch only). ₹₹

Roop Niwas Kothi 1km east of the town centre, 📞roopniwaskothi.com. Popular with passing coach parties as a post-sightseeing lunch stop, this elegant hotel (see above) has the most reliable restaurant in town, though sadly this isn't saying much. If a group's visiting, you can join the siege on the buffet counter, though there's an à la carte menu too. ₹₹

Parasrampura Buses run to and from Nawalgarh (1–2 hourly; 1hr) The serene hamlet of PARASRAMPURA, 20km southeast of Nawalgarh, is prettified by some of Shekhawati's oldest painted buildings. Monuments include the Gopinath temple, built in 1742, whose murals depict the torments of hell alongside images of the famous local Rajput ruler, Sardul Singh, with his five sons. Some of the paintings are unfinished, as the artists were diverted to decorate the chhatra of Rajul Singh, who died that same year. The large dome of this exquisite memorial contains a flourish of lively murals, once again including images of hell, and of Sardul Singh with his sons. Parasrampura's modest fort is on the west bank of the dry riverbed.

Jhunjhunu

Spreading in a mass of brick and concrete from the base of a rocky hill, Shekhawati's de facto capital of JHUNJHUNU is a busy and fairly unprepossessing town, though it preserves an interesting old central bazaar and a fine collection of painted havelis. Jhunjhunu is usually visited as a day-trip from Nawalgarh or Mandawa, though it has a couple of decent accommodation options if you want to stay.

The large Khetri Mahal functions as the hub of tourist interest, and stretching east of the Khetri Mahal is Jhunjhunu's main bazaar, centred around Futala Market, a fascinating and hopelessly confusing tangle of narrow streets crammed with dozens of tiny, charmingly old-fashioned shops. Jhunjhunu's finest havelis are spread out along Nehru Bazaar, immediately east of the main bazaar.

Jhunjhunu is also a staging post for those on their way to the wonderful Magnetic Fields festival, which takes place in the nearby town of Alsisar each December.

Khetri Mahal West of Nehru Bazaar • Daily 10am–5pm • Free Hidden away in the alleyways west of Nehru Bazaar is Jhunjhunu's most striking building, the magnificent Khetri Mahal of 1770, a superb, open-sided sandstone palace with cusped Islamic-style arches that wouldn't look out of place amid the great Indo-Islamic monuments of Fatehpur Sikri. The whole edifice seems incongruously grand amid the modest streets of central Jhunjhunu and is largely abandoned, save for the upper terraces that serve as impromptu open-air classrooms for local schoolchildren. A covered ramp, wide enough for horses, winds up to the roof, from where there are sweeping views over the town and across to the massive ramparts of the sturdy Badalgarh Fort (currently closed to the public) on a nearby hilltop.

Mohanlal Ishwardas Modi Haveli North side of Nehru Bazaar • Daily 10am–5pm • Charge Further east down Nehru Bazaar, the Mohanlal Ishwardas Modi Haveli has a good selection of entertainingly naive portraits. Unusual oval miniatures of various Indian bigwigs frame the entrance to the zenana (women's courtyard), while in the zenana itself a long frieze of miniature portraits runs around the top of the arches showing assorted European and Indian personages sporting a range of flouncy costumes, silly hats and magnificent moustaches.

Bihari Ji Temple South of Cloth Market Rd • Daily 6am–10pm • Free
To the northeast of Nehru Bazaar, the striking little Bihari Ji Temple features some of the oldest murals in Shekhawati, painted in 1776 in black and brown vegetable pigments, including a dramatic depiction inside the central dome of Hanuman's monkey army taking on the forces of the many-headed demon king Ravana.

Dargah of Kamaruddin Shah West of Khetri Mahal • Daily sunrise–sunset • Free At the foot of the craggy Nehara Pahar lies the Dargah of Kamaruddin Shah, an atmospheric complex comprising a mosque and madrasa arranged around a pretty courtyard (still retaining some of its original murals), with the ornate dargah (tomb) of the Sufi saint Kamaruddin Shah in the centre. Women must wear headscarves.

Mertani Baori Near Pipli Circle • Daily 24hr • Free North of the town centre lies the Mertani Baori, one of the region's most impressive step-wells. Constructed in 1783 by Mertani, the widow of Sardul Singh, this step-well is thought to be a staggering 30m deep.

Rani Sati Mandir Off Rani Sati Rd • Daily 5am–1pm & 3–10.30pm • Free To the northeast of town is the extraordinary Rani Sati Mandir, dedicated to a merchant's wife who committed sati in 1595. The shrine, with its enormous yet intricate facade, is reputedly the richest temple in the country after Tirupati in Andhra Pradesh – although similar claims are made for the Nathdwara temple – receiving hundreds of thousands of pilgrims each year and millions of rupees in donations. Its immense popularity bears witness to the enduring awe with which satis are regarded in the state.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN THE TRAIN JHUNJHUNU STATION IS AROUND 1.5KM SOUTHWEST OF THE MAIN BAZAAR, HOSTING SERVICES FROM DELHI (2 DAILY; 5HR 30MIN), NAWALGARH (2–4 DAILY; 45MIN) AND SIKAR (2–4 DAILY; 1HR 30MIN); AS OF MID-2019, THERE ARE NO SERVICES TO BIKANER OR JAIPUR, THOUGH THESE WILL BE REINTRODUCED IN DUE COURSE.

By bus The government bus stand (0159 223 2664) is just south of the town centre. There are frequent services to Nawalgarh (1–2 hourly; 1hr), Mandawa (every 45min; 45min–1hr) and towns throughout Shekhawati, as well as to Bikaner (4 daily; 5hr 30min), Jaipur (every 30min; 4hr), Jodhpur (6 daily; 7hr), Ajmer (2 daily; 4hr) and Delhi (hourly, including a 9pm sleeper bus; 7hr).

GETTING AROUND AND INFORMATION BY RICKSHAW
JHUNJHUNU IS QUITE SPREAD OUT, AND WALKING AROUND CAN BE TIRING, BUT MANY OF THE STREETS OF THE OLD TOWN ARE TOO NARROW FOR CARS; RICKSHAWS OPERATE AS TAXIS, PICKING UP AS MANY PASSENGERS AS THEY CAN.

Tours The Jamuna Resort offers full-day tours around Shekhawati by car or jeep as well as shorter camel tours and three- to five-day cycling trips to local towns.

ACCOMMODATION THERE ARE NO GOOD RESTAURANTS IN TOWN, AND PROBABLY END UP EATING WHERE YOU'RE STAYING.

Fresco Palace Paramveer Path, off Station Rd 09414902905. Pleasant, modern hotel (although there aren't many frescoes in evidence), with comfortable, slightly chintzy rooms (all a/c) and a relaxing garden restaurant. ₹₹₹

Jamuna Resort Delhi–Sikar Rd 0159 223 2871. This village-style resort on the eastern edge of town comprises a cluster of thatch-roofed cottages (all a/c) set amid extensive grounds complete with pool and garden restaurant. The more expensive rooms are exquisitely decorated with mirrorwork and traditional murals. They also run courses in Indian cooking and art, plus free yoga classes. Also a good place to arrange tours (see above). ₹₹

Mandawa

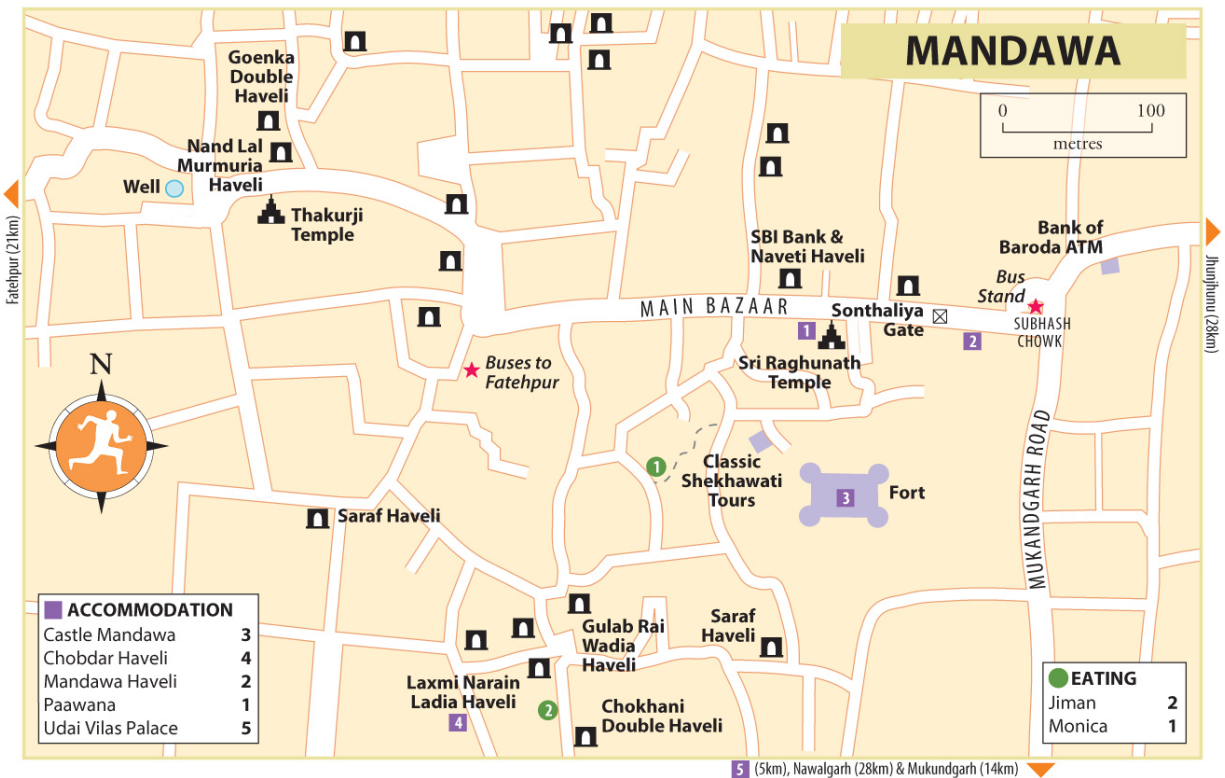

Rising from a flat, featureless landscape roughly midway between Jhunjhunu and Fatehpur, MANDAWA was founded by the Shekhawats in 1755 and is now the most tourist-oriented place in Shekhawati, although the handicraft shops, touts and guides detract very little from the town's profusion of beautifully dilapidated mansions.

Naveti Haveli Main Bazaar, now the SBI Bank • Daily 24hr (when gate unlocked) • Free Tours usually begin with the Naveti Haveli on the main bazaar; it's now a bank, though the murals on its eastern side – you'll have to duck through a gate – are Mandawa's most entertaining, including well-preserved images of a bird-man attempting to take flight, the Wright Brothers' aeroplane, a man using a telephone and a strongman pulling a car. Excellent picture fodder.

Nand Lal Murmuria Haveli West of Main Bazaar • Interior usually closed A ten-minute walk west from here brings you to an interesting cluster of buildings centred around the Nand Lal Murmuria Haveli. The murals here are relatively modern, dating from the 1930s and executed in a decidedly flowery and sentimental style, perhaps influenced by contemporary European magazines, with images of various Venetian scenes, George V, Nehru riding a horse and the legendary Maratha warrior Shivaji. Next door, the sun-faded Goenka Double Haveli (not to be confused with either of the other Goenka havelis nearby) is one of the largest and grandest in Mandawa, with two separate entrances and striking elephants and horses on the facade.

Gulab Rai Ladia Haveli Southwest of fort, near Chobdar Haveli • Interior usually closed The Gulab Rai Ladia Haveli is one of the finest in town. Its south-facing exterior wall is particularly interesting, with unusually racy (albeit modestly small) murals depicting, among other things, a Kama Sutra-like scene in a railway carriage. The interior of the haveli is entered via a grand ramp, with Belgian-glass mirrorwork over the finely carved door leading into the zenana (women's) courtyard.

Chokhani Double Haveli South of Main Bazaar • Daily 9am–6pm •
Charge A little south of town, the unusually large Chokhani Double Haveli consists of two separate wings built for two brothers; look for the miserable British soldiers and chillum-smoking sadhu facing one another in the recess at the centre of the facade.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS BUSES FROM MANDAWA JHUNJHUNU, NAWALGARH, JAIPUR AND BIKANER ARRIVE AT SUBASH CHOWK, NEAR SONTHALIYA GATE IN THE EAST OF TOWN, EXCEPT FOR THE FAST SERVICES THAT DROP YOU AT THE HIGHWAY JUNCTION. FROM FATEHPUR, MOST BUSES PULL IN AT A STAND IN THE CENTRE, JUST OFF THE MAIN BAZAAR; BOTH BUS STANDS ARE WITHIN WALKING DISTANCE OF MOST HOTELS. JEEPS PLY THE SAME ROUTES
FROM THE SAME STANDS. THERE ARE FREQUENT BUS
SERVICES TO JHUNJHUNU (EVERY 30MIN; 1HR), NAWALGARH
(EVERY 30MIN; 45MIN) AND FATEHPUR (EVERY 30MIN; 1HR),

PLUS A HANDFUL OF BUSES (MOSTLY IN THE MORNING) TO JAIPUR (4HR), BIKANER (3HR 30MIN) AND DELHI (6HR).

Tours Walking tours of Mandawa's havelis can be arranged through your hotel, from ₹200/person. Most guesthouses and hotels can also arrange trips out into the surrounding desert either by jeep or on horseback, on camel or in camel-drawn carts. Prices for all these activities vary wildly, but are usually cheapest if booked through Shekhawati hotel, who also rent bicycles. Classic Shekhawati Tours (www.shekhawati.in), by the fort entrance, arranges more upmarket overnight tented camel safaris, though you'll need to book a few days in advance.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Castle Mandawa Inside the fort, www.castlemandawa.com. Mandawa's fanciest accommodation, set in the old town fort, with an atmospheric mishmash of buildings around a sand-filled courtyard. All rooms are different – the Royal Suite is set in a turret – and so standards of comfort and decor vary. Amenities include a spa, gym, and an opulent pool surrounded by gardens. ₹₹₹

Chobdar Haveli Near Gulab Rai Wadia Haveli, www.hotelchobdarhaveli.com. A dazzling white, late nineteenth-century, two-storey haveli in a quiet part of town with four spotless, colour-themed and well-furnished rooms (all a/c) featuring big beds and bright modern bathrooms with tubs. ₹₹₹

Mandawa Haveli Nr Sonthaliya Gate, Main Bazaar, www.hotelmandawahaveli.com. Far and away Mandawa's most atmospheric heritage hotel, occupying a superb old haveli with original murals. Rooms are all a/c and have bags of period character, and there's a nice rooftop restaurant and garden. Rates discounted in summer by 20–40 percent. ₹₹₹

Paawana Main Bazaar, www.paawanahaveli.com. Modern building (done up with the obligatory murals) and offering attractively furnished a/c rooms at surprisingly affordable prices. There's a decent little mosaic-floor restaurant here, too, though it's basically only useful to in-house guests. ₹₹₹

Udai Vilas Palace Mukundgarh Rd, 5min drive south of Mandawa, www.uvpmandawa.com. Upmarket resort hotel in a peaceful rural location, set amid three acres of landscaped grounds with fine desert views and accommodation in smart modern rooms. Facilities include a Keralan Ayurvedic spa, gym and pool. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Jiman Shahi Palace, south of Main Bazaar,  shahipalacemandawa.com. Though a decent place to stay, the Shahi Palace is just outdone by rivals, in terms of its price range. However, its little restaurant makes a great pit-stop when you're touring the town (it's right opposite the Chokhani Double Haveli; see above), so pop in for a very yummy masala chai, or even a meal (veg and non-veg options). ₹₹

Monica West of the fort. This rooftop restaurant (follow the signs from the entrance road to the fort) dishes up the best food in town, with well-prepared veg and non-veg Indian standards. It feels like home cooking, too, because as you'll notice on the way up, the place is patently a home. ₹₹

Fatehpur

Lying just off the NH-11 road, FATEHPUR is the closest town in Shekhawati to Bikaner, 116km west, and a convenient place to stop if you're taking the northern route across the Thar. The town itself is fairly scruffy and run-down, but it does have several elaborately painted mansions.

Le Prince Haveli Near Chauhan Well, east of the town's main road • Daily 10am–7pm • Charge • 08094880977

Fatehpur's most celebrated muralled abode is the Nadine Le Prince Haveli near Chauhan Well, an 1802 mansion restored to its original splendour by its current owner, French artist Nadine Le Prince, who purchased the haveli in 1998 and has since opened it up as accommodation (see below). Some local aficionados complain about the manner in which the haveli has been restored – with large-scale repainting of murals, rather than the simple cleaning and preservation of existing art – but the overall effect is undeniably impressive, and the haveli as a whole is one of the few in Shekhawati where you get a real sense of how these lavish mansions would originally have looked.

Jagannath Singania Haveli Churu–Sikar Road • Closed to visitors
Close to the Nadine Le Prince Haveli on Churu–Sikar Road, the imposing Jagannath Singania Haveli towers over the main road north. Most of the exterior paintings have faded; the best are on the western facade of the small building around the back, including Krishna and Radha framed by elephants and some heavily bewhiskered Europeans toting guns.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS FATEHPUR HAS FATEHPUR TWO BUS STANDS, NEAR EACH OTHER IN THE CENTRE OF TOWN ON THE MAIN SIKAR–CHURU (NORTH–SOUTH) ROAD. BUSES FROM THE GOVERNMENT ROADWAYS STAND, FURTHEST SOUTH, SERVE JAIPUR (EVERY 30MIN; 3HR 30MIN), BIKANER (EVERY 30MIN; 3HR 30MIN–4HR) AND DELHI (2 DAILY; 6HR). PRIVATE BUSES RUN FROM THE STAND FURTHER NORTH ALONG THE BAZAAR TO MANDAWA (EVERY 30MIN; 45MIN), JHUNJHUNU (EVERY 30MIN; 1HR), MAHANSAR (EVERY 30MIN; 45MIN) AND RAMGARH (EVERY 30MIN; 30MIN). ARRIVING IN FATEHPUR, NOTE THAT MANY BUSES STOP AT THE NH-11 INTERSECTION, ABOUT 1KM SOUTH OF TOWN.

ACCOMMODATION ★LE PRINCE HAVELI NEAR CHAUHAN WELL 0157 123 3024. BEFORE THIS DELIGHTFUL HAVELI (SEE ABOVE) OPENED UP AS ACCOMMODATION, THE ONLY OPTIONS IN FATEHPUR WERE AWFUL; NOW IT BOASTS ONE OF SHEKHAWATI'S VERY BEST PLACES TO STAY. IT'S A REAL BEAUTY, WITH HINTS TO ITS FRENCH OWNERSHIP EVIDENT IN THE RED-WHITE-BLUE TRICOLORE DECORATION. THERE ARE JUST OVER A DOZEN ROOMS, RUNNING THE FULL GAMUT FROM TINY SINGLES TO OPULENT DUPLEXES, SO IT'S MADE TO SUIT ANY PRICE RANGE. THERE'S AN ART STUDIO AND SHOP HERE, AS WELL AS A RESTAURANT (MEALTIMES ONLY), DELIGHTFUL POOL AND ASTONISHINGLY WELL-STOCKED BAR – WHEN INTERNS OR REGULAR GUESTS ARRIVE FROM OVERSEAS, THEY OFTEN BRING A BOTTLE OF SOMETHING WITH THEM. THEY'RE

ALSO ABLE TO ORGANISE TOURS BY ROYAL ENFIELD; ALL IN ALL, THIS IS EVERYTHING YOU COULD WANT FROM ACCOMMODATION IN THIS PART OF RAJASTHAN. SINGLE ROOMS ₹₹, DUPLEX ₹₹₹

Mahansar

The relative inaccessibility of MAHANSAR, marooned amid a sea of scrub and drifting sand north of Mandawa, has ensured that its monuments remain among the least visited in the region, making the village a peaceful place to hole up for a day or two.

Sona ki Dukan Haveli Centre of village • Daily, no set hours • Free, though tip expected • Ask around shops for the key Otherwise known as the ‘Gold Shop Haveli’, the Sona ki Dukan Haveli is home to Shekhawati’s finest paintings. The murals in the entrance hall are the most striking, and depict the exploits of Rama, the incarnations of Vishnu and the life of Krishna, all painted in superb detail and picked out in lavish gold leaf (hence the haveli’s name).

While you’re here, it’s also worth having a look at the nearby Raghunath Mandir, covered in colourful floral murals and offering good views over town from its chhatra-fringed rooftop.

ARRIVAL AND ACCOMMODATION BY BUS OR CAR MAHANSAR ALTHOUGH DRIVING IS EASILY THE BEST OPTION, SOME DAILY SERVICES RUN TO AND FROM NAWALGARH (2HR 30MIN), MANDAWA (1HR 30MIN) AND FATEHPUR (45MIN).

Narayan Niwas Castle Mahansar 🌐 mehansarcastle.com. This quirky hotel, managed by Mahansar’s royal family, is in a 1768 abode that’s home to fourteen rooms of varying standards, including two memorably appointed heritage rooms, and some cheaper but still deeply atmospheric standard doubles (albeit stronger on period charm than creature comforts).

₹₹

Ramgarh

RAMGARH, 20km north of Fatehpur, was founded in 1791 and developed as something of a status symbol by disaffected members of the wealthy Poddar merchant family, who made every effort for the town to outshine nearby Churu, which they left following a dispute with the local thakur over taxes. They succeeded in their aim: Ramgarh is one of the most beautiful – but also still one of the least-visited – towns in Shekhawati, with the usual fine havelis along with an exceptional array of religious architecture as well.

Starting from the bus stand on the west side of town, follow either of the two roads east into the town centre. After about five minutes' walk you'll reach the Poddar family havelis, which are close to the town's main square. Turn left here and head through the Churu Gate, beyond which the road is lined with a dense cluster of extraordinarily ornate temples and memorial chhatris erected by various members of the Poddar clan, their rooftops capped with a fantastical array of domes and arcades.

Poddar Family Havelis Daily 8am–7pm • Free

The Poddar family havelis are a superb cluster of ornate mansions decorated with scenes from local folk stories and a frequently repeated motif, comprising three fishes joined at the mouth, which is unique to Ramgarh. Just beyond here lies Ramgarh's main square, surrounded by the disintegrating remains of further lavishly painted havelis.

ARRIVAL AND ACCOMMODATION BY JEEP AND RAMGARH BUS INTER-VILLAGE JEEPS AND BUSES RUN TO FATEHPUR
(45MIN), MANDAWA (1HR 30MIN) AND NAWALGARH (2HR 30MIN) FROM THE MAIN BISSAU–RAMGARH ROAD.

By car You can reach Ramgarh on day-trips from Fatehpur, Mandawa and Nawalgarh with your own vehicle, which is by far the quickest option.

Vedaaranya Haveli Ghanshyam das Rula Marg;  amhotelkollection.com. A beautifully preserved heritage haveli – home to only Veda temple in the world – invites travellers to take asylum from Rajasthan's heat. Comfortable, opulent, historic and colorful decoration, along with Rajasthani cuisine cooked in traditional style wins over most hearts. Healing retreats and heritage walks rejuvenate. ₹₹₹

Lakshmangarh The small town of LAKSHMANGARH, 20km south of Fatehpur, is another archetypal, but seldom visited,

Shekhawati destination, its neat grid of streets (a layout inspired by that of Jaipur's Pink City) dotted with dozens of ornate havelis in various stages of picturesque decay. Lakshmangarh is dominated by its dramatic nineteenth-century fort, which crowns a rocky outcrop on the west side of town; it's now closed to the public, though you can walk up the steep track to the entrance to enjoy the fine views. Looking down from here you can see the extensive Char Chowk Haveli (Four-Courtyard Haveli), off to the left, the finest in town and one of the largest in Shekhawati.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS OR CAR LAKSHMANGARH NUMEROUS BUSES RUN FROM THE STATION ON MUKANDGARH RD TO FATEHPUR (45MIN), SIKAR (1HR; WHERE THERE'S A TRAIN STATION), AND NAWALGARH (1HR);
YOU CAN ALSO REACH LAKSHMANGARH ON DAY-TRIPS FROM THESE DESTINATIONS WITH YOUR OWN VEHICLE.

Churu

Twenty kilometres north of Ramgarh, at the northern tip of the Shekhawati region (and almost level with New Delhi), is the seldom-visited CHURU. Despite being largely overlooked by tourists, the city has plenty to offer, including the astonishing Malji Ka Kamra, a haveli with combined European Italian and Mughal architecture that was originally built by Marwari merchants and since renovated to its original turquoise colour. Around the corner is the Surana Family Haveli, also known as the 1100-window haveli, built in the early 1870s, and in the main town square is the clock tower, built by the Lohia family in around 1890. Little remains of the old town fort except its legend: when, in 1813, the fort succumbed to a siege by the Raja of Bikaner, the occupier, Sheo Singh, bizarrely killed himself by swallowing a diamond.

ARRIVAL AND ACCOMMODATION BY TRAIN CHURU IS CHURU
A STOP ON THE MAIN TRAIN LINE BETWEEN DELHI (4–5
DAILY; 4–5HR) AND BIKANER (5–7 DAILY; 2HR 30MIN–3HR

30MIN); THE STATION IS AT THE SOUTHERN END OF NAI SARAK, WHICH RUNS THROUGH THE MIDDLE OF TOWN.

By bus The main bus station is just outside the train station; services run to Jaipur (3 daily; 5hr), some stopping along the way at Fatehpur (1hr) and Sikar (2hr 30min).

Malji Ka Kamra Behind Jain Market; 🌐maljikkamra.com. Easily the best accommodation and dining option in the city, this beautiful haveli has a number of attached rooms and suites, all with air-conditioning and painstakingly restored murals, and some with enormous balconies looking out over the lawn and town beyond. There are walking tours of the town and cultural visits to wood-carving workshops, plus a non-veg Rajasthani cuisine restaurant. Rooms ₹₹₹, Suites ₹₹₹₹.

Bikaner and around The bustling city of BIKANER has a decidedly frontier feel, perched as it is at the edge of the Thar, like a thirsty camel deciding whether or not to take the plunge and go all in. Dust swirls around this slightly overlarge place, getting into your mouth and hair, but though the city has little of the aesthetic magic of Jaisalmer, Jodhpur or Jaipur, it finds itself with a far more manageable number of tourists, and is worth a visit thanks to a number of worthy sights. Those just dropping by make a bee-line for the impressive Junagarh Fort and its brilliant museum; staying a night or two, however, will allow more freedom to explore the atmospheric old city, dotted with a rich array of quirky, early twentieth-century havelis, as well as making an expedition to a nearby camel-breeding farm, and the bizarrely fascinating, world-famous rat temple at Deshnok.

Junagarh Fort Daily 10am–5.30pm (last entry 4.30pm) • Charge, camera/video camera charge, Audioguide charge, though free English-speaking guides available • www.junagarh.com

Built at ground level and defended only by high walls and a wide moat, Junagarh Fort isn't as immediately imposing as the mighty hill forts elsewhere in Rajasthan, though its richly decorated interiors are as magnificent as any in the state. The fort was built between 1587 and 1593, and progressively enlarged and embellished by later rulers. For the tour, opt for the combined ticket that includes the audioguide, which is well-researched and insightful.

Entering the fort, look out for handprints set in stone near the second gate, Daulat Pol, which bear witness to the satis of various royal women. From here a passageway climbs up to the small Vikram Vilas courtyard, beyond which you'll find the main courtyard. Opening onto the main courtyard is the Karan Mahal, built in the seventeenth century to commemorate a victory over the Mughal emperor Aurangzeb and adorned with gold-leaf painting and an old punkah (fan). Next to here in the Rai Niwas are Maharaja Gai Singh's ivory slippers, one of Akbar's swords, and a representation of the Pisces zodiac sign which looks remarkably like a dinosaur in a headscarf.

Beyond here is the Anup Mahal (Diwan-i-Khas), the grandest room in the palace, with stunning red and gold filigree decorative painting and a red satin throne framed by an arc of glass and mirrors. The carpet was made by inmates of Bikaner jail – a manufacturing tradition that has only recently ceased. After such a hectic display of opulence, the blue Badal Mahal (‘cloud palace’), built in the mid-nineteenth century for Maharaja Sardar Singh (1851–72), is pleasantly understated. Upstairs, a room exhibits beds of nails, sword blades and spear heads used by sadhus to demonstrate their immunity to pain; while across the terrace in the finely painted Gaj Mandar is the maharaja’s chaste single bed and the maharani’s more accommodating double.

The next part of the palace, the twentieth-century Ganga Niwas, created by Maharaja Ganga Singh (1887–1943), can be reached either via a long and labyrinthine passageway from the Gaj Mandar or, more directly, from the Vikram Vilas courtyard. This section of the palace is centred on the cavernous Diwan-i-Am, dominated by a World War I de Havilland biplane, a present from the British to Bikaner’s state forces. The single aircraft is actually two half-planes, which were shot down during battle, then later fused together by the maharaja. Next door is the early twentieth-century office of Ganga Singh, followed by several further rooms stuffed full of guns and swords.

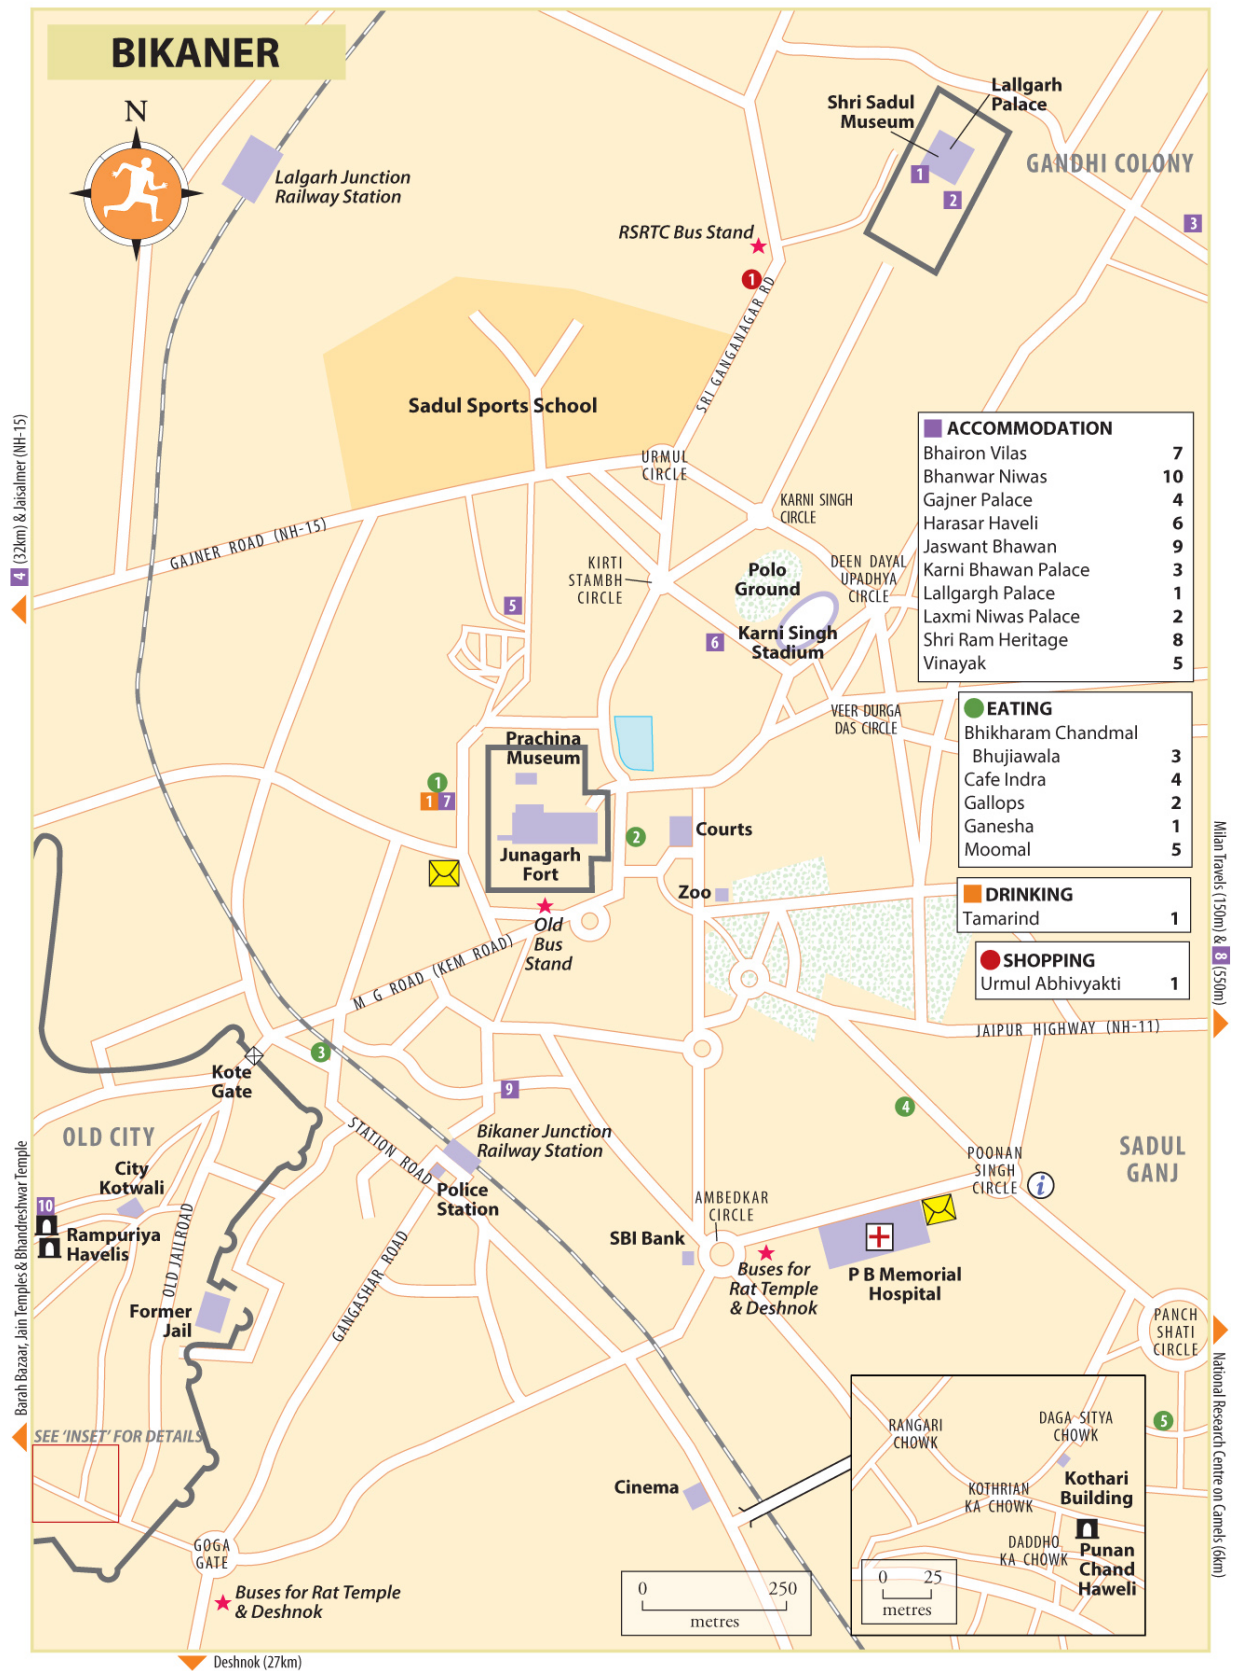

Prachina Museum Junagarh Fort • Daily 9am–6pm • Charge, camera/video camera charge • prachinamuseum.org

Within the fort complex, the Prachina Museum houses a pretty collection of objects (glassware, crockery, cutlery and walking sticks) demonstrating the growing influence of Europe on Rajasthani style in the early twentieth century. A whole circa-1900 salon has been re-created, and there’s also an interesting collection of Rajasthani textiles and clothing.

The old city Bikaner’s labyrinthine old city is notable for its profusion of unusual havelis whose idiosyncratic architecture demonstrates an unlikely fusion of indigenous sandstone carving with Art Nouveau and red-brick British municipal style. The city is confusing to navigate, so accept getting lost as part of the experience.

The Rampuriya havelis Joshiwara, Old Bikaner • Free Daily • 24hrs
Entering the old city through Kote Gate, bear left (south) down Old Jail Road. After 300m, turn right just past the florid pink gateway to a Hindu temple to reach the City Kotwali (the old city's central police station). Follow the road past here to reach the three striking Rampuriya havelis, commissioned in the 1920s by three brothers from a Jain trading family and faced with reliefs of a mixture of personages, including Maharaja Ganga Singh, Britain's George V and Queen Mary, and Krishna and Radha.

Rangari Chowk, Kothrion ka Chowk and Daga Sitya Chowk Turn left just before the third Rampuriya Haveli, walking past the boarded-up 1918 Golchha Haveli, and continue roughly straight ahead, following the road as it makes two dog-legs to the right, to emerge after 100m onto a street full of ironmongers. Turn right here and continue for 300m to reach the small square called Rangari Chowk, centred on a neat white Hindu temple. Walk along the right-hand side of the temple and straight ahead you will see the small, triangular square called Kothrion ka Chowk, lined by handsome havelis.

Follow the road as it swings round to the left, past the Kothari Building (on your right), with five wonderfully extravagant Art Nouveau balconies, to reach the small Daga Sitya Chowk. A house on the left still has fading murals of steam trains, while Diamond House, on the right, gets wider as it goes up, each storey overhanging the one below it. Retrace your steps back to just before Kothrion ka Chowk, then turn left to reach the Punan Chand Haveli, boasting an amazingly carved floral facade. Turn round again and head back towards Kothrion ka Chowk, then take the first left to reach the large Daddho ka Chowk, surrounded by fine havelis.

Bhandreshwar Temple Cross the Daddho ka Chowk to where the street ends at a T-junction, then turn right and continue for around 400m to reach Barah Bazaar, centred on a large pillar, painted in the colours of the Indian flag. Follow the street round to the left and you'll eventually reach the Bhandreshwar Temple; also known as the Bhandasar temple, it's unusual among Jain places of worship in being covered in a rich, almost gaudy, array of paintings. Porcelain tiles imported from Victorian England decorate the main altar, and steps lead up the unusually large tower, where you get a great view over the old city. You'll have to take your shoes off at the entrance of the temple and the steps up go outside, so watch out for pigeon mess.

Lallgarh Palace Dr Karni Singhji Rd • www.lallgarhpalace.com

The sturdy red-sandstone Lallgarh Palace, a green oasis in a dusty area to the north of the town centre, is home to the royal family of Bikaner, although parts have now been converted into a pair of hotels, and its grounds also contain the Shri Sadul Museum. It was built during the reign of Ganga Singh, who lived here from 1902, and the sheer scale and profusion of the exterior decoration is impressive, even if it lacks the romantic allure of older Rajasthani palaces.

Shri Sadul Museum Dr Karni Singhji Rd • Mon–Sat 10am–5.30pm • Charge The Shri Sadul Museum houses an enormous and surprisingly engrossing collection of old photographs showing various viceregal visits, pictures of Ganga Singh at the signing of the Versailles Treaty and at royal processions, and plenty of awards, trophies and everyday royal possessions. At the start and end of the tour, there's also a full-size, beautifully preserved 1940s railway carriage to marvel at.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BIKANER AND AROUND
BIKANER IS VERY SPREAD OUT, WITH WIDELY SCATTERED ACCOMMODATION. THE RSRTC BUS STAND (☎0151 252 3800) IS
1.5KM NORTH OF TOWN, NEAR LALLGARH PALACE; THE OLD BUS STAND (USED BY SOME PRIVATE BUSES) AND RAILWAY STATION ARE BOTH CENTRALLY LOCATED, ALTHOUGH A FEW TRAINS ARRIVE AT LALGARH JUNCTION, ON THE NORTHWESTERN EDGE OF TOWN. AN AUTO RIDE ACROSS TOWN FROM THE STATE BUS STAND TO THE RAILWAY STATION SHOULD COST ₹100 OR LESS.

By plane Nal Airport (☎0151 254 0940) is located about 13km west of the city, and commenced flights in 2017, as part of Narendra Modi's airport-opening craze. There are currently flights to Delhi (1 daily; 1hr 10min) and Jaipur (1 daily; 1hr), with more potentially in the post; there's no bus service as yet, so you may have to grab a taxi (from ₹500).

By train The railway station, Bikaner Junction, is on Station Rd (☎0151 220 0131), just east of the old city. There are no direct trains to Ajmer, to which it's much easier to take the bus; to get to Jaisalmer, interchange at Jodhpur.

By bus Private buses are run by a handful of firms, most of which have offices at the Old Bus Stand on the south side of Junagarh Fort – shop around until you find a service that suits, or ask your accommodation to book tickets for you, usually for a small fee (₹100 or so). Most private services depart from outside these offices, though check when you book your ticket (there's also a newer private bus stand inconveniently located 5km north of town along the Ganganagar road; few operators use it, but you may well arrive there). The most comfortable long-distance buses are run by Milan Travels, west of town on Sadul Ganj (☎92142 01220), who also have several daily buses to Shekhawati; you could, alternatively, simply pay any agency for a ticket to Jaipur, and get off where appropriate.

Destinations Agra (3 daily; 12hr); Ajmer (7 daily; 6hr); Amritsar (1 daily; 15hr); Fatehpur (12 daily; 3hr); Delhi (6 daily; 8hr 30min–10hr); Jaipur (1–3 hourly; 5–7hr); Jaisalmer (2 daily; 7hr 45min); Jodhpur (1–2 hourly; 5hr); Phalodi (hourly; 3hr 30min); Pokaran (6 daily; 5hr); Udaipur (8 daily; 9–11hr).

ACTIVITIES AND INFORMATION BICYCLE RENTAL AVAILABLE FOR ₹60/HR FROM A COUPLE OF SHACKS JUST SOUTH OF THE MAIN POST OFFICE, OPPOSITE THE SOUTHWEST CORNER OF THE FORT.

Camel and nature safaris Bikaner is a popular base for camel safaris and other nature trips.

Festival Bikaner's colourful camel fair (usually mid-January) has the usual camel races and camel hairstyle competitions, plus dancing and firework displays. Most of the action takes place at the polo ground north of town, near the Harasar Haveli hotel (see below). Advance accommodation booking is essential during this time.

Tourist information The helpful tourist office (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm; ☎0151 222 6701) is in the RTDC Dholamaru Hotel at Pooran Singh Circle.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Bikaner has a surprisingly large selection of hotels, though the cheap flophouses along Station Rd are insalubrious and best avoided.

Bhairon Vilas West of Junagarh Fort, ☎hotelbhaironvilas.tripod.com. Charming heritage hotel in an old royal haveli, surrounded by an attractive garden and kitted out with quirky antiques and family curios; an air of slight neglect hangs over the place, however, and staff can be apathetic. Rooms (all a/c and with TVs) are likewise a mixed bag; it's worth spending a little extra to get one of the more spacious and atmospheric heritage rooms. There's also a good restaurant, bijou bar and boutique. ₹₹₹

Bhanwar Niwas Old City, 🌐 basavanarthotels.com/bhanwar-niwas. Bikaner's most ostentatious haveli, built for a textile tycoon in the late 1920s and crammed with kitsch fittings and furniture, complete with a 1927 Buick in the lobby, an atmospheric fin de siècle dining room and an array of 25 memorably chintzy rooms. ₹₹₹

Harasar Haveli Near Karni Singh Stadium, 🌐 harasar.com. Welcoming, medium-sized hotel with spotlessly clean and comfy rooms (all a/c), and a decent restaurant (see below). It often plays host to tour groups, hence the 'cultural bash' put on each night, but this is both easy to ignore and actually kind of pleasant in its own way. Wi-fi doesn't reach all the rooms; if this is an issue, double check before you unpack your stuff. ₹₹

Jaswant Bhawan Alakhsagar Rd, 🌐 hoteljaswantbhawan.com. Relaxing hotel in a nice old house built in 1926 for a prime minister, very close to the station. Surprisingly quiet given the location, with very well priced, comfortable a/c rooms; it's worth paying a tiny bit more to upgrade to 'deluxe' from the cheapest ones. ₹₹

Karni Bhawan Palace Gandhi Colony, 1km east of Lallgarh Palace, 🌐 hrhhotels.com. On the outside this place looks like an oversized English suburban house, but its interior is period and wonderful, with superb Art Deco suites in the main building, complete with original 1930s furniture (but don't bother with the standard rooms in the annexe). Some discounts in summer. ₹₹₹

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM BIKANER ALL THE FOLLOWING TRAINS RUN DAILY.

Destination	Name	No.	Departs	Arrives
Abu Road	Ranakpur Express	14707	7.50am	6.15pm
	Ahmedabad Express	19224	12.25am	9.30am
Agra Fort	BKN PRYJ SF Express	12404	8.15am	9.00pm
Delhi	Dee Intercity	22471	9.30pm	5.20pm

Jaipur	Assam Express*	15910	7.50pm	7.07am
	SGNR Kota SF	22982	10.38pm	5.40am
Jodhpur	Leelan Express	12467	5.56am	1.15pm
	JU Express	19226	2.40pm	8.00pm
	Barmer Express	14887	9.32am	3.00pm

*From Lalgah Junction

CAMEL SAFARIS AND NATURE TOURS FROM BIKANER BIKANER OFFERS A GOOD ALTERNATIVE TO JAISALMER AS A STARTING POINT FOR CAMEL TREKS INTO THE THAR DESERT. THIS EASTERN PART OF THE DESERT, WHILE JUST AS SCENIC AS THE WESTERN THAR, IS NOT NEARLY AS CONGESTED WITH FELLOW TREKKERS, WITH THE RESULT THAT LOCAL PEOPLE IN THE VILLAGES ALONG THE ROUTE DON'T WAIT AROUND ALL DAY FOR THE CHANCE TO SELL PEPSI TO TOURISTS. WILDLIFE IS ALSO ABUNDANT, WITH PLENTIFUL BLACKBUCK, NILGAI AND DESERT FOXES.

Though your accommodation may be able to get you onto a camel, if you'd like to make your own choice of operator, your options are somewhat limited. Treks have long been run by 'Camel Man', based 5km east of the city at Vijay guesthouse (☎0151 223 1244, camelman.com), but recent reports about his conduct and facilities have been less than encouraging. It's best to go with the far more central Vinayak Desert Safari (☎94144 30948), based at the Vinayak Guesthouse, most of whose tours are run by a trained zoologist. Options include jeep safaris, camel safaris (day-trips including lunch, or overnight including accommodation and meals). Other trips include visits to remote Bishnoi villages. Safaris can be customized to focus on particular areas of interest, including specialized wildlife, birdwatching, snake-spotting and photographic tours.

Lallgarh Palace Lallgarh Palace Complex, www.lallgarhpalace.com. Set in the Lallgarh Palace complex, this is cheaper than its neighbour, the Laxmi Niwas (see below), and less grand, but it still makes for a thoroughly atmospheric place to stay. The halls can feel a little empty, but the rooms themselves are suitably opulent. ₹₹₹₹

Laxmi Niwas Palace Lallgarh Palace Complex, www.laxminiwaspalace.com. The better of two palatial hotels in the Lallgarh Palace complex, offering large rooms with period English furniture. A large pool, reading room, bar with hunting trophies adorning the walls and a billiards room enhance the colonial feeling. The rack rates, though, are sky-high – you'll usually manage to get hefty discounts online, but if not, try the adjoining Lallgarh Palace (see above). ₹₹₹₹

★Vinayak Old Ginani 09414430948. Friendly and family run, this place offers simple but clean and cheap singles and doubles (all attached, some with hot-water bucket showers). Bicycles are complimentary, free cooking lessons are available (you pay only for the ingredients), and there are motorbikes for rent. Free 24hr pick-up from the train station is possible, and this is a good base for safaris. ₹₹

OUT OF TOWN GAJNER PALACE 32KM SOUTHWEST OF BIKANER, www.HERITAGEHOTELSOFININDIA.COM. THIS GRAND, RED-SANDSTONE AFFAIR WAS BUILT IN THE EARLY TWENTIETH CENTURY AS A HUNTING LODGE FOR THE MAHARAJAS OF BIKANER. THE NINETY-ROOM HOTEL OVERLOOKS A LAKE, AND STAFF CAN ARRANGE JAUNTS THROUGH THE SURROUNDING GAJNER WILDLIFE SANCTUARY. ₹₹₹₹

Shri Ram Heritage Sadulganj, 1.5 km east of the city centre 9261001100. Friendly suburban hotel; the more expensive rooms are spacious and very comfortably furnished, though the cheaper ones are a bit cramped. There's also a dorm, which you may well have to yourself, unless there's a youth group staying. ₹

EATING

MAP

Bikaner is famous for sweets such as kaju katli, made with cashew nuts, and tirangi, a three-coloured confection made with cashews, almonds and pistachios.

Bhikharam Chandmal Bhujiawala Just off Station Rd on the road to Kote Gate. Top mithai shop, known for its excellent Bengali and Rajasthani sweets. The English sign is small and easy to miss; look for maroon Hindi writing on a white block. ₹₹

Cafe Indra Udai Niwas, Rangmanch Rd 0151 222 3447. Popular with foreign travellers and local hipsters, this is where to go for non-Indian food, such as burgers, pasta and American-style pizza. They also do good shakes, espresso, masala chai, and even Kashmiri kehwa; think about sitting indoors, since the outdoor section is occasionally ravaged by flies, and dominated by overloud music. ₹

Gallops Court Rd 0151 320 0833. Pleasant a/c restaurant opposite the fort; they've grown fat on the easy pickings of passing coach parties, but the food's not bad, with a range of north Indian veg and non-veg standards, plus a few local specialities, served in big portions. Usually full of tour groups at lunchtime, though quieter and nicer in the evenings. Licensed, and they've a real espresso machine. ₹₹

Ganesha Bhairon Vilas 0151 254 4751. The best place to drain a coffee in the fort area, decorated to the nines to an even greater degree than the Bhairon Vilas hotel (see above) in the same compound. ₹80 will get you a decent espresso, while various kinds of chai are available for even less. ₹

Moomal Panchshati Circle, Sadul Ganj 0151 254 9575. Popular with locals, this is the best restaurant in what counts as the (non-tourist) city centre. They serve sumptuous pan-Indian veg food – the cashew and cherry Moomal Special alone is worth the trip, and will take you quite a while to finish. ₹₹

DRINKING

MAP

There aren't many great places to drink in Bikaner; the options around the train station are a bit creepy and male-dominated, though there's a more relaxed (though still very male) local venue just west of the Harasar Haveli.

Tamarind Bhairon Vilas 📞0151 254 4751. Spilling onto a tamarind-tree-shaded lawn, this restaurant isn't recommended as a place to eat, but the quirky atmosphere makes it a fantastic place to drink, with its dusky pink walls and black leather chairs. Beers from ₹300.

SHOPPING

MAP

Bikaner is famous for its skilled lacquerwork and handicrafts, and for its handwoven woollen pattu (a kind of shawl-cum-blanket).

Urmul Abhivyakti Ganganar Rd, near the bus stand 📞0151 252 2139. Supported by the Urmul Trust charity, this is the best place to buy pattu and the manager can arrange visits to villages to see how the textiles are woven by local women's co-ops. They don't pay commission to auto drivers, so don't believe anyone if they tell you that the shop's closed. Mon–Sat 9am–6pm, Sun 9am–1pm.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE THERE ARE BANKS WITH ATMS DIRECTLY OPPOSITE THE STATION, AND PLENTY OF OTHERS AROUND TOWN. THOMAS COOK (MON–SAT 9AM–6PM), ON THE KEM RD, CHANGES CURRENCY.

Hospital Prince Bijoy Memorial (PBM) Hospital, Hospital Road near Ambedkar Circle (📞0151 222 6334).

Police Station Rd, directly opposite the station on Kote Gate (📞0151 252 2225, 🌐bikanerpolice.rajasthan.gov.in).

National Research Centre on Camels Daily noon–6.30pm •

Entry, camera, camel ride, guided tour –charge • 🌐

nrccamel.icar.gov.in

What claims to be Asia's largest camel-breeding farm, the National Research Centre on Camels lies out in the desert, 10km southeast of the fort area. Bikaner is renowned for its famously sturdy beasts – the camel corps was a much-feared component of the imperial battle formation – but the growing proliferation of motor vehicles has severely reduced the camel's traditional role as the staple means of rural transport. It's best to take a guided tour of the farm; aim to arrive at around 3pm, soon after which you'll be wowed by the sight of hundreds of stampeding dromedaries arriving from the desert for their daily chow. A small museum showcases each species through a series of photographs. There's also a kiosk selling camel milk and milk-based products such as ice cream and 'camel coffee'; many visitors make the journey here for a taste of the kesar (saffron) kulfi alone. There's also a small (camel) leather shop.

The temple of rats Daily 5am–10pm • Entry Free; camera and video camera charge • Buses for Deshnok (every 15min or so; 45min) leave roughly every 15min from Bikaner's main bus stand • Around ₹500 by auto-rickshaw, including waiting time
The Karni Mata Temple in DESHNOK, 30km south of Bikaner, is one of India's most bizarre attractions. Step inside the Italian-marble arched doorway and everywhere you'll see free-roaming rats, known as kabas, which devotees believe are reincarnated souls saved from the wrath of Yama, the god of death. The innermost shrine, made of rough stone and logs cut from sacred jal trees, houses the yellow-marble image of Karniji. This in turn is encased by a much grander marble building. Pilgrims bring offerings for the rats to eat inside the main shrine, and it's considered auspicious to eat the leftovers after they've been nibbled by the kabas. Some pilgrims spend hours searching for a glimpse of the temple's venerated white rat, while it's also considered fortunate for a rat to run over your feet (stand still for a while – preferably next to some food), but whatever you do don't step on one, or you'll have to donate a gold model of a rat to placate the deity. Shoes have to be removed at the gate – there's a little store across the street from the temple where you can leave them, after which you're free to wander among the rat droppings barefoot or in your socks.

Phalodi

The main highway and railway line wind in tandem east from Jaisalmer across the desert, separating at the small junction settlement of PHALODI, almost exactly midway between Jaisalmer and Bikaner. This scruffy salt-extraction colony is the jumping-off place for one of Rajasthan's most beautiful natural sights – the demoiselle crane breeding grounds at nearby Keechen.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN PHALODI PHALODI JUNCTION STATION IS FAIRLY CENTRAL, NEAR THE POLICE STATION ON THE ROAD TO DECHU. THERE ARE TRAINS TO BIKANER (2 DAILY; 2HR 30MIN), JAISALMER (7 DAILY; 2HR 45MIN) AND JODHPUR (4 DAILY; 3HR).

By bus There are hourly RSRTC departures to Bikaner (3hr 30min), Jaisalmer (3hr 30min) and Jodhpur (3hr 30min). The bus station is just off the Dechu road, near the train station. If you are only stopping for a few hours to see Keechen's cranes, find out when the last bus leaves to your final destination.

On a tour If you'd like to see Keechen en route between Bikaner and Jaisalmer, contact Vinayak Guesthouse in Bikaner, who can collect you in one and drop you off in the other, visiting Keechen and Gajner Wildlife Sanctuary en route.

ACCOMMODATION CHETNYA PALACE NEXT TO THE OLD JAISALMER BUS STAND 0292 522 3945. ITS SHABBY ROOMS ARE UNINSPIRING, BUT THIS IS THE BEST BUDGET OPTION IN TOWN. ₹

Lal Niwas Dadhas Mohalla, lalniwas.com. This three hundred-year-old red-sandstone haveli has been converted into a low-key heritage hotel, with 27 slightly dog-eared a/c rooms, and a tiny pool. ₹₹₹

Keechen

Around 6km east of Phalodi • From Phalodi, the best way to get to Keechen is to rent a bicycle from one of the stalls in town – a pleasant, mostly flat ride on well-surfaced roads; alternatively, jump in an auto-rickshaw or taxi for a tour. The village of KEECHEN hosts four thousand demoiselle cranes that migrate here each winter from their breeding grounds in Central Asia. Known locally as kurja, the birds are encouraged to return by the villagers, who scatter grain for them twice a day – a custom that has persisted for 150 years or more. Make sure you go at one of the feeding times (6–7am & 5–6pm) to witness at close quarters the staggering sight of the flock descending en masse, on a fenced-off area just outside the village.

THE DESHNOK DEVI MEMBERS OF THE CHARAN CASTE OF MUSICIANS BELIEVE THAT INCARNATIONS OF THE GODDESS DURGA PERIODICALLY APPEAR AMONG THEM, ONE OF WHOM WAS KARNI MATA, BORN AT A VILLAGE NEAR PHALODI IN 1387, WHO WENT ON TO PERFORM MIRACLES SUCH AS WATER DIVINATION AND BRINGING THE DEAD BACK TO LIFE, EVENTUALLY BECOMING THE REGION'S MOST POWERFUL CULT LEADER. ACCORDING TO LEGEND, ONE OF KARNI MATA'S FOLLOWERS CAME TO HER BECAUSE HER SON WAS GRIEVOUSLY ILL, BUT BY THE TIME THEY GOT TO HIM, HE HAD DIED. KARNI MATA WENT TO YAMA, THE GOD OF THE UNDERWORLD, TO ASK FOR HIM BACK, BUT YAMA REFUSED. KNOWING THAT OF ALL THE CREATURES UPON THE EARTH, ONLY RATS WERE OUTSIDE YAMA'S DOMINION, KARNI MATA DECREED THAT ALL CHARANS WOULD HENCEFORTH BE REINCARNATED AS RATS, THUS ESCAPING YAMA'S POWER. IT IS THESE SACRED RATS (KABAS) THAT INHABIT THE DESHNOK TEMPLE.

Jaisalmer and around In the remote westernmost corner of Rajasthan, JAISALMER is the quintessential desert town, its golden, sand-coloured ramparts rising out of the arid Thar like a scene from the Arabian Nights. Rampant commercialism may have dampened the romantic vision somewhat, but even with all the touts and tour buses, the town deservedly remains one of India's most popular destinations. Villagers – many dressed in voluminous red and orange turbans – still outnumber foreigners in the bazaar, while the exquisite sandstone architecture of the 'Golden City' is quite unlike anything else in India.

The streets of Jaisalmer are flanked with numerous, pale honey-coloured facades, covered with latticework and floral designs, but the city's real showpieces are its havelis, commissioned by wealthy merchants during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. In addition, there are numerous sights out of town, as well as the desert itself – camel safaris are an extremely popular activity here, and most take the chance to spend at least one night out in the sands.

Brief history Rawal Jaisal of the Bhati clan founded Jaisalmer in 1156 as a replacement for his less easily defensible capital at Lodurva. Constant wars with Jodhpur and Bikaner followed, as did conflict with the sultans of Delhi. In 1298, a seven-year siege of the fort by the forces of Ala-ud-din Khalji ended when the men of the city rode out to their deaths while the women committed johar sacrifice – although the Bhatis soon resumed their rule. The city was again besieged by Sultanate forces in 1326, resulting in another desperate act of johar, but Gharsi Bhati managed to negotiate the return of his kingdom as a vassal state of Delhi, after which it remained in Bhati hands.

In 1570 the ruler of Jaisalmer married one of his daughters to Akbar's son, cementing an alliance between Jaisalmer and the Mughal Empire. Its position on the overland route between Delhi and Central Asia made it an important trading post for goods such as silk, opium and spices, and the city grew rich on the proceeds, as the magnificent havelis of its merchants bear witness. However, the emergence of Bombay and Surat as major ports meant that overland trade diminished, and with it Jaisalmer's wealth. The death-blow came with Partition, when Jaisalmer's life-line trade route was severed by the new, highly sensitive Pakistani border. The city took on renewed strategic importance during the Indo-Pakistani wars of 1965 and 1971, and it is now a major military outpost, with jet aircraft regularly roaring past the ramparts.

Jaisalmer Fort Daily 9am–6pm • Charge •

jaisalmertourism.co.in/jaisalmer-fort

Every part of Jaisalmer Fort is made of soft yellow Jurassic sandstone. Outside, the thick walls, punctuated with barrel-sided bastions, drop almost 100m to the town below, while inside narrow winding streets are flanked with carved golden facades. Two thousand people still live within its walls; seventy percent of them are Brahmins and the rest, living primarily on the east side, are predominantly Rajput. A paved road punctuated by four huge gateways winds up to the fort's main chowk (square) – large round stones lie atop the ramparts above the entrance, waiting to be pushed down on the heads of any approaching enemy. The main chowk was the scene of the three terrible acts of johar during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, when the women of the royal palace, which overlooks the chowk, had a huge fire built, and jumped from the palace walls into it.

Fort Palace Museum Daily 9am–6pm; last tour 5pm • Charge including audioguide (although you'll need to leave either a ₹2000 cash deposit or some ID), camera/video camera charge The chowk is dominated by the Palace of the Maharawal, open to the public as the Fort Palace

Museum. The palace's balconied, five-storey facade displays some of the finest masonry in Jaisalmer, while the ornate marble throne to the left of the palace entrance is where the monarch (known in Jaisalmer as the maharawal rather than the maharaja) would have addressed his troops.

Inside, the museum offers an intriguing snapshot of the life of Jaisalmer's potentates through the ages, with artefacts ranging from a fancy silver coronation throne to more homely items, such as the bed and thali dish of a nineteenth-century ruler. There's also an interesting array of other exhibits – from fifteenth-century sculptures (including an unusual, bearded Rama) through to local stamps and banknotes, while the rooftop terrace gives unrivalled views over the city and the surrounding countryside.

Jain temples Daily 8am–noon • Charge

The fort has a number of Hindu temples, including the venerable Laxminath Temple of 1494; however, none is as impressive as the complex of seven Jain temples. The temples, connected by small corridors and stairways, were built between the twelfth and fifteenth centuries with yellow and white marble shrines and exquisite sculpted motifs covering the walls, ceilings and pillars. Two of the seven temples are open between 8am and noon; the other five only open from 11am to noon, when the whole place gets overrun with coach parties, so it's best to visit before 11am to see the first two temples, then come back later to see the rest.

The old town Jaisalmer's captivating old town surrounds the fort, and contains a few sights of its own, not least a series of delightful havelis. Despite the area's slightly labyrinthine layout, most tourists end up navigating precisely the same channels – as such, it's surprisingly easy to step away from the souvenir stand hawkers and end up in a little slice of 'real' Jaisalmer.

JAISALMER IN JEOPARDY ERECTED ON A BASE OF SOFT BANTONITE CLAY, SAND AND SANDSTONE, THE FOUNDATIONS OF JAISALMER FORT HAVE BEEN ERODING IN RECENT DECADES DUE TO HUGE INCREASES IN WATER CONSUMPTION, MAINLY RELATED TO TOURISM. AT THE HEIGHT OF THE SEASON, AROUND 120 LITRES PER HEAD ARE PUMPED INTO THE AREA – AND DUE TO PROBLEMS WITH THE DRAINAGE SYSTEM, A LARGE PROPORTION OF THIS WATER SEEPS BACK INTO THE SOIL BENEATH THE FORT, WEAKENING ITS FOUNDATIONS. THE RESULTS HAVE BEEN DISASTROUS. IN 1998 SIX PEOPLE DIED WHEN AN EXTERIOR WALL GAVE WAY, AND FIVE MORE BASTIONS FELL IN 2000 AND 2001. JAISALMER'S FORT HAS BEEN LISTED AMONG THE WORLD MONUMENT FUND'S MOST ENDANGERED SITES.

An international campaign was set up to facilitate repairs throughout the fort, including assistance with upgrading underground sewerage. Despite the work so far carried out, however, some continue to think that the best way to save the fort would be to evacuate its two thousand inhabitants and start repairs to the drainage system from scratch, an expensive and time-consuming venture much opposed by the guesthouse owners inside, whose earnings depend on tourism.

Given all this, some people (and guidebooks) suggest that travellers should avoid staying in the fort in order to relieve pressure on its crumbling foundations. Unfortunately, this also has a serious side effect in that it deprives many local hoteliers – some of whom have been in the fort for decades, and who are in no way responsible for Jaisalmer's current plight – of a living. We have therefore continued to list certain guesthouses within the fort. All are long-established, low-impact, and occupy original and largely unmodified buildings. On the other hand, we haven't listed any of the fort's modern, custom-built hotels. Remember, too, that if you do stay in the fort, you can do your bit by minimizing your water usage as much as possible.

Thar Heritage Museum Off Court Rd • Daily 9am–9pm • Charge; camera/video camera charge In the centre of town, the modest little Thar Heritage Museum is one of Jaisalmer’s more interesting museums. Showcasing the personal collection of a local historian, who may be on hand to explain some of the stories and customs behind the quirky array of local artefacts on display, exhibits range from bits of fossilized tree and old chillums through to camel regalia and antique musical instruments.

Nathmalji-ki-Haveli Court Rd • Daily 8am–8pm • Charge Just north of Bhatia Bazaar, the Nathmalji-ki-Haveli was built in 1885 for Jaisalmer’s prime minister by two brother stonemasons, one of whom built the left half, the other the right, as a result of which the two sides are subtly different. It's guarded by two elephants, and the first-floor bay window above the main doorway is surmounted by a frieze of little figures including elephants, horses, a steam train and a horse-drawn carriage. The place is basically a shop now, but it's still worth a look.

Patwa Haveli Kumhar Para • Daily 8am–8pm • Charge • Government museums Daily 10am–5pm • Charge • Kothari Patwa Haveli Museum Daily 9am–6pm • Charge; camera/video camera charge •

patwahaveli.com

The finely decorated Patwa Haveli, or Patwon-ki-Haveli, lies a couple of blocks north of the Nathmalji-ki-Haveli, its exterior a positive riot of exuberantly carved jharokhas (protruding balconies). The haveli was constructed in the first half of the nineteenth century by the Patwa merchants – five brothers from a Jain family who were bankers and traders in brocade and opium. There are actually five separate suites within the haveli; two are closed to visitors and two more, preserved in their original condition, are open as government museums. One, the Kothari Patwa Haveli Museum, has various traditional artefacts on display and replica mirrorwork on the walls, giving you some idea of how the haveli would originally have looked. As well as visiting the interior of the Patwa Haveli, it's worth taking a little stroll down the street whose entrance it bridges, to check out the stonework on four impressive neighbouring havelis.

Salim Singh ki Haveli Asani Rd • Daily 8am–6pm • Charge The third of Jaisalmer's famous trio of havelis, the Salim Singh ki Haveli, lies on the east side of town and is immediately recognizable by the lavishly carved overhanging rooftop balcony that gives the whole building a strangely top-heavy appearance. Its upper floor, enclosed by an overhanging balcony, is best seen from the roof of Natraj restaurant. Halfway up the building is a surprisingly good shop, with ornate pots and traditional 'air fresheners' in the shape of animals, which use natural oils.

South of town There are a couple of fairly minor sights just south of the old-town walls, including a museum hosting daily puppet shows, and Gadi Sagar Tank, one of the best of Jaisalmer's many sunrise and sunset spots.

Gadi Sagar Tank Off Gadi Sagar Rd • Daily 24hr • Free • Boats, Kashmiri shikaras charge for 30min South of the old town, through an imposing triple gateway, lies Gadi Sagar Tank, once Jaisalmer's sole water supply. Now flanked with sandstone ghats and temples, it's a peaceful place, staring out into the desert, and a good spot for watching the sun rise or set. You can also rent boats here for a spin on the water.

Desert Cultural Centre & Folklore Museum Gadi Sagar Rd • Daily 10am–6pm • Charge; camera/video camera charge • Puppet shows daily 6.30pm & 7.30pm Local curiosities including musical instruments, fossils, tools, utensils and rare manuscripts are on display at the Desert Cultural Centre & Museum, next to the tourist office on the main road. The main exhibit is a cloth painting depicting the life of the local folk hero Pabuji, a legendary figure credited with introducing the camel to Rajasthan; the museum also recently absorbed various exhibits from the Folklore Museum, once located by the main gate of the Gadi Sagar Tank, including folk art and textiles, along with opium and betel nut paraphernalia. Of more interest to most visitors, however, are the puppet shows hosted each evening, with English narration.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE JAISALMERJAISALMER AIRPORT, 14KM WEST OF TOWN, WAS REOPENED TO PASSENGER SERVICES IN 2017 – FANTASTIC NEWS FOR THE TOWN'S TOURIST INDUSTRY, SINCE PEOPLE LIVING IN DELHI AND MUMBAI CAN NOW VISIT FOR THE WEEKEND MORE EASILY. HOWEVER, IT'S STILL MAINLY A MILITARY AIRPORT, AND FLIGHTS CAN GET CANCELLED AT SHORT NOTICE (EVEN THE EVENING BEFORE YOUR SCHEDULED DEPARTURE); AS WELL AS KEEPING AN EYE OUT FOR EMAILS FROM YOUR AIRLINE, IT'S PRUDENT TO LET YOUR ACCOMMODATION KNOW YOUR SCHEDULE, SINCE THEY MAY HEAR UPDATES WHILE YOU'RE OUT GALLIVANTING AROUND THE DESERT.

Destinations Ahmedabad (1–2 daily; 1hr 40min); Delhi (1 daily; 1hr 25min); Jaipur (1 daily; 1hr 15min); Mumbai (3–6 weekly; 1hr 35min).

By train Jaisalmer's railway station (☎0299 225 2354) is 2km east of the city on the Jodhpur Rd. The following trains run daily; for all other destinations, you're best off taking a bus. Note that night trains can get very cold – close to freezing in winter.

Destinations The daily #15013 Ranikhet Express, which departs at 2.40am, stops at, among other places, Pokaran (4.20am), Phalodi (5.30am), Osian (6.36am), Jodhpur (8am), Ajmer (1pm), Jaipur (3.10pm), Alwar (5.42pm), New Delhi (9.15pm) and Ramnagar (4.15am).

By bus Most government buses (☎0299 225 1541) depart from the Government Bus Stand east of town on Barmer Rd, although early morning departures leave from the more conveniently located State Bus Stand at the southern end of Amar Sagar Rd; check when you buy your ticket. Private buses operate from Hanuman Circle and Air Force Circle, respectively west and south of the fort; tickets can be purchased from any of the numerous travel agents around town, such as Swagat Travels or Hanuman Travels, both just north of Hanuman Circle, or from Adventure Travels.

Destinations Abu Rd (2 daily; 10hr 30min); Ajmer (3 daily; 10hr); Bikaner (2 daily; 6–8hr); Delhi (1 nightly; 15hr); Jaipur (7 daily; 11–14hr); Jodhpur (1–2 hourly; 5–6hr); Udaipur (3 daily; 12hr).

GETTING AROUND AND INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION RTDC'S TOURIST OFFICE (MON–SAT 10AM–5PM; ☎0299 225 2406), SOUTHEAST OF TOWN NEAR GADI SAGAR POL, IS JUST ABOUT PASSABLE, BUT YOUR ACCOMMODATION WILL QUITE POSSIBLY BE OF EQUAL OR BETTER USE.

Travel agents The excellent Adventure Travels can arrange bus, train and plane tickets for a modest commission; they also have currency exchange and can arrange hotel bookings.

Bicycle rental Narayan Cycles, on the street directly opposite Nachana Haveli hotel (100m up on the left, just where the street starts to bend).

Motorbike rental There are a couple of places south of Gopa Chowk including Desert Bikes (☎94141 50033) and Shiva Rent a Bike (☎94620 94620), with bikes and scooters.

Festivals Jaisalmer's Desert Festival is held over three days at the full moon in the lunar month of Magha (in February). Unlike many of the region's other festivals, this is not a livestock fair, but a festival of performing arts, and generally a fun occasion, with folk dancing, turban-tying competitions, camel racing and craft bazaars. Main events are held at Dedansar Polo Ground. Room prices rise and hotels tend to get full at this time.

Swimming pool Non-guests can use the pools at the Mandir Palace Hotel, and plenty of others in and around town.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP AND MAP

Jaisalmer has plenty of accommodation, and fierce competition keeps prices low. The basic choice is between in one of the old places within the wonderfully atmospheric fort – but read 'Jaisalmer in Jeopardy' first – or in one of the newer places outside, many of which are built in traditional sandstone and come with superb fort views. Most places offer free pick-up from the bus or railway stations, and the majority offer camel treks, which vary in standard and price.

IN THE FORT DESERT BOYS ☎

DESERTBOYSGUESTHOUSE.COM. FRIENDLY BUDGET PLACE WITH CHEAPER ROOMS DOWNSTAIRS (INCLUDING A COUPLE OF BARGAIN SINGLES WITH SHARED BATHROOM), AND BRIGHTER ROOMS UPSTAIRS, SOME WITH FORT VIEWS. THEY NOW HAVE A SECOND, FAR MORE LUXURIOUS LOCATION IN THE FORT, BOASTING DELIGHTFULLY DECORATED ROOMS. ₹₹₹

Garh Jaisal ☎ hotelgarhjaisal.com. Charming and efficiently run haveli with seven smart colour-themed rooms with balconies, a/c and superb views across town. Rates include breakfast, and coffee whenever you want, and their awesome roof terrace has arguably the best panoramas in the fort. ₹₹₹

★Suraj ☎ hotelsurajhaveli.com. This superbly atmospheric haveli, dating back to 1526, is one of the nicest places to stay in the fort, with simple but characterful and hugely spacious heritage rooms (all with fan only, though the more expensive ones are quite opulent) and a privileged rooftop view of the Jain temples. ₹₹

Surya East Fort Wall ☎94133 72888. Cheapie providing some of the richest views in town – you’ll probably spend more time gawping at the views, though their range of basic attached fan and a/c rooms (the more expensive ones have fine views) are decent enough. When demand is low, prices sometimes dip even lower than that stipulated here. ₹₹

IN TOWN ★1ST GATE DHIBBA PARA ☎1STGATE.IN. ONE OF THE NEWER OPTIONS IN TOWN, THIS ITALIAN-RUN BOUTIQUE IS REALLY QUITE SOMETHING. ITS TEN ROOMS ARE ALL GORGEOUS, WOOD-FLOORED AFFAIRS WITH LOVELY BATHROOMS, AND HALF OF THEM FACE PERHAPS THE MOST PICTURESQUE SIDE OF THE FORT. THERE’S ALSO A SPA ON SITE, AS WELL AS A LITTLE GYM AND SHELTERED POOL. LASTLY, THERE’S A GREAT RESTAURANT UPSTAIRS. ₹₹₹₹

Bharat Villas Dhibba Para ☎hotelbharatvillas.com. Less than ten minutes’ walk to the fort, this hotel has comfortable a/c rooms with TVs and attached bathrooms. The lovely rooftop restaurant has a great menu and a fantastic view of the fort. ₹₹

KB Lodge Opposite Patwa Haveli ☎killabhawan.com. An efficiently run, modern hotel a stone’s throw from the havelis with just a handful of tastefully furnished yellow-walled rooms, ranging from fan-cooled ones to giant, sumptuously decorated a/c affairs. Discounts in summer. ₹₹₹

Mandir Palace Gandhi Chowk ☎mandirpalace.com. Occupying part of the exquisite Mandir Palace, with pleasantly spacious rooms sporting discreet heritage touches, attractive public areas (including the fine old Durbar Hall, now housing a miniature museum) and a secluded pool. ₹₹₹₹

CAMEL SAFARIS FROM JAISALMER FEW VISITORS WHO MAKE IT AS FAR AS JAISALMER PASS UP THE OPPORTUNITY TO GO ON A CAMEL TREK, WHICH PROVIDES AN IRRESISTIBLY ROMANTIC CHANCE TO CROSS THE BARREN SANDS AND SLEEP UNDER ONE OF THE STARRIEST SKIES IN THE WORLD.

SANDSTORMS, SORE BACKSIDES AND CAMEL FARTS ASIDE, THE SAFARIS ARE USUALLY GREAT FUN; TREKS NORMALLY LAST FROM ONE TO FOUR DAYS, WITH PRICES VARYING FROM ₹750 TO ₹2000 PER NIGHT. THE HIGHLIGHT IS SPENDING A NIGHT UNDER THE DESERT STARS, AND MOST TRAVELLERS FIND THAT AN OVERNIGHT TRIP, DEPARTING AROUND 3PM ONE DAY AND RETURNING THE NEXT AT NOON, IS SUFFICIENT. UNFORTUNATELY, THE PRICE YOU PAY IS NOT AN ADEQUATE GAUGE OF THE QUALITY OF SERVICES YOU GET, AND IT PAYS TO SHOP AROUND AND ASK OTHER TRAVELLERS FOR RECOMMENDATIONS. MAKE SURE THAT YOU'LL BE PROVIDED WITH YOUR OWN CAMEL, AN ADEQUATE SUPPLY OF BLANKETS (IT CAN GET VERY COLD AT NIGHT), FOOD COOKED WITH MINERAL WATER, AND A CAMPFIRE. YOU SHOULD ALSO MAKE SURE THAT YOUR OPERATOR IS COMMITTED TO EITHER BURNING OR REMOVING ALL RUBBISH (INCLUDING PLASTIC BOTTLES).

The traditional Jaisalmer camel safari used to head west out of town to Amar Sagar, Lodurva, Sam and Kuldhara. Some operators still cover these areas, although encroaching development and crowds of other tourists (around Sam especially) mean that there is very little sense of the real desert hereabouts. The better operators are constantly seeking out new and unspoilt areas to trek through – this usually means an initial drive out of Jaisalmer of around 50–60km, though it's worth it to avoid the crowds. Longer seven- to ten-day treks to Pokaran, Barmer and Bikaner can also be arranged, though these shouldn't be attempted lightly.

Finally, don't book anything until you get to Jaisalmer. Touts trawl trains and buses from Jodhpur, but they usually represent dodgy outfits, or pretend to represent one of the well-established operators. Some offer absurdly cheap rooms if you agree to book a camel trek with them, and then rescind their offer of a room if you change your mind. Guesthouse noticeboards are filled with sorry stories of tourists who accepted. As a rule of thumb, any firm that has to tout for business – and that includes hotels – is worth avoiding.

SPECIALIST AGENCIES SPECIALIST AGENCIES ALLOW YOU TO BOOK DIRECT THROUGH THEIR OFFICES IN JAISALMER. RELIABLE OUTFITS INCLUDE: ADVENTURE TRAVELS JUST SOUTH OF THE FIRST FORT GATE ☎941 4149 176, 🌐ADVENTURECAMELS.COM. SERVING TOURISTS SINCE THE 1980S, THIS OPERATOR GETS RAVE REVIEWS FOR SEEKING OUT REMOTE LOCATIONS AND PROVIDING FRINGE AMENITIES, LIKE REAL MATTRESSES AND SHEETS, PLUS HEARTY FOOD AND THE CHANCE TO MEET LOCAL VILLAGERS.

Chandani Desert Resort Camp Khuhri ☎968 029 8081. Camel safaris that start near Dhoba village and climb up a sand dune for the sunset before continuing to a gorgeous resort of Swiss tents. Dinner around the campfire, music and dance show included.

Sahara Travels Gopa Chowk ☎941 4319 921, 🌐saharatravelsjaisalmer.com. Dependable operator established in 1989, offering well-priced safaris with comfy cot beds, adequate blankets and a decent supply of food and drink.

HOTEL-ORGANIZED SAFARIS RENUKA NEAR GANDHI CHOWK ☎029 9252 757, 🌐HOTELRENUKA.NET. FRIENDLY, RELIABLE CAMEL SAFARIS AT DECENT RATES“. GUIDES SPEAK DECENT ENGLISH AND FACILITIES AREN'T BAD, GIVEN THE PRICE. THANKFULLY YOU CAN BOOK WITHOUT HAVING TO STAY AT THEIR POKY GUESTHOUSE IN TOWN.

Shahi Palace Off Shiv Marg ☎941 4365 495, 🌐shahipalacehotel.com. As well as the regular overnight safaris, this hotel offers Swiss Tent accommodation by their very own private dune where, after a camel trek, the hosts cook a meal on a campfire under the stars. Not cheap, but definitely worth it.

Nachana Haveli Gandhi Chowk 🌐nachanahaveli.com. This venerable old haveli is one of the best choices in its class. The atmospheric ground-floor rooms (all a/c) are virtually windowless, and some could do with a little love, but all have stone walls and are attractively decorated with antique fittings; the suites upstairs are brighter, and have fort views. There's also the good Saffron rooftop restaurant. ₹₹₹

Pleasant Haveli Chainpura Rd 📞0299 225 3253. A halfway house, price-wise, but there's nothing wrong with the rooms at this picturesque, ornately-fronted haveli, set on a calm street in the rather agreeable northwestern section of the old town. Free pick-up from train or bus stations. ₹₹₹

Pol Haveli Near Geeta Ashram, Dedansar Rd 🌐hotelpolhaveli.com. Attractive guesthouse in a stylish little sandstone building. Rooms (fan or a/c) are neat and comfortable (although larger ones are slightly lacking in furniture), and there's a lovely rooftop terrace for idle lounging and fort-gazing. Free pick-up from train station. ₹

Roop Mahal Off Shiv Marg, 🌐hotels.eglobe-solutions.com/hotelroopmahal. Comfortable guesthouse in a good central location west of the fort, with bright, inexpensive, modern rooms (some with fort views and cheap a/c), helpful staff and a pleasant rooftop restaurant. There's also plenty of parking space. ₹

★Shahi Palace Off Shiv Marg 🌐shahipalacehotel.com. Outstanding little hotel tucked just outside the fort in a stylish modern sandstone building with stunning fort views from the great rooftop terrace restaurant and immaculate rooms. The only caveat is that the cheaper rooms are a bit small – if your budget will stretch a bit, it's well worth coughing up for one of the superb larger a/c rooms. ₹₹

OUT OF TOWN SURYAGARH OFF SAM RD, 10KM WEST OF TOWN 🌐SURYAGARH.COM. IF YOU VALUE OPULENCE AND REMOTENESS (HEY, THE DESERT IS JUST AS SPECIAL AS THE FORT, AND EVEN BIGGER), THIS IS THE BEST OF THE SEVERAL LUXURY OPTIONS DOTTED AROUND JAISALMER. THERE'S OCCASIONALLY A BIT OF A RESORT FEEL, BUT THE

POOL, GYM, YOGA SESSIONS AND ARCHERY WORKSHOPS WILL KEEP YOU ENTERTAINED, AND THE ON-SITE RESTAURANTS ARE EXCELLENT. ₹₹₹₹

EATING

MAP AND MAP

RESTAURANTS 1ST GATE DHIBBA PARA ☎1STGATE.IN. THIS ROOFTOP RESTAURANT OF THIS BOUTIQUE HOTEL IS ALSO A FANTASTIC PLACE TO EAT – GIVEN THE ITALIAN OWNERSHIP, IT MAKES SENSE THAT THEIR PIZZAS AND PASTA DISHES ARE ABOUT AS AUTHENTIC AS IT GETS IN INDIA. THERE ARE MORE SURPRISING TREATS ON THE MENU, INCLUDING GOOD GAZPACHO (GREAT WHEN THE WEATHER'S HOT, AND DULCE DE LECHE WITH COOKIES FOR AFTERS. OH, AND THE VIEWS ARE TREMENDOUS. ₹₹₹

Chandan Shree Just south of Amar Sagar Pol, no phone. No-frills restaurant serving up inexpensive veg curries and thalis, as well as South Indian and Rajasthani specialities. They also do awesome makhaniya lassis. ₹

★Jaisal Italy Inside first fort gate ☎9928592525. Italian restaurant with great pasta dishes, served in heaped portions at reasonable prices, plus thin-crust pizzas, salads and great coffee. The superb terrace directly opposite the main ramparts is beautiful at night, though the interior is a beaut, too – set into the ramparts, it's a former sentry base, as the vertical slit-windows suggest. ₹₹

★Natraj Opposite the Salim Singh ki Haveli ☎0299 225 2667. There's no fort view from this upper-level restaurant (except one corner, from one or two tables, if you crane your neck). However, the local food is the best in town, with non-veg options including plenty of Rajasthani options – you're best off going for the scrummy Rajasthani thali, which gives you a little of all the local specialities, and will be served nice and spicy if you so desire. Licensed. ₹₹

Saffron Nachana Haveli, Gandhi Chowk ☎0299 225 2110. Slightly upmarket rooftop haveli restaurant, serving fine veg, tandoori and Mughlai food. There's live music most nights, and this is the best time to visit, on account of the superlative fort views. ₹₹

CAFÉS AND SNACKS 8 JULY MAIN CHOWK, IN THE FORT 📍 0299 225 2814. RECOMMENDED FOR ITS PRIVILEGED TERRACE VIEW OF THE FORT'S BUSTLING MAIN CHOWK AND PALACE RATHER THAN FOR ITS FOOD, THOUGH IT HAS A GOOD SELECTION OF SMOOTHIES, JUICES AND LASSIS (TRY THE AWESOME LOCAL VARIETY, MADE WITH SAFFRON, ALMOND AND CARDAMOM, AS WELL AS SNACKS SUCH AS DELECTABLE APPLE PIE WITH CUSTARD. HOMESICK BRITS/AUSSIES WILL LOVE THE MARMITE/VEGEMITE-AND-TOAST BREAKFAST OPTION, OR THE BAKED BEANS (IN HOME-MADE SAUCE) ON TOAST. ₹₹

Bhang shop Gopa Chowk. If you like bhang – and be warned that it doesn't agree with everybody – this is one of the best places in the country to get it, with a whole menu of bhang-laced lassis and cookies (minimum purchase of ten), and a choice of different strengths. ₹₹

Dhanraj Ranmal Bhatia Court Rd. Wonderful, moist milk-based sweets (*ladoo*s, barfi and the like), plus great samosas and mirchi badas; you can even watch them being made, as they do it all out front. ₹

RK Juice Center Bhatia Bazaar. Wonderful freshly pressed juices using whatever fruits are available on the day (usually including some or all of orange, pomegranate, pineapple, banana, carrot and ginger). They promise not to add ice or tap water (though they do use it to rinse out the juice extractor). ₹

DRINKING

MAP

Cafe Kaku Malka Pol 📍 96727 03070. Overlooking the city, and with a mighty (if slightly distant) view of the fort, this is your best bet for booze – wine and spirits are a bit pricey, but you can get a big bottle of Kingfisher. They've half a dozen low tables on cushion-covered platforms, all with winning views. This is also a great place to smoke a hookah, and for now at least, it's pleasingly off the tourist radar.

SHOPPING

MAP

Jaisalmer is one of the best places in India to shop for souvenirs. Prices are comparatively high and the salesmen push hard, but the choice of goods is excellent – virtually the whole fort has now been turned into an enormous souvenir bazaar, while there are dozens of further places along Bhatia Bazaar. Jaisalmer is a particularly good place to pick up textiles, fabrics and leatherwork (including camel leather bags and shoes), as well as cheap hippie-style clothes.

Ajay Leather Shop 181 Fort Rd 📞96943 07055. Perhaps the best choice for camel-leather goods, with staff light on hassle and big on conversation. If you're in town for a few days, they can dye some goods – laptop bags, handbags, purses, footwear and the like – the colour of your choosing.

Hari Om Jewellers Sunset Point, inside the fort 📞94146 71025. Well-located jewellery store, with a very decent selection at fair prices – just try to find it yourself, since even locals will try taking a commission if they show you the way. It's one of those places where you could pop in for a look, and emerge a couple of hours later, empty-handed but full of masala chai.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE THERE ARE ATMS ALL OVER TOWN, INCLUDING SOME INSIDE AND OUTSIDE AMAR SAGAR POL, AND A COUPLE JUST OUTSIDE THE SOUTHERN EDGE OF THE FORT, PLUS A CLUSTER OF EXCHANGE BUREAUX IN GANDHI CHOWK.

Hospital The government T.B. Hospital is on Sam Rd, west of Hanuman Circle (📞0299 225 5627), but a better bet is the small, private Maheshwari Hospital off Sam Rd opposite the court and District Magistrate's office (📞0299 225 0024).

Police Just south of Hanuman Circle on Amar Sagar Rd (📞0299 225 2233).

Amar Sagar

Get there by rickshaw or cycle from town • Adeshwar Nath Temple Daily dawn–dusk • Entry, camera, video camera – all charge Seven kilometres northwest of Jaisalmer is AMAR SAGAR, a small and peaceful town set around a large artificial lake (empty during the dry season) where you'll find the eighteenth-century Amar Singh Palace and three Jain temples, including the Adeshwar Nath Temple, commissioned in 1928 by a member of the same family who put up the Patwa Haveli in Jaisalmer.

Lodurva

There is just one bus a day to Lodurva (3pm), so taking a rickshaw or taxi is a more convenient and leisurely option – or, if feeling energetic, you could cycle • Jain temples Daily 8am–5pm • Charge A further 10km northwest of Amar Sagar, LODURVA was the capital of the Bhati Rajputs from the eighth century until the twelfth, when it was sacked by Muhammad of Ghor, after which the Bhatīs moved their capital to Jaisalmer. Only a few Jain temples, rebuilt in the seventeenth century, remain. The main temple, dedicated to Parshvanath, features an ornately carved 8m toran (arch), just inside the entrance to the main temple compound, perhaps the most exquisite in Rajasthan, plus a finely carved exterior.

Kuldhara

Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge • No public transport; a jeep to Kuldhara costs around ₹1000 for the round trip South of the Sam road, around 25km west of Jaisalmer, the ghost village of KULDHARA was one of eighty-four villages abandoned, for unknown reasons, simultaneously one night in 1825 by the Paliwal Brahmin community, which had settled here in the thirteenth century. The Paliwals' sense of industry and order is attested to by their orderly homes, each well designed with their separate living quarters, guest room, kitchen and stables, as well as a parking space for a camel outside. You can take an atmospheric stroll through the houses on your way to the temple which is at the heart of the village. Kuldhara is a bit far from anything, but there's usually a little shop open near the entrance to the compound, and a drinks wagon 1.5km down the road into the complex when you're in need of some refreshments.

THE BIRTHPLACE OF ATOMIC INDIA SOME 110KM EAST OF JAISALMER, AT THE ROAD AND RAIL JUNCTIONS BETWEEN JODHPUR, BIKANER AND THE WEST, IS THE QUIET AND LITTLE-VISITED TOWN OF POKARAN. THIS BECAME THE CENTRE OF INTERNATIONAL ATTENTION IN MAY 1998 WHEN THREE MASSIVE NUCLEAR EXPLOSIONS WERE DETONATED 200M BENEATH THE SANDS OF THE THAR DESERT, 20KM NORTHWEST OF THE TOWN, ANNOUNCING INDIA'S ARRIVAL AS ONE OF THE WORLD'S FULLY FLEDGED ATOMIC POWERS.

Sam

Daily bus (4pm, returning in morning) from local bus stand in Jaisalmer; jeeps/taxis about ₹1200/₹1750 for round trip The huge, rolling sand dunes 40km west of Jaisalmer are known as SAM, though strictly this is the name of a small village further west. Unfortunately, the once pristine desert here has now vanished beneath endless tented camps, as around five thousand tourists descend daily to watch sunset and make merry in the desert. If you've come to the Thar in search of vast crowds, psychotic camel touts and endless piles of windblown plastic, then you'll be in seventh heaven. If not, the entire area is best given a wide berth. You can stay overnight here in one of the numerous tented camps, but this is not recommended.

Khuhri

Daily buses (3pm & 5pm, returning in morning) from just west of state bus stand in Jaisalmer. A rather nicer place to watch the sun set over the dunes than Sam is the village of KHUHRI, 42km southwest of Jaisalmer. Many camel safaris either start here or pass through – most time their arrival so that tourists can see flamboyantly dressed local women arriving with large jugs on their heads to fill up with water at caste-specific wells. The village also has a certain charm – many of its homes are still made of mud and thatch rather than concrete, their exterior surfaces beautifully decorated with ornate white murals.

Unfortunately, tourist development has already eroded much of Khuhri's traditional character. Virtually every building has been converted into a guesthouse, while ugly new concrete buildings and endless signboards are beginning to mushroom on every available space, accompanied by the usual tide of discarded plastic and other rubbish.

ACCOMMODATION BADAL HOUSE CALL AHEAD FOR KHUHRI A PICK-UP AT THE BUS STOP ☎0810 733 9097. DESPITE THE PROFUSION OF GUESTHOUSES IN KHUHRI (AND UPMARKET TENTED CAMPS AROUND IT), PRICES TEND TO BE STEEP. IF YOU DO WANT TO STAY IN THE DESERT, YOU PROBABLY CAN'T DO BETTER THAN THE VERY SIMPLE BUT EXTREMELY PEACEFUL BADAL HOUSE. OWNED BY THE CHARMING BADUL SINGH, THIS WELCOMING HOMESTAY IS A GOOD PLACE TO CHILL OUT FOR A FEW DAYS AND GET A FEEL OF VILLAGE LIFE. YOU STAY IN HUTS OR ROOMS AND THEY CAN ALSO ARRANGE WELL-PRICED, AUTHENTIC CAMEL SAFARIS. FULL BOARD. ₹

Jodhpur and around On the eastern fringe of the Thar Desert, JODHPUR, dubbed 'the Blue City' after the colour-wash of its old townhouses, huddles below the mighty Mehrangarh Fort, the most spectacular citadel in Rajasthan, which dominates the cityscape from atop its huge sandstone plinth.

Blue originally denoted a high-caste Brahmin residence, resulting from the addition of indigo to lime-based whitewash, which was thought to protect buildings from insects, and to keep them cool in summer. Over time the colour caught on – there's now even a blue-wash mosque on the road from the Jalori Gate, south of the fort. However, don't arrive thinking that the whole city is blue – it's just part of the old city, and even here the hue is not totally dominant, vying with mauve for chromatic supremacy in some areas.

The bazaars of the old city, with different areas assigned to different trades, radiate out from the 1910 Sardar Market with its tall clock tower, a distinctive local landmark marking the centre of town. Most of the ramparts on the south side of the old city have been dismantled, leaving Jalori Gate and Sojati Gate looking rather forlorn as gates without a wall.

Jodhpur was once the most important town of Marwar, the largest princely state in Rajputana, and now has a population of around 1.3 million. Most people stay just long enough to visit the fort, though there's plenty to justify a longer visit. Getting lost in the blue maze of the old city you'll stumble across Muslim tie-dyers, puppet-makers and traditional spice markets, while Jodhpur's famed cubic roofscape, best viewed at sunset, is a photographer's dream.

Brief history The kingdom of Marwar came into existence in 1381 when Rao Chanda, chief of the Rathore Rajput clan, seized the fort of Mandor from its former rulers, the Parihars. In 1459, the Rathore chief Rao Jodha moved from the exposed site at Mandor to a massive steep-sided escarpment, naming his new capital Jodhpur, after himself. His high barricaded fort proved virtually impregnable, and the city soon amassed great wealth from trade. The Mughals were keen to take over Jodhpur, and Akbar got his hands on the city in 1561, but he eventually allowed Marwar to keep its internal independence so long as the Rathore maharajas allied themselves to him.

In the eighteenth century, Marwar, Mewar (Udaipur) and Jaipur sealed a triple alliance to retain their independence against the Mughals, though the three states were as often at each other's throats as they were allied together. At the end of the century, Maharaja Man Singh found himself under pressure from the expanding Maratha Empire to his south, so in 1818 he turned for help to a new power, the British. Under the terms of his deal with them – not unlike Marwar's old arrangement with the Mughals – the kingdom retained its internal independence but had to pay the East India Company an annual tribute equivalent to the one previously enforced by the Marathas.

The last but one maharaja before Independence, Umaid Singh, is commemorated by the immense Umaid Bhawan Palace. In 1930 he agreed in principle with the British to incorporate Marwar into an independent India. Despite the loss of official status, his descendants retain much of their wealth, alongside a great deal of influence and genuine respect in Jodhpur.

Mehrangarh Fort Daily 9am–5pm • Charge including audio tour if you leave ID, credit card or deposit • www.mehrangarh.org

For size, strength and sheer physical presence, few sights in India can rival Jodhpur's mighty Mehrangarh Fort, a great mass of impregnable masonry whose soaring, windowless walls appear to have grown directly out of the enormous rock outcrop on which it stands. The walk up to the fort from the old city is pretty steep, but you can reach the entrance by taxi or auto along the road from Nagauri Gate. The outstanding audio tour takes about two hours to complete.

You enter the fort through Jai Pol (or Jey Pol), the first of the fort's seven defensive gates. The sixth of the seven gates, Loha Pol, has a sharp right-angle turn and sharper iron spikes to hinder the ascent of charging enemy elephants. On the wall just inside it you can see the handprints of Maharaja Man Singh's widows, placed there in 1843 as they left the palace to commit sati on his funeral pyre – the last mass sati by wives of a Marwari maharaja.

Beyond the final gate, the Suraj Pol, lies the Coronation Courtyard (Shangar Chowk), where maharajas are crowned on a special marble throne. Looking up from the courtyard, you can see the fantastic jali (lattice) work that almost entirely covers the surrounding sandstone walls. The adjoining apartments now serve as a museum showcasing solid silver howdahs (elephant seats), palanquins and assorted armaments including Akbar's own sword. Upstairs are some fine miniature paintings of the Marwari school.

FLYING FOX RIDES OVER THE BLUE CITY FOR A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE FORT, YOU CAN FLY ITS OVER COURTYARDS, RAMPARTS AND LAKES VIA

FLYING FOX, A NETWORK OF SIX ZIPWIRES. THE LONGEST (AND LAST) WIRE – KNOWN AS THE ‘MAGNIFICENT MARWAR’ – ALSO GIVES AMAZING VIEWS OF THE BLUE CITY ITSELF. TOURS ARE GUIDED BY AN INSTRUCTOR AND LAST ABOUT 90MIN. IF YOU BOOK ONLINE THREE DAYS IN ADVANCE, THEY USUALLY OFFER A FIFTEEN PERCENT DISCOUNT; THE OFFICE IS BY THE GARDENS INSIDE THE FORT, BUT YOU DON’T HAVE TO PAY THE FORT ENTRY FEE IF YOU’RE HEADING HERE, SO YOU CAN DO YOUR VISIT AND YOUR ZIPWIRING AT DIFFERENT TIMES OF DAY, IF YOU SO DESIRE.

SUNRISE AND SUNSET IN JODHPUR JODHPUR BEING ONE OF THE MOST PICTURESQUE CITIES IN RAJASTHAN – NAY, INDIA – MANY OF ITS VISITORS WANT TO SEE THE PLACE IN THE MOST SPECTACULAR LIGHT, WHICH OF COURSE MEANS THE TIME AROUND SUNRISE AND SUNSET. THE FORT OFTEN PLAYS A CENTRAL ROLE IN PHOTOGRAPHIC PROCEEDINGS, BUT ITS OPENING TIMES RULE IT OUT AS AN OPTION; THE NEARBY RAO JODHA DESERT ROCK PARK CLOSES LATER, AND PROVIDES VIEWS OF THE SUN’S FINAL RAYS FLARING UP THE FORT, AS DOES SINGHORIA HILL (24HR; FREE) ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE ROAD. POPULAR WITH LOCALS AND INDEPENDENT TRAVELLERS IS THE RIDGE SOUTH OF THE FORT, OFTEN REFERRED TO AS SUNSET POINT; ALTHOUGH THE TRAILS LEADING UP THE

PROMONTORY FROM THE WEST AND EAST ARE A LITTLE HARD TO FIND, YOU'LL HUNT THEM DOWN IN THE END, AND THE VIEWS ARE COLOSSAL. LASTLY, OF COURSE, YOUR OWN ACCOMMODATION MAY PROVIDE LOVELY VIEWS; FAILING THAT, HEAD TO RESTAURANTS SUCH AS JEEMAN OR INDIQUE.

The most elaborate of the royal apartments, the magnificent 1724 Phool Mahal (Flower Palace), with its jewel-like stained-glass windows and gold filigree ceiling, was used as a venue for dancing, music and poetry recitals. The nearby Takhat Vilas was created by nineteenth-century Maharaja Takhat Singh, its ceiling hung with huge Christmas-tree balls. In the Jhanki Mahal, or Queen's Palace, there's a colourful array of cradles of former rulers. The Moti Mahal (Pearl Palace) was used for councils of state. The five alcoves in the wall opposite the entrance are in fact concealed balconies where the maharaja's wives could listen in secretly on the proceedings.

Beyond the Moti Mahal is the zenana, or women's quarters. From here, take a walk south of the main complex; once through the gardens, you'll finally make it to the Temple of Chamunda, the city's oldest temple, dedicated to Jodhpur's patron goddess, an incarnation of Durga. Peek through the holes in the fortifications, and you'll get some spellbinding views over the Blue City.

Jaswant Thada Off Fort Rd • Daily 9.30am–5pm • Charge, camera/video camera/guide charge Some 500m north of the fort, and connected to it by road, Jaswant Thada is a pillared marble memorial to the popular ruler Jaswant Singh II (1878–95), who purged Jodhpur of bandits, initiated irrigation systems and boosted the economy. The cenotaphs of members of the royal family who have died since Jaswant are close to his memorial; those who preceded him are commemorated by chhatris at Mandor. In the morning, this southwest-facing spot is an excellent place from which to photograph the fort.

Rao Jodha Desert Rock Park Off Fort Rd • www.raojodhapark.in • Daily: Mar–Sep 6.30am–7pm, Oct–Feb 7.30am–6pm • Charge
If you're in the fort area, consider heading a little west to the new Rao Jodha Desert Rock Park, an undulating, grassy expanse spreading over 70 hectares – crazy though it may sound, visitors are advised to leave their mobile phone numbers at the ticket booth, just in case they get lost. This area was neglected for decades, partly on account of an infestation of thorny shrubs; there are still some here, but by and large this has been a resounding success, and the fort views are especially good in the evening.

Umaid Bhawan Palace Circuit House Rd • Entry fee, redeemable against food and drink • Museum Daily 9am–5pm • Charge, camera/video camera/guide charge www.tajhotels.com

Dominating the city's southeast horizon is the Umaid Bhawan Palace, a colossal Indo-Saracenic heap that kept three thousand labourers gainfully employed for sixteen years at a total cost of more than ₹9 million. The furniture and fittings for its 374 rooms were originally ordered from Maples in London during World War II, but were sunk by a U-boat en route to India. The maharaja was thus forced to turn to Stephen Norblin, a wartime Polish refugee, who gave the palace its fabulous Art Deco interiors.

The present incumbent, Maharaja Gaj Singh, occupies only one-third of the palace; the rest is given over to a luxury hotel and a rather dull museum, containing assorted European crockery and glassware, plus a mildly entertaining gallery of clocks and barometers, some in the form of railway locomotives, lighthouses and windmills. Far more interesting (and expensive) is the palace itself, its Art Deco furniture and fittings nearly all original, enlivened with lashings of typically Rajasthani gilt and sweeping staircases. To see them, there's a hefty minimum fee.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE JODHPUR STANDS AT JODHPUR THE NEXUS OF RAJASTHAN'S MAIN TOURIST ROUTES, WITH CONNECTIONS NORTHEAST TO JAIPUR, PUSHKAR AND DELHI, SOUTH TO UDAIPUR AND AHMEDABAD, AND WEST TO JAISALMER. BUSES FOR MOST DESTINATIONS ARE FASTER THAN THE TRAIN.

By plane Jodhpur's Civil Airport (✈291 251 2934) is 4km south of the city. A prepaid auto-rickshaw into town from the airport costs ₹200, taxis ₹500; Uber and Ola cabs usually cost ₹180–220.

Destinations Ahmedabad (2 daily; 1hr 20min); Delhi (4 daily; 1hr 25min); Mumbai (2 daily; 1hr 45min).

By train The railway station is on Station Rd, 300m south of Sojati Gate; there's a reservations office (Mon–Sat 8am–8pm, Sun 8am–2pm) just north of the station, behind the GPO. Note that there are no direct trains to Udaipur or Chittaurgarh – it's much easier to catch the bus.

By bus Government buses leave from the Roadways (Raika Bagh) Bus Stand just east of the fort – turn up an hour or so before departure to buy a ticket. For timetable information, consult redbus.in. Most private buses leave from the stand on Pal Rd, 4km west of the centre; a few private buses leave from Kalpataru Cinema, 4km southwest of town. Private buses for Jaisalmer leave from Bombay Motors Circle, nearby, where they also drop off. You can book tickets on private buses at most travel agents and a lot of hotels (for a fee).

Destinations Agra (4 daily; 13hr); Ajmer (2–5 hourly; 4–6hr); Delhi (12 daily; 11–13hr); Jaipur (2–5 hourly; 7–9hr); Jaisalmer (1–2 hourly; 5hr); Udaipur (1–2 hourly; 4hr 30min–7hr).

GETTING AROUND AND INFORMATION BY TAXI THE OLA AND UBER TAXI-HAILING APPS WORK IN JODHPUR, AND PRICES ARE USUALLY COMPARABLE TO AUTO-RICKSHAWS.

Motorcycle rental Jodhpur Travels on Station Rd (daily 6am–11pm; ☎946 0687 264, jodhpurtravels.com) has motorbikes and mopeds for rent.

Tourist information The tourist office (Mon–Fri 9.30am–6pm; ☎0291 254 5083) is next to the RTDC Goomar Hotel on High Court Rd.

ACTIVITIES COOKING CLASSES NUMEROUS HOTELS IN TOWN OFFER COOKING CLASSES, BUT BEST ARE THOSE AT THE RANI MAHAL; THE CLASSES THEMSELVES ARE FREE, AND GUESTS SIMPLY PAY FOR THE INGREDIENTS. SOUTH OF TOWN, INDRASHAN PRIDES ITSELF ON COOKING CLASSES THAT DRAW AMATEUR CHEFS FROM AROUND THE WORLD.

Festivals Jodhpur's annual two-day Marwar Festival, held at the full moon of the Hindu month of Ashvina (mid-October) is a showcase of performing arts, mainly music and dance.

Flying Fox rides You can zoom over the Blue City on a series of zip-wires; tours (📍flyingfox.asia) start more or less half-hourly from 9.30am–4.30pm.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Jodhpur has plenty of good accommodation in all price brackets, and happily the same can now be said of its main area of interest. Many guesthouses offer free pick-ups from the train or bus stations.

IN THE OLD TOWN AND CITY CENTRE COSY BHARAM PURI, CHUNA KI CHOWKI, NAVCHOKIYA, 📍COSYGUESTHOUSE.COM. FRIENDLY LITTLE GUESTHOUSE IN A PRETTY BLUE-WASHED BUILDING BURIED DEEP IN THE MAZE OF LANES IN THE WEST OF THE OLD CITY (CALL FOR FREE PICK-UP; IT'S TRICKY TO FIND OTHERWISE). ROOMS (FAN, AIR-COOLED AND A/C; A FEW WITH SHARED BATHROOM) ARE SIMPLE BUT NEAT AND COSY, AND THERE ARE KILLER VIEWS OF THE FORT FROM THE ROOFTOP TERRACE. ₹

Durag Niwas 1st Old Public Park Lane, Raika Bagh, 📍durag-niwas.com. Very friendly and well-run little place with cosy air-cooled and a/c rooms, all with private bathrooms, set around a peaceful courtyard. Also runs various programmes helping disadvantaged local women (half the guests are usually long-stay volunteers). LGBTQ friendly. ₹₹

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM JODHPUR ALL THE FOLLOWING TRAINS RUN DAILY. THERE'S ALSO

THE WEEKLY THAR EXPRESS TO KARACHI IN PAKISTAN (SAT AT 1AM; 24HR), WHICH DEPARTS FROM BAGAT KI KOTHI STATION, 4KM SOUTH OF THE CITY.

Destination	Name	No.	Departs	Arrives
Abu Road	Ahmedabad Express	19224	5.15am	9.30am
	Ranakpur Express	14707	1.05pm	6.15pm
Agra Fort	Marudhar Express	14854	8.25am	6.15pm
Ajmer	Ranikhet Express	14801	8.05am	12.45pm
Alwar	Ranikhet Express	15013	8.15pm	5.42pm
Bikaner	Ranakpur Express	14708	7.15am	12.45pm
Delhi	Mandore Express	22996	8.15pm	6.45am
	Ranikhet Express	15013	8.15pm	9.15am
Jaipur	Jaipur Intercity Express	12466	5.00am	9.45am
	Mandore Express	22996	8.15pm	1.10am
Jaisalmer	Ranikhet Express	15014	4.55pm	10.30pm
	Corbett Park Link	25014	4.55am	10.30pm
Sawai Madhopur	Intercity Express	12466	5.00am	12.25pm

★Juna Mahal Ada Bazaar, off Daga St, www.junamahal.com. This almost 500-year-old haveli has just five great-value boutique suites (all a/c) adorned with eye-catching artefacts, plus nice bathrooms and balconies. There's veg food and free pick-up from the railway station. ₹₹

Krishna Prakash Haveli Nayabas, Killikhana, www.kpheritage.com. A little like a tourist hotel given a haveli-style makeover, this place may appear chintzy to some, but can come across as best-of-both-worlds to others. Rooms are pleasingly decorated with good wi-fi, and there's a cute, sheltered pool; the breakfast buffet is quite decent, and guests can dine up on the roof with a jaw-dropping view of the fort. ₹₹₹

Pal Haveli Near Gulab Sagar Lake, www.palhaveli.com. Atmospheric heritage hotel in the heart of the old city with attractively furnished rooms and plenty of period character. Standard ('Royal Heritage') rooms are reasonably affordable, though the 'Historical' suites are only slightly nicer, and almost twice the price. There's also a fabulous rooftop restaurant, spa and bar. ₹₹₹

Raas Tunwarji-ka Jhalara, www.raasjodhpur.com. At last, a real luxury option in the old town. Despite the location near the step-well, there's a truly secluded air to proceedings, while buildings and decor are a quirky mix of old, old old, and modern. There's an old-site spa (but of course), a bar area overlooking the pool, and a dining room for in-house guests only – very exclusive. ₹₹₹₹

★Rani Mahal Navchokiya, Fort Rd, www.theranimahal.com. Despite its location in a 450-year-old building, this is a relatively new accommodation option, yet already up there with the best in the city, with admirably switched-on management, and thirteen superlative rooms (six of which have marvellous antique wooden ceilings). Dua Lipa and assorted Bollywood stars have stayed here, as made evident by the wall of fame in the marvellously decorated lobby, which doubles as a restaurant; however, even this is trumped by the superlative views from the rooftop tables. ₹₹

★Shahi Heritage Gandhi St, City Police district, off Katla Bazaar opposite Narsingh Temple, www.shahiguesthouse.net. Welcoming family guesthouse occupying a quirky 350-year-old Mughal haveli, buried deep in the warren of lanes beneath the fort's southwest wall – and with superb views of it from the roof. The six rooms (all a/c) are brimming with character, decorated with a medley of quaint murals and assorted curios.

Call for free pick-up, since it's difficult to find otherwise; breakfast included in the rates. ₹₹₹

Yogi Guest House Manak Chowk, Old City, yogiguesthouse.com. One of the more charming guesthouses located just north of Sardar Bazaar, with lovely blue decor and clean, comfy rooms (most with a/c) with wobbly old walls. There are excellent fort views from the rooftop restaurant. ₹

FURTHER AFIELD BAL SAMAND LAKE PALACE 8KM NORTH OF JODHPUR ALONG MANDORE RD, www

JODHANAHERITAGE.COM. AMONG THE MOST ATTRACTIVE HERITAGE HOTELS IN THE STATE, CONVERTED FROM THE MAHARAJA'S LAKESIDE SUMMER PALACE, WITH TEN BEAUTIFUL 'PALACE SUITES' IN THE MAIN BUILDING – ALL HUGE, AIRY AND EXQUISITELY FURNISHED – PLUS CHEAPER STANDARD ROOMS IN THE PALACE'S FORMER STABLES, NEAR RECEPTION. ₹₹₹₹

★Devi Bhawan Ratanada Circle, Defence Laboratory Rd, devibhawan.com. Set in surprisingly lush gardens, this eighty-year-old refuge is home to spotless a/c rooms furnished with period fittings and colourful Rajasthani fabrics. The gorgeous pool is one of the nicest in town and there's a breezy restaurant that spills onto a terrace shaded by neem trees. ₹₹₹

Taj Hari Mahal 5 Residency Rd, 1km south of town, www.vivantabytaj.com. All the luxury you'd expect from a five-star Taj hotel, with swanky traditional-style decor, two good restaurants, a spa and good-sized pool, and spacious and attractively furnished rooms. ₹₹₹₹

Umaid Bhawan Palace Circuit House Rd, www.tajhotels.com. The maharaja of Jodhpur's princely pile ranks among the world's grandest hotels, with celebrity guests, lashings of trendy Art Deco and dark, marbled passageways. ₹₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Local specialties include mirchi bada, a big chilli covered in wheatgerm and potato and then deep-fried like a pakora – you'll often find them served on trains on the way into and out of Jodhpur. You'll find these, and some of the town's most notable places to snack, around the clock tower, which is lit up rather kaleidoscopically at night; for Indian sweeties, try the shops at the western end of Mirchi bazaar.

RESTAURANTS INDIQUE PAL HAVELI, NEAR GULAB SAGAR LAKE @ PALHAVELI.COM. ATMOSPHERIC DINING SPOT WITH TABLES ON TWO LEVELS OF THE ROOFTOP, WITH STUNNING VIEWS OF THE FORT, THE BLUE CITY AND UMAID BHAWAN PALACE. THE VEG AND NON-VEG FOOD ISN'T QUITE AS GOOD AS THE VIEW, BUT NOT BAD AT ALL – MAINLY INDIAN MAINS, INCLUDING GOOD RAJASTHANI OPTIONS, BUT ALSO LAMB GOULASH, THAI CURRIES, AND AMRITSARI FISH TIKKA. LICENSED, TOO. ₹₹

Jhankar Choti Haveli, Makarana Mohalla @ jhankarhaveli.com. The veg restaurant in this 500-year-old building spans three floors, with obligatory rooftop seating, but it's the enchanting court-yard garden restaurant that steals the show; sit under the shade of neem trees and dine on home-style Rajasthani specialities such as raboi and ker sangri, perhaps best sampled in thali form, or Western treats such as banana pancakes. ₹₹

Stepwell Cafe By stepwell, Makarana Mohalla @ stepwellcafe.com. More of a restaurant than a cafe (although they do have an espresso machine, and staff who know how to operate it), this fancy spot has a quirky step-based menu. The 'first step' starters are mostly Indian in nature but with some Western tweaks, 'main step' mains are light affairs such as pasta dishes, mini calzone or dosas, and there are tasty desserts on the final step. Yet more steps link the main dining area to not one but two rooftop levels (somehow not a contradiction in terms), and all three have views of... a stepwell. Also a good bar. ₹₹

Umaid Bhawan Palace Circuit House Rd, @ tajhotels.com. The opulent Umaid Bhawan Palace boasts various eating and drinking possibilities, though whatever you do you'll have to stump up a ₹3500 minimum charge, payable on entry and redeemable against anything you eat or drink (advance reservations are strongly recommended) – although this at least gives you the chance to wander around the hotel's opulent Art Deco interior. The Pillars veranda café has sweeping views over the palace gardens and offers light snacks during the day. Full meals are available at the Risala multicuisine restaurant, set in a lavish, old-world European-style dining room, and at The Pillars at night. ₹₹₹₹

Vijay Katla Bazaar ☎982 827 9958. You want local? You got local. This upper-floor hideyhole is one of precious few simple eateries in the Blue City, with a range of cheap, tasty mains like daal fry or kaju curry, plus fried cashews and carrot helwa in the winter. ₹

CAFES, SNACKS AND SWEETS MISHRI LAL IN THE EASTERN ARCH OF THE SOUTH GATE TO SARDAR MARKET; ☎ SHRIMISHRILAL.COM. THE TOWN'S MOST FAMOUS PURVEYOR OF MAKHANIA LASSI (FROM A CLAY CUP), MADE WITH CREAM, YOGURT, SAFFRON AND CARDAMOM – DELICIOUSLY RICH AND THICK, YOU'LL MOST LIKELY BE BACK FOR MORE THE FOLLOWING DAY. ₹

Omelette Shop Eastern of the north gate to Sardar Market. Legendary omelette stand with no fewer than 25 options, including a tasty 'Spanish' number made with potato. Unfortunately, the same hands used to make the omelettes are used to handle change; best not go here if you've just landed in India. ₹

Shani Samosas Clock Tower Rd. Heaving with custom from the moment it opens its doors, this is the best place in town for mirchi bada, and you'll pay about the same price for the samosas or kachori. ₹

DRINKING

MAP

There are not many liquor stores in the old town, but you'll find one a short way south of the clock tower, on the west side of the road; they bring the shutters down at 7pm or so, but often serve until 9pm from a beer can-sized gap they conveniently leave open. Other places for a rooftop drink include Jeeman restaurant and Hostelavie.

18th Century Bar Pal Haveli, near Gulab Sagar Lake, ☎palhaveli.com. There's a rather grand-looking bar – colonial chic? – in the Pal Haveli, with booze prices surprisingly reasonable. Despite the fetching decor, more guests choose to drink up on the rooftop restaurant level, especially for sundowners.

Stepwell Cafe By stepwell, Makarana Mohalla; ☎stepwellcafe.com. This sleek restaurant has a decent roster of Indian wines by the glass, as well as cocktails, and cheap local and pricey international spirits.

SHOPPING

MAP

Jodhpur's first-rate antique reproductions – everything from chests of drawers to sculptures of Jain tirthankaras – attract dealers from around the world; there's a line of shops selling them along Umaid Bhawan Palace Rd east of the Circuit House. Other good buys in town include textiles, patchwork bedcovers, bandhani (tie-dye) fabric and Jodhpur riding britches, as well as great spices from the many vendors in Mirchi Bazaar, all much cheaper (and better quality) than the vendors around the clock tower.

India Tailors High Court Rd, 75m east of the junction with Nai Sarak. Despite its small and unprepossessing appearance, this little shop can't be beaten for custom-made suits or Jodhpur riding britches, and counts the maharaja among its customers.

Lalji Handicrafts Umaid Bhawan Palace Rd. Huge warehouse-like shop stuffed with all sorts of unusual bric-a-brac including old enamel signs and colonial-era prints.

Rathi's Media Centre Mohanpura, over the bridge 93140 40087. Near the railway station, this formerly huge bookstore has been reduced to a fraction of its original size, but is still worth a look if you need a new novel, or a guidebook to neighbouring countries.

Stepwell Square Makarana Mohalla. Not a shop, but a small boutique mall, newly opened up in this increasingly trendy part of the city. The most notable outlets are Frazer and Haws silversmiths, and Via Jodhpur for fabrics, clothing and simple jewellery; there's also a decent little cafe here.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE FOREX OFFICES CAN BE FOUND NORTH OF THE CLOCK TOWER IN SARDAR MARKET AND ON HANWANT VIHAR JUST NORTH OF CIRCUIT HOUSE, AND THERE ARE ATMS ALL OVER THE PLACE.

Hospital The best private hospital is the Goyal on Residency Rd in the Sindhi Colony, 2km south of town (goyalhospital.org).

Police 0291 265 0777. There's a police tourist assistance booth by the clock tower in Sardar Market.

Mandor

Some 9km north of Jodhpur lies the sleepy village of MANDOR, home to a superb sequence of royal cenotaphs erected in memory of the kingdom's former rulers. Mandor served as the capital of the Parihar Rajputs from the sixth century until 1381, when they were ousted by Rathore Rao Chauhan, and although the capital was moved to Jodhpur in 1459, the Marwari rulers continued to have their memorial cenotaphs (dewals) erected here. Temple-like in their sombre dark-red sandstone, the cenotaphs grew in size and grandeur as the Rathore kingdom prospered (the canopy-like chhatris next to them are for lesser royals). The largest is Ajit Singh's, built in 1724. His six queens, along with assorted mistresses, concubines, maids and entertainers – 84 women in all – committed sati on his funeral pyre.

At the end of the gardens, on the far side of the chhatris, you'll find the octagonal Ek Thamba Mahal (Single Pillared Palace), a three-storey pagoda-like affair built at the beginning of the eighteenth century for royal ladies to watch public events without breaking their purdah. Also interesting are the extensive remains of Mandor Fort, citadel of the Parihar and Rathore Rajputs when Mandor was their capital, reached via a flight of steps behind a mildly diverting museum.

ARRIVAL AND ACCOMMODATION BY BUS MANDOR MANDOR CAN BE REACHED ON MINIBUSES FROM THE CLOCK TOWER (7.30AM–8.30PM; EVERY 15MIN OR SO).

Mandore Guest House Close to the gardens on Dadawari Lane, www.mandore.com. It's actually more of a miniature resort than a guesthouse, with accommodation in a mix of air-cooled and a/c rooms and (rather dark) round huts set in a tree-studded garden. ₹₹₹

The Bishnoi villages Good and inexpensive tours of the Bishnoi villages are run by several guesthouses in Jodhpur including Durag Niwas and Yogi's Guest House Jodhpur's surroundings can be explored on organized 'village safaris', which take small groups of tourists out into rural Rajasthan, usually stopping at four or five Bishnoi villages where you can taste traditional food, drink opium tea and watch crafts such as spinning and carpet-making. You might also spot nilgai (bluebull) antelopes and gazelles.

The Bishnois – a religious sect rather than an ethnic group in the usual sense – are among the world’s earliest tree-huggers. Their origins go back to a drought in the year 1485. Observing that this was caused largely by deforestation, a guru by the name of Jambeshwar Bhagavan formulated 29 rules for living in harmony with nature and the environment – his followers are called Bishnoi after the Marwari word for 29. As well as enforcing strict vegetarianism, Jambeshwar’s rules forbid the killing of animals or felling of live trees. In particular, Bishnoi hold the khejri tree sacred. In 1730, at the village of Khejadali, workers sent by the maharaja of Marwar to make lime for the construction of a palace started felling khejri trees to burn the local limestone. A woman by the name of Amrita Devi put her arms around a tree and declared that if they wanted to cut it down, they would have to cut her head off first. The leader of the working party ordered her decapitation, upon which her three daughters followed her example, and were similarly beheaded. Bishnoi people from the whole of the surrounding region then converged on the site to defend the trees – 363 of them gave their lives doing so. When news reached the maharaja, he ordered the felling to cease and banned cutting down trees and hunting animals in Bishnoi territory. Today, a small temple marks the place where all this happened, while in its grounds, 363 khejri trees commemorate the martyrs.

Although it is possible to go to Khejadali by bus, you’ll be hard put to find a villager who speaks English, and it’s a lot better to go with a tour group, which will also visit other villages. Most tours stop at Khejadali for lunch. This is sometimes followed by an opium ceremony in which opium is dissolved in water in a specially designed wooden vessel, and poured through a strainer into a second receptacle. The process is repeated twice more, and the resulting tea is drunk from the palm of a hand. Strictly speaking, it’s illegal, but blind eyes are turned to this kind of traditional opium use, though in fact opium addiction is something of a social problem in rural Rajasthan.

Osian

Rajasthan's largest group of early Jain and Hindu temples lies on the outskirts of the small town of OSIAN (or Osiyan), 64km north of Jodhpur. The temples date from the eighth to the twelfth centuries when Osian was a regional trading centre. The town's ruler and population apparently converted to Jainism in the eleventh century, and the town is still an important Jain pilgrimage centre. Just south of the bus stop lies Osian's oldest collection of temples, centred on the Vishnu and Harihara temples, also built in the Pratihara period. The nine temples in this group retain a considerable amount of decorative carving, particularly in the surrounding friezes. However, most make a bee-line for the more diverting Sachiya Mata Temple and Mahavira Jain Temple.

Sachiya Mata Temple Daily sunrise–one hour after sunset • Charge The town centre is dominated by the imposing twelfth-century Sachiya Mata Temple, overlooking the whole of Osian from its elevated hilltop position. At the very top of the complex, the main shrine to Sachiya (an incarnation of Durga) is unusually decorated with multicoloured mirrorwork and topped by a cluster of finely carved shikharas.

Mahavira Jain Temple Daily 5am–10pm • Charge; camera/video camera charge • No leather items permitted, and women should not enter while menstruating A five-minute walk from the Sachiya Mata Temple lies Osian's most beautiful monument, the Mahavira Jain Temple. Built in the eighth century, renovated in the tenth, and restored quite recently, the temple's beautifully carved central shrine (which is somewhat ruined by the recently added metal staircase) is fronted by 28 pillars and surrounded by shrines to further tirthankaras. A trio of smaller temples lies nearby, including a pair of Surya temples and the unusual Peeplaj Temple, surrounded by gargoyle-like projecting elephants, along with a massive Pratihara-period (eighth and ninth centuries) step-well.

LEGEND OF THE THAR LEGEND ASCRIBES THE CREATION OF THE THAR TO RAMA, HERO OF THE RAMAYANA. IN IT, RAMA, AN EARTHLY INCARNATION OF THE GOD VISHNU, HAS TO RESCUE HIS WIFE SITA FROM THE CLUTCHES OF THE DEMON RAVANA, WHO IS HOLDING HER ON THE ISLAND OF SRI LANKA. TO CROSS TO THE ISLAND, RAMA LOADS HIS BOW WITH A MAGICAL ARROW THAT WILL DRY UP THE OCEAN, BUT THE SEA GOD SAGARA BEGS HIM NOT TO SHOOT, OFFERING HIM FREE PASSAGE INSTEAD. WELL, SAYS RAMA, MY BOW IS NOW DRAWN AND MUST BE SHOT, WHERE SHALL I AIM IT? THERE IS A SEA TO THE NORTH, REPLIES SAGARA, WHERE EVIL-DOERS DRINK MY WATER AND HURT ME; SHOOT YOUR ARROW THERE, AND YOU'LL BE DOING ME A FAVOUR. SO RAMA TAKES AIM AND SHOOTS, DRYING UP THE SEA THAT SAGARA HAS DESCRIBED, AND CREATING THE DESERT OF MARWAR ('LAND OF THE DEAD'). BY RAMA'S SPECIAL BOON, THIS NEW LAND, THOUGH DESERT, IS BLESSED, FULL OF SWEET HERBS AND FIT FOR GRAZING CATTLE.

In fact, the legend would seem to be based on some degree of truth, for the fossil record shows that back in the Jurassic period (206–144 million years ago), the Thar was covered by sea. Indeed, you may notice that slabs of sandstone often bear tell-tale ripple marks showing that they once formed part of the seabed.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS GOVERNMENT OSIAN BUSES FROM JODHPUR (HOURLY; 1HR 30MIN) DROP YOU AT THE STAND ON THE MAIN ROAD JUST SOUTH OF TOWN.

Tours Camel treks around Osian can also be arranged through the Yogi and Cosy guesthouses in Jodhpur; rates start at around ₹1000/person/day (minimum two people) plus transport costs (round trip by taxi from ₹1700).

ACCOMMODATION PRIEST BHANU SARMA GUESTHOUSE OPPOSITE THE MAHAVIRA TEMPLE ☎0292 227 4331. RUN BY

THE KNOWLEDGEABLE (HINDU) PRIEST OF THE SAME NAME WHO LOOKS AFTER THE (JAIN) TEMPLE, ROOMS ARE BASIC BUT CLEAN WITH SHARED BATHROOMS AND BUCKETS FOR HOT WATER. PRIEST BHANU CAN ACT AS A GUIDE FOR THE LOCAL TEMPLES AND YOU CAN ALSO ARRANGE CAMEL SAFARIS AND TOURS OF LOCAL BISHNOI VILLAGES FROM HERE. ₹

Reggie's Camel Camp Reservations c/o the India Safari Club in Jodhpur on, reggiescamelcamposian.com. A comfortable and welcoming luxury hotel amid the desert on the outskirts of town, with carpeted a/c tents and a stunning pool. ₹₹₹₹

Mount Abu

Rajasthan's only bona fide hill station, MOUNT ABU (1220m) is a major Indian resort, popular above all with honeymooners who flock here during the winter wedding season (Nov to March) and with visiting holidaymakers from nearby Gujarat. Mount Abu's hokey commercialism is aimed squarely at these local vacationers rather than foreign tourists, but the sight of lovestruck honeymooners shyly holding hands and jolly parties of Gujarati tourists on the loose lends the whole place a charmingly idiosyncratic holiday atmosphere quite unlike anywhere else in Rajasthan – and the fresh air is exhilarating after the heat of the desert plains. The town also occupies an important place in Rajput history, being the site of the famous yagna agnikund fire ceremony, conducted in the eighth century AD, from which all Rajputs claim mythological descent.

Note that during the peak months and at almost any major festival time (especially Diwali in November), and even during weekends, the town's population of thirty thousand mushrooms, room rates skyrocket, and peace and quiet are at a premium.

Nakki Lake

Pedalo rides Charge

At the centre of town, Nakki Lake is popular in the late afternoon for pony and pedalo rides. Of several panoramic viewpoints on the fringes of town above the plains, Sunset Point is the favourite – though the hordes of holidaymakers and hawkers also make it one of the noisiest and least romantic. Honeymoon Point, also known as Anadhra-Ganesh Point (after the adjacent temple) offers breathtaking views over the plain at any time of day, and tends to be more peaceful. 4pm is a good time to visit, but don't try to take clifftop paths between Sunset and Honeymoon points, as tourists have been mugged here.

Brahma Kumaris Museum Off Nakki Lake Rd • Daily 8am–8pm • Free The Brahma Kumaris Museum, between the polo ground and the lake, is devoted to the spiritual ideals of the Brahma Kumaris ('children of Brahma'), whose headquarters are situated nearby. The Brahma Kumaris preach that all religions reach for the same goal, but label it differently. Once through the 'Gateway to Paradise', you'll be greeted by freakish, life-sized mannequins including blue monsters wielding long knives. Each personifies greed, sex-lust and other vestiges of the so-called 'iron age' that temple leaders promise deliverance from. If it all sounds somewhat cultish you'll understand why many locals try to keep foreigners from falling into the sect's clutches.

Dilwara temples Daily noon–6pm • Free, but donation requested; no photography, usual Jain temple restrictions apply • You can charter a jeep from the junction at the north end of the polo ground, or take a place in a shared one from just up the street • 1hr walk The Dilwara temples, 3km northeast of Mount Abu, are some of the most beautiful Jain shrines in India. All five are made purely from marble, and the carving is breathtakingly intricate. Entrance to the temples is by guided tour only – you’ll have to wait until sufficient people have arrived to make up a group – though once inside it’s easy enough to break away and look around on your own.

The oldest temple, the Vimala Vasahi, named after the Gujarati minister who funded its construction in 1031, is dedicated to Adinath, the first tirthankara. Although the exterior is simple – as, indeed, are the exteriors of all the temples here – inside not one wall, column or ceiling is unadorned, a prodigious feat of artistry that took almost two thousand labourers and sculptors fourteen years to complete. There are 48 intricately carved pillars inside, eight of them supporting a domed ceiling arranged in eleven concentric circles alive with dancers, musicians, elephants and horses, while a sequence of 57 subsidiary shrines run around the edge of the enclosure. In front of the entrance to the temple the so-called ‘Elephant Cell’ (added after the construction of the temple itself in 1147) contains ten impressively large stone pachyderms. A more modest pair of painted elephants, along with an unusual carving showing stacked-up tiers of tirthankaras, flanks the entrance to the diminutive Mahaveerswami Temple, built in 1582, which sits by the entrance to the Vimala Vasahi.

The Luna Vasahi Temple, second of Dilwara’s two great temples, was built in 1231, and is dedicated to Neminath, the 22nd tirthankara. It follows a similar plan to the Vimala Vasahi, with a central shrine fronted by a minutely carved dome and surrounded by a long sequence of shrines (a mere 48 this time). The carvings, however, are even more precise and detailed, especially so in the magnificently intricate dome covering the entrance hall.

The remaining two temples, both fifteenth-century, are less spectacular. The Bhimasah Pittalhar Temple houses a huge gilded image of the first tirthankara, Adinath, installed in 1468, which measures more than 2.5m high and weighs in at around 4.5 tonnes. The large three-storey Khartar Vasahi Temple (near the entrance to the temples) was built in 1458 and is consecrated to Parshvanath. The temple is topped by a high grey stone tower and boasts some intricate carving in places, though overall it’s only a pale shadow of the earlier temples.

HIKING IN MOUNT ABU DOWN IN MOUNT ABU’S MARKET AREA, YOU GAIN LITTLE SENSE OF THE

WONDERFULLY WILD LANDSCAPE ENFOLDING THE TOWN, BUT HEAD FOR A FEW MINUTES UP ONE OF THE MANY TRAILS THREADING AROUND THE SIDES OF THE PLATEAU, AND IT'S EASY TO SEE WHY THE AREA HAS INSPIRED SAGES, SAINTS AND PILGRIMS FOR CENTURIES. UNFORTUNATELY HIKING ALONE IS NOT RECOMMENDED, AS THERE HAVE BEEN ROBBERIES AND EVEN MURDERS OF UNACCOMPANIED VISITORS, AND POLICE WILL TURN BACK ANYONE SPOTTED HEADING OUT ALONE. THERE'S ALSO A CHANCE OF RUNNING INTO BEARS AND LEOPARDS – BEARS, IN PARTICULAR, CAN BE DANGEROUS IF SURPRISED, OR WHEN WITH THEIR YOUNG.

Good local guides are available from the Shri Ganesh hotel, who run 3–4hr treks every morning (₹700/person); or the experienced 'Charles' (www.mount-abu-treks.blogspot.com), contact via Lake Palace hotel, 94141 54854), who runs a range of half-day (from ₹500) and full-day (from ₹900) walking tours focusing on village life, wildlife spotting and local Ayurvedic plants, as well as overnight camping expeditions (₹1700, full board).

It's a pleasant walk up from town, though many opt for the sensible approach of ascending by jeep, then returning on foot.

Hindu temples You can charter a jeep to visit all temples On the north side of town, en route to the Dilwara temples, a flight of more than four hundred steps climbs up to the Adhar Devi Temple (dedicated to Durga). The small main shrine is cut into the rocky hilltop and entered by clambering under a very low overhang. There are fine views from the terrace above, where there's another tiny shrine cut out of solid rock. The milk-coloured water of the Doodh Baori well at the foot of the steps is considered to be a source of pure milk (doodh) for gods and sages.

A further 8km northeast – not served by public transport, so you'll need to hire a jeep or a taxi – the temple complex at ACHALGARH is dominated by the Achaleshwar Mahadeo Temple, believed to have been created when Lord Shiva placed his toe on the spot to still an earthquake. Its sanctuary holds a yoni stone with a hole in it that is said to reach into the netherworld. Nearby, the Jamadagni Ashram is site of the yagna agnikund, where the sage Vashishtha presided over the fire ritual that produced the four Rajput clans (the Parmars, Parihars, Solankis and Chauhans).

The lesser visited, but more dramatically situated, Gaumukh Temple lies 7km south of Mount Abu Town and is also not served by public transport. Standing at the head of a steep flight of 750 steps, the small pool inside the shrine – which continues to flow even during times of drought – is believed to hold water from the sacred Sarawati Ganga River. Pilgrims come here to perform puja, to invoke the blessings of India's two greatest rishis (sages), Vashishtha and Vishwamitra, who are thought to have meditated and debated here.

The last important Hindu pilgrimage site on Mount Abu is the Atri Rishi Temple at Guru Shikar, 15km northeast of town, which at 1772m above sea level marks the highest point in Rajasthan. You can enjoy superb panoramic vistas either from the temple itself, or from the food and drink stalls dotted around the site.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION MOUNT ABU IS MOUNT ABU ACCESSIBLE ONLY BY ROAD; THE NEAREST RAILHEAD IS AT ABU RD STATION, CONNECTED TO TOWN BY BUS. ENTERING MOUNT ABU, YOU HAVE TO PAY A ₹100 ENTRY FEE (PLUS ANY ADDITIONAL CHARGE FOR A CAR OR JEEP).

By train There's a train booking office (daily 8am–5pm) at the tourist office (see below). Buses to Abu Rd leave Mount Abu every hour between 6am and 9pm (45min); jeeps leave when full (from next to the bus stand), and taxis can be hired at the corner by the Jodhpur Bhojnalaya restaurant.

By bus Government buses run from the State Bus Stand on Nakki Lake Rd. Private buses are run by a string of operators along Nakki Lake Rd west of the State Bus Stand; Gujarat Travels is a reliable option. There are private services to Ajmer (2 daily; 8hr), Ahmedabad (8 daily; 6hr 30min), Jaipur (2 daily; 10hr 30min), Jodhpur (3 daily; 7hr) and Udaipur (3 daily; 4hr).

Tourist information The RSTC Tourist Office (Mon–Sat 10am–1.30pm & 2–5pm; ☎02974 235151, 🌐tourism.rajasthan.gov.in) is opposite the main bus stand.

Services The State Bank of India has an ATM in front of the tourist office, and there are plenty more between there and the polo ground.

Tours Shri Ganesh guesthouse runs forest treks and jeep tours (₹700 for the vehicle for 3–4hr) out to places like Achalgarh and Guru Shikar (for more on hiking around Mount Abu).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

The steady stream of pilgrims and honeymoon couples ensures that Mount Abu has plenty of hotels, lots of them offering luxuries for newlyweds in special ‘couple rooms’. Prices rocket in high season (April–June & Nov–Dec), especially at weekends, reaching their peak during Diwali.

Cama Rajputana Adhar Devi Rd, 🌐camahotelsindia.com. Popular with tour groups, this attractive resort-style place occupies a neatly refurbished colonial building in sprawling grounds. Rooms (all a/c) are cool and spacious, while the extensive facilities include a bar, billiard room and a big pool; rates include breakfast and dinner. ₹₹₹

★Connaught House Rajendra Rd, 🌐jodhanaheritage.com. Easily Mount Abu’s most memorable accommodation option, occupying a time-warped colonial-era retreat set in a flower-filled garden with sweeping views. Rooms (all a/c) in the ‘cottage’ are beautifully preserved, with period furniture and decor; those in the modern block on the hill above are much less atmospheric. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹₹

Jaipur House South of the lake ☎9413001088. A fine old summer palace perched on a hilltop above town, with some of the town’s best and most spacious accommodation (and superb town views) in tastefully decorated suites with wooden furnishings – although the ‘deluxe’ rooms, in an ugly modern block halfway down the drive, are dull and overpriced. ₹₹₹

Lake Palace Nakki Lake Rd, 🌐savshantihotels.com. One of the town’s best mid-range options, in a scenic position facing Nakki Lake, with good service and a range of well-maintained modern rooms (all a/c, the more expensive ones with lake view and balcony). ₹₹₹

Shalin Paying Guest House Sani Gaon 📞94131 53593. There aren't many recommendable budget options in town, but this homestay-style number has proven very popular with backpackers. Though the lake is just a few minutes away on foot, you're likely to get a good night's sleep here, thanks to its location in a quiet alley. A surprising level of attention has been put into the room decoration, though sadly many are afflicted by that very modern accommodation curse – windowed-off bathrooms affording zero privacy from whoever you're rooming with. ₹₹

Silver Oak 100m north of the main bus stand, 🌐hotelsilveroak.com. A warm welcome and spacious rooms (some with a/c and modern bathrooms) make this one of the best-value guesthouses in town; request one of the nicer front rooms, which open onto sunny garden terraces. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Mount Abu's predominantly middle-class Gujarati visitors are typically hard to please when it comes to food, so standards are exceptionally high and prices low. Meat is rare; if you get carnivorous cravings, you could try a couple of non-veg Punjabi restaurants in the bazaar.

Arbuda Nakki Lake Rd 📞94144 49794. Perennially popular spot with a huge veggie menu ranging from pizza, burgers and sandwiches through to Chinese, south Indian, Gujarati and Punjabi, as well as good fresh juices. Lightning-fast, friendly service and a popular, airy terrace. ₹

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM ABU ROAD ALL THE FOLLOWING TRAINS RUN DAILY.

Destination	Name	No.	Departs	Arrives
Ahmedabad	Jammu Tawi Express	19224	9.40am	1.40pm
Ajmer	Yoga Express	19031	3.10pm	8.25pm
Delhi	Swarna J Raj Express	12957	9.25pm	7.30am
Jaipur	Yoga Express	19031	3.10pm	10.40pm

Jodhpur	Adi Jat Tawi Express	19223	2.45pm	7.00pm
Mumbai	Ranakpur Express	14707	6.25pm	7.10am
	Surya Nagri Express	12479	11.45pm	11.30am

Jodhpur Bhojnalaya Nakki Lake Rd, opposite Bank of Baroda 0297 423 5382. The best place in town for authentic Rajasthani veg food, heavy on ghee and spices. It's famous for its definitive dhal bati churma (a traditional Rajasthani dish consisting of baked wheatflour balls served with dhal and sweet churma), and also has the usual big list of Indian veg dishes and thalis. ₹₹

★Mulberry Tree Nakki Lake Rd @hotelhilltone.com. The multi-cuisine non-veg restaurant at Hotel Hilltone is Mount Abu's smartest dining option, with tables neatly laid indoors or on the front lawn. From the open kitchen come Indian and Italian dishes including sizzlers, pasta and steak. Licensed. ₹₹

Original Gujarat Omlette Nakki Lake Rd. The place to go if you need an eggy snack; omelette sandwiches are a go at this little shack – one of a few omelette sellers opposite the northern tip of the Polo Ground. ₹

Sankalp Opposite Hotel Samrat on Nakki Lake Rd @sankalponline.com. Branch of a south Indian chain offering the usual dishes (idlis, dosas, uttapams and the like) in comfortable, modern a/c surrounds, with specialities such as veg pulao or tomato masala uthappa, or if you really want to go to town, a metre-long dosa. ₹₹

Udaipur and around Spreading around the shores of the idyllic Lake Pichola and backdropped by a majestic ring of craggy green hills, UDAIPUR seems to encapsulate India at its most quintessentially romantic, with its intricate sequence of ornately turreted and balconied palaces, whitewashed havelis and bathing ghats clustered around the waters of the lake – or, in the case of the Lake Palace hotel and Jag Mandir, floating magically upon them. Not that the city is quite perfect: insensitive lakeside development, appalling traffic along the old city's maze of tightly winding streets and vast hordes of tourists mean that Udaipur is far from unspoilt or undiscovered. Even so, it remains a richly rewarding place to visit, and although it's possible to take in most of the sights in a few days, many people spend at least a week exploring the city and the various attractions scattered about the surrounding countryside.

North of the city are the historic temples of Nagada, Eklingji, Nathdwara and Kankroli, while to the northwest, en route to Jodhpur, lie the superb Jain temples of Ranakpur and the rambling fort at Kumbhalgarh. Renting a car or motorcycle saves time, though local buses serve both routes.

Brief history Udaipur is a relatively young city by Indian standards, having been established in the mid-sixteenth century by Udai Singh II of the Sisodia family, rulers of the state of Mewar, which covered much of present-day southern Rajasthan. The Sisodias are traditionally considered to be the foremost of all the Rajput royal dynasties. The present Sisodia maharana is the 76th in the unbroken line of Mewar suzerains, which makes the Mewar household the longest lasting of all royal families of Rajasthan, and perhaps the oldest surviving dynasty in the world.

The state of Mewar was established by Guhil in 568 AD. His successors set up their capital first at Nagda and then, in 734, at the mighty fort of Chittaurgarh, from where they established control over much of present-day southern Rajasthan. By the time Udai Singh II inherited the throne of Mewar in 1537, however, it was clear that Chittaurgarh's days were numbered. Udai began looking for a location for a new city, to be named Udaipur, eventually choosing a swampy site beside Lake Pichola, protected on all sides by outcrops of the Aravalli Range. The Mughal emperor Akbar duly captured Chittaurgarh after a protracted siege in 1568, but by then Udai was firmly established in his new capital, where he remained unopposed until his death in 1572. His son, the heroic Pratap Singh, continued to defy Akbar and spent much of his reign doggedly defending his kingdom's freedom against the overwhelming military muscle of the Mughal army.

Following Akbar's death, peace finally ensued, and the city – gradually emerging up around the city's grand City Palace, on the east shore of the lake – prospered until 1736, when Mewar suffered the first of repeated attacks by the Marathas, who gradually reduced the city to poverty until being finally driven off by the British in the early eighteenth century. The Sisodias from there on allied themselves to the British, while preserving their independence until 1947, when the famous old state of Mewar was finally merged into the newly created nation of India.

Lake Pichola Udaipur's idyllic Lake Pichola definitely provides the city's most memorable views, offering a beautiful frame for the City Palace buildings, havelis, ghats, temple towers and other structures which crowd its eastern side – best seen from a boat trip around the lake. The lake's two island palaces are among Udaipur's most famous features, and each evening Sunset Point, near Amet Haveli, sees flocks of onlookers keen to snap the sun setting to the west, or the resultant illumination of the buildings east of the lake.

Jag Niwas

Lake Palace hotel • Closed to non-guests Jag Niwas, now the Lake Palace hotel, was built in amalgamated Rajput-Mughal style as a summer palace during the reign of Jagat Singh (1628–52), after whom it was named. Unfortunately, as a security measure following the 2008 gun attacks in Mumbai, non-guests can no longer visit the hotel, which has often been called the most romantic hotel in the world; but you can see it as part of a boat ride around the lake.

Jag Mandir

Daily 10am–6pm • 📞292424186 • Free • Best visited as part of boat tour • Dinner cover charges apply The Jag Mandir palace, on the island to the south, is arranged around a large garden guarded by stone elephants. The main building here is the Gol Mahal, which has detailed stone inlay work within its domed roof and houses a small exhibition on the history of the island. The young Shah Jahan once stayed here and was apparently so impressed by the building that he used it as one of the models for his own Taj Mahal, though it's difficult to see the resemblance.

City Palace Udaipur's fascinating City Palace stands moulded in soft yellow stone on the northeast side of Lake Pichola, its thick windowless base crowned with ornate turrets and cupolas. The largest royal complex in Rajasthan, it is made up of eleven different mahals (palaces) constructed by successive rulers over a period of three hundred years. Part of the palace is now a museum. Narrow low-roofed passages connect the different mahals and courtyards, creating a confusing, labyrinthine layout designed to prevent surprise intrusion by armed enemies – fortunately visitors are directed around a clearly signed one-way circuit, so your chances of getting lost are limited.

ACCESSING THE CITY PALACE NOTE THAT TO REACH CERTAIN PARTS OF THE CITY PALACE, INCLUDING THE FATEH PRAKASH PALACE AND SHIV NIWAS HOTELS, THE DURBAR HALL, CRYSTAL GALLERY AND THE JETTY FOR BOATS AROUND LAKE PICHOLA AND OVER TO THE LAKE PALACE HOTEL, YOU'LL HAVE TO PAY ₹30 FOR A GENERAL ENTRANCE TICKET TO THE CITY PALACE COMPLEX. YOU DON'T HAVE TO BUY THIS TICKET IF YOU'RE JUST VISITING THE CITY PALACE MUSEUM OR THE COURTYARD OUTSIDE, OR IF YOU'RE ACTUALLY STAYING AT ANY OF THE THREE HOTELS; SOME STAFF AT THE TICKET BOOTH CLAIM THAT THE GENERAL TICKET DOES NOT EXIST, AND THAT YOU HAVE TO PAY FULL ENTRY, BUT IF THIS IS THE CASE ASK TO SPEAK TO ONE OF THEIR COLLEAGUES.

EXPLORING LAKE PICHOLA BOAT RIDES AROUND LAKE PICHOLA DEPART FROM THE JETTY TOWARDS THE SOUTH END OF THE CITY PALACE COMPLEX, OFFERING UNFORGETTABLE VIEWS OF

THE VARIOUS PALACES. CIRCUITS OF THE LAKE TAKE 45MIN AND COST ₹450 BEFORE 3PM OR ₹800 AFTERWARDS, PLUS THE ADDITIONAL FEE FOR THE CITY PALACE GENERAL ENTRY TICKET. ALL TRIPS STOP AT THE JAG MANDIR. TOURS DEPART HOURLY ON THE HOUR FROM 10AM TO 6PM; TO MAKE THE MOST OF THEM, SIT ON THE SIDE OF THE BOAT FACING THE PALACE (THEY USUALLY RUN ANTICLOCKWISE AROUND THE LAKE). YOU CAN ALSO RENT YOUR OWN BOAT (SEATING UP TO SEVEN PEOPLE) HERE FOR ₹5300. ALTERNATIVELY, ON THE WATERFRONT BETWEEN THE JAIWANA AND KANKARWA HAVELIS, YOU CAN TAKE A SHORT BOAT RIDE (NOT STOPPING AT JAG MANDIR) FOR ₹250–400 (15–40MIN), OR RENT A PRIVATE BOAT FOR ₹1500 FOR UP TO FOUR PEOPLE (30MIN).

The museum

Daily 9.30am–5.30pm • Charge; audioguide/guide charge • citypalacemuseum.org

The entrance to the museum is on the far side of the Moti Chowk courtyard (look out for the large portable tiger-trap in the middle of the courtyard), just beyond the palace's small armoury.

Begin your circuit of the museum by wandering past propitious statues of Ganesh and Lakshmi, and winding upstairs to reach the first of the palace's myriad courtyards, the Rajya Angan. A room off to one side is devoted to the exploits of Pratap Singh, one of Udaipur's most famous military leaders. From here, steps lead up to pleasantly sylvan Badi Mahal (Garden Palace; also known as Amar Vilas after its creator, Amar Singh II, who reigned 1695–1755), its main courtyard embellished with finely carved pillars and a marble pool, and dotted with trees that flourish despite being built some 30m above ground level.

From the Badi Mahal, twisting steps lead down to the Dilkushal Mahal, whose rooms house a superb selection of paintings depicting festive events in the life of the Udaipur court and portraits of the maharanas, as well as the superb Kanch ki Burj, a tiny little chamber walled with red zigzag mirrors. Immediately beyond here, the courtyard of the Madan Vilas (built by Bhim Singh, reigned 1778–1828) offers fine lake and city views; the lakeside wall is decorated with quaint inlaid mirrorwork pictures.

Stairs descend from the Madan Vilas courtyard to the Moti Mahal (Pearl Palace), another oddly futuristic-looking little mirrored chamber, its walls entirely covered in plain mirrors, the only colour supplied by its stained-glass windows. Steps lead around the top of the Mor Chowk courtyard to the Pitam Niwas (built by Jagat Singh II, reigned 1734–90) and down to the small Surya Choupad, dominated by a striking image showing a kingly-looking Rajput face enclosed by a huge golden halo – a reference to the belief that the rulers of the house of Mewar are descended from the sun.

Next to Surya Choupad, the wall of the fine Mor Chowk courtyard is embellished with one of the palace's most flamboyant artworks, a trio of superb mosaic peacocks (mor), commissioned by Sajjan Singh in 1874, each made from around five thousand pieces of glass and coloured stone. On the other side of the courtyard is the opulent little Manek Mahal (Ruby Palace), its walls mirrored in rich reds and greens.

From the Manek Mahal, a long corridor winds past the kitsch apartments of the queen mother Shri Gulabkunwar (1928–73) and through the Zenana Mahal (Women's Palace), whose long sequence of rooms now houses a huge array of paintings depicting royal fun and frolics in Mewar. Continue onwards to emerge, finally, into the last and largest of the palace's courtyards, Lakshmi Chowk, the centrepiece of the Zenana Mahal. The museum exit is at the far end of the chowk, back where you came in.

Government Museum Lake Pichola, City Palace Complex • Daily 9.30am–5.30pm • Charge • www.museumsrajasthan.gov.in

The small Government Museum, situated opposite the entrance to the City Palace Museum, is of interest primarily for its rather impressive sculpture gallery of pieces originating from Kumbhalgarh, including some outstanding pieces carved out of black marble.

Durbar Hall Crystal Gallery Daily 9am–6.30pm • Charge • No photography allowed More interesting than the Government Museum in many ways – and certainly far more atmospheric – is the vast Durbar Hall in the Fateh Prakash Palace (the building immediately behind the main City Palace building, which now houses the Fateh Prakash Palace hotel). This huge, wonderfully time-warped Edwardian-era ballroom was built to host state banquets, royal functions and the like, and remains full of period character, complete with huge chandeliers, creaky old furniture and fusty portraits. In a gallery overlooking the hall is the eccentric Crystal Gallery, housing an array of fine British crystal ordered by Sajjan Singh in the 1880s and featuring outlandishly kitsch items including crystal chairs, tables and lamps – there’s even a crystal hookah and a crystal bed. The extortionate entrance charge is a bit of a turn-off, though it does include an audioguide and non-alcoholic refreshments at the hotel’s Surya Dharshan Bar.

Mewar sound-and-light show Daily 8–9pm May–Aug in Hindi; 7.30–8.30pm April in English; 7–8pm Sept–March in English • Slightly expensive seating at elevated Hathnail ki Chandni; at ground-level in the Manek Chowk affordable charges in English and Hindi • Tickets only sold on same day, from 6pm Every evening, fifteen years of history is revived at the palace, as special effects and commentary recount stories from the Kingdom of Mewar in a show called The Legacy of Honour (Yash ki Dharohar in Hindi). The Mewar sound-and-light show is held in Manek Chowk, and commentary is in English between September and April, and in Hindi for the rest of the year.

Jagdish Temple City Palace Rd • ☎8387987510 • Daily 4.25am–1pm & 5.15–8pm • Free Just north of the City Palace, Jagdish Temple is one of Udaipur’s most popular and vibrant shrines. Built in 1652 and dedicated to Lord Jagannath, an aspect of Vishnu, its outer walls and towering shikhara are heavily carved with figures of Vishnu, scenes from the life of Krishna and dancing apsaras (nymphs). The circular mandapa leads to the sanctuary where a black stone image of Jagannath sits shrouded in flowers, while a small raised shrine in front of the temple protects a bronze Garuda. Subsidiary shrines to Shiva, Ganesh, Surya and Durga stand at each corner of the main temple.

Bagore-ki-Haveli Gangaur Ghat Marg • Museum Daily 9.30am–5pm • Entry, camera, video camera are individually charged • Shows Daily 7–8pm • Charge North of Jagdish Temple, a lane leads to Gangaur Ghat and the Bagore-ki-Haveli, a 138-room lakeside haveli dating from 1751. A section of the building has been converted into a worthwhile museum, arranged over two floors around one of the rambling haveli's multiple courtyards. The upper floor contains several immaculately restored rooms with original furnishings and artworks, plus some fine murals. The lower floor meanwhile has rooms full of puppets, women's clothes, musical instruments, kitchen equipment and – the undisputed highlight – what is claimed to be the world's largest turban. Traditional music and dance shows are staged here each evening.

Folklore Museum Panch Vati Rd • Daily 9am–6pm • Charge; camera/video camera charge • Shows Daily noon & 6pm • Charge; camera/video camera charge Just north of Chetak Circle in the new city, the hoary old Folklore Museum is home to a mildly interesting collection of exhibits covering the folk traditions of Rajasthan and India, with dusty displays of colourful masks, puppets and musical instruments. Short, amusing puppet shows (tip expected) are staged throughout the day on demand (the performers will probably hunt you down and drag you into the theatre shortly after your arrival), while there are two hour-long shows daily, with music, dancing and more puppets.

Sahelion-ki-Bari Saheli Marg • Daily 8am–7pm • Charge The ‘garden of the maids of honour’, Sahelion-ki-Bari was laid out by Sangram Singh (1710–34) as a summer retreat for the diversion and entertainment of the ladies of the royal household – though the fountains weren’t installed until the reign of Fateh Singh (1884–1930). The walled gardens, attractive and formal, are centred on a peaceful courtyard enclosing a large pool; behind this, four elephant statues surround Udaipur’s most striking fountain, a fanciful tiered creation that looks a bit like a huge, multicoloured cake stand.

Machlan Magra Ropeway Daily 9am–9pm • Charge each way Just south of the old city, opposite Deen Dayal Park, ruby-red cable cars float up to the summit of Machlan Magra hill on the Ropeway. The panoramic views from its summit are stunning, taking in sights such as Lake Pichola, Jag Mandir and the Monsoon Palace – a particularly nice place to be at sunset. East of the Dutch Tala lake, a winding pathway provides an alternative ascent route used by pilgrims visiting the small hilltop Karni Mata temple; it’s a fairly gentle walk through pleasant scenery.

Shilpgram

4km west of town • Daily 11am–7pm • Charge • www.shilpgram.in • Auto-rickshaw from Udaipur around ₹450 including waiting time The popular rural arts and crafts centre of Shilpgram was set up to promote the traditional architecture, music and crafts of the tribal people of western India, with displays dedicated to the diverse lifestyles and customs of the region’s rural population. Around thirty replica houses and huts in traditional style are arranged in a village-like compound, with examples of buildings from various states. Musicians, puppeteers and dancers – hijras (eunuchs) among them – hang out around the houses and strike up on the approach of visitors (tip expected), while you may also see people weaving, potting and embroidering as they would in their original homes – though most of the actual handicrafts on sale are fifth-rate, if that. Despite its honourable intentions, many tourists find the atmosphere contrived and resent the hustling by musicians and their ilk. Even so, it’s well worth a visit if only for the scenic journey out along the road around Fateh Sagar Lake. It’s best done by bicycle but you can also get there by auto-rickshaw.

Sajjagarh

Daily 9am–sunset, last entry 5pm • Charge, plus charge for car shuttle up the hill or with own car/taxi

• Taxi from Udaipur around ₹450 round-trip High on a hill 5km west of the city and inside the Sajjagarh Wildlife Sanctuary, the so-called ‘Monsoon Palace’, Sajjagarh, was begun in 1883 by Maharana Sajjan Singh to serve as a summer retreat, complete with a nine-storey observatory from which the royal family proposed to watch the monsoon clouds travelling across the countryside below. Unfortunately, the maharana’s untimely death the following year put paid to the planned observatory, and although the palace itself was finished by Singh’s successor, Maharana Fateh Singh, it was found to be impossible to pump water up to it, and the whole place was abandoned shortly afterwards. The large though rather plain building is now a somewhat melancholy sight, but the views over Udaipur, more than 300m below, are unrivalled. The journey up to the palace takes a good fifteen minutes by taxi; really, the climb is too steep to tackle by bicycle, although some people try.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE MAHARANA UDAIPUR PRATAP AIRPORT (📍UDAIPURAIRPORT.COM) IS LOCATED A FULL 20KM EAST OF UDAIPUR. PREPAID TAXIS FROM THE AIRPORT COST ₹750; THE JOURNEY COSTS ₹550 FROM THE CITY.

Destinations Bangalore (2 daily; 2hr); Chennai (1 daily; 2hr 30min); Delhi (5 daily; 1hr 25min); Jaipur (2 daily; 55min); Mumbai (3 daily; 1hr 30min); Varanasi (1 daily; 1hr 40min).

By train Trains pull in at Udaipur City station, southeast of the city centre. Services from Udaipur are surprisingly limited; those listed here are the best of a bad bunch. Note that there are no direct services to Jodhpur; you’ll have to change at Kota (or take a bus). You can save a trip to the station by booking tickets through travel agents in town for a surcharge of around ₹100, or your guesthouse, which will charge you about what you’d pay for a rickshaw to the station and back (₹200).

By bus Government buses leave from the main State Bus Stand at Udai Pol; from here prepaid autos cost ₹70 to the City Palace area. Private buses depart from across City Station Rd, and are a better option for longer and (especially) overnight journeys. It’s easiest to book tickets for private buses through one of the many travel agents in town (usually for a surcharge of ₹50–100) or, for ease, through your hotel/guesthouse. If you want to book your own ticket you’ll need to make a reservation with one of the bus company offices around Udai Pol – try the reliable Kamlesh Travels (kamlesheagle.com) who operate the best a/c sleeper coaches to Mumbai, Delhi and Jaipur. Local buses to destinations such as Nagda, Eklingji, Nathdwara and Kankroli leave regularly from the RSTRC bus stand; see the individual accounts for details.

Destinations Agra (5 daily; 12–17hr); Ahmedabad (2–5 hourly; 5hr); Ajmer (2–4 hourly; 4hr 30min–7hr); Chittaurgarh (every 15–30min; 3hr); Delhi (18 nightly; 14hr); Mumbai (21 nightly; 14hr); Jaipur (2–4 hourly; 7–9hr); Jaisalmer (4 nightly; 12hr); Jodhpur (1–3 hourly; 4–6hr); Mount Abu (3 daily; 3hr 15min).

GETTING AROUND BY AUTO-RICKSHAW AUTO-RICKSHAWS ARE THE USUAL MEANS OF TRANSPORT; THERE ARE NO CYCLE RICKSHAWS IN TOWN. RICKSHAW SIGHTSEEING TOURS COST AROUND ₹650 FOR 5–6HR.

Bicycle and motorbike rental Renting a bicycle is another possibility, although traffic around the city is bad. Doctor Cafe, near Charcoal restaurant (☎99295 07355), rents out bicycles for ₹100/day. They also have scooters (from ₹500/day) and Enfields (₹1100/day); you'll need to bring your passport and leave a hard-currency deposit.

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION THE MAIN TOURIST OFFICE (MON–SAT 10AM–5PM; ☎ RAJASTHANTOURISM.GOV.IN) IS IN FATEH MEMORIAL ON AIRPORT RD AT SURAJ POL, ON THE EAST SIDE OF THE CITY, WITH DESKS AT THE AIRPORT AND RAILWAY STATION.

Tours Tours to Ranakpur, Kumbhalgarh, Nathdwara and Eklingji are offered by some of the innumerable travel agents dotted around the city centre (see below), as well as car rental with driver (usually around ₹2500/day for up to 250km).

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM UDAIPUR ALL THE FOLLOWING TRAINS RUN DAILY.

Destination	Name	No.	Departs	Arrives
Ajmer	Chetak Express	20474	5.00pm	10.15pm

Bundi	Mewar Express	12964	6.30pm	11.13pm
Chittaurgarh	Mewar Express	12964	6.30pm	8.45pm
Delhi	Mewar Express	12964	6.30pm	7.10am
Jaipur	UDZ Kurj Express	19666	10.15pm	5.30am
Kota	Mewar Express	12964	6.30pm	12.15am
Agra	UDZ Kurj Express	19666	10.15pm	10.20pm
Sawai Madhopur	Mewar Express	12964	6.30pm	1.23am

Travel agents Virtually every shop and guesthouse around the Jagdish Temple seems to offer bus and rail ticketing. Reliable agents include Mewar International on Lalghat, which also stocks books; Gangaur Tour 'n' Travels, close by at 28 Gangaur Ghat (☎941 4160 476); and the travel agency inside the Udai Niwas hotel.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Most accommodation is on the east side of Lake Pichola, although there are a growing number of excellent places on the far more peaceful northwestern side of the lake, just across the bridge by Chand Pol.

OLD TOWN FATEH PRAKASH PALACE CITY PALACE, ☎ HERITAGEHOTELSOFINdia.COM. THE BEST LOCATION IN THE CITY, RIGHT IN THE HEART OF THE CITY PALACE
 COMPLEX, WITH PRICES TO MATCH. MOST OF THE ROOMS HAVE SUPERB LAKE VIEWS, ALTHOUGH SOME ARE RATHER SMALL AND CHARACTERLESS FOR THE PRICE. ₹₹₹₹

★Jagat Niwas 23–25 Lalghat, ☎jagatcollection.com. Beautifully restored seventeenth-century haveli right on the lakeside, with 29 pleasant rooms

(some with lake views) and a good restaurant. The Raj rooms have lovely lakeside enclosed balconies, and are worth the splurge; all rates come with breakfast. ₹₹₹

★Jaiwana Haveli 14 Lalghat, www.jaiwanahaveli.com. Good-value lakeside haveli accommodation with a range of spotless modern rooms; some have a/c, and the more expensive ones have fine lake views, as does the good rooftop restaurant. Best to book ahead. ₹₹₹

★Lake Palace Lake Pichola, www.tajhotels.com. One of India's most famous hotels, sailing in magnificent isolation on its own island amid the serene waters of Lake Pichola. Accommodation is in a selection of luxurious rooms and suites, while facilities include a spa, pool, butler service and limousine rental. ₹₹₹₹

Lalghat Guest House 33 Lalghat, www.lalghat.com. One of the oldest guesthouses in Udaipur, and still going strong thanks to its superb lakeside position and cheapish rates. There's a mix of no-frills single and double rooms (some with shared bathrooms, some a/c, and a few with lakeside views), plus a nicer-than-average ten-person dorm, a bookshop and a food court. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹

NORTHWESTERN SIDE OF LAKE PICHOLA ★AMET HAVELI
CHAND PO, www.amethaveliudaipur.com. THIS FINE OLD WHITE HAVELI IS ONE OF THE BEST LAKEFRONT PROPERTIES IN TOWN. ROOMS ARE BEAUTIFULLY DECORATED WITH TRADITIONAL TOUCHES AND COME WITH A/C, TV AND LAKE VIEWS, THOUGH YOU MIGHT WANT TO SPEND A LITTLE MORE TO GET ONE OF THE SUPERB SUITES, WITH BIG WINDOWS RIGHT OVER THE WATER. ALSO HOME TO AMBRAI RESTAURANT AND A POOL. ₹₹₹

goStops Ambari Rd, www.gostops.com. Best of the city's chain hostels, elevating itself above the competition with a quiet location, excellent security, and a colourful common room. Activities on offer include cooking and painting classes, leather workshops and rooftop yoga sessions; on the downside, prices are higher than they probably should be, though rates do include a modest breakfast. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹₹

Udai Kothi Chand Pol, www.udaikothi.com. Smart and spotless modern hotel in traditional style, with lots of flowery murals and chintzy architectural touches. Rooms all come with TV, a/c and plenty of slightly twee furnishings; there's a beautiful pool, gorgeous rooftop restaurant, spa and a lovely garden. ₹₹₹

OUTSIDE THE CITY CENTRE ★RAAS DEVI GARH DELWARA VILLAGE, 25KM NORTH OF UDAIPUR, 🌐RAASDEVIGARH.COM. HIDDEN AWAY IN THE ARAVALLI HILLS, A 40MIN DRIVE NORTH OF UDAIPUR, THIS LUXURY HOTEL OCCUPIES THE MAGNIFICENT SEVENTEENTH-CENTURY DEVI GARH PALACE, MIXING TRADITIONAL RAJASTHANI PALACE OPULENCE WITH FRESH, CONTEMPORARY STYLE TO MEMORABLE EFFECT. FACILITIES INCLUDE A SUPERB SPA AND A SPECTACULAR POOL. SUITES ONLY; RATES INCLUDE BREAKFAST. ₹₹₹₹

Shikarbadi Goverdhan Vilas, 5km south of Udaipur on the NH-8 🌐heritagehotelsofindia.com. Former royal hunting lodge with its own pool, garden restaurant, lake, deer park and stud farm – less ostentatious, and significantly cheaper, than the palaces in town. Suites (₹10,000) in the old 1930s block have more character than the newer a/c rooms. ₹₹₹

★Udaivilas Haridasji Ki Magri 🌐oberoihotels.com. Udaipur's most opulent hotel and seen as one of the world's best, occupying a sprawling palace, embellished with acres of marble and a novel 'moated pool' that flows around the outside of the main building. Suites come with semi-private infinity swimming pools and private butlers, and the spa is pure indulgence. ₹₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Many of Udaipur's tourist cafés screen the James Bond movie Octopussy, with its high octane boat and auto-rickshaw chases around the city's landmarks, showings almost every evening at 7pm.

RESTAURANTS AMBRAI AMET HAVELI, CHAND POL; 🌐AMBRAIRESTaurant.COM. IN A SUPERLATIVE LAKESIDE SETTING FACING THE CITY PALACE AND SOMEHOW THE SUNSET TOO; THOUGH THE COOKING DOESN'T QUITE LIVE UP TO THE LOCATION, QUALITY IS USUALLY DECENT FROM

A MENU FEATURING AN EXTENSIVE SELECTION OF NORTH INDIAN VEG AND NON-VEG DISHES (INCLUDING TOP-NOTCH TANDOORIS), PLUS A FEW CHINESE AND EUROPEAN OFFERINGS. EVEN IF YOU'RE NOT HUNGRY, COME FOR A SUNDOWNER AND WATCH THE SUN SET OVER THE LAKE – AND IT'LL HAVE TO BE A DRINK, SINCE A LITTLE ODDLY THEY DON'T SERVE FOOD AT THAT RATHER IMPORTANT TIME OF DAY. ₹₹

★Charcoal Pratap Bhawan, 12 Lal Ghat ☎charcoalpb.com. Something a little different, this rooftop (of course) restaurant specialises in grilled meat – the menu has a few quirky choices, like chicken satay, Greek souvlaki served with home-made tzatziki (lamb/pork), and plenty of paneer and veg (even vegan) options too. There are two levels; the upper one affords 360-degree views, and will see you get less smoke in the eyes. ₹₹

Jagat Niwas 23–25 Lal Ghat ☎jagatcollection.com. Popular restaurant in the hotel of the same name, serving up well-prepared north Indian standards and continental offerings such as chicken stroganoff, spaghetti bolognese and fish n' chips, with nice views over the lake – or two nice views, if you count the snazzy mirrored ceilings – from its comfy window seats. ₹₹

Little Prince Hanuman Ghat ☎90019 22643. Right by the pedestrian bridge, and away from traffic in general, this is a good non-rooftop sunset spot, with good non-Indian food including sandwiches, pasta, Chinese, Israeli and Korean options. ₹

★Millets of Merwar Chand Pol, ☎milletsofmerwar.co.in. Indulge in healthy cuisine in this rustic lake view café with vegan, organic and gluten-free options, including pasta, soups, thali, Indian and Thai curries, salads and corn/millet flour pizzas, plus shakes and juices. They also organize walks to crafts villages and offer water bottle refills. ₹₹

Natraj Station Rd ☎natrajudaipur.com. Udaipur's top thali joint for more than twenty years, the original Natraj is in the Town Hall area but fiendishly hard to find; you may as well aim for their larger establishment, more or less opposite the railway station. ₹₹

Queen Café Chand Pol ☎9783786028. This tiny, unpretentious little restaurant offers a refreshing alternative to Udaipur's mainstream tourist eateries, with an authentic taste of home-style vegetarian Indian cooking including mild banana, mango and pumpkin curries. At the time of writing they had two whole tables; the establishment may, in due course, move around the corner. ₹

CAFÉS AND SNACKS ★HELLO BOHO! 5/43 GANGAUR GHAT 800 358 8837. WHILE JHEELS DOWN THE ROAD (SEE BELOW) GETS WAY MORE CUSTOM, AND IS RIGHT BY THE LAKE, THIS IS A FAR NICER PLACE TO HOLE UP FOR A WHILE – THEY’VE STRONG WI-FI, THE SERVICE IS FRIENDLY AND THE COFFEE IS THE BEST IN TOWN, WHILE WELCOME SHADE IS PROVIDED THROUGH THE DAY BY THE LARGE TREE OUTSIDE. TOASTIES AND OTHER NIBBLES ARE AVAILABLE, WRITTEN ON THE DAILY BOARD. ₹

Jheels Ginger Coffee 56 Gangaur Ghat 94610 16511. Grab one of the idyllic lakeside tables – separated from the water by nothing more than a few flowers – at this ground-floor café, which serves up all sorts of coffees and treats including sweet pies, muffins, sandwiches, and ice creams. Unfortunately, staff often act like they’d rather you weren’t there; there’s no wi-fi, either. ₹

Pap’s Juices Satta Pole 97994 80101. Tiny place with a mammoth range of excellent juices; try an ABC with ginger and mint, or a banana-date lassi. Good cereal, too. ₹

DRINKING

MAP

A few of the rooftop places around the lake are licensed – good news, particularly around sunset. For other entertainment, Bagore-ki-Haveli has nightly dance performances, while Shilpgram often hosts out-of-town performers.

Sun N Moon Treebo Udai Niwas, Gangaur Marg, 9799984488. Sitting atop a hotel, this bar somehow has not one but several rooftop levels – the highest is only large enough to accommodate a single table. Not the cheapest, but it’s the only place in town with a reliable nightlife feel.

Upré Lake Pichola Hotel, Chand Pol 9116173737. Chic, smart and surprisingly lush rooftop restaurant, though it’s perhaps more notable for the licensed bar and plunge pool. Grab one of the lamplit balcony tables for the best views over the city and lake.

SHOPPING UDAIPUR IS ONE OF RAJASTHAN'S TOP SHOPPING DESTINATIONS, WITH AN ECLECTIC ARRAY OF LOCAL ARTISANAL SPECIALITIES ALONG WITH OTHER CRAFTS FROM ACROSS THE STATE. THE CITY'S PARTICULAR SPECIALITY IS MINIATURE PAINTING, WITH NUMEROUS SHOPS SELLING TRADITIONAL MEWARI-STYLE WORKS ON PAPER AND SILK. MANY PLACES ALSO DO A GOOD LINE IN LEATHER AND CLOTH-BOUND STATIONERY USING HANDMADE PAPER. UDAIPUR IS WELL KNOWN FOR ITS SILVER JEWELLERY – JAGDISH ST, BARA BAZAAR AND MOTI CHOHATTA, AROUND THE CLOCK TOWER, ARE HOME TO LOTS OF SHOPS. LALGHAT AND THE BRANCHES LEADING OFF IT ARE HOME TO PLENTY OF BOOKSHOPS.

ACTIVITIES AND CLASSES COOKING LESSONS AVAILABLE AT NUMEROUS PLACES AROUND TOWN. TRY MILLETS OF MERWAR.

Horseriding Various places around town offer horse-riding expeditions into the surrounding countryside. Princess Trails (www.princesstrails.com) specializes in extended, four- to eight-day safaris on thoroughbred Mewari mounts as well as jeep tours, hikes and horse-drawn carriage rides.

Music The Prem Musical Instrument shop (☎94143 43583), adjacent to the Gangaur Palace hotel, offer sitar and tabla lessons and can also arrange flute lessons, or musical appreciation classes if you just want to learn more about Indian music.

Painting lessons in traditional Indian painting are offered by many places around town; Madan's Art Store is a reliable option.

Swimming pool The lovely pools at Udai Kothi and Shiv Niwas cost around for non-guests.

Volunteer work Animal Aid Unlimited in Badi Village, 8km northeast of the city (www.animalaidunlimited.com), maintains a pet hospital where volunteers and visitors are encouraged. No special skills are required – just a willingness to work with animals, usually including street dogs, cows, donkeys, cats and monkeys.

Yoga Ashtanga Yoga Ashram, Raiba House, Chand Pol (📍 ashtangayogashram.in) has daily 90min Hatha yoga classes for all standards at 8.30am and 6pm (let them know you're coming a day in advance). Classes are free, but donations are appreciated, with proceeds going to a local animal charity.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE THERE ARE ATMS ALL OVER THE NEW CITY, PLUS A PARTICULARLY HANDY 24HR MACHINE ON THE STREET LEADING TO THE CITY PALACE. LOTS OF PLACES AROUND JAGDISH TEMPLE OFFER FOREX.

Doctor Dr Virendra Bhandari (📞98290 91084) will visit hotels/guesthouses.
Hospital The private Aravalli Hospital is at 332 Ambamata Rd (📞0294 243 0222, 🌐 aravalihospital.in), or there's a large state hospital campus on the corner of Hospital Road and Collectorate Road, in the north of the city.

Nagada

Daily 10.30am–1pm & 3–7pm • Free • Regular buses leave for Kailashpuri (the Nagada turn-off) every 30min from Udaipur's main bus stand; Nagada is a further 3km away down this side road – rent a bicycle from the shop at the junction to get there, take an auto-rickshaw or walk Dating back to 626 AD, the ragged remnants of the ancient capital of Mewar, NAGADA, stand next to Bagela Lake, 20km northeast of Udaipur. Most of the buildings here were either destroyed by the Mughals or submerged by the lake, which has expanded naturally over the centuries. All that survives is a fine pair of tenth-century Vaishnavite temples known as Saas-Bahu – literally 'mother-in-law' and 'daughter-in-law'. The more impressive mother-in-law temple has lost its shikhara (tower) but preserves a wealth of carving inside; while within the mandapa, a marriage area is marked by four ornate pillars, bearing images of the gods Brahma, Vishnu, Shiva and Surya to which couples are supposed to pay homage.

Eklingji

Main temple daily 10.30am–1.30pm & 5.30–8.30pm • Free • Frequent buses leave for Eklingji from Udaipur's main bus stand, dropping passengers off close to the temple Returning to the main road, you can continue to EKLINGJI via the road or along a path that leads behind the old protective walls and downhill. Ask for directions at the bike shop. The god Eklingji, a manifestation of Shiva, has been the protective deity of the rulers of Mewar ever since the eighth century, when Bappa Rawal was bestowed with the title darwan (servant) of Eklingji by his guru. To this day, the maharana of Udaipur still visits the 108-temple complex every Monday evening (the day traditionally celebrated all over India as being sacred to Shiva) and the whole place is usually lively with local pilgrims seeking his blessings. The milky-white marble main temple is crowned by an elaborate two-storey mandapa guarded by stone elephants; inside, a four-faced black marble lingam marks the precise spot where Bappa Rawal received his accolade. Climb the small mountain behind the town for a gobsmacking view of the whole complex.

Nathdwara

Nathdwara is on NH-8, and sees a constant flow of buses en route north and south. The temple dedicated to Krishna – known also as Nath, the favourite avatar (incarnation) of Vishnu – at NATHDWARA, ‘Gateway to God’, is one of the richest temples in India, and gets incredibly crowded during major religious festivals. It dates from the seventeenth century when a chariot laden with an image of Krishna – being carried from Mathura to Udaipur to save it from destruction by Aurangzeb – became stuck in the mud here. Its bearers interpreted the event as a divine sign, establishing the new Shri Nathji Temple where it had stopped.

The temple lies about 1km south of the town’s bus stop, surrounded by a fascinating tangle of narrow streets where stalls display incense, perfumes and small Krishna statues. The temple opens for worship eight times daily, when the image is woken, dressed, washed, fed and put to bed. Don’t miss the radiant pichwai paintings in the main sanctuary, made of hand-spun cloth and coloured with strong vegetable pigments. You could also ask a guide to show you the ‘footsteps of Krishna’, a process that requires rubbing rose petals on the marble floor. It’s occasionally closed to non-Hindus – check before you go.

Ranakpur

Main temple Daily noon–5pm • Entry Free; Video camera/camera/ guide charge Some 90km north of Udaipur, the spectacular Jain temples at RANAKPUR boast marblework on a par with that of the more famous Dilwara shrines at Mount Abu. The temples are hidden away in a beautiful, wooded valley, deep in the Aravalli Hills, originally gifted to the Jain community in the fifteenth century by Rana Kumbha, the Hindu ruler of Mewar.

The main temple was built in 1439 according to a strict system of measurement based on the number 72 (the age at which the founder of Jainism, Mahavira, achieved nirvana). The entire temple sits on a pedestal measuring 72 yards square and is held up by 1440 (72 x 20) individually carved pillars. Inside, there are 72 elaborately carved shrines, some octagonal in shape, along with the main deity (a 72-inch-tall image of the four-faced Adinath, the first tirthankara) encased in the central sanctum. The carving on the walls, columns and the domed ceilings is superb. Friezes depicting the life of the tirthankara are etched into the walls, while musicians and dancers have been modelled out of brackets between the pillars and the ceiling.

Three smaller temples nestle among the trees in the enclosure in front of the main temple and are free to enter. The most impressive is the Parshwanath Temple, around 100m from the main temple, with a small but finely carved shrine, while a further 100m walk brings you to the simpler Neminath Temple. Close by (a short walk across the car park) is a contemporary Hindu temple dedicated to Surya.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS RANAKPUR IS RANAKPUR A BUMPY BUS RIDE FROM UDAIPUR (HOURLY; 2HR 30MIN), OR FROM JODHPUR (8 DAILY; 5HR) VIA THE MARKET TOWN OF FALNA (THE NEAREST RAILWAY STATION) ON THE NH-14, FROM WHERE THERE ARE FOUR DAILY BUSES TO ABU RD (5–6HR). BUSES STOP RIGHT OUTSIDE THE JAIN TEMPLES, WHICH ARE 2–4KM FROM THE HOTELS; IF YOU’RE LUCKY, YOU MIGHT FIND AN AUTO OR JEEP AT THE BUS STOP – IF NOT YOU’LL HAVE TO RING YOUR HOTEL AND ASK TO BE PICKED UP, OR (WORST-CASE SCENARIO) WALK.

By taxi Ranakpur can be visited as a day-trip from Udaipur, either on its own or in combination with nearby return Kumbhalgarh; count on around ₹2400 for the return trip by car.

Trekking If you wish to visit Kumbhalgarh too, think about trekking between the two sites, a beautiful 25km hike through an unspoilt section of the Aravalli Hills. As Kumbhalgarh is on the top of the range, it’s easier to hike down from there to Ranakpur; guides and rangers may be arranged at the hotels listed below for the 6hr uphill climb in the other direction.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING ACCOMMODATION IN RANAKPUR IS EXPENSIVE. THERE ARE NO RESTAURANTS OUTSIDE THE HOTELS AND GUESTHOUSES, ALTHOUGH YOU CAN ENJOY A DELICIOUS PURE-VEG THALI LUNCH AT THE TEMPLE (NOON–1.30PM) FOR A BARGAIN ₹60.

Fateh Bagh 4km south of the temples, www.heritagehotelsofindia.com. Ranakpur’s most authentic accommodation, a 200-year-old palace transported piece by piece for 50km, and rebuilt here. Rooms are comfy and characterful, and facilities include a pool, spa and Ayurveda centre. **₹₹₹₹

King’s Abode 3km south of the temples, www.kingsabode.in. Grey stone walls and a lush inner courtyard give this hotel plenty of character. Its 28 a/c double rooms are spacious and equipped with plenty of mod cons, while the higher-category rooms have private pools. There’s a big swimming pool, Jacuzzi, spa and restaurant, and treks and nature walks can be arranged. ₹₹₹

Mana 5km south of the temples, www.manahotels.in. Angular, Scandinavian-styled Mana is unashamedly modern and unlike anything else in Ranakpur, exhibiting plenty of timber, glass and steel. The chic rooms and cottages within the 3.5-acre garden all feature a/c, TVs and phones, plus bright modern bathrooms with tubs, while the slender infinity pool flows right into the restaurant/bar. ₹₹₹₹

Ranakpur Hill Resort 3km south of the temples, www.ranakpurhillresort.com. Chintzy little resort with a range of great-value rooms (air-cooled and a/c) of varying standards, and some less appealing 'Royal Hut' tents (Oct–March only). It also has a decent-sized pool and a small Ayurveda centre, and can arrange half-day horse safaris. Huts and rooms ₹₹₹

Kumbhalgarh Fort Daily 8am–5.30pm • Charge • Sound-and-light show (Hindi only) 7pm • Charge The remote hilltop fort of Kumbhalgarh, 80km north of Udaipur, is the most formidable of the 32 constructed or restored by Rana Kumbha of Chittaurgarh in the fifteenth century. Protected by a series of monumental walls and bastions, it was only successfully besieged once, when a confederacy led by Akbar poisoned the water supply. Aside from the fort itself, Kumbhalgarh is worth a visit to experience the idyllic Aravalli countryside, dotted with tribal villages and offering striking views.

The most memorable panorama of all is from the pinnacle of the rather plain palace building, crowning the summit of the fort, with striking bird's-eye views over the numerous Jain and Hindu temples clustered around the main gate and scattered over the hills below. The oldest are thought to date from the second century; the tombs of the great Rana Kumbha himself (murdered by his eldest son) and his grandson Prithviraj (poisoned by his brother-in-law) stand to the east. Some 36km of crenellated ramparts wind around the rim of the hilltop, and it's possible to walk around them in two comfortable days, sleeping rough or in tents; a guide is compulsory. Be sure to take sufficient food and water.

Kumbhalgarh Wildlife Sanctuary Daily 9am–6pm • Charge, camera/guide/jeep ride with guide individual charges • 📞294 241 135

Lining the deep valley that plunges west from the fort down to the plains, the Kumbhalgarh Wildlife Sanctuary comprises a dense area of woodland that offers a refuge for wolves and leopards. With a local guide, you can trek through it to Ranakpur, a rewarding and easy hike of between four and five hours (the alternative is a long journey on an infrequent country bus). Entry permits are obtainable from the District Forest Officer at Kelwara, 7km down the road, though local guides – contactable through the hotels listed below, at local shops, or at the café just inside the fort gates – can obtain permits for you, and can walk the route with you or take you in a jeep.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TAXI KUMBHALGARH KUMBHALGARH AND RANAKPUR CAN EASILY BE VISITED AS A (LONGISH) DAY-TRIP FROM UDAIPUR (AROUND ₹2400 FOR THE ROUND TRIP BY TAXI FOR UP TO FOUR PEOPLE).

By shared jeep Otherwise, take a shared jeep from Chetak Circle to Kelwara, 7km down the road, from where you should be able to pick up a jeep or rickshaw to Kumbhalgarh.

ACCOMMODATION THE AODHI 1KM BELOW THE FORT, 🌐 HERITAGEHOTELSOFININDIA.COM. A PEACEFUL AND WELCOMING HERITAGE HOTEL WITH STYLISHLY
FURNISHED ROOMS (SOME WITH NICE VIEWS), A BIG POOL AND JEEP SAFARIS TO LOCAL VILLAGES. ₹₹₹₹

Club Mahindra Fort Kumbhalgarh, 5km down the Kelwara road, 🌐 clubmahindra.com. Upmarket hotel with 68 rooms, spa, and superb views from its pool and garden terrace. ₹₹₹

Chittaurgarh The belt of hilly land east of Udaipur is the most fertile in Rajasthan, watered by several perennial rivers and guarded by a sequence of imposing forts perched atop the craggy ridges that crisscross the region.

The first major settlement you'll come across is the historic town of CHITTAURGARH (or Chittor), 115km northeast of Udaipur. Of all the former Rajput capitals, Chittaurgarh – former capital of the kingdom of Merwar before Udaipur – was the strongest bastion of Hindu resistance against the Muslim invaders and it is home to one of Rajasthan's most spectacular and historic forts, rising majestically above a verdant tapestry of plains. No less than three mass suicides (johars) were committed over the centuries by the female inhabitants of this honey-coloured fort. As a symbol of Rajput chivalry and militarism, only Jodhpur's Mehrangarh Fort compares.

Some visitors squeeze a tour of Chittaurgarh into a day-trip, or en route between Bundi and Udaipur, but it's well worth stopping overnight to give yourself plenty of time to explore the fort properly.

Brief history The origins of Chittor Fort are obscure, but probably date back to the seventh century. It was seized by Bappa Rawal, founder of the Mewar dynasty, in 734, and remained the Mewar capital for the next 834 years, bar a couple of brief interruptions. Despite its commanding position and formidable appearance, however, Chittor was far from invincible, and was sacked three times over the centuries, by Ala-ud-din-Khalji (1303), Sultan Bahadur Shah (1535) and Akbar (1568). It was this last attack which convinced the then ruler of Mewar, Udai Singh, to decamp to a more remote and easily defensible site at Udaipur. Chittaurgarh was eventually ceded back to the Rajputs in 1616 on condition that it not be refortified, but the royal family of Mewar, by now firmly ensconced in Udaipur, never resettled here, and the entire fort, which once boasted a population of more than fifty thousand, still only houses a couple of thousand people.

The fort

Fort Daily 10am–6.30pm • Charge; video camera/ Camera, guide charge • Museum Daily except Mon 10am–5pm • Sound-and-light show daily 7pm; Fri & Tues in English • Charge • Fort approximately 2km east of town: autos from bus/train stations should cost ₹200, or ₹450 return including waiting time. The entire fort is 5km long and 1km wide, and you could easily spend a whole day up here nosing around the myriad remains, although most visitors content themselves with a few hours. Tours of the fort are most easily made by auto-rickshaw; alternatively, take a rickshaw to the entrance and explore on foot. It's a long, steep climb up to the fort, but most of the roads on the plateau itself are flat.

The ascent to the fort, protected by massive bastions, begins at Padan Pol in the east of town and winds upwards through a further six gateways. The houses of those who still inhabit the fort are clustered to the north of the final gate, Ram Pol; if you have time, or simply don't want to pay to enter the historical part of the fort, this little village makes for worthwhile ambling, with refreshments (and food, if you book ahead) available at the Padmini Haveli.

Palace of Rana Kumbha and around Entering the fort, you first reach the slowly deteriorating fifteenth-century Palace of Rana Kumbha (reigned 1433–68), built by the ruler who presided over the period of Mewar's greatest prosperity. The main palace building still stands five storeys high, though it's difficult now to make much sense of the confusing tangle of partially ruined walls and towers. Every evening, hourly sound-and-light shows bring the palace to life, and recount the harrowing history – battles and stories – of the fort.

Opposite the palace stands the intricately carved fifteenth-century Shingara Chauri Mandir, a small but lavishly adorned Jain temple dedicated to Shantinath, the sixteenth tirthankara. Nearby, the modern Fateh Prakash Palace, a large, plain edifice built for the maharana of Udaipur in the 1920s, is home to a small archeological museum, containing a fine array of Jain and Hindu carvings recovered from various places around the fort.

A couple of hundred metres further on lies the imposing Kumbha Shyama Temple, constructed by (and named after) Rana Kumbha. A black statue of Garuda stands in its own pavilion in front of the shrine, while an image of Varaha, the boar incarnation of Vishnu, occupies a niche at the rear. A second shrine stands close by within the small walled enclosure, dedicated to Meerabai, a Jodhpur princess and poet famed for her devotion to Krishna.

The Vijay Stambh and beyond The main road within the fort continues south to its focal point, Vijay Stambh, the soaring ‘tower of victory’ erected by Rana Kumbha to commemorate his 1440 victory over the Muslim sultan Mehmud Khilji of Malwa. This magnificent sand-coloured tower, whose nine storeys rise 36m, took a decade to build; its walls are lavishly carved with mythological scenes and images from all Indian religions, including Arabic inscriptions in praise of Allah. You can climb the dark narrow stairs to the very summit for free by showing your fort entry ticket.

The area around the Vijay Stambh is littered with an impressive number of further remains, including a pair of monumental gateways and a number of florid temples, such as the superbly decorated Samiddhesvara Temple, whose shrine houses an image of the trimurti, a composite, three-headed image of Shiva, Brahma and Vishnu. A path leads from here down to the Gaumukh Kund, a large reservoir fed by an underground stream that trickles through carved mouths (mukh) of cows (gau) and commands superb views across the plains.

Buildings further south include the Kalika Mata Temple, and Padmini's Palace, its rather plain buildings enclosing a series of attractive walled gardens leading to a tower overlooking the small lake. The road continues south to the point once used for hurling traitors to their deaths, then returns north along the eastern ridge to Suraj Pol gate, with spectacular vistas across a patchwork of farmland. Several temples line the route, but the most impressive monument is Kirti Stambh. The inspiration for the tower of victory, this smaller 'tower of fame' was built by Digambaras in the twelfth century as a monument to the first tirthankara Adinath, whose unclad image appears throughout its six storeys.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN CHITTAURGARH CHITTAURGARH'S RAILWAY STATION IS TO THE SOUTH OF THE CITY, A 20MIN DRIVE FROM THE FORT.

By bus The Roadways (aka 'Kothwali') Bus Stand is on the west bank of the Ghambiri and there is a station in Zink Nagar in the north of town; it hosts both private and state-run services, with the latter far more regular to most destinations in Rajasthan.

Destinations Ajmer (1–3 hourly; 5hr); Jaipur (1–3 hourly; 7–9hr); Kota (1–2 hourly; 4hr 30min); Udaipur (1–2 hourly; 2hr 30min).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Accommodation in Chittaurgarh is relatively pricey; the only really cheap places are the slightly grim hotels around the railway station and in the middle of town.

CITY CENTRE AND FORT MEERA NEEMUCH RD; 🌐HOTEL-MEERA.COM. RECENTLY RENOVATED HOTEL IN THE CENTRE OF TOWN, WITH A WIDE SELECTION OF FAN AND A/C ROOMS, AND SOME VERY NICELY DECORATED SUITES (FROM ₹3300); FACILITIES INCLUDE AN INEXPENSIVE RESTAURANT AND A GOOD BAR. ₹1500

★Padmini Haveli Anna Poorna Temple Rd, Fort, 🌐thepadminihaveli.com. Easily the most atmospheric place to stay in town, right in the heart of Chittor Fort. Run by a charming husband-and-wife team, this is authentic Rajasthani hospitality at its best, and the pure-veg food is excellent (see below). Rooms (all a/c) are characterful and adorned with beautiful fabrics and – unusually – Hermès sculptures; bathrooms feature solid granite sinks. Views from the rooftop sunset terrace are spectacular. ₹₹

Pratap Palace Opposite the GPO on Shri Gurukul Rd ☎09461141153. Functional mid-range hotel, a bit shabby in places (and more than a little creepy at night, though largely in a good way), but with an attractive garden and good food. The smarter deluxe rooms are better value, and there's a decent non-veg restaurant that's also licensed. ₹₹₹

OUTSIDE THE CITY CASTLE BIJAIPUR 🏰

CASTLEBIJAIPUR.CO.IN. THIS LOVELY HOTEL OCCUPIES A SUPERB SIXTEENTH-CENTURY CASTLE SET IN A TRANQUIL AND UNSPOILT RURAL LOCATION A 45MIN (32KM) DRIVE EAST OF TOWN. ROOMS ARE DECORATED WITH TRADITIONAL RAJASTHANI WOODEN FURNITURE AND ARTEFACTS, AND THERE'S A POOL, LIBRARY, AYURVEDIC MASSAGES, DAILY GROUP YOGA AND MEDITATION SESSIONS (INDIVIDUAL TUITION ON REQUEST), PLUS CYCLE, JEEP AND HORSE SAFARIS TO NEARBY VILLAGES. THEY ALSO HAVE TENTED ACCOMMODATION A FEW KILOMETRES AWAY IN AN EVEN MORE REMOTE RURAL LOCATION AT PANGARH LAKE. ₹₹₹

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM CHITTAURGARH ALL THE FOLLOWING TRAINS RUN DAILY.

Destination	Name	No.	Departs	Arrives
Ajmer	Chetak Express	20474	7.03pm	10.15pm
Bundi	MDS Kota Express	19815	1.25pm	3.53pm
Delhi	Mewar Express	12964	9.00pm	7.10am

Jaipur	Udaipur– Khajuraho Express	19666	12.20am	5.30am
	Udaipur– Jaipur Express	12991	8.10am	1.40pm
Udaipur	Udaipur City Express	19329	1.50am	4.15am

EATING

MAP

★Aashirwad Dining Hall Opposite Satkar Hotel 📍94141 10110. Popular little veg thali joint now open for dinner as well as lunch. No English signage, but it's easy enough to spot. ₹₹

Padmini Haveli Anna Poorna Temple Rd, Fort, 📍
thepadminihaveli.com. Not just the best place to stay in the fort (see above), but the best place to eat, too. The pure-veg food is excellent, with lunch and dinner spreads; let them know you're coming at least the day before. ₹₹

Bundi

The walled town of BUNDI, 37km north of Kota, lies in the north of the former Hadoti state, shielded by jagged outcrops of the Vindhya Range. The site was the capital of the Hadachauhans, but although settled in 1241, 25 years before neighbouring Kota, Bundi never amounted to more than a modest market centre, and remains relatively untouched by modern development. The palace alone justifies a visit thanks to its superb collection of murals, while the well-preserved old town, crammed with crumbling havelis, picturesque old bazaars and a surprising number of flamboyant baoris or 'step-wells' (giant water tanks designed to collect the precious monsoon rains), makes this one of southern Rajasthan's most appealing destinations – a fact recognized by the ever-increasing numbers of foreign tourists who are now visiting the place.

Garh Palace Jodhpur's House of Strife, gray towers on red rock, is the work of giants, but the Palace of Bundi, even in broad daylight, is such a palace as men build for themselves in uneasy dreams – the work of goblins rather than men.

Rudyard Kipling Daily 8am–6pm • Charge, video camera charge Bundi's palace was one of the few royal abodes in Rajasthan untouched by Mughal influence, and its appearance is surprisingly homogenous considering the number of times it was added to over the years.

A short steep path winds up to the main gateway, Hathi Pol, surmounted by elephant carvings, beyond which lies the palace's principal courtyard. On the right-hand side, steps lead up to the Ratan Daulat, the early seventeenth-century Diwan-i-Am, or Hall of Public Audience, an open terrace with a simple marble throne overlooking the courtyard below.

At the far end of the Ratan Daulat, further steps lead down to the Chhatra Mahal. Go through the open-sided turquoise-fringed pavilion on the eastern side of the courtyard and the room beyond to reach a superb little antechamber, its every surface covered in finely detailed murals from the 1780s, embellished with gold and silver leaf. The opposite side of the courtyard is flanked by a pavilion with columns supported on the backs of quaint black trumpeting elephants.

From the Chhatra Mahal courtyard, a narrow flight of steps leads up to an even smaller courtyard flanked by the superbly decorated Phool Mahal (built in 1607, though the murals date from the 1860s), whose murals include a vast procession featuring regiments of soldiers in European dress and a complete camel corps.

From here, further narrow steps ascend to the Badal Mahal (Cloud Palace), home to what are often regarded as the finest paintings in the whole of southern Rajasthan. A vividly coloured ring of Krishnas and Radhas dance around the highest part of the vaulted dome, flanked by murals showing Krishna being driven to his wedding by Ganesh, and Rama returning from Sri Lanka to Ayodhya.

Chittra Sala There are further outstanding murals in the Chittra Sala, just above the palace. At the rear left-hand corner of the garden, steps lead up to a small courtyard embellished with an outstanding sequence of paintings in an unusually muted palette of turquoises, blues and blacks, the majority devoted to magical depictions of scenes from the life of Krishna.

Taragarh Fort Sunrise–sunset • Charge

A steep twenty-minute climb above the Chittra Sala, the monkey-infested Taragarh Fort offers even more spectacular views over Bundi, its palace and the surrounding countryside. Upon passing through the second wooden gate, double back on yourself and go up the ramp to get onto the barracks for a great vantage point. Note that the path up can be tricky, even with decent footwear (flip-flops are not advisable), and a near-total lack of security means that solo females should probably give the climb a miss.

Raniji-ki-Baori Southwest of Azad Park • Daily 9.45am–5pm • Charge South of the Old City is the rewarding Raniji-ki-Baori, one of Rajasthan's most spectacular step-wells. Built in 1699, this 46m-deep well is reached by a flight of steps punctuated by platforms and pillars embellished with sinuous S-shaped brackets and elephant capitals. As you descend, look for the beautifully carved panels showing the ten avatars of Lord Vishnu, which line the side walls. The nineteenth-century step-well of Dhabhai-ka Kund lies south of Raniji-ki-Baori; other notable Bundi baoris include the twin step-wells of Nagar Sagar Kund, near Chogan Gate, and Bhora-ji-ka Kund, to the west of town.

Sukh Mahal

Daily 9.45am–5pm • Charge • Around ₹120 return by auto from town to Sukh Mahal, ₹150 to Kshar Bagh Northeast of the town on the southern shore of Jait Sagar lake is the pretty but now rather neglected Sukh Mahal – Rao Raja Vishnu Singh's summer palace – where Rudyard Kipling (who stayed here for a few months at the invitation of the raja) wrote parts of Kim and The Jungle Book. The building itself is closed to visitors but the gardens are pretty, and you can walk for a short distance along the lakeshore on either side of the palace. Some 1.5km further around the lakeshore, Kshar Bagh encloses sixty crumbling royal cenotaphs. If the door is locked, ask for the key at the chowkidar's hut on your left just after the gateway over the main road some 100m north of the cenotaphs.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN THE RAILWAY BUNDI STATION IS AROUND 5KM SOUTH OF TOWN (₹150 OR SO BY AUTO-RICKSHAW). BEST FOR KOTA IS THE MANDASOR KOTA EXPRESS #19815 (DEP. 3.55PM, ARR. 5PM), TO CHITTAURGARH

THE KOTA MANDASOR EXPRESS #19816 (DEP. 5.25AM, ARR. 7.50AM), TO UDAIPUR THE MEWAR EXPRESS #12963 (DEP. 1.25AM, ARR. 7.15AM), AND TO SAWAI MADHOPUR THE MEWAR EXPRESS #12964 (DEP. 11.15PM, ARR. 1.23AM).

By bus Buses arrive in the southeast part of town near the post office, from where it's around ₹60 by auto-rickshaw to the palace and guesthouses. Heading south, there are regular buses to Kota (every 30min; 1hr), and services to Chittaurgarh (2 daily; 4hr) and Udaipur (3 daily; 6hr). Buses are the best way of reaching Ajmer (hourly; 4hr), Jaipur (every 30min; 5hr) and Jodhpur (5 daily; 8hr).

INFORMATION EVENTS THE ANNUAL BUNDI FESTIVAL TAKES PLACE AROUND MID-NOVEMBER, AND IS A CELEBRATION OF HADOTI HERITAGE WITH A VERY LOCAL, COUNTRY-FAIR FEEL.

Tours Jovial archeology enthusiast 'Kukki' (☎09001000188) runs engaging half-day and full-day tours to prehistoric rock painting sites in Bundi's rural hinterland, plus visits to villages and vulture colonies.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

★Bundi Haveli 107 Balchand Para, ☎hotelbundihaveli.com. Traditional old haveli given a stylish contemporary makeover, with beautifully furnished a/c rooms (many with jharokhas), and a decent restaurant (breakfast included in rates). Excellent value. ₹₹

★Bundi Vilas Balchand Para, ☎bundivilas.com. Tucked up against the palace's lower rampart walls, the seven charming rooms and suites (all a/c) of this 300-year-old family-run haveli are tastefully decorated and high on creature comforts. There's a pretty rooftop restaurant, and the rooftop suites are the most romantic in town. ₹₹₹

Dev Niwas Opposite Purani Kothwali, ☎jagatcollection.com. This sociable guesthouse dates back three centuries and is home to 21 clean rooms and suites (all with attached bathrooms and a/c), plus a nice panoramic rooftop restaurant. ₹₹

Haveli Katkoun Balchand Para, ☎katkounhavelibundi.com. Guesthouse with gleaming marble floors and a range of spacious and smart single/double rooms, the best of which have a/c and palace views. Prices have increased in recent years, but you'll still often get generous discounts.

₹₹

Nawal Sagar Palace Balchand Para, www.nawalsagarpalace.com. Situated right beside the lake, this charming – but overpriced – hotel has spacious and clean heritage rooms (the more expensive with a/c and lake views), plus an emerald lawn and decent rooftop restaurant. ₹₹₹

Shivam Tourist Guesthouse Balchand Para, www.shivam-bundi.co.in. Extremely sociable little family guesthouse with friendly management, eight clean and pleasantly decorated attached rooms (the best on the upper floors) and good home-cooking (plus classes). Best in town at this price range. ₹

EATING

MAP

Dev Niwas Opposite Purani Kothwali 98290 42128. The most reliable of the hotel restaurants (just watch your head on the way up and down the stairs), with a menu of affordable Indian mains, including Rajasthani ones like gatta and laal maas. ₹₹

★Krishna's Sadar Bazaar 91660 46392. 'Best masala chai in India' sounds like a ridiculous claim, and it is, but this simple, hippy-painted spot is at least somewhere near the top. The constituent ingredients are pulverised with a rock for almost every order, by a fellow with a very infectious grin – it takes a little while, but you'll be enjoying the scent long before you've touched your tea. A warning: come here once, and you'll be back again. ₹

Morgan's Place Kasera Paradise, near Surang Gate, www.kaseraparadise.com. The restaurant atop this hotel is the best in town, serving decent pasta and pizzas; veg and non-veg options are available, as are quirkier dishes such as lasagne, gnocchi and cannelloni. ₹₹

Kota

KOTA, a 45-minute drive from Bundi on a fertile plain fed by Rajasthan's largest river, the Chambal, is one of the state's dirtier and less appealing cities. With a population nudging 700,000, it is one of Rajasthan's major commercial and industrial hubs, with hydro, atomic and thermal power stations lining the banks of the Chambal, alongside Asia's largest fertilizer plant, whose enormous chimneys provide a not-so-scenic backdrop to many views of the town. Kota is worth a visit if only for its fine city palace, which houses one of the better museums in Rajasthan; while the old town has a commercial hustle and bustle.

Kishore Sagar and around Chatra Vilas Gardens Daily 9am–7pm • Charge Kishore Sagar, an artificial lake built in 1346, gives some visual relief from the city's ultimately grim industrial backdrop, that is if its water levels are buoyant enough. The red-and-white palace in its centre, Jag Mandir, was commissioned by Prince Dher Deh of Bundi in 1346. On the eastern edge of the lake, the pleasing Chatra Vilas Gardens are an easy walk from the bus stand, and a good place to chill if you're waiting between services.

City Palace Maharao Madho Singh Museum Daily 10am–5pm • Combined entrance to museum and palace Charge On the southern side of the town centre, around 2km from the bus station, lies the City Palace, a well-preserved cluster of blue and pink royal residences; construction on them began in 1625 and continued sporadically until the early years of the twentieth century. The palace now houses the excellent Maharao Madho Singh Museum. The first room is filled with a selection of luxury items belonging to the maharaja, while diagonally across the courtyard lies the dazzling Raj Mahal, built by Rao Madho Singh (ruled 1625–49), richly decorated with paintings and mirrorwork, which served as the ruler's public audience hall. From the Raj Mahal, a corridor leads into a further sequence of rooms housing a well-stocked armoury and a small art gallery. Less enticing is the depressing wildlife gallery filled with the moth-eaten remains of various leopards and tigers.

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM KOTA ALL THE FOLLOWING TRAINS RUN DAILY.

Destination	Name	No.	Departs	Arrives
Chittaurgarh	Mewar Express	12963	12.45am	4.40am
Delhi	Golden Temple Mail	12903	7.20am	1.50pm
	Mewar Express	12964	12.20am	7.10am
Jaipur	Jaipur Express	12955	7.55am	12.00pm
	Ranthambore Express	12465	12.35pm	4.35pm
Sawai Madhopur	Golden Temple Mail	12903	7.20am	8.25am

Exit the museum then follow the steps up past the Raj Mahal to reach a series of finely painted palace buildings (you might need to ask one of the staff to open up the doors to the staircase for you). Three storeys up is the Barah Mahal, one of whose rooms is richly decorated with dozens of square miniatures placed together on the wall like tiles and depicting a range of religious and contemporary scenes, from Krishna lifting Mount Goverdhan to exotic-looking European ladies and gentlemen.

Chambal Gardens Daily 9am–7pm • Charge • Boat rides start from ₹700/hr for up to five people On the edge of the river, a few kilometres south of the fort, crocodiles and gharial sometimes sun themselves in a shallow pond in the Chambal Gardens, which also contains mini replicas of the new seven wonders of the world. Boats from here offer leisurely jaunts on the crocodile-infested River Chambal.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION KOTA IS A SURPRISINGLY KOTA LARGE AND SPRAWLING CITY, AND YOU'LL NEED A RICKSHAW TO COVER THE SIGHTS.

By train Kota Junction railway station is 2km to the north of town; from here you can take a rickshaw into the centre.

By bus Arriving at the central bus stand it's a long but feasible walk through the bustling main bazaar to the City Palace. Buses leave regularly to Ajmer (every 30min; 6hr), Bundi (every 30min; 45min–1hr), Chittorgarh (5 daily; 4hr), Jaipur (hourly; 5hr) and Udaipur (8 daily; 6hr). Services to Ajmer usually stop in Bundi en route and those to Udaipur sometimes stop at Chittaurgarh.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING SUKHDHAM KOTHI CIVIL LINES, www.sukhdhamkothi.com. MARVELLOUSLY ATMOSPHERIC GUESTHOUSE LOCATED IN A ONE-HUNDRED-YEAR-OLD STONE MANSION SET AMID EXTENSIVE GARDENS. THERE ARE FIFTEEN COMFY ROOMS WITH OLD WOODEN FURNITURE AND ASSORTED NINETEENTH-CENTURY BRIC-A-BRAC. BAR AND RESTAURANT ON SITE. ₹₹

Umed Bhawan Palace Palace/Station Rd, Khelri Phatak 0744 232 5262, www.welcomheritagehotels.com. Occupying a huge and rather ugly former royal residence, this fancy hotel offers upmarket comforts – and, yes, a fair bit of chintz – at a reasonable price. ₹₹₹₹

Venus Plaza Station Road 09672982115. Basic but tidy hotel with air-conditioned rooms and attached bathrooms, as well as bunk beds in a mixed dorm makes this the best cheapie option. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹

Sawai Madhopur and around A scruffy, dusty little backwater, Sawai Madhopur wouldn't ordinarily receive any tourist attention at all – but then few scruffy, dusty little backwaters provide such easy access to wild tigers. No Indian nature reserve can guarantee a tiger sighting, but Ranthambore National Park, located just a few kilometres east of town, the odds are probably better than anywhere else: the park is relatively small and the resident tigers are famously unperturbed by humans, hunting in broad daylight and rarely shying away from cameras or jeep-loads of tourists. Combine the big cats' bravado with the park's proximity to the Delhi–Agra–Jaipur 'Golden Triangle', and you'll understand why Sawai Madhopur attracts the number of visitors it does.

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM SAWAI MADHOPUR ALL THE FOLLOWING TRAINS RUN DAILY.

Destination	Name	No.	Departs	Arrives
Ajmer	Dayodai Express	12181	9.20am	1.55pm
Bharatpur	Golden Temple Mail	12903	8.30am	10.58am
Delhi	Raj Express	12953	5.25am	9.43am

Jaipur	Mumbai– Jaipur Express	12955	9.45am	12.00pm
Jodhpur	Ranthambore Express	12465	2.30pm	10.15pm
Kota	Intercity Express	12466	12.45pm	2.05pm
Udaipur	Mewar Express	12963	11.05pm	7.15am

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY TRAIN SAWAI MADHOPUR
SAWAI MADHOPUR IS SERVED BY TRAINS ON THE MAIN MUMBAI–DELHI LINE, AND IS THUS QUITE EASILY ACCESSIBLE. THE STATION IS RIGHT IN THE MIDDLE OF THE NEWER, COMMERCIAL PART OF TOWN.

By bus Buses from Sawai Madhopur are rarely better than the trains, though they usually depart from the Bundi stand, east of the Main Bazaar (near the overpass).

Tourist information The friendly staff in the tourist office (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm), located in the train station, hand out free maps of the town, and can advise on tiger tours.

ACCOMMODATION MOST OF THE AREA’S NUMEROUS HOTELS AND GUESTHOUSES ARE STRUNG OUT ALONG THE 14KM ROAD BETWEEN SAWAI MADHOPUR’S NEW TOWN AND THE NATIONAL PARK. PRICES ARE SIGNIFICANTLY ABOVE AVERAGE, AND GENUINE BUDGET ACCOMMODATION IS ALMOST NON-EXISTENT – HOTELIERS CLAIM THAT THEY ONLY REALLY SEE SIX MONTHS’ BUSINESS EVERY YEAR, AND THEREFORE HAVE TO CHARGE DOUBLE PRICES.

AROUND SAWAI MADHOPUR RAJ PALACE RESORT
RANTHAMBORE RD, JUST OUTSIDE TOWN, ❷
RAJPALACERANTHAMBHORE.COM. ONE OF THE BEST-VALUE PLACES IN RANTHAMBORE, WITH SPACIOUS AND

CLEAN, MODERN A/C ROOMS IN THE MAIN BUILDING AND MORE HOMELY A/C 'COTTAGES' ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE GARDEN, PLUS A POOL AND ELEGANT RESTAURANT. ₹₹₹

Ranthambhore Bagh Ranthambore Rd, 2km from town, 🌐 ranthambhore.com. The upper-floor a/c rooms in this rambling hotel are average, but the twelve fabric-lined fully furnished en-suite tents (all with air-coolers and attached bathrooms) feel wonderfully authentic, and are scattered in a pretty garden; be sure to get one away from the road. ₹₹₹

Ranthambhore Palace Ranthambore Rd, just outside town, 🌐 hotelranthambhorepalace.com. This relatively new high-rise is home to a selection of smart, well-furnished and good-value rooms with a/c, TVs and private modern bathrooms, plus a pleasant roof restaurant. ₹₹

Tiger Haveli Off Ranthambore Rd, 1km from town, 🌐 tigerhaveli.com. The best of the town's cheaper options, well geared to travellers, with helpful service and comfortably furnished rooms (some with a/c). The walk from town is tedious, but thankfully they have a decent on-site restaurant. ₹

★ Vivanta Sawai Madhopur Lodge Ranthambore Rd, just outside town, 🌐 vivantahotels.com. Occupying an atmospheric 1930s hunting lodge, this luxury heritage hotel has bags of charm, with pleasant leafy grounds and accommodation in beautifully appointed colonial-style rooms, plus a pool and attractive restaurant, home to extravagant daily lunch and dinner buffets. ₹₹₹₹

THE ROAD TO RANTHAMBORE AMAN-I-KHÁS SHERPUR VILLAGE, 🌐 AMAN.COM. SITUATED IN A VERY QUIET RURAL SETTING, THIS PLACE RIVALS VANYAVILAS (SEE BELOW) FOR TASTEFUL OPULENCE (AND EVEN OUTDOES IT FOR WALLET-CRUNCHING EXPENSE). ACCOMMODATION IS IN TEN SUPERB, CAVERNOUS A/C LUXURY TENTS, AND THERE'S ALSO A TRADITIONAL STEP-WELL FOR SWIMMING AND A SPA TENT. CLOSED MAY–SEPT. ₹₹₹₹

★ Khem Villas Sherpur village, 🌐 khemvillas.com. Delightful eco-resort set amid ten acres of carefully nurtured wilderness that is home to abundant birdlife and other fauna. Accommodation is a mix of rooms, tents or stylish little cottages with private verandas and open-to-the-sky showers, and there's also home-grown organic vegetarian food and an interesting range of excursions. Full board. ₹₹₹₹

Nahargarh Khilchipur Village, Ranthambore Rd, 2km south of park entrance, www.nahargarh.com. Superbly theatrical-looking hotel, built in the style of an old-fashioned Rajput palace and looking every bit the regal retreat. Rooms are sumptuously decorated in traditional style and there's also a huge pool and licensed bar. ₹₹₹₹

Oberoi Vanyavilas Ranthambore Rd, about 3.5km from town, www.oberoihotels.com. Superbly stylish resort centred around a lavishly decorated restaurant specializing in royal Rajasthani cuisine. Scattered around the rustic grounds are beautifully equipped wooden-floored, hand-embroidered a/c tents with patios, an outdoor pool, lakeside spa and lookout tower. The rack rates are prohibitive, but you'll often get 40% or so off when booking online. ₹₹₹₹

EATING THE AREA HAS FEW STAND-OUT OPTIONS FOR DINING, AND MOST PEOPLE EAT WHERE THEY'RE STAYING.

★Asha's Ranthambore Circle 0746 222 0340. Up on the first floor, this is a local joint for local families, serving absolutely wonderful pure-veg food at low prices. There's a full roster of paneer and veg curries on the menu, but it's hard to look past the thalis – the heavy Rajasthani one is dearest, but perhaps better (and certainly bigger) is the stupendous VIP set. ₹₹

Raj Palace Resort Ranthambore Rd, just outside town, www.rajpalaceranthambhore.com. Of all the hotel restaurants near town, this is the most reliable and easily accessible, with a decent mix of veg and non-veg curries, and snacks served between mealtimes. Licenced. ₹₹

Ranthambore National Park With more than ninety thousand visitors a year, Ranthambore National Park is one of India's most popular national parks, and it can get ridiculously busy throughout the cool winter months, especially around Diwali and New Year. The summer months from April to June are a lot quieter, but obviously very hot. There are currently around seventy adult tigers in the park, plus healthy populations of chital, nilgai, jackals, leopards, jungle cats and a wide array of birds. The original core section of the national park is flanked by buffer zones, designed to provide space for the park's ever-expanding number of young, territory-seeking tigers.

ESSENTIALS RULES ABOUT RANTHAMBORE NATIONAL PARK VISITING RANTHAMBORE CHANGE FREQUENTLY, BUT AT PRESENT THE NUMBER OF VEHICLES ALLOWED INTO THE PARK IS STRICTLY LIMITED TO FIFTEEN SIX-SEATER JEEPS (ALSO KNOWN AS GYPSIES) AND 25 CANTERS (OPEN-TOP BUSES SEATING TWENTY PEOPLE) BEING ALLOWED IN DURING EACH MORNING AND AFTERNOON SESSION.

Tour times 3hr tours run every morning and afternoon; departure times vary slightly through the year, but usually leave 6–7am and 2–3pm. Dress in layers: early mornings can be surprisingly cold.

Prices High-season seats officially cost ₹1249 (₹509) in a canter and ₹1467 (₹727) in a jeep; prices include the park entrance fee, plus obligatory vehicle rental and guide fees; video cameras ₹900.

Booking If you want to book independently, make for the Tiger Reserve Tourist Centre (daily 5.30–6.30am & 12.30–1.30pm) near the Tiger Safari hotel, about 7km along Ranthambore Rd, where you can buy tickets for tours on the day. A much easier option is to book a seat in a jeep or canter through your hotel; it's a good idea to book your safari at the same time you book your room (or even before). You'll pay a surcharge for this, which can be anything from ₹200 for a seat in a canter booked through a cheaper hotel up to ₹2000 for a place in a jeep booked through a top-end establishment. At the time of writing, the otherwise-awful Ankur Resort ( ankurresorts.com), just next to the Raj Palace, was consistently offering cheaper prices than all agencies in town.

CANTER OR GYPSY?

Obviously, most visitors prefer the much smaller and quieter jeeps ('Gypsies'), but demand usually outstrips supply. Your chances of seeing a tiger are roughly the same whether you're in a canter or a jeep because they take the same route, even though travelling by jeep may feel more like a ‘real’ safari. You shouldn’t have any problems getting a seat in a canter if you book the day before (except possibly during weekends between 1 Oct and 15 April, when five to eight canters are block-booked). If you want to go in a jeep it’s best to book ahead, although you might get lucky, especially from around April through to June, when visitor numbers fall significantly. Your chances drop considerably around public holidays.

Zones The park is split into ten zones – five core zones (thought to be best for tiger spotting) and five buffer zones. Zones are randomly allocated upon booking; if you are given the same one twice, you may be able to request a switch, but the final decision lies with the park authorities.

When to visit The core section of Ranthambore is closed annually from July 1 to September 30 with the exception of the four buffer zones, which remain open year-round. The best time to visit is during the dry season (Oct–March), when the lack of water entices the larger animals out to the lakeside. During and immediately after the monsoons they’re more likely to remain in the forest.

Ranthambore Fort Daily 6am–6pm • Best accessed on a tour; the tourist office in the railway station can organise taxi trips for ₹1000, including hotel pick-up and drop-off It’s well worth setting aside some time from the tigers to visit the dramatic Ranthambore Fort, set atop a rocky crag near the entrance to the national park, although in fact, since it’s officially within the core zone, there’s still the chance of spotting a tiger en route. The fort was founded in 944 by the Chauhan Rajputs and, following the decisive defeat of Prithviraj III by Muhammad of Ghor in 1192, became a key strategic focus in Rajput resistance to the expanding power of the Delhi Sultanate.

A few kilometres along the road into the park, a twisting flight of two hundred eroded stone steps leads up through gateways and crumbling fortifications to reach the fort, enclosed by some 7km of walls and bastions that snake around the ridgetop, offering fine views over the surrounding countryside. The numerous remains within the fort include a mosque, a large tank, assorted chhatris and several temples – the one dedicated to Ganesh is particularly revered, and people from all over the country write to the elephant-headed god's shrine here to invite him to their weddings.

Bharatpur and around The walled town of BHARATPUR is just a stone's throw from the border with Uttar Pradesh – a mere 18km from the magnificent abandoned city of Fatehpur Sikri, and also within easy swiping distance of Agra. The town itself has an interesting mix of bazaars, palaces and temples, but the real reason to come here is to visit India's most famous bird sanctuary, the Keoladeo National Park, on the town's southern edge, one of India's – if not the world's – top ornithological destinations.

Other than the moated Lohagarh at the centre of the city, and the aforementioned park, there's not all that much to see in Bharatpur. If you're bored, try tracking down the unusual Ganga Mandir, a large Hindu temple dedicated to the proprietary goddess of India's most sacred river (though the elaborately carved sandstone building looks a bit like a Neoclassical French chateau); the imposing Jama Masjid; or the finely embellished Laxman Mandir, dedicated to the family deity of the maharajas of Bharatpur. All three are somewhat neglected and of little interest, but on the plus side they're an easy walk from each other.

Lohagarh

Museum Tues–Sun noon–8pm • Charge, camera/video camera charge Bharatpur was founded by the Jat king Surajmal, who constructed the virtually impregnable Lohagarh (Iron Fort) at the heart of town in 1732; time and modern development have had little effect on its magnificent 11km-long bastions and immense moat. You're most likely to enter the fort from the south, though it's worth having a look at the impressive Ashtdhatu (or Eight-Metal) Gate, named on account of the number of different metals that apparently went into the making of its extremely solid-looking doors.

The small but impressive fort is home to no less than three large royal palaces in various stages of dereliction, all built by the Jats between 1730 and 1850. The best preserved is the large orange Kamra Khas Mahal, on the west side of the fort, which now serves as the town's recently upgraded museum; the sculptures surrounding the fountain look of decidedly suspicious provenance, but the pretty upstairs level is home to a large collection of weapons, miniature paintings and regal memorabilia.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY TRAIN THE BHARATPUR RAILWAY STATION – ON THE MAIN DELHI–MUMBAI LINE – IS A COUPLE OF KILOMETRES NORTHWEST OF THE TOWN CENTRE, A ₹120 RICKSHAW RIDE FROM KEOLADEO NATIONAL PARK AND THE NEARBY GUESTHOUSES. THERE ARE SEVERAL DAILY TRAINS TO AGRA FORT, INCLUDING THE AGRA FORT SUPERFAST #22987 (DEP. 11.12AM, ARR. 12.30AM); SAWAI MADHOPUR AND KOTA, THE BEST BEING THE GOLDEN TEMPLE MAIL #12904 (DAILY; DEP. 6.15AM, ARR. 8.30AM IN SAWAI MADHOPUR AND 10.20AM IN KOTA); AND JAIPUR, THE BEST OF WHICH IS THE AGRA FORT SUPERFAST #22988 (DEP. 3.40AM, ARR. 6.40AM).

By bus Bharatpur's bus stand is in the west of town. If you're arriving from Fatehpur Sikri you'll save yourself time (and a rickshaw fare) by getting off the bus at the crossroads on the southeast side of town, near the park gates and close to guesthouses. There are services to Jaipur (6 daily; 4hr), Fatehpur Sikri (hourly; 30–45min) and Deeg (hourly; 1hr); for Agra (1hr) buses are frequent, and you may as well just flag down whatever comes along.

By taxi Bharatpur's reputation as a tourist-friendly oasis has made it an attractive base for day-trippers to Agra and the Taj Mahal.

Tourist information The town's tourist office (Mon–Sat 9.30am–6pm; bharatpur.rajasthan.gov.in) is at the crossroads east of the park entrance; around the back is a railway reservations office (Mon–Sat 8am–2pm).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

All the town's best hotels and guesthouses are located near the entrance to Keoladeo National Park, on the southern edge of town and some 3km south of railway station. There's also an option in the park itself.

The Bagh Agra–Achnera Rd, 1km past Laxmi Vilas Palace, thebagh.com. This idyllic upmarket hotel occupies a cluster of pink, low-rise buildings scattered around charbagh-style gardens that are home to more than fifty species of bird. Rooms are cool, spacious and attractively furnished, and there's also a spa and large pool. ₹₹₹

★Birders' Inn Off the highway, near the crossroads, birdersinn.com.

The most inviting place in town, usually full of serious birdwatchers who gather nightly to compare checklists in the pleasant courtyard garden and superb a/c multi-cuisine restaurant (see below). All twenty-four a/c rooms are large, smart and excellent value. Free pick-up. ₹₹₹

★Iora 54 Gauri-Shankar Colony, ioraguesthouse.com. Owned by a friendly amateur photographer, the rooms here (air-cooled, or a/c for an extra ₹200) are a good size and comfortable with en suites. The attached cafe is lined with photography and books, and serves coffee, snacks and simple meals. ₹₹

★Kiran 364 Rajendra Nagar, kiranguesthouse.com. Run by an extremely friendly and helpful pair of brothers (one of whom is a certified naturalist), this place offers eight clean and comfortable fan-cooled, air-cooled and a/c rooms at rock-bottom prices. There's free collection and drop-off from the bus and train stations, plus binoculars for rent. ₹

Laxmi Vilas Palace Agra Rd, laxmivilas.com. Former royal palace, set amid extensive grounds east of town with heated pool and spa including massage room. Reasonably priced a/c rooms complete with four-poster beds and other romantic, regal decorative touches. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

There are few independent restaurants in Bharatpur – most people eat where they're staying.

Birders' Inn Off the highway, near the crossroads, birdersinn.com.

The reliable of the hotel restaurants, with a decent à la carte menu, though when there's a group in you may be tempted to join them at the buffet. ₹₹

Chacha Chicken Chacha Franky Off the highway, near the crossroads

006376138174. You'll rarely see people dining at this extremely simple spot, but locals and highway users stop by to collect take-away with quite some frequency. They've a roster of curries and snacks, but best are the delicious rolls, which come filled with chicken, egg, veg or paneer. ₹

Keoladeo National Park Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge, guides/ video camera charge Keoladeo National Park is India's premier birdwatching sanctuary – an avian wonderland that attracts vast numbers of feathered creatures thanks to its strategic location, protected status and extensive wetlands. Some 385 species have been recorded here, including around two hundred year-round residents along with 190-odd migratory species from as far afield as Tibet, China, Siberia and even Europe, who fly south to escape the northern winter. Keoladeo is probably best known for its stupendous array of aquatic birds, which descend en masse on the park's wetlands following the dramatic arrival of the monsoon in July. These include the majestic saras crane and a staggering two thousand painted storks, as well as snake-necked darters, spoonbills, white ibis and grey pelican. There are also various mammals in the park, including wild boar, mongoose, antelope, jackal, jungle cat, chital, nilgai and sambar.

The best time to visit is following the monsoon (roughly Oct–March), when the weather is dry but the lakes are still full and the migratory birds in residence (although mists in December and January can hinder serious birdwatching). Most people chose to tour the park on a rickshaw, though cycling is advisable – the rickshaws are limited to one road going straight up and straight down, but on a bike you'll be away from people in no time, if you so desire, and you'll most likely surprise plenty of deer.

GETTING AROUND AND INFORMATION THE PARK ENTRANCE IS AROUND 4KM SOUTH OF KEOLADEO NATIONAL PARK BHARATPUR RAILWAY STATION, AND WITHIN WALKING DISTANCE OF MOST OF THE ACCOMMODATION LISTED IN BHARATPUR. A SINGLE ROAD PASSES THROUGH THE PARK, WHILE NUMEROUS SMALL PATHS CUT AROUND LAKES AND ACROSS MARSHES AND PROVIDE EXCELLENT COVER FOR BIRDWATCHING.

By rickshaw or van You can hire a cycle rickshaw; drivers are trained by the park authorities, and very clued up.

By bicycle Although you can stroll through the park on foot, the best way to get around and cover more ground is by bicycle, available at the main entrance.

By boat During the winter, gondola-style boats offer short rides across the wetlands, assuming there's enough water.

Binoculars If you hire a guide, they'll probably have binoculars for you to borrow; if you choose to go it alone, try asking at your accommodation.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING OTHER THAN THE BHARATPUR FOREST LODGE, THERE AREN'T ANY PLACES FOR MEALS IN THE PARK, THOUGH THERE ARE REFRESHMENT KIOSKS AT THE BEGINNING AND END OF THE PARK ROAD – WHETHER THEY'LL BE OPEN WHEN YOU PASS BY IS A DIFFERENT MATTER.

Bharatpur Forest Lodge 1km inside park ☎92127 77223. In a pleasantly sylvan setting inside the park (note that you'll have to pay one day's park entrance fee for every night you stay here), this very sleepy hotel has fourteen spacious and comfortable, old-fashioned rooms with balconies overlooking the sanctuary, a pleasant garden out the back and a passable restaurant (mealtimes only). Relatively expensive, but the setting is pretty much unbeatable. ₹₹₹

Deeg

Served by bus from Bharatpur (every 30min; 1hr) and Alwar (hourly; 1hr) Some 30km northwest of Bharatpur, the dusty little market town of DEEG is the unlikely home of one of eastern Rajasthan's most lavish palaces, a fascinating blend of Mughal and Hindu architectural styles constructed by the local Jat overlords in the mid-eighteenth century.

Deeg is easily visited as a day-trip from Bharatpur or Alwar, or en route between the two. There's nowhere particularly good to stay.

Jal Mahal

Sat–Thu 9am–5pm • Charge

Deeg's extensive Jal Mahal comprises a large number of finely carved buildings, scattered around extensive charbagh-style gardens dotted with thirty-odd water jets – though sadly the water channels are usually dry, and the fountains are only switched on during local festivals.

As you enter the palace, the first and largest of the various bhawans, the Gopal Bhawan, lies immediately ahead, a spacious and plushly furnished hall that originally served as Surajmal's summer residence. Behind it lies the first of the palace's two large tanks, the Gopal Sagar. On the opposite side of the gardens lies the ornate Kesav Bhawan, or 'Monsoon Palace', a richly carved, open-sided pavilion surrounded by a deep-water channel dotted with hundreds of tiny fountains. This unusual structure was designed to re-create the cool ambience of the rainy season, with water released from rooftop pipes to imitate a shower of monsoon rain, while metal balls were agitated by further streams of pressurized water to simulate the sound of thunder. Immediately behind here is the second of the palace's tanks, its stepped ghats usually covered in washing laid out by local housewives, while beyond rise the enormous walls of the town's huge fort.

< Back to Rajasthan

iStock
THE MAGNIFICENT TAJ MAHAL

Uttar Pradesh

Braj

Agra

Fatehpur Sikri

Jhansi

Lucknow

Prayagraj (Allahabad) and around

Varanasi

Sarnath

Gorakhpur

Kushinagar

Uttar Pradesh Uttar Pradesh, “the Northern State” – formerly the United Provinces, but always UP – is the heartland of Hinduism and Hindi, dominating the nation in culture, religion, language and politics. A vast, steamy plain of the Ganges, it boasts a history that’s very much the history of India, and its temples and monuments – Buddhist, Hindu and Muslim – are among the most impressive in the country.

Western UP, which adjoins Delhi, has always been close to India’s centre of power. Its main city, Agra, once the Mughal capital, is home to the Taj Mahal, and a short hop from the abandoned Mughal city of Fatehpur Sikri. Central UP constituted the Kingdom of Avadh, the last centre of independent Muslim rule in northern India until the British unceremoniously took it over, fuelling the resentment that led to the 1857 uprising, in which its capital Lucknow (now UP’s state capital) played such a celebrated role.

In eastern UP lies Hinduism’s holiest city, the tirtha (crossing-place) of Varanasi, where it’s believed death transports the soul to final liberation. Sacred since antiquity, it was frequented by Mahavira, the founder of Jainism, and also by Buddha, who preached his first sermon in nearby Sarnath.

Although UP was once a thriving centre of Islamic jurisprudence and culture, many Muslims departed during the years after Independence, and the Muslim population now comprises just eighteen percent.

Braj

The holy land of BRAJ, in the southwestern corner of the Gangetic valley, is the mythological land where Krishna – Vishnu's eighth earthly incarnation and a major character in the Mahabharata epic – spent his idyllic childhood. Early texts on Braj mention his birthplace Mathura, the forest tract of Vrindavan and the Yamuna River. In the sixteenth century, Krishna devotees “rediscovered” the geographical features and boundaries of the holy area.

Braj became, and remains, one of the most important pilgrimage centres for Krishna devotees, who tour, on foot, the twelve forests where he is supposed to have played. This great circular pilgrimage, known as the Ban Yatra (forest pilgrimage), can take several weeks. Less energetic or devout visitors just explore the major sites by bus.

Mathura

MATHURA, on the banks of the Yamuna River, 141km south of Delhi and 58km northwest of Agra, is celebrated as the place where Krishna was born. Hindu mythology claims that it was founded by Shatrugna, the youngest brother of Ramayana hero and earlier Vishnu avatar Rama, while Mathura's earliest historical records date back around 2500 years. The city reached an early peak under the Indo-Bactrian Kushan people, whose greatest ruler Kanishka came to power in 78 AD. Its prosperity attracted such adventurers as the Afghan Mahmud of Ghazni, Delhi sultan Sikandar Lodi and Mughal emperor Aurangzeb. The city's central landmark is the sandstone Holi Gate, at the junction of Agra Road, Chatta Bazar and Kotwali Road, with the old city to its north and the modern town to its south and west.

BEST TIME TO VISIT THE BEST TIME TO VISIT UP IS OCTOBER, JUST AFTER THE MONSOON, WHEN THE CLIMATE IS FRESH AND PLEASANTLY WARM. BY THE END OF NOVEMBER, IT'S GETTING CHILLY AT NIGHT, AND QUITE COLD IN DECEMBER AND JANUARY, WHEN FOG MAY CAUSE TRAIN DELAYS. BY MID-JANUARY IT STARTS TO WARM UP, AND BY APRIL IT CAN BE UNCOMFORTABLY HOT, WITH DUSTY DRY WINDS. THE ARRIVAL OF THE MONSOON IN JUNE BREAKS THE HEAT BUT CAN ITSELF IMPEDE TRAVEL AND OTHER ACTIVITIES, WITH THE POSSIBILITY OF FLOODING.

iStock

ON THE BANKS OF THE GANGES IN VARANASI HIGHLIGHTS

- ① Taj Mahal One of the world's most beautiful buildings, and India's top tourist sight, marking the zenith and perfection of Mughal architecture, never fails to impress.
- ② Akbar's mausoleum, Sikandra The great Mughal's tomb looks just as it does in old miniatures, with tame monkeys and deer wandering in its ornamental gardens.
- ③ Fatehpur Sikri An awesomely grand, deserted palace complex in what was once the imperial capital of Mughal India, straddling an arid ridge near the Rajasthan border.
- ④ Kalinjar Fort In the dusty badlands on the southern edge of the state, and well off the usual tourist trail, this remote fort well repays the effort of getting to it.
- ⑤ Varanasi Take a boat on the Ganges before dawn to watch the sun rise over India's most ancient and sacred city.
- ⑥ Sarnath Evocative ruins on the site where the Buddha gave his first sermon.

HIGHLIGHTS ARE MARKED ON THE MAP

Vishram Ghat Off Chatta Bazar

Mathura's riverfront is minute compared with Varanasi's. Each ghat has its temple, with shops selling Krishna dolls, outfits to dress them in, and other devotional paraphernalia. The most important of them is Vishram Ghat, the 'ghat of rest', where Krishna is said to have recuperated after slaying his evil uncle Kamsa. Pilgrims performing a parikrama (round of the city's religious sites) start with a dip here. Shoes must be removed before entering the temple complex or visiting the ghat, no matter how muddy it is. Boats are on hand for river excursions.

FESTIVALS IN UTTAR PRADESH MAGH MELA (JAN/FEB). BATHING FESTIVAL HELD IN PRAYAGRAJ (FORMERLY ALLAHABAD) EVERY YEAR IN JANUARY. THE PERIPATETIC, TRIENNIAL KUMBH MELA TOOK PLACE IN JANUARY 2022 AND WILL BE CELEBRATED AGAIN IN 2025. THIS IS ALSO THE YEAR OF MAHA KUMBH WHICH IS CELEBRATED EVER TWELVE YEARS.

Taj Mahotsav (Feb). Cultural festival put on by the tourist board in Agra's Shipgram craft market to showcase UP handicrafts.

Ramayan Mela (Feb/March). Celebration of the events in the Ramayana epic, held in Chitrakoot.

Dhrupad Mela (Feb/March). Classical music festival in Varanasi, centred on Tulsi Ghat.

Urs (May–June). Celebration of the life of the sufi saint Sheikh Salim Chisti, held in the Muslim month of Ramadan at Fatehpur Sikri's Jama Masjid.

Muharram (Aug/Sept). Lucknow sees particularly big processions to celebrate the Islamic new year.

Ganga Mahotsav (Oct/Nov). Celebration in Varanasi with candles lit along the ghats to pay homage to the River Ganges, held two weeks after Diwali, which is itself a major celebration in Varanasi.

Ganga Dussehra (May/June). A ten-day Hindu festival celebrates the descent of the Ganges. To free yourself from sins and cure any ailment, you can take a reverential bath in Ganga and make donations. Kite flying events and luscious Dasherri mango treats keep you engaged throughout.

At the southern end of the ghat, Sati Burj is a three-storey sandstone tower decorated with carvings of birds and animals. It was commissioned in 1570 by Raja Bhagwan Das of Jaipur to honour his mother for committing sati (throwing herself onto her husband's funeral pyre), as good widows of the warrior class were supposed to do.

Dwarkadhish Temple Chatta Bazar • Daily: summer 6.30–11am & 4–7.30pm; winter 6.30–11am & 3.30–7pm • Free Just north of the entrance to Vishram Ghat, the gaily painted Dwarkadhish Temple is dedicated to Krishna, under his aka of Dwarkadish ("King of Dwarka"). Mathura's most popular shrine, it is regularly packed out with devotees. The temple was commissioned by the treasurer of the state of Gwalior, one Seth Gokuldas Parikh, and dates from 1815.

Jama Masjid Mandi Ramdas Rd at Chowk Bazar • Daily dawn (just before 1st prayer) to nightfall (after last prayer) • Free On a plinth raised above street level in the middle of a bustling bazaar, Mathura's Jama Masjid (congregational mosque) was commissioned by Aurangzeb's local governor, Abd ul-Nabi Khan in 1662. It's long since lost its original glazed tiles, but still has its four original minarets and assorted outer pavilions. In front of the mosque is a picturesque little vegetable market.

Shri Krishna Janmasthan Mathura–Vrindavan Rd • Daily: summer 5.30am–noon & 4–9.30pm; winter 6am–noon & 3–8.30pm • Free • No entry with phone or camera (these can be checked in at the cloakroom outside) • shrikrishnajanmasthan.net

Pretty much slap-bang in the centre of town, the Shri Krishna Janmasthan or Janmabhoomi complex, marks the birthplace of Krishna. Although the shops and shrines combine to produce a park-like atmosphere, nothing obscures the strong military presence – a reminder of underlying Hindu–Muslim tensions.

On entering the complex, you'll see a little grotto to your left, where you wander through and admire the slightly kitsch 3D tableaux illustrating the life of Krishna. In the Kesava Deo Temple, devotees and pilgrims pray to the image of Krishna. The temple was endowed by the Birla family of industrialists in 1965, the original having been razed on the orders of Aurangzeb in 1661 to build the neighbouring mosque. After Ayodha, it therefore became an obvious potential target for sectarian troublemakers – hence the heavy military presence.

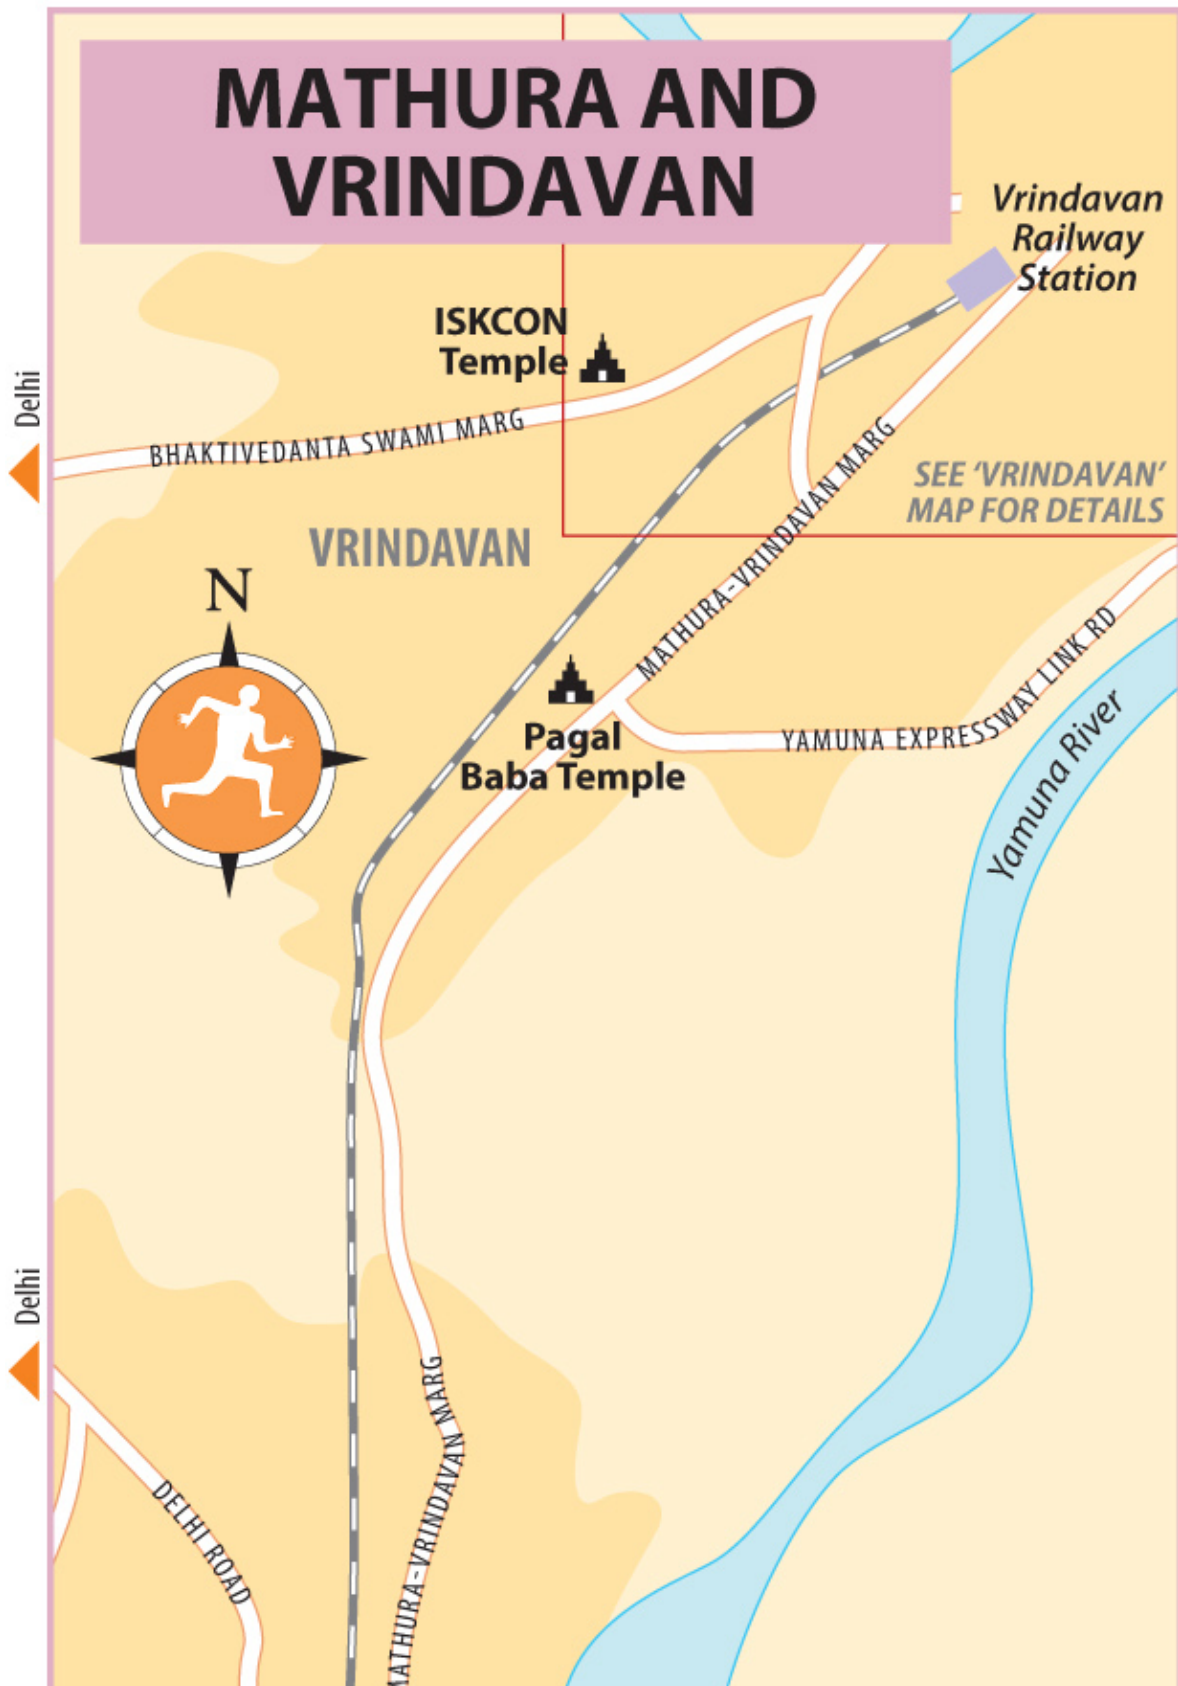

Krishna's birthplace itself, known as the Janmasthan, is directly behind the mosque. In a low stone building, a cage-like surround signifies that Krishna was born in captivity, when his parents were prisoners of the tyrant King Kamsa. A stone slab marks the exact spot where he is thought to have been born.

Katra Masjid, the impressive mosque built on Aurangzeb's orders on the ruins of the original Kesava Deo Temple (which was itself built on the ruins of a Buddhist monastery), stands surrounded by barbed wire and watchtowers, its entrance to the west accessed from Mathura Road across a rail line. For the time being it remains closed to casual visitors, but if you want to try your luck, leave your phone, camera and any bags at the temple cloakroom, and bring your passport along; even then, it's unlikely the military will let you in as a tourist without a good reason.

Southwest of the temple complex the impressive, stepped sandstone tank of Potara Kund is believed to have been used to wash Krishna's baby clothes.

MATHURA AND VRINDAVAN

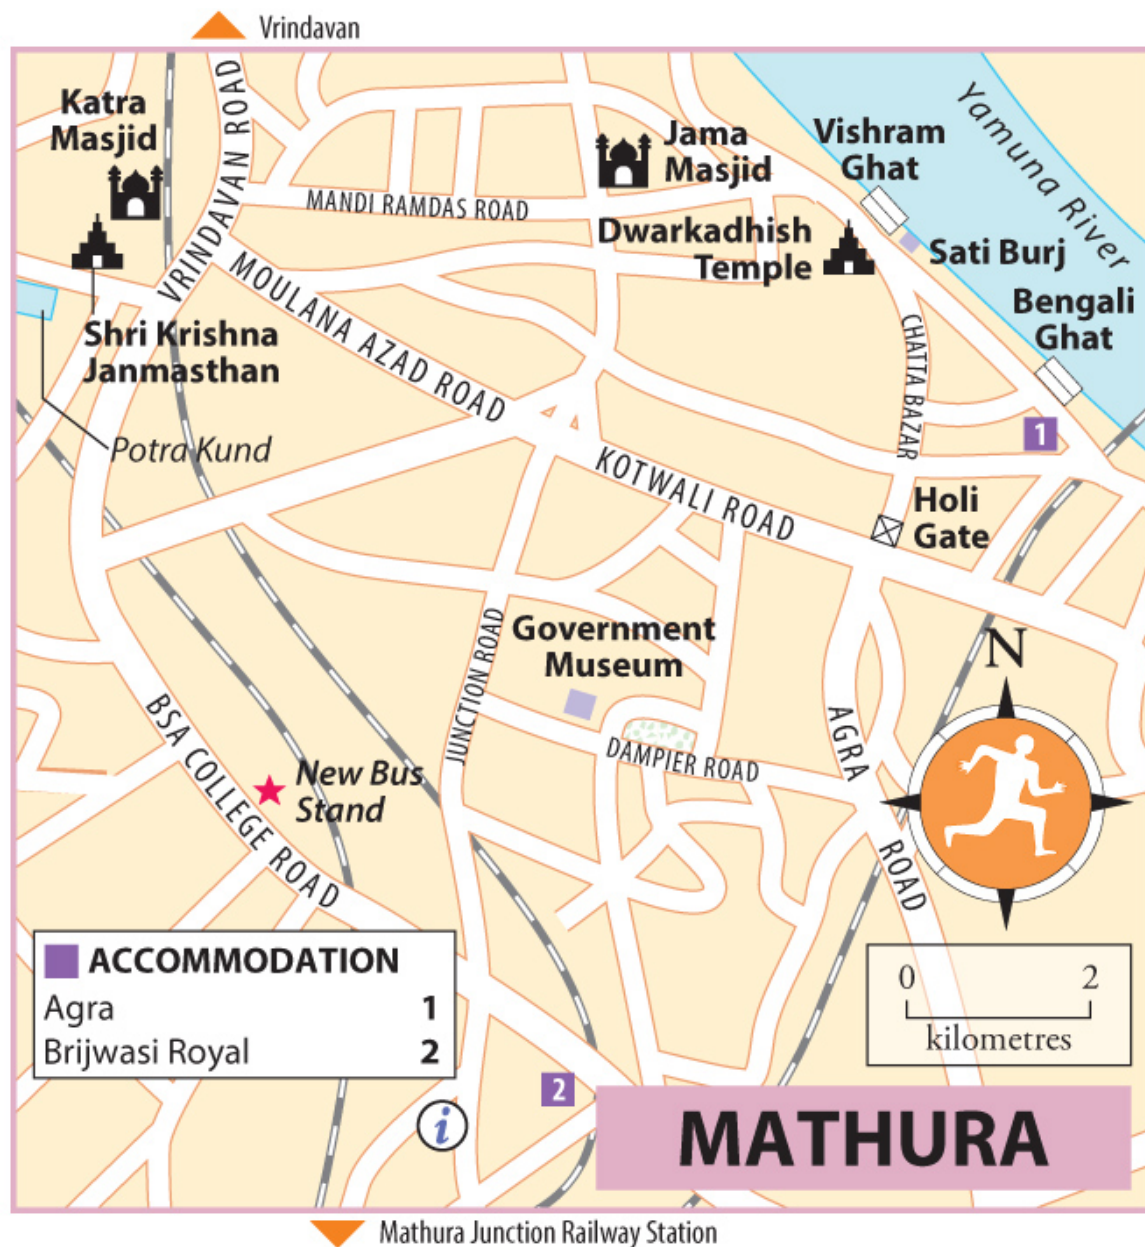

Government Museum Dampier Park • Tues–Sun 10.30am–4.30pm •
Charge Close to the centre of Mathura in Dampier Park, the Government Museum places a particular emphasis on local Buddhist and Jain sculpture dating from the Kushan (first–third centuries AD) and Gupta periods (fourth–sixth centuries), known collectively as the Mathura School. The sculptures are typically hewn from spotted red sandstone and reflect the assimilation of early prehistoric religious cults within the successive Jain, Buddhist and Hindu pantheons. The museum’s highlight, one of the finest examples of Gupta art, is a miraculously intact standing Buddha with a beautifully benign expression, an ornate halo and delicate fluted robes, making the Abhaya mudra (fearless) hand gesture. This and a seated Buddha, also in the museum, are thought to have been created by a monk named Dinna around 434 AD. Kushana art on display includes a headless image of King Kanishka in a central Asian tunic and boots, and some exquisite railings carved with floral motifs and human figures.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY TRAIN THE MATHURA CITY'S MAIN RAIL STATION, MATHURA JUNCTION, LOCATED 3KM SOUTH OF THE CENTRE, IS SERVED BY ALL TRAINS PLYING THE ROUTE BETWEEN DELHI AND AGRA.

By bus The New Bus Stand, a kilometre south of the centre on BSA College Road, has buses every half-hour to Delhi, Agra and Vrindavan (15min), and across the street you'll find shared autos and tempos to Vrindivan, the same as the bus fare (auto-walas wanting you to hire them by yourself will obviously be keen to disguise this fact from you).

Information The tourist office, in UP Tourism's Rahi Hotel on Railway Station Road (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm; ☎0565 250 5351) provides good maps of Mathura and Vrindavan.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Agra Bengali Ghat ☎05652408689. Modest little hotel, overlooking the river in the old city and redolent of the atmosphere of the ghats. The best rooms are upstairs at the front. ₹₹

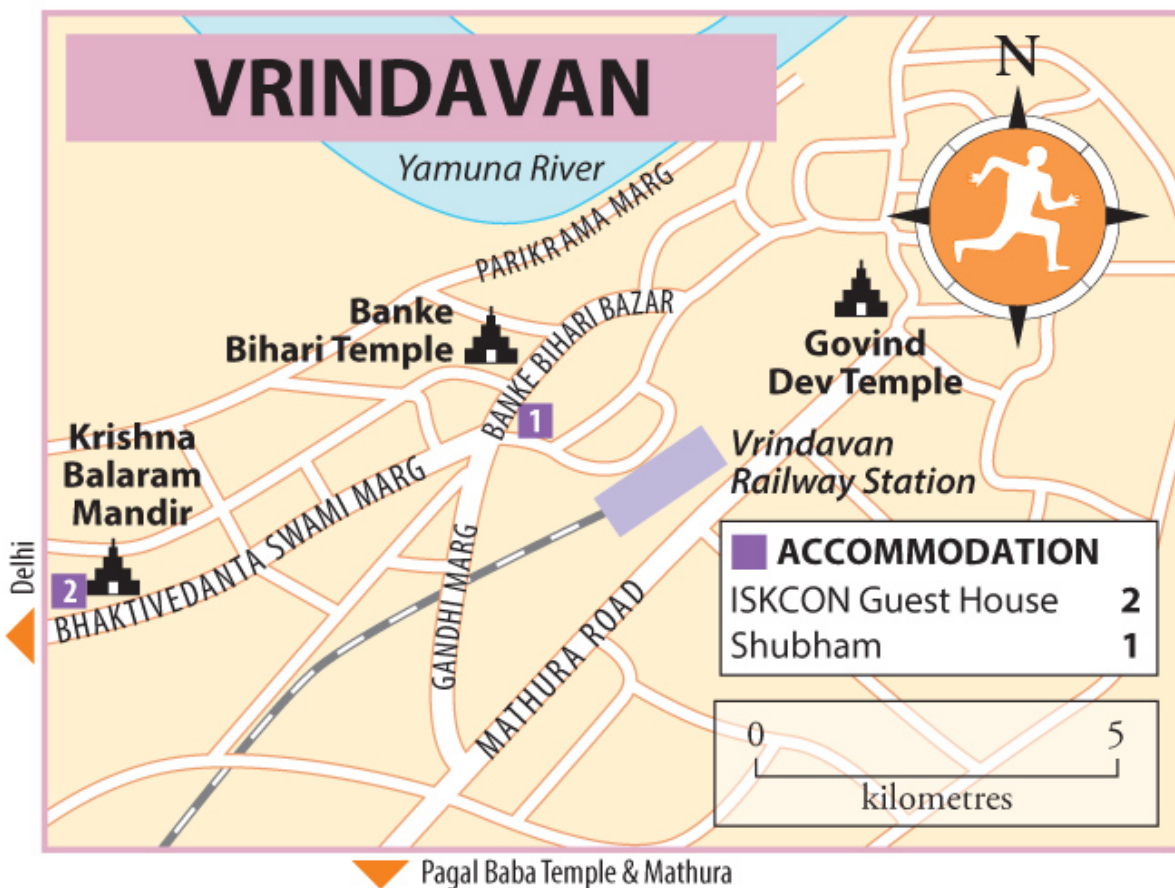

Brijwasi Royal SBI Crossing, Station Rd, ☎brijwasihotels.com. Modern hotel with well-appointed rooms, all with a/c and TV, plus a bar, a multicuisine veg restaurant and 24hr room service. ₹₹₹

Vrindavan

VRINDAVAN, a dusty little town full of religious devotees, 11km north of Mathura, attracts half a million pilgrims every year, mostly during the spring Holi festival, which lasts for up to a month here, and during the two months of celebrations for the birthdays of Krishna and his consort Radha, starting in August. Although Vrindavan is in theory a tirtha or holy crossing place on the Yamuna, the town has in fact been progressively abandoned by the river, as it meanders away from the original two-kilometre-long waterfront – all but five of its 38 ghats are now without water. Neither is there much trace of the forests of the Krishna legend, and only a few sacred basil groves remain at the spot where he famously cavorted with a group of gopis (cowgirls), dancing miraculously with all of them at the same time so that each thought she was his partner. As a tirtha, Vrindavan attracts elderly Vaishnavites who believe that to die here earns them instant moksha (nirvana). Along with its many dharamshalas, Vrindavan holds several “widow houses”, maintained by wealthy devotees, which provide food and shelter for widows, of whom two thousand congregate twice daily in the Mirabai Ashram to sing bhajans (devotional songs).

Govind Dev Temple Mathura Rd • Daily: summer 7am–noon & 3–8pm; winter 7.30am–12.30pm & 3.30–8.30pm • Free • govinddevji.net

At the northern end of the Mathura–Vrindavan road, the Govind Dev Temple, erected in 1590 and known locally as “Govindji”, was commissioned by Akbar's general Man Singh I, the Raja of Amber, and has quite a Rajasthani look about it. Built from the red sandstone so beloved of the Mughals, and dedicated to Govind Dev (another name for Krishna), it incorporates Hindu, Muslim and even European elements in its design. The stalactite-like embellishments give its facade a drippy, melting kind of feel. Within, it seems almost derelict: monkeys roam about at will, bats twitter in the ceiling, and it's rarely used devotionally. Originally seven stories high, Akbar's pious great-grandson Aurangzeb had the top floors dismantled as he didn't want it to be taller than any mosque. This act of bigoted vandalism has left it looking rather truncated, but it's still a beautiful building, and Vrindavan's most impressive temple by far.

Banke Bihari Temple Banke Bihari Path (off Banke Bihari Bazar) • Daily: summer 7.45am–noon & 5.30–9.30pm; winter 8.45am–1pm & 4.30–8.30pm • Free • www.bankeybihari.info

The Banke Bihari Temple, in the centre of town, is Vrindavan’s most popular shrine, renowned for its impressive floral decorations. Its main deity, known as Bihariji, is a black image of Krishna, apparently missing his flute. It is said to have materialized miraculously to the sixteenth-century poet, musician and guru Swami Haridas (at Nidhivan, just north of the Govind Dev Temple), but this temple wasn’t built for it until 1864. A curtain in front of the image is opened and closed every few minutes because it is believed that looking at it for too long uninterrupted will make you lose consciousness.

Krishna Balaram Mandir Bhaktivedanta Swami Marg, 1km west of the town centre • Daily: summer 4.10am–12.45pm & 4.30–8.45pm; winter 4.10am–12.45pm & 4–8.15pm • Free • www.iskconvrindavan.com

The Krishna Balaram Mandir is the lavish temple complex of the International Society of Krishna Consciousness (ISKCON, commonly known as the Hare Krishnas). Built in Bengal Renaissance style with bright frescoes depicting episodes from Krishna's life, the complex incorporates a marble mausoleum in honour of the society's founder, Swami Prabhupada, who died in 1977. The image in the main temple is of Krishna and his brother Balaram, who are of course honoured with a lot of "hare" chanting, but do remain slightly on your guard here, as it's a favourite spot for pickpockets (and you don't need a guide, so don't be persuaded otherwise). Should you want further information about the ISKCON movement, plenty of books and pamphlets are available in numerous languages. There's also a restaurant and a guesthouse (see opposite).

Pagal Baba Temple Mathura Road • Tableaux daily 7am–noon & 3–8pm • Charge South of town, the ten-storey white Pagal Baba Temple is mostly of interest for its puppet tableaux of scenes from the Mahabharata and the Ramayana, complete with moving parts and sound effects. The explanations are in Hindi only, so non-Hindi speakers can only guess at what they represent, although you'll know a lot of them if you're at all familiar with the two great epics. The tableaux teeter somewhere on the edge of being cute or just ridiculous, and some of them are even quite gruesome, but they're certainly worth the entrance fee.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN VRINDAVAN VRINDAVAN HAS A STATION (HIDDEN AWAY IN THE CENTRE OF TOWN, BETWEEN BHAKTIVEDANTA SWAMI MARG AND THE MATHURA ROAD), AND YOU CAN MAKE COMPUTER BOOKINGS THERE, BUT IT IS NOT CURRENTLY SERVED BY ANY TRAINS.

By bus Buses, shared tempos and jeeps run out to Vrindavan from Mathura for Rs20 per head one-way.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

ISKCON Guest House Krishna Balaram Temple Complex, Bhaktivedanta Swami Marg; Wiskonvrindavan.com. Simple but

spotlessly clean rooms in the guesthouse attached to the Krishna Balaram Temple (it's behind the temple and part of the complex, but there's a side door for 24hr access). They ask that you make reservations between 11am and 5pm, and it's a good idea to reserve ahead as it's often full. The restaurant serves decent veg meals, although they tone down the spices for the benefit of their largely Western devotees. No wi-fi. ₹

Shubham Bhaktivedanta Swami Marg, just east of Vidyapeeth Crossing ☎9105503000 📧info@shuibhamhotels.in. A reasonable and very central hotel, with two slightly posher branches (Shubham Holiday and Shubham Majesty) just a stone's throw away. The lobby reeks of incense but the rooms are fresh and bright, although none of the hotel's branches have wi-fi. ₹₹

Agra

The splendour of AGRA – India's capital under the Mughals – remains undiminished, from the massive fort to the magnificent Taj Mahal. Along with Delhi, 204km northwest, and Jaipur in Rajasthan, Agra is the third apex of the “Golden Triangle”, India's most popular tourist itinerary. Although it's possible to see Agra on a day-trip from Delhi, the Taj alone deserves so much more – a fleeting visit would miss the subtleties of its many moods, as the light changes from sunrise to sunset – while the city's other sights and Fatehpur Sikri can easily fill several days.

Most of the city's major Mughal monuments, including the Taj Mahal, are lined up along the banks of the Yamuna River, which bounds the city's eastern edge. They date from the later phase of Mughal rule and the reigns of Akbar, Jahangir and Shah Jahan – exemplifying the ever-increasing extravagance which, by Shah Jahan's time, had already begun to strain the imperial coffers and sow the seeds of political and military decline.

Brief history Agra remained a minor administrative centre until 1504, when the Delhi sultan, Sikandar Lodi, moved his capital here to keep a check on the warring factions of his empire. The ruins of his city can still be seen on the Yamuna River's east bank. After defeating the last Lodi sultan, Ibrahim Lodi, at Panipat in 1526, Babur, the founder of the Mughal empire, sent ahead his son Humayun to capture Agra.

The city saw its heyday under Humayun's son, Akbar the Great (1556–1605), when Agra Fort was built, and it remained the empire's capital for more than a century. Even when Shah Jahan, Jahangir's son and successor, built a new city in Delhi – Shahjahanabad, now known as Old Delhi – his heart remained in Agra. He pulled down many of the earlier red-sandstone structures in the fort, replacing them with his trademark – exquisite marble buildings. The empire flourished under Shah Jahan's successor Aurangzeb (1658–1707), although his intolerance towards non-Muslims stirred up a hornets' nest and fatally fractured the empire. Agra was then occupied successively by the Jats, the Marathas and eventually the British.

The Taj Mahal Described by Bengali poet Rabindranath Tagore as “a teardrop on the face of eternity”, the Taj Mahal is undoubtedly the zenith of Mughal architecture. Volumes have been written on its perfection, and its image adorns countless glossy brochures and guidebooks; nonetheless, the reality never fails to overwhelm all who see it, and few words can do it justice.

AGRA ORIENTATION CLUSTERED AROUND THE TAJ, THE TANGLED LITTLE STREETS OF TAJ GANJ ARE HOME TO MOST OF THE CITY'S CHEAP ACCOMMODATION AND BACKPACKER CAFÉS. A COUPLE OF KILOMETRES TO THE WEST, ON THE FAR SIDE OF THE LEAFY CANTONMENT AREA, LIES SADAR BAZAAR, LINKED TO TAJ GANJ BY FATEHABAD ROAD, WHERE YOU'LL FIND MANY OF THE CITY'S SMARTER PLACES TO STAY, AS WELL AS NUMEROUS RESTAURANTS AND CRAFTS EMPORIUMS. NORTHWEST OF TAJ GANJ LIES AGRA FORT AND, BEYOND, THE THIRD OF THE CITY'S

MAIN COMMERCIAL DISTRICTS, KINARI BAZAAR, CENTRED ON THE MASSIVE JAMA MASJID.

The magic of the monument is strangely undiminished by the crowds of tourists who visit, as small and insignificant as ants in the face of the immense mausoleum. That said, the Taj is at its most alluring in the relative quiet of early morning, shrouded in mist and bathed with a soft red glow. As its vast marble surfaces fall into shadow or reflect the sun, its colour changes from soft grey and yellow to pearly cream and dazzling white. This play of light is an important decorative device, symbolically implying the presence of Allah, who is never represented in physical form. To really appreciate it fully however, you'd have to stick around from dawn until dusk.

Overlooking an increasingly polluted tract of the Yamuna River, the Taj Mahal stands at the northern end of a vast walled garden. Though its layout follows a distinctly Islamic theme, representing Paradise, it is above all a monument to romantic love. Shah Jahan built the Taj to enshrine the body of his favourite wife, Arjumand Bann Begum, better known by her official palace title, Mumtaz Mahal ("Chosen One of the Palace"), who died shortly after giving birth to her fourteenth child in 1631 – the number of children she bore the emperor is itself a tribute to her hold on him, given the number of other wives and concubines that the emperor would have been able to call on. The emperor was devastated by her death, and set out to create an unsurpassed monument to her memory – its name, "Taj Mahal", is simply a shortened, informal version of Mumtaz Mahal's palace title. Construction by a workforce of some twenty thousand men from all over Asia commenced in 1632 and took more than twenty years, not being completed until 1653. Marble was brought from Makrana, near Ajmer in Rajasthan, and semiprecious stones for decoration – onyx, amethyst, lapis lazuli, turquoise, jade, crystal, coral and mother-of-pearl – were carried to Agra from Persia, Russia, Afghanistan, Tibet, China and the Indian Ocean. Eventually, Shah Jahan's pious and intolerant son Aurangzeb seized power, and the former emperor was interned in Agra Fort, where, as legend would have it, he lived out his final years gazing wistfully at the Taj Mahal. When he died in January 1666, his body was carried across the river to lie alongside his beloved wife in his peerless tomb.

THE TAJ MAHAL: A MONUMENT UNDER THREAT
DESPITE THE SEEMINGLY IMPREGNABLE SENSE OF SERENITY AND OTHER-WORLDLINESS WHICH

CLINGS TO THE TAJ, IN REALITY, INDIA'S MOST FAMOUS BUILDING FACES SERIOUS THREATS FROM TRAFFIC AND INDUSTRIAL POLLUTION, AND FROM THE MILLIONS OF TOURISTS WHO VISIT EACH YEAR. MARBLE IS ALL BUT IMPERVIOUS TO THE ONSLAUGHT OF WIND AND RAIN THAT ERODES SOFTER SANDSTONE, BUT IT HAS NO NATURAL DEFENCE AGAINST THE SULPHUR DIOXIDE THAT LINGERS IN A DUSTY HAZE AND SHROUDS THE MONUMENT. SOMETIMES THE SMOG IS SO DENSE THAT THE TOMB CANNOT BE SEEN FROM THE FORT. SULPHUR DIOXIDE IS ONLY ONE PART OF THE PROBLEM: MIXING WITH ATMOSPHERIC MOISTURE, IT SETTLES AS SULPHURIC ACID ON THE SURFACE OF THE TOMB, MAKING THE SMOOTH WHITE MARBLE YELLOW AND FLAKY, AND FORMING A SUBTLE FUNGUS THAT EXPERTS HAVE NAMED "MARBLE CANCER". ON TOP OF THAT, INCREASING POLLUTION LEVELS IN THE YAMUNA RIVER ARE KILLING FISH, AND HELPING BREED SWARMS OF INSECTS, WHOSE DROPPINGS CONTRIBUTE TO DISCOLOURING THE TAJ. THE RIVER'S LOW LEVEL ALSO THREATENS THE TAJ'S WOODEN FOUNDATIONS, WHICH NEED CONSTANT IRRIGATION TO AVOID DRYING UP AND EVENTUALLY COLLAPSING.

The main sources of pollution are the continuous flow of vehicles along the national highways that skirt the city, and the seventeen hundred factories in and around Agra – chemical effluents belched out from their chimneys are well beyond recommended safety limits. Despite laws demanding the installation of pollution-control devices, the imposition of a ban on all petrol- and diesel-fuelled traffic within 500m of the Taj Mahal, and an exclusion zone banning new industrial plants from an area of 10,400 square kilometres around the complex, pollutants in the atmosphere have continued to rise.

Cleaning work on the Taj Mahal rectifies the problem to some extent, but the chemicals used will themselves eventually affect the marble – attendants already shine their torches on “repaired” sections of marble to demonstrate how they’ve lost their translucency. In November 2018, a BBC News feature reported that treating the Taj with a non-corrosive clay pack – something like a building-sized face-pack – to remove particle deposits from the marble makes the monument's surface rougher and more vulnerable to the dust storms that, thanks to climate change, sweep over Agra with an increasingly alarming frequency.

In a bid to save the Taj by reducing human impact, the Archaeology Survey of India introduced an additional ₹200 ticket cost on 10 December 2018. The extra cost applies to those accessing the main mausoleum; a three-hour limit to each entry was also set, along with a maximum quota of 4,000 tourists per day. Despite these efforts, the Taj's decade-long exposure to pollutants has yet to find a permanent solution.

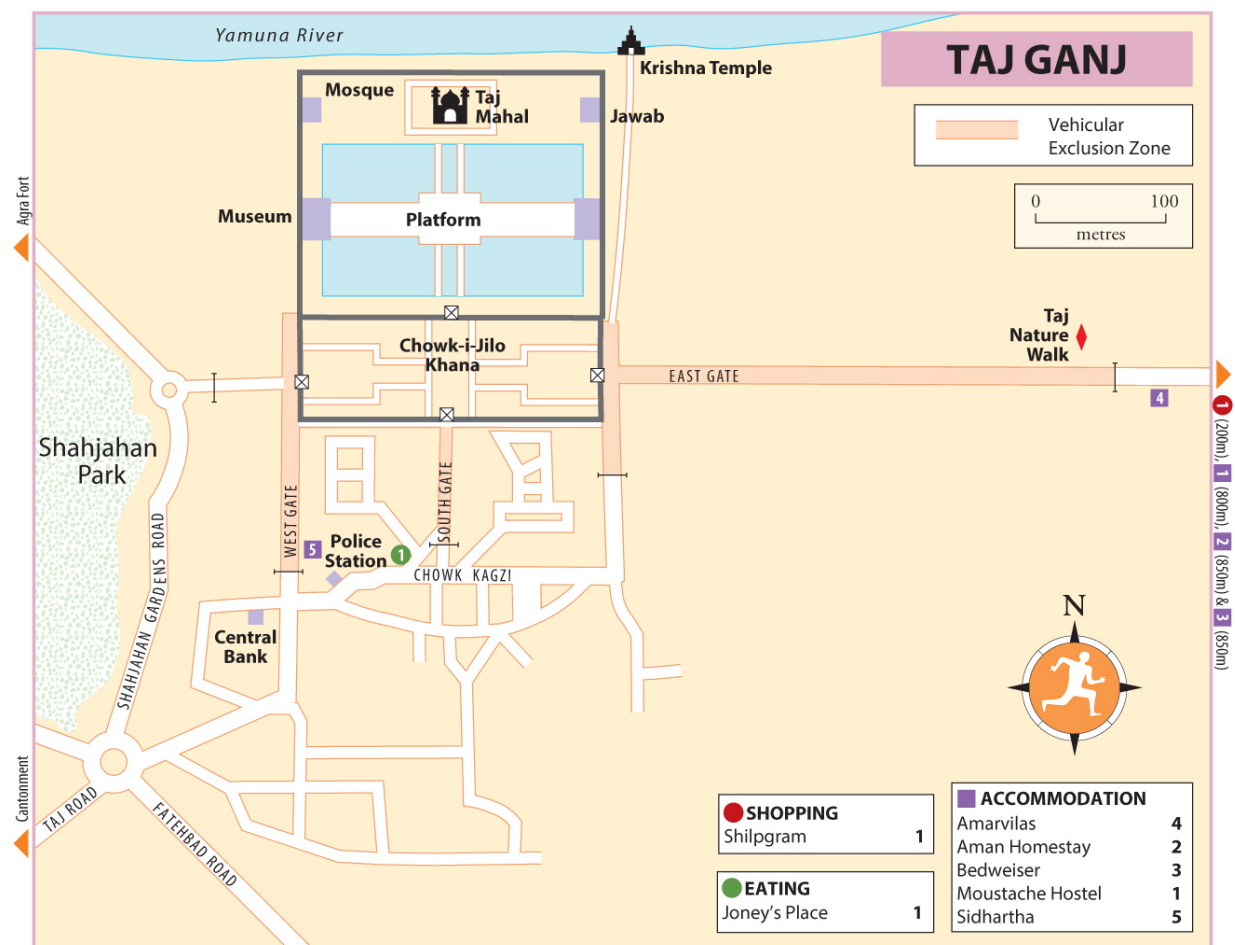

The Chowk-i-Jilo Khana The south, east and west entrances all lead into the Chowk-i-Jilo Khana forecourt. The main entrance into the complex, an arched gateway topped with delicate domes and adorned with Koranic verses and inlaid floral designs, stands at the northern edge of Chowk-i-Jilo Khana, directly aligned with the Taj, but shielding it from the view of those who wait outside.

The charbagh Once through the gateway from the Chowk-i-Jilo Khana, you’ll see the Taj itself at the end of the huge charbagh (literally “four gardens”), a garden dissected into four quadrants by waterways (usually dry), evoking the Koranic description of Paradise, where rivers flow with water, milk, wine and honey. Introduced by Babur from Central Asia, charbaghs remained fashionable throughout the Mughal era. Unlike other Mughal mausoleums such as Akbar’s and Humayun’s, the Taj isn’t at the centre of the charbagh, but at the northern end, presumably to exploit its riverside setting.

The Taj

At the far end of the charbagh, steps lead up to the high-square marble platform on which the mausoleum itself sits, each corner marked by a tall, tapering minaret. To the west of the tomb is a domed red-sandstone mosque and to the east a replica jawab, put there to complete the architectural symmetry of the complex – it cannot be used as a mosque as it faces away from Mecca.

The Taj is essentially square in shape, with pointed arches cut into its sides and topped with a huge central dome that rises for over 55m, its height accentuated by a crowning brass spire almost 17m high. On approach, the tomb looms ever larger and grander, but not until you are close do you appreciate both its sheer size and the extraordinarily fine detail of relief carving, highlighted by floral patterns of precious stones. Arabic verses praising the glory of Paradise fringe the archways, proportioned exactly so that each letter appears to be the same size when viewed from the ground.

The south face of the tomb is the main entrance to the interior: a high octagonal chamber whose weirdly echoing interior is flushed with pale light. A marble screen, decorated with precious stones and cut so finely that it seems almost translucent, protects the cenotaph of Mumtaz Mahal in the centre, perfectly aligned with the doorway and the distant gateway into the Chowk-i-Jilo Khana, and that of Shah Jahan crammed in next to it – the only object which breaks the perfect symmetry of the entire complex. The inlay work on the marble tombs is the finest in Agra, and no pains were spared in perfecting it – some of the petals and leaves are made of up to sixty separate stone fragments. Ninety-nine names of Allah adorn the top of Mumtaz's tomb, and set into Shah Jahan's is a pen box, the hallmark of a male ruler. These cenotaphs, in accordance with Mughal tradition, are only representations of the real coffins, which lie in the same positions in a crypt below.

The museum In theory daily except Fri 9am–5pm (but sometimes closed for no apparent reason) • Free The Taj's museum, in the enclosure's western wall, features exquisite miniature paintings, two marble pillars believed to have come from the fort and portraits of Mughal rulers including Shah Jahan and Mumtaz Mahal, as well as architectural drawings of the Taj and examples of pietra dura stone inlay work.

INFORMATION OPENING HOURS DAILY EXCEPT TAJ MAHAL FRI SUNRISE–SUNSET. 🌐 TAJMAHAL.GOV.IN

Tickets Charge; free for children under 15 years; ticket valid for one entrance and a maximum stay of three hours; also gives tax-free entry to other sites if used on the same day, giving ₹50 off the admission fee at Agra Fort, and ₹10 off at Sikandra, Itimad-ud-Daulah and Fatehpur Sikri (Use 🌐 asiagracircle.in for online purchase). Ticket queues are longest at the west gate, shortest at the south gate; the east gate ticket office is 500m down the road, by the Shilpgram crafts village. You are not allowed to enter with food (and none is available inside), nor with a travel guidebook – these can be deposited at lockers near the entrances. Foreigners are given a free bottle of water and a pair of shoe covers on entry.

Night visits It's possible to see the Taj by moonlight on the night of the full moon itself and on the two days before and after. Four hundred visitors are admitted per night (in batches of fifty between 8pm and midnight, but not on Fridays or during Ramadan). Tickets have to be purchased a day in advance from the ASI office, 22 The Mall (Mon–Sat 10am–6pm; ☎0562 222 7261). If a viewing is cancelled, you get a refund.

Viewing the Taj for free You can see the Taj for free from a Taj Ganj hotel rooftop (many have restaurants with a Taj view), or by heading down the eastern side of the compound to a small Krishna temple by the river, where you can see the Taj, and also take a little boat ride (₹250–1000, depending on the size of your camera) to see it from the river. The view is breathtaking from Mehtab Bagh on the opposite bank of the river (daily sunrise–sunset; entry is charged), especially at dawn. You cross the river on the road bridge north of Agra Fort, and turn right when you reach the far bank, following the metalled road until it enters the village of Katchpura and becomes a rough track that eventually emerges at a small dalit shrine on the riverside, directly opposite the Taj and next to the entrance of Mehtab Bagh. You can see the Taj from the garden's floodlit walkways, and from outside the gardens on the riverbank, but unfortunately you cannot access the gardens by boat from across the river by the Taj itself.

Agra Fort

Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge (ticket prices drop on Fridays); small discount for foreigners on production of a Taj ticket for the same day The high red-sandstone ramparts of Agra Fort dominate a bend in the Yamuna River 2km northwest of the Taj Mahal. Akbar laid the foundations of this majestic citadel, built between 1565 and 1573 in the form of a half-moon, on the remains of earlier Rajput fortifications. The structure developed as the seat and stronghold of the Mughal Empire for successive generations: Akbar commissioned the walls and gates, his grandson, Shah Jahan, had most of the principal buildings erected, and Aurangzeb, the last great emperor, was responsible for the ramparts.

The curved sandstone bastions reach a height of over 20m and stretch for around two and a half kilometres, punctuated by a sequence of massive gates (although only the Amar Singh Pol is currently open to visitors). The original and grandest entrance was through the western side, via the Delhi Gate and Hathi Pol or “Elephant Gate” (closed to the public), now flanked by two red-sandstone towers faced in marble, but once guarded by colossal stone elephants with riders which were destroyed by Aurangzeb in 1668.

Access to this and to much of the fort is restricted, and only those parts open to the public are described here.

There's nowhere to buy drinks inside the fort, and exploring the complex can be thirsty work, so unless you're happy to take your chances at the public drinking taps, it's a good idea to take water in with you.

Diwan-i-Am and the great courtyard Entrance to the fort is through the Amar Singh Pol, actually three separate gates placed close together and at right angles to each other to disorientate any potential attackers and to deprive them of the space in which to use battering weapons against the fortifications. From here a ramp climbs gently uphill flanked by high walls (another defensive measure), through a second gate to the spacious courtyard, with tree-studded lawns, which surrounds the graceful Diwan-i-Am ("Hall of Public Audience"). Open on three sides, the pillared hall, which replaced an earlier wooden structure, was commissioned by Shah Jahan in 1628. The elegance of the setting would have been enhanced by the addition of brocade, carpets and satin canopies for audiences with the emperor.

The ornate throne alcove – built to house a gem-encrusted Peacock Throne, which was eventually moved to Delhi, only to be looted from there by Nadir Shah and finishing up in Tehran – is inlaid in marble decorated with flowers and foliage in bas-relief, and connects to the royal chambers within. In front of the alcove, the Baithak, a small marble table, is where ministers would have sat to deliver petitions and receive commands. This is also where trials would have been conducted, and justice speedily implemented.

The area to the north of the Diwan-i-Am courtyard is, sadly, closed to visitors, though you can make out the delicate white marble domes and chhatris of the striking, if rather clumsily proportioned, Moti Masjid (“Pearl Mosque”) rising beyond the courtyard walls, best seen from the Diwan-i-Am itself. Directly in front of the Diwan-i-Am an incongruously Gothic Christian tomb marks the grave of John Russell Colvin, lieutenant governor of the Northwestern Provinces, who died here during the 1857 uprising, when Agra’s British population barricaded themselves inside the fort.

The royal pavilions Heading through the small door to the left of the throne alcove in the Diwan-i-Am and climbing the stairs beyond brings you out onto the upper level of the Macchi Bhavan (Fish Palace), a large but relatively plain two-storey structure overlooking a spacious, grassy courtyard. This was once strewn with fountains and flowerbeds, interspersed with tanks and water channels stocked with fish on which the emperor and his courtiers would practise their angling skills, though the maharaja of Bharatpur subsequently removed some of its marble fixtures to his palace in Deeg, and William Bentinck (governor general from 1828 to 1835) auctioned off much of the palace’s original mosaics and fretwork.

Nagina Masjid On the north side of the courtyard (to the left as you enter) a small door leads to the exquisite little Nagina Masjid (Gem Mosque), made entirely of marble. Capped with three domes and approached from a marble-paved courtyard, it was commissioned by Shah Jahan for the ladies of the zenana (harem). At the rear on the right, a small balcony with beautifully carved lattice screens offers a discreet viewpoint from where members of the harem were able to inspect luxury goods – silks, jewellery and brocade – laid out for sale by merchants in the courtyard below, without themselves being seen.

The raised terrace on the far side of the Macchi Bhavan is adorned by two thrones, one black slate, the other white marble. The white one was used by Shah Jahan, the black one by the future emperor Jahangir to watch elephant fights in the eastern enclosure. It now serves, somewhat less gloriously, as a favoured perch for couples posing for photos against the backdrop of the distant Taj.

Diwan-i-Khas To your right (as you face the river), a high terrace overlooking the Yamuna is topped with a sequence of lavish royal apartments designed to catch the cool breezes blowing across the waters below. The first is the delicate Diwan-i-Khas (Hall of Private Audience), erected in 1635, where the emperor would have received kings, dignitaries and ambassadors, and is one of the most finely decorated buildings in the fort, with paired marble pillars and peacock arches inlaid with lapis lazuli and jasper.

Mina Masjid A passageway behind the Diwan-i-Khas leads to the tiny Mina Masjid, a plain white marble mosque built for Shah Jahan and traditionally said to have been used by him during his imprisonment here.

SOUND-AND-LIGHT SHOW EVERY NIGHT AFTER SUNSET (IN ENGLISH AT 7PM IN WINTER, 8.15PM OR 8.30PM IN SUMMER; CHARGES APPLY), A SOUND-AND-LIGHT SHOW TAKES PLACE AT AGRA FORT IN FRONT OF THE DIWAN-I-AM. THE SHOW LASTS AN HOUR, DURING WHICH TIME LIGHTS PLAY ON VARIOUS PARTS OF THE FORT AS A COMMENTARY TAKES YOU THROUGH THE HISTORY OF THE GREAT MUGHALS. IT'S FUN, BUT NOTHING SPECTACULAR. TICKETS CAN BE BOUGHT AT THE GATE.

Musamman Burj Beyond, the passageway leads to a two-storey pavilion known as the Musamman Burj, famous as the spot where he is said to have caught his last glimpse of the Taj Mahal before he died, and the most elaborately decorated structure in the fort. Its lattice-screen balustrade is dotted with ornamental niches and with exquisite pietra dura inlay covering almost every surface. In front of the tower a courtyard, paved with marble octagons, centres on a pachisi board where the emperor, following his father's example at Fatehpur Sikri, played pachisi (a form of ludo) using dancing girls as pieces.

Anguri Bagh Beyond the Musamman Burj, another large courtyard, the Anguri Bagh (Grape Garden), is a miniature charbagh, its east side flanked by the marble building known as Khas Mahal (Private Palace), possibly a drawing room or the emperor's sleeping chamber. The palace is flanked by two so-called Golden Pavilions, their curved roofs covered with gilded copper tiles in a style inspired by the thatched roofs of Bengali village huts.

In front of the Khas Mahal, steps descend into the northeast corner of the Anguri Bagh and the Shish Mahal (Glass Palace), where royal women bathed in the soft lamplight reflected from the mirrorwork mosaics that covered the walls and ceiling; the building is currently locked, so you can only peek in through the windows.

The Jahangiri Mahal South of the Khas Mahal lies the huge Jahangiri Mahal (Jahangir's Palace), although the name is misleading since it was actually built for Jahangir's father, Akbar, and probably served not as a royal palace, but as a harem. Compared to the classic Mughal designs of the surrounding buildings, this robust sandstone structure has quite a few Hindu elements mixed up with traditional Mughal and Islamic motifs.

From the central courtyard, a gateway leads out through the main gateway into the palace, whose impressive facade shows a characteristic mix of Mughal and Indian motifs, with Islamic pointed arches and inlaid mosaics combined with Hindu-style overhanging eaves supported by heavily carved brackets. Immediately in front of the palace sits Jahangir's Hauz (Jahangir's Cistern), a giant bowl with steps inside and out, made in 1611 from a single block of porphyry and inscribed in Persian. Filled with rosewater, it would have been used by the emperor as a bathtub, and it's also believed that the emperor took it with him on his travels around the empire – though it seems difficult to credit this, given the bath's size and weight.

Jama Masjid Jama Masjid Rd

Opposite Agra Fort, and overlooking Agra Fort railway station, is the city's principal mosque, the soaring red-sandstone Jama Masjid (Friday Mosque). Built in 1648, it was originally connected directly to the fort's principal entrance, the Delhi Gate, by a large courtyard, but the British ran a railway line between the two, leaving the mosque stranded in no-man's land on the far side of the tracks.

Standing on a high plinth above the chaotic streets of the surrounding bazaar (of which it affords fine views), the mosque is crowned by three large sandstone domes covered in distinctive zigzagging bands of marble. Five huge arches lead into the main prayer hall, topped by a prettily inlaid band of sandstone decorated in abstract floral patterns; inside, the mihrab is surrounded by delicate flourishes of Koranic script, inlaid in black, a design mirrored in the principal archway.

Kinari Bazaar The space around the base of the mosque is now filled with the crowded – but refreshingly hassle-free – streets of Kinari Bazaar, a fascinating warren crammed full with shops and stalls, though the numbers of people, scooters, cycle rickshaws and cows pushing their way through the streets make exploring it a slow and tiring business. Opposite the northeast corner of the complex, look out for the petha-walas, purveyors of Agra's most famous sweet.

Itimad-ud-Daulah Moti Bagh • Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge
On the east bank of the Yamuna River some 3km north of Agra Fort, the beautiful Itimad-ud-Daulah (pronounced “Atma Dolla”), is the tomb of Mirza Ghiyas Beg, wazir (chief minister) and father-in-law of Emperor Jahangir, who gave him the title of Itimad-ud-Daulah, or “Pillar of the State”. The tomb is popularly known among Agra’s rickshaw-walas as the “Baby Taj”, and though it’s much smaller and less successfully proportioned than its more famous relative, it does foreshadow the Taj in being the first building in Mughal Agra to be faced entirely in marble, with lavish use of pietra dura inlay to decorate its translucent exterior walls.

The tomb sits at the centre of a charbagh garden, though here entered from the eastern (rather than the usual southern) side, presumably to highlight its setting against the backdrop of the Yamuna River – another element of its design which anticipates that of the Taj. The building’s undersized rooftop pavilion replaces the usual dome and has four stocky minarets stuck onto each corner. However, these imperfections seem unimportant given the superbly intricate inlay work that covers virtually the entire tomb – an incredible profusion of floral and geometrical patterning in muted reds, oranges, browns and greys that give it the appearance of an enormous, slightly hallucinogenic experiment in medieval op-art. Elegant inlaid designs showing characteristic Persian motifs including wine vases, trees and honeysuckles adorn the arches of the four entrances, and the walls inside are covered in rather eroded and clumsily restored paintings of more vases, flowers and cypresses.

Chini-ka-Rauza Around 1km north of Itimad-ud-Daulah is the Chini-ka-Rauza, built between 1628 and 1639 as the mausoleum of Afzal Khan, a Persian poet from Shiraz who was one of Shah Jahan’s ministers. As befits his origins, Afzal Khan’s tomb is of purely Persian design, the only such building in Agra.

Rambagh

Mahatma Gandhi Marg • Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge A kilometre or so north of the Chini-ka-Rauza, amid the dusty sprawl of northern Agra, the Rambagh gardens, dating from 1526, are one of the very few surviving remains in India from the reign of the Mughal dynasty’s founder Babur. The gardens don’t contain much in the way of architecture, and aren’t very well maintained, but you can still see how they were laid out, as a square quartered by water channels following the Persian charbagh plan, which made it the prototype for all later Mughal gardens.

Akbar's mausoleum Mathura Rd, Sikandra, 10km northwest of Agra • Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge • Autos, or take a Mathura-bound bus from Agra Fort Bus Stand Given the Mughal tradition of magnificent tombs, it is no surprise that the mausoleum of the most distinguished Mughal ruler was one of the most ambitious structures of its time.

Akbar's mausoleum complex is entered via its huge Buland Darwaza (Great Gate), surmounted by four marble minarets, and overlaid with marble and coloured tiles in repetitive geometrical patterns, bearing the Koranic inscription "These are the gardens of Eden, enter them and live forever". Through the gateway, extensive, park-like gardens are divided by fine raised sandstone walkways into the four equal quadrants of the typical Mughal charbagh design. Langur monkeys may be seen along the path, while deer roam through the tall grasses, just as they do in the Mughal miniature paintings dating from the era when the tomb was constructed, lending the whole place a magically peaceful and rural atmosphere.

The mausoleum The mausoleum itself sits in the middle of the gardens, at the centre of the charbagh and directly in front of Buland Darwaza. The entire structure is one of the strangest in Mughal Agra, its huge square base topped not by the usual dome but by a three-storey open-sided sandstone construction crowned with a solid-looking marble pavilion. The mishmash design may be attributable to Jahangir, who ordered changes in the mausoleum's design halfway through its construction, Akbar himself having neglected to leave finished plans for his mausoleum.

A high marble gateway in the mausoleum's southern facade frames an elaborate lattice screen shielding a small vestibule painted with rich sea-blue frescoes and Koranic verses. From here a ramp leads down into a large, echoing and absolutely plain subterranean crypt, lit by a single skylight, in the centre of which stands Akbar's grave, decorated with the pen-box motif, the symbol of a male ruler, which can also be seen on Shah Jahan's tomb in the Taj Mahal.

Mariam's Tomb Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge

Off the road on the opposite side, 1km north of Sikandra, lies the altogether more modest Mariam's tomb, last resting place of Mariam-uz-Zamani, a wife of Akbar and mother of Jahangir, who ordered the construction of this large mausoleum following her death in 1623. A weighty sandstone structure, with fine (though very eroded) carvings covering most of its exterior walls, the mausoleum belongs architecturally to the same style as Jahangir's palace in Agra Fort.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE KHERIA AGR AIRPORT, 7KM SOUTHWEST OF TOWN ( AAI.AERO/EN/AIRPORTS/AGRA), HAS FLIGHTS TO BENGALURU (FOUR WEEKLY FLIGHTS; 2HR 25MIN), AHMEDABAD (DAILY; 2HR 15MIN), LUCKNOW (FOUR WEEKLY FLIGHTS; 1HR 5MIN), BHOPAL (THREE WEEKLY FLIGHTS; 1HR 25MIN) AND MUMBAI (THREE WEEKLY FLIGHTS; 2HR).

BY TRAIN RAILWAY STATIONS AGRA HAS SIX STATIONS, BUT VISITORS GENERALLY USE ONLY TWO OF THEM. THE BUSIEST IS AGRA CANTON-MENT (“CANTT”), IN THE SOUTHWEST, WHICH SERVES DELHI, GWALIOR, JHANSI AND MOST POINTS SOUTH. TRAINS FROM RAJASTHAN PULL IN CLOSE TO THE JAMA MASJID AT AGRA FORT STATION (A FEW ALSO STOP AT AGRA CANTT). AGRA CANTT IS MORE CONVENIENT FOR THE HOTELS AROUND SADAR BAZAAR, WHILE AGRA FORT STATION IS SLIGHTLY CLOSER TO THE TAJ GANJ AREA; BOTH ARE A FAIR WAY FROM THE HOTELS ALONG FATEHABAD RD. THERE’S A PREPAID AUTO-RICKSHAW/TAXI BOOTH AT AGRA CANTONMENT STATION (₹130/200 TO TAJ GANJ); DRIVERS MAY TRY TO INTERCEPT YOU BEFORE YOU REACH THE PREPAID BOOTH SO AS TO OVERCHARGE YOU OR WORK SOME COMMISSION SCAM. CYCLE RICKSHAWS WAIT IN THE FORECOURT OUTSIDE, BUT ARE SLOW IF YOU’RE GOING TO FATEHABAD RD OR TAJ GANJ. CYCLE RICKSHAW AND AUTO DRIVERS MAY TRY TO EARN COMMISSION BY TAKING YOU TO A HOTEL OF THEIR CHOOSING, AND MAY THEREFORE CLAIM (FALSELY, OF COURSE) THAT THE HOTEL OF YOUR CHOICE IS CLOSED.

UBER AND OLA DRIVERS ARE A FAR BETTER OPTION.

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM AGRA THE TRAINS BELOW ARE RECOMMENDED AS THE FASTEST AND/OR MOST CONVENIENT FOR SPECIFIC CITIES. ALL THOSE LISTED HERE RUN DAILY.

Destination	Name	No.	From	Departs	Arrives
Chennai	GT Express	#12616	AC	6.35pm	4.30am++
	Tamil Nadu Express	#12622	AC	11.30pm	6.15am++
Delhi	Karnataka Express1	#12627	AC	5.50am	9.00am
	Kerala Express1	#12625	AC	10.15am	1.40pm
	Gatimaan Express*2	#12049	AC	5.45pm	7.30pm
					(exc Fri)
	Shatabdi Express*1	#12001	AC	9.25pm	11.50pm
Gwalior	Shatabdi Express*	#12002	AC	7.55am	9.23am
	Punjab Mail	#12138	AC	8.05am	10.07am
Jaipur	Ajmer Intercity	#12195	AF	6.00am	10.15am
	Jaipur Express	#12403	AC	7.15am	12.50pm
Jhansi	Shatabdi Express*	#12002	AC	7.50am	10.45am
	Punjab Mail	#12138	AC	8.00am	12.05pm
Jodhpur	Howrah–Jodhpur Exp	#12307	AF	7.20pm	5.35am+

Khajuraho	Khajuraho Express	#19666	AC	10.20am	6.50pm
Kolkata	Ajmer–Sealdah Exp	#12988	AF	6.55pm	3.50pm+
Udaipur	Udaipur Express	#19665	AC	5.25pm	6.30am+
Varanasi	Marudhar Express	#14854	AF	6.20pm	9.45am
Vasco da Gama	Goa Express	#12780	AC	5.55pm	7.00am++

AC Agra Cantonment, AF Agra Fort, *a/c only, + next day, ++ two days later

1 arrives New Delhi, 2 arrives Hazrat Nizamuddin

Tickets Train tickets, especially to the capital, should be booked several days in advance if possible at either Agra Cantonment or Agra Fort stations; both have computerized booking offices and separate tourist counters.

BY BUS TRAVELLING BY BUS ALONG THE DELHI-AGRA-LUCKNOW EXPRESSWAY SAVES TIME COMPARED TO DOING THE SAME JOURNEY BY TRAIN; AVOID USING THE GRAND TRUNK ROAD THOUGH, OR TRAVELLING TO JAIPUR ON NH-11, AS BOTH ROADS SEE DISCONCERTINGLY FREQUENT ACCIDENTS. AGRA HAS THREE BUS STANDS, BUT AGRA FORT BUS STAND IS NOW USED FOR LOCAL SERVICES ONLY.

Idgah Bus Stand, near Cantonment station in the south-west of town, has services to Fatehpur Sikri (every 30min; 1hr–1hr 30min), Delhi (every 30min; 5–6hr), Madhya Pradesh and Rajasthan. For Rajasthani destinations beyond Jaipur, take a bus to Jaipur (hourly; 5–6hr) and pick up a connecting service (an exception is Ajmer, which has three daily direct services, taking 9hr). One scam to be aware of on buses to Idgah, especially from Jaipur, is that they may make a stop in the suburbs, about 6km out, where auto-walas (often in collusion with the bus drivers) may claim that your vehicle has reached the end of the line, and that you need to disembark; if there are still Indian passengers on the bus, sit tight till you get to Idgah.

Transport Nagar ISBT, 12km north of town at Transport Nagar, just off the Delhi–Agra highway. Buses from here serve UP destinations such as Lucknow (15 daily; 9hr 30min) and Varanasi (daily; 14hr), as well as to Haridwar (12 daily; 10hr), Rishikesh (12 daily; 12hr) and Dehradun (12 daily; 13hr). An auto into town will cost some ₹300, but if you're really determined to get into Agra on the cheap, you can walk down to the highway and pick up a shared auto (₹10) to Baghwan Talkies, and a bus (₹25) from there to Sai ki Takia (the junction of Fatehpur Sikri Rd with Mahatma Gandhi Rd).

RSRTC buses Deluxe and a/c Rajasthan Roadways (RSRTC, bookable on rsrtc.com) nonstop services to Jaipur (9 daily; 4hr) leave from the forecourt of Sakura Guest House, next to the Idgah bus stand.

Private buses Hotels and travel agents can book seats on private buses to Delhi, Gwalior, Khajuraho, Lucknow and Nainital. The 12hr ride to Khajuraho (leaving at 5am) is a bit gruelling – it's better to take the train, or failing that, take a train to Jhansi (3hr) and pick up a bus there (5hr).

GETTING AROUND AGRA IS VERY SPREAD OUT AND ITS SIGHTS TOO WIDELY SEPARATED TO GET BETWEEN THEM EASILY ON FOOT, SO YOU'LL PROBABLY SPEND A FAIR AMOUNT OF TIME IN RICKSHAWS OR TAXIS. GETTING FROM ONE PART OF THE CITY TO ANOTHER CAN PROVE SURPRISINGLY TIME-CONSUMING, AND CROSSING FROM ONE SIDE OF THE YAMUNA RIVER TO THE OTHER IS PARTICULARLY TEDIOUS, WITH ONLY TWO OVER-USED AND UNDER-MAINTAINED BRIDGES. MOTORIZED VEHICLES ARE EXCLUDED FROM A SMALL AREA AROUND THE TAJ, SUPPOSEDLY TO PROTECT IT FROM POLLUTION. ON RICKSHAWS AND TAXIS, HAGGLE HARD: AGRA SEES SO MANY "FRESH" TOURISTS THAT DRIVERS ALMOST ALWAYS QUOTE SIGNIFICANTLY INFLATED PRICES TO START WITH (THE BEST POLICY, IF A RICKSHAW DRIVER NAMES A SILLY PRICE, IS SIMPLY TO WALK AWAY – THEY'LL USUALLY CHASE AFTER YOU AND OFFER A MORE REALISTIC FARE). ALSO, NOTE THAT THE MAIN AGENDA FOR MANY RICKSHAW AND TAXI DRIVERS IS TO GET YOU INTO SHOPS THAT PAY THEM COMMISSION, ADDED TO YOUR BILL OF COURSE; IF

THEY OFFER YOU A RIDE FOR AN ABSURDLY LOW PRICE, THIS IS WHAT THEIR AIM IS. ALWAYS HAIL A RICKSHAW OR AUTO YOURSELF RATHER THAN TAKING ONE THAT HUSTLES YOU FOR BUSINESS (ALMOST INVARIABLY WITH THE AIM OF OVERCHARGING YOU AND/OR WORKING SOME KIND OF SCAM).

By cycle rickshaw Cycle rickshaws are good for short trips and provide a livelihood for some of the city's poorest inhabitants, as well as being cleaner and greener than autos, but are slow for long journeys, and rickshaw drivers are the biggest source of hassle in Agra – attempt to walk anywhere, and they will be constantly on your case; walking on the right-hand side of the street makes it harder for them to follow you. It's always wiser to hail a rickshaw of your own choice rather than go with a driver who pesters you (almost always with the intention of overcharging or working a commission scam).

By auto-rickshaw Auto-rickshaws are faster than cycle rickshaws, though the same caveats apply. Fares, including waiting time, are very reasonable if you haggle. Sample fares from Taj Ganj are ₹50 to Sadar Bazaar or Agra Fort, ₹120 to Agra Cantt station.

By taxi Taxis are handy for longer trips to Sikandra or Fatehpur Sikri; agree a fare before you set off. There are taxi ranks at the stations, or your hotel should be able to arrange a vehicle. Ola offers packages that take in most of Agra sites; a half day out should cost about ₹1300.

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURIST INFORMATION AGRA HAS TWO TOURIST OFFICES, INDIA TOURISM AT 191 THE MALL (MON–SAT 8AM–5PM; ☎0562 222 6368), AND UP TOURISM AT 64 TAJ RD (MON–SAT 10AM–5PM; 🌐UPTOURISM.GOV.IN).

Tours UP Tourism runs a whistlestop tour (daily except Fri) of Agra, aimed mainly at day-trippers from Delhi. The tour leaves the Cantonment station at 10.30am (coinciding with the Taj Express from Delhi), but depends on demand – call UP Tourism to check whether it's running on any particular day. The full-day tour (₹3600 [₹750] including all entrance and guide fees) whisks you at breakneck speed around the Taj, Agra Fort and Fatehpur Sikri, ending at around 6pm in time for the Taj Express back to Delhi; you can also join the tour just for the afternoon visit to Fatehpur Sikri (₹1500 [₹550]). Tours can be booked either through the UP Tourism or India Tourism offices. The Tourists Rest House has a travel agency called Bag Packers (📞 bagpackertravels.com), which can organize car rental with driver, day-trips to Fatehpur Sikri, Keoladeo and Bharatpur, and tailor-made tours of Agra and/or Rajasthan, starting from Agra or Delhi; they can also book train tickets and accept payment from foreign credit or debit cards.

ACCOMMODATION MOST BUDGET TRAVELLERS END UP IN TAJ GANJ, THE JUMBLE OF NARROW LANES IMMEDIATELY SOUTH OF THE TAJ. WITH THEIR UNRIVALLED ROOFTOP VIEWS AND LAIDBACK CAFÉS, THE HOSTELS AND GUESTHOUSES HERE CAN BE GREAT PLACES TO STAY, ALTHOUGH CHECKOUT TIME IS USUALLY 10AM. THERE ARE MORE UPMARKET LODGINGS ALONG FATEHABAD RD, SOUTHWEST OF TAJ GANJ, WHILE THE LEAFIER CANTONMENT AREA AND THE ADJACENT SADAR BAZAAR HAVE PLACES TO SUIT EVERY BUDGET.

TAJ GANJ, SEE MAP PAGE 234

Amarvilas East Gate, 📞 oberoihotels.com. Easily the loveliest (and most expensive) hotel in Agra, virtually a work of art in its own right, constructed in a serene blend of Mughal and Moorish styles around a gorgeous charbagh-style courtyard water garden. Most rooms have Taj views. Facilities include a large pool, idyllic terraced gardens, two smart restaurants and a very chichi bar. ₹₹₹₹

★ Aman Homestay Shilpgram road, on the inner lane behind Moustache Hostel, 📞 amanhomestay.com. Boutique homestay run by a friendly family. All rooms are squeaky clean, with huge king-sized beds and have the feel of a hotel in a much higher category. The rooftop rooms are the best, set around a lovely veranda with views of the Taj. The downside is that breakfast costs extra, and you can order dinner. ₹₹

Bedweiser Near Shilpgram Parking, Taj East Gate Road 📞 9548666665. Well-maintained backpacker hostel with a party vibe and an attractive reggae-themed rooftop — yet without Taj views. The four-bed dorms and doubles are all en suite and clean but feel a little cramped without windows.

It's within walking distance of the Taj, and the free Playstation corner will appeal to some. Dorms ₹, Doubles ₹₹

★Moustache Hostel Taj East Gate Road, 🌐moustachehostel.com. The best hostel in town has a series of sparkling clean doubles, mixed (six-bed) and female-only (four-bed) dorms, with or without a/c. All have plush beds, reading lights and storage lockers below the bed frames. There's a restaurant with Taj views on the rooftop, tours, free luggage storage, and a chill-out area where guests can hang out until their bus/train. Dorms ₹; doubles ₹₹

Sidhartha West Gate 📞0562 233 0901, 🌐hotelsidharthaagra.com. Bigger and better rooms than the other Taj Ganj budget joints, set around a restaurant in a leafy courtyard that includes fragments of Mughal-era walls. There are three grades of room, of which the top differs from the others only in having a/c, but all are sparkling, with attached bathrooms and 24hr hot water, and they upgrade them on a regular basis. ₹₹₹

CANTONMENT AND SADAR BAZAAR, SEE MAP PAGE 232

Clarks Shiraz 54 Taj Rd 🌐hotelclarksshiraz.com. Sprawling five-star in a pleasant Cantonment setting with small but cosy rooms, the more expensive of which have distant Taj views. Facilities include two restaurants, two bars, a swimming pool, an Ayurvedic massage centre and a health club. ₹₹₹

★Tourists Rest House Kutchery Rd, Baluganj 📞0562 246 3961. One of Agra's top budget options, with a range of bright, competitively priced rooms around a tranquil leafy courtyard; all super-clean, and all attached with hot running water, some a/c. There's also free wi-fi, free bus and train reservations, and free pick-up from bus or train stations with a day's notice. ₹

FATEHABAD ROAD AND AROUND, SEE MAP PAGE 232

Bansi Home Stay 18 Handicraft Nagar (off Fatehabad Rd), 🌐bansihomestayagra.com. Immaculate little place hidden away down a side street where the noise and bustle don't seem to penetrate and you're in a little oasis of quiet. The house is modern, the rooms spacious and sparkling, and the atmosphere warm and welcoming. And for those who want to smoke and drink, there's a grassy roof terrace, to which those activities are confined. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹

GoStops Agra 121 MMIG Taj Nagari Phase 1, gostops.com. Another in the series of Agra's new swanky flashpacker hostels, GoStops has colourful doubles, top-of-the range dorms, a nice rooftop restaurant and social common areas — one even has a table football game. Breakfast included. Doubles ₹₹₹; dorms ₹

Mayur Tourist Complex Fatehabad Rd 0562 233 2302. Dinky pagoda-like cottages with attached bathrooms around a large garden (generally peaceful, but often used for weddings Nov–Jan). Facilities include a multicuisine restaurant-cum-beer bar, and a swimming pool and health centre. ₹₹₹

Trident Tajnagri, Fatehabad Rd 0562 223 5000, tridenthotels.com. A peaceful five-star, whose cheerful rooms (including one adapted for wheelchair users) are in low-lying buildings around a spacious garden with a large pool and multicuisine restaurant. Despite being located a couple of kilometres out of town, it's actually quite handy for the Taj's eastern entrance, with a direct road round the back of the hotel. Breakfast is included. ₹₹₹₹

EATING

MAP AND THIS MAP

Agra is the home of Mughlai cooking, renowned for its rich cream- and curd-based sauces, accompanied by naan and tandoori breads roasted in earthen ovens, pulao rice dishes and milky sweets such as kheer. Taj Ganj has innumerable scruffy little travellers' cafés, though standards of hygiene are often suspect and the food is generally uninspiring, with slow service the norm. Taj Ganj's saving grace is the rooftop cafés, many with fine Taj views, which cap most of its buildings. Local specialities of Agra include petha (crystallized pumpkin) – the best is the Panchi brand, available at various outlets all over town, particularly in the row of petha shops in Kinari Bazaar along the northeast side of the Jama Masjid (past Chimman Lal Puri Wale). Look out too for ghazak, a rock-hard candy with nuts, and daltho, a crunchy mix made with black lentils. Agra's restaurants – including even apparently reputable places – are not immune to the epidemic of credit-card fraud. It's best not to pay by credit card except in the city's five-star establishments, or, if you do, supervise the operation carefully.

★Chimman Lal Puri Wale Opposite northeast wall of Jama Masjid 0562 246 1430. An Agra institution for five generations now, this much-loved little café-restaurant looks a touch grubby from the outside, but serves delicious puri thalis, with two veg dishes and a sweet. Ideal pit-stop after visiting the Jama Masjid. ₹

Choko Jeeman Delhi Gate, Raja Ki Mandi 0562 404 0338. This cosy restaurant is adored by locals for its mouth-watering pure veg Rajasthani Thalís served in a relaxing bamboo-furnished bar area. Plates contain eight choices of vegetables, and you can re-fill as much as you want. ₹₹

Dasaprakash Meher Cinema Complex, 1 Gwalior Rd, close to the Tourists Rest House, 0562 404 0338. Offshoot of a famous Chennai restaurant, serving a limited but top-notch menu of South Indian food, with special Mysore and spicy coriander versions of the masala dosa, thalis and an extensive ice-cream menu – the hot fudge banana. ₹₹₹

Joney's Place Chowk Kagzi, Taj Ganj 9837 339 686. Oldest of the Taj Ganj travellers' cafés, going since 1978, and open early in case you need breakfast ahead of a dawn visit to the Taj. The house speciality is malai kofta (₹100), but they also do a pretty good vegetarian Mughlai biryani (₹90); their banana lassi (₹50) promises “no ice, no sugar, no water”, and is so gloopy it comes with a spoon. Daily 5am–10pm.

The Park 183-A Taj Rd, Sadar Bazaar 94566 75101. A long-established favourite with both locals and tourists, this simple a/c restaurant dishes up an excellent range of classic Mughlai chicken dishes, along with more mainstream tandooris and meat and veg curries accompanied by superb naan breads, plus a modest selection of Continental and Chinese favourites. Specialities include rogan josh and chicken badami (with almonds). ₹₹

Pinch of Spice 1076/2 Fatehabad Road; 0562 404 0338. Popular with local families, this slightly upmarket restaurant excels in almost all types of Indian cuisine. From veg and non-veg North and South Indian staples, to Chinese food and momos, tandoor specialties, continental food and pastas, it's an eclectic choice for a night out. ₹₹

★Sheroes Hangout Kutchery Rd, Baluganj, 0562 404 0338. Joyful, arty café-cum-library with a cause, run by women who are victims of acid attacks. Profits go toward supporting the work of the Chhanv Foundation.

The food – from chicken sandwiches to roti and dhal concoctions – and coffee are really delicious. ₹₹

Zorba the Buddha E-19 Shopping Arcade, Sadar Bazaar, zorbarestaurantagra.com. Aimed unashamedly at foreign tourists, though you'll find Indian people eating here too, this prettily decorated little place promises fruit and veg sterilized in boiling water, and no chilli unless you ask for it. They offer, along with Indian veg dishes, odd specialities such as a Hawaiian spree (vegetables and pineapple in pineapple sauce) or a fiesta (vegetables in tomato and cashew sauce), all generally tasty and well presented. They now have a non-veg branch downstairs too. ₹₹₹

SHOPPING

MAP AND THIS MAP

Agra is renowned for its marble tabletops, vases and trays, inlaid with semiprecious stones in ornate floral designs, in imitation of those found in the Taj Mahal. It is also an excellent place to buy leather: Agra's shoe industry supplies all India, and its tanneries export bags, briefcases and jackets. Carpets and dhurries are manufactured here too, and traditional embroidery continues to thrive. Zari and zardozi are brightly coloured, the latter building up three-dimensional patterns with fantastic motifs; chikan uses more delicate overlay techniques. Shopping or browsing in Kinari Bazaar and Sadar Bazaar is fun but be prepared to haggle; tourist emporiums are worth avoiding. A lot of private shops try to disguise themselves to look like state-run "cottage" or "handlooms" outlets – an indication of their level of integrity. Note also that Agra sees a large amount of credit-card fraud; be wary of ordering anything to be sent overseas, never let your credit card out of your sight, even for the transaction to be authorized, and make sure that all documentation is filled in correctly and fully so as not to allow unauthorized later additions. A list of stores against whom complaints have been lodged is maintained by the local police department. Remember that if you arrive at any shop in a rickshaw or taxi, the prices of anything you buy will be inflated (and not by just a little) to cover the driver's commission. If you're planning on buying, ask to be dropped off nearby, and then walk to the shop (not allowing your driver to see where you are going).

Agra is renowned for its marble tabletops, vases and trays, inlaid with semiprecious stones in ornate floral designs, in imitation of those found in the Taj Mahal. It is also an excellent place to buy leather: Agra's shoe industry supplies all India, and its tanneries export bags, briefcases and jackets. Carpets and dhurries are manufactured here too, and traditional embroidery continues to thrive. Zari and zardozi are brightly coloured, the latter building up three-dimensional patterns with fantastic motifs; chikan uses more delicate overlay techniques. Shopping or browsing in Kinari Bazaar and Sadar Bazaar is fun but be prepared to haggle; tourist emporiums are worth avoiding. A lot of private shops try to disguise themselves to look like state-run "cottage" or "handlooms" outlets – an indication of their level of integrity. Note also that Agra sees a large amount of credit-card fraud; be wary of ordering anything to be sent overseas, never let your credit card out of your sight, even for the transaction to be authorized, and make sure that all documentation is filled in correctly and fully so as not to allow unauthorized later additions. A list of stores against whom complaints have been lodged is maintained by the local police department. Remember that if you arrive at any shop in a rickshaw or taxi, the prices of anything you buy will be inflated (and not by just a little) to cover the driver's commission. If you're planning on buying, ask to be dropped off nearby, and then walk to the shop (not allowing your driver to see where you are going).

Modern Book Depot 4 Taj Rd, Sadar Bazaar 📞0562 222 5695. The best bookshop in town, with a wide selection of fiction and nonfiction in English.

Shilpgram East Gate Road, by gate ticket office (500m east of Taj Ganj). A state-sponsored open-air "crafts village" (ie, a market selling crafts to tourists). Expect to find the usual miniature Taj models and similar tourist souvenirs, plus arts and handicrafts from around India, enlivened with occasional live music and dance performances.

Subhash Emporium 18/1 Gwalior Rd, Sadar Bazaar 📞0562 222 5830 🌐facebook.com/SubhashEmporiumAgra. If you want to buy pietra dura marble inlay work, this is the real deal, pricey but reliable, with genuine semi-precious stones (including lapis lazuli, turquoise, abalone and mother-of-pearl), as opposed to the plastic "stones" and alabaster "marble" sold in too many other places. Prices are "fixed" and high, but discounts are usually offered.

Taj Leather World B-28 Shopping Arcade, Sadar Bazaar 📞0562 222 5076. For leather shoes, wallets, handbags and jackets, all made locally in their own factory, this is an excellent place to check out the leather goods that Agra is known for.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE BANKS INCLUDED THE STATE BANK OF INDIA ON MG RD NORTH OF BALUGANJ, WITH A BRANCH JUST NORTH OF FATEHABAD RD IN THE CANTONMENT. THERE ARE PRIVATE EXCHANGE OFFICES IN TAJ GANJ, AND IN THE TOURIST COMPLEX AREA AROUND AMAR YATRI NIWAS HOTEL.

Hospitals Clean and dependable private hospitals with English-speaking doctors: SR Hospital, Namer Rd (📞0562 402 5200); GG Nursing Home, 106/2 Sanjay Place (📞0562 285 3952); Pushpanjali Hospital, Delhi Gate (🌐pushpanjalihospital.in). The District Hospital, MG Rd, Chhipitola (📞0562 246 6099) gives free treatment, and may be preferable for minor injuries. Avoid backstreet clinics, even if recommended by your hotel manager, and in particular, if you fall ill with what appears to be food poisoning, do not go to a clinic or doctor suggested by someone in the restaurant concerned.

Internet There's plenty of internet access available around town, particularly in Taj Ganj; rates are typically ₹50/hr.

Photography A handful of places on MG Rd, a block north of The Mall, can download and burn digital images to disc.

Police There are police stations on Chowk Kagzi in Taj Ganj (📞0562 233 1015) and on Mahatma Gandhi Rd in Sadar Bazaar, slightly south of the intersection with Fatehpur Sikri Rd (📞0562 222 6561). Agra has a dedicated tourist police force to protect tourists; they can be contacted through UP Tourism or on 📞94544 02764, or in an emergency on 📞1073.

Post The Head Post Office is on The Mall, near India Tourism.

Swimming Non-guests can use the pools at the Yamuna View (₹500), Mayur Tourist Complex (₹400/2hr), and (near Amar Yatri Niwas) the Amar (₹500).

Fatehpur Sikri The ghost city of FATEHPUR SIKRI, former imperial capital of the great Mughal emperor Akbar, straddles the crest of a rocky ridge on the Agra–Jaipur highway, 45km southwest of Agra and 21km east of Bharatpur. The city was built here between 1569 and 1585 as a result of the emperor's enthusiasm for the local Muslim divine Sheikh Salim Chishti, though the move away from Agra may also have had something to do with Akbar's weariness of the crowds and his desire to create a new capital that was an appropriate symbol of imperial power. The fusion of Hindu and Muslim traditions in its architecture says a lot about the religious and cultural tolerance of Akbar's reign.

Fatehpur Sikri's period of pre-eminence was brief, however, and after 1585 it would never again serve as the seat of the Mughal emperor. The reasons for the city's abandonment remain enigmatic. The theory that the city's water supply proved incapable of sustaining its population is no longer widely accepted – even after the city had been deserted, the nearby lake to its northwest still yielded good water. A more likely explanation is that the city was simply the victim of the vagaries of the empire's day-to-day military contingencies. Shortly after the new capital was established, the empire was threatened by troubles in the Punjab, and Akbar moved to the more strategically situated Lahore to deal with them. These military preoccupations kept Akbar at Lahore for over a decade, and at the end of this period he decided, apparently for no particular reason, to return to Agra rather than Fatehpur Sikri. You, on the other hand, might decide to do the opposite: an increasing number of tourists are using Fatehpur Sikri as a base and travelling into Agra on day-trips.

The Royal Palace Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge; Video camera/audio guide charge (plus deposit of photo ID or additional money) • www.tajmahal.gov.in/fatehpur-sikri.aspx

Shunning the Hindu tradition of aligning towns with the cardinal compass points, Akbar chose to construct his new capital following the natural features of the terrain, which is why the principal thoroughfare, town walls, and many of the most important buildings face southwest or northeast. The mosque and most private apartments do not follow the main axis, but face west towards Mecca, according to Muslim tradition, with the palace crowning the highest point on the ridge.

There are two entrances to the Royal Palace and court complex. Independent travellers mostly use the one on the west side, by Jodhbai's Palace; organized tours tend to use that on the east, by the Diwan-i-Am. Official guides offer their services at the booking office. There's nowhere to buy drinks in the palace, so take water in with you; you're not allowed to eat inside.

Diwan-i-Am A logical place to begin a tour of the palace complex is the Diwan-i-Am, where important festivals were held, and where citizens could exercise their right to petition the emperor. Unlike the ornate pillared Diwan-i-Am buildings at the forts in Agra and Delhi, it is basically just a large courtyard, surrounded by a continuous colonnaded walkway with Hindu-style square columns and capitals, and broken only by the small pavilion, flanked by elaborately carved jali screens, in which the emperor himself would have sat – the position of the royal platform forced the emperor's subjects to approach him from the side in an attitude of humility.

The Diwan-i-Khas courtyard A doorway in the northwest corner of the Diwan-i-Am leads to the centre of the mardana (men's quarters), a large, irregularly shaped enclosure dotted with a strikingly eclectic range of buildings. At the far (northern) end of the enclosure stands the tall Diwan-i-Khas ("Hall of Private Audience"), topped with four chhatris and embellished with the heavily carved Hindu-style brackets, large overhanging eaves and corbelled arches which are typical of the architecture of Fatehpur Sikri.

The interior of the building consists of a single high hall (despite the impression, from the outside that this is a two-storey building) centred on an elaborately corbelled column known as the Throne Pillar, supporting a large circular platform from which four balustraded bridges radiate outwards. Seated upon this throne, the emperor held discussions with representatives of diverse religions, aiming to synthesize India's religions into one. The pillar symbolizes this project by incorporating motifs drawn from Hinduism, Buddhism, Islam and Christianity.

Next to the Diwan-i-Khas lies the three-roomed Treasury, its brackets embellished by mythical sea creatures, guardians of the treasures of the deep; it's also known as Ankh Michauli, meaning hide and seek, which it's said was played here. In fact, both names are probably just fanciful inventions, and the building most likely served as a multipurpose pavilion which could be used for a variety of functions, as could most buildings in Mughal palaces. Attached to it is the so-called Astrologer's Seat, a small pavilion embellished with elaborate Jain carvings.

In the middle of the courtyard, separating the Diwan-i-Khas from the buildings on the opposite (south) side of the complex is the Pachisi Court, a giant board used to play pachisi (similar to ludo). Akbar is said to have been a fanatical player, using slave girls dressed in colourful costumes as live pieces. Abu'l Fazl, the court chronicler, related that at "times more than two hundred persons participated, and no one was allowed to go home until he had played sixteen rounds. This could take up to three months. If one of the players lost his patience and became restless, he was made to drink a cupful of wine. Seen superficially, this appears to be just a game. But His Majesty pursues higher objectives. He weighs up the talents of his people and teaches them to be affable."

House of the Turkish Sultana Diagonally opposite the pachisi board, the House of the Turkish Sultana (or Anup Talao Pavilion) gained its name from the popular belief that it was the residence of one of Akbar's favourite wives, the Sultana Ruqayya Begum – though this seems unlikely given its location in the centre of the men's quarters. The name was probably made up by nineteenth-century guides to titillate early tourists, and the building is more likely to have served as a simple pleasure pavilion. Its superbly carved stone walls are covered with a profusion of floral and geometrical designs, plus some partially vandalized animal carvings.

South of here is the Anup Talao (Peerless Pool), a pretty ornamental pond divided by four walkways connected to a small "island" in the middle – a layout reminiscent of the raised walkways inside the Diwan-i-Khas.

The Daulat Khana Facing the Turkish Sultana's house from the other side of the Anup Talao are Akbar's former private sleeping and living quarters, the Daulat Khana ("Abode of Fortune"). The room on the ground floor with alcoves in its walls was the emperor's library, where he would be read to (he himself was illiterate) from a collection of fifty thousand manuscripts he allegedly took everywhere with him. Behind the library is the imperial sleeping chamber, the Khwabgah ("House of Dreams"), with an enormous raised bed in its centre.

Panch Mahal One of Fatehpur Sikri's most famous structures, the Panch Mahal or "Five-Storeyed Palace", looms northwest of here, marking the beginning of the zenana (women's quarters) which make up the entire western side of the palace complex. The palace tapers to a final single kiosk and is supported by 176 columns of varying designs; the ground floor contains 84 pillars – an auspicious number in Hindu astrology. The open spaces between the pillars were originally covered with latticed screens, so that ladies of the zenana could observe goings-on in the courtyard of the mardana below without themselves being seen.

The women's quarters Directly behind the Panch Mahal, a courtyard garden was reserved for the zenana (harem). The adjoining Sunahra Makan (Golden House), also known as Mariam's House, is variously thought to have been the home of the emperor's mother or of Akbar's wife Mariam. It is enlivened by the faded remains of paintings on its walls (whose now vanished golden paint gave the pavilion its name), by the lines of verse penned by Abu'l Fazl, inscribed around the ceiling in blue bands, and by the quaint little carvings tucked into the brackets supporting the roof, including several elephants and a tiny carving of Rama attended by Hanuman (on the north side of the building, facing the zenana courtyard garden).

AKBAR'S HAREM ALTHOUGH REMEMBERED PRIMARILY FOR HIS LIBERAL APPROACH TO RELIGION, AKBAR WAS TYPICALLY MUGHAL IN HIS ATTITUDES TO WOMEN, WHOM HE COLLECTED IN MUCH THE SAME WAY AS A PHILATELIST AMASSES STAMPS. AT ITS HEIGHT OF SPLENDOUR, THE ROYAL HAREM AT FATEHPUR SIKRI HELD AROUND FIVE THOUSAND WOMEN, GUARDED BY A LEGION OF EUNUCHS. ITS DOORS WERE CLOSED TO OUTSIDERS, BUT RUMOURS PERMEATED THE SANDSTONE WALLS AND SEVERAL NOTABLE TRAVELLERS WERE SMUGGLED INSIDE THE GREAT MUGHALS' SERAGLIOS, LEAVING FOR POSTERITY OFTEN LURID ACCOUNTS OF THE EMPERORS' PRIVATE LIVES.

The size of Akbar's harem grew in direct proportion to his empire. With each new conquest, he would be gifted by the defeated rulers and nobles their most beautiful daughters, who, together with their maidservants, would be installed in the luxurious royal zenana. In all, the emperor is thought to have kept three hundred wives; their ranks were swollen by a constant flow of concubines (kaniz), dancing girls (kanchni) and female slaves (bandis), or "silver bodied damsels with musky tresses" as one chronicler described them, purchased from markets across Asia. Screened from public view by ornately pierced stone jali windows were women from the four corners of the Mughal empire, as well as Afghans, Turks, Iranians, Arabs, Tibetans, Russians and Abyssinians, and even one Portuguese, sent as presents or tribute.

The eunuchs who presided over them came from similarly diverse backgrounds. While some were hermaphrodites, others had been forcibly castrated, either as punishment following defeat on the battlefield, or after having been donated by their fathers as payment of backdated revenue – an all-too-common custom at the time.

Akbar is said to have consumed prodigious quantities of Persian wine, araq (a spirit distilled from sugar cane), bhang and opium. The lavish dance recitals held in the harem, as well as sexual liaisons conducted on the top pavilion of the Panch Mahal and in the zenana itself, would have been fuelled by these substances. Over time, Akbar's hedonistic ways incurred the disapproval of his highest clerics – the Ulema.

What life must have been like for the women who lived in Akbar's harem one can only imagine, but it is known that alcoholism and drug addiction were widespread, and that some also risked their lives to conduct illicit affairs with male lovers, smuggled in disguised as physicians or under heavy Muslim veils.

In fact, the notion that the harem was a gilded prison whose inmates whiled their lifetimes away in idle vanity and dalliance is something of a myth. Many women in the zenana were immensely rich in their own right and wielded enormous influence on the court. Jahangir's wife, Nur Jahan, virtually ran the empire from behind the screen of purdah during the last five years of her husband's ailing reign, while her mother-in-law owned a ship that traded between Surat and the Red Sea, a tradition continued by Shah Jahan's daughter, who grew immensely wealthy through her business enterprises.

Solemnly presiding over the whole complex is the main harem, known as Jodhbai's Palace. The residence of several of the emperor's senior wives, this striking building is the grandest and largest in the entire city and looks decidedly Hindu even in the eclectic context of Fatehpur Sikri, having been modelled after Rajput palaces such as those at Gwalior and Orchha.

On the north side of the palace, the Hawa Mahal ("Palace of the Winds"), a small screened tower with a delicately carved chamber, was designed to catch the evening breeze, while a raised covered walkway, lined with five large chhatris, leads from here to a (now vanished) lake.

Northwest of Jodhbai's Palace lies a third women's palace, known as Birbal's Palace – though this is another misnomer, as Birbal, Akbar's favourite courtier, was a man and would have been most unwelcome in the middle of the zenana. It's more likely to have been the residence of two of Akbar's senior wives.

Archeological Museum Daily except Fri 9am–5pm • Free • Photography not allowed • Free half-hour film presentations at 9.30am, 12.30pm & 4pm Housed in Akbar's old Treasury Building, the Archeological Museum has a small display of artefacts found in excavations on the site. Although the city itself is Mughal, there were settlements here going back some four thousand years, though all you'll see of the earliest ones are a few potshards. There was also evidently a Jain temple here in the ninth to twelfth centuries AD, and remains from that are rather more impressive, including a fine statue of Srutidevi Jaina Saraswati.

Jama Masjid Daily dawn–dusk • Free

Southwest of the palace complex, with the village of Fatehpur Sikri nestling at its base, stands the Jama Masjid or Dargah Mosque, one of the finest in the whole of India. Unfortunately, pestilential self-appointed “guides” make it all but impossible to enjoy the place in peace. The mosque was apparently completed in 1571, before work on the palace commenced, showing the religious significance which Akbar accorded the entire site. This was due to its connections with the Sufi saint Sheikh Salim Chishti, who is buried here, and who played a crucial role in the founding of Fatehpur Sikri by prophesying the birth of a son to the emperor: when one of Akbar’s wives, Rani Jodhabai, a Hindu Rajput princess from Amber, became pregnant, she was sent here until the birth of her son Salim, who later became the emperor Jahangir. Fatehpur Sikri was constructed in the saint’s honour.

Buland Darwaza The neck-cracking Buland Darwaza (Great Gate), a spectacular entrance scaled by an impressive flight of steps, was added around 1576 to commemorate Akbar’s military campaign in Gujarat. Flanked by domed kiosks, the archway of the simple sandstone memorial is inscribed with a message from the Koran: “Said Jesus Son of Mary (peace be on him): The world is but a bridge – pass over without building houses on it. He who hopes for an hour hopes for eternity; the world is an hour – spend it in prayer for the rest is unseen.” The numerous horseshoes nailed to the doors here date from the beginning of the twentieth century – an odd instance of British folk superstition in this very Islamic place.

Tomb of Sheikh Salim Chishti The gate leads into a vast cloistered courtyard, far larger than in any mosque previously built in India. The prayer hall, on the west (left) side, is the focus of the mosque, punctuated by an enormous gateway. More eye-catching is the exquisite Tomb of Sheikh Salim Chishti, directly ahead as you enter the courtyard. Much of this was originally crafted in red sandstone and only later faced in marble: the beautiful lattice screens – another design feature probably imported from Gujarat, though it would later become a staple of Mughal architecture – are unusually intricate, with striking serpentine exterior brackets supporting the eaves.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY TRAIN FATEHPUR SIKRI
THERE ARE FOUR DAILY TRAINS FROM FATEHPUR SIKRI TO AGRA FORT (1HR–1HR 20MIN), AND ONE TO AGRA CANTT (1HR), PLUS OVERNIGHT SERVICES TO KOTA, BUNDI AND CHITTAURGARH, AND THRICE-WEEKLY TO LUCKNOW AND (THOUGH NOT CONVENIENTLY TIMED) MUMBAI. THE STATION HAS A COMPUTER RESERVATION OFFICE, AND IS A GOOD PLACE TO MAKE BOOKINGS AS THERE ISN'T USUALLY ANY QUEUE.

By bus Buses to Agra's Idgah Bus Stand leave either from the crowded bus stand in the centre of the village (every 30min until 4.30pm; 1hr–1hr 30min) or from the bus stop on the bypass near Agra Gate, about 1.5km from town (about ₹20 by auto-rickshaw from the village, also connected by a ₹10 CNG bus to the palace entrance). At the bypass you'll also find buses to Jaipur (hourly; 4hr) and Bharatpur (hourly; 30–45min).

Services The Hotel Goverdhan will change dollars, pounds or euros (in cash or plastic), offers free tourist information and can arrange tours of Rajasthan.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING

MAP

You'll probably eat where you stay. If you want to go out, try the Goverdhan or the Ajay Palace hotel. Fatehpur Sikri's delicious biscuits are not to be missed – you can savour them hot out of the oven each evening at the bakeries on the lane leading up from the village to the Jama Masjid.

Ajay Palace Agra Rd 📍05613 282950. Simple hotel in the village, with small, plain rooms, all clean with attached bathrooms (though hot water comes in buckets). There's also a nice little rooftop terrace restaurant and good food. No wi-fi. ₹

★Goverdhan Buland Gate Rd, just east of the bus stand, 📍hotelfatehpursikriviews.com. A wide range of well-kept rooms (all attached with hot running water) arranged around a neat lawn, with an

upstairs veranda, good food (made with filtered water) and a friendly, helpful proprietor. ₹₹

Sunset View 100m west of the Jama Masjid 094123 84416. Backpacker guesthouse offering neat, clean (if basic) rooms and superb views over the Jama Masjid and the countryside beyond. Most rooms are attached, but hot water comes in buckets. They can also direct you on birdwatching walks in the surrounding area. ₹

UPTDC Gulistan Tourist Complex Agra Rd, 1km east of the village; W upstdc.co.in. A low-rise, modern building in red sandstone, which looks rather like an academic institution, and has decent if functional rooms set around a series of lawns, plus a restaurant, a pool room and a beer bar. ₹

Jhansi

Despite its seventeenth-century fort, the rail- and road-junction town of JHANSI, in an anomalous promontory of UP that thrusts south into Madhya Pradesh, is not much visited by tourists. Most stop only long enough to catch a connecting bus to Khajuraho, 175km southeast in Madhya Pradesh, but Jhansi is worth a visit in its own right. Like Avadh, Jhansi was an independent state until the British summarily annexed it in 1854, and was consequently a major centre of support for the 1857 uprising, under the leadership of Rani Lakshmibai, its last ruler's widow, and the uprising's great heroine.

Jhansi Fort Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge; video camera charge • Sound-and-light show (English version) daily: two shows from 7–9pm • Charge Dominating it all from a bare brown craggy hill, Jhansi Fort, built in 1613 by Bir Singh Joo Deo, raja of Orchha, is worth visiting primarily for the views from its ramparts. Rani Lakshmibai is supposed to have leapt over the west wall on horseback to escape the British, though she must have had a very athletic horse to do so. Inside the fort are a couple of unremarkable temples, plus an old cistern and the ruins of a palace.

Rani Lakshmi Mahal Nehru Marg • Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge • No photography allowed Two minutes' walk from the roundabout below the fort, the Rani Lakshmi Mahal is a small stately home in “Bundela style” (lots of ornate balconies and domed roofs), built as a palace for the rani. The home was the scene of a brutal massacre in 1858, when British troops bayoneted all its occupants (they murdered some five thousand people in all after recapturing Jhansi from the insurgents).

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY TRAIN JHANSI IS THE MOST CONVENIENT MAIN RAILWAY STATION FOR ORCHHA. THE STATION IS ON THE WEST SIDE OF TOWN, 1.5KM FROM THE CENTRE. THERE'S A DAY TRAIN TO KHAJURAHO, THE #19666 UDAIPUR–KHAJURAHO EXPRESS (DEPARTS 2.05PM; ARRIVES 6.50PM). NUMEROUS TRAINS SERVE AGRA, MOSTLY TAKING AROUND 3HR, ALTHOUGH THE #12001 SHATABDI EXPRESS AT 6.40PM TAKES ONLY 2HR 40MIN.

By bus The bus stand on the eastern edge of town – 1.5km from the centre, 3km from the station – has hourly departures for Khajuraho (5hr). It's generally better to take a shared tempo to Orchha and an onward bus from there, or better still, go by train.

By tempo Shared tempos for Orchha (45min; ₹20) wait alongside the bus stand, but they tend to dry up around 5pm. An auto from Jhansi to Orchha will cost around ₹200.

Tourist information The UP Tourist Office at the Hotel Veerangana on Shivpuri Rd (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm; ☎0510 244 1267) provides town plans and information on Bundelkhand and the route to Khajuraho, but they often close up before time. At the station, UP Tourism have a kiosk on platform 1 (daily 10am–5pm, but may close briefly for breaks as it has a staff of only one), and MP Tourism have one next door (daily 10am–5pm; ☎0510 244 2622), with information about getting to Khajuraho.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING JHANSI SHASTRI MARG, CANTONMENT (OPPOSITE THE GPO), 📍JHANSIHOTEL.COM.

DELUXE, SUPER-MODERN, SINGLE-STOREY HOTEL WHOSE STYLISH ROOMS GIVE ONTO A LAWN THAT'S OFTEN USED FOR RECEPTIONS. THERE ARE EVEN SOME "COTTAGES", WHICH ARE BASICALLY DELUXE TENTS, IN CASE YOU FANCY A BIT OF GLAMPING. NO POOL AND NO BAR, HOWEVER. ₹₹₹

Nav Bharat Shastri Marg, Sadar Bazaar (300m up the street from Jhansi Hotel) 0510 247 0025. Veg or non-veg thalis, dosas, curries, burgers and sizzlers, served up fast-food-style. ₹₹

Raj Palace Shastri Marg, Cantonment (near the GPO) 0510 247 0554, hotelrajpalacejhansi@rediffmail.com. A friendly hotel in a quiet location. The rooms are quite spacious and presentable, and are all attached, but they don't all have widows, there's no wi-fi. ₹₹

Sharma Sweets Shastri Marg, Sadar Bazaar (a few doors from Nav Bharat) 0510 247 1666. A good spot for a bit of mithai confectionery – the nutty dry fruit ladoo is wonderful. ₹

Lucknow

UP's state capital, LUCKNOW, is best remembered abroad for the ordeal of its British residents during a five-month siege of the Residency in 1857. Less remembered are the atrocities perpetrated by the British when they recaptured the city. Lucknow saw the last days of Muslim rule in India, and the summary British deposition in 1856 of Wajid Ali Shah, the last nawab of Avadh, was one of the main causes of the 1857 uprising.

Extraordinary sandstone monuments, now engulfed by modern Lucknow, still testify to the euphoric atmosphere of the Islamic Avadh's unique culture. European-inspired edifices, too, are prominent on the skyline, often embellished with flying buttresses, turrets, cupolas and floral patterns, but the brick and mortar with which they were constructed means that they are not ageing as well as the earlier stone buildings, and colonial Lucknow is literally crumbling away.

Brief history Avadh (Oudh, as the British spelt it) broke away from the Mughal Empire in the mid-eighteenth century after its nawab, Safdarjang, was thrown out of office in Delhi for being a Shi'ite, but as the Mughal Empire declined, Avadh became the centre of Muslim power. Under the decadent later nawabs, the arts flourished. Lucknow, the Avadhi capital, became a magnet for artisans. Courtesans became poets, singers and dancers, and under the last nawab the amorous musical form called thumri emerged here. The city was also an important repository of Shi'a culture and Islamic jurisprudence, its Farangi Mahal law school attracting students from China and Central Asia.

The patronage of the Shi'ite nawabs also produced new expressions of the faith, notably in the annual Muharram processions. Held in memory of the martyrdom of Muhammad's grandson Hussain (the second Shi'ite Imam) at Karbala in Iraq, these developed into elaborate affairs with tazia, ornate paper reproductions of Hussein's Karbala shrine, being carried through the streets. During the rest of the year the tazia images are kept in Imambara (houses of the Imam); these range from humble rooms in poor Shi'ite households to the Great Imambara built by Asaf-ud-daula in 1784.

Hussainabad In the west of the city, in the vicinity of Hardinge Bridge (or Pucca Pul) around "old" Lucknow, lie several crumbling relics of the nawabs of Avadh. Among them are two particularly impressive imambaras (great halls used for Shi'ite religious commemorations).

Bara Imambara Hussainabad Rd • Daily sunrise–sunset, closed on Sun during Muharram • Charge (ticket includes Hussainabad Imambara and Picture Gallery) The Bara Imambara boasts one of the largest vaulted halls in the world – 50m long and 15m high. Flat on top, slightly arched inside, this imambara was built by Asaf-ud-daula in 1784 without the aid of a single iron or wooden beam; the roof was constructed using a technique known as kara dena, in which bricks are broken and angled to form an interlocking section and then covered with concrete – here several metres thick. The imambara is approached through what must have been an extravagant gate, now rather battered. Two successive courtyards lead from the gate to the imambara, on the left-hand side of which steps lead up to a fascinating labyrinth of chambers known as bhulbhulaiya – the “maze”.

Overlooking the Bara Imambara from the south, the Asfi Mosque is set on a two-tiered arcaded plinth with two lofty minarets. Even though it is inside the Bara Imambara compound, it is closed to non-Muslims, but anyone can check out its exterior from the gardens adjoining it to the west.

Rumi Darwaza Hussainabad Rd, Lajpat Nagar Colony • Daily 24hrs • Free Straddling the main road west of the Bara Imambara’s entrance gates, the colossal Rumi Darwaza is an ornamental victory arch modelled on one of the gates to Asia Minor in Istanbul (known to the Islamic world in Byzantine times as “Rum”). Now decaying, it sports elaborate floral patterns and a few extraordinary trumpets; steps lead up to open chambers that command a general prospect of the monuments of Hussainabad.

Hussainabad Imambara and around Hussainabad Rd • Same hours and ticket as Bara Imambara • Charge A short distance west of the Rumi Darwaza, the lavish Hussainabad Imambara is also known as the Chhota (small) Imambara, or the Palace of Lights, thanks to its fairy-tale appearance when decorated and illuminated for special occasions. The raised bathing pool in front of it, which is approached via a spacious courtyard, adds to the overall atmosphere. A central gilded dome dominates the whole ensemble, busy with minarets, small domes and arches and even a crude miniature Taj Mahal. Built in 1837 by Muhammad Ali Shah, partly to provide famine relief through employment, the Imambara houses a silver-faced throne, plus the tombs of important Avadhi personalities. The dummy gate opposite the main entrance was used by ceremonial musicians, while the unfinished watchtower is known as the Satkhanda or “Seven Storeys”, even though only four were ever constructed.

Beyond the Hussainabad Tank is the isolated 67-metre-high Hussainabad clock tower, an ambitious Gothic affair completed in 1887 which carries the largest clock in India. Southwest of the Hussainabad Imambara, and surrounded by ruins, are the two soaring minarets and three domes of the Jama Masjid. Commissioned by Muhammad Ali Shah, who ruled Avadh 1837–42, the mosque was only completed after his death.

Muhammad Ali Shah Art Gallery Hussainabad Rd • Same hours and ticket as Bara Imambara • Charge Close to the clock tower monolith lies Taluqdar's Hall, built by Muhammad Ali Shah to house the offices of the Hussainabad Trust and the dusty Picture Gallery, also known as the Muhammad Ali Shah Art Gallery. Arranged chronologically, the portraits of nawabs graphically demonstrate the decline of their civilization, as the figures become progressively portlier. In a famous image, the androgynous-looking last nawab, Wajid Ali Shah (1847–56), is shown in a daringly low-cut top that reveals his left nipple.

The Residency Daily sunrise–sunset; museum daily except Fri 8am–4.30pm • Charge; video camera charge The blasted Residency rests in peace amid landscaped gardens southeast of Hardinge Bridge – a battle-scarred ruin left exactly as it stood when the siege was finally relieved by Sir Colin Campbell on November 17, 1857. Its cannonball-shattered tower became a shrine to the tenacity of the British in India, and continued to be maintained as such even after Independence.

THE LUCKNOW RESIDENCY SIEGE THE INSURGENT SEPOYS WHO ENTERED LUCKNOW ON JUNE 30, 1857, FOUND THE CITY RIFE WITH RESENTMENT AGAINST THE RECENT BRITISH TAKEOVER OF THE KINGDOM OF AVADH. THE TINY AND ISOLATED BRITISH GARRISON, UNDER THE COMMAND OF SIR HENRY LAWRENCE, TOOK REFUGE IN THE RESIDENCY, WHICH BECAME THE FOCUS OF A FIERCE STRUGGLE.

Less than a third of the three thousand British residents and loyal Indians who crammed into the Residency survived the four-and-a-half-month siege. So unhygienic were their living conditions that those who failed to succumb to gangrenous and tetanus-infected wounds often fell victim to cholera and scurvy. While a barrage of heavy artillery was maintained by both sides, the insurgents attempted to tunnel under the defences and lay mines, but among the British were former tin-miners in the 32nd (Cornish) Regiment, who were far more adept at such things, and were able to follow the sounds of enemy chipping, defuse mines, and even blow up several sepoy-controlled buildings.

Morale remained high among the 1400 noncombatants, who included fifty schoolboys from La Martinière, and class distinctions were upheld throughout. While the wives of European soldiers and non-commissioned officers, children and servants took refuge in the tikhana (cellar), the “ladies” of the Residency occupied the higher and airier chambers, until the unfortunate loss of one Miss Palmer’s leg on July 1 persuaded them of the gravity of their predicament. Sir Henry Lawrence was fatally wounded the next day. The wealthier officers managed to maintain their own private hoard of supplies, living in much their usual style. Matters improved when, after three months, Brigadier-General Sir Henry Havelock arrived with reinforcements, and the normal round of visits and invitations to supper was resumed despite the inconvenient shortage of good food and wine. Not until November 17 was the siege finally broken by a force of Sikhs and Highlanders under Sir Colin Campbell. Their offers of tea, however, were turned down by the Residency women; they were used to taking it with milk, which the soldiers could not supply.

During the siege, every building in the complex was utilized for the hard-fought defence of the compound. The Treasury, on the right through the Baillie Guard Gate, served as an arsenal, while the sumptuous Banqueting Hall, immediately west, was a makeshift hospital, and the extensive single-storey Dr Fayer’s House, just south, housed women and children. Most of the original structures, such as Begum Kothi, were left standing to impede direct fire from the enemy. On the lawn outside Begum Kothi, a large cross honours Sir Henry Lawrence, the man responsible for building its defences and who died shortly after hostilities began.

The pockmarked Residency itself holds a small museum. On the ground floor, the Model Room, the only one with its roof intact, houses a large model of the defences and of the Residency and a small but excellent collection of images, including etchings showing wall breaches blocked up with billiard tables and a soldier blacking up in preparation for a dash across enemy lines.

Hazratganj With its shops and upmarket restaurants and hotels, and a concentration of banks and other services, Hazratganj is the modern centre of Lucknow. Though not as bustling as the older Kaiserbagh and Aminabad neighbourhoods to its west, Hazratganj still has quite a buzz, plus a handful of interesting sights.

Shah Najaf Imambara Rana Pratap Marg (opposite Carlton Hotel) • Sat–Thurs 6am–6pm, Fri 6am–noon & 2–6pm • Free With its huge dome, the Shah Najaf Imambara, named after the tomb of Ali in Iraq, is at its best when adorned with lights during the holy month of Muharram. Its musty interior holds some incredibly garish chandeliers used in processions, several tazia, and the silver-faced tomb of the decadent and profligate Ghazi-ud-din-Haidar (ruled 1814–27), buried with three of his queens.

Sikandrabadh Rana Pratap Marg • Botanical Gardens Mon–Fri: April–Sept 5–9am; Oct–March 6–9am (last entry ticket sold 8.30am) • Charge The Imambara was commandeered as an insurgent stronghold in 1857, and the crucial battle that enabled the British to relieve the Residency was fought in the adjacent pleasure gardens of Sikandrabadh on November 16. It took one and a half hours of bombardment by Sir Colin Campbell's soldiers to breach the defences of the two thousand sepoys; then the Sikhs and 93rd Highlanders poured through. There was no escape for the terrified sepoys, some of whom are said to have believed the bloodstained, red-faced, kilted Scots to be the ghosts of a group of European women slaughtered at Kanpur earlier in the uprising. Driven against the north wall, the sepoys were either bayoneted or shot, and the dead and dying piled shoulder-high. Tranquil once again, Sikandrabadh is now home to the National Botanical Research Institute and the beautiful Botanical Gardens, with manicured lawns, conservatories, nurseries and herb, rose and bougainvillea gardens.

La Martinière La Martinière Rd

Towards the east of Lucknow, an extraordinary chateau-like building has become almost a symbol of the city – La Martinière remains to this day an exclusive boys' school in the finest colonial tradition. It was built as a country retreat by Major-General Claude Martin, a French soldier-adventurer taken prisoner by the British in Puducherry. The enigmatic Martin later joined the East India Company, made his fortune in indigo, and served both the British and the nawabs of Avadh. The building is an outrageous but intriguing amalgam, crowned by flying walkways; Greco-Roman figures on the parapets give it a busy silhouette, gigantic heraldic lions gaze across the grounds, and a large bronze cannon graces the front. Martin himself is buried in the basement. During the uprising, La Martinière was occupied by insurgent forces, its boys having been evacuated to the Residency.

The zoo and State Museum Rana Pratap Marg • Zoo Daily 8.30am–5pm • Charge; video camera charge • lucknowzoo.com • State Museum Tues–Sun 10.30am–4pm • Charge (buy ticket at zoo entrance)
Close to the centre of Hazratganj, its grounds dotted with derelict Avadhi monuments, Lucknow's small zoo also serves as an amusement park with a miniature train to view the animals.

Inside the zoo, the State Museum exhibits delicate, speckled-red-sandstone sculpture from the Mathura School of the Kushana and Gupta periods (first to sixth centuries AD). Besides sculpture from Gandhara, Mahoba, Nalanda and Sravasti, it has a gallery of terracotta artefacts and even an Egyptian mummy. Musical instruments, paintings and costumes provide atmosphere in the Avadh gallery, while the natural history section is a taxidermist's dream.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE AMAUSI LUCKNOW AIRPORT IS 16KM SOUTH OF TOWN ON THE KANPUR RD (AROUND ₹400 BY TAXI FROM THE CITY CENTRE, OR ₹300 BY UBER OR OLA; IT'S SERVED BY THE METRO AND CONNECTED TO THE ALAMBAGH INTER STATE BUS TERMINAL AND CHARBAGH RAILWAY STATION). DESTINATIONS INCLUDE DELHI (WITH AIR INDIA AND INDIGO), MUMBAI (GO AND INDIGO), PATNA (INDIGO), KOLKATA (INDIGO), HYDERABAD (INDIGO) AND BENGALURU (INDIGO).

By train Lucknow's busy railway station (with a computer-ized reservations office at the eastern end of its forecourt) is in Charbagh, 4km southwest of Hazratganj (₹100 by auto). Note that Lucknow Junction (on the Northeastern Railway) is actually a separate station from the main one (just plain Lucknow, on the Northern Railway), and adjoins it to the west, at the end of the same forecourt; make sure you go to the right station to get your train. For Khajuraho, the #15205 Chitrakoot Express at 5.30pm reaches Banda at 10.05pm, which ought to give you enough time to pick up the #01026 Dadar Central Special Fare train at 3.02am, arriving in Khajuraho at 5.30am.

By bus Most intercity buses operate from Charbagh ISBT, opposite Lucknow Junction station, which has hourly departures to Delhi (12hr), Gorakhpur (8hr) and Varanasi (9hr). A few buses use the more central Kaiserbagh Bus Stand (₹50 by cycle rickshaw from Hazratganj), which has departures to Dehradun (3 daily; 10hr 30min) and Haridwar (3 daily; 10hr). The Alambagh ISBT has direct links to Agra (hourly; 5hr) and Prayagraj (hourly; 3hr). Check routes and timetables at upsrtonline.co.in.

GETTING AROUND BY TEMPO MULTISEATER TEMPOS (VIKRAMS) PLY REGULAR ROUTES SUCH AS FROM CHARBAGH TO THE GPO.

Car rental Cars (with driver) can be hired from Great Value Travels at Hotel Clarks Avadh, 8 MG Marg by Clarks Avadh Crossing (☎0522 262 7228), or UP Tours (see below) at the Hotel Gomti (☎0522 261 2659). Uber and Ola work best.

Metro The red metro line runs from the airport in the south to Munshipulia in the north. The blue metro line connects Vasant Kunj in the West to Charbagh on the red line.

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURIST INFORMATION THE UP TOURISM OFFICE IS INCONVENIENTLY LOCATED AT C-13 VIPIN KHAND IN GOMTI NAGAR, 3KM EAST OF TOWN (MON-FRI 10AM-5PM; ☎UPTOURISM.GOV.IN), BUT THEY ALSO HAVE A KIOSK IN THE STATION (DAILY 6AM-9.30PM). IF ALL YOU NEED IS A TOWN PLAN, YOU CAN PICK ONE UP FROM THEIR TOUR AGENCY, UP TOURS AT HOTEL GOMTI, 6 SAPRU (MON–SAT 9.30AM–6.30PM; 📞UPSTDC.CO.IN). LUCKNOW ALSO HAS OFFICES OF BOTH GMVN (FOR GARHWAL, WESTERN UTTARAKHAND), AT 4-7RF KHUSHNUMA COMPLEX, BAHADUR MARG (📞0522 220 7844), AND KMVN (FOR KUMAON, EASTERN UTTARAKHAND), AT KMVN UTTARAKHAND BHAWAN (NEAR NTPC VIBHUTIKHAND), GOMTI NAGAR (📞0522 272 3960). THERE’S A GOOD INFORMATION WEBSITE ABOUT LUCKNOW AT 📞LUCKNOW.ORG.UK, AND A LISTINGS SITE AT 📞UP.GOV.IN.

Tours Comprehensive daily city tours (₹850), which must be booked in advance through UP Tours (see above), and only run if they have three or more takers, leave the Hotel Gomti at 9.45am and return at 2.30pm. The price includes guide and entrance fees. A 2hr Heritage Walk starts bright and early at 7.30am daily in summer, 8am in winter (₹300) from Tile Wale Masjid north of Shah Najaf Imambara; for details 📞bit.ly/3pWsS1L

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Amber Subhash Marg, Naka Hindola 📞0522 268 3201. Good value near the station: a range of spacious rooms at different prices, all attached, most with a/c but a few just air-cooled. The cheapest rooms go quickly. 24hr checkout. ₹₹

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM LUCKNOW THE TRAINS BELOW ARE RECOMMENDED AS THE FASTEST AND/OR MOST CONVENIENT FOR SPECIFIC CITIES. ALL THOSE LISTED HERE RUN DAILY.

Destination	Name	No.	From	Departs	Arrives
Agra Fort	Marudhar Express	#14863	L	12.15am	6.40am
Agra Cantt	Intercity Express	#12179	LJ	3.55pm	9.49pm

Delhi (ND)	Shatabdi Express*	#12003	LJ	3.35pm	10.20pm
	Lucknow Mail	#12229	L	10.00pm	6.55am
Gorakhpur	Katihar Express	#15708	L	2.20am	8.15am
Kathgodam	Bagh Express	#13019	LJ	12.30am	9.15am
Kolkata	Doon Express	#13010	L	8.45am	7.00am+
	Howrah Mail	#13006	L	10.40am	7.30am+
Mumbai CST	Pushpak Express	#12533	L	9.30pm	10.45pm+
Prayagraj	Intercity Express	#14210	L	7.35am	11.40am
Varanasi	Begampura Express	#12238	L	7.20am	12.30pm
	Howrah Mail	#13006	L	10.40am	4.50pm

L: Lucknow main station (Northern Railway); LJ: Lucknow Junction (Northeastern Railway); ND: New Delhi station; *a/c only; + next day

Arif Castles 4 Rana Pratap Marg 🌐 arifcastles.com. Quite well-appointed in marble, brass and light blue, this boutique hotel, as it describes itself, has cool rooms, a/c, cable TV and an Avadhi cuisine restaurant. Rates include breakfast. ₹₹₹

Deep Avadh Aminabad Rd, Naka Hindola 🌐 deephotels.com/deepawadh. Good a/c rooms in various sizes with 24hr room service, as well as two restaurants, bar and travel desk, in an interesting part of town close to the station and on the edge of bustling Aminabad. 24hr checkout. ₹₹

Elora 3 Lalbagh 🌐 lordshotels.com. Popular place with a wide range of different rooms, including some with a/c (₹1200). Facilities include cable TV in all rooms, 24hr room service and a multi-cuisine restaurant, but no wi-fi. ₹₹

Gemini Continental 10 Rani Laximbai Marg, Hazratganj 🌐 geminicontinental.com. Snazzy, upscale hotel in the centre of town.

Spacious, modern rooms with great views, minibar, cable TV, a/c and 24hr room service. Buffet breakfast is included. ₹₹₹

★Go Awadh 5/39 Vishal Khand, Gomti Nagar 📞9161 034 777 🌐 goawadh.com. Lucknow's first hostel and co-working space, set in a quiet neighbourhood, is far from the city sights, but has spacious, squeaky clean, en suite doubles and dorms to suit every budget. The bamboo-furnished garden is the perfect place to relax. Booking in advance and online will save you a considerable amount. Doubles ₹₹; dorms ₹

La Place Sarovar Portico 6 Shah Najaf Rd, Hazratganj 🌐 sarovarhotels.com. Small but smart, modern business hotel whose facilities include a business centre and executive offices, a rooftop bar-restaurant and a 24hr coffee shop, but no pool. Buffet breakfast included. Discounts usually available. ₹₹₹

Levana Suites 72 Mahatma Gandhi Marg, Hazratganj 🌐 levanahotels.com. Central and cosy hotel with large, well decorated rooms, a spa and a gym. On its creatively decorated rooftop is Elev8, a swanky book café, and the first silent-disco in Lucknow, open from 6.30pm. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

The rich traditional Lucknavi cuisine – featuring Mughlai dishes as well as the local dum pukht (steam casserole) style, sometimes known as handi after the pot it's cooked in – is available from food stalls throughout the city, in places such as Shami Avadh Bazaar, near the K.D. Singh Babu Stadium, the Chowk, Aminabad and behind the Tulsi Theatre in Hazratganj. Lucknavi “kebabs” – extremely delicious – are in fact fried patties of very finely minced meat. The bazaars are the place to get Lucknow's popular breakfast speciality paya-khulcha, a spicy mutton soup served with hot breads. These eateries will serve your individual interests, but if you want to get a taste of the real Lucknow, go to 1090 Local Food Street in Gomti Nagar. From flavourful golgappe, creamy Soya Chaap, flourishing Momos, junk food of various kinds to milk and Tandoori Chai to gulp it all down, this street is irresistible for a food-lover.

Indian Coffee House Ashok Marg 📞904 483 6610. Once a hotbed of Lucknow's political intelligentsia, nick-named the “maternity ward” for the ideas it gave birth to, now reborn as a bright, new café serving excellent filter coffee plus cakes, shakes, snacks and Avadhi, south Indian and Chinese food. ₹₹

Jone Hing MG Marg, Hazratganj 0933 571 1772. Chinese restaurant serving the usual sweet-and-sour, chop suey and chow mein, plus specialities such as Manchurian chicken lollipop (drumsticks in sauce) or chilli fish. ₹₹

Moti Mahal 75 MG Marg, Hazratganj 0522 404 8101. The sweet shop at the front has some great milky confec-tions, including sugar-free ones; the family restaurant upstairs serves excellent veg curries, including three types of dum aloo (Lucknavi, Banarsi or Kashmiri). ₹₹

MSH Subhash Marg, at Station Rd, Charbagh 0522 404 8130. Cheap dhaba opposite the station serving good dosas, veg curries and thalis. ₹

Royal Café 9–7 Shah Najaf Rd, Hazratganj 0522 402 3535. A lively place that's popular among Lucknavi families. They have plenty of veg dishes, of course, but they tend to specialize in chicken, serving dishes such as Royal Café special chicken (with hard-boiled egg and dried fruit) or chicken handi and there are also Chinese and Continental dishes. ₹₹

Sakhawat's 2 Kaiserbagh Ave (behind Oudh Gymkana Club) 95650 20202. Highly acclaimed Avadhi restaurant and chefs' training school where they specialize in moderately priced Lucknavi cuisine, such as shami kebabs and mutton musallam. ₹₹

★Tunday Kababi Naaz Cinema Rd, just off Aminabad main chowk 93359 11858 ④ tundaykababi.com. For an authentic Avadhi gastronomic experience, head to this popular and inexpensive place (the best in a street of them), where tandoori chicken and kebabs are prepared out front and served up within. ₹₹

SHOPPING

MAP

Lucknow is also renowned for its ittar (or attar), concentrated perfume sold in small vials – an acquired (and expensive) taste. Small balls of cotton wool are daubed with the scent and placed neatly within the top folds of the ear; musicians believe that the aroma heightens their senses. Popular ittar include ambar from amber, khus from a flowering plant and rose-derived ghulab. A long-standing Lucknavi tradition of embroidery is chikan, in which designs are built up to form delicate floral patterns along edges on saris and on necklines and collars of kurtas; workshops can be found around the Chowk, the market area of old Lucknow, and shops and showrooms in Hazratganj (especially Janpath Market), Nazirabad and Aminabad.

Gangotri MG Marg, Hazratganj (half a block west of Lalbagh) ④ uphdmc.in/gangotri_emporium.htm. The UP state crafts emporium has a variety of carvings, carpets, enamel ware, brass figurines, clothes and textiles. The fixed prices here are higher than those in the markets, but the quality is assured and you don't have to haggle.

Sugandhco D-4 Janpath Market (on the south side of the market) ④ scentkart.com. The smell of sweet perfume greets you as you enter this well-established dealer of top-whack own-brand ittar and incense, which is also sold in other shops around town.

DIRECTORY FESTIVALS NOVEMBER'S LUCKNOW FESTIVAL (DETAILS FROM UP TOURISM) IS AN OPPORTUNITY TO SAMPLE THE CITY'S VIBRANT TRADITIONS OF MUSIC AND DANCE.

Prayagraj (Allahabad) and around The administrative and industrial city of PRAYAGRAJ – known as Allahabad until October 2018, when its pre-Mughal name was reinstated to highlight the city's role as a Hindu pilgrimage site – is 135km west of Varanasi and 227km southeast of Lucknow. Prayag means “confluence”, the point where the Yamuna and Ganges rivers meet the mythical Saraswati River.

Sacred to Hindus, the sangam (which also means “confluence”), east of the city, is one of the great pilgrimage destinations of India. Prayagraj comes alive during its melas (fairs) – the annual Magh Mela (Jan/Feb), and the colossal Maha Kumbh Mela, held every twelve years (2025 and 2037 are the next ones).

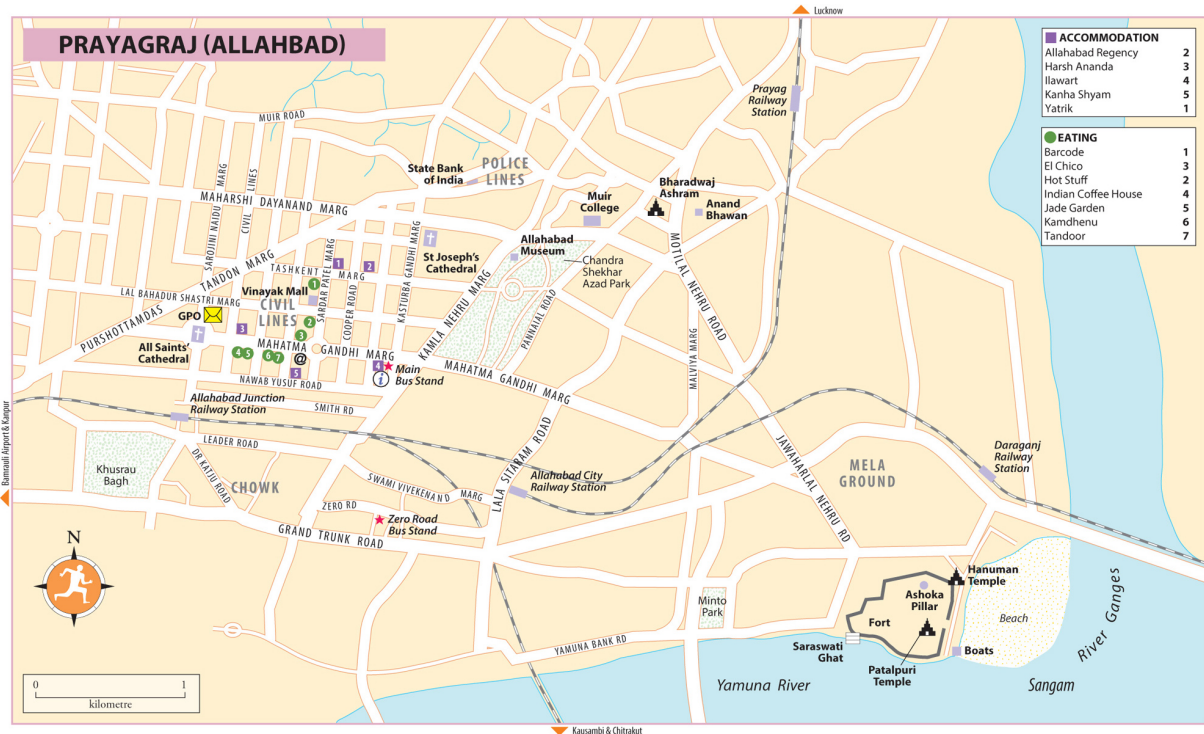

Prayagraj is a pleasant city to visit, with vast, open riverside scenery, attractive street art, and good amenities, but is without major temples or monuments. At the junction of the fertile Doab, the “two-river” valley between the Yamuna and the Ganges, it did however possess a crucial strategic significance; its massive fort, built by the emperor Akbar in 1583, is still used by the military. Another Mughal, Jahangir’s son Khusrau, was murdered here by his brother Shah Jahan, who went on to become emperor. Prayagraj was briefly the centre of power after the 1857 uprising, when the British moved the headquarters of their Northwestern Provinces here from Agra; the formal transfer of power from the East India Company to the Crown took place here the following year.

Central Prayagraj is split in two by the railway line, with the chaotic and congested Old City or Chowk south of Prayagraj Junction station, and the grid of the Civil Lines (the residential quarter of the Raj military town) to the north.

All Saints’ Cathedral Mahatma Gandhi Marg • Daily 8.30am–5.30pm • Free At the western end of the Civil Lines area, the yellow-and-red sandstone bulk of the Gothic All Saints’ Cathedral was designed by Sir William Emerson, architect of Kolkata’s Victoria Memorial. Work began in 1871, but wasn’t completed until the 1920s. Much of its stained glass is still intact, and plaques provide interesting glimpses of Prayagraj in the days of the Raj, while flying buttresses and snarling gargoyles decorate the exterior. To see the inside, you'll need to come by during the Sunday service, which attracts quite large congregations, as do Masses at the flamboyant St Joseph's Roman Catholic Cathedral, a short distance northeast.

Prayagraj Museum Kamla Nehru Marg • Tues–Sun 10.30am–5.30pm, closed the Sun following the 2nd Sat of the month • Charge; camera charge On the edge of the pleasant Chandra Shekhar Azad Park, the grounds of the Prayagraj Museum are dotted with pieces of ancient sculpture. Inside, you'll find early terracotta artefacts, eighth-century sculptures from the Buddhist site of Kaushambi, and a striking twelfth-century image from Khajuraho of Shiva and Parvati. A copious collection of modern Indian art includes work by Haldar, Sajit Khastgir and Rathin Mitra, as well as Jamini Roy, who was inspired by folk art. European paintings concentrate on spiritual themes, with bright, naive canvases by the Russian artist Nicholas Roerich, and pieces by the Tibetologist Lama Angarika Govinda. A natural history section features stuffed animals and birds, while photographs and documents cover the Independence struggle. North of the museum rise the nineteenth-century sandstone buildings of Prayagraj University, and the Gothic Muir College, built in 1870. A 61m-high tower accompanies domes clad with blue and white glazed tiles (some of which are missing), and a quadrangle with tall and elegant arches.

Anand Bhawan Motilal Nehru Rd • Museum Tues–Sun 9.30am–5pm • Charge; no tickets sold 12.45–1.30pm • Planetarium 11am, 12pm, 2pm, 3pm, 4pm • Charge • shows both in Hindi and English In beautiful grounds, 1km northeast of Allahabad museum, Anand Bhawan, an ornate Victorian building, crowned by a chhatra and with Indo-Saracenic effects finished in grey-and-white trim, was Jawaharlal Nehru’s boyhood home. It’s now a museum, where visitors can peer through plate glass into the opulent interiors. More diverting than Nehru’s spoons and trousers is the colonial court document of his trial for making salt. Nehru’s daughter Indira Gandhi was born here, and Mahatma Gandhi (no relation) stayed when he visited the city. In the grounds, as at the Nehru Memorial Museum in Delhi, is a planetarium, which puts on six hour-long shows per day.

Khusrau Bagh Leader Rd • Mon–Sat 6am–9.30pm Sun 6am–7pm • Free A short way south of Prayagraj Junction railway station, a lofty gateway leads to the attractive walled gardens of Khusrau Bagh, where the remains of Jahangir’s tragic son Khusrau rest in a simple sandstone mausoleum, completed in 1622. Khusrau made an unsuccessful bid for power that ended in death at the hands of his brother Shah Jahan, and is buried far from the centre of Mughal power. His mother’s two-storey mausoleum is a short way west, beyond a tomb reputed to be that of his sister. Once Jahangir’s pleasure garden, today much of Khusrau Bagh has been made into an orchard, famous for its guavas, and a rose nursery, but parts are unkempt and overgrown.

THE KUMBH MELA HINDUS TRADITIONALLY REGARD RIVER CONFLUENCES (SANGAMS) AS AUSPICIOUS PLACES, AND NONE MORE SO THAN THE ONE AT PRAYAGRAJ, WHERE THE YAMUNA AND GANGES RIVERS MEET THE RIVER OF ENLIGHTENMENT, THE MYTHICAL SUBTERRANEAN SARASWATI. ACCORDING TO LEGEND, VISHNU WAS CARRYING A KUMBHA (POT) OF AMRITA (NECTAR), WHEN A SCUFFLE BROKE OUT BETWEEN THE GODS, AND FOUR DROPS WERE SPILLED. THEY FELL TO EARTH AT THE FOUR TIRTHAS OF PRAYAG, HARIDWAR, NASHIK AND UJJAIN. THE EVENT IS COMMEMORATED EVERY THREE YEARS BY THE KUMBH MELA, HELD AT EACH TIRTHA IN TURN; THE PRAYAGRAJ SANGAM IS KNOWN AS TIRTHARAJA, THE “KING OF TIRTHAS”, AND ITS MELA, THE MAHA

KUMBH MELA OR “GREAT” KUMBH MELA, IS THE GREATEST AND HOLIEST OF ALL.

The largest religious fair in India, Maha Kumbh Mela was attended by an astonishing 120 million pilgrims in 2013. The vast flood plains and riverbanks adjacent to the confluence were overrun by tents, organized in almost military fashion by the government, the local authorities and the police. The mela is especially renowned for the presence of an extraordinary array of religious ascetics – sadhus and mahants – enticed from remote hideaways in forests, mountains and caves. Once astrologers have determined the propitious bathing time or kumbhayog, the first to hit the water are legions of Naga Sadhus or Naga Babas, who cover their naked bodies with ash and wear their hair in dreadlocks. The sadhus, who see themselves as guardians of the faith, approach the confluence at the appointed time with all the pomp and bravado of a charging army.

Although the Kumbh Mela is only triennial, and not always in Prayagraj, there is a smaller annual bathing festival, the Magh Mela, held here every year in the month of Magha (Jan–Feb).

THE SANGAM AROUND 7KM FROM THE CENTRE OF THE CIVIL LINES, OVERLOOKED BY THE EASTERN RAMPARTS OF THE FORT, WIDE FLOOD PLAINS AND MUDDY BANKS PROTRUDE TOWARDS THE SACRED SANGAM. AT THE POINT AT WHICH THE BROWN GANGES MEETS THE GREENISH YAMUNA, PANDAS (PRIESTS) PERCH ON SMALL PLATFORMS TO PERFORM PUJA AND ASSIST THE DEVOUT IN THEIR RITUAL ABLUTIONS IN THE SHALLOW WATERS. BEACHES AND GHATS HERE ARE LITTERED WITH THE SHORN HAIR OF PILGRIMS WHO COME TO OFFER PIND FOR THEIR DECEASED PARENTS, AND WOMEN SIT AROUND SELLING CONE-SHAPED

PYRAMIDS OF BRIGHT RED AND ORANGE TILAK POWDER.

Boats to the sangam, used by pilgrims and tourists alike, can be rented at the ghat immediately east of the fort. Depending on your bargaining skills, typical prices for a sixteen-seat boat are ₹300 (or ₹30 per head if you join a shared boat), but can soar to more than ₹2000 during the melas. On the way to the sangam, high-pressure aquatic salesmen loom up on the placid waters selling offerings such as coconuts for pilgrims to discard at the confluence. Once abandoned, the offerings are fished up and sold on to other pilgrims.

The river frontage Most of Prayagraj's river frontage is along the Yamuna, where women perform aarti or evening worship at Saraswati Ghat by floating diya downstream. Immediately to the west, in Minto Park, a memorial marks the spot where, in 1858, the British Raj was born, as India officially passed from the East India Company to the Crown.

The fort

East of Saraswati Ghat, Akbar's fort is best appreciated from boats on the river (see box above). Much of it is still occupied by the military, and public access is restricted to the leafy corner around the Patalpuri Temple, approached through any of the three massive gates. Much of the superstructure is neglected; the zenana with its columned hall does survive, but its interior is closed to the public. At the main gate, a poorly restored, polished stone Ashoka Pillar is inscribed with the emperor's edicts and dated to 242 BC.

Hanuman Temple Where the fort's eastern battlements meet the river, a muddy ghat is busy with boatmen jostling for custom from pilgrims heading to the sangam. Inland along the base of the fort, with the flood plain of the sangam to the right, a road leads past rows of stalls catering to pilgrims visiting the brightly painted Hanuman Temple. Unusually, the large sunken image of the monkey god inside is reclining rather than standing erect; during the annual floods the waters rise to touch his feet before once again receding.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PRAYAGRAJ AND AROUND PLANE BAMRAULI AIRPORT, 18KM WEST ON THE KANPUR RD, HAS DAILY FLIGHTS TO DELHI WITH AIR INDIA, ALLIANCE AIR, AND INDIGO; FOUR FLIGHTS A WEEK TO MUMBAI WITH ALLIANCE AIR; AND ONE DAILY FLIGHT TO BANGALORE WITH INDIGO.

By train Prayagraj has four railway stations, but all express trains use Prayagraj Junction. Most hotels are nearby; be sure to use the right exit for the area where you plan to stay. Destinations include Delhi (22–27 daily; 7hr 12min–17hr 35min, including overnight #12559 Shiv Ganga Express dep. 12.35am, arr New Delhi 8.25am), Agra (5–8 daily; 6hr 30min–11hr 15min, including #12987 Sealdah–Ajmer Express dep. 11.55am, arr. Agra Fort 6.40pm), Lucknow (5–6 daily; 4hr 05min–8hr 15min, including #14215 Ganga Gomti Express dep. 5.40am, arr. 9.55am), Varanasi (13–23 daily; 2hr 35min–4hr 08min, fastest is the #12562 Swatantrata Sainani Express dep. 5.35am, arr. 8.05am) and Satna (13–23 daily; 2hr 40min–3hr 15min including #12428 Anand Vihar–Rewa Superfast Express dep. 6.15am arr. 9.40am).

By bus The main bus stand is on MG Marg next to the Hotel Ilawart, with services to Varanasi (every 15min; 3hr 30min), Agra (every 15min; 7hr 30min), Lucknow (every 15min; 4hr) and Delhi (3 daily; 11hr). Because of their frequency, buses are more convenient than trains for the journey to Varanasi. Zero Road Bus Stand, south of the railway line, serves Mahoba, Satna and Chitrakut. Some private services, notably to Kaushambi, depart from Leader Road, just west of Prayagraj Junction station's south entrance.

GETTING AROUND AND INFORMATION BY RICKSHAW CYCLE- AND AUTO-RICKSHAWS ARE THE MOST COMMON MODES OF TRANSPORT; A TRIP TO THE SANGAM FROM THE CIVIL LINES CROSSING COSTS AROUND ₹100 (HANG ON TO YOUR VEHICLE FOR THE RETURN JOURNEY).

Car rental Car rental through general travel agencies such as Varuna in Tulsiani Plaza, next to Harsh hotel on MG Marg (☎093355 66600), costs in the region of ₹1800/day, plus mileage. UP Tours, next to Ilawart hotel on MG Marg, can also supply a car and driver. Uber and Ola are also available.

Tourist information At Ilawart hotel, 35 MG Marg, Civil Lines (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, but closed second Sat of the month; 0532 240 8873).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Allahabad Regency 16 Tashkent Marg 0124 620 1516. Nineteenth-century colonial bungalow with a good restaurant, a sauna, jacuzzi, swimming pool and gym. The rooms are very well done out, but a bit on the small side – it's worth paying extra for a suite-like “duplex” room. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹

Harsh Ananda 118/116 MG Marg, hotelharshananda.com. An old colonial bungalow refurbished to make a very stylish hotel, with a lawn out front and fireplaces in some of the rooms, all of which are tastefully decorated in relaxing cream and brown tones. ₹₹₹

Ilawart 35 MG Marg Civil Lines upstdc.co.in. The state-run “tourist bungalow” is an odd mix of grubby corridors and new, clean rooms, hot water (except 10am–1pm), and no wi-fi, but good value overall, with a bar and restaurant, and handy for the bus stand. ₹₹₹

Kanha Shyam Strachey Rd, Civil Lines, hotelkanhashyam.com. Classy four-star with quite stately rooms done out in burgundy. There's a lounge bar, 24hr coffee shop and a rooftop restaurant. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹

Yatrik 33 Sardar Patel Marg 0532 226 0921. Good upmarket choice: popular, well run and with a beautiful garden graced with elegant palms. 24hr check-out. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹₹

EATING AND DRINKING

MAP

Barcode Sardar Patel Marg, opposite Grand Continental Hotel, facebook.com/BarcodeAlld. Popular lounge bar with wooden décor and cosy, dimly lit ambience, serving beers, cocktails and spirits. Check online for live music. ₹₹

El Chico 24 MG Marg elchico.in. One of the city's best since 1964, a smart place with good Indian, Chinese and Western cuisine, including grills, sizzlers, Sichuan-style chicken or baked fish in cheese sauce. Next door, El

Chico Pastry Shop has a mouth-watering array of cakes, waffles, sundaes, milkshakes and ice cream. Upstairs, the hip El Chico Café is the perfect place to relax with a cuppa while rubbing elbows with Prayagraj's young and trendy. ₹₹₹

Hot Stuff 21-C Sardar Patel Marg ☎752 500 1221. Fast-food-style diner popular with local youth, offering burgers, shakes, Chinese food and ice cream. They also do takeaways and deliver. ₹₹

Indian Coffee House MG Marg, set back from the road ☎0532 242 7211. Prayagraj branch of the coffee co-op, serving great filter coffee and basic cheap snacks with no frills or pretensions. ₹

Jade Garden 123–127 MG Marg ☎0532 256 1408. Small garden restaurant offering Chinese food of the chop suey, chow mein and sweet-and-sour variety, plus veg and non-veg Indian dishes. Lemon chicken, ginger chicken or chicken Manchurian are all ₹400. ₹₹₹

Kamdhenu 37 MG Marg, in the beautiful nineteenth-century Palace Theatre building ☎kamdhenusweet.in. Famous Prayagraj sweet shop whose specialities include milk cake, but their anjeer (fig) barfi is superb: subtly spiced and less cloyingly sweet than typical mithai confectionery. ₹

Tandoor 33 MG Marg ☎0532 242 7327. Reliable non-veg restaurant, and one of the best places in the city for Indian food, serving all the tandoori classics including chicken tikka, kebabs and Mughlai curries (rogan josh). ₹₹₹

DIRECTORY POST OFFICE PRAYAGRAJ'S MAIN POST OFFICE (KNOWN AS THE GPO OR HPO) IS AT SAROJINI NAIDU MARG, NEAR ALL SAINTS' CATHEDRAL IN THE CIVIL LINES.

Around Prayagraj Prayagraj makes a good base from which to venture into the remoter parts of Bundelkhand to the south. Destinations include the ancient city of Kaushambi, best taken in on a day-trip, the “mini-Varanasi” at Chitrakut, and the fort at Kalinjar.

Kaushambi Just 63km southwest of Prayagraj, on the banks of the Yamuna, are the extensive ruins of Kaushambi, a major Buddhist centre where Buddha himself once preached. The city flourished between the eighth century BC and the sixth century AD; archeological evidence suggests even earlier habitation. According to legend, it was founded by descendants of the Pandavas, after floods destroyed their city of Hastinapur. Mud ramparts (originally faced with brick) tower over the fields, running along an irregular 6km perimeter, and sections remain of a defensive moat. Within the complex, excavations have revealed a paved road, brick houses, wells, tanks and drains, a monastery with cloisters, a large stupa and the ruins of a palace. The only standing feature is a damaged sandstone column ascribed to Ashoka – a second column, moved by the Mughals, now graces the gates of the fort at Prayagraj.

Chitrakut The sprawling pilgrimage town of CHITRAKUT (also called Sitapur) is 128km southwest of Prayagraj, and easily accessible by both train and bus. Together with its twin town of Karbi, 8km east (where there are train connections to Prayagraj, Kolkata and Delhi), Chitrakut is a major Vaishnavite pilgrimage centre, like a smaller version of Varanasi, without the hustle. Most of its religious and leisure activity revolves around the charming central Ramghat, where boats with electric-blue mattresses and pillows create a pretty picture against a backdrop of ashrams and ghats to either side of the narrow, slow-moving river.

Kalinjar

About 88km southwest of Chitrakut, the abandoned star-shaped fortress of KALINJAR looks down on the Gangetic valley from the final escarpments of the craggy Vindhya hills, above the town of the same name. Much of the fort has been reclaimed by dry shrubby forest, populated by monkeys; once-grand avenues are now rocky footpaths that wind through the few crumbling yet ornately carved buildings that remain. Kalinjar has no tourist facilities to speak of – most of those who do come are either on day-trips from Chitrakut or Prayagraj, or stay in Banda, which is on major train and bus routes and is connected to Kalinjar by local buses.

Steep steps lead straight up for 3km from Kalinjar village to the fort's main gate, Alam Darwaza, but the southern Panna Gate has rock carvings depicting seven deer (like the fort's seven gates, these represent the then-known planets). Beneath Bara Darwaza, the “Large Gate”, in the artificial cave of Sita Sej, a stone couch dating from the fourth century holds some of Kalinjar’s earliest inscriptions. The fort’s colossal rambling battlements provide sweeping views of the Gangetic plain and the Vindhya hills.

BUNDELKHAND THE HARSHNESS OF THE TERRAIN IN THE BUNDELKHAND REGION, SOUTH OF LUCKNOW ALONG THE MADHYA PRADESH BORDER, AND THE ALL BUT UNBEARABLE HEAT IN THE SUMMER, MAKE IT THE MOST DIFFICULT, IF INTRIGUING, PART OF THE STATE TO CONTROL, AND EVEN TODAY, ITS LABYRINTHINE HILLS AND VALLEYS ARE HOME TO INFAMOUS BANDS OF OUTLAW DACOITS. MANY OF THESE HAVE BECOME FOLK HEROES AMONG LOCAL VILLAGERS, WHO SHELTER THEM FROM THE ALMOST EQUALLY BRUTAL POLICE FORCE. THE MOST CELEBRATED WAS PHOOLAN DEVI, THE “BANDIT QUEEN”, FROM A VILLAGE NEAR BEHMAI, WHO WAS KIDNAPPED BY A DACOIT GANG, BECAME THE LEADER’S LOVER, AND TOOK OVER FROM HIM AFTER HE WAS KILLED. SHE EVENTUALLY SURRENDERED TO THE POLICE, WAS RELEASED IN 1994, AND EVEN BECAME AN MP FOR THE SOCIALIST SAMAJWADI PARTY BEFORE BEING ASSASSINATED IN 2001.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE

AROUND PRAYAGRAJ

Kaushambi Served by direct private buses departing from Leader Road in Prayagraj. More reliably, there are buses every fifteen minutes from MG Marg bus stand to Saini (1hr 30min), where you can pick up a local bus, jeep or auto. Better still, get a taxi for the round trip from Prayagraj (around ₹2000 from Varuna Travels or UP Tours).

Chitrakut Buses from Prayagraj's Zero Road bus stand leave half-hourly until 8pm (3hr), continuing to Banda (for Kalinjar; 1hr).

Kalinjar Buses from Prayagraj's Zero Road bus stand, via Chitrakut, serve Banda (every 30min; 5hr), from where you can take a local bus or auto.

Varanasi

The great Hindu city of VARANASI, also known as Banaras or Benares, stretches along the River Ganges, its waterfront dominated by long flights of stone ghats where thousands of pilgrims and residents come for their daily ritual ablutions. Known to the devout as Kashi, the Luminous – the City of Light, founded by Shiva – Varanasi is one of the oldest living cities in the world. It has maintained its religious life since the sixth century BC in one continuous tradition, in part by remaining outside the mainstream of political activity and historical development of the Subcontinent, and stands at the centre of the Hindu universe, the focus of a religious geography that reaches from the Himalayan cave of Amarnath in Kashmir to India's southern tip at Kanyakumari, Puri to the east, and Dwarka to the west. Located next to a ford on an ancient trade route, Varanasi is among the holiest of all tirthas – “crossing places”, that allow the devotee access to the divine and enable gods and goddesses to come down to earth. It has attracted pilgrims, seekers, sannyasins and students of the Vedas throughout its history, including sages such as Buddha, Mahavira (founder of the Jain faith) and the great Hindu reformer Shankara.

Anyone who dies in Varanasi attains instant moksha, or enlightenment. Widows and the elderly come here to live out their final days, finding shelter in temples, assisted by alms from the faithful. Western visitors since the Middle Ages have marvelled at the strangeness of this most alien of Indian cities: the tight mesh of alleys, the religious accoutrements, the host of deities – and the proximity of death.

The ghats The great riverbanks at Varanasi, built high with eighteenth- and nineteenth-century pavilions and palaces, temples and terraces, are lined by stone steps – the ghats – which stretch along the whole waterfront, changing dramatically in appearance with the seasonal fluctuations of the river level. Each of the hundred ghats, big and small, is marked by a lingam, and occupies its own special place in the religious geography of the city. Some have crumbled over the years while others continue to thrive, visited by early-morning bathers, brahmin priests offering puja, and people practising meditation and yoga. Hindus regard the Ganges as amrita, the elixir of life, which brings purity to the living and salvation to the dead, but in reality the river is scummy with effluent, so don't be tempted to join the bathers; never mind the chemicals and human body parts, it's the level of heavy metals, dumped by factories upstream, that are the real cause for concern. Whether Ganga water still has the power to absolve sin if sterilized is a contentious point among the faithful; current thinking has it that boiling is acceptable but chemical treatment ruins it.

For centuries, pilgrims have traced the perimeter of the city by a ritual circumambulation, paying homage to shrines on the way. Among the most popular routes is the Panchatirthi Yatra, which takes in the pancha (five) tirthi (crossings) of Asi, Dash, Manikarnaka, Panchganga, and finally Adi Kesh. To gain merit or appease the gods, the devotee, accompanied by a panda (priest), recites a sankalpa (statement of intent) and performs a ritual at each stage of the journey. For the casual visitor, however, the easiest way to see the ghats is to follow a south–north sequence either by boat or on foot.

Asi Ghat

At the clay-banked Asi Ghat, where the River Asi runs into the Ganges, pilgrims bathe prior to worshipping at a huge lingam under a peepal tree. A small marble temple just off the ghat houses another lingam called Asisangameshvara, the “Lord of the Confluence of the Asi”. Traditionally, pilgrims continued from these to Lolarka Kund, the “Trembling Sun”, a rectangular tank 15m below ground level, approached by steep steps, but it's now almost abandoned – except during the Lolarka Mela fair (Aug/Sept), when thousands come to propitiate the gods and pray for the birth of a son. It is actually one of Varanasi's earliest sites, and was attracting bathers in the days of Buddha. Equated with the twelve adityas or divisions of the sun, it is one of only two remaining sites in Varanasi that are linked with the origins of Hinduism, when worship of the sun god Surya predominated over that of the modern deities Shiva and Vishnu.

Tulsi Ghat and Hanuman Ghat North of Asi Ghat, much of Tulsi Ghat – originally Lolarka ghat, but renamed in honour of the poet Tulsi Das, who lived nearby in the sixteenth century – has crumbled. Hanuman Ghat, to its north, is believed by many to be the birthplace of the fifteenth century Vaishnavite saint, Vallabha, who was instrumental in reviving the worship of Krishna (Vishnu's human incarnation in the Mahabharata). As well as a new south Indian temple, the ghat also has a striking image of Ruru, the dog, one of the eight forms of Bhairava, a ferocious and early form of Shiva.

Harishchandra Ghat North of Hanuman Ghat, Harishchandra Ghat is named after a legendary king who gave up his entire kingdom in a fit of self-abnegation. One of Varanasi's two burning ghats (ghats used for cremation), it is easily recognizable from the smoke of its funeral pyres, but it's quieter and less full-on than Manikarnika Ghat.

Kedara Ghat Three ghats north from Harishchandra Ghat, Kedara Ghat is connected mythologically to Kedarnath, Shiva's home in the Himalayas. Pilgrims on the Panchatirthi Yatra don't visit it, but it's always busy and becomes a hive of activity in the sacred month of Shravana (July/Aug), at the height of the monsoon. Above its steps, a red-and-white-striped temple houses the Kedareshvara lingam, made of black rock shot through with a vein of white.

Chauki Ghat to Chaumsathi Ghat Chauki Ghat, which is next on from Kedara Ghat if heading north, is distinguished by an enormous tree that shelters small stone shrines to the nagas, water-snake deities, while at the unmistakable Dhobi ("Laundrymen's") Ghat, clothes are still rhythmically pulverized in pursuit of purity. Beyond smaller ghats such as Mansarowar, named after the holy lake in Tibet, and Narada, honouring the divine musician and sage, lies Chaumsathi Ghat, where impressive stone steps lead up to the small temple of the Chaumsathi (64) Yoginis. Images of Kali and Durga in its inner sanctum represent a stage in the emergence of the great goddess as a single representation of a number of female divinities. Overlooking the ghats here is Peshwa Amrit Rao's majestic sandstone haveli (mansion), built in 1807 and currently used for religious ceremonies and occasionally as an auditorium for concerts.

Dashaswamedh Ghat Dashaswamedh Ghat is Varanasi's most popular and accessible bathing ghat, with rows of pandas sitting on wooden platforms under bamboo umbrellas, masseurs plying their trade and boatmen jostling for custom. It's the second and busiest of the five tirthas on the Panchatirthi Yatra. Its Brahmeshvara lingam is supposed to have been planted by the god Brahma. South of here, a flat-roofed building houses the shrine of Shitala, which is likewise extremely popular, even in the rainy season when devotees have to wade to the temple or take a boat. Every night at 6.45pm the pompous ganga aarti, Varanasi's most popular blessing to the Ganges, takes place here.

Man Mandir Ghat to Lalita Ghat Man Mandir Ghat is known primarily for its magnificent eighteenth-century observatory, built for the maharaja of Jaipur and equipped with ornate window casings. Pilgrims pay homage to the important lingam of Someshvara, the lord of the moon, alongside, before crossing Tripurabhairavi Ghat to Mir Ghat and the New Vishwanatha Temple, built by conservative brahmins who claimed that the main Vishwanatha lingam was rendered impure when Harijans (Untouchables) entered the sanctum in 1956. At Mir Ghat, the Dharma Kupa, the Well of Dharma, is surrounded by subsidiary shrines and the lingam of Dharmesha, where it is said that Yama, the Lord of Death, obtained his jurisdiction over all the dead of the world – except here in Varanasi.

To the north is Lalita Ghat, renowned for its Ganga Keshava shrine to Vishnu and the Nepali Temple, a Kathmandu-style wooden structure which houses an image of Pashupateshvara – Shiva's manifestation at Pashupatinath, in the Kathmandu Valley – and sporting a small selection of erotic carvings.

Manikarnika Ghat North of Lalita lies Varanasi's pre-eminent cremation ground, Manikarnika Ghat. Such grounds are usually held to be inauspicious, and located on the fringes of cities, but the entire city of Shiva is regarded as Mahashamshana, the "Great Cremation Ground", for the corpse of the entire universe. The ghat is perpetually crowded with funeral parties, as well as the Doms, its dalit guardians, busy and preoccupied with facilitating final release for those lucky enough to pass away here. Seeing bodies being cremated so publicly has always exerted a great fascination for visitors to the city, but photography is strictly taboo; even having a camera visible may be construed as intent and provoke hostility. Touts and con merchants descend on tourists at the ghat explaining the finer metaphysical points of transmutation (“cremation is education”) before subtly shifting to the practicalities of how much wood is needed to burn one body, the never-ending cycle of inflation and would you like to give a donation. The amounts written down in their “ledgers” are unbelievable.

Lying at the centre of the five tirthas, Manikarnika Ghat symbolizes both creation and destruction, epitomized by the juxtaposition of the sacred well of Manikarnika Kund, said to have been dug by Vishnu at the time of creation, and the hot, sandy ash-infused soil of cremation grounds where time comes to an end. In Hindu mythology, Manikarnika Kund predates the arrival of the Ganga and has its source deep in the Himalayas. Vishnu carved the kund (water tank) with his discus and filled it with perspiration from his exertions in creating the world at the behest of Shiva. When Shiva quivered with delight, his earring fell into this pool, which as Manikarnika – “Jewelled Earring” – became the first tirtha in the world. Every year, after the floodwaters of the river have receded to leave the pool caked in alluvial deposits, the kund is re-dug. Its surroundings are cleaned and painted with bright folk art depicting the presiding goddess, Manikarni Devi.

BOAT TRIPS ON THE GANGES ALL ALONG THE GHATS, AND ESPECIALLY AT THE MAIN ONES SUCH AS DASHASWAMEDH, THE PRICES OF BOAT (BAJRA) RENTAL ARE HIGHLY INFLATED, WITH LOCAL BOATMEN UNDER PRESSURE FROM TOUTS TO FLEECE TOURISTS AND PILGRIMS. RENTING A BOAT TO CATCH THE DAWN IN PARTICULAR CAN BE A BIT OF A FREE-FOR-ALL, AND HAGGLING IS ESSENTIAL. THERE USED TO BE AN OFFICIAL RATE, WHICH EVERYONE IGNORED, BUT IT’S NOW DOWN TO YOUR BARGAINING SKILLS. YOU’LL GET A FAR BETTER RATE (₹300/HR FOR A ONE- OR TWO-PERSON BOAT, ₹100/HR PER PERSON ON A SHARED BOAT) IF YOU WALK UP TO MIR GHAT NEAR THE ALKA HOTEL, WHERE PUNTERS ARE THINNER ON

THE GROUND. SOME SMALL HOTELS AND HOSTELS OFFER SPECIAL DEALS TO THEIR GUESTS.

Scindia Ghat Bordering Manikarnika to the north is the picturesque Scindia Ghat, its tilted Shiva temple lying partially submerged in the river, after falling in as a result of the sheer weight of the ghat's construction in the mid-nineteenth century. Above the ghat, several of Varanasi's most influential shrines are hidden within the tight maze of alleyways of the area known as Siddha Kshetra (the "Field of Fulfilment").

Panchganga Ghat to Adi Keshava Ghat North of Lakshmanbala Ghat, with its commanding views of the river, lies one of the most dramatic – and contentious – ghats, Panchganga, dominated by Varanasi's largest riverside building, the great Mosque of Alamgir, known locally as Beni Madhav-ka-Darera. With its minarets now much shortened, the mosque stands on the ruins of the Bindu Madhava, a Vishnu temple that extended from Panchganga to Rama Ghat before it was destroyed by Aurangzeb and replaced with the mosque. Panchganga also bears testimony to more favourable Hindu–Muslim relations, being the site of the initiation of the medieval saint of the Sufi tradition, Kabir, the son of a humble Muslim weaver who is venerated by Hindus and Muslims alike. Along the riverfront lies a curious array of three-sided cells, submerged during the rainy season, some with lingams, others with images of Vishnu, and some empty and used for meditation or yoga. Above Trilochana Ghat, further north, is the holy ancient lingam of the three (tri)-eyed (lochana) Shiva. Beyond it, the river bypasses some of Varanasi's oldest precincts, now predominantly Muslim in character; the ghats themselves gradually become less impressive and are usually of the kaccha (clay-banked) variety. At Adi Keshava Ghat (the "Original Vishnu"), on the outskirts of the city, the Varuna River flows into the Ganga. Unapproachable during the rainy season, when it is completely submerged, the ghat marks the place where Vishnu supposedly landed as an emissary of Shiva, and stands on the original site of the city before it spread southwards. Around Adi Keshava are a number of Ganesha shrines.

The Old City At the heart of Varanasi, between Dashaswamedh Ghat and Godaulia to the south and west and Manikarnika Ghat on the river to the north, lies the maze of ramshackle alleys that comprise the Old City, or Vishwanatha Khanda. The whole area buzzes with the activity of pilgrims, pandas and stalls selling offerings to the faithful, and there are lingams and shrines tucked into every corner. If you get lost just head for the river.

The Golden Temple and around Accessed from Vishwanatha Mandir Lane to the north of Vishwanatha Gali, but closed to non-Hindus, the Vishwanatha Mandir temple complex, also called Visheshwara (the “Lord of All”), is popularly known as the Golden Temple, due to the gold plating on its massive spire. Because it is largely hidden behind walls, non-Hindus have to make do with glimpses of it from adjacent buildings. Vishwanatha’s history has been fraught. Sacked by successive Muslim rulers, it was repeatedly rebuilt and destroyed; in 1785, Queen Ahilyabai Holkar of Indore built the temple that stands today. Its simple white domes tower over the Jnana Vapi (“Wisdom Well”), immediately north, housed in an open-arcaded hall built in 1828, where Shiva cooled his lingam after the construction of Vishwanatha.

Adjacent to the temple, guarded by armed police to protect it from Hindu fanatics, stands the Jnana Vapi Mosque, also known as the Great Mosque of Aurangzeb. Close by, the temple of Annapurna Bhavani is dedicated to Shakti, the divine female energy. Manifest in many forms, including the awesome Kali and Durga with their weapons and gruesome garlands of skulls, she’s seen here as the provider of sustenance and carries a cooking pot. Nearby is a stunning image, faced in silver against a black surround, of Shani or Saturn. Slightly north, across the main road, the thirteenth-century Razia’s Mosque stands atop the ruins of a still earlier Vishwanatha temple that was destroyed under the Sultanate.

Bharat Mata Vidyapeeth Rd

About 3km northwest of Godaulia, outside the Old City, the modern temple of Bharat Mata (“Mother India”), inaugurated by Mahatma Gandhi, is unusual in that it has a huge relief map in marble of the whole of the Indian Subcontinent and the Tibetan plateau, with mountains, rivers and the holy tirthas all clearly visible. Pilgrims circumambulate the map before viewing it in its entirety from the second floor. The temple can be reached by rickshaw from Godaulia for around ₹100.

South of the Old City Inland from the ghats, Sonapura Road and Durga Kund Road both lead south towards the Banaras Hindu University (BHU). The most popular sight at this end of town is the famous Monkey Temple, but there are also a couple of other interesting temples.

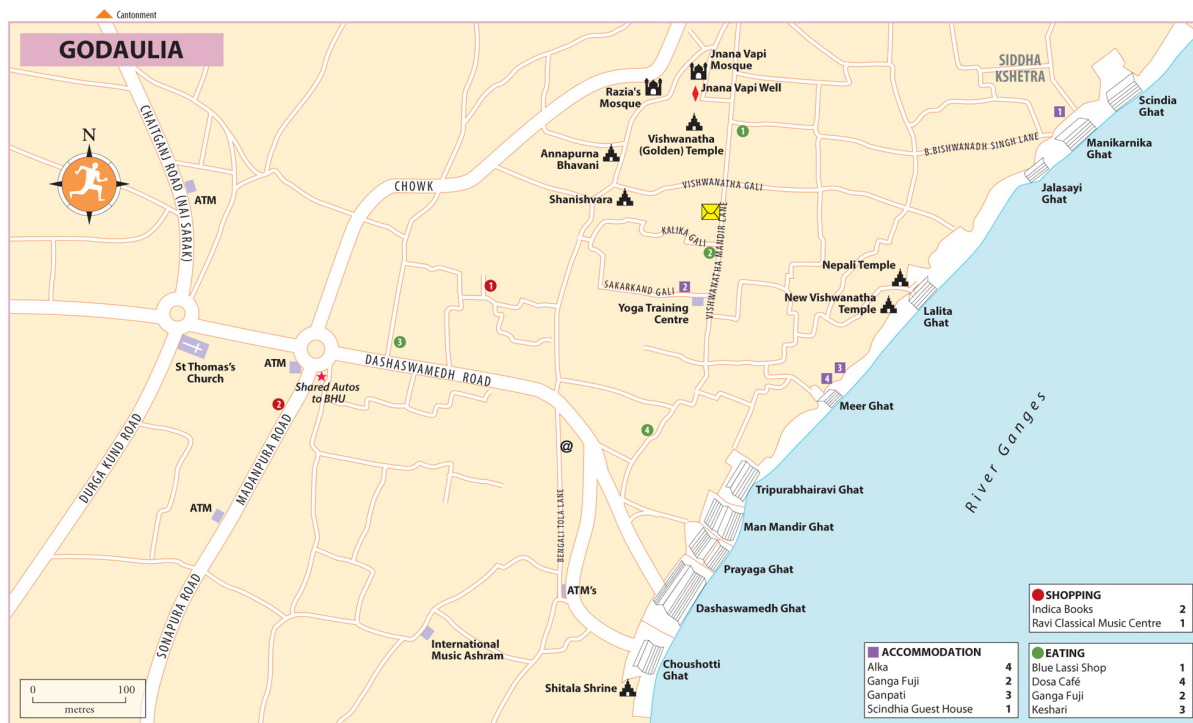

Durga (Monkey) Temple Durga Kund Rd • Daily 4am–11pm • Free The nineteenth-century Durga Temple – stained red with ochre, and popularly known as the Monkey Temple, thanks to its aggressive and irritable monkeys – stands in a walled enclosure 4km south of Godaulia. It is devoted to Durga, the terrifying aspect of Shiva’s consort, Parvati, and the embodiment of Shakti (divine female energy), and was built in a typical north Indian style, with an ornate shikhara in five segments, symbolizing the elements. The best views are from across Durga kund, the adjoining tank. A forked stake in the courtyard is used during some festivals to behead sacrificial goats. Non-Hindus are admitted to the courtyard, but not the inner sanctum.

Tulsi Manas Temple Durga Kund Rd • Daily 5.30am–noon & 3.30–9pm • Free The Tulsi Manas Temple is open to all. Built in 1964 of white-streaked marble, its walls are inscribed with verses by Goswami Tulsidas, the poet and author of the Ramcharitmanas, the Hindi equivalent of the great Sanskrit epic Ramayana.

Bharat Kala Bhawan Museum BHU campus • Mon–Sat 10.30am–4.30pm • Charge In the campus of the BHU, the Bharat Kala Bhawan Museum has a fabulous collection of miniature paintings, sculpture, contemporary art and bronzes. A gallery dedicated to the city of Varanasi, with a stunning nineteenth-century map, has a display of the recent Raj Ghat excavations and old etchings of the city. Along with Buddhist and Hindu sculpture and Mughal glass, further galleries are devoted to foreign artists who found inspiration in India, such as Nicholas Roerich and Alice Boner; the Bengali renaissance painter Jamini Roy, so influenced by folk art, is also well represented.

RAM LILA VARANASI IS RENOWNED FOR ITS RAM LILA, HELD DURING DUSSEHRA (OCT), DURING WHICH EPISODES FROM THE RAMAYANA ARE RE-ENACTED THROUGHOUT THE CITY AND THE MAHARAJA SPONSORS THREE WEEKS OF ELABORATE CELEBRATIONS.

New Vishwanatha Temple BHU campus • Daily 4am–noon & 1–9pm • Free The BHU campus is home to the New Vishwanatha Temple, distinguished by its lofty white-marble spire. The temple was the brainchild of Pandit Malaviya, founder of the BHU and a great believer in an egalitarian and casteless Hindu revival. It was financed by the Birlas, a wealthy Marwari industrial family. Although supposedly modelled on an original temple destroyed by Aurangzeb, the building displays characteristics of the new wave of temple architecture, amalgamating influences from various parts of India with a garish interior.

Ramnagar Fort Ramnagar (south bank of the river) • Museum Daily 10am–5pm • Charge South of the ghats, on the opposite side of the river, the residence of the maharaja of Varanasi, Ramnagar Fort looks down upon the Ganges. The best views of the fortifications – especially impressive in late afternoon – are to be had from the bridge to the fort, which is reached by a road heading south from the BHU area. The fort can also be reached by chartering a boat from Dashaswamedh Ghat.

Inside, the fort bears testimony to the wealth of the maharaja and his continuing influence. A dusty and poorly kept museum provides glimpses of a decadent past: horse-drawn carriages, old motor cars, palanquins, ornate gilded and silver howdahs (elephant seats), hookahs, costumes and old silk in a sorry state are all part of the collection, along with an armoury, some minute ivory carvings, an astronomical clock and hunting trophies.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE BABATPUR VARANASI AIRPORT IS 22KM NORTHWEST OF THE CITY. FROM CANTONMENT STATION, A PREPAID TAXI COSTS ₹650; A PREPAID AUTO IS ₹275. UBER AND OLA MAY SAVE YOU SOME RUPEES. ALLOW AT LEAST 90MIN FROM THE OLD CITY. DESTINATIONS: DELHI (10–11 DAILY WITH AIR INDIA, SPICEJET AND INDIGO; 1HR 30MIN–1HR 45MIN); MUMBAI (4 DAILY WITH INDIGO, AIR INDIA AND SPICEJET; 2HR 20MIN).

By train Varanasi Cantonment (officially, Varanasi Junction) is the most conveniently located station, with prepaid auto and taxi booths, and a foreign tourists' reservations office (Mon–Sat 8am–8pm, Sun 8am–2pm). Many trains on the main east–west Delhi–Kolkata line bypass Varanasi but stop at Mughal Sarai, 17km east of town and around 45min away by road or rail. There are retiring rooms at Mughal Sarai station and local buses or shared tempos to Varanasi (in Varanasi, pick them up at Roadways Bus Stand, or directly across GT Rd). Trains from the north and east may stop at Varanasi City station before they reach Cantonment, but transport into town from there is sparser.

TOUT DODGING LIKE AGRA AND DELHI, VARANASI IS RIFE WITH TOUTS, AND YOU'LL HAVE TO BE CAREFUL OF SCAMS, ESPECIALLY ON ARRIVAL. MANY HOTELS PAY A COMMISSION OF UP TO EIGHTY PERCENT OF THE ROOM RATE (FOR EVERY DAY YOU STAY) TO WHOEVER TAKES YOU TO THE DOOR – A COST THAT IS PASSED ON TO YOU.

All English-speaking rickshaw drivers are part of this racket, and avoiding it takes persistence. At Cantonment railway station, you can phone your hotel of choice, who will send someone to pick you up (the tourist office will even do this for you). If you want to make your own way to the hotels of the old town, walk away from the bus or railway station to the main road, find a non-English-speaking cycle rickshaw driver, and ask to be taken to Godaulia, 3km southeast. Rickshaws are unable to penetrate the maze of lanes around Vishwanatha Temple and are banned from the central part of Godaulia. Again, you can call a hotel from here to come and find you – if you attempt to get to a hotel yourself, touts may try to attach themselves and claim a commission on arrival. When trying to find hotels in the old town that don't pay commission to touts, it's common to hear that they have "burned down" or "flooded".

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM VARANASI THE TRAINS BELOW ARE RECOMMENDED AS THE FASTEST AND/OR MOST CONVENIENT FOR SPECIFIC CITIES. ALL THOSE LISTED HERE RUN DAILY.

Destination	Name	No.	From	Departs	Arrives
Agra Fort	Marudhar Express	#14853/63/65 VJ		6.25pm	6.40am+

					(Tu, Fri & Sun)
Dehradun	Kumbha Express	#12369	VJ	1.55am	6.10pm
Delhi (ND)	Shiv Ganga Express	#12559	VJ	10.15pm	8.25am+
Gaya	Gangasatluj Express	#13308	VJ	8.45pm	1.10am+
Jaipur	Sealdah– Ajmer Exp	#12987	DDU	9.40am	11.15pm
	Marudhar Express	#14853/63/65	VJ	6.25pm	11.55pm+
					(Tu, Fri & Sun)
Khajuraho	BUI DR SPL	#01026	VJ	6.55pm	5.30am+
					(W, F, Sun)
Kolkata (H)	Vibhuti Express	#12334	VJ	6.05pm	7.40am+
	Kalka Mail	#12312	DDU	8.48pm	8.05am+
Mumbai (CST)	Mahanagari Express	#22178	VJ	10.00am	11.40am+
Patna	Rajdhani	#12424	DDU	1.33am	4.15am
	Vikramshila Express	#12368	DDU	11.45pm	2.30am+
Satna	Lokmanyatilak Express	#11062/66	VJ	12.15am	6.20am
VJ: Varanasi Junction; DDU: Deen Dayal Upadhyaya Junction; ND: New Delhi station; H: Howrah station; *a/c only; + next day

By bus Most buses terminate a couple of hundred metres east of the railway station along the main Grand Trunk Rd and at the Roadways Bus Stand (☎ 0542 220 3476). Buses from Nepal are met by the rickshaw mafia (see box above); going the other way, you have to change buses at the border anyway so there's no point buying a through ticket to Kathmandu – it's better to go to Sonauli, cross the border and buy an onward ticket in Nepal. For Prayagraj, good and regular buses from Varanasi make road a better option than rail. For Bihar on the other hand, buses are few and far between (with none at all to Patna), and road conditions not great, so rail is your best bet.

Destinations Prayagraj (every 15min; 3hr 30min); Gorakhpur (hourly 5.30am–8.30pm; 7hr); Sonauli (hourly 5.30am–8.30pm; 10hr).

GETTING AROUND BY RICKSHAW CYCLE RICKSHAWS ARE THE EASIEST WAY TO GET AROUND VARANASI, AND OFTEN DEFY TRAFFIC JAMS BY CYCLING UP THE WRONG SIDE OF THE ROAD; A RIDE FROM GODAULIA TO CANTONMENT RAILWAY STATION COSTS AROUND ₹60. AUTO-RICKSHAWS SHOULD BE FASTER, BUT DUE TO THE VOLUME OF TRAFFIC THEY RARELY ARE FOR SHORT RIDES ACROSS TOWN. GODAULIA TO THE RAILWAY STATION SHOULD COST ₹90.

Car rental UP Tours at the Tourist Bungalow in Parade Kothi (☎0542 220 8545) can arrange car rental at around ₹3000/day (plus parking fees) for a car with driver within a 200km radius of Varanasi.

Motorcycles Mechanics and workshops specializing in Enfields are clustered in the Jagatganj area, near the Sanskrit University.

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURIST INFORMATION THE MAIN UP TOURISM OFFICE IS AT URBAN HAAT, SANSKRITIK SANKUL (MON–SAT 10AM–5PM), THOUGH THEIR TOURIST INFORMATION COUNTER (DAILY 7AM–7PM; ☎0542 250 6670) INSIDE THE CANTONMENT RAILWAY STATION IS THEIR MAIN OFFICE FOR GIVING OUT INFORMATION – THE BOSS, UMA SHANKAR, IS EXTREMELY HELPFUL AND IS BACKED UP BY A FORCE OF TOURIST POLICE (SAME PHONE NUMBER) TO DEFEND TOURISTS FROM CRIME. THE INDIA TOURISM OFFICE IS IN THE CANTONMENT DISTRICT, AWAY FROM THE OLD CITY AND GHATS, JUST OFF THE MALL ON STRANGER RD (MON–FRI 9AM–5.30PM, SAT 9AM–2PM; ☎0542 250 1784). IT GIVES OUT INFORMATION ON THE WHOLE OF INDIA, BUT STAFF CAN ASSIST WITH BOOKING ACCOMMODATION IN VARANASI. THEY ALSO MAINTAIN A BOOTH AT THE AIRPORT (IN PRINCIPLE OPEN THE SAME HOURS). THE SHABBY BIHAR GOVERNMENT TOURIST OFFICE AT 3RD FLOOR, HANS SAROWAR, ENGLISHIA LANE, JAWAHARLAL NEHRU MARKET, CANTONMENT (☎0542 222 3821), IS USEFUL IF YOU'RE HEADING EAST INTO THAT STATE. THE LOCAL BRANCH OF THE NATIONAL INFORMATICS CENTRE HAS SOME INTERESTING INFORMATION ABOUT VARANASI ON THEIR WEBSITE AT www.VARANASI.NIC.IN.

Travel agencies General travel agencies include the friendly Nova International, S-21/119C Shubhash Nagar, off Parade Kothi near the UP Tourist Bungalow (☎9336907518), and A2Z India, S-20/51-5 Varunapul, The Mall (by Radisson hotel; ☎945 336 0369).

ACCOMMODATION MOST OF VARANASI'S BETTER AND MORE EXPENSIVE HOTELS LIE ON ITS PERIPHERIES, THOUGH TO EXPERIENCE THE FULL AMBIENCE OF THE CITY, STAY CLOSE TO THE GHATS AND THE LANES OF THE OLD CITY, WHERE TOP-FLOOR ROOMS, WITH VIEWS AND MORE LIGHT, ARE GENERALLY THE BEST. IF YOU WANT TO STAY WITH A LOCAL FAMILY, ASK AT UP TOURISM'S STATION OFFICE ABOUT THEIR PAYING GUESTHOUSE SCHEME.

GODAULIA, MAP

Alka D-3/23 Mir Ghat www.hotelalkavns.com. You'll need to book well ahead in high season (Oct–March), but this is a good mid-range riverside choice, with a variety of well-maintained quality rooms, plus a terrace and a pleasant little lawn overlooking the river, and Keralan ayurvedic spa treatments on hand. ₹

Ganga Fuji D-7/21 Sakarkand Gali ☎0542 239 7333. Well-run family guesthouse near the Golden Temple, with a range of tastefully decorated rooms, some with a/c (₹1550), and dorms. Scrupulously clean (though it's down a rather dirty alley) and the bathrooms are immaculate. ₹

Ganpati D-3/24 Mir Ghat 🌐 ganpatiguesthouse.com. Rooms here – ideally booked in advance – overlook the Ganges or are arranged around a courtyard, and there’s a restaurant and a sociable balcony overlooking the river. The 10am check-out time is a bit inconvenient, and you pay extra for river views. ₹₹

Scindhia Guest House Manikarnika Ghat, 🌐 scindhiaguesthouse.com. A range of rooms at this basic guesthouse right by the burning ghats, from non-attached singles to super-deluxe a/c rooms with a balcony and river view. The roof-top restaurant has good river views, and there’s a higher top terrace with even better ones. ₹

SOUTH OF GODAULIA, NEAR THE RIVER, MAP

Bunkedup Hostel D 24/12 Ward Dasashwamedh Pandey Ghat 🌐 bunkedup-hostel.varanasihotels.net. The Varanasi franchise of this flash packer hostel offers very clean en-suite mixed and female dorms. There are privacy curtains, lockers, reading lights and two private doubles that are just a tad too small for the price. Breakfast is included and served on the social rooftop restaurant, from where you can see stunning Ganges views. They also run sunrise and sunset boat trips, which are a steal. ₹ dorm; ₹₹ doubles ★ Ganges View Asi Ghat 📞 0542 231 3218, 🌐 hotelgangesview.co.in. In a lovely old house hung with paintings, the rooms are small but taste-fully and stylishly decorated (those on the upper storey have the best views, but cost rather more at ₹7000), and there’s a wonderful big veranda looking out onto the river. Breakfast is included. ₹₹₹

Palace on Ganges B-1/158 Asi Ghat 🌐 palaceonganges.com. Luxury hotel on the Ganges, with 42 individually decorated rooms representing the states of India – the Gujarati room is particularly colourful. Facilities include central a/c, TV, minibar, tour desk and rooftop restaurant with live music nightly. Breakfast is included. ₹₹₹₹

Palace on Steps D-21/11 Rana Ghat 🌐 dwivedihotels.business.site. Originally two hotels (separated by a big banyan tree), now combined to make one, in a building of which parts date back some three hundred years. There’s a wide range of clean, comfortable rooms; the best include a dome turret room, and some with balconies looking straight down onto the ghats. Breakfast is included. ₹₹₹

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

The Mehrotra Silk Factory is known for its integrity and the quality of its products, so a number of soundalike firms with names like Malhotra, Muhotra and Malahotra have sprung up to trap the unwary, and if you ask any rickshaw-wala to take you to the Mehrotra Silk Factory, they'll almost certainly take you to one of these spurious imitators, which pay them commission and are known for ripping off their customers.

Similarly, popular lodges have faced competition from fly-by-night lookalike hotels that copy their names and pay commission to rickshaw-walas who divert customers to them (the rickshaw-walas who hustle you in the street are often intent on running some commission scam on you).

So beware: if taking a rickshaw to your hotel, make sure it really is the one you want; better still, don't name the hotel and just ask for a nearby location such as Godaulia, and always hail a rickshaw yourself rather than taking one that offers you a ride. And never, ever, ask a rickshaw-wala to take you to a particular shop; Mehrotra Silk Factory is one of several stores and hotels that offer a free pick-up service for this very reason.

Suryaiday Haveli B-4/25 Shivala Ghat Road, Shivala Ghat,  amritara.co.in. This Amritara Resort boasts fourteen deluxe rooms set around an inner courtyard renovated that once formed part of the residence of the Royal Family of Nepal. Packages include a complimentary arrival boat transfer from Assi Ghat, one evening cruise to Dashaswamedh Ghat for the Ganga Aarti, and live traditional music shows. Breakfast and morning yoga classes included. ₹₹₹₹

★Wander Station Varanasi D 21/24 Rana Mahal Ghat  09415798378. Friendly and maniacally clean — shoes off at the door — hostel in an airy, well-managed building right off a peaceful ghat. The fully a/c dorms and doubles all have bathrooms and cool murals by local art students, together with privacy curtains, plush beds, reading lights, mini-fans and lockers. There's a nice rooftop restaurant serving free chai at 5pm, cheap boat rides, and a hearty breakfast (included) consisting of muesli, eggs, coffee and fresh fruits. Dorms ₹; doubles ₹₹

CANTONMENT AND AROUND, MAP

Gateway Hotel Ganges Varanasi Nadesar Palace Grounds, Raja Bazaar Rd 🌐 gateway.tajhotels.com/en-in/ganges-varanasi/. The poshest gaff in town, set in vast grounds (good for birdwatching, especially early in the morning), with stately rooms, fine dining, a pool and fitness centre. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹₹

GoStops Varanasi B 20/47 A-2, Vijayanagaram Colony, Bhelupur 🌐 gostops.com/hostels/hostels-varanasi. This friendly hostel is a 20min walk from the ghats, but has cheap and clean fourteen-bed dorms, with shared bathrooms that are somewhat inconveniently located on the roof, where one can also stay in one-man tents. The six and eight-bed en-suite dorms, together with the few private doubles, are better value. There's also a communal kitchen, city walks (some free, but not all), and a TV room with a library of movies. Breakfast is included. Dorm ₹; doubles ₹₹₹

India 59 Patel Nagar 🌐 theindiahotel.com. A three-star hotel that makes a pretty good attempt at being stylish. The rooms are carpeted, with attached bathrooms and a/c; and there's a health and fitness centre, a rooftop bar, basement lounge bar and a restaurant. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹

Surya Kaiser Palace S-20/51, A5 The Mall 🌐 hotelsuryavns.com. Well-run, comfortable and relaxing heritage property built in 1818 by Nepal's King Kaiser, arranged around a small lawn that doubles up as an alfresco restaurant. Rooms are small but well kept, with modern bathrooms, and many have balconies. Facilities include a pool, a decent restaurant and a bar. Breakfast not included. ₹₹₹ EATING MOST OLD CITY RESTAURANTS ARE VEGETARIAN AND ALCOHOL-FREE, BUT THE CANTONMENT IS LESS CONSTRAINED, AND SOME HOTELS HAVE BARS. STOMACH DISORDERS ARE COMMON IN VARANASI, SO STICK TO BOTTLED OR TREATED WATER AND BE CAREFUL WHEN CHOOSING WHERE YOU EAT. AFTER AN EARLY MORNING BOAT TRIP, TRY THE TRADITIONAL SNACK OF KACHORI, SAVOURY DEEP-FRIED PASTRY BREAD SOLD IN THE OLD CITY NEXT TO THE GHATS – BUT AVOID THE CHAI STALLS HERE, AS THE CUPS ARE OFTEN WASHED IN RIVER WATER.

GODAULIA, MAP

Blue Lassi Shop CK-12/1 Kachowri Gali Chowk 📞0542 240 1127. Hole-in-the-wall shop whipping up excellent – yet overpriced – lassis from plain, sweet or salted, through all kinds of fresh fruit varieties to a saffron lassi with dried fruits and nuts, mixed while you watch and served in clay pots. Right next door, ultra-basic Real Lassi dishes up equally delicious plain lassis for less than half the price. ₹

Dosa Café D-15/49 Manmandir, off Dashaswamedh Rd 📞07985022907. Popular with both locals and foreigners, this spot dishes up the most divine semolina in all its most obvious, and frankly downright surprising – think chocolate – iterations. ₹₹

★Ganga Fuji D-5/8 Kalika Gali, Dashaswamedh 📞983 961 4340. Family-style home cooking, with live classical music from 7.30pm and a friendly host who guides diners through the menu. There are Chinese, Japanese and Continental options, but the north Indian dishes are the best, veg or non-veg, lightly spiced for the benefit of European tourists. ₹₹

Keshari D-14/8, Teri Neem, off Dashaswamedh Rd 📞09307987881. The menu lists a huge variety of veg curries, “all items available”. The paneer tomato and the mushroom masala are particular favourites, but every dish is delicious. ₹₹

THE REST OF THE TOWN, MAP

Annapurna J-12/16A Ramkatora 📞sriannapurna.in. Gleaming multi-cuisine restaurant serving Continental, Subcontinental and Chinese veg food; also does home delivery, and even delivers thalis at two hours’ notice to any train passing through Varanasi (give train name and number, plus coach and seat number). ₹₹

Haifa B-1/107 Asi Rd 📞hotelhaifavns.com. Laidback place serving approximations of Middle Eastern dishes – including hummus or baba ghanouj and pitta – as well as the more usual Indian fare. The “Middle Eastern thali” (a selection of meze with pitta) is a great deal. ₹₹₹

Kerala Café Durga Kund Rd, Bhelpura Thana 📞facebook.com/kcvns1962. A very popular south Indian restaurant with good snacks (dosas, vadas, uttapams and there’s sambhar rice or curd rice). ₹₹

New Bread of Life B-3/322 Sonapura Rd 📞0941 581 8188. Bakery providing brown bread, cinnamon rolls and confectionery, with a small, clean restaurant serving Indian, Western and Chinese food, including chicken stroganoff and rice. Profits go to charity, but service is slow. ₹₹

★Vaatika Asi Ghat 📞pizzeriavaatika.in. A leafy terrace right on the ghat, serving good pizza and pasta, not to mention wonderful apple pies, plus espressos, freshly made juices and salads (all vegetables sterilized in permanganate, all water boiled and filtered). ₹₹

SHOPPING HUSTLERS AND RICKSHAW DRIVERS ARE ALWAYS KEEN TO DRAG TOURISTS INTO COMMISSION-PAYING STORES, BUT AVOIDING THOSE, SHOPPING IN VARANASI CAN BE GREAT, AND IT'S WORTH SEEKING OUT THE CITY'S RICH SILK-WEAVING AND BRASSWORK. THE BEST AREAS TO BROWSE ARE THE THATHERI BAZAAR (FOR BRASS), OR JNANA VAPI AND THE VISHWANATHA GALI IN GODAULIA WITH ITS TEMPLE BAZAAR (FOR SILK BROCADE AND JEWELLERY). AND OF COURSE, NEVER GO SHOPPING WITH A GUIDE, OFFICIAL OR NOT, NOR ASK ANY GUIDE OR RICKSHAW-WALA TO TAKE YOU TO ANY SHOP.

CRAFTS HANDLOOM HOUSE D-64/132K SIGRA (OFF VIDYAPEETH RD) 📞0542 222 1742; MAP. THIS GOVERNMENT-RUN EMPORIUM OFFERS FIXED PRICES AND ASSURED QUALITY ON SILK, COTTON, SARIS, SHIRTS, SHEETS AND CUSHION COVERS.

SILK SALES PITCHES TEND TO BECOME MOST AGGRESSIVE WHEN IT COMES TO SILK. YOU NEED TO BE WARY OF THE HARD SELL, AND ALSO TO BE AWARE THAT WELL-KNOWN REPUTABLE FIRMS SPAWN CROOKED IMITATORS USING THE SAME NAMES TO FOOL TOURISTS.

★Mehrotra Silk Factory SC-21/72 Englishia Lane, off Station Rd near the railway station, 📞89486 00002; map. Highly recommended, and will happily run you up a shirt and deliver it to your hotel, as well as selling ready-made scarves, shawls and bed sheets at very good prices; they also have a branch at K-4/8A Lalghat, and offer free hotel or station pick-ups for customers, which is worth taking up (this shop is particularly plagued by spurious imitators, so carefully check the exact spelling of the shop name before entering, and on no account ask a rickshaw-wala or guide to bring you here, as they will almost certainly take you to a commission-paying and usually crooked imitator instead;).

Paraslakshmi Exports D-61/16, Sidhgiribagh 📍 himagaurisarees.com; map. A wide range of silk fabrics as well as scarves, shawls and bedspreads at fixed prices; offers free pick-ups for customers, and it is wise to take them up on this.

MUSIC RAVI CLASSICAL MUSIC CENTRE D14/88 TEDINEEM (ARROWED FROM THE ALLEY BY TRIPTI LODGE ON DASHASWAMEDH RD) 📞 98389 74705; MAP. A FAMILY FIRM THREE GENERATIONS OLD MAKING AND SELLING SITARS, TABLAS AND OTHER INDIAN CLASSICAL INSTRUMENTS. THEY ALSO OFFER LESSONS.

BOOKS INDICA BOOKS D-40/18 MADANPURA RD, GODAULIA, 📍 INDICABOOKS.IN; MAP. A LARGE SELECTION OF BOOKS ON HINDUISM, RELIGIOUS PHILOSOPHY AND WHAT THEY CALL “INDOLOGY”, INCLUDING THEIR OWN PUBLICATIONS. THERE’S ALSO A GOOD SELECTION OF INDIAN AND FOREIGN FICTION AND NONFICTION IN ENGLISH AT THE FRONT.

Om Pilgrims Book House B-27/98 A-8, Nawabganj Rd, Durga Kund, 📍 pilgrimsonlineshop.com; map. A funny old place, a bit like a Victorian books emporium, in an old house, specializing in books on religion, particularly Buddhism, but also books on Varanasi and the Ganges, and even a few antiquarian books.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE SEVERAL CHEAP HOTELS, AS WELL AS THE UPMARKET ONES, WILL CHANGE MONEY. A2Z INDIA BY RADISSON HOTEL (DAILY 8AM–8PM) CHANGES CASH WITH A MINIMUM OF FUSS.

Hospitals Sir Sunderlal Hospital, Benares Hindu University (📍 bhu.ac.in/ims/hospital); Shiv Prasad Gupta Hospital (government-run), Kabir Chaura (☎0542 221 4723); Ram Krishna Mission Hospital, Luxa (📍varanasirkm.org).

Music The International Music Ashram, D33/81 Kalishpura, near Dasashwamedh Ghat in the Old City (☎09415987283), is an excellent place to get a few lessons in tabla, sitar and theory and has rooftop concerts on Wednesday and Saturday at 8pm.

Pharmacies Every hospital has a neighbouring 24hr pharmacy.

Post The main post office in the Old City is on Kabir Chaura Rd near Kotwali police station at the top end of the Chowk district. The one in the Cantonment is off Raja Bazaar Rd near the big TV mast at its top end. Branch offices are located on the Mall in the Cantonment, on Dashaswamedh Rd near the river, and on Vishwanatha Mandir Lane north of Ganga Fuji restaurant.

Yoga There is a yoga institute at the Benares Hindu University, but the Yoga Training Centre (D-5/15 Shakarkand Lane, near Mir Ghat; 📍yogatrainingcentrevaranasi.in) in Godaulia is more central.

Sarnath

Ten kilometres north of Varanasi, the ruins and temples at SARNATH are a Buddhist pilgrimage centre, and also popular with day-trippers from Varanasi. It was here, around 530 BC, just five weeks after he had found enlightenment, that Buddha gave his first ever sermon. According to Buddhist belief, this set in motion the Dharmachakra (“Wheel of Law”), a new cycle of rebirths and reincarnations leading eventually to ultimate enlightenment for everybody. During the rainy season, when Buddha and his followers sought respite from their round of itinerant teaching, they would retire to Sarnath. Also known as Rishipatana, the place of the rishis, or Mrigadaya, the deer park, Sarnath’s name derives from Saranganatha, the Lord of the Deer.

Over the centuries, the settlement flourished as a centre of Buddhist (particularly Hinayana) art and teaching. Seventh-century Chinese pilgrim Xuan Zhang recounted seeing thirty monasteries, supporting some three thousand monks, and a life-sized brass statue of the Buddha turning the Wheel of Law, but Indian Buddhism floundered under the impact of Muslim invasions and the rise of Hinduism. Sarnath’s expanding Buddhist settlement eventually dissolved in the wake of this religious and political metamorphosis. Except for the Dhamekh Stupa, much of the site lay in ruins for almost a millennium, prey to vandalism and pilfering, until 1834, when Alexander Cunningham, head of the Archaeological Survey, excavated the site. Today it is once more an important Buddhist centre, and its avenues house missions from all over the Buddhist world.

The main site Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge; video camera charge (ticket office just southwest of the site entrance, opposite museum) Dominated by the huge bulk of the Dhamekh Stupa, the extensive archeological excavations of the main site of Sarnath are maintained within an immaculate park. As you enter from the southwest, the pillaged remains of the Dharmarajika Stupa lie immediately to the north: within its core the stupa holds a green marble casket containing relics of Buddha (Ashoka gathered these up from seven original locations and redistributed them among numerous stupas nationwide including this one) and precious objects, including decayed pearls and gold leaf. Commemorating the spot where the Buddha delivered his first sermon, Dharmarajika is attributed to the reign of Ashoka in the third century BC, but was extended a further six times.

Adjacent to Dharmarajika Stupa are the ruins of the main shrine, where Ashoka is said to have meditated. To the west stands the lower portion of an Ashoka Pillar – minus its famous capital, which is now housed in the museum. The ruins of four monasteries, dating from the third to the twelfth centuries, are also contained within the compound; all bear the same hallmark of a central courtyard surrounded by monastic cells.

Dhamekh Stupa The most impressive of the site's remains is the Dhamekh Stupa, also known as the Dharma Chakra Stupa, which stakes a competing claim to be the exact spot of Buddha's first sermon. The stupa is composed of a cylindrical tower rising 33.5m from a stone drum, ornamented with bas-relief foliage and geometric patterns; the eight-arched niches halfway up may once have held statues of the Buddha.

Sri Digamber Jain Temple In its own enclosure outside the main site, so accessible for free, the Sri Digamber Jain Temple, or Shreyanshnath Temple, is believed to mark the birthplace of Shreyanshnath, the eleventh Jain tirthankara. Built in 1824, the interior houses a large image of the saint, as well as attractive frescoes depicting the life of Mahavira, the contemporary of Buddha who founded the Jain religion.

The museum Daily except Fri 9am–4.45pm • Charge (ticket office across the street); leave cameras and mobiles in lockers at the entrance Opposite the gates to the main site, the museum is designed to look like a vihara. Its small but renowned collection of Buddhist and brahmanist antiquities consists mostly of sculpture made from Chunar sandstone. The most famous exhibit is the lion capital, removed here from the Ashoka column on the main site. Commissioned by Ashoka (273–232 BC), the great Mauryan king and convert to the dharma, it has become the emblem of modern India: four alert and beautifully sculpted lions guard the four cardinal points, atop a circular platform. Belonging to the first and second centuries AD are two impressive life-size standing bodhisattvas – one has a stone parasol with fine ornamentation and emblems of the faith. Among the large number of fifth-century figures is one of Buddha, cross-legged and with his hands in the mudra gesture. Perfectly poised, with his eyes downcast in deep meditation and a halo forming an exquisite nimbus behind his head, the Buddha is seated above six figures, possibly representing his companions, with the Wheel of Law in the middle to signify his first sermon. Later sculptures, dating from the tenth to twelfth centuries, include an exceptionally delicate image of the deity Avalokiteshvara with a lotus, and another of Lokeshvara holding a bowl.

Chaukhandi Stupa Rishipattan Road • Daily sunrise–sunset • Free The dilapidated brick remains of the Chaukhandi Stupa, 1km south of the main site, date from the Gupta period (300– 700 AD). They are said to mark the spot where Buddha was reunited with the Panchavargiya Bikshus, his five ascetic companions who had previously deserted him. The stupa, standing atop a terraced rectangular plinth, is capped by an incongruous octagonal Mughal tower, which was built by Akbar in 1589 AD to commemorate his father's visit to the site.

Mulagandha Kuti Vihara Anagarika Dharmapala Road • Daily: 8–11.30am, 1.30–5.30pm • Free Northeast of the Dhamekh Stupa, the lofty church-like Mulagandha Kuti Vihara monastery was built in 1931 with donations from the international Buddhist community. Run by the Mahabodhi Society, it drew devotees from all over the world to witness its consecration and has become one of Sarnath's greatest attractions for pilgrims and tourists alike. The entrance foyer is dominated by a huge bell – a gift from Japan – and the interior houses a gilded reproduction of the museum's famous image of the Buddha, surrounded by fresco-covered walls depicting scenes from his life.

A little way east, shielded by a small enclosure, Sarnath's bodhi tree is an offshoot of the tree at Bodhgaya in Bihar, under which Buddha attained enlightenment. Sangamitra, Emperor Ashoka's daughter, took a branch from the original tree in 288 BC and planted it in Anuradhapura, in Sri Lanka, where its offshoots have been nurtured through the ages.

The grounds of the Mulagandha Kuti Vihar also contain a deer park, with enclosures for cheetals and black bucks, as well as a small zoo with a crocodile pond and aviaries.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS AND AUTO- RICKSHAW LOCAL BUS SERVICES FROM GT ROAD OUTSIDE VARANASI CANTONMENT STATION AND OPPOSITE THE BUS STAND HAVE BEEN SUSPENDED WHILE ROADWORKS HAVE REDUCED MUCH OF THE ROUTE TO RUBBLE, BUT SHARED AUTOS TO SARNATH STILL RUN FOR THE SAME PRICE (₹50),

ALTHOUGH SOME ONLY RUN AS FAR AS ASHAPUR CHAUMANI, 2KM SOUTH OF SARNATH, FROM WHERE YOU CAN WALK OR TAKE A LOCAL RICKSHAW. A PREPAID AUTO FROM VARANASI CANTONMENT STATION COSTS ₹200.

Tourist office UP Modern Recreation Centre (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Agrawal Paying Guest House 14/91 Agrawal Ganj, Ashok Rd (opposite Tibetan Temple) 0542 259 5316. Peaceful little guesthouse in a beautiful, well-kept garden with roses and starfruit trees. The rooms are immaculate, cool white with marble floors, all attached, but so far wi-fi only reaches the lobby (although they plan to extend it to the rooms too). It's worth paying extra for the bigger, brighter upstairs rooms. Wi-fi available, but coverage often not great in the rooms. ₹

Tourist Bungalow Ashok Rd (opposite the post office) 0542 259 5965. The UP-state-run hotel is institutional and functional, but it's got large rooms, all attached, some a/c ₹₹, and a dorm. ₹

EATING

MAP

Rangoli Garden SA-14/97 Ashok Rd (opposite the radio station) 0542 259 5325. Just past Chukhandi Stupa, at the crossroad on the way from Varanasi, this is a very popular spot for good north and south Indian food and has an outdoor sitting area. Mains include chicken tikka masala or, if you prefer it veg, paneer tikka masala. ₹

Vaishali At the junction of Anagarika Dharmapala Rd and Ashok Rd 902 641 9991. Upstairs restaurant with a choice of north Indian, south Indian or Chinese. ₹

Gorakhpur Some 230km north of Varanasi, GORAKHPUR rose to prominence as a waystation on a pilgrims' route linking Kushinagar (the place of Buddha's enlightenment) and Lumbini (his birthplace, across the border in Nepal), and is now known primarily as a gateway to Nepal. It was named after the Shaivite yogi Gorakhnath, and holds a large ashram and temple dedicated to him. Tourists and pilgrims tend to hurry through, their departure hastened by the town's infamous flies and mosquitoes. It does, however, have a bustling bazaar, adequate amenities and a few passable hotels.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY PLANE THE GORAKHPUR AIRPORT IS 8KM EAST OF GORAKHPUR TOWARDS KUSHINAGAR. TAXIS CHARGE ₹400 INTO TOWN. DAILY FLIGHTS TO DELHI ARE CURRENTLY OPERATED BY AIR INDIA, INDIGO AND SPICEJET.

By train Daily trains from Gorakhpur station in the city centre include the #12553 Vaishali Express at 4.55pm for Lucknow (arr. 10pm) and New Delhi (arr. 6.25am next day), and the #15018 Gorakhpur–Lokmanyatilak Express at 5.45am for Mumbai (arr. at Lokmanya Tilak Terminus 5.15pm next day) via Varanasi (arr. 10.45am). For Lucknow the #12531 Intercity Express may be more convenient (dep. 5.45am, arr. 11.10am).

By bus Gorakhpur has three bus stands. The Railway Bus Stand (200m up Station Rd, opposite the station, marked by a statue of Maharana Pratap Singh on horseback) is used by some services to Lucknow, and by buses to Kushinagar and the Nepalese border at Sonauli; for Kathmandu and Pokhara, see box below. The Kacheri Bus Stand, 1km southwest of the station, has buses to Prayagraj, Lucknow and Varanasi. Pedleyganj, 2km southeast of the station, is used by some Varanasi services.

By rickshaw Cycle rickshaws are the main means of transport around town.

Services The GPO is on Park Rd at Golghar.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING GORAKHPUR HOTELS RANGE FROM DINGY FLOPHOUSES NEAR THE STATION TO MID-RANGE PLACES IN GOLGHAR (1KM SOUTHWEST) AND NIYAMACHAK (1.5KM WEST). FOR EATING, THERE'S A ROW OF CHEAP DHABAS OPPOSITE THE STATION.

Bobina Nepal Rd, Niyamachak, www.bobina.hotelsinuttarpradesh.com. The public areas look a bit wind-swept, but this is a very good-value mid-range choice, with spacious a/c and non-a/c rooms, a decent restaurant and bar, and even a pool. Often full, so it's worth booking ahead. ₹₹₹

Bobis Golghar 08931971111. A multicuisine restaurant where lunch is served noon–3pm, supper 7–10.30pm, with snacks and cakes from the adjoining bakery served in-between times. There are also Chinese and Continental options. ₹₹

Clarks Grand Park Rd, near Golghar, www.hotel-clarks-grand.business.site. Gorakhpur's most upmarket option, an unexciting but reliable business hotel with large rooms and a pool. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹

Standard Station Rd, by the statue of Maharana Pratap Singh 0551 220 1439. Cleanest of the cheap hotels opposite the station. Rooms are attached, but hot water comes in a bucket. No wi-fi. ₹₹

Kushinagar Set against a pastoral landscape 53km east of Gorakhpur, the small village of KUSHINAGAR is revered as the site of Buddha's death and cremation, and final liberation (Mahaparinirvana) from the cycles of death and rebirth. During his lifetime, Kushinara, as it was then called, was a small kingdom of the Mallas, surrounded by forest. It remained forgotten until the late nineteenth century, when archeologists began excavations based on the writings of seventh-century Chinese pilgrims.

Set in a leafy park in the heart of Kushinagar, the Mahaparinirvana Temple (or Nirvana Stupa; sunrise–sunset; free), dated to the reign of Kumaragupta I (413–455 AD), was extensively rebuilt by Burmese Buddhists in 1927. The large gilded reclining Buddha inside the shrine was reconstructed from the remains of an earlier Malla image. At the road crossing immediately southwest, the Matha Kuwar shrine holds a tenth-century Buddha made of blue schist rock, also covered in gilt. It's usually locked up (you can look in through the windows), but the caretaker may offer to open it up for you if he's around. Just round the corner, there's a Buddha Museum (Tues–Sat and most Sundays 10.30am–4.30pm; charge, camera charge), housing a so-so collection of ancient Buddhist sculpture, not all original; the most interesting exhibits are the small pieces in a case of antiquities unearthed locally. The crumbling bricks of the Ramabhar Stupa, about 1.5km southeast of the main site (sunrise–sunset; free; around ₹75 for the roundtrip by rickshaw), are thought to be the original Mukutabandhana Stupa, erected to mark the spot where Buddha was cremated.

GETTING TO NEPAL GORAKHPUR IS A CONVENIENT JUMPING-OFF POINT FOR WESTERN NEPAL, OFFERING ACCESS TO POKHARA AND EVEN KATHMANDU. THROUGH TICKETS TO KATHMANDU AND POKHARA ARE NOT WORTH BUYING; THEY JUST LIMIT YOUR CHOICES AT THE BORDER AND MAY EVEN LEAVE YOU WITHOUT A CONNECTION AT ALL. IT'S MUCH BETTER THEREFORE TO GET A BUS TO SONAULI, WALK ACROSS THE BORDER, AND PICK UP ONWARD TRANSPORT CONNECTIONS ON THE OTHER SIDE.

Buses for Sonauli (3hr) depart from Gorakhpur's Railway Bus Stand between 4.30am and 9pm: deluxe buses leave from in front of the railway station. For onward destinations in Nepal, you'll need to get to Bhairawa, 5km north of the border post (around ₹20 by local bus, ₹50 by rickshaw). There are morning and evening buses and minibuses from Bhairawa to Kathmandu (8–9hr) and Pokhara (7–9hr), but set off early from Gorakhpur to get your connecting bus in daylight and enjoy the views.

Coming the other way, private buses for Gorakhpur leave Sonauli almost hourly in the mornings (5–11am).

ACCOMMODATION RAHI TOURIST BUNGALOW MAHARAJ GANJ, SONAULI (1KM SHORT OF THE BORDER), ☎ UPSTDC.CO.IN. THIS UP STATE GOVERNMENT-RUN HOTEL HAS A RANGE OF ROOMS, INCLUDING A/C AND A DORM. THERE'S MORE CHOICE OVER THE BORDER IN NEPAL; AND IN BHAIRAWA, 4KM UP THE ROAD FROM THE BORDER, WHERE THE BUDGET MT EVEREST AND MORE UPMARKET YETI ARE POPULAR OPTIONS. ₹

VISAS AND MONEY MULTI-ENTRY NEPALESE VISAS ARE AVAILABLE AT THE BORDER (☎ IN.NEPALEMBASSY.GOV.NP/VISA). THERE IS A STATE BANK OF INDIA ON THE INDIAN SIDE OF THE BORDER AND

MONEYCHANGERS ON THE NEPALESE SIDE. DON'T BELIEVE ANYONE SAYING IT'S ILLEGAL TO ENTER NEPAL WITH INDIAN RUPEES – IT'S A SCAM TO COAX YOU INTO EXCHANGING ALL YOUR LEFTOVER MONEY AT LOWER RATES.

Today Kushinagar is rediscovering its roots as a centre of international Buddhism, and is home to several monasteries sponsored by Buddhists from Tibet, Burma, Thailand, Sri Lanka and Japan. The strikingly simple Japanese Temple consists of a single circular chamber housing a great golden image of Buddha, softly lit through small, stained-glass windows. In stark contrast, the recently constructed Thai Monastery is a large complex of lavish, traditionally styled temples and shrines.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS REGULAR KUSHINAGAR BUSES LINK KUSHINAGAR WITH GORAKHPUR (1HR 30MIN). BUSES DROP YOU ON THE NH-28 HIGHWAY AT THE JUNCTION WITH THE ROAD INTO TOWN.

Tourist information UP Tourism maintains an office (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm but often closed for no particular reason; ☎05564 273045) at Pathik Niwas.

Tours India Tourism and UP Tourism run comprehensive tours of the whole “Buddhist Circuit” of Uttar Pradesh, which can be booked in Kushinagar, or at UP Tourism in Delhi. Yama Café organize a 13km hike to surrounding villages and holy sites (8am–4pm; ₹900/person including breakfast and lunch; minimum five people).

Services You can change money at the travel agent next to Yama Café, and at the Lotus Nikko hotel.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING LINH SON 300M FROM THE NH-28 HIGHWAY, ON THE LEFT ☎993 683 7270. THE BRIGHT, MODERN GUESTHOUSE ATTACHED TO THIS RESPLENDENT CHINESE-VIETNAMESE TEMPLE IS ONE OF THE BEST IN TOWN, WITH CLEAN, ATTACHED DOUBLES WITH HOT WATER. ₹

Lotus Nikko Next to the Japanese Temple, ☎lotusnikkohotels.com. Very large rooms, more like suites, each with a sitting and eating area, make this

Kushinagar's top hotel, but it's sometimes booked up by tour groups. ₹₹₹₹

< Back to Uttar Pradesh

Shutterstock
THE GARHWAL HIMALAYAS

Uttarakhand

Dehradun

Mussoorie

Haridwar

Rajaji National Park

Rishikesh

Uttarkashi

The trek to Yamunotri

Gangotri and the Gaumukh Glacier trek

Kedarnath and around

Joshimath

Badrinath

Hemkund and the Valley of Flowers

Nainital

Corbett Tiger Reserve

Ranikhet

Almora

North of Almora

Uttarakhand

Northeast of Delhi, bordering Nepal and Tibet, the mountains of the Garhwal and Kumaon regions rise from the fertile sub-Himalayan plains. Together they form the state of Uttarakhand, which (as Uttaranchal) was shorn free from lowland Uttar Pradesh in 2000 after years of agitation. The region has its own distinct languages and cultures, and successive deep river valleys shelter fascinating micro-civilizations, where Hinduism and Buddhism meet animism. The snow peaks here rank among the most beautiful mountains of the inner Himalayas, forming an almost continuous chain that culminates in Nanda Devi, the highest mountain in India at 7816m.

Garhwal is the more visited region, busy with pilgrims who flock to its holy spots. At Haridwar, the Ganges thunders out from the foothills on its long journey to the sea. The nearby ashram town of Rishikesh is familiar from one of the classic East-meets-West images of the 1960s; it was where the Beatles came to stay with the Maharishi. From here pilgrims set off for the high temples of Char Dham – Badrinath, Kedarnath, Yamunotri and Gangotri, the source of the Ganges. Earthier pursuits are on offer at Mussoorie, a British hill station and now a popular Indian resort.

The less-visited Kumaon region remains largely unspoilt, and boasts pleasant small towns with panoramic mountain views, among them Kausani, Ranikhet, and the tiny hamlet of Kasar Devi, as well as the Victorian hill station of Nainital, where a lakeside promenade throngs with visitors escaping the heat of the plains. Further down, it's possible to stay inside Corbett Tiger Reserve and take a jeep safari to search for elusive wildlife. Both districts abound in classic treks, many leading through bugyals – summer pastures, where rivers are born and paths meet.

Brief history

The first known inhabitants of Garhwal and Kumaon were the Kuninda in the second century BC. A Himalayan tribal people practising an early form of Shaivism, they traded salt with Tibet and shared connections with contemporaneous Indo-Greek civilization. As evidenced by a second-century Ashokan edict at Kalsi in western Garhwal, Buddhism made some inroads in the region, but Garhwal and Kumaon remained Brahmanical. The Kuninda eventually succumbed to the Guptas around the fourth century AD, who, despite controlling much of the north Indian plains, failed to make a lasting impact here. Between the seventh and fourteenth centuries, the Shaivite Katyuri dominated lands around the modern-day Bajjnath valley in Kumaon, where their stone temples still stand. As Brahmanical culture flourished, Jageshwar emerged as a major pilgrimage centre. In following centuries, Kumaon prospered further under the Chandras, who took learning and art to new levels, while Garhwal fell under the Panwar rajas. In 1803, the westward expansion of the Nepali Gurkhas engulfed both regions, but their brief rule ended with the Sugauli Treaty of 1816, resulting in annexation of both regions by the British.

BEST TIME TO VISIT UTTARAKHAND IS GOOD TO VISIT ALL YEAR ROUND EXCEPT THE PEAK WINTER AND MONSOON PERIODS, ESPECIALLY IN THE UPPER TRACTS. DURING MONSOONS (JULY/AUGUST), HEAVY RAINS BRING LANDSLIDES, CAUSING LONG TRANSPORT DELAYS, WHILE SNOWFALL IN WINTER MAY LEAD TO ROADBLOCKS. SUMMERTIME IS PLEASANT, ESPECIALLY IN THE HILLS, THOUGH HILL STATIONS LIKE MUSSOORIE AND NAINITAL CAN GET CROWDED IN MAY/JUNE.

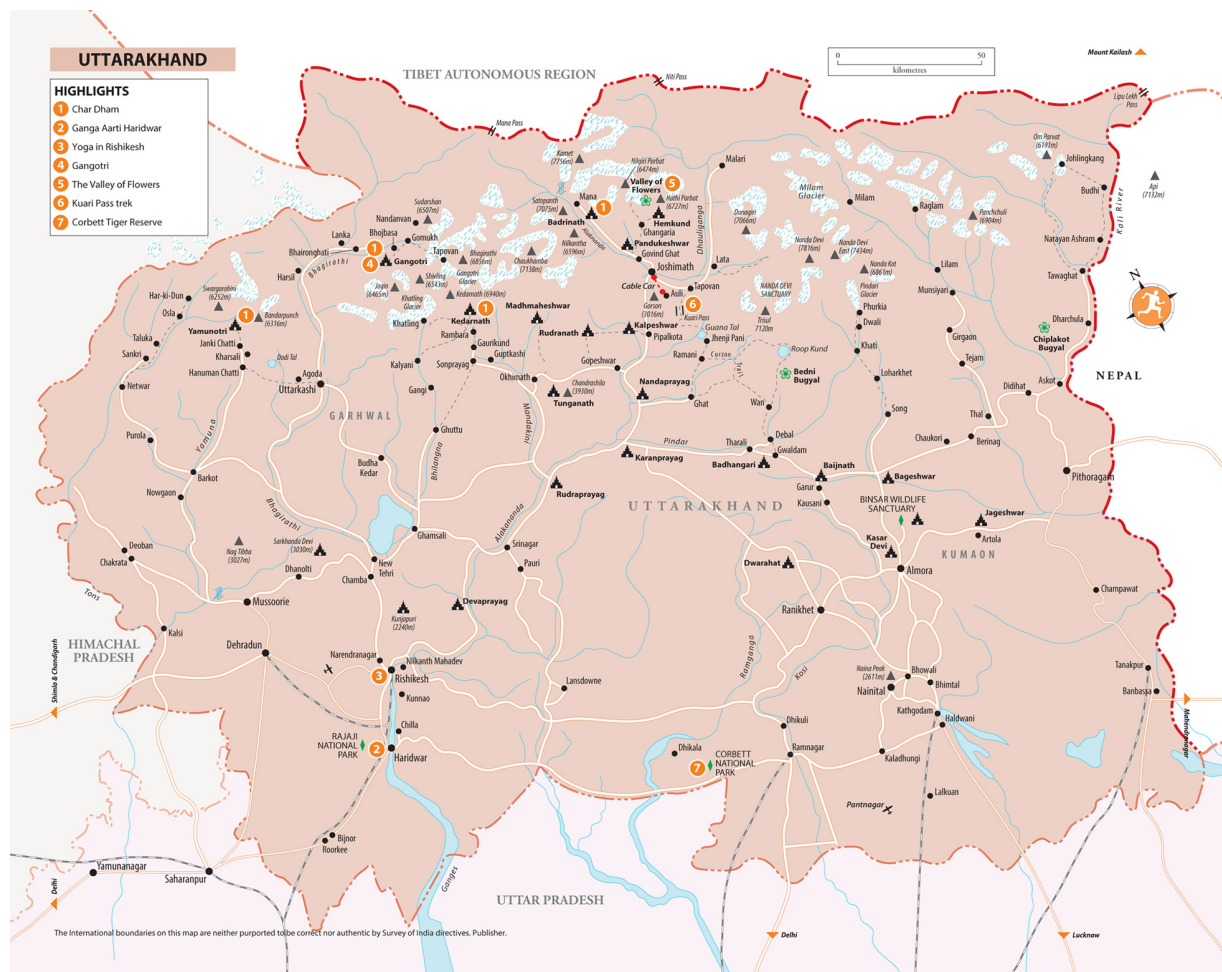

Shutterstock

LOCALS CELEBRATE GANGA AARTI HARIDWAR

Highlights

- ① Char Dham The pilgrim circuit to the four sacred sites of Garhwal reveals a cross-section of the Indian Himalayas' most superb scenery.
- ② Ganga Aarti Haridwar The spectacular nightly aarti ceremony in one of India's holiest cities sees thousands of devotees floating lamps down the Ganges.
- ③ Yoga in Rishikesh This busy pilgrimage place on the banks of the icy Ganges is a renowned yoga and meditation centre.
- ④ Gangotri Trek beyond the tree line to Gaumukh Glacier, source of the Ganges, where sadhus offer accommodation for spiritual retreats.
- ⑤ The Valley of Flowers The lush meadows of this remote, hidden valley are a botanist's dream: come in monsoon season to see the flowers in full bloom.
- ⑥ Kuari Pass trek A five-day trail through the upper reaches of Garhwal, offering stunning views of the Great Himalayan Watershed.
- ⑦ Corbett Tiger Reserve Established in the 1930s, India's most famous nature reserve is renowned for its population of tigers.

HIGHLIGHTS ARE MARKED ON THE MAP

FESTIVALS IN UTTARAKHAND INTERNATIONAL YOGA FESTIVAL (MARCH). ANNUAL FESTIVAL ORGANIZED BY PARMARTH NIKETAN ASHRAM IN RISHIKESH, WITH YOGA CLASSES, MANTRAS, KIRTANS, PLUS LIFESTYLE AND HEALING PROGRAMMES ALONGSIDE CULTURAL EVENTS.

Kumaoni Holi (March). In the hill tracts of Kumaon, Holi is a musical affair and takes various forms. At Baithki Holi, celebrations kick off in temple premises with traditional folk songs sung to a classical accompaniment. There's more singing at Khari Holi, celebrated mainly in rural areas. Mahila Holi is a women-only gathering.

Ganga Dussehra (May/June). A day devoted to worshipping the sacred Ganges, with devotees marking the occasion with a dip in the river and aarti. Hand-made Dussehra posters adorn the doors of temples and homes in Rishikesh, Haridwar and other towns along the river.

Bagwal or Devidhura Fair (August). Celebrated at the Varahi Devi temple at Devidhura, just south of Nainital. Amid folk songs and dances, two groups (khams) throw fruits and flowers at each other while protecting themselves with large wooden shields. Until 2013, it was stones that were pelted, and traditionally a priest would stop the ritual when it was ascertained that enough blood had been shed (equivalent to one man) to appease the goddess.

Nanda Devi Jaat (Aug/Sept). Dedicated to Uttarakhand's patron goddess, with an annual jaat (procession) and melas held in towns and villages with Nanda Devi shrines across Garhwal and Kumaon, including Almora, Nainital and Ranikhet.

The birth of Uttaranchal Following Independence, Garhwal and Kumaon became part of Uttar Pradesh, but failure by the administration in Lucknow to develop the region led to increasingly violent calls for a separate state. The sympathetic high-caste BJP took up the separatist cause after coming to power in 1998, leading to the creation of a new state, originally called Uttaranchal, in 2000, and later reverting to its historical name, Uttarakhand, meaning “northern country”, in 2007. The process of creating the new state was somewhat acrimonious, and deep cultural differences continue to characterize Garhwal and Kumaon.

On the environmental front, deforestation in the hills has led to a rapid loss of arable land, while global warming continues to shrink glaciers at an alarming rate. In June 2013, unprecedented rainfall caused devastating floods and landslides across north India, claiming thousands of lives and hitting Uttarakhand hardest of all. The tragedy, compounded by unscientific development – haphazard road-building, unregulated hotel construction on fragile river banks and the establishment of more than seventy hydroelectric projects in the state's watersheds – was regarded by environmentalists as a disaster waiting to happen. Ironically, it is drought and a scarcity of water that's increasingly having an impact on the state.

Dehradun

Capital of Uttarakhand, DEHRADUN, 255km north of Delhi, is pleasantly located at just below 700m, as the Himalayan foothills begin their dramatic rise, so it never gets too hot in summer, and snows rarely appear in winter. It stands at the centre of the 120km-long Doon Valley, hemmed in by the Yamuna to the west and the Ganges at Rishikesh to the east.

A popular retirement spot renowned for its elite institutions, the town dates its origins to 1676, when Guru Ram Rai, eldest son of the seventh Sikh Guru Har Rai ji, set up a dera (camp) in this tract of the dun or doon (valley). It was later occupied by Mughals and Gurkhas, but it's British influence that is most apparent.

More recently, driven by its status as state capital, increasing local and government investment has led to a commercial and IT boom in the city, but with much of the surrounding agricultural land swallowed up for development, Dehradun has becoming an urban sprawl with serious noise and traffic problems; it's particularly bad around the markets near the tall Victorian clock tower, and along Gandhi and Rajpur roads. Land grabbing – and the state-wide water shortage – also means that Dehradun's legendary high-quality basmati rice is fast becoming a rarity.

Darbar Guru Ram Rai Sahib Daily 6am–7.30pm • 🕒

sgrrdarbar.org

The gateway, walls and ceilings of the seventeenth-century gurudwara of Guru Ram Rai, in the centre of town, are suffused with exquisite 200-year-old murals painted in Mughal style. The outer courtyard leads to the inner sanctum where the Guru's domed tomb stands in the centre. The annual raising of the jhanda ji (flagstaff) here, five days after Holi, is celebrated with great pomp.

Forest Research Institute Museum 3km northwest of the clock tower on Chakrata Rd • Mon–Fri 9.30am–1pm & 1.30–5pm • Charge • 🕒 fridu.edu.in • Vikram #6 from Connaught Place The chateau-like Forest Research Institute, an impressive red-brick, Raj-era structure completed in the 1920s, sits in sprawling grounds. The institute is devoted to the preservation of India's much-threatened woodlands, and is responsible for training most of India's forest officers. There's a large and interesting museum, split into six sections, with highlights including a section on timber showcasing wooden furniture and a slice of a 704-year-old deodar tree.

Mindrolling Monastery Clement Town, 11km south of Dehradun • Daily 9am–noon & 2–7pm • Donation •  mindrolling.org

Just outside Dehradun might seem an unlikely setting for one of the largest Buddhist centres in the world, but the serene Mindrolling Monastery is the focus of a Tibetan community in exile, here since the Uprising of 1959. The 185ft Great Peace Stupa has several floors and shrine rooms and the Dalai Lama was present when it was inaugurated in 2002.

International visitors interested in study and retreat established by Mindrolling Monastery can get in touch with the Samten Tse Retreat Centre in Mussoorie ( mindrolling.org/samten-tse-retreat-centre).

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE

DEHRADUN

By bus The Inter-state Bus Terminal or ISBT is located 7km southwest of town, linked to the central railway station and budget hotels on Gandhi Rd by auto-rickshaw (₹200) or Vikram #5 (₹10). Buses to Mussoorie run from just north of the train station entrance.

Destinations Delhi (hourly, 7–9hr); Dharamsala (2 daily; 12hr); Haridwar (every 30min; 1hr 30min); Joshimath (daily 5pm; 12hr); Manali (daily 3pm; 14hr); Mussoorie (hourly; 1hr 30min); Nainital (6 daily; 8hr); Rishikesh (every 30min; 1hr); Shimla (daily 11pm; 8hr); Uttarkashi (daily 9pm; 9hr).

By train The station is off Gandhi Rd, 2km southwest of the clock tower. The best daily trains to Delhi are the overnight #14042 Mussoorie Express (departs 9.25pm; arrives Delhi 7.25am), the a/c #12018 Dehradun Shatabdi (departs 4.55pm; arrives New Delhi 10.50pm) and the #12056 JNdl's Janshatabdi (departs 5am; arrives New Delhi 11.05am). The Kumbh Express #12370 (Mon, Tues, Thurs, Fri, Sat) is the most convenient option for Lucknow (departs 10.05pm; arrives 8am next day) as well as Varanasi (arrives 12.55pm) and Howrah (arrives 3.15am next to next morning). For Agra, the #14310 Ujjayani Express (Tues & Wed; departs 5.50am; arrives 4.25pm) is the fastest.

GETTING AROUND BY VIKRAM THESE BLUE, EIGHT-SEATER AUTO-RICKSHAWS ARE DEHRADUN'S CHEAPEST MODE OF TRANSPORT; THEY ARE NUMBERED BY THEIR ROUTES AND COST ₹20–40.

GARHWAL AND THE CHAR DHAM YATRA AS THE SACRED LAND THAT HOLDS THE SOURCES OF THE MIGHTY GANGES AND YAMUNA RIVERS, GARHWAL HAS BEEN THE HEARTLAND OF HINDU IDENTITY SINCE THE NINTH CENTURY WHEN, IN THE WAKE OF THE DECLINE OF BUDDHISM IN NORTHERN INDIA, THE REFORMER ADI SHANKARA INCORPORATED MANY OF THE MOUNTAINS' ANCIENT SHRINES INTO THE FOLD OF HINDUISM. HE FOUNDED THE FOUR MAIN YATRA (PILGRIMAGE) TEMPLES, DEEP WITHIN THE HIMALAYAS, KNOWN AS THE CHAR DHAM – BADRINATH, KEDARNATH, GANGOTRI AND YAMUNOTRI. EACH YEAR, BETWEEN MAY AND NOVEMBER, ONCE THE SNOWS HAVE MELTED, STREAMS OF PILGRIMS PENETRATE HIGH INTO THE MOUNTAINS, PASSING BY WAY OF HARIDWAR AND RISHIKESH, THE LAND OF YOGIS AND ASHRAMS.

For more than a millennium, the yatris (pilgrims) came on foot. However, the annual event has been transformed in the last few years; roads blasted by the military through the mountains during the war against China in the early 1960s are now the lifelines for a new form of motorized yatra. Eastern Garhwal in particular is getting rich, and the fabric of hill society is changing rapidly – visitors hoping to experience the old Garhwal should spend at least part of their time well away from the principal yatra routes. In addition to their spiritual significance, the hills have become a hub for adventure sports, offering all levels of trekking, whitewater rafting, paragliding, skiing and climbing.

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURIST INFORMATION GMVN TOURIST OFFICE, HOTEL DRONA, 45 GANDHI RD (MON–SAT 10AM–5PM; 🌐 GMVNL.IN). THE KMVN TOURIST OFFICE IS AT THE SAME PREMISES (🌐 KMVN.IN). THE GMVN'S HEAD OFFICE (74/1 RAJPUR RD; MON–SAT 10AM–5PM; 🌐 GMVNONLINE.COM) BOOKS GMVN ACCOMMODATION AND TOURS THROUGHOUT GARHWAL.

Trekking and equipment Garhwal Adventure Tours (193 Araghar; 🌐 garhwaladventuretours.com) is an experienced organization used to working with international tour groups. Equipment can be bought or hired from Cliff Climbers (E5, Government Industrial Estate; 🌐 cliffclimbers.net), the best trekking and mountaineering equipment dealers in the region.

ACCOMMODATION MANY OF DEHRADUN'S MID-RANGE HOTELS ARE STRUNG ALONG RAJPUR RD AS IT HEADS NORTH TO MUSSOORIE. MOST BUDGET ACCOMMODATION CAN BE FOUND BETWEEN THE RAILWAY STATION AND CLOCK TOWER.

Hotel Aketa 113 1/2 Rajpur Rd 🌐 hotelaketadehradun.com. Around a 20min drive from the clock tower, and surrounded by trees, this is a great option for a clean and comfortable stay. The marble lobby sets a nice tone; rooms are large and well furnished. Breakfast is particularly good. ₹₹₹

Ashrey 10 Tyagi Rd, 🌐 hotelashrey.in. In a quiet, but central spot, just a 3min walk south of Prince Chowk; the private lawn in front leads to well-furnished rooms with flatscreen TVs, some with a/c. Their retro-themed Sagar restaurant features antiques and a vintage BSA motorbike and serves delicious north Indian and Chinese fare. ₹₹

Central Great Value 17 Rajpur Rd, opposite Gandhi Park 📞 0135 265 3880. Large, centrally located budget hotel, part of a well-run chain, with bright, spotless rooms, a multicuisine restaurant and a travel desk. ₹₹₹

Moti Mahal 7 Rajpur Rd 🌐 hotelmotimahal.net. A bright, modern hotel with immaculate rooms, smart fittings and flatscreen TVs and a fancy restaurant next door. ₹₹

★ White House 15/7 Subhash Rd. 🌐 hotelwhitehousedeh.wixsite.com/mysite. Atmospheric, peaceful, Art Deco Raj-era residence near the Astley Hall commercial complex, with a mix of a/c and non-a/c rooms, huge verandas, lofty ceilings, sturdy furniture and a friendly owner. Excellent pizzas, pastas and sandwiches are served at the cosy Y Café, and drop by the Purkal outlet, an NGO selling patchwork quilts and cushion covers made by local women. ₹₹₹

EATING AND DRINKING BLACK PEPPER 3 ASTLEY HALL, RAJPUR RD, 🌐 BLACKPEPPERDEHRADUN.COM. THIS COOL, GROTTO-STYLE RESTAURANT APPEALS TO FAMILIES AND BRIGHT YOUNG THINGS, WITH A WIDE RANGE OF NORTH AND SOUTH INDIAN, CHINESE AND CONTINENTAL MEALS. TRY THEIR CHICKEN SIZZLER. THE UPSTAIRS BAR IS EQUALLY INVITING AND HAPPY HOUR IS EVERY DAY UNTIL 10PM. ₹₹₹

★ Kumar Sweet Shop MDDA Complex, Opposite GPO, clock tower 📞 0135 265 5757. Established in 1957, this enduring sweetshop has a wide range of mithai (sweets) and snacks. The rasmalai, kulfi, carrot halwa and Mewa Bite (a dried-fruit milk sweet) are all highly recommended. Kumar's has a pure-veg branch 40m further north at 15-B Rajpur Rd (and not to be confused with the non-veg Kumar Restaurant nearby). ₹₹

Moti Mahal Moti Mahal hotel, 7 Rajpur Rd 🌐 hotelmotimahal.net. This sleek, a/c hotel restaurant serves excellent chicken, paneer and Chinese options. Favourites include chicken karahi, butter chicken and chicken tikka masala. ₹₹₹

Tirupati 27-B Rajpur Rd 📞 93581 10244. This clean, friendly multicuisine restaurant serves Chinese including chow mein and spring rolls, but is particularly strong on south Indian dishes. ₹₹

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE A NUMBER OF ATMS SURROUND THE CLOCK TOWER.

Bookshop The famous Nataraj Green Bookshop (17 Rajpur Rd; Mon–Sat 10am–1.30pm & 3–8pm) has a fine stock of books on the environment and ecology and a good selection of titles by celebrated local author, Ruskin Bond.

Post office The GPO is on Rajpur Rd (Mon–Sat 10am–6pm).

Mussoorie

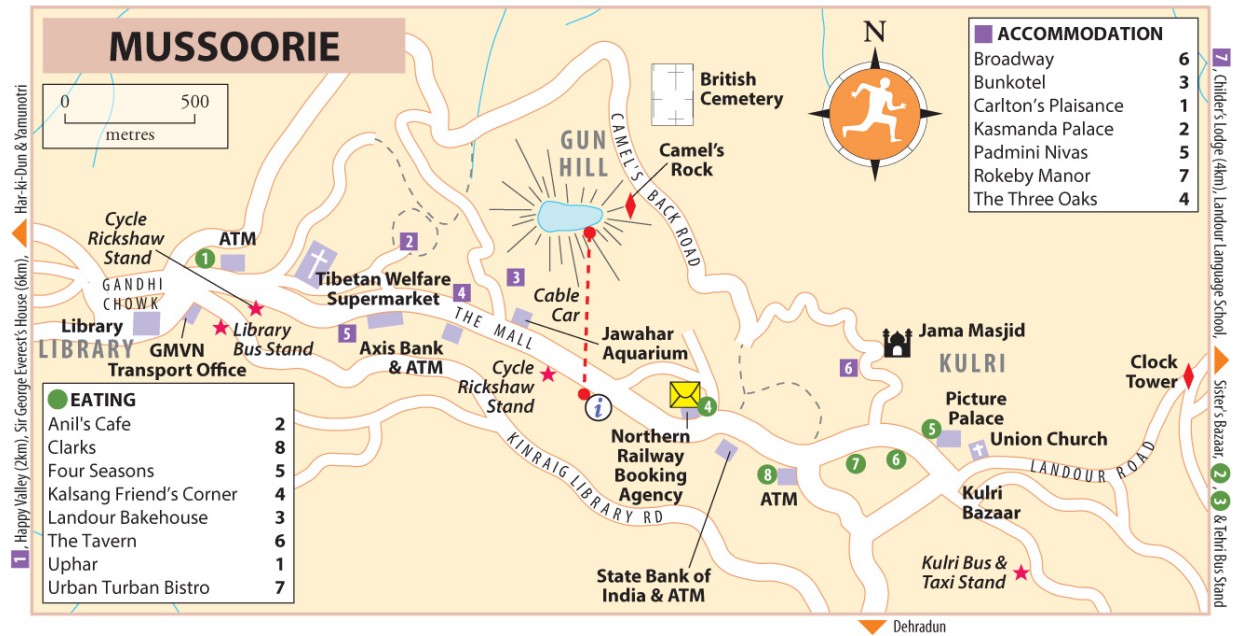

Spreading for 15km along a high serrated ridge, MUSSOORIE is the closest hill station to Delhi, just 278km north of the capital and 34km north of Dehradun, from where it is visible on a clear day. At an altitude of 2000m, it gives travellers from the plains their first glimpse of the snow-covered Himalayan peaks of western Garhwal, as well as dramatic views of the Doon Valley below.

A favoured retreat since the 1820s, Mussoorie is a highly popular weekend retreat for middle-class Indians up from the plains, with many of its Raj-era homes converted into heritage hotels. Many foreign visitors come to Mussoorie to study Hindi at the excellent Landour Language School, but the town also makes a handy base for treks into western Garhwal. Dominated by the long Bandarpunch Massif (6316m), with Swargarohini (6252m) in the west and the Gangotri group in the east, Mussoorie's mountain panorama forms a pleasant backdrop to the busy holiday town.

Mussoorie centres on the 2km pedestrian-only Mall, bookended by the town's two most lively hubs: Library Bazaar (also called Gandhi Chowk) to the west and Kulri Bazaar (or Picture Palace) to the east.

Happy Valley

2km west of the Library near Convent Hill (beyond LBSNAA and the polo ground) Home to more than five thousand Tibetans, Happy Valley was the first Tibetan settlement in India following the Dalai Lama's 1959 escape from Tibet. Although the headquarters for the Tibetan government-in-exile moved to Dharamsala in 1960, Happy Valley remains a bastion of Tibetan culture, with a large school, a lively bazaar and numerous gompas, including the beautiful Shedup Choephelling, the first of its kind to be built in India, surrounded by gardens and fluttering prayer flags, overlooking the nearby hills of Hathipaon and Benog Tibba.

Landour

5km east of Kulri Bazaar

A road winding steeply upwards from the eastern end of the Mall leads to Landour, a former British cantonment named after the Welsh village of Llanddowror and home to several renowned writers including Ruskin Bond, Bill Aitkin and Allan Sealy. Landour is set 300m higher than Mussoorie, facing Tibet, with cooler air and cleaner surrounds; a circular bridle trail, locally called the chukkar, connects the three summits of Landour ridge, Lal Tibba being the highest point.

The town features colonial-era cottages and a thriving bazaar overflowing with relics of the Raj. Above Sister's Bazaar near St Paul's Church, is Char Dukan (literally "four shops"), a square dotted with cafés frequented by both travellers and townsfolk. Near Kellogg Memorial Church is the Landour Language School (☎0135 263 1487, 🌐 landourlanguageschool.com; mid-Feb to mid-Dec), one of India's best for pupils of Hindi.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS THERE ARE MUSSOORIE BUS STANDS AT EITHER END OF THE MALL; THE LIBRARY BUS STAND TO THE WEST AND THE KULRI BUS STAND (OR MASONIC LODGE BUS STAND) TO THE EAST. BUSES FROM DEHRADUN ARRIVE AT BOTH STANDS, THOUGH THE FORMER HAS MORE SERVICES HEADING TOWARDS DEHRADUN (HOURLY; 1HR 30MIN), BUSES TO BARKOT (2 DAILY; 4–5HR) FOR THE YAMUNOTRI TREK AND SANKRI (7HR) VIA NOWGAON (3HR) FOR THE HAR-KI-DUN TREK. THE SMALLER TEHRI BUS STAND, 5KM EAST OF THE MALL, JUST BEYOND LANDOUR, SERVES DESTINATIONS TO THE EAST AND NORTHEAST: FOR UTTARKASHI, FIRST HEAD TO CHAMBA (HOURLY; 4HR), FROM WHERE REGULAR BUSES PLY TO GANGOTRI (EVERY 30MIN; 5HR).

MUSSOORIE'S MOUNTAIN VIEWPOINTS WHILE MUSSOORIE'S BUSY MALL FACES AWAY FROM THE SNOWS AND TOWARDS DEHRADUN, A NUMBER OF VANTAGE POINTS ARE WITHIN A SHORT WALK OF

THE CENTRE, OFFERING GLIMPSES OF HIMALAYAN GIANTS SUCH AS BANDARPUNCH I (6316M) AND II (6102M) AND KALANAG PEAK (6387M).

GUN HILL

The most popular of the town's viewpoints, Gun Hill (2024m) rises like a volcano over central Mussoorie, offering a superb Himalayan panorama (if you can see past the restaurants and old fair rides blocking the view). It can be ascended by a footpath forking up from the Mall, or by a 400m cable-car ride starting from the Ropeway station (10am–7pm; charge), halfway down the Mall.

CAMEL'S BACK ROAD

Rounding the northern base of Gun Hill is the pleasant 4km promenade of Camel's Back Road, a scenic northerly arch connecting Library and Kulri bazaars. Along the way are several worthy viewpoints, as well as the distinctive Camel's Rock and an old British cemetery – the resting place of British adventurer "Pahari" Wilson (closed to visitors).

SIR GEORGE EVEREST'S HOUSE THE 6KM HIKE FROM LIBRARY BAZAAR VIA HATHIPAON HILL TO THE FORMER HOME AND LABORATORY OF SIR GEORGE EVEREST IS REWARDED WITH FANTASTIC VIEWS OF BOTH THE HIMALAYAS AND THE DOON VALLEY. THE WHITEWASHED, ABANDONED HOUSE – THE PARK – WAS BOUGHT BY THE FAMOUS WELSH SURVEYOR IN 1833, AND MUCH OF THE WORK OF THE GREAT TRIGONOMETRIC SURVEY OF INDIA, DEMARCATING THE BOUNDARIES OF BRITISH INDIA AND MEASURING THE HEIGHT OF THE WORLD'S GREATEST PEAKS, TOOK PLACE HERE.

LAL TIBBA LAL TIBBA (RED HILL) IS A STEEP AND PEACEFUL 5KM CLIMB EAST OF THE MALL ON THE SLOPES ABOVE LANDOUR. AS THE VICINITY'S HIGHEST VANTAGE POINT, IT AFFORDS SOME OF THE BEST

PANORAMIC VIEWS OF THE GARHWAL HIMALAYAN RANGE.

By taxi Cars and shared taxis are available close to each bus stand. The taxi office 100m below the GMVN transport office, by the Library Bus Stand, serves Dehradun, Delhi, Gangotri and Uttarkashi, though it could be cheaper to organise a taxi through your hotel.

By train The Northern Railway Booking Office (Mon–Sat 8am–2pm; ☎0135 263 2846), near the post office, books train tickets from Dehradun, the nearest railhead, as does Sai Yatra (☎0135 263 5151), just west of Tavern.

GETTING AROUND VEHICLES ARE ALLOWED ON THE MALL ONLY TO REACH YOUR HOTEL OR DESTINATION (TWO-WHEELERS AND FOUR-WHEELERS; NO ENTRY 4–10.30PM), WITH SINGLE-TRIP PERMITS AVAILABLE AT THE TRAFFIC BARRIERS AT EITHER END.

Cycle rickshaws Cycle rickshaws ply the Mall from Library Bazaar to the Ropeway.

Motorbike rental Dhoom bike rental (☎0702 760 6060) are by the Library Bus stand.

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION THE TOURIST BUREAU (MON–SAT 10AM–5PM; ☎0135 263 2863), NEXT TO THE CABLE CAR, OFFERS BOOKLETS AND BROCHURES BUT LITTLE ELSE.

Tours GMVN transport office (Mon–Sat 8am–5pm; Wgmvnonline.com), next to the Library Bus Stand, runs tours of the town and further afield. Trek Himalaya, on the steep street opposite the cable car (daily 11am–9pm; ☎trekhimalaya.com), and Yeti Outdoors, opposite Hotel Hamers (daily 9am–8.30pm; ☎yetioutdoors.com), can arrange treks.

Services There are several ATMs along the Mall. There's a post office towards the Kulri end of the Mall (Mon–Fri 9am–5pm, Sat 9am–4pm).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Mussoorie's high season runs from mid-May to mid-July, with June being the busiest (and costliest) month of the year – book far ahead at these times. Prices drop during the shoulder season which includes Christmas and New Year, April, May, Oct and Nov; rates are slashed by as much as fifty percent the rest of the year.

Broadway Camel's Back Rd ☎0135 263 2243. Set in a rambling old nineteenth-century wooden building, this guesthouse is perched on the edge of Kulri Bazaar with charming, bright window boxes, lovely views and a friendly atmosphere. Great for budget travellers. No wi-fi. ₹₹

Bunkotel Jhula Ghar, Mall Rd 🌐bunkotel.biz. No-frills but neat and tidy place in an unbeatable location opposite the cable car offering rooms with 4–6 bunk beds in each. Dorms ₹₹

Carlton's Plaisance Happy Valley Rd, 1.5km west of town ☎0135 263 2800. Atmospheric Raj-era house with a more modern annexe, both stuffed full of period memorabilia. Edmund Hillary stayed here and loved it. Lovely gardens and an ideal base for gentle rambles away from town. ₹₹₹

★Kasmanda Palace The Mall, 🌐kasmandapalace.com. A short, stiff climb up from the Mall leads to this beautiful ex-maharaja's summer palace, bought from a British officer in 1915 and now a heritage hotel. Comfortable and quiet with lavish rooms, beautiful gardens and wall-mounted rhino heads. ₹₹₹₹

★Padmini Nivas The Mall, 🌐hotel-padmininivas.com. One of the oldest estates in Mussoorie, founded in the 1830s, and home to a former maharaja. Located just below the the Mall, with a beautiful rose garden and fruit trees, it offers excellent views and lovely rooms, most of them with a veranda. ₹₹₹₹

Rokeby Manor Rajmandi, 5km from town in Landour, 🌐rokebymanor.com. A tastefully renovated 1840 bungalow with stunning views over Mussoorie, Rokeby exudes sheer class, with wood and stone interiors, old fireplaces and cosy rooms. Dine on gourmet Indian and Continental cuisine at Emily's restaurant, enjoy a cuppa at the Tea Garden or treat yourself to a spa treatment. Also runs the exclusive Rokeby Residences, a cluster of nearby 1800s cottages, and Landour Bakehouse on Sisters Bazaar. ₹₹₹₹₹

The Three Oaks The Mall ☎0135 263 2225. Friendly, clean place towering over the centre of the Mall, with a good restaurant and sunny terraces overlooking the Doon Valley – views that are even better from the rooms with balconies. ₹₹

EATING

MAP

Anil's Café Char Dukan, 5km from town in Landour ☎09259572558. It's a bit of a ritual to stop here (first shop from corner) for ginger lemon honey tea, Maggi (instant noodles), parathas and bread omelette. Limited seating, both inside and outside. A selfie of Indian cricketer Sachin Tendulkar hangs as endorsement. ₹

Clarks The Mall, Kulri, 🌐theclarkshotels.com. This multicuisine restaurant, housed in a nineteenth-century hotel with lofty ceilings and plush furnishings, offers separate menus for non-veg Indian and Chinese cuisine, a favourite being the chicken Ra Ra Punjabi. ₹₹₹

Four Seasons The Mall, Kulri ☎09638965555. Not as much fun as The Tavern across the street, but popular because of its old school vibe and good views. Don't miss the murgh makhani (butter chicken). ₹₹

★Kalsang Friend's Corner The Mall, by the post office 🌐kalsangrestaurants.com. This cosy diner, decked with Chinese lanterns and Tibetan prayer flags, serves tasty Chinese, Indian and Thai dishes alongside hearty Tibetan food, including momos, thukpas (noodle soups) and fried meat dishes such as pork shaptak. ₹₹

Landour Bakehouse Sisters Bazaar, 5km from town in Landour 🌐rokebymanor.com/dining.htm. This atmospheric 115-year-old building is the place to go if you want comforting cakes, cookies and tarts (red velvet cake, peanut butter cookies) and an espresso. Their crepes are delicious, too. Books written by local authors are sold here. ₹

The Tavern The Mall, Kulri. Hip place near the Picture Palace, offering pricey Western, Thai, Chinese and Indian dishes, including chilli prawns and sizzlers. There's a small bar upstairs with beers and live music nightly. ₹₹₹

Uphar Gandhi Chowk. Clean and friendly north and south Indian veg food joint with an ice-cream bar. The speciality is Punjabi food; try the sarson ka saag (mustard curry) and makki ki roti (Indian corn bread). ₹

Urban Turban Bistro The Mall, Kulri ☎084 492 84487. This first-floor restaurant serves contemporary veg and non-veg Indian food and is a cut above its neighbours. Great staff and hospitality and uber cool decor. Try the charcoal grilled momos (veg cheezara). ₹

Haridwar

At HARIDWAR – the Gates (dwar) of God (Hari) – 214km northeast of Delhi, the River Ganges emerges from its final rapids past the Shivalik Hills to begin its long slow journey across northern India to the Bay of Bengal. Stretching for roughly 3km along a narrow strip of land between the craggy wooded hills to the west and the river to the east, Haridwar is revered by Hindus, for whom the Har-ki-Pairi ghat (literally the “Footstep of God”) marks the exact spot where the river leaves the mountains. As a road and rail junction, Haridwar links the Gangetic plains with the mountains of Uttarakhand and their holy pilgrimage (yatra) network. Along with Nashik, Ujjain and Prayagraj, it is one of the four holy tirthas or “crossings” that host the massive Kumbh Mela festival. Every twelve years (next due in 2022), millions of pilgrims come to bathe at a preordained moment in the turbulent waters of the channelled river around Har-ki-Pairi.

Har-ki-Pairi

Split by a barrage north of Haridwar, the Ganges flows through the town in two channels, divided by a long sliver of land. The natural stream lies to the east, while the embankment of the fast-flowing canal to the west holds the ghats and ashrams around Har-ki-Pairi temple. Bridges and walkways connect the various islands, and metal chains are placed in the river to protect bathers from being swept away.

The clock tower opposite Har-ki-Pairi ghat is an excellent vantage point, especially during evening worship. At both dawn and dusk, the spectacular ceremony of Ganga Aarti – devotion to the life-bestowing goddess Ganga – draws crowds of thousands. Lights float down the river and priests perform elaborate choreographed movements while swinging torches to the accompaniment of gongs and music. As soon as they’ve finished, the river shallows fill up with people looking for coins thrown in by the devout. The ghat area is free to visit, although a donation is required to visit the section at the bottom of the first staircase.

Haridwar's markets Haridwar's teeming network of markets is the other main focus of interest. Bara Bazaar, at the top of town, is a good place to buy a danda (bamboo staff) for treks in the mountains. Stalls in the colourful Moti Bazaar in the centre of town, on the Jawalapur road, sell everything from clothes to spices.

HAR-KI-DUN VALLEY TREK TUCKED AWAY IN THE NORTHWEST CORNER OF GARHWAL IS THE STUNNING "VALLEY OF THE GODS", REACHED BY A RELATIVELY UNDEMANDING THREE-DAY (38KM) TREK FROM SANKRI. A LUSH, FORESTED VALLEY STRIPED WITH GLACIAL STREAMS FROM THE SNOW-CLAD PEAKS OF SWARGAROHINI ("ASCENT TO HEAVEN"; 6252M) AND BANDARPUNCH ("MONKEY'S TAIL"; 6316M), HAR-KI-DUN IS HOME TO THE HIMALAYAN BLACK BEAR AND THE ELUSIVE SNOW LEOPARD, AND FALLS WITHIN THE GOVIND PASHU VIHAR NATIONAL PARK AND SANCTUARY (APRIL–NOV; ₹600 FOR UP TO THREE DAYS, NOMINAL CAMPING FEES EXTRA; HEAD OFFICE IN PUROLA; ☎01375 223433). VISITORS ARE REQUIRED TO REGISTER IN ADVANCE FOR AN ONLINE PERMIT, SEE www.UTTARKASHI.NIC.IN).

The sparse local population traces its lineage back to the Mahabharata, and like the Pandavas of the epic, they practise a form of polyandry and follow intriguing religious customs, including witchcraft. Worship at Taluka's Duryodhana temple, for example, consists of throwing shoes at the idol; at Pakola, the image has its back to the congregation. Their distinctive alpine buildings have beautifully carved wooden doors and windows, with the mortar construction punctuated by wooden slats.

To reach the trailhead at Sankri, board a Yamunotri-bound bus from Mussoorie's Library Bus Stand and change at Nowgaon, 9km before Barkot, for a jeep to Sankri. On the way you'll pass the forest checkpoint at Neitwar, 13km before Sankri. The official trail begins here, although jeeps can continue to Taluka (1900m), 14km further along through deodar and sycamore woods. The second day's hike is 13km to Seema, just below the village of Osla (2559m), while the third day's hike is 14km to Har-ki-Dun campsite (3566m), an excellent base from which to explore the bugyals (high alpine meadows) below the Swargarohini to the east, and the Jaundhar Glacier, a day-trip to the northwest. Note that you'll need to take your own food to Har-ki-Dun as there are no dhabas after Seema; forest bungalows can be found at each campsite (Sankri, Taluka, Seema, Neitwar, Osla and Har-ki-Dun).

Mansa Devi

Cable car daily: April–Oct 7am–7pm; Nov–March 8am–5pm; Charge (or VIP ticket, with no waiting in line, additional charge) High above Haridwar, on the crest of a ridge, the gleaming white shikhara of the Mansa Devi temple dominates both town and valley. In reverence to the goddess who grants all wishes, devotees tie threads to the branches of a nearby holy tree. The temple is reached by a four-seater cable car (known as “Udan Khatola”) from a base station off Upper Road in the heart of town, or you can take a steep 1.5km walk. Early morning is the best time to visit; pedestrian traffic along the trail can become intense later in the day during yatra season and the queuing system for the cablecar gets chaotic. The upper shrines hold no great architectural interest and the priests are known to demand donations, though you do get excellent views along the river.

Chandi Devi

Cable car return for both shrines • Charge • VIP ticket, with no waiting in line, additional charge Rising above the opposite bank of the Ganges, about 4km to the south of Mansa Devi, is another hill, Neel Parvat, crowned by the hilltop temple of Chandi Devi. While its earliest roots trace back to the eighth century, the temple was built in 1929 by the king of Kashmir. It is reachable by a second cable car or by a 3km hike from Chandi ghat, which passes the impressive Kamraj ki-Kali temple on the way.

Bharat Mata Temple 5km north of Haridwar • Charge •
Vikrams from next to Shivalik restaurant The modern, eight-storey, 55m Bharat Mata temple, dedicated to “Mother India”, was inaugurated in 1983 by Indira Gandhi. Each of its various floors – connected by lifts – is dedicated to a celestial or political theme, and populated by lifelike images of heroes, heroines and Hindu deities.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS MOST BUSES HARIDWAR DEPART FROM THE UTTARAKHAND ROADWAYS BUS STAND (www.UTCONLINE.UK.GOV.IN/CONTACT.ASPX) AT RISHIKUL ON RAILWAY RD (DEPARTURES LISTED BELOW). ADDITIONALLY, FROM THE GMOU BUS STAND (ABOUT 200M SOUTH ON RAILWAY RD) THERE ARE EARLY MORNING BUSES IN YATRA SEASON (MAY–OCT) TO GANGOTRI (12HR), KEDARNATH (10HR) AND BADRINATH (15HR), AND FROM NOV–JUNE THERE

ARE HOURLY BUSES FROM THE GMOU BUS STAND TO CHILLA (7AM–1PM; 30MIN), FOR RAJAJI NATIONAL PARK. NUMEROUS PRIVATE BUS COMPANIES, CLUSTERED BEHIND THE GMVN TOURIST OFFICE, HAVE SERVICES TO MAJOR DESTINATIONS IN THE SOUTH. KONARK ON JASSA RAM RD (☎ 090121 45678) HAS THREE DAILY SERVICES TO DELHI (10.30AM, 10PM & 11PM; 5–6HR).

Destinations Agra (8 daily; 12hr); Dehradun (every 30min; 1hr 30min); Delhi (10 daily; 5hr 20min); Lucknow (2daily; 10–12hr); Rishikesh (every 30min; 45min); Shimla (10 daily; 12–14hr).

By train Haridwar's railway station is on Railway Rd, just southwest of the centre. Major trains include the overnight #14042 Mussoorie Express (departs 11.16pm; arrives Delhi 7.20am) and the a/c #12056 Janshatabdi Express (departs 6.29am; arrives New Delhi 11.05am); for Agra, the #18478 Kalinga Utkal Express (departs 6.54am; arrives 2.45pm); for Lucknow the #13010 Doon Express (departs 10.18pm; arrives 8.35am), which continues to Varanasi (arrives 4.05pm) and Kolkata (arrives Howrah Junction 7am second morning). Local trains on the branch line to Rishikesh aren't that useful in view of the excellent and more frequent road connections.

By Vikram Vikrams for Rishikesh depart when full from next to Shivalik restaurant.

By taxi The Taxi Association near the railway station sets prices slightly higher than those quoted elsewhere. Travellers heading into the mountains should go to Rishikesh to pick up onward transport.

INFORMATION AND TOURS INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION IS AVAILABLE AT A BOOTH INSIDE THE STATION OR FROM THE MORE HELPFUL GMVN TOURIST OFFICE AT RAHI MOTEL ON RAILWAY RD, SOUTHWEST OF THE BUS STAND (MON–SAT 10AM–5PM; ☎ GMVNONLINE.COM).

Tours Konark Travels, Jassa Ram Rd (daily 7am–9pm; ☎ konarktravels.com), offers tours of the state by bus or car; Mohan's (Mon–Sat 8am–10.30pm; ☎ 01334 220910/ ☎ 098 3710 0215), across from Big Ben restaurant, runs more adventure-based tours such as rafting, mountain biking and rock climbing.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Haveli Hari Ganga 21 Pilibhit House, Hanuman Ghat Rd, @havelihariganga.com. A lovely haveli set up by two merchant brothers in 1917, converted into a beautiful heritage hotel with massage and spa rooms, a vegetarian restaurant and a private ghat for aarti. ₹₹₹₹

Inder Kuteer Sharwan Nath Nagar @09837082013. This friendly hotel near the river has small rooms with hot water and air-coolers, as well as a terrace with great rooftop views. Best value in this price range. ₹₹

Kailash Shivmurti Chowk, Railway Rd, @hotelkailashharidwar.com. Handy for the nearby railway station, the rooms here are all either air-cooled or a/c. Most are beginning to show their age, though some have little balconies overlooking the busy street. Up to fifty percent discount off-season. ₹

La Casa Railway Rd, near Lalita Rao Bridge @096 3920 7070, @lacasahotels.in. Within walking distance to the railway station, this nicely decorated twenty-room hotel provides a hearty breakfast if you're checking out early. Clean and comfortable, choose a deluxe or luxury room if you want a bit more space. ₹₹

Midtown In an alley off Upper Rd, opposite Chotiwalla restaurant, @midtownhotel.chobs.in. The name fits at this centrally located hotel, set about midway between the transport hubs and Har-ki-Pairi ghat. It's a standard budget hotel, with clean rooms and friendly staff. Rooms at the front have balconies, while some have a/c. Thirty percent discounts Nov–Feb. ₹

Prem Nagar Ashram Jawalapur Rd, 2km west of the station, @shripremnagarashram.org. Calm and peaceful, if rather removed from town, this ashram has been around since 1944. Charming staff and clean, cheap rooms, most of which are en suite; a/c is extra. ₹

Suvidha Sharwan Nath Nagar, behind Chitra Talkies cinema @01246201531. Comfortable place – though in need of a lick of paint – in a pleasant location near the river, away from the bustle of bazaars and main roads. If possible, view a few rooms and check you have 24hr hot water first. ₹₹

EATING

MAP

As a holy city, Haridwar is strictly vegetarian and booze-free.

Big Ben Hotel Ganga Azure, Railway Rd, ☎hotelgangaazure.com. Airy a/c restaurant with big windows overlooking a busy corner, offering a good range of veg curries, set meals, decent breakfasts and a few Chinese and Continental dishes including cheese and veg cutlets. ₹₹

Chotiwalla Upper Rd. Established in 1937, this dimly lit restaurant may no longer be the best in town but is still worth a visit for decent Indian food, Chinese and thalis.

Hoshiyarpuri Upper Rd ☎09358005005. Also established in 1937, this busy, friendly, Punjabi dhaba-like restaurant close to Har-ki-Pairi serves delicious Indian dishes such as dal makhani and baingan bharta, parathas, lassi and desserts like kheer (creamy rice pudding). ₹₹

Ksheer Sagar 21 Pilibhit House, Hanuman Ghat Rd. The restaurant at Haveli Hari Ganga heritage hotel has great service and great food. They don't have an à la carte menu, but there's a huge buffet spread at breakfast and dinner and a thali available at lunchtime. ₹₹

Shivalik Railway Rd ☎01334 226868. Housed in the hotel of the same name, Shivalik offers Chinese dishes and tasty south Indian snacks with worthy combo deals. The Continental breakfasts and deluxe thali are both good value. ₹₹

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE SEVERAL BANKS WITH ATMS CAN BE FOUND ALONG RAILWAY RD, INCLUDING THE STATE BANK OF INDIA AND CANARA BANK, BOTH OF WHICH ALSO CHANGE CASH; THERE ARE MORE ATMS ON UPPER ST, AS WELL AS SAI FOREX FOR FOREIGN EXCHANGE (☎01134 228483).

Post office The GPO is on Upper Rd (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm).

Rajaji National Park Nov 15–June 15 daily 6–9am & 3–6pm • Entry and parking charges; mandatory local guide charge • rajajinationalpark.in Rajaji National Park, part of the same forest belt as Corbett Tiger Reserve, 180km east, spans around 830 square kilometres of the Himalayan foothills immediately east and west of Haridwar. Of the park's eight entry points, the most useful are the main gates at Chilla, 9km east of Haridwar, and the gates at Kunnao, close to Rishikesh. Set beside the Ganges barrage and its massive electricity pylons, Chilla makes a relatively quiet base for explorations of the park. Meanwhile, Chilla Beach – occasionally used by large river turtles – lies within walking distance through the woods, 1km north along the Ganges.

Although largely surrounded by development and dotted with settlements of the Van Gujjars, a nomadic tribe whose summer homes have traditionally fallen within the park, for the time being Rajaji remains pristine and its wildlife resilient. Less developed than Corbett, it contains a similar range of fauna, most notably elephants, but also leopard and at least fourteen tigers at last count.

ARRIVAL AND GETTING AROUND BY RAJAJI NATIONAL PARK
BUS AND TAXI HOURLY BUSES (7AM–1PM) RUN TO CHILLA
FROM HARIDWAR'S GMOU BUS STAND. TAXIS CHARGE ₹700
ONE WAY.

Jeep hire and safaris Jeeps can be hired by the gate in Chilla (3hr drive ₹3000–5000 for 1–5 people). Contact Mohan Adventure in Haridwar for safari bookings.

ACCOMMODATION CAMP KING ELEPHANT FOUR STONE COTTAGES AND FOUR TENTS WITH SOLAR ELECTRICITY, WRITING DESK, VERANDA AND ATTACHED BATHROOM WITH HOT WATER. PACKAGES INCLUDE ALL MEALS, CYCLING TRAILS WITH HAMPERS AND GUIDED FOREST WALKS. NO
WI-FI. BOOKINGS VIA THE FORESTRY DEPARTMENT. ₹₹₹₹

Chilla Tourist Bungalow 5min walk from park gate, Chilla gmvn.com. This GMVN bungalow, bookable through the GMVN tourist office in Haridwar, offers clean and cosy deluxe a/c rooms with TV and hot water, two log huts, dorms, a restaurant and gardens overlooking the dam. Staff can arrange jeep tours through the park. No wi-fi. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹

₹₹

Forest Rest Houses Scattered throughout the park itself are ten simple forest resthouses, bookable through the Rajaji National Park Office in Dehradun (5/1 Ansari Marg; 0135 2621669) or Mohan's in Haridwar. The one at Chilla is the largest, and the only one with meals available. No wi-fi.
₹₹₹

V Resorts Gauhari Range, 10km before Chilla park gate 08130 777222. Located amid fields near the Chilla dam, this resort has sixteen rooms, each with a wildlife theme, hardwood floors and private balconies; half face a splash pool and the rest have views of the hills and forest. Local food is served in their restaurant, Spice Walk, and safaris, birding, trekking, mountain biking and yoga are all on offer; wi-fi is unreliable. ₹₹₹₹

Rishikesh

RISHIKESH, 238km northeast of Delhi and just 24km north of Haridwar, huddles along the steep wooded banks of the fast-flowing Ganges as it exits the mountains of Garwhal to crash onto the plains. The centre for all manner of New Age and Hindu activity, its many ashrams continue to draw devotees and followers, with the large Shivananda Ashram in particular renowned as a yoga centre. Rishikesh is also emerging as an adventure-sports centre with rafting, trekking, mountaineering, zip-lining and bungee-jumping on offer.

Rishikesh has one or two ancient shrines, but its main role has always been as a way-station for sannyasis, yogis and travellers heading for the high Himalayas. The arrival of the Beatles, who came here to meet the Maharishi in 1968, triggered the lucrative expansion of the yatra pilgrimage circuit; these days it's easy to see why Ringo thought it was "just like Butlin's". The best times to visit are in winter and spring, when the mountain temples are shut by the snows – without the yatra razzmatazz, you get a sense of the tranquillity that was the original appeal of the place. At other times, a walk upriver leads easily away from the bustle to secluded spots among giant rocks ideally suited for yoga, meditation or an invigorating dip in the icy waters (though swimming is not advised owing to the fast currents).

The name Rishikesh applies to a loose association of distinct areas, encompassing several scattered hamlets on both sides of the river. The town of Rishikesh itself sprawls to the south of the Chandrabagha riverbed, home to Triveni Ghat, the train station, bus stand and the commercial and communications hubs. A short ride north of town, beyond Muni-ki-Reti, the Ram Jhula footbridge links Swarg Ashram on the east bank, while 2km further upstream near the village of Tapovan is a second footbridge, Lakshman Jhula. Both Swarg Ashram and Lakshman Jhula areas are largely traffic-free, spiritual hubs dotted with ashrams, temples, hotels and restaurants.

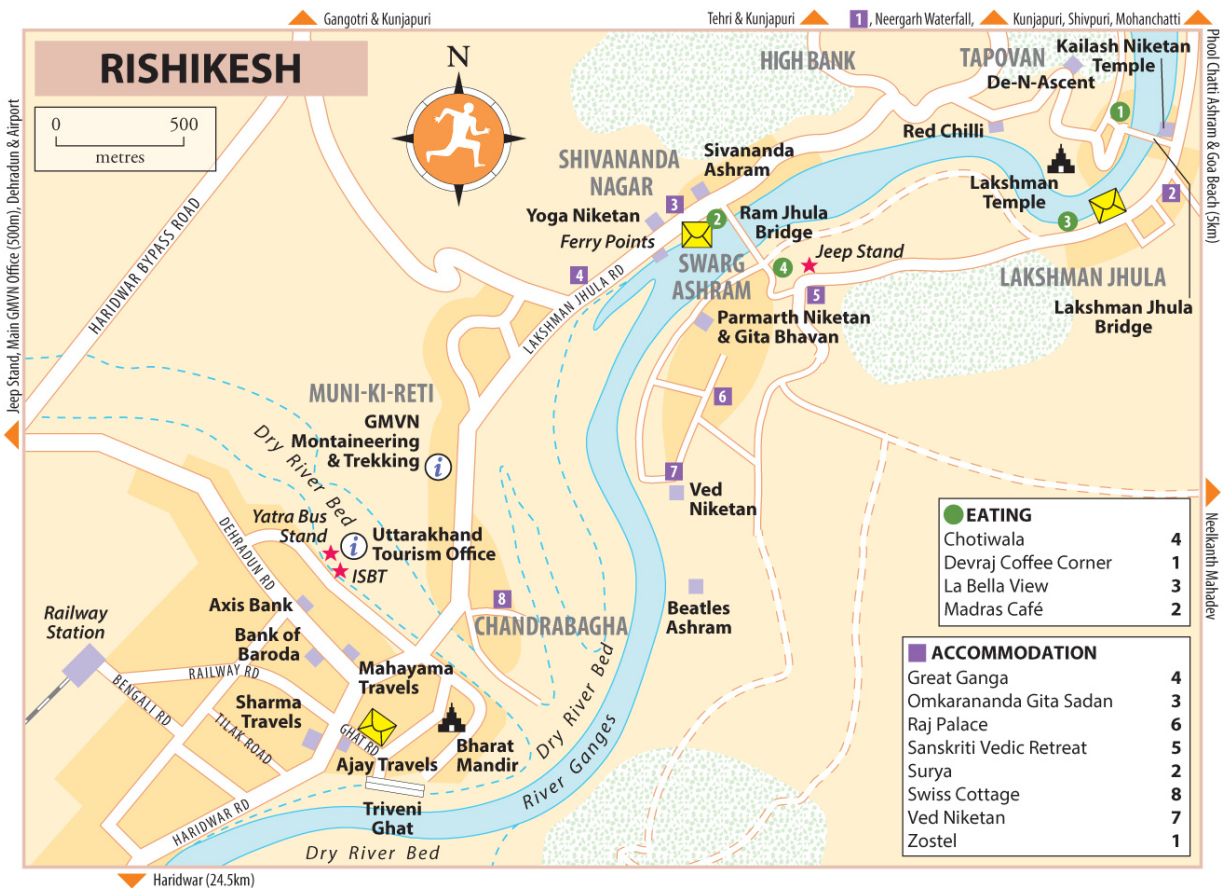

Triveni Ghat Most pilgrims passing through Rishikesh en route to the Himalayan shrines of the Char Dham pause for a dip and puja at Triveni Ghat, at the southern end of Ghat Road, near the centre of town. The river looks especially divine during evening aarti, when diya lights float on the water.

Bharat Mandir Rishikesh's oldest temple, Bharat Mandir features a black stone image of Vishnu, believed to have been consecrated by the great ninth-century Hindu revivalist Shankara; the event is commemorated during Basant Panchami, the first day of spring. A sacred trio of entangled trees near the entrance represents the Hindu Trinity.

Swarg Ashram The dense-knit complex of cafés, shops and ashrams collectively known as Swarg Ashram, opposite Shivananda Ashram, leans back on to the forest-covered hills where caves are still inhabited by sadhus. The most conspicuous of the area's many ashram-temples is Parmarth Niketan, whose large courtyard is crammed with brightly clad gods and goddesses. Next door is Gita Bhavan, which runs a free Ayurvedic dispensary; they also sell books, saris and khadi handloom cloth. The river can be crossed at this point either by the Ram Jhula footbridge or the nearby ferry.

Beatles' Ashram 1km south of Swarg Ashram • Daily 10am–4pm • Charge Set on a forested bluff high bluff above the river, the abandoned ashram of Maharishi Mahesh Yogi – locally known as Chaurasi Kutiya – is also known as the Beatles' Ashram, for it was here that the band and its entourage came to learn Transcendental Meditation from the enterprising guru, staying for up to six weeks (Ringo only lasted ten days, McCartney a month) in 1968 and penning over forty songs. Fringed by Rajaji National Park, the tranquil, ruined site was kept under lock and key by the Forest Department until 2015 and there isn't much to see except the Beatles Cathedral Gallery, with murals from when it reopened, and curious ovoid meditation huts, clad with smooth river pebbles.

Lakshman Jhula Most travellers find Lakshman Jhula, a pair of lively settlements straddling the footbridge of the same name, to be the most appealing part of Rishikesh. The east bank is also linked by a 2km path from Swarg Ashram that skirts the river, passing beautiful sandy beaches sheltered by large boulders. Most striking on the east bank is the enormous, gaudy, thirteen-storey Kailash Niketan Temple, just north of the bridge. The dramatic landscape and turquoise river (brown during the monsoon) are best appreciated from one of the hippie cafés that line its banks.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN RISHIKESH RISHIKESH LIES AT THE END OF A SMALL BRANCH RAILWAY LINE FROM HARIDWAR, LINKED BY TWO DAILY TRAINS. THE DAILY #18478 TRAIN CONNECTS DELHI, AT 5.35AM FROM

RISHIKESH, REACH NIZAMUDDIN RAILWAY STATION AT 11.45AM. ANOTHER DAILY #19032, YOGA EXPRESS, DEPARTS AT 2.55PM AND REACH DELHI CANTT AT 10.53PM.

By bus There are two important bus stands in Rishikesh: the ISBT (for lowland destinations) and the Yatra or Tehri Bus Stand (April–Oct for mountain destinations), both of which have recently been combined off Dehradun Rd to the north of Rishikesh town. Reserve in advance during yatra season at the GMOU booking office (gmou.org). Mountain roads are treacherous and tedious, landslides are not uncommon during the monsoon period, and only early departures reach the Char Dham in a day. Plenty of private bus companies have offices around Lakshman Jhula and Swarg Ashram.

Destinations Agra (6pm; 12hr); Badrinath (4 daily; 12hr); Dehradun (hourly; 1hr 30min); Delhi (12 daily; 7hr); Gangotri (5.30am; 11–12hr); Haridwar (every 30min; 30min); Kedarnath (4.30am; 10hr); Nainital (9am; 8–9hr); Uttarkashi (8 daily; 7–8hr).

By jeep Jeeps depart when full from the jeep stand (daily 4–8am) by the main GMVN office on Haridwar Bypass Rd, to the west of town. Although slightly more expensive than buses, they are much faster. When booked in advance through agencies, such as Sharma Travels (86 Haridwar Rd; ☎0135 243 0364), you may be able to arrange to be picked up from west-bank hotels.

By Vikram Vikrams to Haridwar depart from Dehradun Rd.

GETTING AROUND BY VIKRAM AND JEEP VIKRAMS TO LAKSHMAN JHULA CAN BE HIRED FROM RISHIKESH'S BUS STATION AT DECENT PRICE. ON THE EAST BANK OF THE RIVER, JEEPS FROM THE NORTHERN EDGE OF SWARG ASHRAM CONNECT TO THE CENTRE OF LAKSHMAN JHULA.

By ferry Ferries cross the Ganges near Ram Jhula outside monsoon season (daily 7.30am–7pm).

By taxi There's a taxi booking office (☎08126404427) run by the Garhwal Mandal Taxi Owners Association not far from the Ram Jhula bridge on the west bank. Reliable agencies include Ajay Travels (☎0135 243 0644) at Hotel Neelkanth, Haridwar Rd, and Mahayama Travels (☎0135 2432968) at the Urvashi Complex on Dehradun Rd.

INFORMATION INFORMATION THE UTTARAKHAND TOURIST OFFICE (MON–SAT 10AM–5PM; ☎ UTTARAKHANDTOURISM.GOV.IN) IS JUST NORTH OF THE BUS STANDS IN THE TFC BUILDING. THE GMVN (MON–SAT 10AM–5PM; ☎ GMVNONLINE.COM) HAS TWO OFFICES: THE LARGER YATRA OFFICE IS BEHIND THE JEEP STAND ON HARIDWAR BYPASS RD, NATRAJ CHOWK, WHILE A SMALLER MOUNTAINEERING AND TREKKING BRANCH IS ON LAKSHMAN JHULA RD IN MUNI-KI-RETI. BOTH PROVIDE LOCAL INFORMATION, THOUGH THEY TEND TO PUSH THEIR OWN TOURS AND ACCOMMODATION.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Rishikesh town has a glut of hotels but also an excess of noise and pollution; the only reason to stay here is to be near the bus station. New Agers tend to prefer Swarg Ashram and the east bank of the river, away from the noise and near the ashrams, while backpackers head for the cheap little guesthouses of Lakshman Jhula or the huddle of hotels on High Bank.

Great Ganga Lakshman Jhula Rd, Muni-ki-Reti ☎ greatganga.com. It's worth braving the steep pathway to reach this comfortable upmarket hotel. The spotless rooms have river-facing balconies, big windows and lovely views. If you really want to push the boat out, go for a twin-room suite. There's also a spa, travel desk and multicuisine restaurant. They run another hotel nearby, Vasundhara Palace, with newer rooms, though views aren't great. ₹₹₹

AROUND RISHIKESH: LOCAL WALKS PLENTY OF PATHS WIND THROUGH THE FORESTS AROUND RISHIKESH, OFFERING WALKERS A WELCOME ESCAPE FROM THE BUSTLE OF TOWN. THERE'S A CHANCE OF ENCOUNTERING WILDLIFE ALONG THE WAY; KEEP A SAFE DISTANCE FROM WILD ELEPHANTS. ALSO, BRING A GUIDE OR WALKING

PARTNER AS THERE HAVE BEEN INCIDENTS OF ROBBERY ALONG THE TRAILS.

NEERGARH WATERFALL JUST 3KM NORTH OF HIGH BANK ALONG THE BADRINATH ROAD, A LEFT DETOUR ON A GRAVEL PATH LEADS TO THE POPULAR NEERGARH WATERFALL. THE MODERATELY STEEP WALK TO THE TOP IS DOTTED WITH LAIDBACK CAFÉS AND NUMEROUS CASCADES AND LITTLE POOLS, GREAT FOR A SWIM.

NEELKANTH MAHADEV

Winding steeply through the forests from Swarg Ashram is an old, 10km pilgrim trail to the small Shiva shrine of Neelkanth Mahadev. It marks the spot where Lord Shiva once swallowed the poison that turned his throat blue, earning himself the nickname of Neelkanth, “the blue-throated one”. The road that takes a long detour through the forest has made the small settlement a less peaceful retreat during yatra season. The trail offers some stunning vantage points, crossing a spur before the final descent to Neelkanth. One or both legs are often done by shared jeep, departing from the stand south of Ram Jhula Bridge.

KUNJAPURI THE SMALL WHITE SHAKTI TEMPLE OF KUNJAPURI, 10KM NORTH OF TOWN, STANDS AT THE SHARP POINT OF A CONICAL HILL 1645M HIGH, WITH PANORAMIC VIEWS OF THE HIGH HIMALAYAS TO THE NORTH AND RISHIKESH AND HARIDWAR TO THE SOUTH. A POPULAR SUNRISE AND SUNSET SPOT, IT GETS MOST TRAFFIC DURING THE NAVRATRI (APRIL & OCT) AND DUSSEHRA (OCT) FESTIVALS. IT’S A 3–4HR HIKE FROM LAKSHMAN JHULA, PASSING THROUGH PLEASANT COUNTRYSIDE, OR A SHORT BUS RIDE TO HINDOLA KHAL (EVERY 15MIN FROM THE YATRA BUS STAND), FOLLOWED BY A 3KM (45MIN) WALK UPHILL.

BEACHES

The motorable track running north of Lakshman Jhula passes several secluded beaches before arriving at the beautiful ashram of Phool Chatti

(5km upstream), set at a bend in the river with sandy beaches including the famous Goa Beach. Giant boulders add drama, but swimming is hazardous due to strong undercurrents.

Omkarananda Gita Sadan Shivananda Nagar, Muni-ki-Reti near Ram Jhula Bridge www.oah.in/ganga_sadan.htm. Run by the ashram of the same name, this lovely all-a/c guesthouse has a relaxed atmosphere, plain but spacious and immaculately clean rooms, great views over the river towards Swarg Ashram from the upper rooms, and even a four-person family suite. Viewless rooms on the lower floor are the cheapest. ₹₹

Raj Palace Swarg Ashram, behind Parmarth Niketan www.hotel-raj-palace-rishikesh.hotelsgds.com. Well-managed hotel popular with yoga students due to its location near the ashrams, two large yoga halls and rooftop café. The rooms are basic but clean, all either air-cooled or a/c, and there's a good travel desk and off-season discounts of up to fifty percent. ₹

Sanskriti Vedic Retreat Near Shivanand Hospital, Ram Jhula www.sanskritivedicretreat.com. Comfortable retreat close to Ram Jhula with large and well-appointed river-view rooms, an organic café and spa treatments. On a busy thoroughfare that's noisy during the day, but quiet at night. They offer yoga each morning and a great breakfast is included. ₹₹₹

★Surya Lakshman Jhula www.hotellaxmanjhula.com. Just above Café Coffee Day, Surya is a backpacker favourite for its laidback vibe, location in the heart of Lakshman Jhula, and fantastic Ganges views. The best of its clean, marble-floored rooms are those facing the river in front, though the darker back rooms are quieter. Wi-fi in reception only. ₹

Swiss Cottage Chandrabhaga 094 1299 2856, shivgangamylove@rediff.com. Rishikesh's first guest-house, founded in 1961 by Swami Brahmananda, disciple of Swami Shivananda. It's a small but peaceful haven with a friendly owner and assortment of rooms, some with a/c and good-value singles. Popular with long-term visitors so often booked up. ₹

Ved Niketan Swarg Ashram www.vedniketan.org. Enormous orange ashram with manicured garden grounds on the east bank of the river, with cheap accommodation popular with budget travellers. There are daily Hatha yoga classes (Mon–Sat 9–10.30am & 4–5.30pm) and Yoga Alliance-certified teacher-training programmes of 200hr duration on offer. ₹

Zostel Rishikesh-Badrinath Hwy, Tapovan zostel.com. India's coolest hostel chain has this spotless property with four- and eight-bed dorms and a compact double available. Bathrooms are a little worn but the laidback rooftop café and friendly atmosphere more than makes up for it. Plenty of organised activities, plus yoga and scooter hire. It's a steep 15min walk from the river. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹

EATING

MAP

Chotiwalla Swarg Ashram 09639490001. Set up in 1958 by the Agarwal brothers and split in 1995, the two neighbouring establishments with the same name vie for custom and constantly attempt to outdo each other, down to the emblematic chotiwalla (braided man) sitting on a highchair outside each. Both places are large, busy and open early for breakfast; the extensive menus include express thalis, snacks, ice cream, sweets and cold drinks. ₹

Devraj Coffee Corner Lakshman Jhula, just west of the bridge 0135 244 2089. Sharing shoulder space with Ganga Books Emporium, this is a great spot for a break: enjoy cinnamon rolls, muesli, fruit curd, apple strudel and superb cakes, or dine on pizzas, sizzlers, curries, burgers or Mexican fare, while watching the Ganges and the pilgrims flow past. ₹

La Bella View Lakshman Jhula, east bank, near Om Hotel 94113 84485. The Ganges view from the upstairs tables in the rooftop restaurant is only slightly better than the cosier, cushion-clad downstairs area. The menu spans Indian to Israeli, with emphasis on Italian dishes like pasta al pesto and pizza margherita. ₹

Madras Café Ram Jhula 0135 243 0934. Set up in 1967 to cater to the south Indian tastes of Swami Sivananda's followers, this popular restaurant serves reason-ably priced idli, dosa and sambhar and excellent filter coffee. The "Himalayan Health Pulao" is worth a try, made with vegetable sprouts and Ayurvedic herbs, as is the "Thali of the Kings" and the house special wholewheat pancake, topped with mixed fruit, curd and honey. ₹₹

ASHRAMS, YOGA AND MEDITATION RISHIKESH HAS PLENTY OF REPUTABLE ASHRAMS WELCOMING STUDENTS OF YOGA WITH COURSES OF VARYING COST AND DURATION – FROM ONE DAY TO SEVERAL MONTHS. GUESTS MUST BE RESPECTFUL OF ASHRAMS' STRICT RULES GOVERNING

CONDUCT. BE WARNED THAT COMPLAINTS OF THEFT AND HARASSMENT IN ASHRAMS ARE SURPRISINGLY COMMON.

Parmarth Niketan Ashram Swarg Ashram, www.parmarth.com. This giant ashram right next to the river houses more than a thousand simple rooms with daily yoga classes, a range of yoga courses, nightly aarti ceremonies and a common dining hall. They also sponsor the International Yoga Festival in early March. Complaints about cleanliness are common and so visiting, rather than staying here, is probably best.

ADVENTURE ACTIVITIES IN RISHIKESH ADVENTURE ACTIVITIES HAVE BECOME ONE OF RISHIKESH'S TOP DRAWS, MOST NOTABLY RAFTING. NUMEROUS RIVER CAMPS ON THE GANGES ABOVE RISHIKESH OPERATE FROM LATE SEPTEMBER TO JUNE, WITH EXCURSIONS RANGING FROM HALF-DAY RUNS TO EXTENDED CAMPING/RAFTING EXPEDITIONS.

Other activities include an 83m bungee jump, canyon swing and flying fox at Jumpin Heights' Jump Zone in Mohanchatti village, 16km from Tapovan, with transfer by coach from their booking office (www.jumpinheights.com), and a two-section zipline with India's zipline pioneers, Flying Fox (www.flyingfox.asia), over whitewater rapids of the Ganges at Shivpuri, 19km east of town. Most activities are only run outside the monsoon period (July–Sept).

TOUR OPERATORS WITH THE TOWN'S SEASONAL TOURISM BOOM HAS COME A DRAMATIC RISE OF UNREGULATED TOUR AND TRAVEL OPERATORS WITH NO INSURANCE COVER FOR THEIR DRIVERS, CARS OR TOURISTS. ASK FOR RECOMMENDED TRAVEL AGENTS AT YOUR HOTEL OR AT THE TOURIST OFFICE, OR TRY ONE OF THESE RELIABLE LOCAL FIRMS.

De-N-Ascent Expeditions Lakshman Jhula Rd, Tapovan www.kayakhimalaya.com. An experienced local operator (on the west bank of Lakshman Jhula), offering kayaking, rafting, mountain biking and trekking.

GMVN Mountaineering and Trekking Division Lakshman Jhula Rd, Muni-ki-Reti 🌐 gmvn.in. Rents equipment and arranges guides for treks across Garhwal, as well as organising ski trips to Auli.

Red Chilli Lakshman Jhula Rd, Tapovan 🌐 redchilliadventure.com. Another reliable outfit for rafting, trekking, mountain biking and camping. River rafting expeditions run from three days to thirteen.

Phool Chatti Ashram 5km north of Lakshman Jhula 🌐 phoolchattiyoga.com. Peaceful ashram with lush gardens in a pristine setting far away from the noise of town. They specialize in seven-day, all-inclusive yoga and meditation retreats (from ₹8000/person), mostly aimed towards beginners and intermediate level.

Sivananda Ashram 🌐 sivanandaonline.org. Large institution, with branches all over the world, run by the Divine Life Society and founded by Swami Sivananda (who passed into maha samadhi – final liberation – in 1963). It has a well-stocked library, a forest retreat and a charitable hospital. The most rigid schedule begins at 4am, with nearly constant lessons in meditation and yoga on offer. For long-term stays, contact the secretary three months in advance through their website. Stays are donation-based.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE BANKS IN TOWN INCLUDE THE BANK OF BARODA AND THE NEARBY AXIS BANK, BOTH ON DEHRADUN RD, WITH ATMS. THERE ARE ALSO SEVERAL BANKS WITH ATMS FURTHER NORTH: ON LAKSHMAN JHULA RD BY THE GMVN TREKKING OFFICE, ON THE EAST BANK NEAR RAM JHULA BRIDGE AND IN SWARG ASHRAM. NUMEROUS TRAVEL AGENTS IN LAKSHMAN JHULA WILL CHANGE CASH.

Post office The main post office is on Ghat Rd near Triveni Ghat (Mon–Fri 10am–4pm, Sat 10am–1pm), with branch offices in Lakshman Jhula and near both sides of Ram Jhula Bridge.

Uttarkashi

The largest town in the interior of Garhwal, picturesque UTTARKASHI makes a convenient stopover to break up the road from Rishikesh (148km south) to Gangotri (100km northeast). Pilgrims often stop at the ancient Kashi Vishwanath temple in the heart of town, and discerning travellers are beginning to linger longer to hike the unspoiled trails of Garhwal's interior or to gear up for longer treks such as to Dodi Tal.

Occupying the flat and fertile valley floor of the Bhagirathi, Uttarkashi is no stranger to natural disasters; the town was hit by severe floods in 1978, an earthquake in 1991, a massive landslide in 2003, and further floods in 2013. Efforts have since been made to secure the hillside against landslides, but the bridge to Gangotri had to be rebuilt after the 2013 floods.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS ALL BUSES UTTARKASHI TO AND FROM UTTARKASHI PARK ON GANGOTRI RD IN THE CENTRE OF TOWN.

Destinations Chamba (every 30min; 5hr); Hanuman Chatti (2 daily; 7hr); Mussoorie (2 daily; 9hr); Rishikesh (9 daily; 8hr); Sangam Chatti (3 daily; 45min).

By jeep Shared jeeps depart from a jeep stand 500m north of the town centre, leaving when full for Gangotri (5am–2pm; 5hr). For Rishikesh (6hr), Haridwar (7hr) and other destinations south, another cluster of jeeps waits by the petrol station opposite Bhandari Hotel.

INFORMATION AND ACTIVITIES UTTARKASHI'S BUSY AND WELL-STOCKED MARKET IS IDEAL FOR PICKING UP SUPPLIES BEFORE HIGH-ALTITUDE TREKS.

Guides and trekking companies The town has an abundance of experienced mountain guides – most of them are graduates of its highly esteemed Nehru Institute of Mountaineering (🌐nimindia.net), who run one-month mountaineering and adventure courses. Specialist operators include Mount Support, BD Nautial Bhawan, Bhatwari Rd (🌐facebook.com/mountsupport), who also have equipment for rent and porters for hire.

Yoga Sivananda Kutir at Netala, 8km northeast on Gangotri Rd, offers month-long teacher-training courses (🌐sivananda.org.in).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING GMVN TOURIST BUNGALOW
OPPOSITE DISTRICT COLLECTORATE @GMVNL.COM. A COMFORTABLE THREE-STOREY COMPLEX SET AROUND AN ATTRACTIVE LAWN IN THE HEART OF TOWN. ROOMS ARE CLEAN AND SPACIOUS WITH TVS AND MARBLE FLOORS, AND
THERE'S AN ATTACHED DORM AND RESTAURANT. PRICES
COME DOWN SLIGHTLY JULY–OCT AND ARE SLASHED
DURING LOW SEASON (NOV–APRIL). DORMS ₹, DOUBLES ₹₹

Goat Village Dayara Bugyal, 45km from Uttarkashi @ thegoatvillages.com. Off the Uttarkashi–Gangotri road. This back to basics place doesn't have electricity (there's solar panels to charge phones etc.), but it does have an unbeatable rural location in the Garhwal Himalayas.
Two private wooden cottages and group accommodation with bunk beds, plus space for tents. It's around 1hr 30min by taxi from town. Dorms ₹₹, doubles ₹₹₹

THE DODI TAL TREK ONE OF GARHWAL'S CLASSIC
HIKES, THE DODI TAL TREK LINKS THE GANGOTRI AND YAMUNOTRI REGIONS WITHOUT STRAYING INTO HIGH GLACIAL TERRAIN. IT'S RELATIVELY SHORT AND EASY, BUT LOCAL VILLAGERS ARE KEEN TO OFFER THEIR SERVICES AS PORTERS OR GUIDES, TAKING HIKERS OFF THE BEATEN TRACK TO VISIT THE VILLAGES. CARRY AS MUCH OF YOUR OWN FOOD AS POSSIBLE AND BRING A TENT.

From Uttarkashi, catch a morning bus (45min) or jeep heading to Sangam Chatti (1350m), from where it's a 7km climb through fields and woodland to Agoda (2286m), where you can set up camp or head to the Tourist Bungalow at the far end of the village. On the second day, follow the trail from Agoda as it climbs west of the Asi Ganga and zigzags steadily upwards through lush pine and spruce forests, with a smattering of chai shops en route. After 14km and a final undulation, you will reach the lake of Dodi Tal (3024m), set against a backdrop of thickly forested hills and said to be the spot where Lord Ganesha was both born and beheaded. Near the basic forest bungalow in the clearing are chai shops and areas for camping.

On the third day you'll make the 4km hike to Dharwa Top, following the well-marked path along (and often across) the stream that feeds Dodi Tal, which can get steep and entail scrambling, until you emerge above the tree line. A further 2km along, the trail heads left to a small pass, then zigzags up scree to Dharwa Top (4130m), the highest point of the trek, offering superb panoramas of the Srikanta Range. A leftward path beyond the top leads to camping and water, but if you've still got sufficient energy and daylight, you can continue along the main route, which takes about four more hours and 13km to rejoin the tree line at Sima, where there's basic hut accommodation.

The following day's beautiful 12km trail from Sima kicks off with a steep 1.5km scramble alongside a stream before easing past forest and bugyal (alpine meadow). A well-defined rocky path drops steadily through two villages and zigzags down to the Hanuman Ganga, finally emerging at Hanuman Chatti, from where buses and jeeps connect with Barkot, Uttarkashi, Mussoorie and other points in Garhwal. The Dodi Tal trek can easily be tied in with hikes in the Har-ki-Dun and Yamunotri areas.

Hillview Gangotri Rd, 300m up from the bus stand. Set in the hotel of the same name, this is one of the best restaurants in town, offering an assortment of Chinese and Indian dishes as well as snacks and breakfasts. The veg thali is a good deal, but the special thali is even better. ₹

★Monal Tourist Home 2km north of town @ monaluttarkashi.com. The best deal around, this welcoming guesthouse is run by Deependar Panwar, a graduate of the Nehru Institute of Mountaineering and a great source of local information. Both the A and B wings are clean and well kept, but the A wing is more attractive with more spacious rooms and a cosy veranda. Within Wing B is a bright, big-windowed restaurant and sitting area, combined with a small library and a computer with internet access. ₹₹

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE THERE ARE THREE ATMS IN TOWN: BANK OF BARODA NEAR HILLVIEW ON

GANGOTRI RD, AND STATE BANK AND PNB IN THE MAIN MARKET AREA.

Post office The post office (Mon–Sat 9.30am–5pm) is west of the main market, near the river.

The trek to Yamunotri Cradled in a deep cleft in the lap of Bandarpunch, and thus denied mountain vistas, the temple of Yamunotri (3291m), 223km northeast of Rishikesh, marks the source of the Yamuna, India's second holiest river after the Ganges. The least dramatic but most beautiful of the four dhams (temples) of Garhwal, it's also the least spoiled and commercial. Access (mid-April to early Nov; exact dates vary annually) has become easier following road improvements; from the roadhead at Janki Chatti it's a mere 5km along a trail that follows the turbulent ice-blue river as it runs below rocky crags, with snowy peaks in the distance. The walk can also be combined with the Dodi Tal trek linking nearby Hanuman Chatti to Uttarkashi.

En route from the town of Barkot, there are several chattis (serais or inns) for pilgrims along the way, including Syana Chatti (27km before Yamunotri), Hanuman Chatti (13km) and Janki Chatti (6km).

Barkot

Situated 49km short of Yamunotri, among terraced fields and scenic apple orchards with views of the Bandarpunch range, BARKOT makes a great stopover to escape the yatra traffic. Tracing their origins to the Mahabharata, the local Rawain people – like the five Pandava brothers married to Draupadi – historically practised fraternal polyandry (marriage of multiple brothers to a single woman), a way of life still prevalent in rural areas.

Janki Chatti and around The riverside hamlet of HANUMAN CHATTI (2400m) is the western terminus of the famous trek to Dodi Tal; 7km beyond this is the enchanting little village of JANKI CHATTI (2475m), which marks the end of the motorable road from Rishikesh and the start of the trail to Yamunotri. While in Janki Chatti, it's worth making the 1km detour across the river to the traditional Garhwali village of KHARSALI, home to the pandas (pilgrim priests) of Yamunotri. Among the dry-stone buildings, with their beautifully carved wooden beams, stands a unique three-storey Shiva temple – dedicated to Someshwar, lord of the mythical intoxicant Soma.

Yamunotri

The 6km trail from Janki Chatti becomes steeper and more dramatic as it passes through rocky forested crags to reach Yamunotri. Built around three piping-hot sulphur springs by the river, Yamunotri's temple is new and architecturally uninteresting; it has to be completely rebuilt every few years due to the impact of heavy winter snows and monsoon rains. Its main shrine – actually part of the top spring, worshipped as the source of the river – holds a small silver image of the goddess Yamuna, bedecked with garlands. The daughter of Surya, the sun, and Sangya, consciousness, Yamuna is the twin sister of Yama, the lord of death; all who bathe in her waters are spared a painful end, while food cooked in the water is considered to be prasad (a divine offering). Most pilgrims bathe in the hot spring (free), which has separate pools for men and women.

Technically, the source of the Yamuna is the glacial lake of Saptarishi Kund, a hard, steep 12km trek up the mountain alongside the river that eases towards its end near the base of Kalinda Parbat. Both this trek and the route over the challenging Yamunotri Pass to Har-ki-Dun necessitate at least one day's acclimatization, adequate clothing and a guide, available from the GMVN tourist lodge in Yamunotri.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE THE TREK TO YAMUNOTRI
BARKOT THERE ARE TWO DAILY BUSES TO BARKOT FROM MUSSOORIE (4–5HR) AND SEVERAL PRIVATE BUSES FROM RISHIKESH (6–7HR). ALL BUSES TO UTTARKASHI STOP AT DHARASU BEND, FROM WHERE SHARED JEEPS AND BUSES PLY TO BARKOT, WHICH HAS FREQUENT CONNECTIONS ON TO HANUMAN CHATTI (2HR 30MIN).

Hanuman Chatti During yatra season, Hanuman Chatti is connected by direct buses to Dehradun (8hr), Mussoorie (5hr 30min), Rishikesh (12hr), Gangotri (11hr) and Uttarkashi (7hr), although most services are for Barkot, from where there are more frequent connections available to all these destinations.

Janik Chatti Shared jeeps connect Janki Chatti with Hanuman Chatti (20min) and Barkot (2hr).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING IN ADDITION TO THE PLACES BELOW, THERE ARE GMVN TOURIST BUNGALOWS (GMVNONLINE.COM), WITH DORMS AND SPARTAN ROOMS AT BARKOT, SYANA CHATTI, HANUMAN CHATTI, JANKI CHATTI AND PHOOL CHATTI.

BARKOT

Camp Nirvana Gangnani, 8km north of Barkot 📞campnirvana.com. A peaceful eco-camp overlooking the river with twenty luxury tents, each with comfy beds, veranda and attached bathrooms. Village treks, fishing and local excursions organized. Rates include breakfast and dinner. Off-season discounts up to 30 percent. ₹₹₹

Yamunotri River Banks Resort Gangnani, 7km north of Barkot 📞yamunotriresort.com. Riverside resort offering sixteen luxury tents with hot water, a multicuisine restaurant and superb mountain views. Rates include breakfast and dinner. ₹₹₹

JANKI CHATTI ATITHI NIWAS 📞97601 70011. ONE OF THE BETTER HOTELS IN TOWN, WITH 33 DOUBLE ROOMS THAT COME WITH HOT WATER, A BASIC RESTAURANT AND MOUNTAIN VIEWS ALL AROUND. GOOD OFF-SEASON DISCOUNTS. ₹₹₹

YAMUNOTRI SEVERAL ASHRAMS OFFER BEDS. AMONG THE BEST OF THE ASHRAMS ARE RAMANANDA, OVERLOOKING THE TEMPLE, AND HANUMAN MANDIR, RUN BY THE FAMOUS RAMBHAROSE DAS, AKA NEPALI BABA. OTHERWISE, THERE'S THE YAMUNA ASHRAM AND THE MUCH SMALLER KALI KAMLI DHARAMSHALA.

Gangotri and the Gaumukh Glacier trek
Set amid tall deodar and pine forests at the head of the Bhagirathi gorge, 248km north of Rishikesh at 3140m, Gangotri is the most remote of Garhwal's Char Dham and the last place to stock up on supplies before heading up to the high altitudes.

The jeep drive from Uttarkashi is breathtaking – in more ways than one – as it winds high above the Bhagirathi and crosses one of the world’s highest bridges, over the gorge near Lanka. Although the wide Alaknanda, which flows past Badrinath, may have a better technical claim to be the main channel of the Ganges, Gangotri is for Hindus the spiritual source of the great river, while its physical source is the ice cave of Gaumukh on the Gangotri Glacier, 14km further up the valley. From here, the River Bhagirathi begins its tempestuous descent through a series of mighty gorges, carving great channels and cauldrons in the rock and foaming in whitewater pools.

Gangotri

Road accessible mid-April to early Nov Although most of the nearby snow peaks are obscured by the desolate craggy mountains looming immediately above GANGOTRI, the town itself is redolent of the atmosphere of the high Himalayas, populated by a mixed cast of Hindu pilgrims and foreign trekkers. Across the Ganga River from the temple, a loose tangle of ashrams and guesthouses dwarfed by great rocky outcrops and huge trees leads down to Dev Ghat, overlooking the confluence with the Kedar Ganga. Near the centre of the town, webbed together by stone pathways and metal footbridges, is the impressive waterfall-fed pool of Gaurikund.

Gangotri temple Gangotri's unassuming temple, overlooking the river just beyond a small market on the left bank, is one of India's holiest sites. Built early in the eighteenth century by the Gurkha general Amar Singh Thapa, the simple structure consists of a squat shikhara surrounded by four smaller replicas; it commemorates the legend of the goddess Ganga, brought to earth by King Bhagirath's penance to revitalize the ashes of his ancestors. Inside is a silver image of the goddess, while a slab of stone adjacent to the temple is venerated as Bhagirath Shila, the spot where the legendary king performed his meditation. Steps lead down to the main riverside ghat, where the devout bathe in the freezing waters of the river to cleanse their bodies and souls of sin.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS AND JEEP THE GANGOTRI BUS AND JEEP STANDS BOTH LIE JUST BEYOND THE WEST ENTRANCE TO TOWN. JEEPS CONNECT GANGOTRI TO UTTARKASHI (DEPARTING WHEN FULL, 5.30AM–2PM; 5HR), FROM WHERE THERE ARE CONNECTIONS FURTHER SOUTH. DURING YATRA SEASON (MAY–OCT), EARLY MORNING BUSES LINK RISHIKESH (11HR) AND HARIDWAR (12HR).

ACTIVITIES TREKKING REAL ADVENTURE, RUN BY DEEPAK RANA (📞REALADVENTUREGANGOTRI.IN), ORGANIZES TREKS TO TAPOVAN, DODI TAL AND KEDARNATH, AMONG OTHERS, AS WELL AS LOWER-ALTITUDE WINTER TREKS, PROVIDING EQUIPMENT AND PORTERS FOR HIRE.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING A NUMBER OF DHABAS AND CAFÉS ON BOTH SIDES OF GANGOTRI'S RIVER SERVE THALIS, GOOD BREAKFASTS AND MUCH-NEEDED WARMING CHAI. FOR PILGRIMS HEADING TOWARD GAUMUKH, THE MARKET AREA ALSO MARKS THE LAST CHANCE TO BUY GLOVES AND WOOLLY HATS. ALL HOTELS PROVIDE BUCKETS OF HOT WATER FOR BATHING.

Bhagirathi Sadan Across the river, 200m from the temple 📞94107 35573. A well-kept riverside option on the quieter side of the bridge, with small green rooms (plus a four-bed option) and a shared patio overlooking the river. Good off-season rates. No wi-fi. ₹₹

Gangaputra Guesthouse 200m east of jeep stand. Small hotel with six clean, green-carpeted double rooms sharing a cosy balcony over the main drag. The downstairs restaurant, serving north and south Indian food and equipped with a generator, is one of the town's best for thalis. No wi-fi. ₹

Krishna Restaurant 100m east of jeep stand ☎94101 99108. The cleanest and best restaurant in town, serving a good range of meals from cheesy pasta to classic thalis. ₹₹

Gaumukh Glacier Trek Mid-April to early Nov • Permit charge per day; video camera charge or you can go with a trusted trekking agency who will arrange everything A flight of steps beside the Gangotri temple begins the 20km trek to Gaumukh Glacier, one of the most beautiful and accessible glaciers in the inner Himalayas.

Leaving Gangotri, the trail rises gently above the north bank of the river, offering increasingly spectacular mountain vistas. Just 2km along at Kankhu is the forest checkpoint, where permits are inspected. About 7km further is the oasis of Chirbasa, where the skyline becomes dominated by magnificent buttresses and glass-like walls, culminating in the sharp pinnacles of Bhagirathi 3 (6454m) and Bhagirathi 1 (6856m). The path then climbs above the tree line, passing across a steep rocky area prone to landslides. Just around the bend, beyond a stream crossing, 5km from Chirbasa, is the cold grey hamlet of Bhojbasa, cowering in the shadows of the surrounding peaks. Most visitors spend a night here before the final push to the glacier.

From Bhojbasa, it's a further 4km up the giant boulder-strewn path to reach Gaumukh ("the cow's mouth"), bringing into view the beautiful Shivling Peak (6543m), the "Indian Matterhorn", and providing a closer look at the Bhagirathi peaks and the huge expanse of the Gangotri Glacier – 23km long, up to 4km wide and sweeping like a gigantic highway through the heart of the mountains. At the source, the river emerges with great force from a cavern in the glacier. The steadily retreating ice is in a constant state of flux, so the huge greyish-blue snout of the glacier continually changes appearance as chunks of ice tumble into the gushing water. Visitors are advised to keep 500m back from the glacier's mouth: many pilgrims have been crushed to death by falling ice while attempting to collect holy water. It's well worth braving the cold to reach Gaumukh for sunrise, though it's also rewarding in the afternoon, when the source is lit by the sun. From the glacier, most hikers return to Gangotri via Bhojbasa, while others may continue beyond the glacier to the meadow of Tapovan (6km) or further afield to the lake at Vasuki Tal.

GAUMUKH GLACIER PERMITS ONLY 150 TOURISTS ARE ALLOWED ON THE GAUMUKH GLACIER TREK EACH DAY; PERMITS MUST BE OBTAINED IN ADVANCE FROM EITHER THE DISTRICT FOREST OFFICE IN UTTARKASHI (MON–SAT 10AM–5PM; UTTARKASHI.NIC.IN), 3KM NORTH OF THE BUS STAND NEAR MONAL TOURIST HOME, OR, MORE CONVENIENTLY, FROM THE GANGOTRI OFFICE (DAILY 8–10AM & 5–7PM), JUST ABOVE THE JEEP STAND TO THE WEST OF TOWN; 120 ARE AVAILABLE AT THE FORMER, THE REMAINDER AT THE LATTER. COME PREPARED WITH PHOTOCOPIES OF THE ID AND VISA PAGES OF YOUR PASSPORT SO AS NOT TO LET GANGOTRI'S FREQUENT POWER OUTAGES DELAY YOUR TREK.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING GAUMUKH GLACIER TREK
IN ADDITION TO BHOJBASA'S GMVN BUNGALOW, YOU CAN STAY AT THE POPULAR LAL BABA ASHRAM OR THE QUIETER RAM BABA ASHRAM, BOTH TENTED CAMPS OFFERING A SNUG BED FOR ₹300, COMMON LOO AND MEALS. YOU CAN ALSO CAMP FOR FREE DOWN BY THE RIVER BUT YOU'LL NEED YOUR OWN TENT. AT TAPOVAN THE GENIAL SADHU AT MAUNI BABA'S ASHRAM, ON A SILENT VOW, PROVIDES BED, BLANKET AND WHATEVER HE CAN RUSTLE UP IN HIS SMALL HUT TO TRAVELLERS STAYING OVERNIGHT. DONATIONS AND RATIONS ARE WELCOME.

GMVN Tourist Bungalow Bhojbasa, 4km short of Gaumukh,  gmvnonline.com. Beds are available within the row of large, six-person canvas tents here, but there are no private rooms. Guests huddle in the small, friendly restaurant, the warmest spot in Bhojbasa, which is also the place to arrange a mountain guide if you plan to cross the glaciers. ₹

Kedarnath and around It's hard to imagine a more dramatic setting for a temple than Kedarnath (3583m), 223km northeast of Rishikesh, which sits close to the source of the Mandakini overlooked by tumbling glaciers and giant buttresses of ice, snow and rock. The third of the sacred Char Dham sites, Kedarnath is among the most important shrines in the Himalayas and as one of India's twelve jyotirlinga – lingams of light – attracts hordes of Hindu pilgrims (yatri) in the summer months (open April–November only). The area makes a refreshing change from the rocky and desolate valleys of west Garhwal, with lush hanging gorges, terraced hillsides and abundant apple orchards.

In June 2013, however, Kedarnath was the epicentre of one of the worst Himalayan disasters in India. At the peak of the tourist season, continuous rain for five days and a cloudburst above the peak of Kedar Dome ruptured the Chorabari Glacier, 4km north, causing the Mandakini River to flood its banks. The ensuing flashflood wreaked havoc at Kedarnath and downstream as far as Rishikesh, with debris washing away hotels and other buildings, many illegally built on fragile riverbanks. According to official figures, over 5700 people died, though the actual toll of this “Himalayan tsunami” is much higher. With large chunks of the trail disappearing off the mountainside and the midway point at Rambara completely devastated, new trekking routes and a new tented base camp for pilgrims were created.

Gaurikund

Accessible early April to early Nov The small but bustling town of GAURIKUND, at the end of the motorable road from the south, is revered as the place where Gauri, also called Parvati, paid her penance and eventually won the heart of Shiva. In town are a set of hot springs and a temple enshrining an image of Parvati, although the latter’s religious significance far exceeds its visual appeal. For the vast majority, Gaurikund is most important as the main starting point of the trek up to the temple of Kedarnath.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS AND JEEP GAURIKUND
SINCE 2016, ONLY SMALLER VEHICLES ARE ALLOWED UP TO GAURIKUND. THE JEEP STAND SERVES RISHIKESH, HARIDWAR, BADRINATH AND JOSHIMATH, ALTHOUGH MOST HEAD TO RUDRAPRAYAG (4HR) FIRST, WHICH IS ALSO SERVED BY REGULAR BUSES FROM HARIDWAR AND RISHIKESH (EVERY 30MIN). CONNECTING BUSES RUN TO SONPRAYAG, 5KM BEFORE GAURIKUND.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING GMVN TOURIST BUNGALOW
NEAR KEDARNATH TRAILHEAD @GMVNONLINE.COM.
GAURIKUND’S MOST WELCOMING OPTION, OFFERING
CLEAN AND COSY DOUBLES WITH HOT WATER ON DEMAND, AND A MIXTURE OF SQUAT AND WESTERN-STYLE TOILETS.

THERE'S ALSO A RESTAURANT OFFERING BREAKFASTS, SOUPS, SALADS AND VEG THALIS. ₹

The trek to Kedarnath April to early Nov • Horses for the upward trek around ₹1800; four-man dholis around ₹3500 • Trekking agencies offer weekly all-inclusive packages With the original trail to Kedarnath from Gaurikund via Rambara and Garur Chatti washed away in the 2013 floods, a new 15km route from Gaurikund, developed by the Indian Army and members of the Nehru Institute of Mountaineering (NIM), has now been opened. The new trail crosses a bridge where Rambara once was and then heads up via Jangal Chatti (4km away), Chhoti Linchuli and Badi Linchuli, before reaching the south face of Kedarnath peak (6940m) at the end of the valley. Alternative routes start from Chaumasi (18km) or Trijuginarayan (15km) to reach Kedarnath, which is also a good base for short treks to the beautiful lake of Vasuki Tal.

Kedarnath

Even before the tragedy of 2013, KEDARNATH was not a very attractive town – a cold, grey place almost unbearable at the height of the pilgrimage season (May, June & Sept). The central thoroughfare that stretches for 500m up to the temple was once lined with dozens of resthouses, dharamshalas, pilgrim shops and eateries. Barring the temple, little of the original Kedarnath remains, with a tented camp set up 500m south of the shrine. However, the sheer power of its location tends to sweep away any negative impressions, and it's always possible to escape to explore the incredible high-altitude scenery.

Kedarnath Temple Although the surroundings and the compound wall of imposing Kedarnath Temple were destroyed, miraculously the shrine itself was not damaged: rocks that broke off from Kedar Dome blocked the floodwaters and diverted them around the temple. The temple was originally constructed by Adi Shankara in the ninth century. Built of stone with a large mandapa (fore-chamber), it houses an impressive stone image of Shiva's bull, Nandi. Within the inner sanctum, open to all, pandas (priests) sit around a rock considered to be Shiva's upraised bottom, left here as he plunged head-first into the ground in the form of a bull when fleeing Bhim, one of the Pandavas. Mendicant sadhus congregate in the elevated courtyard in front of the temple.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING GMVN KEDARNATH
TOURIST BUNGALOW 500M BEFORE THE TEMPLE 🌐
GMVNONLINE.COM. THE TOURIST BUNGALOW AT THE NEW BASE CAMP IS CURRENTLY THE ONLY PLACE TO STAY, A TENTED COLONY WITH GROUND BEDS IN SHARED FIVE-MAN TENTS. THERE'S POWER AND HOT WATER AVAILABLE, BUT NO WI-FI. ₹

Shri Badrinath Kedarnath Mandi Samiti Just behind the temple. This canteen, run by the temple committee, serves curries and aloo paratha. ₹

CHAR DHAM REGISTRATION IN 2014, THE UTTARAKHAND GOVERNMENT MADE BIOMETRIC
REGISTRATION COMPULSORY FOR ALL TOURISTS
GOING ON THE CHAR DHAM YATRA. REGISTRATION IS EASILY DONE AT REGISTRATION CENTRES AT KEY PLACES ON THE PILGRIMAGE ROUTE AND ACROSS THE STATE, INCLUDING HARIDWAR, RISHIKESH, UTTARKASHI, GANGOTRI AND KEDARNATH. YOU'LL NEED A MOBILE NUMBER AND YOUR PASSPORT AND TO PAY A NOMINAL FEE. FOR A LIST OF LOCATIONS, AND TO REGISTER ONLINE,
SEE 🌐SACREDYATRA.COM/CHAR-DHAM-REGISTRATIONS OR 🌐 REGISTRATIONANDTOURISTCARE.UK.GOV.IN.
BIOMETRIC CARDS CAN BE COLLECTED FROM THE COUNTERS ONLY AFTER REGISTRATION.

Joshimath

The scattered administrative town of JOSHIMATH clings to the side of a deep valley 250km northeast of Rishikesh, with tantalizing glimpses of the snow-capped peaks high above and the prospect, far below, of the road disappearing into a sunless canyon at Vishnu Prayag, the confluence with the Dhauli Ganga. Few of the pilgrims who pass through en route to Badrinath linger, but Joshimath has close links with Adi Shankara, the ninth-century reformer who attained enlightenment here beneath a mulberry tree before going on to establish Jyotiramath, one of the four centres of Hinduism (dhams) at the four cardinal points. The town itself consists of a long-drawn-out Upper Bazaar, and, around 1km from the main market, a Lower Bazaar that holds the colourful Narsingh, Navadurga, Vasudev and Gauri Shankar temples. A 4km cable car links the town to the slopes of Auli, one of India's better ski resorts, attracting visitors throughout the year for its views of the High Himalayas.

The town sits 2000m above sea level on the remnants of an old landslide which makes it vulnerable to sinking. The continuation of projects – like tunnelling work, hydropower projects, unplanned construction – despite copious warnings – was asking for a disaster. In early 2023 the residents of Joshimath started noticing cracks in the buildings. Since then, many houses have been marked as unsafe, and authorities are keeping a close eye on the situation.

Since the town acts as a base for many treks and spiritual outings, tourism continues to be allowed but restrictions may follow so check the current situation before traveling here.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE DESPITE JOSHIMATH CONSIDERABLE EFFORT ON THE PART OF THE MILITARY,
THE ROADS AROUND JOSHIMATH ARE NOTORIOUSLY PRONE TO LANDSLIDES DURING THE MONSOON SEASON, MAKING FOR ROUTINE DELAYS.

By bus Buses depart from near the GMOU office in the centre of the main market, Upper Bazaar to Rishikesh (10hr) and Haridwar (11hr), stopping off in Karnaprayag (3hr 30min), from where there are frequent connections to Kumaon via Gwaldam. During yatra season, there are also regular buses from the Joshimath bus stand, just above the main market, to Govind Ghat (1hr) and Badrinath (2hr), as well as a daily service to Gaurikund (11hr).

By jeep The jeep stand is located beside the Joshimath bus stand, with jeeps departing when full for Govind Ghat (45min) and Badrinath (2hr), as well as down to Karnaprayag (3hr) and Rishikesh (9–10hr).

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURIST INFORMATION THE TOURIST OFFICE (MON–FRI & USUALLY SAT 10AM–5PM; ☎ 01389 222181) IS BY THE GMVN BLOCK ABOVE UPPER BAZAAR.

Trekking and skiing Eskimo Adventure Company (🌐eskimoadventure.com), opposite Hotel Sriram in the main market, and Himalayan Snow Runner (🌐himalayansnowrunner.com), near the cable car west of Upper Bazaar, offer summer and winter trekking across Uttarakhand.

Banks and exchange There are two ATMs (PNB and SBI) in the main market.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING AULI D FOOD PLAZA ON THE UPPER BAZAAR. CLOSE TO PUNJAB BANK, THIS RESTAURANT IS ONE OF THE MANY SIMILAR PLACES
AROUND TOWN SERVING STANDARD VEG AND NON-VEG
INDIAN FARE, AS WELL AS SOME INTERNATIONAL DISHES.
THE PLASTIC-COVERED CHAIRS AND TABLES LOOK LIKE THEY MIGHT ONCE HAVE BEEN QUITE GRAND (ALTHOUGH THIS IS CERTAINLY NO LONGER THE CASE) . HOWEVER, IT’S STILL VERY MUCH A LOCAL FAVOURITE. CASH PAYMENTS ACCEPTED ONLY. ₹₹

Dronagiri 1km west of main market, 🌐dronagirihotel.com. Although not the most centrally located, this is definitely the most comfortable place to stay in town, offering a choice of hotel rooms with good views, hot running water, a clean multi-cuisine restaurant, internet access and satellite TV. ₹₹

GMVN Tourist Rest House Up a short lane 400m from the Upper Bazaar, 🌐gmvnonline.com. Centrally located, with basic but decent rooms (the deluxe ones are twice the price), a dorm and a café serving simple meals and veg thalis. The newer block, above the old and accessed by the lane opposite the GMOU office, is better, especially the rooms with front-facing views. No wi-fi. Dorm ₹, doubles ₹₹

Badrinath

Accessible May–Oct only

BADRINATH, “Lord of the Berries”, just 40km from the Tibetan border, is the most popular of Garhwal’s four main pilgrimage temples, and one of Hinduism’s holiest sites. Founded by Shankara in the ninth century, it lies near the source of the Alaknanda, the main tributary of the holy Ganges. Badrinath’s setting is dazzling, deep in a valley beneath the sharp, snowy pyramid of Nilkantha (6596m), but the town itself, sprawled to the south and east beyond the temple, is largely grubby and unattractive. Immediately south of the temple, on the west bank of the Alaknanda, is the old village of Badrinath, its traditional stone buildings and small market seeming like relics from a bygone age.

Badri Narayan Strictly no photography inside the temple
Badrinath’s temple is known as Badri Narayan, and is dedicated to Vishnu, said to have done penance in the mythical Badrivan (“Berry Forest”) that once covered the mountains of Uttarakhand. Unusually, it is made of wood, and the entire facade is repainted each May after the snow has receded and the temple has reopened for the season. From a distance, its bright colours, which contrast strikingly with the concrete buildings, snowy peaks and deep blue skies, resemble a Tibetan gompa. Inside the temple, the black stone image of Badri Vishal is seated like a bodhisattva in the lotus position (some Hindus regard Buddha as an incarnation of Vishnu). Pandas sit around the cloisters carrying on the business of worship and a booth enables visitors to pay in advance for darshan chosen from a long menu.

This site, on the west bank of the turbulent Alaknanda, may well have been selected because of the sulphurous Tapt Kund hot springs on the embankment right beneath the temple, used for ritual bathing.

Mana

Local buses and taxis normally run the 4km from Badrinath to Mana but check the current situation before setting out. The main road north of Badrinath heads into border-sensitive territory, where the intriguing Bhotia village of MANA nestles at the road's end. It's also possible to walk to Mana along a clear footpath by the road. The village consists of a warren of small lanes and buildings piled virtually on top of each other; the local Bhotia people, Buddhists of Tibetan origin who formerly traded across the high Mana Pass, now tend livestock and ponies and sell yak meat and brightly coloured, handmade carpets. Past the village and over a natural rock bridge, a path leads up the true left bank of the river towards the mountain of Satopanth (7075m), to the base of the impressive 145m waterfall of Vasudhara, considered to be the source of the Alaknanda. Walking time is just an hour and a half and, unusually, there are no chai stalls en route.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS BADRINATH
BADRINATH'S BUS STATION IS NEAR THE SOUTHERN EDGE OF TOWN; BUSES DEPART FROM HERE EVERY 2HR FROM 5.30AM UNTIL 1.30PM TO JOSHIMATH (2HR), RISHIKESH (12HR) AND HARIDWAR (13HR), THE LATER DEPARTURES MAKING AN OVERNIGHT HALT EN ROUTE TO LOWLAND DESTINATIONS. DURING YATRA SEASON, ONE DAILY BUS RUNS TO GAURIKUND (7AM; 12–13HR).

By jeeps Shared jeeps depart from 5am until early afternoon from just outside the bus stand, connecting the same destinations as the buses.

Banks and exchange SBI has an ATM just across the bridge by the temple steps, though service is occasionally interrupted.

Internet There aren't many places with internet access and your best bet is wi-fi at the café at Sarovar Portico hotel.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING BADRINATH IS AWASH WITH ROUGH, FLEA-BITTEN BUDGET HOTELS STRUNG ALONG THE MAIN ROAD. THE MOST ATMOSPHERIC AREA FOR CAFÉS AND CHAI SHOPS IS THE OLD SECTION AROUND THE TEMPLE, BUT THE MORE COMMERCIAL EAST BANK HOLDS A FEW MORE UPMARKET RESTAURANTS, ALONG WITH NUMEROUS BOG-STANDARD DHABAS.

GMVN Devlok Bazar 50m east of post office 📍gmvnonline.com. Set closer to the action than most other hotels, Devlok has a somewhat institutional feel but spacious, pleasant rooms, a restaurant serving Marwari and Gujarati thalis, great views of Neelkanth and excellent local advice. No wi-fi. ₹₹₹

Panchali Tourist Guest House Across from the south entrance to the bus station ☎94107 43596, ✉rameshnaithani.05@gmail.com. This small family-run guesthouse, convenient for catching early buses heading south, has eight well-kept rooms with clean bathrooms, hot water buckets and a welcoming owner. ₹

Sarovar Portico 200m south of the bus station, 🌐sarovarhotels.com. Marking the southern entrance into town, this is Badrinath's poshest hotel, with plentiful amenities including a luxurious café-lounge. Rates include breakfast and wi-fi. ₹₹₹₹

Hemkund and the Valley of Flowers Trail to Ghangaria Open mid-April to early Nov

- Hemkund pilgrimage season End May to end Sept
- Valley of Flowers National Park June to early Oct daily 7am–5pm (last entry 2pm)
- Three-day permit charge

Starting from the mountain hamlet of Govind Ghat (1800m), 28km south of Badrinath, an important pilgrim trail winds 15km up a steep stone path to the overgrown village of Gangharia (3048m), also known as Ghovind Dham. This one-street town is a stopover point for hundreds of Sikh pilgrims en route to Hemkund, as well as for a small trickle of visitors to the Valley of Flowers. Overnight stays are prohibited at both sites.

From Ghangaria, it is a further 6km trek along a steep path to reach the snow-melt lake of Hemkund (4329m). In the Sikh holy book, the Guru Granth Sahib, Govind Singh recalled meditating at a lake surrounded by seven high mountains; only in the twentieth century was Hemkund discovered to be that lake. A large gurudwara and a small shrine to Lakshmana, the brother of Rama, now stand alongside.

KUARI PASS TREK

The old route over the Kuari Pass (4268m) in northeastern Garhwal, also called the Curzon Trail after the British viceroy who traversed parts of it in 1905, provides some stunning mountain views. Officially renamed the Nehru Trail after Independence, the popular five-day trek crosses the high ranges without entering the permanent snowline, making it an ideal expedition for those not equipped to tackle glacial terrain. Following alpine meadows, crossing several major streams and skirting the outer western edge of the Nanda Devi National Park, the trail affords excellent views of Trisul (7120m), the trident, Nanda Ghunti (6309m), and the elusive tooth-like Changabang (6864m), while to the far north on the border with Tibet rises the unmistakable pyramid of Kamet (7756m). Camping equipment is needed, especially on the pass; guides can be negotiated in Joshimath or Ghat.

Though the original trailhead lies much further south at Gwaldam, most people begin the trek at Ghat, which is connected by shared jeeps to Nandaprayag (1hr 15min). From Ghat, it's 62km to Auli, near Joshimath, crossing the Kuari Pass (3640m) on the sixth day, while an alternative ending takes you to the hot springs of Tapovan in the Dhauli Ganga Valley. The trek is best tackled from May to June and mid-September to November.

Using the Kuari Pass as a base, a climb to the peak of Pangerchuli (5183m), 12km up and down, is thoroughly recommended – the views from the summit reveal almost the entire route, including breathtaking mountain vistas. Although snow may be encountered on the climb, it is not a technical peak and no special equipment (save a good stick) is necessary. One descent from Kuari Pass is the picturesque and less abrupt 24km route through forest to the ski centre of Auli via Chitrakantha, while a worthy alternative is the gruelling, knee-grinding 22km descent down to the small village of Tapovan, overlooking the Dhauli Ganga and its hot-spring-fed tank, and connected by local transport to Joshimath, just 11km away.

An alternative trail forks left from just above Ghangaria, climbing 5km to the mountain bugyals of the Bhyundar Valley – the Valley of Flowers. Starting at an altitude of 3352m, the valley was discovered in 1931 by the visionary mountaineer Frank Smythe, who named it for its multitude of rare and beautiful flora. The meadows are at their best during the monsoon, from mid-July until mid-August. Due to the no-camping rule, it is unfortunately impossible to explore the 10km valley in its entirety in the space of a day's hike from Ghangaria.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE TO GOVIND GHAT BY BUS AND JEEP BUSES AND HEMKUND AND THE VALLEY OF FLOWERS SHARED JEEPS RUN FREQUENTLY FROM EARLY MORNING UNTIL MID-AFTERNOON BETWEEN JOSHIMATH (45MIN) AND BADRINATH (1HR), STOPPING ALONG BADRINATH RD AT GOVIND GHAT, JUST ABOVE THE TRAILHEAD.

ON TO GHANGARIA BY PONY BEYOND GOVIND GHAT, THE ROAD IS MOTORABLE FOR A FURTHER 4KM – SHARED SUMOS (₹100/HEAD) RUN TO PULNA (2000M), FROM WHERE YOU CAN TRAVEL BY PONY OR MULE (₹1000 ONE WAY) TO GHANGARIA, 10KM AWAY.

By helicopter (www.euttaranchal.com) Helicopters operated by the Uttarakhand tourism department leave from Govind Ghat's helipad to Ghangaria, charging around ₹4000 per person.

INFORMATION AND PERMITS INFORMATION THE TOURIST INFORMATION OFFICE IN THE CENTRE OF GHANGARIA (DAILY 6PM–8PM) EXISTS ONLY TO SCREEN A NIGHTLY DOCUMENTARY ON THE VALLEY OF FLOWERS (6PM; 20MIN), PROVIDED THE TOWN’S POWER IS UP AND RUNNING.

Permits Three-day permits for the Valley of the Flowers can be bought from the ticket office, about 300m up the trail from Ghangaria towards Hemkund, to the left.

ACCOMMODATION GMVN TOURIST GUEST HOUSE GHANGARIA, ☎GMVNONLINE.COM. THIS AIRY PINK COMPLEX OFFERS GOOD VALUE, WITH CLEAN, SPACIOUS ROOMS SET OFF THE BUSY PATHWAY TOWARDS THE FORESTED BANKS OF THE PUSPHAVATI. NO WI-FI. DORMS ₹, DOUBLES ₹₹

Priya Ghangaria ☎thepriya.com. This basic hotel run by local expert Pratap Chauhan has a spacious shared balcony and decent, spotless rooms with clean bedding and white-tile bathrooms. The offering at the downstairs restaurant includes Garhwali dishes on request – maruwa (finger millet) roti, jholi (seasoned curd curry) or jhangora ki kheer (sweet millet porridge). Off-season discounts offered. No wi-fi. ₹₹

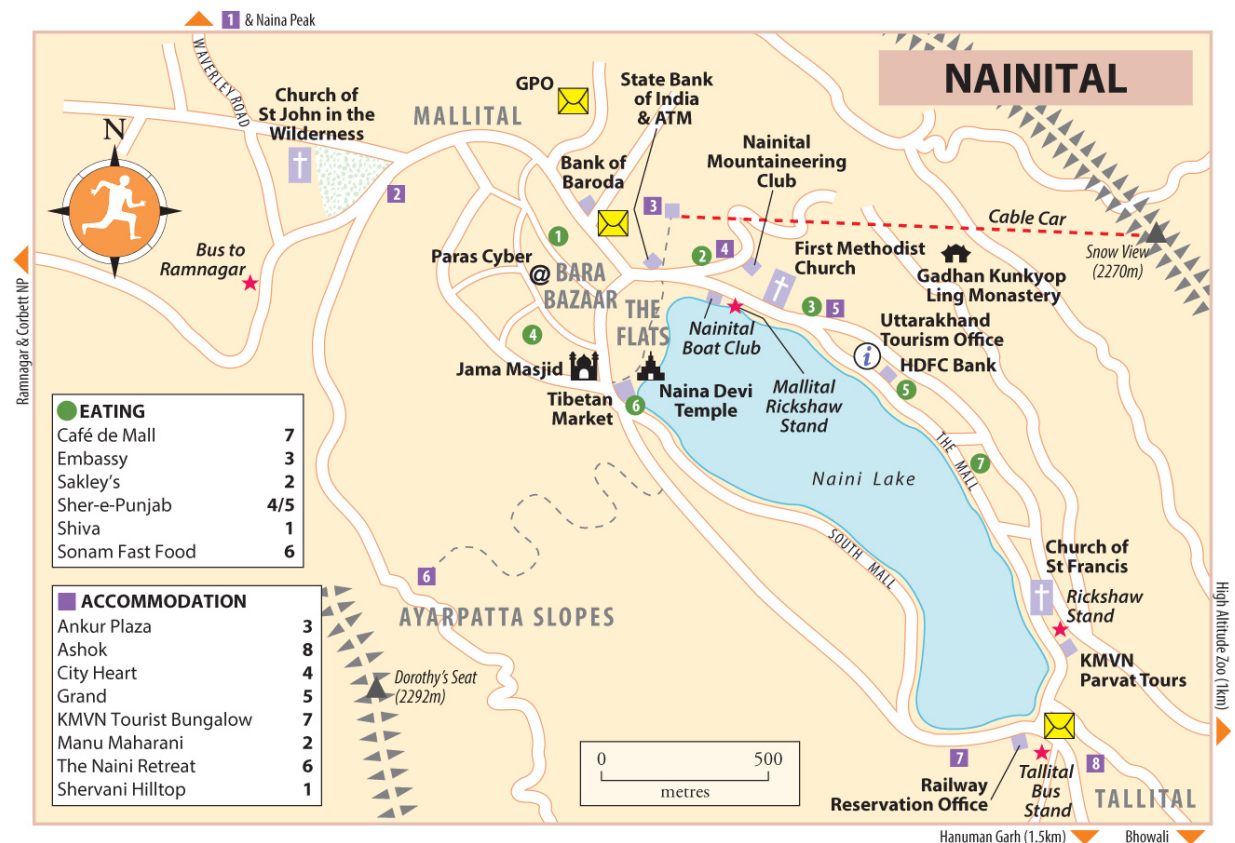

Shri Nanda Lokpal Palace Ghangaria ☎hotelnandalokpal.in. This three-storey block, just to the right of the trail as it reaches Ghangaria, houses clean, cosy rooms that are among the town’s best. There’s also a friendly owner, a handy generator and a restaurant serving pricey jholi. Wi-fi. ₹₹₹

Nainital

The small, peanut-shaped crater lake of Nainital, set in a mountain hollow at an altitude of 1938m, 277km north of Delhi, gives its name to the largest town in Kumaon. Discovered for Europeans in 1841 by Mr Barron, a wealthy sugar merchant, NAINITAL swiftly became a popular escape from the summer heat of the lowlands, and remains one of India’s top hill stations. Throughout the year, and especially between March and July, hordes of tourists and honeymooners pack the Mall, a 1.5km promenade of restaurants, hotels and souvenir shops that links Mallital (head of the lake), the older, colonial part of Nainital at the north end, with Tallital (foot of the lake).

Nainital's position within striking range of the inner Himalayas – the peaks are visible from vantage points above town – makes it a good base for exploring Kumaon. When the town's commercialism gets a bit much, it's always possible to escape into the beautiful surrounding country, to lakes such as Sat Tal (23km away), where the foothills begin their sudden drop towards the plains to the south, or to the forested ridges around Kilbury (12km) and the old Shiva temple at Mukteshwar (51km), both of which offer stunning Himalayan vistas.

The Flats

The popular Nainital Boat Club stands at the edge of the large plain known as the Flats, the result of a huge landslide in 1880 that buried the Victoria Hotel, along with 150 people. Surrounded by the cheap and lively Tibetan Market, a gurdwara, the gleaming Jama Masjid and the rebuilt Naina

Devi Temple, the Flats now hosts a large field for sporting events. A favourite pastime for day-trippers is to rent a boat on the lake from next to the boat club, on the northwest corner.

High Altitude Zoo A steep 1.5km climb from the southern end of the Mall • Tues–Sun 10am–4.30pm • C harge, camera/ video camera charge • nainitalzoo.org.in

Up in the hills of Sher ka Danda overlooking the town is Nainital's small High Altitude Zoo, home to exotic creatures such as Tibetan wolves, leopards and Himalayan black bears. It's well managed, with detailed explanations in English and a tiny Shiva temple tucked away at the top.

TRAVELLING IN KUMAON AS THE SHAIVITE TEMPLES OF KUMAON DO NOT ATTRACT THE SAME
FERVOUR AS THEIR GARHWALI EQUIVALENTS, THE REGION RECEIVES FAR LESS TOURIST TRAFFIC, ITS VILLAGES ARE LARGELY UNSPOILT AND ITS
TREKKING ROUTES UNLITTERED. TO THE EAST, KUMAON'S BORDER WITH NEPAL FOLLOWS THE KALI VALLEY TO ITS WATERSHED WITH TIBET;
THREADING THROUGH IT IS THE HOLY TRAIL (FOREIGNERS MUST HAVE A PERMIT) TO THE ULTIMATE PILGRIMAGE SITE, MOUNT KAILASH IN TIBET, THE ABODE OF SHIVA AND HIS CONSORT
PARVATI. KUMAON MANDAL VIKAS NIGAM, OR KMVN (KMVN.IN), RUNS THE OFFICIAL TOURIST SCENE IN KUMAON, REFLECTING THE SERVICES OF GMVN IN GARHWAL. NOTE THAT SERVICES IN THE REGION ARE SPARSE, WITH A CAPRICIOUS
ELECTRICITY SUPPLY, FREQUENT POWER CUTS AND, OUTSIDE OF NAINITAL, VERY FEW BANKS THAT CHANGE CASH.

Snow View and around Cable car Daily: May & June 8am–8pm; July–April 10am–5pm • Charge A cable car climbs from near Mayur Restaurant on the Mall to Snow View (2270m), from where good views of the snow-clad peaks are most likely early in the morning (especially Oct–March). Otherwise, it's a 2km hike along a choice of steep trails. The top gets overcrowded in season, with a carnival atmosphere of rides, stalls, go-karting, cafés and a promenade.

About halfway up to Snow View, conspicuous thanks to its abundant prayer flags, lies the small Tibetan gompa (temple) of Gadhan Kunkyop Ling, rebuilt in traditional gompa style. Beyond Snow View, trails lead on for 4km to Naina Peak (2611m), also called China Peak, the highest point around Nainital, with good views in all directions.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS BUSES FOR NAINITAL MOST DESTINATIONS RUN FROM TALLITAL BUS STAND IN THE SOUTH OF TOWN. MOST BUSES TO RAMNAGAR, HOWEVER, DEPART FROM SUKHATAL BUS STAND, WEST OF MALLITAL, ALTHOUGH TWO MORNING SERVICES ALSO DEPART FROM TALLITAL. MORE CONNECTIONS THROUGHOUT KUMAON ARE AVAILABLE FROM THE NEARBY TRANSPORT HUBS OF BHOWALI (20MIN) AND HALDWANI (1HR 30MIN).

By jeep Shared jeeps congregate near the Tallital Bus Stand, linking Bhowali and Haldwani, as well as destinations further north in Kumaon such as Almora (3hr) and Ranikhet (2hr 30min).

Destinations Almora (daily; 3hr); Bhowali (every 30min; 20min); Delhi (9.30am & 9.30pm; 9hr); Haridwar (8 daily; 7–8hr); Kathgodam (every 30min; 30min); Ramnagar (6 daily; 3hr 40min); Ranikhet (daily; 3hr 30min); Rishikesh (8 daily; 8–9hr).

By train The Railway Reservation Office (Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 2–5pm, Sun 9am–2pm; ☎05942 231010) is by the Tallital Bus Stand. The nearest railway station is at Kathgodam (35km south; linked by regular buses), from where the #15014 Ranikhet Express connects Old Delhi (dep. 8.35pm; arr. 5.03am), the #14119 Dehradun Express connects Haridwar (dep.

7.55pm; arr. 2.48am) and Dehradun (arr. 4.20am), the #13020 Bagh Express connects Lucknow (dep. 9.50pm; arr. 6am), Gorakhpur (arr. 12.30pm), for crossings into Nepal, and Kolkata (arr. Howrah station 11.10am on the second afternoon).

GETTING AROUND CYCLE RICKSHAW THE CYCLE RICKSHAW STAND IS IN TALLITAL; THE JOURNEY FROM THE MALL TO MALLITAL COSTS ₹50.

Vehicle rental Bikes and motorbikes can be rented from City Heart hotel, while agencies along the Mall, among them KMVN Parvat Tours (see below) and Hina Tours (www.nainitaltourism.com/hina.html), rent cars.

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION THERE'S AN UTTARAKHAND TOURISM OFFICE ON THE MALL NEAR MALLITAL (MON–SAT 10AM–5PM; ☎05942 237476), BUT YOU'LL FIND BETTER INFORMATION ONLINE (🌐 NAINITALTOURISM.COM).

Tours, trekking and mountaineering The KMVN representative, Parvat Tours (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm; ☎05942 235656), organizes tours and books accommodation at KMVN lodges. For more advice on trekking and mountaineering, call in at Nainital Mountaineering Club, CRST Inter College Building (www.nainitalonline.in), opposite City Heart hotel in Mallital, which offers mountain courses and climbing trips.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

As a holiday town, Nainital is full of hotels, but budget accommodation is hard to come by in season. Rates are highest between March and July, peaking in May and June. On the whole, rooms are cheaper in Tallital than in Mallital.

Ankur Plaza Opposite cable car station, Mallital, 🌐 hotelankurplaza.com. Steep prices in season and a steep climb up to it, but friendly management and a bargain off-season. Rooms are cosy, showing attention to detail if not great taste, and come with breakfast for two. ₹₹₹

Ashok 100m from Tallital Bus Stand, 🌐 ashoknainital.in. Handy for early buses, this functional old-style hotel offers a range of decent, compact rooms, fine for a short stay, although its surrounds aren't as attractive as those in Mallital. Most room rates are cut by fifty percent during off-season.

₹₹

★City Heart Above Mallital rickshaw stand, cityhearthotelnainital.com. This welcoming hotel has some of the best lake views in town, especially from the upper rooms and rooftop restaurant, all with cable TV and hot water (7–11am). The friendly owner, Pramod Pandey, is a great source of local information. Rates are much more reasonable in the off-season. ₹₹

Grand The Mall, thegrandnainital.com. One of the first hotels to be built in Nainital (constructed in 1872), where time seems to stand still: there's plenty of period atmosphere in the large, high-ceilinged rooms, although some are showing their age a bit. The cheapest rooms are on the ground floor, featuring LCD TVs and quaint sitting rooms, though the first-floor ones have better views. ₹₹₹

KMVN Tourist Bungalow 200m west of bus stand, Tallital kmvn.in. Functional rooms that come with breakfast, and a cheap dorm, set in a quiet part of Tallital, a short walk from the bus stand. A lengthy set of stairs connects the upper rooms, which have great lake views. Good off-season discounts. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹₹

Manu Maharani Mallital, 1.2km northwest from Nainital Boat Club, themanumaharani.com. Barely a 15min walk from town, the sprawling hotel is a comfy perch with excellent service. Rooms on the ground floor have superb sitouts from which to savour scenic lake and valley views. Wholesome thali meals for ₹780 plus wide-ranging Western and Asian cuisine. ₹₹₹₹

The Naini Retreat Ayarpatta Slopes, 1km from the Mall, leisurehotels.in. Beautifully situated high above the lake in extensive, immaculate grounds, this was the residence of the maharaja of Pilibhit. There's a great terrace for barbecues, two restaurants, a café, bar and an Ayurvedic spa and wellness centre. Lake-facing rooms are more expensive. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹₹

Shervani Hilltop Mallital, 2km northwest from the Mall, shervanihotels.com. Peaceful boutique hotel tucked into the hillside away from town. Smart, comfortable rooms are in cottages spread out among pretty gardens, with mountain views and excellent buffet breakfast and dinners. Shuttle service to/from town provided. ₹₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Café de Mall The Mall @instagram.com/cafedemall. A restaurant and café with a small espresso machine, and an open eating area overlooking the lake. The menu includes south Indian snacks, pizzas and sizzlers, plus thalis. ₹₹

Embassy The Mall, Mallital 05942 235597. One of Nainital's older favourites, with an attractive, wood-panelled interior and a small outdoor seating area. They are strongest on tandoori, Chinese and Tibetan dishes, but also offer sizzlers. ₹₹

Sakley's The Mall, Mallital 05942 235086. Since 1944, cosy Sakley's has been serving posh if pricey international cuisine including breakfast pancakes, seafood dishes such as grilled fish with creamy lemon butter sauce and chicken sizzlers. Alternatively, pop in for a very civilized tea with a pastry or slice of cake. ₹₹₹

Sher-e-Punjab The Mall. Good non-veg Indian restaurant overlooking the Mall, with dishes including chicken and mutton sagwala and butter chicken. A larger restaurant with the same name (but different owners) is near Bara Bazaar, and popular with locals, serving good thalis and butter chicken for the same price as at the Mall restaurant. ₹₹

Shiva Bara Bazaar, Mallital 097197 24069. Cheap, good and popular dhaba with tasty matar paneer and mushroom dishes, among other veg options. The next-door clone (to the right) is equally good. ₹₹

Sonam Fast Food Tibetan Market, Mallital. Tiny but popular café in an alley behind the market, serving up hot plates of veg or mutton momos, chow mein and thukpa, though there's not much in the way of seating. ₹

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE THERE ARE A HANDFUL OF ATMS ALONG THE MALL AND IN MALLITAL. IT'S A GOOD IDEA TO CHANGE CASH HERE IF YOU ARE MOVING ON INTO THE MOUNTAINS, AS THERE ARE FEW BANKS FURTHER NORTH THAT WILL DO SO.

Corbett Tiger Reserve Mid-June to mid-Nov daily 6–9.30am & 1.30–5.30pm (check at reception for seasonal changes in park hours); Jhirna and Dhela zones open year-round • Book in advance corbettnationalpark.in

Based at Ramnagar, 63km southwest of Nainital, Corbett Tiger Reserve is one of India's premier wildlife reserves. Established in 1936 by Jim Corbett (among others) as the Hailey National Park, India's first, and later renamed in his honour, it is one of Himalayan India's last expanses of wilderness. Almost the entire 1288-square-kilometre park, spread over the foothills of Kumaon, is sheltered by a buffer zone of mixed deciduous and giant sal forests, which provide impenetrable cover for wildlife. The core area of 520 square kilometres at its heart remains out of bounds, and safaris on foot are only permissible in the fringe forests.

Corbett is famous for its big cats, in particular, the tiger – it was the first designated Project Tiger Reserve in 1973 – but its 215 or so tigers are elusive, and sightings are far from guaranteed. Nonetheless, the project has proven more successful in Uttarakhand (both in Corbett and the nearby Rajaji National Park) than in any of its other 48 reserves. While the very survival of the tiger in India remains in serious jeopardy, Corbett does seem to be prioritizing the needs of tigers over those of other wildlife and of tourists. Incidents of poaching, however, are not unheard of, though of late it's Corbett's leopards that have faced the most serious threat.

The reservoir within the park also shelters populations of gharial, a long-snouted, fish-eating crocodile, and large marsh mugger crocodile, as well as other reptiles. Jackal are common, and wild boar often run through the camps in the evenings. The grasslands around Dhikala are home to deer species such as the spotted chital, hog and barking deer and the larger sambar, while rhesus and common langur, the two main classes of Indian monkey, are both abundant, and happy to provide in-camp entertainment. Corbett also has spectacular birdlife, with nearly five hundred resident and migratory species, including around fifty species of raptors or birds of prey, among them the crested serpent eagle and the Himalayan grey-headed fishing eagle. Late spring (April–June) is the best time to see wildlife, when low water levels force animals into the open. The park is divided into six “eco-tourism zones” open for day-visits, of which by far the best for sighting big game is picturesque Dhikala, deep into the park near the reservoir and where visitors can stay overnight. Bijrani, Sonanandi, Jhirna, Durgadevi and Dhela are the other five zones, the latter particularly popular for its jeep safaris and excellent chances of spotting a tiger.

Ramnagar

Situated in the rich farm-belt of the terai, on the southeastern fringes of the great forests, the busy market town of RAMNAGAR is the administrative hub for Corbett Tiger Reserve and has plenty of budget accommodation. Permits and accommodation reservations are issued at the reception office. There's little to do around Ramnagar itself except go fishing. At Lohachaur, 15km north along the River Kosi, good anglers are in with a chance of landing the legendary mahseer, a redoubtable battling river carp.

Dhikala

Beautifully situated overlooking the Ramganga reservoir and the forested hills beyond, Corbett's main camp, Dhikala, lies 49km northwest of Ramnagar and 31km west of Dhangarhi Gate. As you can only stray beyond the confines of the camp on elephant-back or in a car or jeep, the whole place has something of the air of a military encampment. It's normally possible to see plenty of animals and birds from the Dhikala watchtower, a 1km wander down the path near the restaurant (turn left where the path meets a junction); bring binoculars, remain quiet and don't wear bright colours or perfume. Chital, sambar and various other deer species find refuge in the savannah grasslands known as the chaur, behind the camp to the south, and tigers are occasionally drawn in looking for prey.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE THE CORBETT TIGER RESERVE NEAREST TOWN TO CORBETT TIGER RESERVE IS RAMNAGAR WHERE YOU'LL FIND THE RESERVE RECEPTION
OFFICE (MON: 7AM–5PM, TUES–SUN 9AM–5PM; ☎ CORBETTTIGERRESERVE.IN). PRIVATE VEHICLES ARE NOT ALLOWED; VISITORS MAY ENTER THE CTR IN A REGISTERED 4WD, SUCH AS A GYPSY. TOURS CAN BE ARRANGED IN RAMNAGAR OR ANY OF THE OUTLYING RESORTS, BUT IT IS BEST TO ARRANGE THIS IN ADVANCE.

JIM CORBETT (1875–1955) HUNTER OF MAN-EATING TIGERS, PHOTOGRAPHER, CONSERVATIONIST AND AUTHOR, JIM CORBETT WAS BORN IN NAINITAL OF ENGLISH AND IRISH PARENTAGE. A CHILDHOOD

SPENT AROUND THE CORBETT WINTER HOME JUST OUTSIDE KALADHUNGI (29KM SOUTHEAST OF RAMNAGAR) INSTILLED IN YOUNG JIM A LOVE FOR CLOSE COMMUNION WITH NATURE AND AN INSTINCTIVE UNDERSTANDING OF JUNGLE WAYS.

Known locally as “Carpet Sahib”, a mispronunciation of his name, Jim Corbett was called upon time and time again to rid the hills of Kumaon of man-eating tigers and leopards. Normally shy of human contact, such animals become man-eaters when infirmity brought upon by old age or wounds renders them unable to hunt their usual prey. Many of those killed by Corbett were found to have suppurating wounds caused by porcupine quills embedded deep in their paws.

One of Corbett’s most memorable exploits was the killing of the Champawat tiger, which was responsible for a documented 436 human deaths, and was bold enough to steal its victims from the midst of human habitation. By the mid-1930s, though, Corbett had become dismayed with the increasing number of hunters in the Himalayas and the resultant decline in wildlife, and diverted his energies into conservation, swapping his gun for a movie camera and spending months capturing tigers on film. His adventures are described in books such as My India, Jungle Lore and Man-Eaters of Kumaon; Martin Booth’s Carpet Sahib is an excellent biography of a remarkable man. Unhappy in post-Independence India, Jim Corbett retired to East Africa, where he continued his conservation efforts until his death at the age of eighty.

For a further glimpse into Corbett’s life, head to his family’s former winter retreat near Kaladhungi, which houses the Jim Corbett Museum (Mon–Sat: summer 8am–6pm; winter 8am–5pm; Charge).

RAMNAGAR BY TRAIN THE RAILWAY STATION IS 1KM SOUTH OF THE TOWN CENTRE (BEYOND THE CORBETT KINGDOM HOTEL); FROM HERE, THE #25014 CORBETT PARK LINK EXPRESS LEAVES AT 10.15PM FOR DELHI SARAI ROHILLA (ARR. 4.44AM). FOR FASTER TRAINS AND CONNECTIONS TO OTHER PARTS CHANGE AT MORADABAD (7 DAILY; 1–2HR).

By bus From the main bus stand (☎84760 07547) in the town centre, buses run to Bhowali (for Nainital; 2 daily; 3hr 30min), Delhi (every 15min; 7hr), Dehradun (every 30min; 7hr 30min) and Haridwar (24 daily; 6hr).

DHIKULI DHIKULI (NOT TO BE CONFUSED WITH DHIKULA) RESORTS OFFER PICK-UP FROM RAMNAGAR'S BUS AND TRAIN STATIONS. YOU CAN ALSO HIRE AN AUTO-RICKSHOW.

PARK GATES THE CLOSEST OF THE VARIOUS PARK GATES FROM RAMNAGAR IS AT AMDANDA (1KM NORTH) ON THE ROAD TO BIJRANI (11KM). ANOTHER USEFUL GATE IS DHANGARHI (18KM NORTH OF RAMNAGAR), WHICH PROVIDES ACCESS TO THE PARK'S NORTHERN AND NORTHWESTERN PORTIONS, INCLUDING THE MAIN CAMP OF DHIKALA. DHELA GATE (20KM WEST OF RAMNAGAR) LINKS JHIRNA IN THE SOUTH OF THE PARK AND IN 2017, TWO FURTHER GATES OPENED ON THE GARHWAL-KOTDWAR SIDE OF THE PARK, CLOSEST TO DELHI.

INTO THE PARK DHIKALA CAN ONLY BE ACCESSED BY THOSE WITH AN OVERNIGHT RESERVATION WITHIN THE DHIKALA CAMP, OR ON A DAY BUS (CANTER) TOUR ORGANIZED VIA THE RECEPTION CENTRE. OTHER ZONES ARE ACCESSIBLE BY JEEP OR BUS (SEE BELOW).

INFORMATION AND PERMITS INFORMATION THE CTR RECEPTION OFFICE (DAILY 10AM–5PM, ☎ CORBETTONLINE.UK.GOV.IN) IS ABOUT 100M TO THE NORTH OF THE BUS STAND, ON THE OPPOSITE SIDE OF THE ROAD. THERE'S ALSO A VISITORS' CENTRE (DAILY 10AM–3PM) AND MUSEUM AT DHANGARHI GATE.

Park permits Permits should be organised at least 6 weeks in advance online at ☎corbettonline.uk.gov.in or by booking with a tour operator.

Banks and exchange There are several ATMs in Ramnagar, including Bank of Baroda on Ranikhet Rd and SBI at the train station.

TOURS AND GUIDES BUS TOURS THE PARK RUNS DAILY TOURS IN SIXTEEN-SEATER CANTER BUSES (6AM & NOON) TO DHIKALA FROM RAMNAGAR, PROVIDING THE ONLY MEANS OF REACHING THE CAMP WITHOUT STAYING THE NIGHT.

Safaris Jeeps to Bijrani, Jhirna, Dhela, Durgadevi or Sitabani and can be arranged online or via your accommodation or a tour operator. Tigerland Safaris at Dhikuli (www.tigerlandsafaris.com) is the longest established local operator; the owner, Pavan, is the go-to man for Corbett. Other operators can be found outside Ramnagar's bus stand. Be clear about what you're getting for your money: fuel, driver's accommodation and all safaris (4hr duration is standard) should all be included. A petrol 4WD, such as a Maruti Gypsy, is best as it is quiet and built for the terrain. Girish at Govind restaurant in Ramnagar (05947 251615) can also help arrange tours.

Guides All jeep safaris must be accompanied by a guide – who may or may not be able to identify wildlife or speak English – allotted to your jeep by a rota system. If you require a guide with specific knowledge, contact the Field Director one month in advance with your request (05947 253977).

ACCOMMODATION A NUMBER OF SELF-CONTAINED RESORTS HAVE SPRUNG UP ON THE FRINGES OF CORBETT, CLOSE TO THE TOWN OF DHIKULI, ABOUT 9KM NORTH OF RAMNAGAR. THESE PROVIDE A HIGHER STANDARD OF ACCOMMODATION THAN IN DHIKALA OR RAMNAGAR AS WELL AS GUIDES FOR EXPEDITIONS IN THE NEIGHBOURING FORESTS, WHICH CAN BE AS RICH IN WILDLIFE AS THE PARK, MINUS ALL THE RESTRICTIONS AND BUREAUCRACY.

RAMNAGAR ANAND 100M SOUTH OF THE MAIN BUS STAND 05947 254385. THIS MODEST OPTION IN THE TOWN'S NOISY CENTRE OFFERS CLEAN, SIMPLE ROOMS, ALL WITH TV; LARGER ONES WITH GEYSER WATER HEATERS COST EXTRA. THERE'S A SPOTLESS LITTLE RESTAURANT ATTACHED. ₹

Corbett Kingdom 400m south of the bus stand, www.corbettkingdom.com. Next to a none-too-clean irrigation ditch near the town centre, this flashy three-storey hotel is Ramnagar's best, offering a/c rooms with flatscreen

TVs and big windows. The hotel's ample amenities include a multicuisine restaurant, travel desk and a small pool. ₹₹₹

Karan's Corbett Motel 1km south of the train station, 📍 karanscorbettmotel.com. New setup in a leafy mango orchard with four neat rooms kitted out with air coolers and in-house restaurant. Friendly owner Karan arranges safaris and tours, besides pick-up from the town centre. ₹₹

KMVN Tourist Lodge Next to CTR Reception Office, about 100m north of bus stand, 📍 kmvn.in. As institutional as any K MVN lodge, in a central but relatively quiet location with a dorm and basic restaurant as well as spacious but spartan doubles, some with a/c. Dorm ₹, doubles ₹₹

DHIKALA ALL ACCOMMODATION WITHIN THE PARK IS BOOKABLE VIA THE CTR RECEPTION OFFICE IN RAMNAGAR; HOWEVER, BOOKINGS (ONLINE OR BY TELEPHONE) FOR DHIKALA SHOULD BE MADE AT LEAST THIRTY DAYS IN ADVANCE (TWENTY FOR INDIAN NATIONALS) DURING PEAK SEASON. K MVN RUN A CANTEEN FOR GUESTS, PARVAT, WITH BOTH INDIAN AND WESTERN FOOD AVAILABLE, WHILE ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE CAMP IS A DHABA SERVING SIMILAR FOOD.

Dhikala Forest Lodge, 📍 dhikalaforestlodge.in. Surrounded by a small fence, the complex has 32 attached rooms spread across six wings with solar heating, plus a pair of twelve-bed dorms with bunk beds and common bathrooms. A veg buffet is served at the in-house restaurant. No wi-fi. Dorms ₹, double ₹₹

DHIKULI RESORTS, MAP

Corbett Riverside Resort 11km north of Ramnagar, 📍 corbetttriverside.in. A picturesque setting, 10km north of Ramnagar looking across the river to forest-covered cliffs. Amenities include a pool, volleyball court, billiards hall and a travel desk where you can arrange various safaris and horseback rides. The super-ritzy Presidential Suites along the river's edge have verandas directly above the river beach. ₹₹₹

The Den Corbett 29km north of Ramnagar (9km beyond Dhangarhi Gate), Mohan 📞 97566 07850. Wood-panelled stone cottages in a leafy mango orchard above the Kosi River, complete with a curvaceous pool and a spa. There are good two-night/three-day package deals and off-season discounts. ₹₹₹

Infinity Corbett Wilderness 9km north of Ramnagar 📞96501 93662, 🌐 infinityresorts.com. This ostentatious resort overlooks the Kosi and forested hills, with large comfortable rooms (facing the garden or river), a library, well-stocked bar, swimming pool, gym and spa. Safaris cost (a lot) extra. Activities include nature trails with the resort's own naturalists, jungle rides, fishing, trekking and films. ₹₹₹₹

Ranikhet

The small and deliberately undeveloped hill station of RANIKHET (1824m), 50km west of Almora, is essentially an army cantonment, home to the Kumaon Rifles. New construction is confined to the Sadar Bazaar area, while the rest of the town above it, climbing towards the crest of the hill, retains its peacefully pleasant atmosphere in the shade of tall pine woods. Forest trails abound, including a shortcut from the bazaar to the Mall (something of a misnomer, as it's a quiet road with few buildings apart from officers' messes), which starts just above the town and continues south for 3km along the wooded crest of the ridge.

KRC Shawl and Tweed Factory Above the Narsingh Stadium Parade Ground, at the very start of the Mall • Mon–Sat 9am–7pm (winter 10am–6pm), Sun 10am–5pm • Free The KRC Shawl and Tweed Factory, in an old church equipped with looms and wheels, allows visitors to watch the weavers in action, a fascinating display of concentration, dexterity and counting. The herringbone and hound's-tooth tweeds are sold in the shop next door.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN THERE'S A RANIKHET RAILWAY RESERVATION OFFICE (MON–FRI 9AM–1PM & 2–4PM, SAT 9.30AM–1PM & 2–3PM) NEXT TO THE POST OFFICE, HANDY FOR BOOKING TRAINS FROM THE NEAREST STATION IN KATHGODAM.

By bus Buses from all over Kumaon, including the railway station at Kathgodam, 84km away, arrive at one of two stands on either end of the bazaar: the KMOU stand to the west at Gandhi Chowk, and the Uttarakhand Roadways stand (☎84760 07549) east of the bazaar. Long-haul buses to Delhi, Lucknow, Dehradun and Haridwar depart from the UP Roadways stand, while all other regional destinations are served by the KMOU stand.

Destinations Dehradun (2 daily; 10hr); Delhi (4 daily; 11–12hr); Haldwani (10 daily; 4hr 30min); Kathgodam (6 daily; 3hr 30 min); Lucknow (2pm daily; 13–14hr); Ramnagar (1 daily; 4hr).

By jeep Shared jeeps depart when full from beside both bus stands for many of the same destinations, including Almora (2hr) and Haldwani (3hr).

GETTING AROUND BY JEEP SHARED JEEPS LEAVE WHEN FULL FOR THE MALL (10MIN) FROM THE SMALL STAND ABOVE GANDHI CHOWK.

By taxi The taxi rank is just above the KMOU Bus Stand.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING IF YOU'RE JUST PASSING THROUGH RANIKHET, THE HOTELS IN THE BUSY BAZAAR ARE SUFFICIENT, BUT THE MALL IS BETTER FOR AN EXTENDED STAY. EATING CHOICES ARE PRETTY LIMITED; THE BEST OF THEM ARE WITHIN THE BETTER HOTELS, BUT THERE ARE A FEW GOOD CAFÉS AND DHABAS IN THE BAZAAR.

Chevron Ranikhet Club The Mall, 2km south of town centre, ☎ chevronhotels.in. For a taste of Indian military life and a good dose of colonial nostalgia, take out a temporary membership of the Ranikhet Club for a meal at the classy old restaurant, which serves great sizzlers, or a drink at the bar; dress code is strictly formal. Guests can also use club facilities such as the tennis courts and billiards and cards rooms. The old rooms have been refurbished as well, but don't have as much character as the Rosemount. ₹₹₹

★Chevron Rosemount 500m west of the Mall from the turn-off just south of Hotel Meghdoot, www.chevronhotels.com. A beautifully restored 1897 colonial mansion, deep in the woods, all pine and teak with lovely rooms, a restaurant and gardens complete with tennis, croquet, badminton and snow views from the deckchairs on the lawn. ₹₹₹

Meghdoot The Mall, 3km south of town centre, www.ranikhet-hotels.business.site. Comfortable suites set back from balconies full of potted plants and flowers, with running hot water and room service, plus a good mid-range restaurant that serves up a range of tasty biryani, pulao and other non-veg dishes. ₹₹₹

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE THERE ARE SEVERAL ATMS IN TOWN, INCLUDING ONE AT THE STATE BANK OF INDIA (MON–FRI 10AM–4PM).

Post office The main post office is on the Mall (Mon–Sat 9am–5pm), not far beyond the Chevron Ranikhet Club.

Almora

Spread out over a hilltop overlooking terraced fields, 67km north of Nainital, ALMORA (1646m) is Kumaon's official and cultural capital. Founded by the Chand dynasty in 1560, and occupied successively by the Gurkhas and the British, it remains a major market town, and has attracted an eclectic assortment of visitors over the years, including Swami Vivekananda, Timothy Leary and the Tibetologist author of The Way of the White Clouds, Lama Angarika Govinda. While many foreign visitors prefer the nearby traveller colony of Kasar Devi, around 8km north, Almora makes a practical base for regional excursions.

Almora bazaars Although most of Almora's official business is conducted along the hectic Mall, the bazaars, immediately above and parallel to it along the crest of the saddle, hold much more of interest. These pedestrian-only flagstone lanes teem with local crowds in the evenings, while the faded, carved facades evoke a distant past. The most impressive example of the old architectural style is found at the Khazanchi Mohalla, which once belonged to the state treasurers. Stretching about 1.5km from Lal Bazaar to Thana Bazaar, the various markets offer everything from khadi (home-spun) cotton textiles to tamta (local copperware).

The temples

Towards the top of town, just north of the market area, a compound holds a group of Chand-period stone temples. The main one, a squat single-storey structure, is dedicated to Nanda Devi, the goddess embodied in the region's highest mountain. More typical of Kumaoni temple architecture are two larger Shaivite painted stone temples, capped with umbrella-like wooden roofs covering their stone amalaka (circular crowns). During September a large fair is held here in honour of Nanda Devi.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN THERE'S A ALMORA COMPUTERIZED RAILWAY RESERVATION CENTRE (MON–SAT 9AM–NOON & 2–5PM) AT THE KMVN TOURIST REST HOUSE HOTEL, ON THE MALL 1KM WEST OF THE CENTRE, USEFUL FOR BOOKING TRAINS FROM THE NEAREST RAILWAY STATION AT KATHGODAM.

By bus Buses arrive and depart from a pair of nearby adjacent bus stands located in the middle of the Mall. Tickets for Kumaoni destinations can be bought from the KMOU office (☎94105 01878), while tickets for Dehradun, Haridwar and Delhi should be purchased from the UTC office (☎05962 230046), 50m east and down some steps by Deewan's Sweets.

Destinations Bageshwar (3 daily; 3hr 30min); Baijnath (2 daily; 2hr 30min); Bhowali (2 daily; 3hr 30min); Dehradun (2 daily; 12hr); Delhi (4 daily; 12hr); Haldwani (2 daily; 3hr); Haridwar (2 daily; 10hr); Kausani (2 daily; 2hr 30min).

By jeep The jeep stand is by the Bharat filling station on the Mall, just west of Shikhar hotel. Jeeps depart when full for Kasar Devi (15min), Binsar (1hr), Bageshwar (2hr), Ranikhet (2hr) and Kausani (2hr 30min).

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURIST INFORMATION THE TOURIST OFFICE IS NEXT TO THE KMVN TOURIST REST HOUSE ON MALL RD (MON–SAT 10AM–5PM; ☎05962 230180).

Tours and treks The best places for taxi excursions, treks and other activities, or to hire equipment and guides, are Discover Himalaya (🌐discover-himalayas.com) and High Adventure (🌐highadventure.in), both on the Mall by Hotel Kailas.

Banks and exchange There are many ATMs along the Mall.

ACCOMMODATION ★BANSAL GUEST HOUSE LAL BAZAAR, AT THE TOP OF THE STEEP LANE OPPOSITE HOTEL SHIKHAR ☎05962 230864, ☎9927967002. SPOTLESS, SIMPLE ROOMS WITH EN SUITES (FREE HOT BUCKET WATER), FANTASTIC ROOFTOP VIEWS AND VERY FRIENDLY MANAGEMENT, WHO'LL DELIVER THEIR RENOWNED LASSIS AND TIKKIS TO YOUR ROOM. THE TOP ROOM IS THE LARGEST AND MOST ATTRACTIVE. ₹

Khim's Guest House Off Kasar Devi Rd, 3.5km north of Almora 🌐facebook.com/khimsguesthouse. Laidback guesthouse favoured by old-school hippies, and a lovely place to chill out for a week or two. As well as standard doubles there are unattached single rooms and cottages with attached bathrooms, plus an excellent library on the Himalayan region. ₹₹

Savoy Mall Rd, 500m from the bus station 🌐savoyalmora.com. Pistachio-green budget hotel with a view of the valley, conifer-covered hills and Himalayan peaks from the garden and upper balcony. Rooms on the first floor are sunnier, though the deluxe rooms are more spacious. Gaudy furnishings but clean linen and a restaurant serving home-style Kumaoni food. ₹₹

Shikhar The Mall, 150m northeast of the bus stand, 🌐hotelshikhar.in. Marking the centre of town, the huge Shikhar has a wide range of rooms at very reasonable prices (the more spacious deluxe rooms cost double), all with balconies. The gloomy but cavernous restaurant serves good food. ₹

EATING CAFÉS AND RESTAURANTS ARE STRUNG ALONG THE MALL, ESPECIALLY AROUND THE BAZAAR AREA; LOCALLY

GROWN AND PREPARED KUMAON RICE AND BLACK DHAL ARE PARTICULARLY DELICIOUS AND FOR DESSERT TRY SINGAURI, A MILK SWEET THAT'S A LOCAL SPECIALITY.

Chatpat Chicken Corner The Mall, 300m west of the bus stand. Plain and simple, brightly lit place serving tasty roast chicken. ₹

Glory The Mall, near Shikhar Hotel,  business.google.com/website/glory-restaurant. Multicuisine café/restaurant, strong on north Indian cooking, with dishes from masala dosa to butter chicken as well as a smattering of Chinese food. Also good for breakfast. ₹₹

New Soni The Mall, near the bus stand. Excellent, Sikh-run dhaba famed for its chicken and mutton dishes; it can get crowded. ₹₹

North of Almora The scenic hills and forests north of Almora are home to a clutch of appealingly situated towns with ample opportunities for hiking. All the places covered below are accessible as day-trips from the regional capital, though also reward a longer stay for those with more time.

Kasar Devi

Spread among the cedar and rhododendron forest below the unassuming hilltop temple of Kasar Devi (of Swami Vivekananda fame), 8km north of Almora, is the pleasant hamlet of KASAR DEVI. Nicknamed “hippieland” by some of the locals, it plays host to a thriving long-term travellers’ scene.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE SHARED JEEPS RUN KASAR DEVI WHEN FULL BETWEEN ALMORA'S JEEP STAND AND KASAR DEVI (15MIN; ₹30), DROPPING OFF PASSENGERS ALONG BINSAR RD.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING

Kasar Rainbow Yoga Retreat Off Binsar Rd, near Mohan's,  kasarrainbowyogaretreat.com. Reached by a small path off the main road, this guesthouse has undergone a swanky revamp and now focuses on yoga (and offers massage). Rooms have terraces with mountain views and there's a small library plus a spacious restaurant with organic food. The friendly owner, Sabu, can arrange treks to the surrounding villages. ₹₹₹

Mohan's Binsar Retreat Binsar Rd,  mohansbinsarretreat.com. The pick of the lot, attracting both guests and non-guests to its breezy terrace café with lazy chairs overlooking the valley. Rooms come with fire-places and kettles, plus there's a good restaurant, housed in a gazebo. ₹₹₹

New Dolma Binsar Rd,  09675544050. Run by Tibetans, New Dolma is perched above the road with a view of the Himalayas; you can enjoy momos, thukpa and chow mein on the broad outdoor terrace or inside the diner. The luridly coloured rooms have LCD TVs, a/c and good-quality beds. There's also a six-bed dorm upstairs. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹

Binsar Wildlife Sanctuary Charge, vehicle charge • No public transport; return taxi from Almora's jeep stand Binsar Wildlife Sanctuary, known locally as Jhandi Dhar ("hilltop"), 33km north of Almora and easily visited as a day-trip, rises in isolation to a commanding 2412m. Rich in alpine flora, ferns, hanging moss and wild flowers, and with over two hundred species of bird, it was once the summer capital of the Chandras, Kumaon's kings, though little of that era remains aside from the bulbous stone Shiva temple of Bineshwar, 3km below the summit. Most visitors come to see the 300km panorama of Himalayan peaks along the northern horizon, including, from west to east, Kedarnath, Chaukhamba, Trisul, Nandaghunti, Nanda Devi, Nandakot and Panchchuli. Closer at hand, you can enjoy quiet forest walks through oak and rhododendron woods.

ACCOMMODATION BINSAR BINSAR WILDLIFE SANCTUARY FOREST RETREAT AYARPANI, 1KM SOUTHWEST OF THE SANCTUARY'S ZERO POINT, ☎BINSARFORESTRETREAT.COM. LOCATED IN THE MIDDLE OF THE WILDLIFE SANCTUARY AT AN ALTITUDE OF 2300M, WITH ACCOMMODATION IN LUXURIOUS TENTED COTTAGES OR A RANGE OF STONE-FLOORED, MUD-WALLED ROOMS WITH VIEWS OF THE TRISUL AND NANDAGHUNTI PEAKS. ₹₹₹₹

KMVN Tourist Rest House 2km before Zero Point ☎86500 02537. At the end of the road near the top of a steep hill, this KMVN place offers bland but comfortable wood-panelled rooms. It runs on solar power and often goes dark in the evening: bring a torch. There's basic veg and non-veg food available. The mountain views from the broad garden terrace are wonderful.

₹₹₹

Jageshwar

JAGESHWAR, 25km northeast of Almora, is the very heart of Kumaon, a place where language and customs seem to have resisted change. An idyllic small river meanders through dark pines for 3km off the main road from Artola, stumbling onto a complex of 124 ancient shrines and temples that cluster at the base of venerable deodar trees. Jageshwar village retains much of its traditional charm, with stone-paved lanes and beautifully carved wooden doors and windows painted in green, turquoise and other striking colours. Good local walks include the steep 3km ascent through beautiful pine forests to the hamlet and stone temples of Vriddha Jageshwar (Old Jageshwar), with an extensive panorama from the mountains of Garhwal to the massifs of western Nepal. A trail from here leads 12km along an undulating ridge to Binsar; the trail finally emerges from the woods near the stone temple of Bineshwar.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS A DAILY BUS JAGESHWAR RUNS FROM ALMORA AT NOON (1HR 30MIN), RETURNING

FROM JAGESHWAR'S MAIN TEMPLE GATE AROUND 8AM.

By taxi A return taxi from Almora costs about ₹1200.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING TARA GUEST HOUSE UP THE HILL FROM JAGESHWAR TEMPLE 05962 263068. THIS TINY, FAMILY-RUN BLOCK HAS NINE BASIC ROOMS (THREE WITH HOT SHOWERS) WITH TWIN BEDS AND SMALL PATIOS OVERLOOKING THE TEMPLE, IN A QUIET SETTING A FEW MINUTES OFF THE ROAD. HOT WATER, GOOD BREAKFASTS AND THALIS ARE PROVIDED BY THE FRIENDLY OWNER, WHO OFFERS ADVICE AND GUIDANCE ON LOCAL EXCURSIONS. ₹

Kausani

Spread out east to west along a narrow pine-covered ridge 52km northwest of Almora, the village of KAUSANI has become a popular resort thanks to its spectacular Himalayan panorama. It's a simple day-trip from Almora, though as the peaks – Nanda Choti, Trisul, Nanda Devi and Panchchuli – are at their best at dawn and dusk, it's well worth an overnight stay. Up the hill from the town centre are several ashrams, including one that once housed Mahatma Gandhi, who walked here in 1929, thirty years before the road came through, and an observatory where you can admire the night sky (50m downhill from Anashakti Ashram).

There are numerous possibilities for short day-hikes in the woods and terraced valleys around Kausani, among them the scenic hike to the Kausani Tea Estate (4km north), and the pleasant trail down the valley to the temples of Baijnath (10km). Further afield is the important pilgrimage site of Bageshwar and the trailhead for the Pindari Glacier, a few hours away in Song.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS AND SHARED KAUSANI JEEP KAUSANI IS CONNECTED BY REGULAR BUSES AND SHARED JEEPS TO ALMORA (EVERY 30MIN; 2HR 30MIN) AND BAIJNATH (HOURLY; 30MIN), FROM WHERE BUSES CONTINUE TO BAGESHWAR (1HR 30MIN) TO THE EAST AND GWALDAM (1HR 30MIN) AND KARNAPRAYAG (3–4HR) TO THE NORTHWEST, FOR DESTINATIONS IN GARHWAL.

Banks and exchange The State Bank of India has an ATM.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING OUTSIDE HIGH SEASON (APRIL 15–JUNE 15 & OCT 1–NOV 15), ROOM RATES ARE SLASHED ROUGHLY IN HALF.

Anashakti Ashram Snow View Rd, looking down on the Mall 05962 258028. Guests prepared to observe house rules, such as attending compulsory prayers and not smoking, are welcome to stay at Gandhi's pleasant but spartan former ashram, run completely on solar power, for a donation. Either way, it's worth visiting the main prayer hall, which doubles as a Gandhi museum (daily 7am–noon & 4–6pm; free; no photos). No wi-fi.

₹

★Uttarakhand Kausani Up the steps 150m north of the bus stand, uttarakhandkausani.com. This foreigner-friendly place is run by Vipin Upreti, a nature enthusiast and great source of information on hikes. Newly renovated, it has clean doubles and a broad terrace with fantastic Himalayan views; the first-floor rooms with satellite TV and flush bidet toilets are good value. The thatched-roof viewing tower, equipped with a telescope, rises above the hotel's Garden Restaurant – home to Kausani's only tandoor oven. ₹₹₹

Bairjnath

At the bottom of the broad Garur Valley lies the quiet town of BAIJNATH (1126m), 16km north of Kausani and sprawled along the banks of the Gomti River. This was once the capital city of the Katyur dynasty, which ruled much of Garhwal and Kumaon from the seventh to the fourteenth centuries; their stone temples, built between the ninth and twelfth centuries, still stand at a bend in the river. Eighteen towering shrines rise from the temple grounds, each a beautiful example of the medieval nagara style, the tallest of them devoted to Lord Shiva's form, Vaidyanath ("the Lord of Physicians"). The main temple, however, is devoted to Shiva's consort, Parvati, its 1.5m schist image of the goddess being one of the few in the complex to have withstood the ravages of time.

PINDARI GLACIER TREK ONE OF THE MOST ACCESSIBLE GLACIERS IN THE KUMAON REGION, THE PINDARI GLACIER STRETCHES MORE THAN 3KM IN LENGTH AND ALMOST 500M IN WIDTH. PASSING THROUGH PRISTINE, HIGH MOUNTAIN COUNTRY AND A HOST OF TINY HIMALAYAN VILLAGES, THE TRAIL FOLLOWS THE PINDAR RIVER TO ITS SOURCE, OFFERING VIEWS ALONG THE WAY OF THE REGION'S GIANTS, AMONG THEM NANDA KOT (6861M), PANWALI DWAR (6663M) AND MAIKTOLI (6803M).

Beginning and ending in Song (1600m), the trail covers about 90km round trip and takes six days to complete, crossing over the Dhakuri Pass (2680m) and beyond the final settlement of Khati to reach Zero Point at the edge of the Pindari Glacier (3660m). The whole route can be done teahouse style, as basic government lodges dot the trail. Camping equipment and sleeping bags are highly recommended. Near the glacier itself, you can stay with Swami Dharmanand or Babaji, whose NGO, Himalayan Villages Education And Development Program (facebook.com/HimalayanVillagesEducationAndDevelopmentProgram/), pays the salaries of teachers at local schools threatened with closure.

Guides and porters are easily arranged in Song, connected to Bageshwar by jeeps (1hr 30min) and buses (2hr). The Pindari Glacier has also caught the attention of mountain-bikers: two-wheel tours are run by Mike McLean (mountainbikekerala.com) in April and October.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS AND JEEP BAIJNATH REGULAR BUSES AND JEEPS LINK BAIJNATH WITH BAGESHWAR (1HR), KAUSANI (30MIN) AND GWALDAM (1HR 30MIN); JEEPS AND BUSES CONGREGATE 500M SOUTH OF THE TEMPLES, ACROSS THE RIVER.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING KMVN TOURIST REST HOUSE 200M NORTH OF THE TEMPLES, OFF THE MAIN ROAD

TO THE LEFT, www.KMVN.IN. A MODERN HOTEL IN A QUIET SETTING WITH LARGE ROOMS WITH HOT WATER, AS WELL AS TWO SEPARATE COTTAGES, A FOUR-BEDDED DORM, RESTAURANT AND GARDEN AREA WITH GOOD VIEWS OF TRISUL. RATES ALMOST DOUBLE IN PEAK SEASON. NO WI-FI. ₹

Bageshwar

Nestled 74km north of Almora, BAGESHWAR is one of Kumaon's most important pilgrimage towns, spread along the lush Gomti River valley. Pilgrims flock to its huddle of ancient temples, highlighted by the fifteenth-century Bagnath Temple, built by the Chandras, in the centre of town. Most foreign travellers use the town as a base for the Pindari Glacier trek; Bageshwar's market is a great place to stock up on supplies.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS AND JEEP BAGESHWAR
THE BUS AND JEEP STANDS ARE IN THE WEST OF TOWN, WITHIN A SHORT WALK OF THE TOWN CENTRE; REGULAR BUSES CONNECT BAIJNATH (1HR), KAUSANI (1HR 30MIN), ALMORA (3HR), BHOWALI (6HR), HALDWANI (7HR 30MIN) AND SONG (2HR) FOR THE PINDARI GLACIER TREK.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING KMVN TOURIST RESTHOUSE
TEHSIL RD, 500M SOUTH OF THE BUS STATION ACROSS A BRIDGE, www.KMVN.IN. THE BASIC ROOMS ARE PASSABLE, WITH LARGE BATHROOMS AND GEYSERS, BUT IT'S WORTH PAYING EXTRA FOR THE DELUXE ROOMS, WHICH ARE CARPETED AND COME WITH TV. THE ATTACHED RESTAURANT SERVES STANDARD HOT MEALS. STAFF CAN GET YOU SORTED FOR THE PINDARI TREK, AS WELL AS OTHER REGIONAL EXCURSIONS. NO WI-FI. ₹

< Back to Uttarakhand

Shutterstock
TIGER AT KANHA NATIONAL PARK

Madhya Pradesh and Chhattisgarh

Bhopal

Around Bhopal

Pachmarhi

Gwalior

Datia

Orchha

Khajuraho

Panna National Park

Jabalpur and around

Kanha National Park

Bandhavgarh National Park

Pench Tiger Reserve

Indore

Mandu

Ujjain

Maheshwar

Omkareshwar

Chhattisgarh

Madhya Pradesh and Chhattisgarh
Hot, dusty Madhya Pradesh is a vast landlocked expanse of scrub-covered hills, sun-parched plains and one third of India's forests. Stretching from beyond the headwaters of the mighty Narmada River to the fringes of the Western Ghats, it's a transitional zone between the Gangetic lowlands in the north and the high, dry Deccan plateau to the south. Despite its diverse array of exceptional attractions, ranging from ancient temples and hilltop forts to some of India's best tiger reserves, Madhya Pradesh receives only a fraction of the tourist traffic that pours between Delhi, Agra, Varanasi and the south. For those who make the effort, this gem of a state is both culturally rewarding and largely hassle-free. Meanwhile, the neighbouring state of Chhattisgarh is even further off the beaten trail but is now slowly opening up to tourism.

In the centre of Madhya Pradesh, the state capital Bhopal, though synonymous with industrial disaster, has a vibrant Muslim heritage and some interesting museums. Nearby is Sanchi, one of India's most significant Buddhist sites. The hill station of Pachmarhi, meanwhile, has echoes of the Raj, numerous hiking routes and the little-visited Satpura National Park. In the north, the city of Gwalior has a stunning hilltop fort and is within striking distance of Datia's Rajput palace, the Scindia family's mausoleums at Orchha and the atmospheric ruined capital of the Bundella rajas. Further east is the state's biggest attraction, the cluster of magnificent sandstone temples at Khajuraho, renowned for their intricate erotic carvings.

Western Madhya Pradesh is home to Indore, a modern city of industry. Though of little interest in itself, it's a good base for exploring Mandu, the romantic former capital of the Malwa sultans, the Hindu pilgrimage centres of Omkareshwar and Maheshwar, and the holy city of Ujjain, one of the sites of the Kumbh Mela .

Nondescript Jabalpur is the biggest city in eastern Madhya Pradesh, a region that has few historic sites but does boast the Kanha, Bandhavgarh and Pench reserves, among the last strongholds for many endangered species, most notably the tiger. Alongside Orchha and Khajuraho, these parks are the only places in Madhya Pradesh or Chhattisgarh you're likely to meet more than a handful of foreign tourists.

In November 2000, sixteen districts seceded from eastern Madhya Pradesh to form the state of Chhattisgarh. Violent Naxalite (Maoist rebel groups) activity in the region, arising from the exploitation of the area's rich mineral resources (and of the tribal peoples who live on the land) has meant the state has until recently attracted a mere trickle of foreign visitors, but the ever diminishing violence means this may soon change; the Chhattisgarh Tourism Board runs a string of well-located resorts and hotels, and independent hotels and tour operators are springing up in the most popular destinations. The state is particularly fascinating for its many tribal groups, particularly in the Bastar region, which also boasts beautiful landscapes. However, before travelling anywhere south of the capital, Raipur, you must obtain up-to-date information about the state of security around your intended destination – and travel with a guide if you want to head into the countryside. Violent conflict between Naxalite guerrillas and security forces and state-sponsored right-wing militias, although on the wane, continues to occasionally erupt in remote southern parts of the state.

BEST TIME TO VISIT

The best time to visit both states is during the relatively cool winter (Oct–March), though during the coldest months (Dec–Feb) it gets a bit chilly at night and in the early morning, and you may need a sweater or light jacket, especially in the upland areas. From April to June, daytime temperatures frequently exceed 40°C, but if you can stand the heat, this is the best time to catch glimpses of tigers in the national parks. The increasingly meagre rains finally sweep in from the southeast in late June or early July until September making the roads even more difficult than usual, though it's a good opportunity to see the waterfalls in the Bastar region of Chhattisgarh at their impressive full flow.

Shutterstock
JAMA MASJID MOSQUE, MANDU

Highlights

- ① Sanchi India's finest Buddhist monument, Sanchi is a carefully restored stupa complex with intricately carved gateways.
- ② Pachmarhi Central India's only hill station, where you can trek to the top of a sacred Shaivite peak, hunt out prehistoric rock art or simply relax in the refreshingly cool air.
- ③ Orchha Madhya Pradesh at its most exotic, Orchha boasts crumbling riverside tombs and ornate Rajput palaces amid lush, tranquil countryside.
- ④ Khajuraho These renowned temples are swathed in thought-provoking erotic sculpture. Lost for centuries in thick jungle, they have since been beautifully restored.
- ⑤ Kanha National Park The most famous of Madhya Pradesh's national parks, Kanha is archetypal Kipling country and teems with wildlife, most notably majestic tigers.
- ⑥ Mandu A medieval fort on a plateau where the emperor got down to serious pleasure-seeking in his vast harem, theatre, steam baths and pavilions.

HIGHLIGHTS ARE MARKED ON THE MAP

Brief history

Any exploration of central India will be illuminated if you have a grasp of its long and turbulent history. Most of the marauding armies that have swept across the Subcontinent over the last two millennia passed through this corridor, leaving in their wake a bumper crop of monuments. The very first traces of settlement in Madhya Pradesh are the 10,000-year-old paintings on the lonely hilltop of Bhimbetka, near Bhopal. Aboriginal rock art was still being created here during the Mauryan emperor Ashoka's evangelical dissemination of Buddhism, in the second century BC. Nearby Sanchi is this era's most impressive relic. By the end of the first millennium AD, central India was divided into several kingdoms. The Paramaras, whose ruler Raja Bhoj founded Bhopal, controlled the southern and central area, known as Malwa, while the Chandellas, responsible for some of the Subcontinent's most exquisite temples – most notably at Khajuraho – held sway in the north.

FESTIVALS IN MADHYA PRADESH

While Madhya Pradesh has one of the Kumbh Mela sites at Ujjain, hosting it again till 2028. However, there are a couple of major arts festivals.

Chauragarh pilgrimage (Shivratri Mela; Feb/March). Tens of thousands of pilgrims and sadhus make the 23km climb up Chauragarh Mountain in Pachmarhi to see the all-powerful lingam. .

Khajuraho Festival of Dance (Feb; www.khajurahodancefestival.com). One of India's premier dance events, this free festival features traditional and classical dance from all over India. .

Tansen Samaroh Festival (Nov/Dec; www.tansensamaroh.com). A major four-day festival of Indian classical music to commemorate the life of the great sixteenth-century composer and musician Mian Tansen, held next to his tomb in Behat village, Gwalior.

Muslim influence started to grow in the thirteenth century, and by the mid-sixteenth century the whole region was under Mughal rule, which left its mark on the architecture and culture of Mandu, Gwalior and Bhopal, in particular. The Marathas briefly took control before the arrival of the British in the seventeenth century. Under the British, the middle of India was known as the “Central Provinces”, and administered jointly from Nagpur (now in Maharashtra), and the summer capital Pachmarhi.

Madhya Pradesh, or MP, only came into being after Independence, when the Central Provinces were amalgamated with a number of smaller princedoms. Since then, the state, more than ninety percent Hindu and with a substantial rural and tribal population, has remained far more stable than neighbouring Uttar Pradesh and Bihar. Major civil unrest between Hindus and Muslims was virtually unheard of until the Bhopal riots of 1992–93, sparked off by events in Ayodhya. Now Hindu–Muslim relations in MP are relatively cordial again, the state has turned to focus on the latest enemy – recurring drought across the poverty-stricken plains and the social and environmental consequences of the damming of the Narmada River. The state remains one of India's poorest, despite flourishing automotive, cement and soybean industries, and the state government sees tourism as one way of boosting Madhya Pradesh's economic prospects. The tourist board is always coming up with plans to make the state more accessible, including an intrastate air service (see below).

GETTING AROUND BY BUS GETTING AROUND MADHYA PRADESH WITHOUT YOUR OWN VEHICLE NORMALLY INVOLVES A LOT OF BONE-SHAKING AND EXCRUCIATINGLY SLOW BUS JOURNEYS. THE STATE TOURIST AUTHORITY, MP TOURISM, USED TO RUN SEVERAL VERY USEFUL A/C COACHES BETWEEN POPULAR TOURIST DESTINATIONS, BUT THESE CURRENTLY ONLY RUN BETWEEN BHOPAL AND INDORE (7 DAILY) – CHECK www.mpstdc.com FOR THE LATEST SITUATION.

By train For longer distances, trains are the best bet. The Central Railway, the main line between Mumbai and Kolkata, scythes straight through the middle of the state, forking at Itarsi Junction. One branch veers north towards Bhopal, Jhansi, Gwalior and Agra, while the other continues northeast to Varanasi and eastern India via Jabalpur. In the far west, at Indore and the holy city of Ujjain, you can pick up the Western Railway, which heads up through eastern Rajasthan to Bharatpur and Delhi.

By taxi By far the most convenient way to travel around MP is by car. MP Tourism can arrange this from one of their offices – per day rates, plus service tax, road tolls, permits and an overnight charge for the driver if applicable.

By plane In an attempt to make the state more accessible, MP Tourism is introducing an intrastate air service linking local airports and using small prop airplanes; check www.mptourism.com for details.

Bhopal

With around two million inhabitants, BHOPAL, Madhya Pradesh's capital, sprawls out from the eastern shores of a huge artificial lake, its packed old city surrounded by modern concrete suburbs and green hills. The nineteenth-century mosques emphasize its enduring Muslim legacy, while the hectic bazaars of the walled old city are worth a visit. Elsewhere, a couple of good archeological museums house hoards of ancient sculpture and the lakeside Bharat Bhavan ranks among India's premier centres for performing and visual arts. The Museum of Man on the city's outskirts is the country's most comprehensive exhibition of adivasi houses, culture and technology; the nearby Tribal Museum focuses on MP's adivasi groups.

Despite all this, Bhopal will always be best known for the 1984 gas disaster, which continues to cast a long shadow over the city and its people.

Bhopal has two separate centres. Spread over the hills to the south of the lakes, the partially pedestrianized New Market area is a mix of shopping arcades, internet cafés, ice cream parlours, cinemas and office blocks. Once you've squeezed through the strip of land that divides the Upper and (smaller) Lower lakes, sweeping avenues, civic buildings and gardens give way to the more heavily congested old city. This area includes the Jama Masjid and the bazaar, centred on Chowk, a dense grid of streets between the Moti Masjid and Hamidia Road. The art galleries and museums are on side roads off New Market, or along the hilly southern edge of the Upper Lake.

Brief history Bhopal's name is said to derive from the eleventh-century Raja Bhoj, who was instructed by his court gurus to atone for the murder of his mother by linking up the nine rivers flowing through his kingdom. A dam, or pal, was built across one of them, and the ruler established a new capital around the two resultant lakes – Bhojapal. By the end of the seventeenth century, Dost Mohammed Khan, an erstwhile general of Aurangzeb, had occupied the now deserted site to carve out his own kingdom from the chaos left in the wake of the Mughal Empire. The Muslim dynasty he established became one of central India's leading royal families. Under the Raj, its members were among the select few to merit the accolade of a nineteen-gun salute from the British. In the nineteenth century, Bhopal was presided over largely by female rulers, who revamped the city with noble civic works, including the three sandstone mosques that still dominate the skyline.

Today, Bhopal carries the burden of the appalling Union Carbide factory gas disaster of 1984, with residents quick to remind you of their continuing legal and medical plight. In 1992, Hindu-Muslim rioting broke out following the destruction of the Babri Masjid in Ayodhya. However, the many tales of Hindus sheltering their Muslim friends from the mobs at this time and vice versa demonstrate the long tradition of religious tolerance in the city. In recent years, Bhopal – and Madhya Pradesh in general – has remained true to its lenient nature, with little of the political and religious intolerance that afflicts many other north Indian states.

The bazaar

Chowk • Tues–Sun dawn–dusk

Bhopal's lively bazaar provides a welcome splash of colour after the dismal, traffic-filled streets around the railway station. Famous for zarda, purdah, garda and namarda (tobacco, veils, dust and eunuchs), it retains a strong Muslim ambience, with overhanging balconies intricately carved with Islamic geometric designs. Each of the narrow streets radiating from the central square specializes in a different type of merchandise, including Chanderi silk saris, bass drums and clarinets, tussar silk, silver jewellery and Bhopal's famous beaded purses. At the heart of the market loom the rich red-sandstone walls and stumpy minarets of the Jama Masjid, built in 1837 by Kudsia Begum.

Imam Square

Southwest of Chowk

Imam Square was once the epicentre of royal Bhopal. Nowadays, it's little more than a glorified traffic island, only worth stopping at to admire the Moti Masjid on its eastern edge. The “Pearl Mosque”, erected in 1860 by Sikander Begum, Kudsia's daughter, is a diminutive and much less imposing version of Shah Jahan's Jama Masjid in Old Delhi, notable more for its slender, gold-topped minarets and sandstone cupolas than its size.

Lining the opposite, northern side of the square near the ceremonial archway is a more eccentric nineteenth-century pile. A fusion of Italian, Gothic and Islamic influences, the Shaukat Mahal was originally designed by a French architect. Unfortunately, both it and the elegant Sadar Manzil (“Hall of Public Audience”) just west on Sultania Rd are now government offices and closed to visitors.

Darul Uloom Tajul Masajid A 5min walk west of Imam Square

• Daily except Fri dawn–dusk; closed during Id-ul-Fitr • Free
With its matching pair of colossal pink minarets soaring high above the city skyline, the Darul Uloom Tajul Masajid lives up to the epithet of “mother of all mosques”, as denoted by the extra “a” in its name. Whether Bhopal's most impressive monument also deserves to be dubbed the biggest in India, as locals claim, is less certain. Work on the building commenced under Sultan Jehan Begum (1868–1901), the eighth ruler of Bhopal. After the death of her domineering husband, the widow queen embarked on a spending spree that left the city with a postal system, new schools and a railway, but which all but impoverished the state – and the Tajul Masajid was never actually completed.

Birla Mandir Museum East of the Lower Lake • Tues–Sun
10.30am–8pm • Charge • gpbaasri.org

The Birla Mandir Museum collection includes some of the finest stone sculpture in Madhya Pradesh, informatively displayed with explanatory panels in English in the main galleries. The museum is in a detached mansion beside Birla Mandir, the garish modern Hindu Lakshmi Narayan temple that stands high on Arera Hill overlooking the Lower Lake. Aside from the museum itself, the temple gardens, which overlook the city, are a fine place to watch the sunset.

The exhibition is divided between Vishnu, the mother goddesses and Shiva. The Vishnu section contains some interesting representations of the god's diverse and frequently bizarre reincarnations, while in the Devi gallery next door, a cadaverous Chamunda (the goddess Durga in her most terrifying aspect) stands incongruously amid a row of voluptuous maidens and fertility figures. The Shiva room, by contrast, is altogether more subdued. Finally, have a look at the replicas of the 3500-year-old Harappan artefacts encased under the stairs.

Bharat Bhavan Arts Centre Lake View Rd, on the eastern tip of the Upper Lake • Tues–Sun: Feb–Oct 2–8pm; Nov–Jan 1–7pm • Charge • www.bharatbhawan.org

The Bharat Bhavan Arts Centre is provincial India's pre-eminent arts centre. Inside Goan architect Charles Correa's campus of concrete domes and dour brickwork are temporary exhibitions as well as a large split-level permanent collection of modern Indian painting and sculpture. Rather incongruously placed amid the latter, look out for an eighteenth-century gilt-framed landscape by the Daniells – the uncle-nephew duo employed as a part of the Company school of painting during the Raj. Bharat Bhavan has a gallery devoted exclusively to adivasi art, in search of which talent scouts spent months roaming remote regions. Among their more famous discoveries was the Gond painter Jangarh Singh Shyam. Many of his works are on display here, along with a colourful assemblage of masks, terracotta, woodcarvings and ritual paraphernalia.

Museum of Man Just off Shamla Hills Rd, south of the Upper Lake • Tues–Sun: March–Aug 11am–6.30pm; Sept–Feb 10am–5.30pm • Charge, vehicle charge, video charge • www.igrms.gov.in/en • A round-trip by auto-rickshaw from the city centre costs around ₹ including waiting time The story of India's indigenous minorities – the adivasi, literally “original inhabitants” – is all too familiar. Dispossessed of their land by large-scale development projects or exploitative moneylenders, the “tribals” have seen a gradual erosion of their traditional culture. The Museum of Man, or the Rashtriya Manav Sangrahalaya, is an enlightened attempt to redress the balance.

Overlooking New Market on one side and the majestic sweep of Upper Lake on the other, the 200-acre hilltop site includes a reconstructed Keralan coastal village and a winding trail where each tribal group from the state has contributed an interpretation of its own creation myth. A large exhibition hall draws on all the daily and ritual elements in the adivasi lifestyle, and dotted among the forest scrub are botanical trails, a research centre and a permanent open-air display of traditional adivasi buildings.

Tribal Museum Shamla Hills • Daily except Mon: Nov–Jan noon–7pm, rest of year noon–8pm • Charge •
mptribalmuseum.com/english/

THE BHOPAL GAS TRAGEDY AT 12.05AM ON DECEMBER 3,1984, A LETHAL CLOUD OF METHYL ISOCYANATE (MIC), A TOXIC CHEMICAL USED IN THE MANUFACTURE OF PESTICIDES, EXPLODED AT THE HUGE, US-OWNED UNION CARBIDE PLANT ON THE NORTHERN EDGE OF BHOPAL.

Highly reactive, MIC must be kept under constant pressure at a temperature of 0°C – yet cost-conscious officials had reduced the pressure to save some US$70 a day. When water entered tank E-610 through badly maintained and leaking valves to contaminate the MIC, a massive reaction was triggered. Wind dispersed the gas throughout the densely populated residential districts and slums. There was neither a warning siren nor adequate emergency procedures in place, leaving the thick cloud of gas to blind and suffocate its victims. The leak killed 1600 instantly (according to official figures) and between 7000 and 10,000 in the aftermath, but the figure now totals well over 25,000 in the years since the incident. More than 500,000 people were exposed to the gas, of whom about one fifth have been left with chronic and incurable health problems, often passed on to children born in years following the tragedy. The water in the community pumps of the affected residential areas remains contaminated with dangerous toxic chemicals that seeped out from the now-deserted factory. Campaigners say the factory still contains thousands of tonnes of toxic waste.

EVADING RESPONSIBILITY THOUGH THE INCIDENCE OF TB, CANCERS, INFERTILITY AND CATARACTS IN THE AFFECTED AREA REMAINS WAY ABOVE THE NATIONAL AVERAGE, THE FACTORY OFFICIALS INITIALLY SAID THE EFFECT OF MIC WAS AKIN TO THAT OF TEAR GAS, CAUSING ONLY TEMPORARY HEALTH PROBLEMS. THEY ACCEPTED MORAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE ACCIDENT, BUT BLAMED THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT FOR INADEQUATE SAFETY STANDARDS WHEN IT CAME TO THE ISSUE OF COMPENSATION. ONLY IN 1989 DID UNION CARBIDE AGREE TO PAY AN AVERAGE OF ₹25,000 TO EACH ADULT VICTIM – A PALTRY SUM THAT DIDN'T EVEN COVER LOANS FOR THE MEDICAL BILLS IN THE FIRST FIVE YEARS, LET ALONE COMPENSATE FOR THE LOSS OF LIFE AND LIVELIHOODS AND OTHER CONSEQUENCES OF THE DISASTER. IN 2001, THE BHOPAL MEMORIAL HOSPITAL AND RESEARCH CENTRE OPENED TO TREAT PATIENTS.

Despite both US and Indian former bosses being charged with serious offences – including manslaughter – the government and factory authorities had been keen to sweep the whole episode under the carpet. It took until June 2010 for some measure of justice to be dispensed, when a Bhopal court gave seven former factory employees two-year prison sentences for causing “death by negligence”. The court also fined the former Indian unit of Union Carbide ₹500,000. NGOs and local campaigners dismissed the ruling as completely inadequate.

Warren Anderson, the former CEO of Union Carbide in the US, never faced justice; Anderson fled India to the US after the Indian court granted him bail and, although in 2002 a Bhopal court directed India’s Central Bureau of Investigation to pursue his extradition, the US authorities refused to extradite him, and he died in a nursing home in Florida in 2014.

After much lobbying, the government in 2005 launched a legal case to recoup money from Dow Chemical, which bought Union Carbide in 2001 but denies ongoing liability. To date, little progress has been made but people in Bhopal continue to stage regular protests and rallies.

FIND OUT MORE IF YOU'RE INTERESTED IN LEARNING MORE ABOUT THE DISASTER OR VOLUNTEERING YOUR SERVICES, CONTACT THE SAMBHAVNA TRUST AT BAFNA COLONY, BERASIA RD, BHOPAL (www.BHOPAL.ORG). FIVE PAST MIDNIGHT IN BHOPAL BY DOMINIQUE LAPIERRE AND JAVIER MORO, AND THE BOOKER PRIZE-NOMINATED ANIMAL'S PEOPLE BY INDRA SINHA ARE BOTH HIGHLY RECOMMENDED FURTHER READING, WHILE THE FILM BHOPAL: A PRAYER FOR RAIN, STARRING MARTIN SHEEN AS ANDERSON, RETOLD THE STORY TO MARK THE THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY IN 2014.

Best visited in conjunction with the nearby Museum of Man, the Tribal Museum is dedicated to the millions of adivasi people who live in Madhya Pradesh. It houses well-curated displays, traditional crafts, artworks and replica homes of the seven main tribal groups in the state. The museum also stages regular music and cultural performances.

Van Vihar Zoological Park Lake View Rd, south of the Upper Lake • Daily except Tues 6.30am–6pm (16 Apr–July 6am–7pm) • Charge • www.vanviharnationalpark.org • For transport around the park, you can get an auto-rickshaw and you will need to pay the entrance fee for the driver A trip to the Van Vihar Zoological Park ties in nicely with a visit to the Museum of Man next door – keep the same auto-rickshaw for the whole trip. The stars of the park are a couple of regal white tigers, but there are also gharial, leopards, Himalayan bears and lions.

You can get a longer look at the 207 species of birds by taking a boat from the jetty, 500m northeast of the park gate.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE BHOPAL'S BHOPAL RAJA BHOJ AIRPORT IS 12KM NORTH OF THE CITY: A TAXI TO/FROM THE CITY CENTRE COSTS AROUND ₹, AN AUTO-RICKSHAW ROUGHLY HALF THAT. AIR INDIA (🌐 AIRLINESOFFICE.COM/TICKET_OFFICE/AIR_INDIA/BHOPAL.HTM) HAS AN OFFICE IN AIRLINES HOUSE ON BHADBHADA RD, TT NAGAR.

Destinations Delhi (4 daily; 1hr 25min); Mumbai (4 daily; 1hr 35min).

By train The main railway station, Bhopal Junction, is close to the centre: to reach the hotel district, leave by the exit on platforms 4 or 5 and head to the busy corner of Hamidia Rd where there's a prepaid taxi and auto-rickshaw booth. The quickest and most convenient train to Delhi is the Shatabdi Express (daily 3.15pm; 8hr 15min), which travels via Jhansi (for Orchha/Khajuraho), Gwalior and Agra. One of the most convenient trains to Mumbai is the Punjab Mail (daily 4.55pm; 14hr 40min).

Destinations Agra (every 30min–1hr; 6–10hr); Delhi (every 30min–1hr; 8hr 15min–13hr 40min); Gwalior (every 30min–1hr; 4hr 20min–7hr 35min); Indore (6 daily; 4hr 5min–6hr 25min); Jabalpur (8 daily; 5hr 15min–12hr 20min); Jhansi (every 30min–1hr; 3hr 16min–6hr); Mumbai (roughly hourly; 12hr–16hr 45min); Varanasi (1–2 daily; 16hr 50min).

By bus The main state bus stand is the Inter-state Bus Terminal (ISBT), located just south of the airport, and 11km east of the railway station (around ₹ by auto-rickshaw) on the Bairagarh Rd, is used by almost all bus services within and outside the state. However, in the mornings you can also use the more convenient Hamidia Rd bus stand which has services to/from Indore, Pachmarhi and Sanchi, and is a 10min walk southwest of the railway station.

Destinations Indore (every 30min; 4–5hr); Pachmarhi (every 2hr; 6hr 30min–7hr 30min); Sanchi (every 30min; 1hr 30min–2hr).

By MP Tourism bus MP Tourism currently runs an a/c coach service to Indore (7 daily; 4hr); tickets should be booked in advance, either online (🌐 mpstdc.com) or at Palash Residency, about 200m northeast of the GPO is North TT Nagar, from where the buses arrive and depart.

GETTING AROUND AND INFORMATION BY AUTO-RICKSHAW MOST OF BHOPAL'S PLACES OF INTEREST ARE SO FAR APART THAT THE BEST WAY OF GETTING AROUND IS BY AUTO- RICKSHAW, AT ABOUT ₹₹/DAY.

By taxi Taxis can be organized through your hotel, or MP Tourism at around ₹/km (depending on vehicle; minimum 250km) either at one of their offices or by phoning their transport department direct on ☎0755 277 4340.

Tourist information The MP Tourism head office (Mon–Sat 10am–6pm; 🌐 mpstdc.com) is inconveniently located in Paryatan Bhawan on Bhadbhada Rd, 2km south of New Market. There are also smaller branches at the railway station (platform 1 exit; daily 10am–5pm; ☎0755 274 6827) and at the airport (☎07552 646667; opens to meet incoming flights). You can book an MP Tourism tour, hotel or a/c bus to Indore at the booth (daily 8am–8pm; ☎0755 329 5040) at Palash Residency (see above).

Tours MP Tourism runs a city bus tour (Tues–Sun 11.30am–5pm; ₹), which leaves from Palash Residency, and speed-boat trips (around ₹/10–15min) on the Upper Lake.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

If you're not bothered by traffic noise and fumes, Hamidia Rd, Bhopal's busy main thoroughfare, is the most convenient place to stay. Shoestring options are thin on the ground and even the dingiest dives will try to slap extra taxes and "service charges", though if you object strongly they may waive them. Most of Bhopal's top hotels are close to Upper Lake in the Shamla Hills area, a 15min ride from the railway station. At the time of writing in 2019, MP Tourism was in the process of transforming Bhopal's evocative Taj Mahal building into a "heritage hotel", which should be a memorable place to stay in the future.

India New Market 🌐 indiancoffeehousejabalpur.com. Smoothly run by the Indian Coffee House cooperative (with one of its decent restaurants on site), this hotel has clean and comfortable mid-range a/c rooms with attached bathrooms, TVs and phones, though no wi-fi. It's very popular, so book in advance. ₹₹₹

★Ivy Suites A. Nadir Colony, Shamla H ☎ivyysuites.in/. Tucked away in the city's most exclusive area, this wonderfully relaxed guesthouse has ten spacious rooms, each thoughtfully furnished with paintings, books and plants; those upstairs have ivy-filled balconies overlooking the Upper Lake. Rates include breakfast and they also serve lunch and dinner. ₹₹₹

Noor-Us-Sabah Palace Grounds, VIP Rd ☎noorussabahpalace.com. The “Light of Dawn” is an impeccably renovated 1920s nawab's palace, perched on a hill overlooking the Upper Lake. Opulent rooms come with elegant mirrors, regal red furniture and private balconies, and there's a pool, spa, and a fine restaurant. ₹₹₹₹

Rama International 2 Hamidia Rd ☎facebook.com/pages/Hotel-Rama-International-Hamidia-Road/205355156624734. Set back from the main road, and very popular with Indian tourists, this is a rambling, relatively peaceful hotel with clean and simple rooms (all attached, with fans; a/c extra). ₹

Ranjeet 3 Hamidia Rd ☎ranjeethotels.com. The rooms here are bright and modern, with all mod cons and a/c, and rates include breakfast served in the reasonable restaurant downstairs. Rooms at the front can be very noisy, so ask for one at the back. 24hr checkout. ₹₹

Sonali Regency Just off Hamidia Rd ☎hotelsonali.kstar.in. Quieter than the other hotels in the area, and although the cheapest rooms are boxy and the beds a bit hard, they all boast TVs and clean private bathrooms – a few hundred rupees more will get you one with a/c and a comfy mattress. Nice touches like free newspapers, 24hr checkout and good service give Sonali Regency the edge over its similarly priced competitors nearby. ₹₹

EATING

MAP

Decent restaurants are relatively thin on the ground. The larger hotels serve uniform multicuisine menus, while the canteens opposite the bus stand do thalis and subzi, rice and dhal for next to nothing. For breakfast, try the local favourites, poha (a steamed rice cake) and katchori (a fried, lentil-stuffed snack).

Café Coffee Day Lake View Rd ☎cafecoffeeday.com. This outpost of the Indian chain has a great location overlooking the Upper Lake. The coffee is good, too, and they also offer sandwiches, pastries and very chocolatey chocolate goodies. Daily 11am–9pm. ₹

Filfora Opposite Koefiza Hospital, 18 Bada Colony 🌐 facebook.com/FilforaMpNagarBhopal/about. Casual dining for the middle classes, this place serves up very good veg, and especially non-veg, Mughlai, Bhopali and south Indian dishes (with not-so-good Continental and Chinese options) in a plain but clean setting. Highly rated are the mutton shami and seekh kebabs, or for veggies the paneer butter masala. Daily 11am–11pm. ₹

Indian Coffee House India hotel, New Market 🌐 indiancoffeehousejabalpur.com. Aside from a couple of vintage coffee posters, the dining hall is nondescript, but the filter coffee, south Indian breakfast options, thalis and service from the white-suited waiters are all excellent. Daily 11–10.30pm. ₹

Manohar Dairy & Restaurant Hamidia Rd 🌐 manohardairy.com. Bustling fast-food-style veg joint where yellow-shirted waiters dish up a steady stream of katchoris, veggie burgers, pizzas and ice cream sundaes as well as thalis. There's also an attached sweet shop. South Indian snacks. Daily 8am–11pm. ₹

New Inn 28 Bhadbhada Rd, New Market 🌐 new-inn-restaurant-coffee-house.business.site. Behind the glass frontage, incongruously decorated with a dragon motif, is a garish mix of yellow and orange walls and brown leather seats. Thankfully the keenly priced food – particularly the kebabs. Chinese chilli chicken and the south Indian breakfast options – is far better judged. Daily 8am–11pm. ₹

Wind and Waves Lake View Rd 🌐 wwbhopal.wixsite.com/wwbhopal. While the standard MP Tourism menu (Indian, Chinese and some Continental dishes; mains) holds few surprises, the setting – conveniently close to the museums and boat club, and overlooking the Upper Lake – is appealing, and there's a bar upstairs. Daily 10.30am–10.30pm. ₹

SHOPPING

MAP

Head to Chowk (bazaar Mon–Sat) for silk and silver. The New Market area has some bigger stores.

Mrignayani GTB Shopping Complex, Bhadbhada Rd, New Market 🌐 mrignayani.com. The state-run, fixed-price Mrignayani has everything from batiks to bedspreads; there's also a branch on Hamidia Rd. Tues–Sun 11am–2.30pm & 3.30–8pm.

Tribes VIP Rd 📞tribesindia.com. Close to Moti Masjid, this national government-run store sells a selection of adivasi goods at fixed prices. As well as this branch, there's a smaller outlet in the same building as Mrignayani (above). Tues–Sun 11am–7pm.

Variety Book House Bhadbhada Rd, New Market 📞0755 255 4057. Bhopal's best collection of English-language, fiction, non-fiction and magazines. Daily 10am–9.30pm.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE ONLY THE MAIN BANKS IN NEW MARKET AND THE TOP HOTELS OFFER FOREIGN EXCHANGE. ATMS ARE COMMON: THE STATE BANK OF INDIA IS BY THE GPO.

Hospital The central public Hamidia Hospital (📞gmcbhopal.net/en/) is on Sultania Rd, between Imam Square and the Darul Uloom Tajul Masajid; for any non-emergency treatments you're better off at AIIMS teaching hospital (📞aiimsbhopal.edu.in), on AIIMS Rd in Saget Nagar, which has a good reputation.

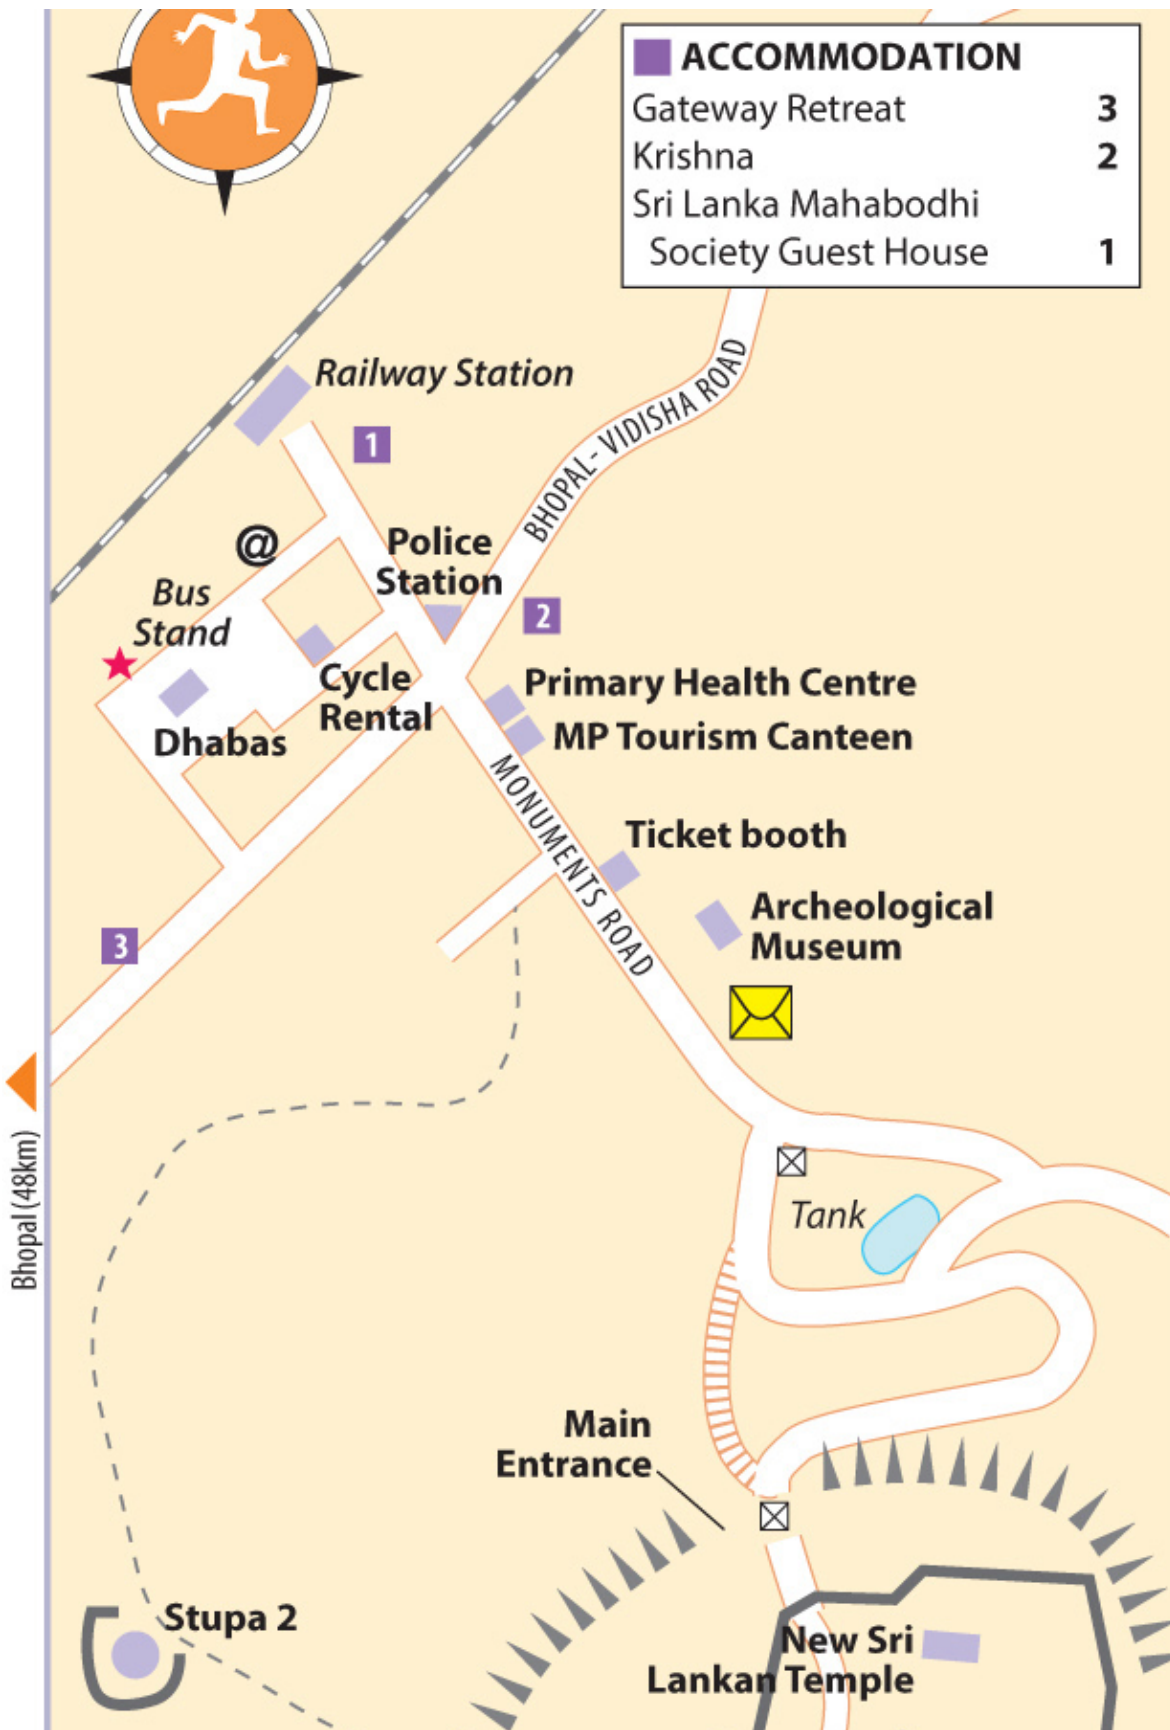

Post office The main GPO is just off Bhadbhada Rd, in New Market; there's also a GPO on Sultania Rd near the Darul Uloom Tajul Masajid.

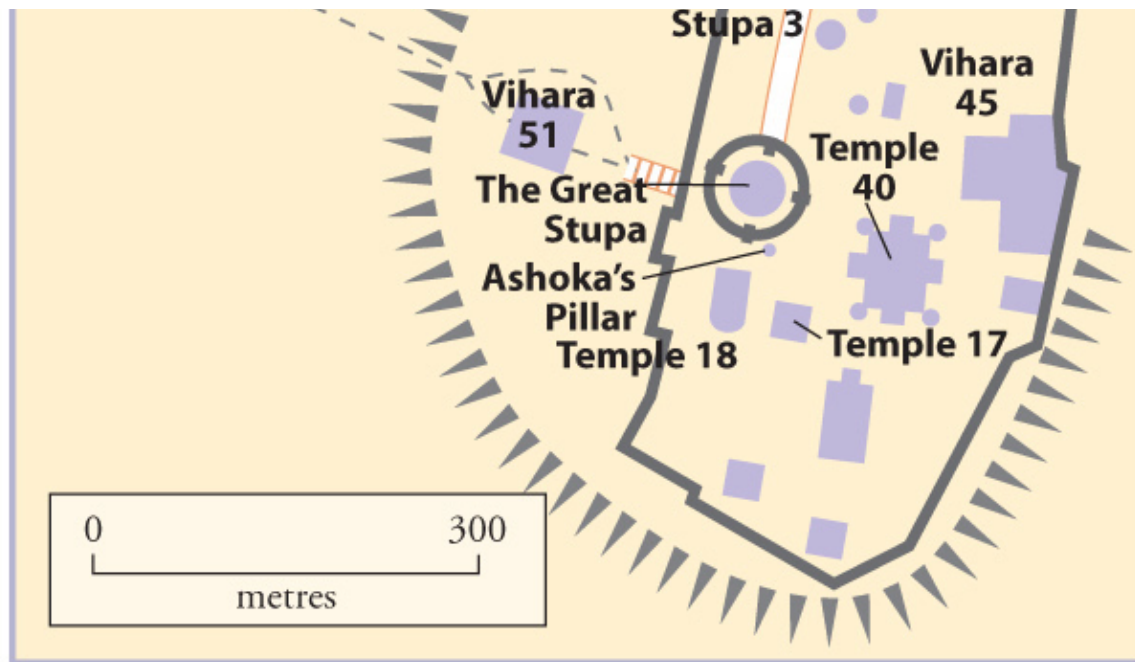

Around Bhopal A wealth of impressive ancient monuments lie within a couple of hours of Bhopal. To the northeast, the third-century-BC stupas at Sanchi are an easy day-trip. Its peaceful setting also makes an ideal base for visits to more stupas at Satdhara or Udaigiri's rock-cut caves and the nearby Column of Heliodorus at Besnagar. South towards Hoshangabad and the Narmada Valley, the prehistoric cave paintings at Bhimbetka can be visited in a day by bus.

Sanchi

From a distance, the smooth-sided hemispherical object that appears on a hillock overlooking the main train line at Sanchi, 46km northeast of Bhopal, has the surreal air of an upturned satellite dish. In fact, the giant stone mound stands as testimony to a much older means of communing with the cosmos. Quite apart from being India's finest Buddhist monument, the Great Stupa is one of the earliest religious structures in the Subcontinent. It presides over a complex of ruined temples and monasteries that collectively provide a rich and unbroken record of the development of Buddhist art and architecture from the faith's first emergence in central India during the third century BC, until it was eventually squeezed out by the resurgence of Brahmanism during the medieval era.

Brief history Unlike other famous Buddhist centres in eastern India and Nepal, Sanchi has no known connection with Buddha himself. It first became a place of pilgrimage when the Mauryan emperor Ashoka, who married a woman from nearby Besnagar, erected a polished stone pillar and brick-and-mortar stupa here midway through the third century BC. The complex was enlarged by successive dynasties, but after the eclipse of Buddhism, Sanchi lay deserted and overgrown until its rediscovery in 1818 by General Taylor of the Bengal Cavalry. In the following years a swarm of heavy-handed treasure hunters invaded the site, yet the explorer Sir Alexander Cunningham was the only one to find anything more than rubble; in 1851, he unearthed two soapstone relic boxes, containing bone fragments and bearing the names of two of Buddha's most noted followers, Sariputra and Maha-Mogalanasa. Historians equated the discovery with "finding the graves of Saints Peter and Paul". The find transformed Sanchi, for centuries neglected, into a Buddhist place of pilgrimage once again.

STUPAS

The hemispherical mounds known as stupas have been central to Buddhist worship since the sixth century BC, when Buddha himself modelled the first prototype. Asked by one of his disciples for a symbol to help disseminate his teachings after his death, Buddha took his begging bowl, teaching staff and a length of cloth – his only worldly possessions – and arranged them into the form of a stupa, using the cloth as a base, the upturned bowl as the dome and the stick as the projecting finial, or spire.

Originally, stupas were simple burial mounds, but as the religion spread, the basic components multiplied and became imbued with symbolic significance. The main dome, or anda – representing the “divine axis” linking heaven and earth – grew larger, while the wooden railings, or vedikas, surrounding it were replaced by massive stone ones. A raised ambulatory terrace, or medhi, was added to the vertical sides of the drum, along with two flights of stairs and four ceremonial entrances, carefully aligned with the cardinal points. Finally, crowning the tip of the stupa, the single spike evolved into a three-tiered umbrella, or chhatra, standing for the Three Jewels of Buddhism: the Buddha, the Law and the community of monks. The chhatra, usually enclosed within a low square stone railing, or harmika, formed the topmost point of the axis, directly above the reliquary in the heart of the stupa. Ranging from bits of bone wrapped in cloth to fine caskets of precious metals, crystal and carved stone, the reliquaries were the “seeds” and their protective mounds the “egg”. Excavations of the 84,000 stupas scattered around the Subcontinent have shown that the solid interiors were also sometimes built as elaborate mandalas – symbolic patterns that exerted a beneficial influence over the stupa and those who walked around it. The ritual of circumambulation, or pradakshina, which enabled the worshipper to tap into cosmic energy and be transported from the mundane to the divine realms, was always carried out in a clockwise direction from the east, imitating the sun’s passage across the heavens.

By the 1880s, amateur archeologists had left the ruins in a sorry state. Deep gouges gaped from the sides of stupas 1 and 2, a couple of ceremonial gateways had completely collapsed and much of the masonry was plundered by local villagers. Restoration work made little impact until 1912, when the jungle was hacked away, the main stupas and temples rebuilt, lawns and trees planted and a museum erected to house what sculpture had not been shipped off to Delhi or London.

The Great Stupa Daily sunrise-sunset • Main site ticket • stupa.org.au • Charge, car charge Floating serenely above a vast expanse of open plains, Sanchi's ruins have preserved the tranquillity that attracted the original occupants. Most visitors find a couple of hours sufficient to explore the site, though you could easily spend several days poring over the four exquisite gateways, or toranas, surrounding the Great Stupa. Paved walkways and steps lead around the hilltop enclosure, dotted with interpretive panels and shady trees.

Stupa 1, the Great Stupa, stands at the western edge of the plateau and is surrounded by some of the richest and best-preserved ancient sculpture you're likely to see in situ. Fragments of the original construction, a much smaller version built in the third century BC by Ashoka, lie entombed beneath the thick outer shell of lime plaster added a century later. The Shungas were responsible for the raised processional balcony, and the two graceful staircases that curve gently around the sides of the drum from the paved walkway at ground level, as well as the aerial-like chhatra and its square enclosure which crown the top of the mound. Four elaborate gateways were added by the Satavahanas in the first century BC, followed by the four serene meditating Buddhas that greet you as you pass through the main entrances. Carved out of local sandstone, these were installed during the Gupta era, around 450 AD, by which time figurative depictions of Buddha had become acceptable (elsewhere in Sanchi, Buddha is represented by an empty throne, a wheel, a pair of footprints and even a parasol).

As you move gradually closer to the stupa, the extraordinary wealth of sculpture adorning the toranas slips slowly into focus. Every conceivable space on the 8m upright posts and three curving cross-bars teems with delicate figures of humans, demigods and goddesses, birds, beasts and propitious symbols. In between are purely decorative panels and illustrations of heaven intended to inspire worshippers to lead meritorious lives on earth. Start with the torana on the south side, which is the oldest, and, as is the custom at Buddhist monuments, proceed in a clockwise direction around the stupa.

Southern torana Opening directly onto the ceremonial staircase, the southern torana was the Great Stupa's principal entrance, as evidenced by the proximity of the stump of Ashoka's original stone pillar. Over the years, some of the panels with the best sculpture have dropped off the gateway (and are now housed in the site museum), but those that remain on the three crossbeams are still in reasonable condition. A carved frieze on the middle architrave shows Ashoka visiting a stupa in a traditional show of veneration. On the reverse side the scene switches to one of the Buddha's previous incarnations, the Chhaddanta Jataka, where the bodhisattva adopts the guise of an elephant who, in extreme selflessness, helps an ivory hunter saw off his own (six) tusks.

Western torana The western torana collapsed during the nineteenth century, but has been skilfully restored and has some of Sanchi's liveliest sculpture. In the top right panel, a troupe of monkeys scurries across a bridge over the Ganges, made by the bodhisattva, their leader, from his own body to help them escape a gang of soldiers. According to the Mahakapi Jataka (a traditional Buddhist tale), the troops were dispatched by the local king to capture a coveted mango tree from which the monkeys had been feeding. You can also just about make out the final scene, where the repentant monarch gets a stern ticking-off from the bodhisattva under a peepal tree.

One of the most frequently represented episodes from the life of Buddha features on the first two panels of the left-hand post facing the stupa. In the Temptation of Mara, Buddha, who has vowed to remain under the Bodhi tree until he attains enlightenment, heroically ignores the attempts of the evil demon Mara to distract him with violent threats and her seductive daughters.

Northern torana Crowned with a fragmented Wheel of Law and two tridents symbolizing the Buddhist trinity, the northern torana is the most elaborate and best preserved of the four gateways. Scenes crammed onto its two vertical posts include Buddha performing an aerial promenade and a monkey presenting him with a bowl of honey. Straddling the two pillars, a bas-relief on both faces of the lowest crossbeam depicts the Vessantara Jataka (another traditional Buddhist tale), telling of a bodhisattva-prince banished by his father for giving away a magical rain-making elephant. A better view of the inner, south-facing side of the plaque can be had from the balcony of the stupa's raised terrace. Note the little tableau on the far right showing the royal family trudging through the jungle.

Elsewhere around the enclosure Of the dozens of other numbered ruins around the 400m enclosure, only a handful are of more than passing interest. The smaller, plainer but immaculately restored Stupa 3, immediately northeast of Stupa 1, is upstaged by its slightly older cousin in every way but one. In 1851, a pair of priceless reliquaries was discovered deep in the middle of the mound. The caskets were found to contain relics belonging to two of Buddha's closest disciples. In one, fragments of bone were encased with beads made from pearls, crystal, amethyst, lapis lazuli and gypsum, while on the lid, the initial of the saint they are thought to have belonged to, Sariputra, was painted in ink. Previously kept in London's British Museum, both are now in the new Buddhist temple outside the stupa enclosure and are brought out for public view for one day in late November.

Eastern torana Leaning languorously into space from the right capital of the eastern torana is Sanchi's most celebrated piece of sculpture, the sensuous salabhanjika, or wood-nymph. The full-breasted fertility goddess is one of several such figures that once blessed worshippers as they entered the Great Stupa. Most of the others are now in museums in Los Angeles and London.

Panels on the inner face of the pillar below the salabhanjika depict scenes from the life of the Buddha, including his conception when the bodhisattva entered the body of his mother, Maya, in the form of a white elephant. The front face of the middle architrave picks up the tale some years later, when the young Buddha, represented by a riderless horse, makes his great departure from the palace where he grew up to begin the life of a wandering ascetic. The reverse side shows the fully enlightened Buddha, symbolized by an empty throne.

The eastern edge From Stupa 3, pick your way through the clutter of pillars, small stupas and exposed temple floors nearby to the large complex of interconnecting raised terraces at the far eastern edge of the site. The most intact monastery of the bunch, Vihara 45, dates from the ninth and tenth centuries and has the usual layout of cells ranged around a central courtyard. Originally, a colossal, richly decorated sanctuary tower soared high above the complex, but this collapsed, leaving the inner sanctum exposed. The river goddesses Ganga and Yamuna number among the skilfully sculpted figures flanking the entrance to the shrine itself. Inside, Buddha still reigns supreme.

The enclosure's tenth-century eastern boundary wall is the best place from which to enjoy Sanchi's serene views. To the northeast, a huge, sheer-sided rock rises from the midst of Vidisha, near the site of the ancient city that sponsored the monasteries here (traces of the pilgrimage trail between Besnagar and Sanchi can still be seen crossing the hillside below). South from the hill, a wide expanse of well-watered wheatfields stretches off towards the angular sandstone ridges of the Raisen escarpment.

The southern area The southern area of the enclosure harbours some of Sanchi's most interesting temples. Pieces of burnt wood dug from the foundations of Temple 40 prove that the present apsidal-ended chaitya was built on top of an earlier structure contemporaneous with the Mauryan Stupa 1. Temple 17 is a fine example of early Gupta architecture and the precursor of the classical Hindu design developed later in Orissa and Khajuraho.

Before leaving the enclosure, hunt out the stump of Ashoka's Pillar on the right of Stupa 1's southern torana. The Mauryan emperor erected columns like this all over the empire to mark sacred sites and pilgrims' trails. Its finely polished shaft was originally crowned with the magnificent lion capital now housed in the site museum. The inscription etched around its base is in the Brahmi script, recording Ashoka's edicts in Pali, the early Buddhist language and forerunner of Sanskrit.

The western slope A flight of steps beside Stupa 1 leads down the western slope of Sanchi hill to the village, passing two notable monuments. The bottom portions of the thick stone walls of Vihara 51 have been carefully restored to show its floorplan of 22 cells around a paved central courtyard. Further down, the second-century-BC Stupa 2 stands on an artificial ledge, well below the main enclosure – probably because its relics were less important than those of stupas 1 and 3. The ornamental railings and gateways around it are certainly no match for those up the hill, although the carvings of lotus medallions and mythical beasts that decorate them are worth close scrutiny. The straps dangling from some of the horseriders' saddles are believed to mark the first appearance in India of stirrups.

Archeological Museum Daily except Fri 9am–5pm •
museumsanchiasia.mp.gov.in • Charge. Entrance included in main site ticket

Sanchi's small Archeological Museum, to the left of the road up to the hilltop, houses a modest collection of artefacts, mostly fragments of sculpture, jewellery, pottery, weapons and tools. Its main hall contains the most impressive pieces, including the famous Ashokan lion-capital (see above) and two damaged salabhanjikas from the gateways of Stupa 1. Also of note are the distinctive Mathuran red-sandstone Buddhas.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY TRAIN THERE ARE SANCHI TRAINS BETWEEN BHOPAL AND SANCHI (7–8 DAILY; 37MIN–1HR 33MIN); THOSE TRAVELLING TO SANCHI ARE MUCH QUICKER THAN THOSE TRAVELLING IN THE OTHER DIRECTION. BOTH SANCHI AND VIDISHA, 10KM NORTHEAST

AND CONNECTED BY PLENTY OF LOCAL BUSES, SEE DOZENS OF DAILY TRAINS TO/FROM MUMBAI AND DELHI.

By bus Buses from Bhopal to Sanchi (every 30min; 1hr 30min–2hr) depart from the Hamidia Rd bus stand (mornings only) and the Inter-state bus stand. To catch a bus back to Bhopal, wait at the main crossroads and flag one down, and pray for a seat.

Services A handful of wooden stalls around the railway station constitute Sanchi's tiny bazaar, where you can rent bicycles and use the internet café. Staff at the Gateway Retreat (see below) offer local information.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

In addition to the hotel restaurants, dhabas and stalls in the bazaar serve inexpensive thalis (the Jain Restaurant is best). Don't miss the local speciality, sweet coconut nariyal samosas.

Gateway Retreat On the Bhopal–Vidisha Rd ④ mpstdc.com/accommodation/Sanchi/MPT-Gateway-Retreat-Sanchi.

MP Tourism's accommodation option is Sanchi's smartest, with slightly overpriced whitewashed a/c rooms set in neatly tended grounds. It's often busy, so book ahead. There a reliable, if unexciting, restaurant here, as well as Sanchi's only bar, and they run a canteen on the road to the stupa, near the crossroads. ₹₹₹

Krishna Above the chemist on the Bhopal–Vidisha Rd ④07482 266610. This friendly, family-run place has the best set-up for backpackers, with clean tiled rooms (the best are at the back), squat or sit-down toilets and a roof terrace facing the stupas. ₹

Sri Lanka Mahabodhi Society Guest House Near the railway station ④
petitfute.co.uk/v46381-sanchi/c1166-hebergement/c1249-village-vacances-refuge-cabanes/c169-hebergement-religieux/165488-mahabodhi-society-of-sri-lanka.html. Low-cost accommodation – primarily aimed at visiting Buddhists, though other tourists are very welcome – offering spartan rooms with shared facilities facing a shady garden and more comfortable a/c, attached rooms. ₹₹

Vidisha and around The main reason to call in at the bustling market town of VIDISHA, a 56km train or bus ride from

Bhopal, and also served by buses from nearby Sanchi, is to hop on an auto to the archeological site at Udaigiri and to visit the district museum where most of the best finds from Udaigiri – and the nearby Mauryan site of Besnagar – are kept.

District Museum Behind the railway station in the east of town • Tues–Sun 10am–5pm • Charge A worthwhile add-on to a trip to Udaigiri (for an additional charge) Vidisha’s District Museum displays some very fine statuary somewhat haphazardly around its gardens, and more formally inside several sprawling, badly lit galleries. The majority of its pieces, such as Kubera Yaksha, the 3m, pot-bellied male fertility figure in the hallway, are second-century Hindu artefacts unearthed at Besnagar, a small, underwhelming site 1km north of the Udaigiri turn-off on the road from Vidisha – most of the artefacts from the site have been moved here.

Udaigiri

6km west of Vidisha • Daily sunrise–sunset • Free • Take a round-trip auto-rickshaw ride from Vidisha or Sanchi, rent a bike from one of the shops in Vidisha’s bazaar or cycle from Sanchi, though this is more strenuous (1–2hr) A modest collection of ruined temples and fifth-century rock-cut caves stand just 6km west of Vidisha at Udaigiri. The caves, many decorated by Hindu and Jain mendicants, lie scattered around a long, thin outcrop of sandstone surrounded by wheat fields.

Once you’ve left Vidisha, a left turn just after crossing the Betwa River leads along a gently undulating tree-lined avenue for 2–3km. As it approaches the hillside, the road takes a sharp left turn towards the village. Stop here, at the base of the near-vertical rock face, to climb a steep flight of steps to Cave 19, which has worn reliefs of gods and demons around the doorways, and a Jain cave temple on the northern edge of the ridge. Ask the chowkidar to unlock the doors for you.

The site’s pièce de résistance, a 4m-high image of the boar-headed hero Varaha, stands carved into Cave 5. Vishnu adopted this guise to rescue the earth-goddess, Prithvi, from the churning primordial ocean. Varaha’s left foot rests on a naga king wearing a hood of thirteen cobra heads, while the river goddesses Ganga and Yamuna hold water vessels on either side. In the background you can see Brahma and Agni, the Vedic fire-god. The scene is seen as an allegory of the Emperor Chandra Gupta II’s conquest of northern India.

Bhimbetka

45km southeast of Bhopal • Daily sunrise–sunset • charge • Buses (hourly; 1hr) run from Bhopal’s ISBT and Hamidia Rd bus stations (mornings only) and can drop you at the MP Tourism’s Highway Treat (which has a restaurant and four rooms) from where it’s 3.5km – the people at the mechanics can run you there and back on a bike for a nominal amount (includes 1hr waiting); alternatively, trains run from Bhopal to the town of Obaidullaganj, 7km from Bhimbetka, from where you can more easily find an auto-rickshaw to take you to the site Shortly after NH-12 peels away from the main Bhopal–Hoshangabad road, 45km southeast of Bhopal, a long line of boulders appears high on a scrub-covered ridge to the west. The hollows, overhangs and crevices eroded over the millennia from the crags of this malleable sandstone outcrop harbour one of the world’s largest collections of prehistoric rock art. Discovered in 1957, Bhimbetka makes a fascinating day-trip.

Around half the thousand shelters so far catalogued along the 10km-long hilltop contain rock paintings, dating from three different periods. The oldest (around ten thousand years old) are green outline drawings of human figures and large red images of animals. The second, more prolific phase accounts for the bulk of Bhimbetka’s rock art, and were created in the “Stone Age” – between 8000 and 5000 BC. These friezes depict dynamic hunting scenes full of rampaging animals, initiation ceremonies, burials, masked dances, sports, wars, pregnant women and a drinking party. Bhimbetka’s third and final spate of cave painting took place during the early historic period; the stylized, geometric figures bear a strong resemblance to the art still produced by the region’s adivasi groups.

From the car park at the top of the hill, a paved pathway winds through the jumble of rocks and fifteen caves containing the most striking of Bhimbetka’s art. The chowkidars will show you around for a bit of baksheesh. Look out for the Paleolithic images in green, the wonderful “X-ray” animals filled in with cross-hatching and complex geometric designs, and the recurrent image of a bull chasing a human figure and a crab – believed to represent a struggle between the totemic heroes of three different tribes.

Pachmarhi

Among the last tracts of central India mapped by the British, the Mahadeo Hills weren’t explored until 1857, when Captain J. Forsyth and his party of Bengal Lancers stumbled upon an idyllic saucer-shaped plateau at the heart of the range, strewn with huge boulders and crisscrossed by streams. Five years later a road was cut from the railhead at Piparia, and by the end of the century Pachmarhi had become the summer capital of the entire Central Provinces, complete with a military sanatorium, churches, clubhouses, racecourse and polo pitch.

Aside from the faded Raj atmosphere and myriad walks and hikes, the main incentive to travel up here is in order to scramble around the surrounding forest in search of prehistoric rock art or to visit Satpura National Park, home to a handful of (elusive) tigers and leopards.

Pachmarhi town, more than 1000m above sea level, is clean, green and relaxed, despite the presence of a large military cantonment in its midst. It has retained a distinctly colonial ambience, enhanced by the elegant British bungalows and church spires that nose incongruously above the tropical tree line. In the evenings families stroll and picnic in the parklands, while army bands and scout troops march around the maidans.

Satpura National Park Oct–mid-June daily sunrise–sunset • On foot ₹150, by jeep (up to six people) ₹1500 plus vehicle rental around ₹2000; compulsory guides (₹360 for a half-day); entry permits, guides and jeeps are available from the Forestry Commission ticket office (Wed 9am–1pm, Thurs–Tues 9am–5pm), at Bison Lodge, 3km southwest of Pachmarhi town (near the roundabout) The 524-square-kilometre Satpura National Park, dominated by the rugged Mahadeo Hills, is worth a visit to see Indian bison, barking deer, sambar, jackals and wild dogs, although you’ll be very lucky to see any of the handful of tigers and leopards. Bison Lodge, where you find the ticket office for the park, also has a small museum with displays on the park’s flora and fauna.

THE PANDAV CAVES, FAIRY POOL AND BIG FALLS WALK A TWO- TO THREE-HOUR WALK AROUND THE EASTERN FRINGES OF THE PLATEAU STRINGS TOGETHER A SMALL CLUSTER OF INTERESTING SIGHTS. FIRST HEAD BY ROAD FROM BISON LODGE

(SEE ABOVE) UP TO THE PANDAV CAVES (2KM), WHICH OCCUPY A KNOBBLY SANDSTONE HILLOCK JUST EAST OF THE ROAD BETWEEN THE ATC CANTONMENT (AN ARMY TRAINING CENTRE) AND THE PETROL PUMP – USUALLY WITH A HANDFUL OF TOUR BUSES OUTSIDE. HINDU MYTHOLOGY TELLS THESE FIVE (PANCH) SIMPLE CELLS (MARHI) SHELTERED THE PANDAVA BROTHERS OF MAHABHARATA FAME DURING THEIR THIRTEEN-YEAR EXILE. YET ARCHEOLOGISTS MAINTAIN A GROUP OF BUDDHIST MONKS EXCAVATED THE BARE STONE CHAMBERS AND PILLARED VERANDAS AROUND THE FIRST CENTURY BC. REJOIN THE ROAD IN FRONT OF THE CAVES AND HEAD AROUND THE BACK OF THE HILL TO THE MELANCHOLY BRITISH CEMETERY. BEYOND THAT, THE ROAD BECOMES A DIRT TRACK LEADING TO A SMALL CAR PARK.

If you plan to head on to Apsara Vihar (“Fairy Pool”), a popular bathing and picnic spot at the foot of a small waterfall, and then to the 107m-high Rajat Prapat (sometimes called the “Big Falls”), you will need to buy a park entry permit from the park office in Bison Lodge (see above). From the car park, take the footpath down the hill through the woods for about twenty minutes till the trail flattens out, and turn right at a fork to descend to Fairy Pool. A five-minute scramble over the boulders downstream brings you to Rajat Prapat. If you walk back to the fork and continue along the trail, a five-minute walk brings you to a railing from where you can get the best view of the falling water – Rajat Prapat in Hindi actually means “Silver Falls”, after the colour of the water as the sunlight hits it. Beyond this point you will need a guide to find the 2km trail down to a deep, cold pool at the bottom.

SHIVRATRI MELA POPULAR DURING THE SUMMER WITH INDIAN TOURISTS, ESPECIALLY ON LONG HOLIDAY WEEKENDS, PACHMARHI REMAINS SLEEPY FOR MUCH OF THE REST OF THE YEAR. THE BIG EXCEPTION TO THIS IS DURING THE ANNUAL SHIVRATRI MELA (FEB/MARCH), WHEN THOUSANDS OF PILGRIMS POUR THROUGH EN ROUTE TO THE TOP OF NEARBY CHAURAGARH MOUNTAIN. THE FESTIVAL MARKS THE ANNIVERSARY OF SHIVA'S TANDAV DANCE AND HIS WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

Pachmarhi Hill Head to the whitewashed Muslim shrine in the Babu Lines area of town (1km southwest of the bus stand); from here it is a 15min climb to the summit There is a fine panoramic view over the town on one side and the thickly forested valley of Jambu Dwip on the other from the top of Pachmarhi Hill. The craggy cliffs lining the north side of the uninhabited gorge below are riddled with hidden rock-shelters and caves.

Jata Shankar cave The Jata Shankar cave is a thirty-minute walk along a well-beaten track from the Pachmarhi bus stand, twisting north from the main bazaar into the hillside through a narrow steep-sided canyon to this sacred cave, a prominent point in the Shivratri yatra. En route, in a small cluster of prehistoric rock-shelters and small cave temples just off the path (marked with white paint), look out for Harper's cave, named for its naturally formed seated figure of a man playing a harp. Beyond it, at the head of a dark chasm, the Jata Shankar cave itself lurks at the foot of a long flight of stone steps. The grotto's name, which literally means "Shiva's hairstyle", derives from the rock formation around a natural lingam on the damp cave floor, which supposedly resembles the god's matted dreadlocks.

Chauragarh

The 23km climb to the sacred summit of Chauragarh Mountain, on the south rim of the plateau, follows the main yatra trail used by pilgrims during the Shivratri Mela. The first 11km can be covered by bike or taxi along the paved road. From the bazaar, head south across the lake towards the crossroads in front of the Amaltas Hotel, then take the road to Mahadeo cave, passing a vantage point above the narrow Handi Kho ravine, just before the road makes its first sharp descent at the turn-off for Priyadarshini, or "Forsyth's Point".

The footpath proper begins at the very bottom of the valley, after the road has plunged down a sequence of hairpin bends. Before setting off, make a brief diversion up the khud behind the modern temple to the Mahadeo cave, where pilgrims take a purifying dip in the cool spring water. From here, a path leads down from the car park, past a small Hanuman cave temple, and then it's a strenuous two-hour climb up an ancient trail to the top of the mountain, which is crammed with tens of thousands of worshippers and sadhus during the Shivratri festival. At the summit, where a temple houses the all-powerful Chauragarh lingam, a thicket of orange tridents surrounds a bright blue statue of Shiva. The views are suitably sublime.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN THE PACHMARHI NEAREST RAILWAY STATION IS PIPARIA (OR PIPARIYA), 52KM NORTHEAST OF PACHMARHI AND ON THE MUMBAI-HOWRAH LINE. IF YOU'RE COMING FROM BHOPAL, YOU'LL NEED TO CATCH A CONNECTING TRAIN FROM ITARSI JUNCTION.

Destinations Itarsi Junction (every 30min–1hr; 1hr 8min–2hr 5min); Jabalpur (every 30min–1hr; 2hr 8min–4hr 21min); Nagpur (2–5 daily; 6hr 10min–7hr 30min); Satna (for Khajuraho; every 1–2hr; 4hr 52min–11hr 20min); Umaria (for Bandhavgarh National Park; 2 daily; 5hr 31min–6hr 52min).

By bus or shared jeep Regular buses travel between Bhopal's main bus station and Pachmarhi. Frequent buses and shared jeeps (every 30min or so; 1hr) shuttle between Piparia railway station and Pachmarhi.

Destinations Bhopal (every 2hr; 6hr 30min–7hr 30min); Indore (2 daily; 12–13hr); Nagpur (2–3 daily; 8–9hr).

By taxi Taxis start from around ₹5000 from Nagpur or Jabalpur, ₹4000 from Bhopal, ₹7500 from Indore or ₹1000 from Piparia.

GETTING AROUND BY JEEP ANY OF THE MP TOURISM HOTELS CAN ORGANIZE JEEP RENTAL (AROUND ₹1500/DAY). SHARED JEEPS ALSO DO THE ROUNDS OF PACHMARHI'S MAIN SIGHTS; A SEAT COSTS ₹150-250/DAY.

Bike rental Shops in the bazaar have a few bikes for rent (₹100-200/day); take a chain and padlock (bring your own) and hide the bike in the bushes while you are trekking to stop it being pinched.

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURIST INFORMATION THE MAIN MP TOURISM INFORMATION OFFICE (MON–FRI 10AM–7PM; 📞MPSTDC.COM/) IS NEXT TO AMALTAS HOTEL NEAR THE MILITARY TRAINING AREA, TEHSIL, ON THE FAR SIDE OF A LOTUS-FILLED LAKE, A 5MIN JEEP OR AUTO-RICKSHAW RIDE SOUTH OF THE BUS STATION. THERE'S ALSO A SMALL INFORMATION BOOTH AT THE BUS STATION (MON–FRI 10AM–5PM; 📞07578 252029).

Guides If you are considering any walks more ambitious than those mentioned in this account, it's worth investing in a local guide – contact the Forestry Commission ticket office at Bison Lodge (see below), a tour operator, or simply ask at your hotel.

Satpura Tours and Travels 📞94253 67365, 📧shailendra.sahu84@yahoo.com. Based at Saket hotel (see below), Satpura Tours and Travels can organize guides (₹400-600/day). The guides are young tribal men with expert local knowledge of the area, though they may not speak English, and the fees go directly to them and their villages. The agency also offers parasailing and can arrange rock climbing and homestays.

ACCOMMODATION ACCOMMODATION IN PACHMARHI IS IN SHORT SUPPLY DURING THE MELAS, OVER CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR, AND IN MAY AND JUNE, WHEN YOU SHOULD BOOK WELL IN ADVANCE. OUTSIDE OF THESE TIMES, IT SHOULD BE POSSIBLE TO NEGOTIATE A GOOD DISCOUNT ALMOST EVERYWHERE. BUDGET ACCOMMODATION CENTRES ON THE BAZAAR (ALONG PATEL MARG), BUT MOST OF THE MP TOURISM HOTELS ARE NEAR TEHSIL.

Amaltas Near Tehsil, around 1km southwest of the town centre 🌐 mpstdc.com. The best-priced MP Tourism hotel in town, in an old British-built building with a collection of a/c “deluxe” renovated rooms with the odd flash of character such as a curved wall or marble fireplace. The standard a/c rooms, in a separate annexe, are less appealing. ₹₹₹

★Evelyn’s Own Tehsil, near Golf View, around 2.5km southwest of the town centre 🌐 hotelpachmarhi.co.in/evelyns-own-homestay-pachmarhi. A colonial-era bungalow with homely rooms (they vary in quality, so ask to see a few), lush garden, small pool and tennis court. ₹₹

Forsyth Lodge 96km from Pachmarhi, near the village of Sarangpur, and opposite the Madai entrance to Satpura National Park 🌐 forsythlodge.com. Named after a pioneering British captain, this wonderful lodge is set amid 44 acres of jungle. It has twelve beautiful cottages, a pool and well-trained staff and guides. Rates (based on two sharing) include full board. ₹₹₹₹

Golf View Tehsil, overlooking the golf course, around 2.5km southwest of the town centre 🌐 golfview.in. One of Pachmarhi’s smarter hotels, Golf View has classy rooms with 1920s-style furniture, fireplaces, high ceilings and modern features like tea-/coffee-makers and whirlpool baths. Outside you find manicured lawns, mango trees and, rather unexpectedly, a running track. Meals cost extra. ₹₹₹

Rock-End Manor Near Tehsil, around 2km southwest of the town centre 🌐 mpstdc.com. MP Tourism’s well-restored British bungalow is a long-established favourite of visiting VIPs for its Raj-style rooms (they feel more like suites) and stately atmosphere. Easy chairs on the veranda offer views over the hills and the flower garden. Full board for two people ₹₹₹

Saket Patel Marg, in the heart of the bazaar, a 5min walk from the bus stand  sakethotel.in. Friendly hotel offering clean rooms with TVs, attached bathrooms (some with squat toilets) and luminous stars on the ceilings. The more expensive ones (double the price) are bigger and have bathtubs, a/c and small balconies. There are smaller, less expensive guesthouses on the same road. ₹₹

EATING KHALSA KHALSA HOTEL, BOTTOM END OF BAZAAR, OFF THE MAIN ROAD  HOTELSPACHMARHI.CO.IN A SIKH-RUN PLACE WITH PREDICTABLY GOOD VEG AND NON-VEG PUNJABI FOOD (INCLUDING A TASTY PESHWARI NAAN), PLUS A DECENT ATTEMPT AT A GUJARATI THALI. THE BIZARRE DINING ROOM FEATURES FAKE TREE-TRUNK ROOF SUPPORTS AND FAIRY LIGHTS. DAILY NOON–3PM & 7–10.30PM. ₹

Rock-End Manor Rock-End Manor hotel  mpstdc.com/accommodation/Pachmarhi/MPT-Rock-End-Manor-Pachmarhi. All the MP Tourism properties have restaurants serving the solid but hardly earth-shattering north Indian and Chinese menu, but the Raj-era charm here elevates it above the others. The dining hall is a bit poky, but you can dine out on the lovely veranda which has featured in many a Bollywood movie (though watch out for monkeys during the day). ₹

Gwalior

Straddling the main Delhi–Mumbai train line, GWALIOR is northern Madhya Pradesh's largest city and boasts one of India's most magnificent hilltop forts. The sandstone citadel, with its temples and palaces, peers down from the edge of a sheer-sided plateau above a haze of exhaust fumes and busy streets. The city's other unmissable attraction is the extraordinarily flamboyant Jai Vilas Palace, owned by the local ruling family, the Scindias. Their personalities and influence are everywhere, from the chhatris (cenotaphs) north of Jayaji Chowk to the excellent Sarod Ghar classical music museum. Despite its proximity to Agra, 119km north, Gwalior sees few foreign tourists and its drab modern centre lacks the charm of its nearby Rajasthani counterparts. That said, it is a worthwhile place to pause for a day, particularly around late November or early December, when the old Mughal tombs host one of India's premier classical music events, the Tansen Samaroh Festival.

Brief history An inscription unearthed in a now-defunct sun temple suggests that Gwalior was first occupied in the sixth century BC by Hun invaders from the north. Local legend, however, attributes the founding of the fort to the Kuchwaha prince Suraj Sen, said to have been cured of leprosy during the tenth century by the hermit Gwalipa after whom the city is named. The Kuchwahas' successors, the Parihars, were brutally overthrown in 1232 by Iltutmish.

A third Rajput dynasty, the Tomars, retook Gwalior in 1398, ushering in the city's golden age. Under Man Singh, who ascended to the Tomar gadi (throne) in 1486, the hilltop gained the magnificent palaces and fortifications that were to earn it the epithet "the pearl in the necklace of the castles of Hind". Skirmishes with neighbouring powers dogged the Rajputs' rule until 1517, when the Lodis from Delhi besieged the fort for a second time and Man Singh was slain. Thereafter, Gwalior was ruled by a succession of Muslim overlords before falling to Akbar.

With the decline of the Mughals, Gwalior became the base of the most powerful of the four Maratha clans, the Scindias, in 1754. Twenty-six years later, British troops conquered the fort and Gwalior became a British feudatory state ruled by a succession of puppet rajas. The most famous of these, Jayaji Rao Scindia, remained loyal to the British during the 1857 uprising, although 6500 of his troops joined the opposing forces led by Tantia Tope and Rani Lakshmi Bai of Jhansi. Both rebel leaders were killed in the ensuing battle, and the maharaja quickly resumed his role as host of some of the grandest viceregal dinners, royal visits and tiger hunts ever witnessed by the Raj. The Scindias remained influential after Independence, and still live in Gwalior.

Gwalior Fort North of the modern city •

gwalior.nic.in/en/tourist-place/the-fort/ • Fort Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge; guides are extra • Sound-and-light show (in English) Daily: March–Oct 8.30pm; Nov–Feb 7.30pm • Charge;

tickets available from the fort or the MP Tourism office at Tansen Residency hotel.

Gwalior's imposing fort sprawls over a 3km-long outcrop of sandstone. Its mighty turreted battlements encompass six palaces, three temples and several water tanks and cisterns, as well as a prestigious public school and a Sikh gurudwara.

Two routes wind up the hill. In the west, a driveable track just off Gwalior Road climbs the steep gorge of the Urwahi Valley to the Urwahi Gate, passing a line of rock-cut Jain statues along the way. The other, more accessible Gwalior Gate is on the northeast corner of the cliff. Official guides tout for trade at the Urwahi Gate and the cold-drinks shop at the entrance to the palace complex. There are nightly sound-and-light shows in the Man Singh Palace in Hindi and English.

Archeological Museum Gujuri Mahal • Tues–Sun 9am–5pm • Charge •
asi.nic.in/museum-gwalior/

A short walk north of the Gwalior Gate, just outside the fort compound, the modest Gujuri Mahal was built by Man Singh to woo his favourite rani, Mrignayani, when she was still a peasant girl. The elegant sandstone palace now houses the Archeological Museum, whose large collection of sculptures, inscriptions and paintings is well worth a look, even if the labels are woefully uninformative. Highlights include the twin Ashoka lion capitals from Vidisha in gallery two, and gallery nine's erotic bas-relief; but the most famous exhibit is the exquisitely carved salabhanjika, a small female figurine, noted for her sensuous curves and sublime facial expression.

Man Singh Palace South of the Gwalior Gate

Entered via the Hathiya (“elephant”) Paar gateway, with its twin turrets and ornate blue tilework, the Man Singh Palace (sometimes called Man Mandir Palace) was declared “the noblest specimen of Hindu domestic architecture in northern India” by nineteenth-century explorer Sir Alexander Cunningham. Built between 1486 and 1517 by the Tomar ruler Man Singh, it’s also known as the Chit Mandir (“Painted Palace”) for the rich ceramic mosaics encrusting its facade. The best-preserved fragments of tilework, on its south side, can be seen from the bank left of the main Hathiya Paur gateway. Spread in luxurious bands of turquoise, emerald green and yellow across the ornate stonework are tigers, elephants, peacocks and crocodiles brandishing flowers.

By contrast, the interior of the four-storey palace is very plain. However, there are some fine pierced-stone jali screens, behind which the women of the palace would assemble to receive instruction from Gwalior's great music gurus. The circular chambers in the lower storeys were once dungeons.

Teli-ka-Mandir and Suraj Kund On the south side of the plateau, the 30m-tall Teli-ka-Mandir is the fort's oldest surviving monument. Dating from the mid-eighth century, it consists of a huge rectangular sanctuary tower capped with an unusual vaulted-arch roof, whose peepal-leaf shape derives from the chaitya windows of much earlier rock-cut Buddhist caves. In the aftermath of the 1857 Indian uprising, the Vishnu temple was used by the British as a soda factory, and restoration work continues. At the head of the Urwahi ravine, just north of the Teli-ka-Mandir, the Suraj Kund is the 100m-long tank whose waters are reputed to have cured the tenth-century ruler Suraj Sen, later Suraj Pal, of leprosy.

Sasbahu mandirs At the eastern edge of the fort, the Sasbahu, or "mother-and-daughter-in-law", temples overlook the city near an unsightly TV mast. The larger one has a three-storey mandapa (assembly hall), supported by four intricate pillars, while the smaller one consists of an open-sided porch with a pyramidal roof. Both were erected late in the eleventh century and are dedicated to Vishnu.

Sikh gurudwara South of the Sasbahu mandirs, the huge, gold-tipped, white-domed marble building to the south is a modern Sikh gurudwara, built to commemorate a Sikh hero who was imprisoned in the fort. Before entering, cover your arms, legs and head, remove your socks and shoes and wash your feet in the tank at the bottom of the steps.

Jain sculptures Near the Urwahi Gate at the southern entrance to the fort, the sheer sandstone cliffs around the fort harbour some imposing rock-cut Jain sculptures. Carved between the seventh and fifteenth centuries, most of the large honey-coloured figures depict the 24 Jain teacher-saviours – the tirthankaras, or “Crossing Makers” – standing with their arms held stiffly at their sides, or sitting cross-legged, the palms of their hands upturned. Many lost their faces and genitalia when Mughal emperor Babur’s iconoclastic army descended on the city in 1527.

The larger of the two main groups lines the southwestern approach to the fort, along the sides of the Urwahi ravine. The largest image, to the side of the road near Urwahi Gate, portrays Adinath, 19m tall, with decorative nipples, a head of tightly curled hair and drooping ears, standing on a lotus bloom beside several smaller statues. A little further from the fort, on the other side of the road, another company of tirthankaras enjoys a more dramatic situation, looking over a natural gorge. All have lost their faces, save a proud trio sheltered by a delicate canopy.

The third collection stands on the southeast corner of the plateau, overlooking the city from a narrow ledge. To get here, follow Gwalior Road north along the foot of the cliff from Phool Bagh junction, near the Rani Jhansi memorial, until you see a paved path winding up the hill from behind a row of houses on the left. Once again, the tirthankaras, which are numbered, occupy deep recesses hewn from the rock wall. One of the few not defaced by the Muslim invaders, no. 10, is still revered by Gwalior’s small Jain community as a shrine.

The old town and south of the fort A number of interesting Islamic monuments are tucked away down the narrow backstreets of Gwalior’s predominantly Muslim old town, clustered around the north and northeast corners of the hill. One of the main landmarks in this area is the Jama Masjid, erected in 1661, which stands close to the Gujuri Mahal near the main entrance to the fort.

Ghaus Mohammed and Tansen tombs Off Tansen Rd, 1km east of the Jama Masjid • Daily 6am–6pm • Free • 📍

asibhopal.nic.in/monument/gwalior_ghauspura_tombofmo.html

The city's most famous Muslim building is the sixteenth-century Tomb of Ghaus Mohammed, an Afghan prince who helped Babur take Gwalior Fort. It's a fine specimen of early Mughal architecture, and a popular local shrine. Elegant hexagonal pavilions stand at each of its four corners; in the centre, the large central dome retains a few remnants of its blue-glazed tiles. The tomb's walls are inlaid with exquisite pierced-stone jali screens.

The second and smaller of the tombs in the gardens is that of the famous Mughal singer-musician Tansen, one of the "Nine Jewels" of Emperor Akbar's court. Every year, performers and aficionados from all over India flock here for Gwalior's annual Tansen Samaroh music festival. Local superstition holds that the leaves of the tamarind tree growing on the plinth nearby have a salutary effect on the singing voice, which is why its bottom branches have been stripped bare.

Jai Vilas Palace and Museum Palace Rd, south of the fort • Tues–Sun: 10am–6pm • Charge • www.jaivilaspalace.in

The Jai Vilas Palace is one of India's most grandiose and eccentric nineteenth-century relics, although the lack of labelling and information can make for a frustrating visit. It was built in 1875 during the reign of Maharaja Jayaji Rao Scindia, who dispatched his friend Colonel Michael Filose on a grand tour of Europe to seek inspiration; Filose returned with a vast shipment of furniture, fabric, paintings, tapestries and cut glass, together with the blueprints for a building that borrowed heavily from Buckingham Palace, Versailles, Greek ruins and Italian-Baroque stately homes. The result is a shamelessly over-the-top blend of Doric, Tuscan and Corinthian architecture.

The Scindias, who still occupy part of the palace, have opened two wings to the public. The first wing, a museum, includes countless Mughal paintings, Persian rugs, gold and silver ornaments and antique furniture that belonged to the estate of Louis XVI before the French Revolution.

A still more extravagant wing lies across the courtyard from the museum. The darbar hall was where the maharaja entertained important visitors. A sweeping Belgian glass staircase leads from the lobby upstairs to the gargantuan assembly hall, which has the world's biggest chandeliers. At more than 3.5 tonnes apiece, they could not be installed until the strength of the roof had been tested with eight elephants. The rug lining the floor of the hall, woven by inmates of Gwalior jail, actually took twelve years to complete and, at over 40m in length, is the largest handmade carpet in the whole of Asia.

Sarod Ghar Museum Ustad Hafiz Ali Khan Marg, Jiwaji Ganj, southwest of the fort • Mon–Sat 10am–4pm • Charge • sarod.com/all/sarodghar.html

The Sarod Ghar Museum of music occupies the beautiful ancestral home of the Bangash family, whose ancestors, originally Afghan horse-traders who settled in India, produced a dynasty of musical virtuosos, including Ustad Hafiz Ali Khan and his son Ustad Amjad Ali Khan. The museum traces Gwalior's rich musical legacy, from Tansen, who performed in Mughal emperor Akbar's court, to the invention by Gulam Ali Khan Bangash of the sarod, whose ethereal tones accompany you as you progress through the galleries.

Scindia chhatris Palace Rd, just south of the Jai Vilas Palace • Daily 9am–5pm • Free • trawell.in/madhya-pradesh/gwalior/chhatris-of-scindia-dynasty

Two characteristically ostentatious Scindia family tombs are found in the south of Gwalior. Inside a walled courtyard, the Scindia chhatris feature intricate stonework and ornately painted scenes of life inside the nineteenth-century Maratha royal court. Built in 1817 to commemorate Maharaja Jiyaji Rao Scindia, the larger of the pair is most remarkable for the intricate outside panelling of interwoven flowers. The second chhatri is a more compact and finely detailed version of the former, constructed in 1843 for the recently departed Maharaja Janakaji Scindia; sculptures and carvings depict the hectic lifestyle of a king.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY PLANE THE GWALIOR AIRPORT, 12KM NORTH OF THE CITY (TAXI TO THE CENTRE AROUND ₹) IS SERVED BY AIR INDIA (0751 237 6872).

Destinations Delhi (2 weekly; 40min); Mumbai (3 weekly; 1hr 40min).

By train Gwalior's railway station lies in the east of the city, just off Station Rd and a short walk from numerous hotels. The quickest train to Delhi is the Shatabdi Express (daily 7.45pm; 3hr 45min), which travels via Agra (1hr 25min). Travelling in the opposite direction, the Shatabdi Express (daily 9.33) is the quickest train to both Jhansi (1hr 12min) and Bhopal (4hr 22min).

Destinations Agra (every 30min–1hr; 1hr 12min–3hr); Bhopal (every 30min–1hr; 4hr 30min–8hr 15min); Delhi (every 30min–1hr; 3hr 45min–7hr 50min); Indore (2–4 daily; 11hr 35min–14hr 12min); Jhansi (every 30min–1hr; 1hr 12min–5hr 15min); Khajuraho (1 daily; 6hr 10min).

By bus The state bus stand is around the corner from the railway station, just off Station Rd. The private bus stand, inconveniently situated on the southwestern edge of Gwalior, is only worth considering if you are travelling long distances.

Destinations Agra (every 30min–1hr; 3hr–3hr 30min); Datia (every 30min–1hr; 1hr 30min–2hr); Jhansi (every 30min–1hr; 3hr 30min–4hr); Shivpuri (every 30min–1hr; 2hr 30min).

Tourist information MP Tourism has a useful office at Tansen Residency on Gandhi Rd (daily 10am–6pm; ☎0751 223 4557); it runs a daily bus tour of the city (8hr 30min; ₹). There is also an MP Tourism booth in the railway station, platform 1 (daily 10am–5pm; ☎0751 404 0777).

Internet There are several internet cafés on Padav Rd, including Gwala's Cyber Zone.

Banks and exchange The State Bank of India, at the heart of the bazaar district near the GPO on Jayaji Chowk, changes foreign currency. There are numerous ATMs, including one next to the tourist office booth in the station and another on MLB Rd.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Standards at Gwalior's hotels are generally low, especially at the budget end. In addition, many shoestring hotels, particularly those near the railway station, refuse to take foreigners.

D.M. Link Rd, near the state bus stand ☎0751 234 2083. Probably the best low-cost choice, with clean and quiet rooms; the cheaper ones are a little small, though, and have squat toilets – the bigger ones cost more. ₹

Gwalior Regency Link Rd, near the state bus stand 📍 facebook.com/pages/Hotel-Gwalior-Regency-Gwalior/197140957032987. Efficient, mid-range hotel aimed primarily at business travellers. As well as smart, modern, a/c attached rooms, there is a small pool, gym, coffee shop, a good restaurant and a bar-disco. ₹₹₹

Tansen Residency 6A Gandhi Rd 📍mpstdc.com. This MP Tourism-run hotel is a reason-able choice for a night. Set in its own gardens, it has well-furnished a/c rooms, plus a pool, restaurant and bar. It's popular, so book in advance. ₹₹₹

Usha Kiran Palace Jayendraganj, Lakshar 📍tajhotels.com. Romantic 120-year-old palace set in nine acres of landscaped gardens. Charming rooms have Indian-style divans, 1930s-era furniture and silk cushions. There's a pool, spa and good restaurant (see below), and cookery and yoga classes are available. ₹₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Chaska Ambience hotel, Railway station campus 📍ambiencegwalior.com. Just outside the southern gate of the railway station, this clean fast-food-style veg outlet serves great south Indian snacks, pretty good sandwiches and burgers and more substantial combo meals. Daily 7am–10pm. ₹

Indian Coffee House Station Rd 📍indiancoffeehousejabalpur.com. Low-key place with white-turbaned waiters, it consistently produces the goods, from toast and filter coffee (from ₹) and south Indian breakfast options to more substantial meals. Daily 7.30am–11pm. ₹

Moti Mahal Gwalior Regency, Link Rd, near the state bus stand 📍0751 234 0670. Serving Mughlai food at its best, this high-end chain was started by Kundan Lal Gujral, the so-called “father of tandoori cuisine”, back in the 1920s. Famed for the signature murg makhani, they also have good biryanis, paneer lababdar and other Punjabi favourites. Daily noon–11pm. ₹₹

★Silver Saloon Usha Kiran Palace, Jayendraganj, Lakshar 📍tajhotels.com. If you can't afford to stay at the hotel (see above), a visit to its exemplary restaurant is the next best thing. gourmet Mughlai, Marathi, Nepalese and international dishes are served impeccably in evocative surroundings overlooking a verdant courtyard. Daily 7am–11pm. ₹₹

Datia

Constructed by Bir Singh Deo at the height of the Bundela “golden age”, the little-visited majestic palace at DATIA, 30km northwest of Jhansi and 71km southeast of Gwalior, is one of India’s finest Rajput buildings.

Presiding over a mass of white- and blue-washed brick houses from its seat atop a rock outcrop, the 440-room, seven-storey Bir Singh Deo Palace (sometimes called Narsing Dev Palace) stands in the east of town. Half the fun of visiting is trying to find a path from its pitch-black subterranean chambers, hewn out of the solid base of the hill for use during the hot season, to the rani’s airy apartment on the top floor. In between, a maze of cross-cutting corridors, flying walkways, walls encrusted with fragments of ceramic tiles, latticed screens and archways, hidden passages, pavilions and suites of apartments lead you in ever-decreasing circles until you eventually run out of staircases. The views from the upper storeys are breathtaking. There are guides on hand, armed with torches, to show you around if you wish, and they can also open up some of the rooms that contain wall paintings (for a baksheesh of ₹50 or so).

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN DATIA RAILWAY DATIA STATION, 2KM SOUTHWEST OF THE BUS STATION, SITS ON THE MAIN DELHI–MUMBAI TRAIN LINE, THOUGH SERVICES ARE FAIRLY LIMITED.

By bus The bus station is just south of the centre. Regular buses connect Datia with both Jhansi (every 30min–1hr; 1hr–1hr 30min) and Gwalior (every 30min–1hr; 1hr 30min–2hr). If you’re coming from Shivpuri, 97km west, you’ll need to change buses at Karera. An auto-rickshaw to the palace should cost no more than ₹120.

Orchha

An essential stop en route to or from Khajuraho, ORCHHA (“hidden place”) certainly lives up to its name, residing amid a tangle of scrubby dhak forest 18km southeast of Jhansi. In spite of its tumbledown state, the fortified and now deserted medieval town remains an architectural gem, its guano-splashed temple shikharas, derelict palaces, havelis and weedchoked sandstone cenotaphs floating serenely above the banks of the River Betwa. Clustered around the foot of the exotic ruins, the sleepy village makes an excellent spot to unwind after the hassle of northern cities.

However, it's now firmly established on the tour-group circuit, so try to spend a night or two here after the coach parties have moved off.

Brief history After being chased by several generations of Delhi sultans from various capitals around central India, the Bundela dynasty finally settled at the former Malwan fort of Orchha in the fifteenth century. Work on Orchha's magnificent fortifications, palaces and temples was started by Raja Rudra Pratap, and continued after he was killed in 1531 trying to wrestle a cow from the clutches of a tiger. Thereafter, the dynasty's fortunes depended on the goodwill of their mighty neighbours, the Mughals. After being defeated in battle by Akbar, the proud and pious Madhukar Shah nearly signed his clan's death warrant by showing up at the imperial court with a red tilak smeared on his forehead – a mark at that time banned by the emperor. Madhukar's bold gesture, however, earned Akbar's respect, and the two became friends – an alliance fostered in the following years by Orchha's most illustrious raja.

During his 22-year rule, Bir Singh Deo erected 52 forts and palaces, including the citadel at Jhansi, the Bir Singh Deo Palace at Datia and many of Orchha's finest buildings. In 1627, he was killed by bandits while returning from the Deccan with a camel train full of booty. Afterwards, relations with the Mughals rapidly deteriorated, and the Bundelas eventually fled Orchha for the comparative safety of Tikamgarh. Apart from the Sheesh Mahal, now a hotel, the magnificent monuments have lain virtually deserted ever since.

The main monuments The ticket office is across the bridge, just east of the main market crossroads, open daily 8am–5.30pm • “Day passport” for all the main monuments charge, • camera/video camera/guides charge, • Sound-and-light show (in English) Daily: March–Nov 7.30pm; Dec–Feb 6.30pm The best-preserved of Orchha's scattered monuments – palaces, temples, tombs and gardens – lie within comfortable walking distance of the village and can be seen (at breakneck speed) in a day; to get the most out of a trip you should plan on staying the night. A sound-and-light show is held every night at the fort throughout the year.

Raj Mahal

Just beyond the bridge, the first building you come to across Orchha's medieval granite bridge is the well-preserved ruin of the royal palace, or Raj Mahal. Of the two rectangular courtyards inside, the second, formerly used by the Bundela ranis, is the most dramatic. Opulent royal quarters, raised balconies and interlocking walkways rise in symmetrical tiers on all four sides, crowned by domed pavilions and turrets; the apartments projecting into the quadrangle on the ground floor belonged to the most-favoured queens. As you wander around, look out for the fragments of mirror inlay and vibrant painting plastered over their walls and ceilings. Some of the friezes are in remarkable condition, depicting Vishnu's various outlandish incarnations, court and hunting scenes, and lively festivals.

Rai Praveen Mahal Reached via a path that leads from the Raj Mahal around the northern side of the hill, the Rai Praveen Mahal is a small, double-storeyed brick apartment built by Raja Indramani for his concubine in the mid-1670s. The gifted poetess, musician and dancer Rai Praveen beguiled the Mughal emperor Akbar when she was sent to him as a gift, but was eventually returned to Orchha to live out her remaining days. Set amid the well-watered lawns of the Anand Mahal gardens, the building has a main assembly hall on the ground floor (used to host music and dance performances), a boudoir upstairs and cool underground apartments.

Saket Museum of Ramayana Correlogram Tues–Sun 10am–5pm

A short walk south of the Raj Mahal, the small Saket Museum of Ramayana Correlogram has an intriguing collection of Hindu folk art from across India. Highlights include Mithila paintings (produced using paint made from cow's milk) from Bihar and colourful masks from Odisha and Uttar Pradesh.

Jahangir Mahal South of the Rai Praveen Mahal, Orchha's most admired palace, the Jahangir Mahal was built by Bir Singh Deo as a monumental welcome present for the Mughal emperor when he paid a state visit here in the seventeenth century. Jahangir had come to invest his old ally with the sword of Abdul Fazal – the emperor's erstwhile enemy whom Bir Singh had murdered some years earlier. Entered through an ornate ceremonial gateway, the main, east-facing facade is still encrusted with turquoise tiles. Two stone elephants flank the stairway, holding bells in their trunks to announce the arrival of the raja, and there are three storeys of elegant hanging balconies, terraces, apartments and onion domes piled around a central courtyard. This palace, however, has a much lighter feel, with countless windows and pierced stone screens looking out over the exotic Orchha skyline to the west, and a sea of treetops and ruined temples in the other direction.

Sheesh Mahal Just west of the Jahangir Mahal and built during the early eighteenth century, long after Orchha's demise, the Sheesh Mahal ("Palace of Mirrors") was originally intended to be an exclusive country retreat for the local raja, Udait Singh. Following Independence, the property was inherited by the state government, who converted it into a hotel. The rather squat palace stands between the Raj Mahal and the Jahangir Mahal, at the far end of an open-sided courtyard. Covered in a coat of whitewash and stripped of most of its Persian rugs and antiques, the building retains only traces of its former splendour, though there are stunning views from its upper terraces and turrets. If they're not occupied, check out the palatial suites (rooms 1 and 2), which contain original bathroom fittings.

Chhatris

Daily sunrise–sunset

A solemn row of pale brown weed-choked domes and spires perched above the river around 1km south of the market, the fourteen riverside chhatris, the cenotaphs of Bundelkhand's former rulers (including that of Bir Singh Deo), are Orchha's most melancholy ruins and best admired at sunrise or sunset.

Around the village There are several interesting temples in the village, as well as a nature reserve. The more traditional market area, where local farmers come to sell their goods around the Ram Raja Mandir (west of the main street), is also worth a look, with several small dilapidated palaces dotted around the place that you can wander through (those bits that aren't squatted, anyway).

Ram Raja Mandir Daily 8am–noon & 8–10pm • Free The Ram Raja Mandir stands just west of the bazaar's main crossroads, in a cool marble-tiled courtyard. Local legend has it that Madhukar Shah constructed the building as a palace for his wife, Rani Ganesha, and it only became a temple after a Rama icon, which the queen had dutifully carried all the way from her home town of Ayodhya, could not be lifted from the spot where she first set it down; it remains there to this day, and the temple is a popular pilgrimage site.

Hardaul ka Baithak Opposite the Ram Raja Mandir • No fixed opening times • Free A path leads through the Mughal-style Phool Bagh ornamental garden to Hardaul ka Baithak, a grand pavilion where Bir Singh Deo's second son, Hardaul, ally of Jahangir and romantic paragon, once held court. Newlyweds come here to seek blessing from Hardaul, who, despite being poisoned by his jealous brother who accused him of intimacy with his sister-in-law, is thought to confer good luck. The tall towers rising above the gardens like disregarded bridge supports are dastgirs ("wind-catchers"), Persian-style cooling towers that provided air-conditioning for the neighbouring palace, Palkhi Mahal; they're thought to be the only ones of their kind surviving in India.

Chatturbuj Mandir South of the market • No fixed opening times • Free With its huge pointed shikharas soaring high above the village, Chatturbuj Mandir is the temple originally built to house Rani Ganesha's icon. In cruciform shape, representing the four-armed Vishnu, with seven storeys and spacious courtyards ringed by arched balconies, it epitomizes the regal Bundelkhand style, inspired by the Mughals, with Rajput, Persian and European touches. It's unusual for a Hindu temple, with few carvings and a wealth of space – perhaps to accommodate followers of the bhakti cult (a form of worship involving large congregations of people rather than a small elite of priests). You can climb up the narrow staircases between storeys to the temple's roof, pierced by an ornate shikhara whose niches shelter nesting vultures.

Orchha Nature Reserve On the east side of the bridge, around 700m south of the market • Daily 8am–6pm • Charge The Orchha Nature Reserve is a good place to spend a spare morning or afternoon. Here you can take an idle wander or cycle along a peaceful nature trail (around 12km in length) in the company of monkeys and peacocks.

Lakshmi Narayan Mandir Around 1km west of the village • No fixed opening times • Free The solitary Lakshmi Narayan Mandir crowns a rocky hillock just under 1km west of Orchha village, at the end of a long, paved pathway. It takes around fifteen minutes to walk here from the market, for which you are rewarded with fine views and excellent seventeenth- and nineteenth-century paintings. For a small tip, the chowkidar will lead you through the galleries inside the temple. Look out for the frieze depicting the battle of Jhansi, in which the rani appears in an upper room of the fort next to her horse, while musket-bearing British troops scuttle about below. Elsewhere, episodes from the much-loved Krishna story crop up alongside portraits of the Bundela rajas and their military and architectural achievements, while a side pillar bears a sketch of two very inebriated English soldiers.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TEMPO AND BUS ORCHHA PACKED TEMPOS AND BUSES (DEPARTING WHEN REALLY FULL; 20–40MIN) SHUTTLE BETWEEN JHANSI BUS STATION AND ORCHHA'S MAIN CROSSROADS, 18KM AWAY. IF YOU'RE ON A BUS FROM KHAJURAHO/BAMITHA TO JHANSI YOU CAN ASK TO BE DROPPED OFF AT THE TURNING ON THE MAIN ROAD, AND PICK UP A TEMPO FOR THE REMAINING 7KM. IF YOU'RE HEADING IN THE OPPOSITE DIRECTION, DON'T BANK ON BEING ABLE TO FLAG DOWN A BUS ON THE HIGHWAY, AS THEY'RE OFTEN FULL. INSTEAD, GET TO JHANSI BUS STATION, FROM WHERE THEY DEPART. THERE IS ONE DAILY BUS DIRECT FROM JHANSI TO KHAJURAHO (THE DEPARTURE TIME FLUCTUATES, SO ASK LOCALLY; 5HR), AS WELL AS NUMEROUS SERVICES BETWEEN JHANSI AND BAMITHA, A 15MIN AUTO-RICKSHAW RIDE FROM KHAJURAHO.

By auto-rickshaw An auto-rickshaw between Jhansi and Orchha costs about ₹ (more at night).

By taxi Taxis between Jhansi and Orchha charge around ₹500 (more at night); around ₹2500-2700 between Orchha and Khajuraho. The MP Tourism office (see below) and the better hotels can organize them for you.

By train Orchha's small railway station is 3.5km from the centre of the village (around ₹150 by auto-rickshaw, less if you don't mind sharing with at least a dozen other passengers). A single local train (5–6hr) trundles between Orchha and Khajuraho. It generally departs from Orchha in the morning, and returns from Khajuraho in the early afternoon – exact times fluctuate, so check locally. You can't book in advance, but there's usually no shortage of seats. Jhansi station has a far wider range of train services, including to and from Khajuraho (2 daily; 4hr 5min–8hr 20min).

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION THE MP TOURISM OFFICES (DAILY 7AM–10PM) AT THE SHEESH MAHAL (📍 MPSTDC.COM) AND BETWA RETREAT (📍 MPSTDC.COM) CAN PROVIDE INFORMATION AND ORGANIZE RIVER-RAFTING TRIPS.

Services A bike can be a useful way to get around Orchha; several companies in town offer daily rental. The cybercafé next to Bhola restaurant offers internet and Skype access. Note that most of the smarter hotels will allow non-guests to use their pools for around ₹.

ACCOMMODATION AMAR MAHAL BYPASS RD, 100M NORTH OF CHHATRIS 📍 AMARMAHAL.COM. A MUGHAL-THEMED HOTEL WHOSE ATTACHED ROOMS, EACH WITH ELEGANTLY CARVED WOODEN BEDS AND ELABORATELY PAINTED CEILINGS, ARE SET AROUND A SERIES OF PEACEFUL,

INTERLINKED COURTYARDS. AS WELL AS A RESTAURANT, THERE'S A POOL AND A MINI SPA (ALL OPEN TO NON-GUESTS). ₹₹₹

Betwa Retreat Off Tikamgarh Rd, 10min walk south of the market @ mpstdc.com. An MP Tourism lodge with faded but tastefully decorated salmon-coloured cottages (including a Raj-style heritage one housed in an old shrine) and comfy a/c “Swiss” tents, each with a TV, fridge and marble bathroom set in a peaceful garden close to the river. There's a restaurant, bar and small pool. ₹₹₹

Bundelkhand Riverside Off Jhansi Rd, around 1km north of the market @ bundelkhandriverside.com. The former hunting lodge of Orchha's last maharaja, dating back to 1895, Bundelkhand Riverside has a blend of traditional Indian and British colonial architecture, spacious art-filled a/c attached rooms (most with river views), a good restaurant, a pool and nightly free culture shows at 7pm. ₹₹₹

Friends of Orchha @ orchha.org. This NGO offers homestays with local families; accommodation is basic, but the families provide food and the experience offers a wonderful insight into traditional Orchha life. ₹

Ganpati Jhansi Rd, 300m north of the main crossroads @ 94253 42502. Welcoming, family-run hotel with a range of attached rooms set around a small garden, from where there are spectacular views of the old fortifications. All the rooms are clean (if a little scruffy); the more expensive have a/c and some boast vistas of their own. ₹

★ Sheesh Mahal Jehangir Mahal Rd, next to the Raj Mahal @ mpstdc.com. The local raja's former country bolthole in the heart of the fort is now an atmospheric hotel with eight charming (and very good-value) a/c rooms and a personalized approach. If you can afford it, treat yourself to a romantic night in the Maharaja suite (₹₹₹₹) – perks include a vast marble bathtub and the ultimate loo with a view. Advance booking recommended. ₹₹₹

★ Shri Mahant Guesthouse Next to the Ram Raja Mandir entrance off the market crossroads. Backpacker stalwart in the heart of the action: the rooms are a little claustrophobic, and the most basic have squat toilets, but for double the price you get entrance which is great for people-watching (though pujas can be noisy). ₹

EATING MOST OF THE RESTAURANTS IN THE CENTRE OF ORCHHA BOAST INTERCHANGEABLE, TRAVELLER-ORIENTED MENUS AND VIEWS ACROSS TO THE FORT. IF YOU WANT A BIT MORE VARIETY AND SOME NON-VEG OPTIONS, TRY THE RESTAURANTS IN THE SMARTER HOTELS SUCH AS BUNDELKHAND RIVERSIDE (SEE ABOVE). THE DELICIOUS LOCAL DELICACY, KALAKAND (MILK CAKE), CAN BE BOUGHT FROM THE SMALL STALLS IN THE MARKET.

★Betwa Tarang On the approach to the Fort Bridge 📞94503 25772. A first-floor veg restaurant with a good view of the fort and reasonable pizzas and pasta (₹), as well as better and slightly cheaper Westernized Indian and Indianized Chinese dishes, and tasty, very filling thalis (₹). Daily 7.30am–10.30pm.

Bhola On the approach to the Fort Bridge 📞94243 44378. Established, if rather scruffy little restaurant with an eclectic menu that jumps from Korean, Dutch and Israeli dishes to veg Indian staples, though the latter are much better – note that if you order a foreign dish and the owner recommends the pancakes instead, it means he doesn't cook the foreign dish well (and the pancakes are indeed excellent). Daily 7am–10pm. ₹

Jharokha Sheesh Mahal hotel, Jehangir Mahal Rd, next to the Raj Mahal 📞07680 252624. Soak up the palace's evocative surroundings in the colonnaded dining hall, which has the usual MP Tourism menu, serving veg and non-veg food (standouts include the fish, chicken and egg curries) a few local specialities, and live music and dancing in the evenings. Daily 8am–10pm. ₹

Ramraja On the approach to the Fort Bridge 🌐facebook.com/ramrajarestaurant. Cheerful little place with an extensive breakfast menu (served all day) that features hash browns, peanut butter or Nutella on toast and as many kinds of eggs as you can think of. They also serve simple veg Indian meals, momos and the best coffee in town. Daily 6–10.30pm. ₹

Khajuraho

The resplendent Hindu temples of KHAJURAHO, immaculately restored after almost a millennium of abandonment and neglect, and now a UNESCO World Heritage Site, are an essential stop on any itinerary of India's historic monuments. Famed for the delicate sensuality – and forthright eroticism – of their sculpture, they were built between the tenth and twelfth centuries AD and remain the greatest architectural achievement of the Chandella dynasty.

Waves of Afghan invaders soon hastened the decline of the Chandellas, however, who abandoned the temples for more secure ground shortly after they were built. The temples gradually fell out of use and by the sixteenth century had been swallowed by the surrounding jungle. It took “rediscovery” by the British in 1838 before these masterpieces were fully appreciated in India, let alone internationally. It is still not known exactly why the temples were built and there are a number of competing theories; some say they are a “how to” guide for brahmin boys while others claim they symbolize the wedding party of Shiva and Parvati.

Some 400km southeast of Agra and the same distance west of Varanasi, Khajuraho might look central on maps of the Subcontinent, but remains almost as remote from the Indian mainstream as it was when the temples were built – which is presumably what spared them the depredations of the marauders, invaders and zealots who devastated so many early Hindu sites. However, trains now cross this extended flood plain, making Khajuraho much easier to visit today.

THE TEMPLES OF KHAJURAHO THE EXQUISITE INTRICACY OF THE TEMPLES THEMSELVES – OF WHICH THE MOST SPECTACULAR ARE KANDARIYA MAHADEVA, VISHVANATHA AND LAKSHMANA, ALL IN THE CONGLOMERATION KNOWN AS THE WESTERN GROUP – WAS MADE POSSIBLE BY THE SOFT FAWN-COLOURED SANDSTONE USED IN THEIR CONSTRUCTION. CONSIDERING THE PROPENSITY OF SUCH STONE TO CRUMBLE, THEY HAVE WITHSTOOD THE RAVAGES OF TIME REMARKABLY WELL. MUCH OF THE ORNATE SCULPTURE ADORNING THEIR WALLS IS IN SUCH HIGH RELIEF AS TO BE VIRTUALLY THREE-DIMENSIONAL, WITH STRAINS OF PINK IN THE STONE HELPING TO IMBUE THE FIGURES WITH FLESH-LIKE TONES. THE INCREDIBLE SKILL OF THE ARTISANS IS EVIDENT THROUGHOUT, WITH FRIEZES AS LITTLE AS 10CM WIDE CRAMMED WITH NATURALISTIC DETAILS OF ORNAMENTS, JEWELLERY, HAIRSTYLES AND EVEN MANICURED NAILS. TO ADD TO THE BEAUTY OF THE WHOLE ENSEMBLE, THE TEMPLES SUBTLY CHANGE HUE AS THE DAY PROGRESSES, PASSING FROM A WARM PINK AT SUNRISE TO WHITE AT MIDDAY AND BACK TO PINK AT SUNSET. DRAMATIC FLOODLIGHTS PICK THEM OUT IN THE EVENING, AND THEY GLOW WHITE WHEN THE MOON IS OUT.

Khajuraho town The sheer splendour of the temples rather overshadows Khajuraho town, which was largely built to service tourists – the original Khajuraho village is much sleepier and lies somewhat to the east. Still, if you stay a night or two, you'll discover a relaxed pace of life, especially in the evening when the open-air restaurants create a very sociable atmosphere. Visitor facilities are concentrated in the uncluttered avenues of the town; the gates of the western group of temples open immediately onto its main square, which is surrounded by hotels, cafés and curio shops where you should brace yourself for some hard selling.

Archeological Museum North of the western group next to the Lalit Temple View hotel • Daily except Fri 10am–5pm • Free entry with a ticket for the western group of temples (see below); photography absolutely prohibited The marble-floored Archeological Museum is principally noteworthy for a remarkable sculpture of a pot-bellied dancing Ganesh among a range of some of the best carvings and statues from the temples. Not all of the galleries were open at the time of writing, but there are many pieces arranged around the pleasant manicured gardens too.

Adivart State Museum of Tribal and Folk Art Chandella Cultural Complex, just east of the Tourist Facilitation Centre • Tues–Sun noon–8pm • Free Worth a quick visit, the Adivart State Museum of Tribal and Folk Art has a small but interesting collection of paintings, sculptures and artwork by Madhya Pradesh’s many tribal groups. There is also a range of original paintings and prints for sale.

Temples: the western group Entrance opposite the main square • Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge, camera charge; self-guided audio tour charge; smoking and lighters are prohibited and you’ll be searched on the way in • Sound-and-light show (in English) Daily: March–Sept 7.30pm, Oct–Feb 6.30pm • Charge Stranded like a fleet of stone ships amid pristine lawns and flowerbeds fringed with bougainvillea, the western group of temples is Khajuraho’s prime attraction. With the exception of Matangesvara, just outside the main complex, all are now virtually devoid of religious significance, and only spring back to life during Shivratri. Visitors must remove their shoes before entering individual temples. An informative self-guided audio tour is available from the temple booking office, and there’s a nightly sound-and-light show (55min). The site can get to be a bit of a scrum when the tour groups are in, so it’s best to visit before 9am (when the rising sun illuminates the interiors of the temples), or around lunchtime.

Varaha

Just inside the complex a small open mandapa pavilion, built between the tenth and eleventh centuries, houses a huge, highly polished sandstone image of Vishnu as the boar – Varaha. Carved in low relief on its body, 674 figures in neat rows represent the major gods and goddesses of the Hindu pantheon. Lord of the earth, water and heaven, the alert boar straddles Shesha the serpent, accompanied by what T.S. Burt (see box above) conjectured must have been the most beautiful form of Prithvi, the earth goddess – all that remains are her feet, and a hand on the neck of the boar. Above the image the lotus ceiling stands out in relief.

THE EROTIC ART OF KHAJURAHO PRURIENT EYES HAVE BEEN HYPNOTIZED BY THE UNABASHED EROTICA OF KHAJURAHO EVER SINCE ITS “REDISCOVERY” IN FEBRUARY 1838. A YOUNG BRITISH OFFICER OF THE BENGAL ENGINEERS, T.S. BURT, HAD DEVIATED FROM HIS OFFICIAL ITINERARY WHEN HE CAME UPON THE ANCIENT TEMPLES ALL BUT ENGULFED BY JUNGLE. FRANK REPRESENTATIONS OF ORAL SEX, MASTURBATION AND COPULATION WITH ANIMALS MAY HAVE FITTED INTO THE MORES OF THE TENTH-CENTURY CHANDELLAS, BUT, AS BURT RELATES, WERE HARDLY CALCULATED TO MEET WITH THE APPROVAL OF THE UPSTANDING OFFICERS OF QUEEN VICTORIA: “I FOUND ... SEVEN HINDOO TEMPLES, MOST BEAUTIFULLY AND EXQUISITELY CARVED AS TO WORKMANSHIP, BUT THE SCULPTOR HAD AT TIMES ALLOWED HIS SUBJECT TO GROW A LITTLE WARMER THAN THERE WAS ANY ABSOLUTE NECESSITY FOR HIS DOING; INDEED SOME OF THE SCULPTURES HERE WERE EXTREMELY INDECENT AND OFFENSIVE ... THE PALKI (PALANQUIN) BEARERS, HOWEVER, APPEARED TO TAKE GREAT DELIGHT AT THOSE, TO THEM, VERY AGREEABLE NOVELTIES, WHICH THEY TOOK CARE TO POINT OUT TO ALL PRESENT.”

Burt found the inscription on the steps of the Vishvanatha temple that enabled historians to attribute the site to the Chandellas, and to piece together their genealogy, but it was several years before Major-General Sir Alexander Cunningham produced detailed plans of Khajuraho, drawing the distinction between “western” and “eastern” groups. Cunningham thought all the sculptures “highly indecent, and most of them disgustingly obscene”.

TANTRIC CULTS TO CELESTIAL ENTERTAINMENT THE EROTIC IMAGES REMAIN THE SUBJECT OF A DISPROPORTIONATE AMOUNT OF CONTROVERSY AND DEBATE AMONG ACADEMICS AND CURIOUS TOURISTS ALIKE. THE TASK OF EXPLANATION IS MADE MORE DIFFICULT BY THE FACT THAT EVEN THE CHANDELLAS THEMSELVES BARELY MENTIONED THE TEMPLES IN THEIR LITERATURE, AND THE VERY NAME “KHAJURAH” MAY BE MISLEADING, SIMPLY TAKEN FROM THAT OF THE NEARBY VILLAGE.

Among attempts to account for the sexual content of the carvings have been suggestions of links with Tantric cults, which use sex as a pivotal part of worship. Some claim they were inspired by the Kama Sutra, and similarly intended to serve as a manual on love, while others argue the sculptures were designed to entertain the gods, diverting their wrath and thus protecting the temples against natural calamities. Alternatively, the geometric qualities of certain images have been put forward as evidence that each represents a yantra, a pictorial form of a mantra, for use in meditation.

The sixteen large panels depicting sexual union that appear along the northern and southern aspects of the three principal temples – Kandariya Mahadeva, Lakshmana and Vishvanatha – are mostly concerned with the junction of the male and the female elements of the temples, the mandapa and the garbha griha (the “womb”). They might therefore have been intended as a visual pun, elaborated by artistic licence.

Lakshmana

Beyond Varaha, adjacent to the Matangesvara temple across the boundary wall, the richly carved Lakshmana temple, dating from around 950 AD, is the oldest of the western group. It stands on a high plinth covered with processional friezes of horses, elephants and camels, as well as soldiers, domestic scenes, musicians and dancers. Among explicit sexual images is a man sodomizing a horse, flanked by shocked female onlookers. The sheer energy of the work gives the whole temple an astounding sense of movement and vitality.

While the plinth depicts the human world, the temple itself, the adhithana, brings one into contact with the celestial realm. Two tiers of carved panels decorate its exterior, with gods and goddesses attended by apsaras, “celestial nymphs”, and figures in complicated sexual acts on the lower tier and in the recesses. Fine detail includes a magnificent dancing Ganesh on the south face, a master architect with his students on the east, and heavenly musicians and dancers.

The mandapa and inner sanctum Successive pyramidal roofs over the mandapa and the porch rise to a clustered tower made of identical superimposed elements. Small porches with sloping eaves project from the mandapa and passageway, with exquisite columns, each with eight figures, at each corner of the platform supported by superb brackets in the form of apsaras. The inner sanctum, the garbha griha, is reached through a door whose lintel shows Vishnu’s consort Lakshmi, accompanied by Brahma and Shiva; a frieze depicts the Navagraha, the nine planets. Inside, the main image is of Vishnu as the triple-headed, four-armed Vaikuntha, attended by his incarnations as boar and man-lion.

Kandariya Mahadeva Sharing a common platform with other temples in the western corner of the enclosure, the majestic Kandariya Mahadeva temple, built between 1025 and 1050 AD, is the largest and most imposing of the western group. A perfect consummation of the five-part design instigated in Lakshmana and Vishvanatha, this Shiva temple represents the pinnacle of Chandellan art, its ornate roofs soaring dramatically to culminate 31m above the base in a shikhara consisting of 84 smaller replicas.

Kandariya Mahadeva is especially popular with visitors for the extraordinarily energetic and provocative erotica that ornaments its three tiers, covering almost every facet of the exterior. Admiring crowds can always be found in front of a particularly fine image of a couple locked in mithuna (sexual intercourse) with a maiden assisting on either side. One of Khajuraho's most familiar motifs, it seems to defy nature, with the male figure suspended upside down on his head; only when considered as if from above do the sinuous intertwined limbs begin to make sense.

The torana and the seven mothers An elaborate garland at the entrance to the temple, carved from a single stone, acts as a torana, the ritual gateway of a marriage procession. Both inside and out, lavish and intricate images of gods, goddesses, musicians and nymphs celebrate the occasion; within the sanctuary a dark passage leads to its central shivalingam. Niches along the exterior contain images of Ganesh, Virabhadra and the Sapta Matrikas, the seven mothers responsible for dressing the bridegroom, Shiva. Wrathful deities and fearsome protectors, the seven consist of Brahmi, a female counterpart of Shiva, seated on the swan of Brahma; a three-eyed Maheshvari on Shiva's bull Nandi; Kumari; Vaishnavi, seated on the bird Garuda; Varahi, the female form of Vishnu as the boar; Narasimhi, the female form of Vishnu as man-lion; and the terrifying Chamunda, the slayer of the asuras or "demons" Chanda and Munda, and the only one of the Sapta Matrikas who is not a female representation of a major male god.

Devi Jagadambi North of Kandariya Mahadeva along the platform, the earlier Devi Jagadambi temple is a simpler structure, whose outer walls lack projecting balconies. Originally dedicated to Vishnu, its prominent mandapa is capped by a massive pyramidal roof. Three bhandas (belts) bind the jangha (body), adorned with exquisite and sensuous carvings; the erotica on the third is arguably Khajuraho's finest. Vishnu appears throughout the panels, all decorated with sinuous figures of nymphs, gods and goddesses, some in amorous embrace. Some consider the image in the temple sanctum to be a standing Parvati, others argue that it is the black goddess Kali, known here as Jagadambi.

Between Kandariya Mahadeva and Jagadambi, the remains of Mahadeva temple shelter a 1m-high lion accompanied by a figure of indeterminate sex. Recurring throughout Khajuraho, the highly stylized lion motif, seen here rearing itself over a kneeling warrior with drawn sword, may have been an emblem of the Chandellas.

Chitragupta

Beyond the platform, and similar to its southern neighbour, Jagadambi, the heavily (and in places clumsily) restored Chitragupta temple is unusual in being dedicated to Surya, the sun god. Ornate depictions of hunting scenes, nymphs and dancing girls accompany processional friezes, while on the southern aspect a particularly vigorous ten-headed Vishnu embodies all his ten incarnations. Within the inner chamber, the fiery Surya rides a chariot driven by seven horses. The small and relatively insignificant temple in front of Chitragupta, also heavily restored and now known as Parvati, may originally have been a Vishnu temple, but holds an interesting image of the goddess Ganga riding on a crocodile.

Vishvanatha

Laid out along the same lines as Lakshmana, Vishvanatha, in the northeast corner of the enclosure – the third of the three main western-group shrines – can be precisely dated to 1002 AD as the work of the ruler Dhangadeva. Unlike some other temples at Khajuraho, which may have changed their presiding deities, Vishvanatha is most definitely a Shiva temple, as confirmed by the open mandapa pavilion in front of the main temple, where a monolithic seated Nandi waits obediently. Large panels between the balconies once more show mithuna, with amorous couples embracing among the sensuous nymphs. Idealized representations of the female form include women in such poses as writing letters, playing music and cuddling babies. Decorative elephant motifs appear to the south of Vishvanatha, and lions guard its northern aspect.

Matangesvara The simplicity of the Matangesvara temple, outside the complex gates, shows it to be one of Khajuraho's oldest structures, but although built early in the tenth century it remains in everyday use. Deep balconies project from the walls of its circular sanctuary, inside which a pillar-like shivalingam emerges from the pedestal yoni, the vulva – the recurring symbol of the union of Shiva. During the annual festival of Shivratri, the great wedding of Shiva and Parvati, the shrine becomes a hive of activity, drawing pilgrims for ceremonies that hark back to Khajuraho's distant past.

Chausath Yogini and around Southwest of Shiv Sagar are the remains of the curious temple of Chausath Yogini – the “Sixty-Four Yoginis”. Dating from the ninth century, it consists of 35 small granite shrines clustered around a quadrangle; there were originally 64 shrines, with the presiding goddess's temple at the centre. Only fourteen other temples, all in northern India, are known to have been dedicated to these wrathful and bloodthirsty female attendants of the goddess Kali. Around 1km further west lie the ruins of Lalguan Mahadev, a small temple dedicated to Shiva.

Temples: the eastern group East of the town • Daily sunrise–sunset • Free The two separate networks of temples that make up Cunningham's eastern group are reached via the two forks of the road east of the town. Although smaller than the western group temples, they feature workmanship that is equal or better, and are considerably less crowded. One is the tightly clustered Jain group, while slightly north are a number of shrines and two larger temples, Vamana and Javari, both dating from the late eleventh century.

The temples to the north On the north side of Jain Temples Road a more modern temple is home to a 2m-high image of monkey god Hanuman that may predate all of Khajuraho's temples and shrines. As the road forks left along the eastern shore of the murky Khajur Sagar lake, at the edge of Khajuraho village, it passes the remains of a single-room temple erroneously referred to as the Brahma temple. It is in fact a shrine to Shiva, as demonstrated by its chaturmukha – “four-faced” – lingam. While the eastern and western faces carry benign expressions, and the north face bears the gentler aspect of Uma, the female manifestation of Shiva, the ferocious southern face is surrounded by images of death and destruction. Crowning the lingam is the rounded form of Sadashiva, Shiva the Infinite at the centre of the cosmos.

Vamana temple The largest of the Khajuraho village temples, Vamana, stands alone in a field. Erected slightly earlier than the nearby Javari, in a fully evolved Chandella style, Vamana has a simple uncluttered shikhara that rises in bands covered with arch-like motifs. Figures including seductive celestial nymphs form two bands around the jangha, the body of the temple, while a superb doorway leads to the inner sanctum, which is dedicated to Vamana, an incarnation of Vishnu.

On the way to the Jain group, the road runs near what survives of a late tenth-century temple, known as Ghantai for its fine columns sporting bells (ghantai), garlands and other motifs.

The Jain group temples 1.5km southeast of Jain Temples Rd The temple of Parsvanath, dominating the walled enclosure of the Jain group, is probably older than the main temples of Khajuraho, judging by its relatively simple ground plan. Its origins are a mystery; although officially classified as a Jain monument, it may have been a Hindu temple that was donated to the Jains who settled here at a later date. Certainly, the animated sculpture of Khajuraho’s other Hindu temples is well represented on the two horizontal bands around the walls, and the upper one is crowded with Hindu gods in intimate entanglements. Among Khajuraho’s finest work, they include Brahma and his consort; a beautiful Vishnu; a rare image of the god of love, Kama, shown with his quiver of flower arrows embracing his consort Rati; and two graceful female figures. A narrow strip above the two main bands depicts celestial musicians playing cymbals, drums, stringed instruments and flutes. Inside, beyond an ornate hall, a black monolithic stone is dedicated to the Jain lord Parsvanath, inaugurated as recently as 1860 to replace an image of another tirthankara, Adinath.

Immediately north of Parsvanath, Adinath's own temple, similar but smaller, has undergone drastic renovation. Three tiers of sculpture surround its original structure, of which only the sanctum, shikhara and vestibule survive; the incongruous mandapa is a much later addition. Inside the garbha griha stands the black image of the tirthankara Adinath himself. The huge 4.5m-high statue of the sixteenth tirthankara, Shantinath, in his newer temple, is the most important image in this working Jain complex. With its slender beehive shikharas, the temple attracts pilgrims from all over India, including naked sadhus.

Sculpture in the small circular Jain Museum (Mon–Sat dawn–6pm; ₹10), at the entrance to the Jain temples, includes stone carvings of all 24 tirthankaras.

Temples: the southern group South of Khajuraho village • No fixed opening times • Free Khajuraho's southern group consists of three widely separated temples. The nearest to town, Duladeo, is down the road south of the Jain group, 1.5km from the main town square. Built early in the twelfth century, Duladeo bears witness to the decline of temple architecture in the late Chandellan period, noticeable particularly in its sculpture. Nonetheless, its main hall contains some exquisite carving, and the angular rippled exterior of the main temple is unique to Khajuraho.

Across the Khodar stream and south along a small road leads through the small village of Jatkra from where a path leads west to the temple of Bija Math. The structure lay below a suspiciously large mound of mud until 1998, when an excavation discovered the delicately carved platform. Unfortunately, the temple itself has disintegrated into the debris of ornate sculpture lying strewn around the site.

To get to the third, go back to Jatkra village and head south, past the Ram Spiritual Chai Shop until you get to the main road where you'll see the tapering temple of Chaturbhuji. A forerunner to Duladeo, built around 1100 AD and bearing some resemblance to the Javari temple of the eastern group, Chaturbhuji is plainer than Duladeo and devoid of erotica. A remarkable image of Vishnu, however, graces its inner sanctum. Either head back through Jatkra, or follow the main road west to where it meets Airport Road.

Raneh Falls

Around 22km northwest of Khajuraho • Daily dawn–dusk • Charge (there are additional charges if you want to bring an auto-rickshaw, car motorbike in with you) • An auto-rickshaw from Khajuraho costs around ₹450; a taxi costs around ₹1000

The Raneh Falls crash through a valley of black and pink basalt. Despite what you might be told, gharials (reptiles similar to crocodiles) are rarely seen here outside of the monsoon months, which is also when the falls are at their most spectacular (at other times they can be little more than a trickle). You can avoid the additional entry fees for auto-rickshaws and taxis by walking the 3.5km from the ticket office (around 45min).

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE THE KHAJURAHO AIRPORT IS 5KM SOUTH OF THE MAIN SQUARE OF KHAJURAHO TOWN AND SERVED BY AIR INDIA; TAXIS INTO TOWN ARE PRICEY THOUGH YOU CAN FLAG AN AUTO-RICKSHAW FROM THE MAIN ROAD.

Destinations Delhi (1–2 daily via Varanasi; 2hr 35min–2hr 50min); Varanasi (2 daily; 55min).

By train The railway station is 9km south of the town; a taxi into the centre costs around ₹500-600, an auto-rickshaw about ₹150. Tickets get booked up quickly, so plan well in advance. The only exception is the slow train to/from Orchha; tickets aren't available beforehand, but you can usually find a seat (note that you can also travel between Khajuraho and Orchha via Jhansi). For trains to a wider range of destinations, head to Satna, 125km east.

Destinations Agra (1 daily; 8hr 30min); Delhi (1 daily; 11hr 5min); Gwalior (1 daily; 6hr 15min); Jaipur (1 daily; 13hr 40min); Jaipur (1 daily; 13hr 25min); Jhansi (2 daily; 4hr 5min–8hr 20min); Orchha (3 daily; 4hr 20min–6hr); Udaipur (1 daily; 21hr 10min).

By bus The bus stand, less than 1km southeast of the main square, is within walking distance of most of the hotels but only has services to Bamitha (every 30min; 30min), 11km away on the main Indore highway, where you can find regular (usually full) services to Satna, Indore and even Jhansi. From Bamitha, (very) shared tempos and jeeps make the run up to Khajuraho or an auto-rickshaw costs around ₹100.

By taxi A taxi to Orchha costs around ₹3000 and to Satna ₹2000 or so. Ignore requests from drivers for extortionate “road tolls” and firmly agree a price first.

GETTING AROUND BY TAXI TAXIS AND RENTAL CARS ARE AVAILABLE THROUGH MOST HOTELS AND THE RAJA CAFÉ. A DAY’S SIGHTSEEING AROUND KHAJURAHO COSTS ABOUT ₹1000-1500.

By auto-rickshaw Auto-rickshaws charge around ₹600 for a full day of temple-spotting; cycle rickshaws cost about half this.

FESTIVALS AND DANCE IN KHAJURAHO
KHAJURAHO IS A BUSTLING EPICENTRE DURING PHALGUNA (FEB/MARCH), WHEN THE FESTIVAL OF MAHA SHIVRATRI DRAWS PILGRIMS FROM ALL OVER THE REGION TO COMMEMORATE THE MARRIAGE OF SHIVA AND PARVATI. IT ALSO HOSTS ONE OF INDIA’S PREMIER DANCE EVENTS, THE FREE KHAJURAHO FESTIVAL OF DANCE (FEB; 📍 KHAJURAHODANCEFESTIVAL.COM). THERE ARE SHOWS OF TRADITIONAL DANCES WITH LIVE MUSIC FROM THE LOCAL AREA AT THE TOURIST FACILITATION CENTRE NIGHTLY AT 6.30PM (CHARGE), WHILE THE MORE COMMERCIAL KHANDARIYA ART AND CULTURAL CENTRE (📞07686 274031), 1KM SOUTH OF THE TOWN CENTRE, HOSTS PERFORMANCES OF DANCES (CHARGE) FROM ACROSS INDIA MOST EVENINGS; ALTHOUGH THE DANCING IS INTERESTING, THE MUSIC ISN'T LIVE AND THEY SEEM MORE INTERESTED IN LURING YOU INTO THEIR OVERPRICED SHOP.

By bike Many places rent out bikes (around ₹100-200/day), including Mohammad Bilal (☎98932 40074) on Jain Temples Rd, who will deliver a bike to your hotel.

INFORMATION AND TOURS

Tourist information The MP Tourism office, in the Tourist Facilitation Centre (daily except Sun and 2nd and 3rd Sat of the month 10am–5pm; ☎07686 274051), provides local information and can book accommodation (including homestays) and car rental.

Guides Guides certified by MP Tourism and/or India Tourism cost up to ₹1400 per half day tour of the Western Group; there's a surcharge for tours in languages other than Hindi or English. Several recommended, highly experienced guides include Tantra expert Ganga, owner of the Harmony hotel (see below); Mr D.S. Rajput, Mr Mama and Mr Chandel, all three of whom can be contacted through the Raja Café; and Anurag Shukla (☎94251 43963, ✉mptskhajuraho@gmail.com).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

For travellers coming from elsewhere in Madhya Pradesh, Khajuraho's touts and commission system can be a shock. Avoid going into hotels with taxi- or auto-rickshaw drivers and be firm about where you want to stay. The sheer number of hotels means competition is fierce, so standards are high across the board and substantial discounts can be negotiated. The MP Tourism office (see above) can organize homestays in nearby villages such as Ram's in Jatkra village (☎098937 25885, ✉ram_jirai@yahoo.com; ₹₹) or the slightly more comfortable Bablu's Homestay (🌐khajuraho-homestay.jimdo.com; ₹) just north of Jatkra in Nouri Purwa village.

Harmony Jain Temples Rd 🌐hotelharmonyonline.com. The Mediterranean influence in the design lends an air of spaciousness to this long-established hotel, which has a range of budget and mid-range attached rooms – each airy and clean – and a bird-filled courtyard. A/c rooms cost extra. ₹₹₹

Jhankar By-Pass Rd 📞07686 274063, 🌐mpstdc.com. Away from the tourist and tout scrum near the western group, this well-kept, though dated, MP Tourism hotel is a big hit with Indian tourists. Clean a/c doubles are brightened up with paintings of the temples. ₹₹₹

★Lalit Temple View Main Rd 🌐thelalit.com. If money is no object, this is the place to stay. Sumptuous rooms look out either towards the temples or the enticing pool and shaded groves of mahua trees. The spa treatments are a real selling point and include Ayurvedic and Thai massage and reflexology. ₹₹₹₹

Osaka Off Jain Temples Rd 🌐facebook.com/Osaka-guest-house-436675149867848. A decent budget choice, Osaka has a handful of large, faded, attached rooms with tiled floors. Rooms vary, so look at a few; some come with ancient a/c units for extra. Mosquitoes can be a problem. ₹

Payal 1km across the fields northeast of the centre 🌐mpstdc.com; map p.357. Run by MP Tourism, this sleepy hotel has pleasant gardens and an inviting pool. While the rooms, all with mini-verandas and either fans or a/c, could do with a spruce-up, they're comfortable and include breakfast. ₹₹

Siddharth Opposite the western group 🌐hotelsiddharth.in. The staff at this mid-range hotel are amiable, but the attached rooms are a bit tired and frayed around the edges. Still, the a/c deluxe double (₹₹₹) at the front has wonderful temple views and the rooftop restaurant produces some of the town's best Indian food. ₹₹₹

Surya Jain Temples Rd 🌐hotelsuryakhajuraho.com. This popular and efficiently run hotel has clean and comfortable rooms (though hot water isn't available all day), a lush garden round which are more plush a/c rooms, a book exchange, yoga and massage sessions, and an outdoor veg restaurant. ₹₹

★Yogi Lodge On a cul-de-sac between the row of shops behind Raja Café 🌐yogilodge.in/. The shoestring rooms here are attached and clean, though somewhat austere; the a/c rooms are better. But you can't argue with the price, nor the laidback hippy vibe with free yoga and meditation sessions, nor the well-priced rooftop restaurant. ₹

Zen Jain Temples Rd 📍 hotelzenkhajuraho.co.in. The Zen-influenced garden complete with lotus ponds and pet rabbit is the focal point of this place, which has ageing but reasonable attached rooms with TVs and hot water. The on-site Italian restaurant serves great chocolate cake, and yoga and meditation classes. ₹₹

Zostel Main Rd 📍 zostel.com. This India-wide hostel chain has arrived in Khajuraho, offering clean, brightly-coloured dorms and private rooms (the latter have attached bathrooms), plus a terrace to lounge around in, economical café, and communal kitchen. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹

EATING

MAP

Many rooftop restaurants erroneously claim to have views of the evening sound-and-light shows – what you actually get are occasional flashes of light and a muffled soundtrack.

Agrasen Jain Temples Rd. The pot plant-filled, lantern-lit restaurant produces the typical traveller-oriented menu with a little more flair than the norm; there's a lot of choice for breakfast, plus veg and non-veg thalis (₹) and tasty lassis – try the coconut flavour. The Indian food is cooked to Western rather than local tastes, so ask if you want a bit more spice. Daily 6.30am–11pm.

Bella Italia Jain Temples Rd 📍 facebook.com/laBellaItaliaRestaurent. The rooftop Bella Italia is a more economical alternative to Mediterraneo for thin-crust pizzas, home-made pastas and crêpes. In the early evening, hundreds of parrots congregate in the neighbouring trees to make an almighty racket, before settling down for the night around 8pm. Daily 10.30am–11.30pm.

Blue Sky Main Rd 📍 facebook.com/blueskyrestaurantsakura. While it's a bit of a tourist trap, this rooftop restaurant offers a unique experience: a table in a (slightly precarious) treehouse (minimal extra charge) and ring the bell for service. Even if you don't have a head for heights, the thalis and Indian and Chinese dishes aren't bad. The refreshing jeevan rakshak ghol (mineral water, lime juice, sugar and salt) is hard to beat on a hot day. Daily 7am–11pm. ₹

Gagan & Cake Shop Airport Rd gagan-restaurant.business.site. This rooftop terrace and restaurant overlooking Shiv Sagar Lake is ideal for a sundowner with cocktails or a Kingfisher. There's also a menu of traveller classics such as banana pancakes and other Indian and Chinese favourites. Daily 9.30am–11pm. ₹

Madras Coffee House Jain Temples Rd 094253 42194. This modest, rather scruffy canteen is popular with locals and more recently foreign travellers (whose presence has pushed up the prices) for an authentic south Indian breakfast of dosas, vadas or uttapams as well as thalis. Daily 7.30am–10pm. ₹

★Mediterraneo Jain Temples Rd 089622 90523. Fairly authentic wood-fired, thin-crust pizzas, handmade pasta, home-baked bread, sweet and savoury crêpes, a superb Dutch-style apple pie and unparalleled espressos and cappuccinos make this the top joint in town. The specials on the board are often better than the pizza/pasta. Daily 7.30am–10pm. ₹₹

★Raja Café Main square 0rajacafe.com. A buzzing one-stop shop: as well as offering official guides, tours, a bookstore and the cleanest toilets in town, Raja also does a good line in Continental dishes such as rösti, mutton goulash and pizza as well as excellent, slightly cheaper Indian and Chinese options, Lavazza coffee and cold beer. Daily 9am–10.30pm. ₹₹

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE FOREIGN CURRENCY CAN BE CHANGED AT THE STATE BANK OF INDIA ON THE MAIN SQUARE (MON–FRI 10.30AM–2.30PM & 3–4.30PM, SAT 10.30AM–1.30PM); IT HAS AN ATM OPPOSITE SHIV SAGAR LAKE.

Post office The post office is in the Tourist Facilitation Centre.

Panna National Park 37km south of Khajuraho • Mid-Oct to June daily except Wed 6.30–10am & 2.30–5pm • Charge for a seating up to six tourists, plus charge for a compulsory safari guide • All buses running along the busy Indore–Satna highway pass the park, though it's much easier and cheaper to go on a tour from Khajuraho; several hotels and travel agencies, including Raja Café (see above), offer safaris, too. • pannatigerreserve.in

The chance of spotting tigers at the Panna National Park has greatly increased since the cats were relocated here from other parks after poachers killed off the entire population in 2006. There are currently around 35 tigers, though you'll still need a dose of luck to see one. Panna also boasts two hundred species of bird (it's a wonderful place for birders), as well as sloth bears, wolves and pythons and a waterfall. There are many tours available from Khajuraho, but for wildlife-spotting it's far better to stay a night at one of the lodges close to the park.

ACCOMMODATION MADLA JUNGLE PANNA NATIONAL PARK
CAMP NEXT TO THE PARK'S MADLA GATE •

MPSTDC.COM.COM. RUN BY MP TOURISM, THIS LODGE OFFERS ACCOMMODATION IN COMFORTABLE (THOUGH NOT PARTICULARLY ATTRACTIVE) "SWISS" TENTS WITH A/C AND ATTACHED BATHROOMS, AS WELL AS RELIABLE, IF UNEXCITING MEALS. STAFF CAN HELP ARRANGE SAFARIS. ₹ ₹ ₹

Sarai at Toria Near Toria village, 700m north of the road bridge, that leads across the river to the park gates • saraiattoria.com. Run by a wildlife expert and photographer and a renowned conservation biologist, this ecofriendly lodge on the west bank of the River Ken is the best place to stay in the area, with a collection of delightful cottages. Rates include full board and activities, but not safaris. ₹ ₹ ₹ ₹

Jabalpur and around After running in tandem across an endless expanse of wheatfields and tribal villages, the main Kolkata-to-Mumbai road and train lines converge on eastern Madhya Pradesh's largest city. However, JABALPUR, 330km east of Bhopal, is only really worth visiting en route to the Marble Rocks, gouged by the Narmada River nearby, or to the national parks and tiger reserves, Kanha, Bandhavgarh and Pench, all half a day's journey away.

Rani Durgawati Museum 2km west of the railway station, near Russel Chowk • Tues–Sun 9.30am–6pm • Charge, camera/video camera charge If you have some time to kill in Jabalpur, visit the Rani Durgawati Museum, which houses a predictable assortment of ancient temple sculpture, bronze plates and seals recording regional dynastic histories, plus a better than you might expect display on the state's adivasi minorities.

Madan Mahal and Tilwara Ghat Five kilometres west of the railway station in the direction of the Marble Rocks, the main highway skirts a large moraine of enormous granite boulders on the top of which stand the ruins of the Madan Mahal – a fortress-cum-pleasure-palace built by the Gond ruler Madan

Shah in 1116. A short excursion 7km south on the Nagpur road takes you to an impressive bridge spanning the Narmada River. Known locally as Tilwara Ghat, the handful of shrines near the water's edge below marks one of the sacred places where Mahatma Gandhi's ashes were scattered.

Marble Rocks Metrobus runs from Jabalpur to Marble Rocks (daily every 30min 6am–6pm; 30–40min) from the bus stand outside the platform 6 exit at the railway station (more packed local buses leave, on a similar schedule, from outside the main Jabalpur Medical College bus station); all arrive at the stand near the Dhuandhar Waterfall, a 10min walk (around ₹5 by auto-rickshaw) from accommodations – you can also get from Jabalpur to Bheraghat on excruciatingly slow and packed tempos (around 45min), on faster auto-rickshaws (around ₹300 or, if you can find one, by taxi (around ₹800) Around 20km west of Jabalpur, the Narmada River suddenly narrows, plunges over a series of dramatic waterfalls, then squeezes through a seam of milky white marble before continuing on its westward course across the Deccan. The 30m cliffs and globulous shapes worn by the water out of the rock may not be so spectacular, but the Marble Rocks, known locally as Bheraghat (or Bhedaghat), are a good place to while away an idle afternoon.

BOAT TRIPS FROM BHERAGHAT

From Bheraghat's main street, a flight of steps leads down to the river and the ghats, from where rowing boats (₹25-50/head on a shared basis; ₹₹300-600 for the whole boat) ferry visitors up the gorge, although these don't run during the monsoon (July to mid-Oct). Avoid the boatmen who try and squeeze in 25 passengers. Once underway, the boatman begins his spiel, in Hindi, pointing out the more interesting rock formations. The most appreciative noises from the other passengers are not reserved for the “monkey’s leap” (jumped over by Hanuman on his way to Lanka), but for the places used as Bollywood film locations. Look out for the enormous bees’ nests dangling from the crevices in the rock. The formations are floodlit after dark.

Bheraghat village Bheraghat village itself, overlooking the gorge, is a sleepy little place, with few signs of activity beyond the ringing of chisels in the workshops of its many marble-carvers. Most pieces on display in the shopfronts are heavy-duty Hanumans, shivalingams and various deities, destined for sites around India. Bheraghat is also something of a religious site. At the southern end of town, from the fork in the river, 107 stone steps lead up to the tenth-century Mandapur temple, a circular building known for the 64 beautifully carved Tantric goddesses, or Chausath Yogini, which stand in its enclosure.

Dhuandhar Waterfall No opening hours • Free • Cable car Daily 10.30am–6pm • ₹85 return trip • Buses from Jabalpur arrive here (see below) Beyond the Mandapur temple, at the far end of the gorge, the Dhuandhar Waterfall, or “Smoke Cascade”, is particularly dramatic after the monsoons. For the best views, unobstructed by the many day-trippers who crowd the viewing platform, there’s a short cable car that runs over the falls (entrance on the path down).

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY PLANE THE JABALPUR AIRPORT IS 21KM NORTHWEST OF THE CITY CENTRE; TAXIS TO JABALPUR COST AROUND ₹₹, AN AUTO-RICKSHAW AROUND HALF THAT. FLIGHTS ARE RUN BY AIR INDIA AND SPICEJET.

Destinations Delhi (2 daily; 1hr 55min); Mumbai (1 daily; 2hr 5min).

By bus The busy Interstate Bus Terminus (better known simply as the ISBT) is around 6km northwest of the railway station (an autorickshaw into the city centre costs approximately ₹100).

Destinations Kisli/Khatia (for Kanha National Park; 3 daily; around 6hr); Mandla (every 30min–1hr; 3hr).

By train The railway station is 2km east of the centre; an auto-rickshaw costs around ₹. For Khajuraho, you need to catch one of the early trains to Satna, from where you can take an onward bus. To reach Bandhavgarh National Park, take a train to Umaria, from where regular shared jeeps and taxis head to the park gate.

Destinations Bhopal (8–10 daily; 5hr 30min–11hr 15min); Delhi (3–5 daily; 13hr 55min–18hr 5min); Indore (2 daily; 10hr–13hr 47min); Mumbai (every 1–2hr; 14hr–21hr 39min); Nagpur (4–5 daily; 8hr 35min–9hr 50min); Patna (9–10 daily; 11hr 31min–17hr 50min); Satna (every 30min–1hr; 2hr 30min–4hr); Umaria (3 daily; 2hr 45min–3hr 50min); Varanasi (every 1–2hr; 9hr 30min–12hr 20min).

Car rental A car for a one-way trip to Kanha National Park costs around ₹3500. Most hotels can organize one, or try MP Tourism (see below). Note that taxis are not common in Jabalpur and so are often more expensive than usual.

Tourist information The MP Tourism office is inside the main arrivals hall at the railway station (Mon–Fri 10am–6pm, Sat 10am–2pm; mptourism.com); there's also a counter at the airport (☎ 07686 274648; opens to meet incoming flights). It runs boat cruises (daily 8am–7pm; 2–3hr; charge) on the Narmada River up to the Vergi Dam, 35km away.

Banks and exchange Change cash at the State Bank of India, around 1km west of the railway station, or at the Rishi Regency hotel opposite, which has a 24hr exchange counter. Note that there are a few ATMs but no exchange facilities at the tiger reserves.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING JABALPUR

India 592 Malviya Marg indiancoffeehousejabalpur.com. Owned by the cooperative behind the Indian Coffee House chain – and run with the same quiet professionalism – this hotel has well-appointed, very clean attached rooms with TVs and phones. 24hr checkout. ₹₹

Indian Coffee House India hotel, near Karamchand Chowk indiancoffeehousejabalpur.com. This branch offers top Chinese, south and north Indian meals and snacks (veg, non-veg, and filter coffee. There are four other branches around town, including one just south of the railway station on Sadar Rd, all with the same menu. Daily 8am–10.30pm. ₹

Kalchuri Residency Residency Rd 🌐mptourism.com. MP Tourism's welcoming hotel, just south of the railway station in the Civil Lines area of town, has careworn but ample a/c rooms, plus a pool, a decent restaurant and a bar. ₹₹₹

Narmada Jacksons Civil Lines 🌐narmadajacksons.com. The smartest place to stay in Jabalpur has a stately entrance and lobby. There's also a pool, Ayurvedic spa, sauna, steam room and restaurant. ₹₹₹₹

Utsav Russel Chowk 🌐hotelutsav.com. While Utsav's keenly priced rooms are pretty basic, their attached bathrooms, TVs and phones help to make them acceptable for a night, and a step up from the fleapits round the station. It's on the corner of a busy junction, so bring earplugs. 24hr checkout; no wi-fi. ₹

MARBLE ROCKS

Motel Marble Rocks Just off the road out to the falls 🌐mptourism.com. MP Tourism's pleasant motel occupies a converted colonial bungalow, complete with veranda, garden and easy chairs around a small pool from which to enjoy the vistas. The slightly more expensive tent rooms also have great views down the gorge, as does the restaurant. ₹₹₹

Kanha National Park Widely considered the greatest of India's wildlife reserves, Kanha National Park encompasses some 940 square kilometres of deciduous forest, savanna grassland, hills and gently meandering rivers – home to hundreds of species of birds and animals, including tigers. Despite the arduous overland haul to the park, few travellers are disappointed by its beauty, which is particularly striking at dawn. Tiger sightings are not guaranteed, but even a fleeting glimpse of one should be considered a great privilege. Moreover, the wealth of other creatures and some of central India's most quintessentially Kiplingesque countryside make it a wonderful place to spend a few days.

FROM HUNTERS TO POACHERS CENTRAL PORTIONS OF THE KANHA VALLEY WERE DESIGNATED A WILDLIFE SANCTUARY IN 1933. PREVIOUSLY, THE WHOLE AREA WAS ONE ENORMOUS VICEREGAL HUNTING GROUND, ITS GAME THE EXCLUSIVE PRESERVE OF HIGH-RANKING BRITISH ARMY OFFICERS AND CIVIL SERVANTS SEEKING TROPHIES FOR THEIR COLONIAL BUNGALOWS. NOT UNTIL THE 1950S THOUGH, AFTER A PARTICULARLY VORACIOUS HUNTER BAGGED THIRTY TIGERS IN A SINGLE SHOOT, DID THE GOVERNMENT DECLARE KANHA A BONA FIDE NATIONAL PARK. KANHA WAS ONE OF THE ORIGINAL PARTICIPANTS IN INDIRA GANDHI'S PROJECT TIGER, WHICH HELPED NUMBERS RECOVER. THE FOREST DEPARTMENT CLAIMS THERE ARE AROUND 78 TIGERS, BUT GUIDES AND NATURALISTS SAY 40 TO 45 IS A MORE ACCURATE ESTIMATE (FOR MOST OF INDIA'S TIGER RESERVES, HALVING THE OFFICIAL FIGURES WILL GENERALLY GIVE YOU A MORE REALISTIC IDEA). AS PART OF A LONG-TERM PROJECT, THE PARK HAS EXPANDED TO ENCOMPASS A LARGE PROTECTIVE BUFFER ZONE – A MOVE NOT WITHOUT ITS OPPONENTS AMONG THE LOCAL TRIBAL COMMUNITY, WHO DEPEND ON THE FOREST FOR FOOD AND FIREWOOD. OVER THE YEARS, THE AUTHORITIES HAVE HAD A HARD TIME RECONCILING THE NEEDS OF THE VILLAGERS WITH THE DEMANDS OF CONSERVATION AND TOURISM; BUT FOR THE TIME BEING AT LEAST, AN EQUITABLE BALANCE SEEMS TO HAVE BEEN STRUCK.

Yet serious challenges remain: although poaching is now largely under control here, it still remains a threat; illegal timber-felling continues; the buffer zone is increasingly being encroached upon; and there is little effort to check the growth of new hotels. There have also been problems when the big cats have strayed outside the park's boundaries and killed cattle and some local villagers have responded by leaving out poison. Visit the website of campaign organization Travel Operators for Tigers (toftigers.org) to find out what role travellers can play in protecting India's tigers.

From the main gates, at Kisli in the west, and Mukki, 35km away in the south, a complex network of driveable dirt tracks fans out across the park, taking in a good cross section of its diverse terrain. Which animals you see from your open-top jeep largely depends on where your guide decides to take you. Kanha is perhaps best known for the broad sweeps of grassy rolling meadows, or maidans, along its river valleys, which support large concentrations of deer. The park has several different species, including the endangered “twelve-horned” barasingha (swamp deer), plucked from the verge of extinction in the 1960s. The ubiquitous chital (spotted deer – the staple diet of Kanha’s tigers) congregates in especially large numbers during the rutting season in early July, when it’s not uncommon to see several thousand at one time.

The woodlands carpeting the spurs of the Maikal Ridge that taper into the core zone from the south consist of sal, teak and moist deciduous forest oddly reminiscent of northern Europe. Troupes of langur monkeys crash through the canopy, while gaur, the world’s largest wild cattle, forage through the fallen leaves; years of exposure to snap-happy humans seem to have left the awesome, hump-backed bulls impervious to camera flashes, but it’s still wise to keep a safe distance. Higher up, you may catch sight of a dhole (wild dog) as well as porcupines, pythons, sloth bears, wild boar, mouse deer or the magnificent sambar. You might even spot a leopard, although these shy animals tend to steer well clear of vehicles. Kanha also supports an exotic and colourful array of birds, including Indian rollers, bee-eaters, golden orioles, paradise flycatchers, egrets, some outlandish hornbills and numerous kingfishers and birds of prey.

Kanha’s tigers Kanha’s tigers are its biggest draw, and the jeep drivers and guides, who are well aware of this, scan the sandy tracks for pug marks and respond to the agitated alarm calls of nearby animals. Although the Kanha zone has been a prime site for spotting tigers in the past, at the time of research sightings here were less common here than in Kisli, Sarhi and Mukki. If you’re intent on seeing a tiger, plan on spending three nights at the park and taking around five excursions; the cats are most often spotted lounging among camouflaging brakes of bamboo or in the tall elephant grass lining streams and waterholes.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE THE KANHA NATIONAL PARK EASIEST WAY TO GET TO KANHA IS VIA JABALPUR, WHICH IS WELL CONNECTED BY AIR AND RAIL TO MOST OTHER PARTS OF THE COUNTRY. IT IS ALSO POSSIBLE TO TRAVEL VIA NAGPUR, 226KM AWAY, WHICH HAS A BUSY RAILWAY STATION AND AIRPORT.

By bus Daily buses leave Jabalpur for Kisli (via Mandla) at 6.30–7am, 10.30–11am and noon–12.30pm (around 6hr). All stop briefly at the barrier in Khatia, 4km down the road from Kisli. Buses back to Jabalpur leave Khatia at 6.15am, 8.30am and 1pm. There are more frequent departures in both directions from Mandla (2hr from Kanha, 3hr from Jabalpur). There are also daily buses to/from Nagpur (5hr) from nearby Balaghat. To get from the Khatia gate to the Mukki gate, you'll have to take the single daily noon bus to Bahihar (3hr), from where it's 15km to Mukki.

By taxi A taxi to/from Jabalpur costs around ₹3500 one way, or ₹1500 to/from Khatia gate to the Mukki gate.

INFORMATION OPENING HOURS KANHA IS OPEN DAILY EXCEPT WED AFTERNOON FROM OCT UNTIL THE MONSOON ARRIVES AT THE END OF JUNE (DAILY SUNRISE–11AM & 3/4PM–SUNSET; THE PARK IS ALSO OPEN FOR NIGHT-TIME SAFARIS AT CERTAIN TIMES OF THE YEAR).

Entry fees ₹₹/safari for the Kanha, Kisli, Sarhi and Mukki zones of the park, ₹100 for the Khatia, Khapa or Sijhora zones or ₹1750 for a night-time patrol for a jeep seating up to six tourists, plus ₹360/safari for a compulsory guide. Note that prices are scheduled to rise 10 percent every year. Tickets should be booked as far in advance as possible. For the shorter afternoon safaris, it is best to book a ticket for a zone that is close to your hotel – the Kisli, Sari and Kahna zones are close to the Khatia gate, while the Mukki zone, predictably enough, is close to the Mukki gate.

Jeep rental If you're not staying on a "Jungle Plan" package (see below) you will have to hire an open-top jeep – or "gypsy" (around ₹2000 for an afternoon safari) to get around the park. These are available through most hotels, private operators in Khatia or at the main gates: try and get a group together and book at least a day in advance. Jeeps can comfortably seat four people (excluding the guide and driver), although you can squeeze in six at a push. At the time of research, a maximum of 140 vehicles were allowed into the park/day; this number is likely to be reduced in the future. Note that walking inside the park is strictly forbidden.

ONLINE BOOKING FOR THE TIGER RESERVES

Top-end, mid-range and even some budget lodges at Kanha, Bandhavgarh, Pench, Satpura and Panna will take care of your park entry ticket if you have booked with them in advance – this is by far the easiest option and is strongly recommended. However, if you're planning to look for a place to stay on arrival (or are staying at a budget lodge that can't or won't book a ticket for you), you'll need to book an entry ticket yourself via the MP Online website (forest.mponline.gov.in). Tickets are limited, so do this as far in advance as possible, especially during the high season (Nov–Feb).

After selecting the relevant park, you can choose which area of that park you want to book a safari slot for and whether you want a morning or afternoon safari. On the form itself, in the “Vehicle” category, select “light motorised vehicle (LMV)”, though note that this doesn't mean that your vehicle is booked; you will still need to organize one via your lodge (something, again, that is worth doing in advance).

Money There is an ATM close to the Khatia gate, and another in Bahihar, 15km from the Mukki gate, but it is still worth bringing some money with you.

When to visit During peak season (Nov–Feb), the nights and early mornings can get very cold, and there are frequent frosts, so bring warm clothing. The heat between March and June keeps visitor numbers down, but tiger sightings are more common then, when the cats are forced to come out to the waterholes and streams.

ACCOMMODATION MP TOURISM HAS TWO LODGES IN KISLI, ATMOSPHERICALLY SITUATED INSIDE THE PARK PROPER, AND ONE CLOSE TO THE MUKKI GATE. PRIVATE HOTELS OUTSIDE THE WEST GATE, IN AND AROUND THE VILLAGE OF KHATIA, RANGE FROM WALK-IN BUDGET LODGES TO FIVE-STAR RESORTS, WHILE THOSE CLOSE TO MUKKI ARE GENERALLY HIGH-END PLACES; ALL SHOULD BE BOOKED SEVERAL DAYS IN ADVANCE (AND AT LEAST FOUR MONTHS IN THE HIGH SEASON). HOWEVER, AT ANY HOTEL IT'S WORTH ASKING ABOUT DISCOUNTS. THE KHATIA HOTELS ARE SCATTERED ALONG A 6KM STRETCH OF ROAD THAT SEES VERY LITTLE TRAFFIC DURING THE DAY, SO MAKE SURE YOU ARE DROPPED OFF AT THE RIGHT PLACE. AVOID VISITING DURING INDIAN HOLIDAYS SUCH AS DIWALI AND

HOLI, WHEN HOTELS ARE PACKED. A FEW HOTELS OFFER “JUNGLE PLAN” PACKAGES; THESE INCLUDE ACCOMMODATION, FOOD AND SAFARIS AND ARE ONLY SLIGHTLY MORE EXPENSIVE FOR TWO PEOPLE THAN FOR ONE. ASSUME ALL THE RESORTS HAVE RESTAURANTS, LIBRARIES, PROVIDE FREE BICYCLES, HAVE IN-HOUSE NATURALISTS/GUIDES (WHO CAN TAKE YOU ON CULTURAL/NATURE TOURS OUTSIDE THE PARK), AND ALL PRICES INCLUDE FULL BOARD FOR TWO PEOPLE UNLESS STATED.

AROUND KISLI GATE BAGHIRA LOG HUTS/TOURIST HOTEL KISLI 🌐 MPTOURISM.COM. MP TOURISM’S BAGHIRA LOG HUTS, IN THE CORE ZONE, HAS SPACIOUS A/C CHALETS WITH PRIVATE BATH; NOS. 1–8 OVERLOOK A MEADOW WHERE ANIMALS COME TO GRAZE. THE TOURIST HOTEL NEXT DOOR HAS A 24-BED DORM. DORM ₹₹, DOUBLES ₹₹₹₹

Kipling Camp 4km south of Khatia 🌐 kiplingcamp.com. A British-run camp in a secluded forest location offering five-star comfort, plus the company of Tara, the elephant made famous by Mark Shand’s book. Beautiful cottages have exposed wooden beams, cane chairs and private verandas, some of which overlook a small watering hole where animals often visit. There’s also a great photo-lined bar with a well-stocked library. ₹₹₹₹

Pugmark Resort Khatia 🌐 pugmarkresort.com. This family-run resort, set in overgrown gardens with a campfire at the centre, and a birdwatching tower, has cheerful and comfortable rooms, with fans or a/c. There’s also an attractive restaurant, open to non-guests. It’s a winding 10min walk from the main gate from where you can follow the signs. "Jungle Plan" for two ₹₹₹₹

Van Vihar Khatia, signposted 300m east from Khatia Gate 🌐 vanvihar.com. Stalwart budget choice with variable rooms that could be cleaner: the cheapest are pretty shabby, but the more expensive a/c ones (₹₹₹₹) are acceptable for the price. Meals and trips not included, but staff can help organize park entry tickets and jeep rental. ₹₹₹₹

AROUND MUKKI GATE CHITVAN 2KM FROM MUKKI GATE @ CHITVAN.COM. IN A PEACEFUL (AND A LITTLE HARD-TO-FIND) LOCATION SURROUNDED BY FIELDS, THE ATTRACTIVE CHITVAN IS ACCESSED VIA A SMALL BRIDGE OVER A LILY POND. AS WELL AS SPACIOUS, TASTEFUL ROOMS, IT HAS A LOVELY SWIMMING POOL, A MINI-SPA WITH AYURVEDIC MASSAGE, VEGETABLE AND HERB GARDENS, AND 14 ACRES OF GROUNDS IDEAL FOR AN IDLE WANDER OR A BIRDWATCHING SESSION. ₹₹₹₹

Kanha Safari Lodge Mukki @ mptourism.com. MP Tourism's tree-filled lodge on the quieter side of the park overlooks the river and has pristine a/c rooms with blue-tiled bathrooms, kettles and (rather redundant) TVs in villa-style buildings, plus a park information centre. ₹₹₹

★ Shergarh 4km from Mukki gate @ shergarh.com. Katie and Jehan Bhujwala run an intimate, environmentally friendly and socially responsible camp of luxury tents, each with a smart attached bathroom and private veranda. Outstanding service and thoughtful touches (such as personal hot water bottles for chilly early morning safaris) create a wonderfully serene environment. The excellent chef makes use of organic produce from the camp's butterfly-filled gardens, while the small lake in the centre is home to kingfishers and cormorants. Quite simply, it's one of the finest places to stay in India. "Jungle Plan" for two ₹₹₹₹

Singinawa 15km from Mukki gate @ singinawajunglelodge.com. Top-end lodge that combines an eco-friendly "plastic-free" ethos with luxury: accommodation is in tasteful isolated cottages (some with wheelchair access) in 100 acres of wildlife-filled grounds. There's also a lovely pool and organic food, and a small museum about the local tribes. It's decorated throughout with fantastic tribal art (the owner has a gallery in Delhi). "Jungle Plan" for two ₹₹₹₹ northeast of the state, has one of the highest relative densities of tigers of any of India's reserves and shelters some fascinating ruins. Although it's a long haul to Bandhavgarh from either Jabalpur (195km) or Khajuraho (237km), it's worth it – not only to track tigers but also, as all the accommodation is close to the park gates, to watch the array of birdlife from the comfort of your lodge.

Bandhavgarh National Park Madhya Pradesh's second national park, Bandhavgarh, tucked away in the hilly

Though there are flat grassy maidans in the south of the park, Bandhavgarh is predominantly rugged and hilly, with sal trees in the valleys, and mixed forest in the upper reaches, which shelter a diverse avian population. Bandhavgarh's headquarters and main gate are in the village of Tala, connected to Umaria, 32km southwest, by a road slicing through the park's narrow midriff.

On the whole, jeep safaris tend to stick to the core area where the chances of spotting a tiger (there are estimated to be more than 70) are high. Deer species include gazelle, barking deer, nilgai (blueball) and chital (spotted deer). Sloth bears, porcupines, sambar and muntjac also hide away in the forest, while hyenas, foxes and jackals appear occasionally in the open country. If you're very fortunate, you may catch sight of an elusive leopard. Look out too for some very exotic birds, including red jungle fowl, white-naped woodpecker, painted spurfowl and long-billed vultures.

The crumbling ramparts of the fort crown a hill in the centre of the park, 300m above the surrounding terrain. Its ramparts offer spectacular views and the best birdwatching in the park. Beneath the fort are a few modest temples, the rock-cut cells of monks and soldiers, and a massive stone Vishnu reclining on his cobra near a pool that dates from the tenth century.

Tigers may be found in the area; they're more likely to stick to the lower levels, and there are no instances of people actually being harmed by tigers here or even suddenly coming across them – but the risks are real nonetheless.

Brief history Legend dates the construction of Bandhavgarh's hilltop fort to the time of the epic Ramayana (around 800 BC). Excavations of caves tunnelled into the rock below the fort have revealed inscriptions scratched into the sandstone in the first century BC, from which time Bandhavgarh served as a base for a string of dynasties, including the Chandellas, responsible for the Khajuraho temples. They ruled here until the Bhagels took over in the twelfth century, staking a claim to the region that is still held by their direct descendant, the maharaja of Rewa. The dynasty shifted to Rewa in 1617, allowing Bandhavgarh to be slowly consumed by forest, bamboo and grasslands that provided prime hunting ground for the Rewa kings. The present maharaja ended his hunting days in 1968 when he donated the area to the state as parkland. In 1986, two more chunks of forest were added to the original core zone, giving the park a total area of 448 square kilometres.

CALL OF THE WILD FOR SERIOUS WILDLIFE ENTHUSIASTS, THERE ARE A FEW VERY EXPERIENCED NATURALISTS IN TALA, WHO CAN BE CONTACTED THROUGH YOUR HOTEL. S.K. TIWARI OF SKAY'S CAMP (@SKAYSCAMP.IN) SPECIALIZES IN NATURE PHOTOGRAPHY, AND HAS AN IMPRESSIVE KNOWLEDGE OF INDIAN FLORA AND FAUNA.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BANDHAVGARH NATIONAL PARK
BY TRAIN THE CLOSEST STATION TO BANDHAVGARH IS UMARIA, WHICH IS LINKED TO THE PARK BY SHARED JEEPS AND TAXIS, AS WELL AS A COUPLE OF MORNING BUSES (1HR). FOR TRAINS GOING WEST TO MUMBAI AND EAST TO KOLKATA OR CHENNAI YOU'LL NEED TO HEAD ANOTHER 64KM WEST TO KATNI, WHERE THERE ARE MORE FREQUENT TRAINS GOING NORTH TOO.

Destinations Agra (1–4 daily; 10hr 28min–13hr 49min); Bhopal (3 daily; 8hr 48min–14hr 20min); Delhi (2–4 daily; 13hr 43min–17hr 44min); Gwalior (1–3 daily; 9hr 2min–11hr 4min); Indore (1 daily; 17hr 59min); Jabalpur (3 daily; 2hr 38min–4hr 4min); Jhansi (2–4 daily; 6hr 56min–9hr 34min); Satna (for connections to Khajuraho; 4–5 daily; 2hr 59min–4hr 43min); Varanasi (2–3 daily; 11–12hr).

By taxi Travelling by taxi to and from Khajuraho or Jabalpur takes roughly 5hr.

INFORMATION OPENING TIMES BANDHAVGARH IS OPEN DAILY EXCEPT WED AFTERNOON FROM MID-OCT UNTIL THE END OF JUNE. YOU ARE MOST LIKELY TO SEE WILDLIFE IN THE HOTTER MONTHS BETWEEN MARCH AND JUNE, WHEN THIRSTY TIGERS AND THEIR PREY ARE FORCED OUT TO THE WATERHOLES AND THE PARK’S THREE PERENNIAL STREAMS; THE HEAT CAN BE TRYING AT THIS TIME, HOWEVER. VISITING IN THE COOLER MONTHS, WHEN WILDLIFE VIEWING IS STILL GOOD, IS MORE COMFORTABLE.

Entry fees The park headquarters is a few kilometres south of the village (daily except Wed; ☎07653 222214, 🌐bandhavgarh-national-park.com). Admission is ₹1500/safari for a jeep seating up to six tourists (in the core Tala zone where sightings are more common), plus ₹360/safari for a compulsory guide. Note that prices are scheduled to rise 10 percent every year. It’s possible to book online.

Jeeps Jeeps (gypsies) seating up to six people (₹2200-2500/safari) can be booked at the park headquarters or more easily through your hotel.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING MOST OF BANDHAVGARH’S HOTELS, ALL OF WHICH ARE IN AND AROUND TALA, CATER FOR TRAVELLERS ON A HIGHER BUDGET, AND SOME OFFER “JUNGLE PLAN” PACKAGES. THE ONLY PLACES TO EAT OUTSIDE THE HOTELS ARE THE BASIC AND INEXPENSIVE DHABAS ON TALA’S MAIN ROAD.

Bandhavgarh Jungle Lodge Close to the river ④ bandhavgarhjunglelodge.com. The rustic (but eminently comfortable) mud-walled huts with thatched roofs and brown and beige interiors, lush gardens and enthusiastic staff give this lodge plenty of character. Deer can often be seen at the nearby meadow. “Jungle Plan” for two ₹₹₹₹

Tiger’s Den Resort Opposite the petrol station on Umaria ④ tigerdenbandhavgarh.com. This efficient and friendly lodge has a cluster of large cottages with soothing decor (some with bathtubs) in flower-filled gardens, plus an atmospheric wooden dining room, spa and pool. ₹₹₹₹

Tiger Trails 2.5km beyond Tala; book through Indian Adventures ④ indianadventures.net. One of the better-value deals in Tala: cosy cottages have tiled roofs and exposed brickwork, while the alfresco dining room overlooks a little lake, which is great for birdwatching. Full-board ₹₹₹₹ ★Treehouse Hideaway Ketkiya Village ④ treehousehideaway.com.

Blending seamlessly into the surrounding jungle, these stunning treehouses, made from local materials, are far removed from anything you may have played in as a child, combining top-end comforts with a sense of adventure. The camp has 21 acres of forest and even its own watering hole, which is sometimes visited by tigers. “Jungle Plan” for two ₹₹₹₹

White Tiger Forest Lodge Umaria Rd, next to the barrier over the main road ④ mptourism.com. MP Tourism’s large complex has snug a/c and air-cooled attached rooms, linked by raised walkways, plus a restaurant and bar. Rooms 17–21 are in cottages with verandas overlooking the river, which attracts myriad birds and – very occasionally – tigers. Full board ₹₹₹₹

Pench Tiger Reserve Straddling both MP and Maharashtra (and far quieter than its more famous counterparts), Pench Tiger Reserve has an estimated fourteen to sixteen resident tigers and sightings are relatively common. The 758-square-kilometre park, made up largely of tropical deciduous forest, is also home to leopards, jackals, deer and 285 species of bird.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS PENCH TIGER RESERVE OR SHARED JEEP DAILY BUSES LINK JABALPUR (192KM; EVERY 2–3HR; 5HR) AND NAGPUR (92KM; EVERY 2–3HR; 2HR 30MIN) WITH KHAWASA, FROM WHERE YOU CAN CATCH A SHARED JEEP THE 12KM TO TURIA, WHICH IS 2KM AWAY FROM THE MAIN GATES AND MOST OF THE HOTELS.

By taxi A taxi from Jabalpur will cost around ₹4000. From Nagpur it will cost in the region of ₹3000.

INFORMATION OPENING TIMES THE PARK IS OPEN DAILY EXCEPT WED, DAWN TO DUSK, FROM OCT TO END OF JUNE.

Entry fees The park headquarters is near Turia (daily except Wed; penchtigerreserve.maharashtra.gov.in). Admission costs ₹2640 for a jeep seating up to six tourists, plus ₹360/safari for a compulsory guide. It is possible to book in advance online.

Jeeps Jeeps (₹2000-2200/safari) can be booked at the park headquarters or through your hotel; it's worth doing this in advance.

ACCOMMODATION KIPLING'S COURT TURIA MPTOURISM.COM. THIS MP TOURISM-RUN LODGE OFFERS NO-NONSENSE LODGINGS IN FAN-COOLED AND A/C ROOMS, AS WELL AS TWELVE GREAT-VALUE DORM BEDS, PLUS PLEASANT GROUNDS, A BAR AND A SMALL POOL. FULL BOARD; DORM ₹₹, DOUBLES ₹₹₹

Pench Jungle Camp Avarghani village, 2km west of Turia penchjunglecamp.com. Luxury tents with wicker furniture and attached bath-rooms, a handful of appealing cottages, some more traditional hotel rooms, plus a pool and spa offering massages and reflexology. Price includes full board and nature walks; safaris are extra. ₹₹₹₹

Indore

The state's economic powerhouse and the biggest city in western Madhya Pradesh, INDORE is huge, modern and pretty dull. If you find yourself with time to kill en route to or from Mandu, 98km southwest, however, you could stop and check out a couple of worthwhile sights.

Indore's sights lie west of the railway line, in and around the bazaar. Two broad thoroughfares, MG Road and Jawahar Marg, form the north and south boundaries of this cluttered and chaotic district, which is interrupted in the east by the confluence of the Saraswati and Khan rivers. The city's principal landmark is the eighteenth-century former Holkar palace of Raj Wada, which presides over a palm-fringed square in the heart of the city and boasts a seven-storey gateway. Most of the palace collapsed after a fire in 1984, and only the facade and a temple survive.

Kanch Mandir Off Jawahar Marg, in the clothes bazaar • Daily 6am–sunset • Free, no photography The Jain Kanch Mandir or “Mirror Temple”, deep in the bazaar district, is one of the city's more eccentric religious monuments; surprisingly, for a faith renowned for its austerity, the interior is decked with multicoloured glass mosaics.

Central Museum Indore Near the GPO on AB Rd • Tues–Sun 10am–5pm • www.indoreonline.in/city-guide/central-museum-indore • Charge The Central Museum Indore houses an intriguing collection of Holkar-era swords, shields and armour, as well as terracotta, coins, paintings and fossils collected from throughout Madhya Pradesh. There is also a smaller display of modern art and religious sculptures.

Lal Bagh Palace Just off BLC Marg • Tues–Sun 10am–5pm • Charge The Lal Bagh Palace is an extravagant Neoclassical creation. Given a limitless budget, its British designers produced a vast stately home dripping with Doric columns, gilt stucco, crystal chandeliers and replica Rococo furniture. The Lal Bagh's main entrance is via a pair of grandiose wrought-iron gates, modelled on those at Buckingham Palace. Inside, a vast array of family heirlooms is housed in the former durbar hall, banquet rooms and the ballroom. Check out the jewel-encrusted portrait of Tukoji Rao (1902–25) – the ruler responsible for completing the palace – in the billiards room.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY PLANE DEVI INDORE
AHILYABAI HOLKAR AIRPORT IS 11.5KM WEST OF THE CITY

CENTRE; A PREPAID TAXI FROM THE BOOTH IN THE ARRIVALS HALL INTO TOWN COSTS AROUND ₹500.

Destinations Ahmedabad (1 daily; 1hr 15min); Delhi (7–8 daily; 1hr 25min); Mumbai (4–5 daily; 1hr 15min); Nagpur (1 daily; 1hr); Raipur (2 daily; 1hr 10min).

By train The railway station is right in the city centre; two branches of the Western Railway connect Indore to cities in northern India.

Destinations Agra (2–4 daily; 12hr 55min–16hr); Ahmedabad (1–2 daily; 10hr); Bhopal (7–9 daily; 3hr 50min–6hr 5min); Delhi (2–3 daily; 13hr 6min–20hr 10min); Gwalior (2–4 daily; 11hr–12hr 10min); Jabalpur (2 daily; 10hr–13hr 10min); Jaipur (2 daily; 9hr 55min–10hr 45min); Jhansi (1–2 daily; 9hr–10hr 30min); Mumbai (2–3 daily; 12hr 49min–14hr 20min); Ujjain (roughly hourly; 1hr 20min–2hr 30min).

By bus The main bus stand, Sarawate, is a short walk south from platform 1 of the railway station beyond the overpass; regular buses to Bhopal and Omkareshwar depart from here. Other buses – including those to Ujjain, Dhamnod (for connections to Maheshwar), Mandu and Dhar (connected to Mandu by buses every 30min) – depart from the Gangawal bus stand, 3km west.

Destinations Bhopal (every 30min; 4–5hr); Dhamnod (every 30min–1hr; 2–3hr); Dhar (every 30min–1hr; 2hr); Mandu (2 daily; 3hr 30min–4hr); Omkareshwar (every 30min–1hr; 3–4hr); Ujjain (every 30min–1hr; 1hr 30min–2hr).

By taxi Taking a taxi is much easier than struggling on the local buses and cost around ₹1700 to Ujjain or ₹2300 for one to Mandu, Maheshwar or Omkareshwar.

Tourist information The MP Tourism office (Mon–Sat 10am–6pm; ☎0731 249 9566), close to St Paul's High School on Agricultural College Rd, provides the usual services, and is where the MP Tourism a/c coach departs for Indore (7 daily; 4hr).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Most of Indore's hotels cater for business visitors and are scattered around the prosperous suburb of Tukoganj. Budget travellers should ignore the dire lodges opposite the bus stand, and head for the better-value hotels along Chhoti Gwaltoli, just east of the railway station beneath the big Patel flyover (though note that not all are willing to accept foreign travellers).

Ginger AB Rd, near Shanivar Darpan 📍gingerhotels.com. The Indore outpost of this chain of mid-range hotels is a reliable choice: service is efficient, the attached rooms have flatscreen TVs, and there is a Café Coffee Day on site. The only downside is the location, a 10–15min (6km) auto-rickshaw ride north of the railway station. ₹₹₹

★Lemon Tree RNT Rd 📍lemontreehotels.com. With a bright yellow exterior, smart service and sleek attached rooms set around a vast atrium decorated with modern art, this is the pick of Indore's top-end hotels. There's a restaurant, café, sports bar and fitness centre, and the rooms have nice touches like ergonomic chairs and orthopaedic mattresses. ₹₹₹

Neelam 33/2 Patel Bridge Corner 📞0731 246 6001. Despite its location on a dingy alley, this is the best of the budget options. Lining a central courtyard, the compact rooms with tiny attached bathrooms (some have squat toilets) are pretty clean and have TVs and phones. 24hr checkout. ₹₹

Surya 5/5 Nath Mandir Rd 📍suryaindore.com. While the rooms at this established mid-range hotel are showing their age, they're still comfortable, particularly those in the "executive" class (well worth the extra). Service is good, and there's an excellent multi-cuisine restaurant and bar. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Celebration RNT Rd, in the annexe to the right of the Shreemaya hotel 📍hotelshreemaya.business.site. A hygienic bakery and café renowned for its sweet goodies, including cavity-inducing Black Forest, pineapple and chocolate truffle cakes, as well as south Indian snacks such as katchoris. Daily 8.30am–9.30pm.

Indian Coffee House Next to Rampura Building, off MG Rd 📍indiancoffeehousejabalpur.com. Waiters in turbans and cummerbunds serve quality south Indian veg breakfasts, north Indian meals) and filter coffee (from ₹). Other branches on BJ Nagar and the DAVV College campus.. Daily 7am–10.30pm. ₹

Mr Beans 100 Saket Nagar 📍mrbeans.in. A gorgeous, stylish café-restaurant ideal for wiling away an afternoon or evening, Mr Beans has top notch coffee, as well as a globetrotting menu that features everything from baked brie to chicken schnitzel, pizzas to shepherd's pie. Daily 10.30am–10.30pm. ₹₹

Shree Guru Kripa 54 Vijay Nagar, opposite Bombay Hospital 📍 gurukripaindore.com. Popular veg joint serving up value-for-money dishes in a smart, clean and spacious dining hall: try one of the tasty paneer dishes. There's another branch near the bus station. Daily 10am–midnight. ₹

★Shreemaya Shreemaya hotel, 12 RNT Rd 📍 hotelshreemaya.business.site/. Adjoining veg and non-veg restaurants with curvy Art Deco-style ceilings, frosted glasswork and mouthwatering north and south Indian food: the vast chicken biryani, missi roti and – if you have any space left – chocolate brownie and ice cream are not to be missed. Daily 7am–11pm. ₹₹

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE THE STATE BANK OF INDORE HAS A FOREIGN EXCHANGE OFFICE OPPOSITE THEIR MAIN BRANCH ON RAJ WADA, AND HAS AN ATM ON RNT RD. ICICI BANK, 576 MG RD, AND THOMAS COOK (📞07316 454533, 📍THOMASCOOK.IN), YESHWANT NIWAS RD, ARE EFFICIENT ALTERNATIVES. THERE ARE COUNTLESS OTHER ATMS THROUGHOUT THE CITY.

Travel agents President Travels at President hotel, 163 RNT Rd (📞0731 423 2425) is a reliable operator.

Mandu

Set against the rugged Vindhya hills, the medieval ghost town of MANDU, 98km southwest of Indore, is one of central India's most atmospheric monuments. This tranquil backwater sees far fewer visitors than it deserves, save for the busloads of exuberant Indian day-trippers on weekends. Visit at the height of the monsoons, when the rocky plateau and its steeply shelving sides are carpeted with green vegetation, and you'll understand why the Malwa sultans christened their capital Shadiabad – “City of Joy”.

Even during the relentless heat of the dry season, the ruins are an exotic spectacle. Elegant Islamic palaces, mosques and mausoleums crumble beside large medieval reservoirs and precipitous ravines, while below, an endless vista of scorched plains and tiny villages stretches off to the horizon. Mandu can be visited as a day-trip from Indore, but you'll enjoy it more if you spend a night or two, giving you time not only to explore the ruins, but also to witness the memorable sunsets over the Narmada Valley.

Mandu's monuments derive from a unique school of Islamic architecture that flourished here, and at Dhar, between 1400 and 1516. The elegantly simple buildings are believed to have exerted a considerable influence on the Mughal architects responsible for the Taj Mahal. Mandu's platform, a 23-square-kilometre plateau, is separated from the body of hills to the north by the Kakra Khoh ("deep ravine"). A narrow causeway forms a natural bridge across the gorge, carrying the present road across and up via a series of subsidiary gates to the fort's modern entrance, beside the original, Delhi Gate.

Brief history Archeological evidence suggests the remote hilltop was fortified around the sixth century AD, when it was known as Mandapa-Durga, or "Durga's hall of worship" – later corrupted to "Mandu". Four hundred years later, the site gained in strategic importance when the powerful Paramaras moved their capital from Ujjain to Dhar, 35km north. Yet the plateau's natural defences proved unable to withstand persistent attacks by the Muslim invaders and the fort eventually fell to the sultans of Delhi in 1305.

While the Sultanate was busy fending off the Mongols on their northern borders a century or so later, Malwa's Afghan governor, Dilawar Khan Ghuri, seized the chance to establish his own independent kingdom. He died after just four years on the throne, however, leaving his ambitious young son at the helm. During Hoshang Shah's illustrious 27-year reign, Mandu was promoted from pleasure resort to royal capital, and acquired some of the finest Islamic monuments in Asia.

Mandu's golden age continued under the Khaljis, who took over from the Ghuri dynasty in 1436. Another building boom and several protracted wars later, Mandu settled down to a lengthy period of peace and prosperity under Ghiyath Shah (1469–1500). He amassed a harem of fifteen thousand courtesans, and a bodyguard of one thousand women, whom he accommodated in the appropriately lavish Jahaz Mahal. The sybaritic sultan was poisoned by his son shortly after his 80th birthday. His successor, Nasir Shah, died ten years later, and Mandu, dogged by feuds and the threat of rebellion, became an easy target for the militaristic sultan of Gujarat, who invaded in 1526. In the centuries that followed, control over the fort and its rapidly decaying monuments passed between a succession of independent rulers and the Mughals. By the time King James I's ambassador, Sir Thomas Roe, followed the mobile court of Emperor Jahangir here in 1617, most of the city lay in ruins, its mansions and tombs occupied by Bhil villagers whose descendants continue to scratch a living from the surrounding fields.

Royal Enclave Daily except Fri sunrise–sunset • Charge, video camera charge Reached via the lane that leads west off the village square is the Royal Enclave. Just inside the entrance is a bookshop and a small museum (free) with a modest collection of stone carvings and pottery fragments. The Royal Enclave is dominated by Ghiyath Shah’s majestic Jahaz Mahal, or “Ship Palace”. The name derives from its unusual shape and elevated situation on a narrow strip of land between two large water tanks. A rooftop terrace, crowned with four domed pavilions, overlooks Munja Talao lake to the west, and the square, stone-lined Kapur Sagar to the east. From the northern balcony, you also get a good view of the geometric sandstone bathing pools.

The next building along the lane is the Hindola Mahal, or “Swing Palace” – so-called because its distinctive sloping walls supposedly look as though they are swaying from side to side. The design was, in fact, purely functional, intended to buttress the graceful but heavy stone arches that support the ceiling inside. At the far end of the T-shaped assembly hall, a long-stepped ramp allowed the sultan to reach the upper storey on elephant-back.

Champa Baodi Sprawling over the northern shores of Munja Talao are the dilapidated remains of a second royal pleasure palace. The Champa Baodi boasts an ingeniously complex ventilation and water-supply system, which kept its dozens of subterranean chambers cool during the long Malwan summers. Immediately to the north stands the venerable Mosque of Dilawara Khan, dating from 1405. The chunks of Hindu temple used to build its main doorway and colonnaded hall are still very evident.

The Hathi Pol, or “Elephant Gate”, with its pair of colossal, half-decapitated elephant guardians, was the main entrance to the Royal Enclave but is now closed. To reach the edge of the plateau and the grand Delhi Gate you will have to return to the bazaar and follow the road out of Mandu. Built around the same time as Dilawara Khan’s mosque, this great bastion, towering over the cobbled road in five sculpted arches, is the most imposing of the twelve that stud the battlements along the fort's 45km perimeter.

The village group Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge, video camera charge Some of the fort's best-preserved buildings are clustered around the village. Work on the magnificent pink-sandstone mosque, the Jama Masjid on the west side of the main square, commenced during the reign of Hoshang Shah and took three generations to complete. Said to be modelled on the Great Mosque in Damascus, it rests on a huge raised plinth pierced by rows of tiny arched chambers – once used as cells for visiting clerics. Beyond the ornate jali screens and bands of blue-glazed tiles that decorate the main doorway, you emerge in the Great Courtyard, where a prayer hall at the far end is decorated with finely carved Koranic inscriptions.

Hoshang Shah's tomb (c.1440), behind the Jama Masjid, is this group's real highlight. It stands on a low plinth at the centre of a square-walled enclosure, and is crowned by a squat central dome and four small corner cupolas. Now streaked with mildew and mud washed down from the bats' nests inside its eaves, the tomb is made entirely from milky-white marble – the first of its kind in the Subcontinent. The interior is very plain, save the elaborate pierced-stone windows that illuminate Hoshang's sarcophagus.

The Ashrafi Mahal, or "Palace of Coins", was a theological college (madrasa) that the ruler Muhammad Shah later converted into a tomb.

Around Sagar Talao lake Heading south from the village group en route to the Rewa Kund group, you will find a further handful of monuments scattered around the fields east of Sagar Talao lake. Dating from the early fifteenth century, the Mosque of Malik Mughis is the oldest of the bunch, once again constructed using ancient Hindu masonry; note the turquoise tiles and fine Islamic calligraphy over the main doorway. The high-walled building opposite was a caravanserai, where merchants and their camel trains would rest during long treks across the Subcontinent. A short way south, the octagonal tomb known as the Dai-ki-Chhoti Bahan-ka-Mahal looms above the surrounding fields from a raised plinth, still retaining large strips of the blue ceramic tiles that plastered most of Mandu's beautiful Afghan domes.

The Rewa Kund group Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge, video camera charge The road to the Rewa Kund Group heads past herds of water buffalo grazing on the muddy foreshores of the lake, then winds its way gently through a couple of Bhil villages towards the far southern edge of the plateau; stately old baobabs line the roadside, like giant upturned root vegetables. The Rewa Kund itself, an old stone tank noted for its curative waters, lies 6km south of the main village. Water from it used to be pumped into the cistern in the nearby Baz Bahadur Palace. Bahadur, the last independent ruler of Malwa, retreated to Mandu to study music after being trounced in battle by Rani Durgavati. Legend has it that he fell in love with a Hindu singer named Rupmati, whom he enticed to his hilltop home with an exquisite palace. The couple eventually married, but did not live happily ever after. When Akbar heard of Rupmati's beauty, he dispatched an army to Mandu to capture her and the long-coveted fort. Bahadur managed to slip away, but his bride, left behind in the palace, poisoned herself rather than fall into the clutches of the attackers.

Rupmati Pavilion The romantic Rupmati Pavilion, built by Bahadur for his bride-to-be, rests on a ridge high above the Rewa Kund; beneath its lofty terrace, the plateau plunges a sheer 300m to the Narmada Valley. The view is breathtaking, especially at sunset or on a clear day.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS ALTHOUGH MANDU
THERE ARE A COUPLE OF DIRECT BUSES TO MANDU FROM INDORE (2 DAILY; 3HR 30MIN–4HR), IT’S OFTEN QUICKER TO TRAVEL TO DHAR (EVERY 30MIN–1HR; 2HR) AND PICK UP
ONE OF THE LOCAL SERVICES TO MANDU (EVERY 30MIN; 1HR) FROM THERE. FOR MAHESHWAR OR OMKARESHWAR,
TAKE THE 9AM OR 9.30AM BUS TO DHAMNOD (2HR 30MIN)
AND CHANGE THERE, OR ELSE YOU’RE LOOKING AT MULTIPLE BUS CHANGES BY TAXI A TAXI TO MANDU FROM INDORE SHOULD COST AROUND ₹2200, AND ₹1200 TO MAHESHWAR. A RELIABLE (AND INEXPENSIVE) TAXI DRIVER
IN MANDU IS SANU (☎99533 45418), WHO ALSO RUNS TOURS AND RENTS OUT BICYCLES.

GETTING AROUND BY BIKE AND TAXI IF YOU DON’T HAVE YOUR OWN VEHICLE, THE MOST PLEASANT WAY OF GETTING AROUND THE FORT AND ITS WIDELY DISPERSED
MONUMENTS IS BY BICYCLE – AROUND ₹/DAY FROM MALWA RESORT (SEE OPPOSITE), OR RITIK BICYCLE SHOP, NEAR SHIVANI RESTAURANT. ALTERNATIVELY, RENT A TAXI FOR A COMPLETE TOUR (AROUND ₹1000).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Ajooba Guest House Around 1km south of the village ☎ facebook.com/people/Ajooba-Huts-Resort/100063552267228/. The quietest of the village’s three budget guesthouses, this old-school travellers’ haunt has five basic, non-attached blue-painted concrete rooms (the beds are concrete too) with no hot water or wi-fi. Despite being just metres from the road, it’s a very peaceful spot, with fields behind, and mellow owners. ₹

Malwa Resort 2km south of the village ☎mptourism.com. This MP
Tourism-run hotel is by some distance the most comfortable choice in town.
It has a collection of a/c cottages, many with lake-facing verandas and separate seating and dressing areas and fridges. There’s also a good restaurant and a bar. ₹₹₹

Malwa Retreat 300m north of the main square ☎mptourism.com. The ageing air-cooled and a/c rooms at this MP Tourism-run hotel are clean and compact, with partial views of the gorge, more comfortable “Swiss” tents and thirty good-value dorm beds. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹, tents ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Hotal Sawariya Just south of the Jama Masjid. This basic family-run roadside dhaba is often called Karuba’s after the white-lunghied patriarch who presides over proceedings, perched atop the clay chapatti oven. Always busy with locals and long-term visitors despite a limited menu of veg thali, samosas, pakoras and outstanding curd/lassi. The locals eat it all very spicy, but they will happily tone it down a tad if you struggle with the heat. You can eat well here for very little. Daily 24hrs. ₹

Malwa Resort 2km south of the square @ mptourism.com. One of the smarter restaurants in town, serving the usual MP Tourism menu: meat and veg Indian and Chinese dishes, with a few Continental options thrown in for good measure. They also serve local specialities such as dalbafle, deep-fried balls of yellow dhal, and have a dinner buffet. Daily 8–10am, noon–3pm & 7–10.30pm. ₹₹

Shivani Halfway between the square and the Nagar Panchayat barrier @ facebook.com/people/Shivani-Restaurant/100035437766484/. Not the best, but this modest restaurant has a wider range of food than most of its competitors in Mandu, with dishes from north and south India, as well as tasty Gujarati-style thalis. It’s near the bus stop, so is a good place to get your bearings. Daily 5am–7pm. ₹

Ujjain

On the banks of the sacred Shirpa River, UJJAIN, 55km north of Indore, is one of India’s seven holiest cities. Like Haridwar, Nashik and Prayag, it plays host every twelve years to the country’s largest religious gathering, the Kumbh Mela, which has in the past drawn an estimated thirty million pilgrims here to bathe. Outside festival times, Ujjain is great for people-watching, as pilgrims and locals alike go about their daily business. Around the main temples, you see modern Hinduism at its most kitsch, with all types of devotional paraphernalia, gaudy lighting and plastic flower garlands for sale. At the ghats, women flap wet saris dry, children splash in the water, and pujaris ply their trade beneath the rows of riverside shrines. A mini-Varanasi Ujjain is not, but the temples rising behind the ghats are majestic at dusk, and with the ringing of bells and incense drifting around, this atmospheric place can feel timeless.

The Western Railway cuts straight through the centre of Ujjain, forming a neat divide between the spacious and affluent residential suburbs to the south and the more interesting, densely packed streets northwest of the station. Unless you spend all day wandering through the bazaar, sightseeing in Ujjain usually means treading the temple trail, with a brief foray south of the ghats to visit the Vedha Shala observatory. Minor temples of note include Harsiddhi Mandir, which Hindu mythology identifies as the spot where Parvati's elbow fell to earth while Shiva was carrying her burning body from the sati pyre, and Gopal Mandir, a blend of late Maratha Mughal domes, Moorish arches and a lofty Hindu sanctuary tower – the sanctum's silver-plated doors were fitted by Mahaji Scindia, who rescued them from Lahore after they were carried off by Muslim looters.

Brief history Excavations north of Ujjain have yielded traces of settlement as far back as the eighth century BC. The ancient city was a major regional capital under the Mauryans (Ashok was once governor here), when it was known as Avantika and lay on the main trade route linking northern India with Mesopotamia and Egypt. According to Hindu mythology, Shiva later changed its name to Ujjaiyini, “He Who Conquers With Pride”, to mark his victory over the demon king of Tripuri. Chandra Gupta II, renowned for his patronage of the arts, also ruled from here in the fourth and fifth centuries AD. Among the Nava Ratna, or “Nine Gems”, of his court was the illustrious Sanskrit poet Kalidasa, whose much-loved narrative poem Meghduta (“Cloud Messenger”) includes a lyrical evocation of the city. (E.M. Forster visited Ujjain in 1914, determined to get an idea of what it looked like in Kalidasa's day. He soon admitted defeat, declaring: “Old buildings are buildings, ruins are ruins.”) Most of Ujjain's temples were razed in 1234 by Iltutmish, of the Delhi Slave Dynasty. Thereafter, the Malwan capital was governed by the sultans of Mandu, the Mughals, and Raja Jai Singh from Jaipur, who designed the Vedha Shala observatory (Ujjain straddles the Hindu first meridian of longitude). Ujjain's fortunes have declined since the early eighteenth century, except for a sixty-year renaissance between the arrival of the Scindias in 1750 and their departure to Gwalior. Today, nearby Indore dominates the region's industrial activity, leaving Ujjain to make its living by more traditional means.

Mahakaleshwar Mandir Overlooking the river • Daily 3am–11pm • Free, though you can pay for a ticket that allows you to jump the lengthy queues Ujjain's chief landmark, the Mahakaleshwar Mandir, crowning a rise above the river, is the logical place to start a tour of the town and its temples. Its gigantic saffron-painted sanctuary tower, a modern replacement built by the Scindias in the nineteenth century for one destroyed by Iltutmish in 1234, soars high above a complex of marble courtyards, water tanks and fountains, advertising the presence below of one of India's most powerful shivalingams. Housed in a claustrophobic subterranean chamber, the deity is one of India's twelve jyotirlinga – “lingam of light” – whose essential energy, or shakti, is “born of itself”, rather than from the rituals performed around it, and is considered particularly potent, especially by Tantric followers, due to its unusual south-facing position.

five instruments to formulate ephemerides (charts predicting the positions of the planets), which you can buy at the site.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY TRAIN THE STATION, UJJAIN WHICH SITS ON BOTH BRANCHES OF THE WESTERN RAILWAY, IS IN THE CENTRE OF TOWN.

Destinations Bhopal (every 1–2hr; 2hr 40min–5hr 10min); Gwalior (3–4 daily; 9hr 18min–13hr 25min); Indore (roughly hourly; 1hr 20min–2hr 30min); Jabalpur (2–3 daily; 9hr 5min–13hr 30min); Jaipur (4–7 daily; 8hr 16min–15hr); Mumbai (3–4 daily; 10hr 30min–12hr 45min).

By bus Just northeast of the railway station is the Dewas bus stand, which sees services to and from Bhopal, Dhar (for connections to Mandu and Maheshwar) and Omkareshwar. The inconvenient Deva Gate/Nanakheda bus stand, next to MP Tourism’s Avantika, 2km south of town, serves Indore.

Destinations Bhopal (every 15–30min; 5–6hr); Dhar (4 daily; 4hr); Indore (every 15–20min; 1hr 30min–2hr); Omkareshwar (5 daily, including a handy service at 9am; 3hr–3hr 30min).

Tourist information The useful MP Tourism office is near the Mahakaleshwar Mandir (Mon–Fri 11am–8pm, Sat 11am–7pm, Sun 11am–1pm; www.ujjain.nic.in/en/contact-us/).

GETTING AROUND BY AUTO-RICKSHAW OR BICYCLE UJJAIN IS FAIRLY SPREAD OUT, SO YOU’LL NEED TO GET AROUND BY AUTO-RICKSHAW OR BY RENTING A BICYCLE (AROUND ₹100/DAY) FROM THE SHOP OPPOSITE THE DEWAS BUS STAND.

By taxi Taxis (around ₹2000–2500/day) can be arranged through the MP Tourism office or at Avantika.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Avantika Off Lal Bahadur Shastri Marg, 2km south of town mptourism.com. Also known as Yatri Niwas, this MP Tourism-run hotel has an institutional feel. The best bet for shoestring travellers is the partitioned dorm, which has comfortable beds and clean sheets; a/c private rooms are fine but overpriced. There's a decent restaurant, too. Dorm ₹, doubles ₹₹₹

Rama Krishna Station Rd (Subhash Marg), opposite the railway station 📍hotelramakrishna.co.in. A notch above the other flophouses in the station area, the largish rooms have smallish attached bathrooms with fairly reliable hot water; there are also better a/c options (around ₹ extra). The entrance is upstairs from their decent attached restaurant (see below). ₹₹

Shipra Residency University Rd 📍mptourism.com. A tranquil, white-tiled courtyard is the centrepiece of this MP Tourism-run hotel (just about the best in town), around which are comfortable a/c rooms with fancy quilts. Good restaurant and bar. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Ujjain suffers from a dearth of decent places to eat. There's a cluster of food stalls by the clock tower, but, as with the inexpensive dhabas opposite the railway station, you should only frequent the most popular ones.

Meghdoot Shipra Residency, University Rd 📍mptourism.com. Typical MP Tourism menu – veg and non-veg Indian, tandoori and Chinese dishes, plus a few Western options – in relaxed surroundings, plus Ujjain's widest choice of alcoholic drinks. From around ₹₹/head. Daily 11pm–3pm and 7pm–10.30pm.

New Sundama Rama Krishna hotel, Station Rd (Subhash Marg), opposite the railway station 📍new-sudama-restaurant.business.site. A good option if you've just decamped from the train, this is the cleanest place near the station, serving well-priced veg and vegan Punjabi standards such as paneer tikka, and south Indian snacks in its pleasant diner-style interior. Daily 8am–11pm. ₹

Maheshwar

Overlooking the north bank of the mighty Narmada River, 91km southwest of Indore, MAHESHWAR was the site of King Kartvirajun's ancient capital, Mahishmati, a city mentioned in both the Mahabharata and Ramayana. In the eighteenth century, Maharani Ahilya Bai built a palace and several temples here, giving the town a new lease of life. Today, it's a prominent port of call on the Narmada Hindu pilgrimage circuit, but well off the tourist trail.

The ghats

The waterfront ghats below an old sandstone palace make a quintessentially Indian spectacle. Parties of yatris take holy dips, while pujaris and groups of sadhus sit around murmuring prayers under raffia sunshades. For the best view of them, head for the overhanging balcony of the eighteenth-century Ahilya Bai Mandir, reached via steps under the facade of the palace behind.

Rehwa Society workshops Palace and fort complex • Mon–Fri 10am–5pm • Free • rehwasociety.org

The palace and fort complex houses the workshops of the Rehwa Society, established by the maharani 250 years ago to promote the local handloom industry; Maheshwari saris are famous for their distinctive patterns and high quality. Today you can visit the weavers' workshops – though most of the town's four thousand weavers actually work from home. Though descendants of the old ruling family still occupy parts of the building, a couple of rooms around the entrance courtyard have been given over to a small, eminently missable museum.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS ALL ROADS MAHESHWAR LEADING TO MAHESHWAR ARE IN A TERRIBLE STATE. IF YOU'RE TRAVELLING FROM INDORE, YOU'LL NEED TO CHANGE BUSES AT THE MARKET TOWN OF DHAMNOD.

Destinations Dhamnod (every 30min; 15min); Dhar (every 30min; 1hr 30min); Omkareshwar (every 30min–1hr; 1hr 30min).

By taxi A taxi from Indore costs around ₹2200, from Ujjain ₹3500.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING ★AHILYA FORT ON THE BANKS OF THE RIVER AHILYAFORT.COM. THIS HERITAGE HOTEL IS RUN BY THE SON OF THE LAST MAHARAJA OF INDORE. THE SIXTEENTH-CENTURY FORT HOUSES GORGEOUSLY ORNATE ROOMS WITH STONE WALLS AND

COLONIAL-ERA FURNISHINGS. THERE'S A POOL AND LOVELY GARDENS, AND EXQUISITE FOOD IS SERVED IN THE RESTAURANT, AROUND THE SWIMMING POOL OR IN THE COURTYARD (OPEN TO NON-GUESTS WHO RESERVE IN ADVANCE). ONLY LUXURY MAHARAJAH TENTS HAVE A/C AND THERE'S A TWO-NIGHT MINIMUM STAY. ₹₹₹₹

Akash Deep Rest House Down an alley to the right of the fort car park, at the bottom of the hill ☎07283 273326. In the centre of town, this place has rather threadbare attached rooms (some with partial fort views). It's clean enough, and fine for a night if you're on a tight budget. ₹

Narmada Retreat 1km outside town 🌐mptourism.com. MP Tourism-run hotel with decent a/c rooms, comfortable "Swiss" tents and cosy cottages, as well as an appealing restaurant. Bring mosquito repellent and a net. ₹₹₹

Omkareshwar

East of the main river crossing at Barwaha, the Narmada River dips southwards, sweeps north again to form a wide bend, and then forks around a 2km-long wedge-shaped outcrop of sandstone. Seen from above, the island, cut by several deep ravines, bears an uncanny resemblance to the "Om" symbol. This, coupled with the presence on its sheer south-facing side of a revered shivalingam, has made OMKARESHWAR, 77km south of Indore, one of central India's most sacred Hindu sites.

Since ancient times, pilgrims have flocked here for darshan and a holy dip in the river, while the town's remoteness and loaded religious feel also long made it a favourite with hard-core Western and Israeli dope-heads – though the town's modernization has made it less attractive to that crowd in recent years. Despite its changes – and the contentious Omkareshwar dam (completed in 2007), which led to the displacement of many thousands of people from nearby villages – the place manages to retain an authentic atmosphere among its temples, wayside shrines, bathing places and caves, which are strung together by an old paved pilgrims' trail.

The prominent white shikhara that soars above the Shri Omkar Mandhata Mandir is a relatively new addition to the dense cluster of buildings on the south side of the island. Below it, the ornate pillars in the assembly hall, or mandapa, are more representative of the shrine's great antiquity. Myths relating to the origins of the deity in the low-ceilinged sanctum date back to the second century BC. One of India's twelve jyotirlinga ("lingams of light"), it is said by Hindus to have emerged spontaneously from the earth after a struggle between Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva.

The parikrama Traditionally, the parikrama (circular tour) of Omkareshwar begins at the ghats below Shri Mandhata and proceeds clockwise around the island. The walk takes at least a couple of hours, so carry plenty of water.

Triveni Sangam and the Gaudi Somnath Temple The first section of the trail is a leisurely thirty-minute stroll from the footbridge to the pebble-strewn western tip of the island, where you'll find a small chai stall and a couple of insignificant shrines. The Triveni Sangam, or "Three-rivers Confluence", is an especially propitious bathing place where the Narmada River forks as it merges with the Kaveri River.

From here, the path climbs above the fringe of fine white sand lining the northern shore until it reaches level ground. The ruins of the Gaudi Somnath Temple stand in the middle of the plateau, surrounded by a sizeable collection of sculpture mounted on concrete plinths. The sanctuary houses a colossal shivalingam, attended by an equally huge Nandi bull.

At this point, drop down a steep flight of steps to the village, or continue east towards the old fortified town that crowned the top of the island before it was ransacked by Muslims in the medieval era. Numerous chunks of temple sculpture lying discarded among the rubble include a couple of finely carved gods and goddesses, used for shade by families of langur monkeys.

Surajkund Gate and the Siddhesvara Temple After scaling the sides of a gully, the trail leads under the large ornamental archway of the Surajkund Gate, flanked by 3m figures of Arjun and Bheema, two of the illustrious Pandava brothers. The tenth-century Siddhesvara Temple stands five minutes' walk away to the south, on a patch of flat ground overlooking the river. Raised on a large plinth decorated with rampaging elephants, it has some fine apsaras, or celestial dancers, carved over its southern doorway.

THE PILGRIMS' WAY FOR THOSE SEEKING THE ASCETIC EXPERIENCE, THE DHARAMSHALAS IN THE MAINLAND VILLAGE ARE INEXPENSIVE, AND OFFER CLOSE-UP EXPERIENCE OF PILGRIM CULTURE. ON THE DOWN SIDE, ROOMS TEND TO BE WINDOWLESS CELLS, WITH WASHING FACILITIES LIMITED TO A STANDPIPE IN THE YARD AND COMMUNAL TOILETS. ONE OF THE BEST IS JAT SAMAJ, FACING THE RIVER, TO THE RIGHT OF THE BRIDGE ON THE MAIN SQUARE – LOOK FOR THE ROOFTOP FIGURE ON HORSEBACK. ALTERNATIVELY HEAD TO AHILYA BAI, TUCKED AWAY BEHIND THE VISHNU TEMPLE OFF THE ROAD TO MAMALESHWAR TEMPLE AND THE GHATS, OR ITS NEIGHBOUR, TIROLE KUNBI PATEL.

Of the two possible routes back to the village, one takes you along the top of the plateau before dropping sharply down, via another ruined temple and the maharaja's palace, to the Shri Mandhata temple. The other follows a flight of steps to the riverbank, and then heads past a group of sadhus' caves to the main ghats.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE FROM THE BUS OMKARESHWAR STAND AT THE TOP OF THE VILLAGE ON THE MAIN ROAD, THE ROAD HEADS EAST AND DOWN THE HILL (LEFT AT THE FORK), WHERE OMKARESHWAR'S ONLY STREET RUNS 400M DOWNHILL TO A RAMSHACKLE SQUARE, WHERE YOU'LL FIND MOST OF THE DHARAMSHALAS AND CHAI SHOPS, AND A HANDFUL OF STALLS HAWKING LURID PUJA PARAPHERNALIA (INCLUDING THE EXCELLENT STYLIZED MAPS TAKEN HOME BY PILGRIMS AS SOUVENIRS). TO GET TO THE ISLAND ITSELF, CROSS THE HIGH CONCRETE FOOTBRIDGE OR TAKE ONE OF THE FLAT-BOTTOMED FERRIES THAT SHUTTLE BETWEEN THE GHATS CROUCHED AT THE FOOT OF THE RIVER GORGE.

By train Omkareshwar Road is the nearest railhead, but only slow passenger services stop here. Barwaha, on the north bank of the Narmada River, is the closest mainline railway station.

By bus Buses are generally more convenient than trains.

Destinations Dhamnod (every 30min; 3hr 30min); Indore (every 30min–1hr; 3hr); Maheshwar (every 30min–1hr; 1hr 30min); Ujjain (1 daily; 3hr–3hr 30min).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING GANESH GUEST HOUSE NEAR TIROLE KUNBI PATEL, FROM WHERE A DOZEN SIGNS WILL EVENTUALLY LEAD YOU THERE THROUGH THE BACKSTREETS ☎07280 271370. THIS FRIENDLY PLACE HAS A COOL TRAVELLER VIBE, GOOD VIEWS AND A “FOREIGN TOURISTS ONLY” POLICY, THOUGH THE ATTACHED ROOMS ARE VERY SPARTAN (₹₹). ITS RESTAURANT, THIRD EYE, HAS A VEG MENU FEATURING SO-SO PIZZA AND PASTA, A SPRINKLING OF MUCH BETTER ISRAELI AND INDIAN DISHES, TASTY PANCAKES AND SOME GREAT TIBETAN MOMOS (STEAMED DUMPLINGS) AND THUKPAS (HEARTY SOUPS). ₹

Narmada Resort On the hill above Nagar Ghat 🌐 narmadahillsresorts.com. This MP Tourism-run place is the smartest option in town. It has plain, slightly worn, but clean attached rooms with air coolers or a/c (₹₹₹) plus a reliable restaurant (with a great terrace) and bar. ₹₹

Chhattisgarh The little-visited state of Chhattisgarh has remained off the tourist radar for decades, but as it slowly opens up to tourists it's ripe for exploration. Main sights include Amarkantak – just over the border in MP, but better accessed through Chhattisgarh, this is one of the least-visited major Hindu holy sites in India, and offers a pleasant, hassle-free way to experience an important pilgrimage destination – and the nearby Achanakmar Wildlife Sanctuary, the only place in the state where tigers can be spotted. Meanwhile, in the south, the tribal heartland of Bastar is rich in cultural and natural attractions. The easiest way to travel in and out of the state is by train via Raipur, the state's busy and scruffy capital – but there's little to see there otherwise.

In addition to the major sights there are many other places worth a visit – for full details, contact the Chhattisgarh Tourism Board (see below). In the north, for example, 85km east of Raipur, Sirpur, the region's former capital and now a village, has a few fine fifth- to eleventh-century Buddhist and Hindu temples. Sirpur borders the hilly Barnawapara Wildlife Sanctuary, which offers the chance to see leopards and even elephants. Way up in the north, towards Patna in UP, the state's hill station, Mainpat offers relief from the hot season and has a sizeable Tibetan population. Meanwhile, just across the state border from Kanha in MP, exquisite erotic carvings based on the Kama Sutra can be seen on the eleventh-century nagar-style temples at Bhoramdeo, which make those at Khajuraho seem tame by comparison.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION ARRIVAL AND CHHATTISGARH DEPARTURE THE BEST WAY IN OR OUT OF THE STATE IS BY TRAIN VIA RAIPUR.

Destinations Delhi (2–4 daily; 19hr–27hr 45min); Gwalior (2–4 daily; 14hr 50min–21hr 35min); Jabalpur (1 daily; 9hr 20min); Kolkata (7–10 daily; 13hr–16hr 50min).

Getting around Chhattisgarh's public transport system and roads are even worse than in MP, so it's best to use a private car (payable per day, including overnight charges for the driver). Private buses are your best bet between urban centres.

Tourist information Chhattisgarh Tourism Board (Mon–Fri 10am–5pm; ☎ 0771 422 4600, www.chhattisgarhtourism.net) is a good source of information. They can organize private cars and accommodation, and should hold copies of the useful guide Experience Chhattisgarh on the Road by Thommen Jose (also available online). Ice Cubes Travel (www.icecubes.in), also in Raipur, organizes private cars and tours.

Amarkantak

Perched 1048m up on the top of the Maikal Hills between Madhya Pradesh and northeastern Chhattisgarh, the small low-key town of AMARKANTAK – also known as Teerthraj or “King of Pilgrimages” – is the source of two of India's great rivers, the Narmada (one of the seven holy rivers of Hinduism) and the Sone. (The town is actually located in Madhya Pradesh, but is commonly accessed via Pendra Road railway station in Chhattisgarh.) One legend (among many) has it that the Narmada and the Sone rivers were to be married, but the Sone spurned Narmada and so, distraught, she changed her course westwards and vowed to remain a virgin, while the Sone carried on east and married another – Narmada Devi remains one of the very few bachelorette Hindu goddesses.

In addition to the two major sites are many major Hindu and Jain temples – with several new ones being built in an attempt to cash in on the town's increasing attractiveness to religious tourists. In the surrounding area you can visit Kabir Chabutra, one of the most sacred sites of the Kabir religion, along with a number of small waterfalls.

Narmada Udgam Daily sunrise–9pm • Free

The source of the Narmada River is within the walled Narmada Udgam temple complex at the centre of town; this is the main focus for the hundreds of pilgrims who come here daily for their ritual ablutions. Though not especially impressive architecturally, it has retained its spiritual atmosphere, with the devout bathing in large ponds filled with spring waters from the stone Gao Mukh (cow's mouth) spout. Reflected in the waters are 22 whitewashed temples, most of them dedicated to Narmada Devi. Those on the south side are the oldest, built by the eleventh-century Kalachuri king Karnadevi.

Sonmuda

1.5km southeast of the centre • Daily sunrise–9pm • Free Down a long flight of stairs from the road lies the source of the Sonmuda River, a modest, pink-painted temple complex where the River Sone (or Son) also trickles out from a stone Gao Mukh, under the watchful gaze of a particularly sinister black-painted statue of the god Sone Dev, who wears a garland of skulls, and holds a trishul and freshly decapitated head in his hands. The complex clings to a hill high on the east-facing escarpment; if you follow the path further down the hill, you'll be rewarded with a magnificent view out over the jungle hills of the Achanakmar Wildlife Sanctuary, and see the incipient river cascading down the cliffs.

Ancient Temples of Kalachuri Next to Narmada Udgam • Daily sunrise–9pm • Free Next to Narmada Udgam lie the well-preserved Ancient Temples of Kalachuri, a small group of sixth-century buildings in the curvilinear nagara style. These are perhaps the most photogenic of the town's monuments, surrounded by pretty and well-maintained gardens.

Sarvodaya Jain temple Daily sunrise–9pm • Free

On the hill to the south of town is the construction site of the Sarvodaya Jain temple. This looks set to be pretty impressive, with stone carving equal to the ancients' and a 3m-high, 28-tonne metal statue of Bhagawan Adinatha which is the heaviest such statue in the world. Started in 2003, construction is due to continue for a few more years yet, but you can wander around inside and watch stone-carvers in action. The 20-crore rupee project has, however, been heavily criticized as hypocritical by impoverished local tribals.

Shri Yantra Mandir Midway between Narmada Udgam and Sonmuda • Daily sunrise–9pm • Free The Tantric Shri Yantra Mandir has been under construction since the late 1980s. Its gate, crowned by the four faces of the Mother Goddess, makes perhaps the most striking image of all the temples here, reminiscent of temples at Angkor Wat in Cambodia. It's estimated that it will take at least another decade to complete, but you can usually have a mooch around inside unless the builders are doing something major.

Kabir Chabutra 5km southwest of Amakantak on the Bilaspur road • Daily dawn–dusk • Donation expected (either money or food) One of the most significant sites for the Kabir religion, the tiny Kabir Chabutra monastery, hidden just off the main road and within the forest, is where fifteenth-century itinerant mystic poet and saint Kabir produced many of his writings. It's an amazingly peaceful spot, with a small pond (Kabir Kund) in which people say mysterious white strands appear daily at around 8.30–9.30am – supposedly the goddess Narmada Devi came here to wash the saint's feet in milk. Otherwise, there's not a lot to do apart from enjoy the tranquillity and talk to the three elderly monks (one speaks some English), who will happily show you the saint's stone bucket and explain something about their little-known faith.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN THE AMARKANTAK NEAREST RAILWAY STATION IS PENDRA ROAD, 17KM NORTHEAST OF AMARKANTAK AND CONNECTED BY BUSES (EVERY 30MIN) OR AUTO-RICKSHAW (AROUND ₹350).

Destinations Bilaspur (every 1–2hr; 1hr 50min–4hr 24min); Delhi (2–4 daily; 16hr 2min–20hr 55min); Jabalpur (2–4 daily; 5hr 23min–7hr 40min); Raipur (6–8 daily; 3hr 45min–5hr 5min).

By bus To get in and out of Amarkantak by bus, you'll have to head to Jabalpur in MP or Bilaspur to the east in Chhattisgarh. They're slow, arduous (though scenic) journeys and you're far better off travelling by train. The bus to/from Bilaspur, does, however, stop at both gates of the Achanakmar Wildlife Sanctuary. The bus station is in the north of town, around 1km from the centre.

Destinations Bilaspur (3 daily; 5–6hr); Jabalpur (6–7 daily; 6–8hr).

GETTING AROUND BY TAXI TO SEE THE SIGHTS OUTSIDE TOWN, OR THE ACHANAKMAR WILDLIFE SANCTUARY – THOUGH YOU CAN GET THERE BY BUS (SEE OPPOSITE) – A TAXI IS BEST. CARS (AROUND ₹₹/DAY) CAN BE ORGANIZED EASILY THROUGH EITHER THE HOLIDAY HOMES RESORT IN AMARKANTAK OR SONBADRA TOURIST RESORT AT AMODOB, 14KM SOUTH.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING THERE’S NOT A LOT OF HIGH-END ACCOMMODATION OR EATING IN AMARKANTAK; A FEW CHEAPER GUESTHOUSES AND DHABAS CAN BE FOUND ALONG THE ROAD FROM THE BUS STATION TO THE CENTRE OF TOWN.

Holiday Homes Near the Sarvodaya Jain temple mptourism.com. MP Tourism hotel with en-suite rooms and s “Swiss cottage” tent accommodation (the latter start from ₹2940) that also boast heaters, which you’ll need during the chilly winter nights. The acceptable restaurant provides the standard MP Tourism menu of Indian, Chinese and Continental dishes (₹/head). ₹₹

Achanakmar Wildlife Sanctuary Midway between Amarkantak and Bilaspur, Achanakmar Wildlife Sanctuary is linked to the Kanha Tiger Reserve by a wildlife corridor, and is the only sanctuary in Chhattisgarh where tigers can be seen – around 18 to 24 are believed to have migrated here from Kanha, though sightings are actually rare and you’re more likely to spot a leopard. The 557-square-kilometre park, made up of moist deciduous forest, largely sal, teak and bamboo, is also home to numerous bison, spotted deer, gaur, wild dogs, hyena and more than 150 species of bird.

As this sanctuary has few visitors, it is much wilder than the big-name parks in MP, and being bumped around in the back of a jeep while it hacks through the dense jungle hills is a far more authentic safari experience. The animals, however, are less used to seeing vehicles and far more nervous and prone to running away. Still, even if you don't see any big cats, most safaris end with a visit to one of the five watchtowers dotted around the park, from which the views of the jungle are sublime, especially at sunset. As well as the wildlife, there are 22 tribal villages within the park (Gond and Baiga tribes), from where most of the guides come from – your accommodation can arrange cultural visits to these.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS THE NH-8 PASSES STRAIGHT THROUGH ACHANAKMAR WILDLIFE SANCTUARY THE PARK AND BETWEEN AMARKANTAK AND BILASPUR WITH A SINGLE MORNING AND EVENING BUS PASSING THROUGH EACH WAY.

By taxi Hiring a taxi from Jabalpur will cost around ₹3800, or about ₹2800 from Nagpur.

INFORMATION OPENING TIMES THE PARK IS OPEN DAILY FROM NOV TO JUNE (SAFARIS 6–9AM & 3–6PM). ITS HEADQUARTERS AND MAIN GATE IS AT LAMNI, AROUND 40KM SOUTH OF AMARKANTAK AND 60KM NORTHWEST OF BILASPUR, THOUGH A NEW GATE IS SLATED TO OPEN SOON AT AMODOB, JUST 14KM SOUTH OF THE FORMER.

Entry fees Charge, and vehicle charge, plus charge safari for a compulsory guide.

Jeeps Jeeps (around ₹2200/safari) can be booked at the park gates or more easily through your accommodation; it's worth doing this in advance as they only have four at each.

Services There are only a very few basic shops within the park, and the nearest ATMs are in Bilaspur or Amarkantak, so bring plenty of snacks and cash.

ACCOMMODATION BAIGA RESORT SHIVTARAI VILLAGE, A FEW KILOMETRES SOUTH OF THE LAMNI GATE ☎99076 76753

OR ☎98933 66225, 🌐TIGERSOFACHANAKMAR.ORG. VERY GOOD VALUE RESORT IN THE MIDDLE OF THE PARK, WITH COMFORTABLE AND WELL-KEPT A/C ROOMS, AND AN ADVENTURE PLAYGROUND – THEY GET LOTS OF YOUTH GROUPS AT WEEKENDS. ₹₹

NAXALITE MILITANTS IN THE BASTAR REGION THE BASTAR REGION IS ONE OF THE LAST REMAINING PLACES WHERE THE ANTI-GOVERNMENT NAXALITES ARE FOUND, THOUGH ONLY IN THE DEEP FOREST AND REMOTE AREAS. DANTEWADA DISTRICT, SOUTHWEST OF JAGDALPUR IS THE MAIN ONE, BUT NOWHERE LISTED THIS GUIDE IS IN THAT AREA. THOUGH AS A FOREIGN TOURIST YOU SHOULD HAVE NO PROBLEMS – NO FOREIGNER HAS EVER BEEN TARGETED OR HARMED BY THE LOCAL NAXALITES, WHO LIMIT THEIR ATTACKS TO SECURITY FORCES AND POLICE – YOU SHOULD TAKE CARE TO GET THE LATEST INFORMATION BEFORE VISITING AND IT IS STRONGLY ADVISED THAT YOU USE YOUR OWN TRANSPORT AND TAKE A LOCAL GUIDE IF TRAVELLING OUTSIDE JAGDALPUR OR OFF THE MAIN ROADS.

Sonbadra Tourist Resort Amodob, 14km from Amarkantak 🌐 chhattisgarhtourism.net. Near the new Amodob gate, this Chhattisgarh Tourism-run resort is one of the better-priced mid-range options in the park, offering twelve pleasant, comfortable cottages with verandas overlooking a small stream. The restaurant serves decent food. ₹₹₹

Jagdalpur and around Located 285km south of Raipur, the small town of JAGDALPUR is the main settlement of the Bastar region. This is the heartland of the Chhattisgarh tribals, who make up seventy percent of the population, many still living in the surrounding forests. Though there are few sights in town, you can experience the living tribal culture by visiting one of the nearby villages. Here locals produce traditional handicrafts and hold their haat bazaars which are quite extraordinary events – the women dress in their most colourful finery to sell even more colourful produce while the men drink salfi (the local brew) and occasionally watch cockfighting. Jagdalpur is also close to the Kangar Valley National Park, which contains not only wildlife but also the stepped Tirathgarh Waterfall and the Kutsumar Cave, the longest in India. To the northeast, you'll find the impressive horseshoe Chitrakote Falls.

Bastar Palace Civil Lines, 1km north of the centre • Daily 10am–10pm • Free • ☎07782 226222

The main attraction in town is the sprawling 80-year-old Bastar Palace, the grandest of the state's Raj-era palaces. Unless you opt to stay in one of their eye-wateringly expensive suites (if you have to ask you can't afford it), you'll only be able to visit the one "museum" room that's open to the public; here you can learn something of the extremely turbulent history of local Kakatiya rulers, the Dev family, whose descendants still occupy some of the palace's hundred rooms today.

Anthropological Museum 1km west of the centre along the Chitrakote road • Mon–Sat 10am–5.30pm • Charge • 🌐ansi.gov.in/

The Anthropological Museum, located within the Archaeological Survey of India compound, contains a colourful ethnographic snapshot of the local tribal cultures, including handicrafts, weapons, musical instruments and ingenious jungle implements, as well as information on local traditions such as the haat bazaar and ghotul system of courting.

Kangar Valley National Park Main entrance and ticket office at the Kutumusar Gate, 27km south of Jagdalpur • Nov–June daily 8am–4pm

- Charge, vehicle charge, compulsory guide charge, plus lights for the caves charge The 200-square-kilometre Kangar Valley National Park, around 30km southwest of town, is set in a rugged landscape of densely forested hills and limestone karst. Among several local cave systems, the Kutsumar Cave is the largest and the only one currently open to visitors. From the main park entrance a 10km rough jungle track winds through the sal and teak trees to a small car park where a very narrow entrance leads you 37m down a spiral staircase to the 337m-long cave. Here you can see alien-like formations of stalagmites and stalactites, as well as the pool of icy water where pasty-white blind fish live.

A far better tarmac road leads 4km in the other direction to the much-visited Tirathgarh Waterfall, where water cascades serenely down 27m over seven steps in the black rock. If you want to get away from the day-trippers, try climbing up to the small shrines on top of a basalt stack from where you can appreciate the lovely sight in relative peace.

If you have time, ask your guide to take you to one of the tribal settlements in the park, such as Nagalsar village where the modern world has had little impact; residents still live in mud huts and, idiosyncratically, the men shave the front of their heads but sport long ponytails. Apart from on the way to and from these sights, there currently isn't any opportunity for real nature trekking or seeing the park's large mammals such as leopard and bison. However, birders will have more luck spotting one of the park's 150-odd species; keep an ear open for the human-like wails and whistles of the state bird, the endangered Bastar Hill myna.

If possible, avoid visiting the park at weekends when it's overcrowded with local day-trippers. If you do come at this time, aim to make a side trip to the chaotic Sunday haat bazaar near the thirteenth-century Shiva temple at Chingitarai, around 10km from Tirathgarh Waterfall.

Chitrakote Falls 43km northeast of Jagdalpur • No opening times • Free; boats around ₹/hr Although just 32m high, the horseshoe-shaped Chitrakote Falls are one of the most impressive of its kind in India. For most of the year the force of the waters – the 300m-wide Indravati River is funnelled into seven separate flows – creates a peaceful susurrantion, but during and shortly after the rainy season it is at its thundering full flow, creating vast plumes of mist in which rainbows appear. This is, obviously, a massive draw for local day-trippers; to avoid being overwhelmed by crowds, visit mid-week, early morning or just before sunset. For an adventurous excursion, the local fishermen will take you out in a boat at the top of the falls, often quite close to the precipice.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION THE JAGDALPUR AND AROUND EASIEST WAYS IN AND OUT OF JAGDALPUR ARE VIA THE STATE CAPITAL RAIPUR (BY BUS, TAXI OR TRAIN), OR BY TRAIN VIA VISAKHAPATNAM IN ANDHRA PRADESH, OR KOLKATA. TO GET AROUND THE LOCAL AREA – APART FROM TO CHITRAKOTE (SERVED BY LOCAL BUSES EVERY 30MIN) – YOU WILL NEED A CAR; BUSES ARE POOR OR NONEXISTENT TO MOST POINTS OF INTEREST OUTSIDE OF TOWN AND LOCALS CRAM INTO ANY VEHICLE AVAILABLE.

By train Jagdalpur's railway station is about 1km south of the centre. Facilities are limited.

Destinations Kolkata (1–2 daily; 25hr 18min–26hr); Raipur (3 weekly; 15hr 30min); Visakhapatnam (2 daily; 8hr–10hr 15min).

By bus Slow and uncomfortable state buses to Raipur leave from the main bus stand, 200m east of the railway station (every 15min; 10–12hr); Mahendra Travels' regular daytime and sleeper buses (7–8hr; mahendrabus.in) are a better option.

By taxi Hiring a taxi to/from Raipur will cost around ₹4000-6000; to/from Nagpur or Hyderabad it's more like ₹11,000-12,000.

Tourist information Jagdalpur's tourist information centre (Mon–Sat 10am–6pm; ☎09993 854165) is about 2km west of the town on the Chitrakote road, behind Jhanka Talkies. Staff can help organize guides, such as the well-connected Awesh Ali (☎09425 244925; around ₹1500/day) and cars (around ₹1500/8hr).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING THERE ARE SEVERAL PLACES TO SLEEP AND EAT IN JAGDALPUR, MOSTLY CONCENTRATED ALONG THE ROADS FROM THE BUS AND TRAIN STATIONS, WITH A FEW BETTER RESORTS SLIGHTLY OUT OF TOWN.

Dandami Luxury Resort Just down the river from Chitrakote Falls ④ chhattisgarhtourism.in/dandami. The Chhattisgarh Tourism-run resort at the falls is one of the better establishments in the region, with comfortable cottages and tents set among well-kept gardens; both cost the same but the cottages are better located overlooking the river, and four have views towards the falls. ₹₹

Shradha Suman Civil Lines, just north of the Danteswari Temple ①
098302 38194 Best of the budget choices in town, this clean and simple hotel is well run by friendly staff, and has a veg restaurant. They can also help arrange tours and transport. ₹

< Back to Madhya Pradesh and Chhattisgarh

iStock
SPITI VALLEY

Himachal Pradesh

Shimla and around

Kinnaur

Northwest Himachal

Dalhousie

The Kullu Valley

Lahaul and Spiti

The Manali–Leh Highway.

Himachal Pradesh Ruffled by the lower ridges of the Shivalik Range in the far south, cut through by the Pir Panjal and Dhauladhar ranges in the northwest, and dominated by the great Himalayas in the north and east, Himachal Pradesh (HP) is India's most popular and easily accessible hill state. Sandwiched between the Punjab and Tibet, its lowland orchards, subtropical forests and maize fields peter out in the higher reaches where pines cling to the steep slopes of mountains whose inhospitable peaks soar in rocky crags and forbidding ice fields to heights of more than 6000m.

Together with deep gorges cut by rivers crashing down from the Himalayas, these mountains form natural boundaries between the state's separate districts. Each has its own architecture, from rock-cut shrines and shikhara temples to colonial mansions and Buddhist monasteries. Roads struggle against the vagaries of the climate to connect the larger settlements, which are way outnumbered by remote villages, many of which are home to seminomadic Gaddi and Gujjar shepherds.

An obvious way to approach the state is to head north from Delhi to the state capital, Shimla, beyond the lush and temperate valleys of Sirmaur. The former summer location of the British government, Shimla is a curious, appealing mix of grand homes, churches and chaotic bazaars, with breathtaking views. The main road northeast from Shimla tackles a pass just north of Narkanda, then follows the River Sutlej east towards Sarahan, with its spectacular wooden temple, before entering the eastern district of Kinnaur, much of which is accessible only to those holding Inner Line permits. Kinnaur becomes more austere and barren as it stretches east to the Tibetan plateau, its beauty enhanced by delicate timber houses, temples and fluttering prayer flags.

Another road from Shimla climbs slowly northwest to Mandi, a major staging post for the state. To the north is Himachal's most popular tourist spot, the Kullu Valley, an undulating mass of terraced fields, orchards and forests overlooked by snowy peaks. Its epicentre is the continuously expanding tourist town of Manali – long a favourite hangout of Western hippies – set in idyllic mountain scenery and offering trekking, whitewater rafting and relaxing hot springs in nearby Vashisht. The sacred site of Manikaran in the Parvati Valley also has hot sulphur-free springs.

Beyond the Rohtang Pass – soon to be the Rohtang tunnel – in the far north of Kullu district, the high-altitude desert valleys of Lahaul and Spiti stretch beneath massive snow-capped peaks and remote settlements with Tibetan gompas dotting the landscape. Permits are needed for travel through to Kinnaur, but Ki, Kaza and Tabo have unrestricted access, as does the road through Lahaul to Leh in Ladakh.

BEST TIME TO VISIT BEING A MOUNTAINOUS STATE, HIMACHAL PRADESH IS GENERALLY BEST VISITED BETWEEN LATE MARCH AND MID-NOVEMBER, AS IT IS FREEZING COLD AND SNOWY FOR MUCH OF THE WINTER AND FEW FACILITIES REMAIN OPEN IN THE MORE REMOTE PARTS OF THE STATE SUCH AS

SPITI. THE MAIN HIGH SEASON FROM APRIL TO JUNE, THOUGH BLESSED WITH CLEAR SKIES, IS ALSO WHEN THE TOURISTIC PARTS OF THE STATE ARE AT THEIR MOST CROWDED AND EXPENSIVE, THUS NOT IDEAL. THE MONSOON CAN MAKE IT EXTREMELY CLOUDY AND WET, ESPECIALLY IN PLACES LIKE SHIMLA AND DHARAMSALA, FOR MUCH OF JULY AND AUGUST. SO THE BEST TIME TO VISIT OVERALL IS AT THE END OF THE MONSOON IN SEPTEMBER AND OCTOBER, WHEN THE SKIES ARE MOSTLY CLEAR AGAIN, THE DAYS STILL WARM AND THE NIGHTS NOT TOO CHILLY.

Shutterstock

THE TOY TRAIN RUNNING FROM KALKA TO SHIMLA HIGHLIGHTS

- ① The toy train A rattly ride through verdant mountain scenery from Kalka to the Raj-era hill station of Shimla.
- ② Kalpa This relaxing hillside village of apple orchards and atmospheric temples is Kinnaur's prime spot and affords views of the stunning Kinner-Kailash massif.
- ③ Rewalsar Buddhist pilgrimage site based around a sacred lake, with monasteries, temples, caves and hermitages.
- ④ Dharamsala/McLeod Ganj Home of the Dalai Lama, the famous Tibetan enclave is an ever-popular place for meditation retreats, trekking and chilling out.
- ⑤ Bharmour This remote mountain village amidst the rich trekking areas of Dhauladhar and Lahaul is a true gem.
- ⑥ Naggar This laidback village high up on the side of the Kullu Valley is home to the fascinating Roehrich Gallery and a great place to enjoy sweeping views.
- ⑦ Spiti Valley Tiny Tibetan villages and beautiful white gompas dot Spiti's astonishing, weathered landscape.
- ⑧ Manali-Leh Highway The second-highest road in the world, passing through a vast wilderness between Himachal's honeymoon capital and barren Ladakh.

HIGHLIGHTS ARE MARKED ON THE MAP

Visitors to the densely populated Kangra Valley west of Manali invariably make a beeline for Dharamsala, or more properly McLeod Ganj, whose large community of Tibetan exiles includes the Dalai Lama himself. Trekking paths lead north from here across the treacherous passes of the Dhauladhar mountains into the Chamba Valley.

Finding guides and porters for treks is rarely difficult. The season runs from July to late November in the west, and to late October in the north and east. In winter, all but the far south of the state lies beneath a thick blanket of snow. The region north of Manali is accessible only from late June to early October when the roads are clear. Even in summer, when the days are hot and the sun strong, northern Himachal can be beset with chilly nights.

Brief history The earliest known inhabitants of the area now known as Himachal Pradesh were the Dasas, who entered the hills from the Gangetic plain between the third and second millennium BC. By 2000 BC the Dasas had been joined by the Aryans, and a number of tribal republics, known as janapadas, began to emerge in geographically separate regions, where they fostered separate cultural traditions. The terrain made it impossible for one ruler to hold sway over the whole region, though by 550 AD Hindu Rajput families had gained supremacy over the northwestern districts of Bharmour and Chamba, just two of the many princely states created between the sixth and sixteenth centuries. Of these, the most powerful was Kangra, where the Katoch Rajputs held off various attacks before finally falling to the Mughals in the sixteenth century.

During the medieval era, Lahaul and Spiti remained aloof, governed not by Rajputs, but by the Jos of Tibetan origin, who introduced Tibetan customs and architecture. After a period of submission to Ladakh, Lahaul and Spiti came under the rajas of Kullu, a central princely state that reached its apogee in the seventeenth century. Further south, the region around Shimla and Sirmaur was divided into more than thirty independently governed thakurais. In the late seventeenth century, the newly empowered Sikh community, based at Paonta Sahib (Sirmaur), added to the threat already posed by the Mughals. By the eighteenth century, under Maharaja Ranjit Singh, the Sikhs had gained strongholds in much of western Himachal, and considerable power in both Kullu and Spiti.

Battling against Sikh expansion, Amar Singh Tapur, the leader of the Gurkha army, consolidated Nepalese dominion in the southern Shimla hill states. The thakurai chiefs turned to the British for help, and forced the last of the Gurkhas back into Nepal in 1815. Predictably, the British assumed power over the south, thus tempting the Sikhs to battle in the Anglo-Sikh War. With the signing of a treaty in 1846 the British annexed most of the south and west of the state, and in 1864 pronounced Shimla the summer government headquarters.

FESTIVALS IN HIMACHAL PRADESH LOSAR (LATE JAN TO LATE FEB). TIBETAN NEW YEAR, MARKED WITH DANCING AND MUSIC IN AREAS WITH LARGE BUDDHIST POPULATIONS, PRINCIPALLY DHARAMSALA/MCLEOD GANJ AND SPITI.

Suhi Mata (early April). Four-day local festival celebrating the legend of Rani Sunena in Chamba. .

Baisakhi (usually April 13). Fairs are held throughout the state and people take dips in holy waters. Women are especially prominent with colourful dress.

Minjar (early Aug). A week-long riot of singing and dancing in Chamba to celebrate the growth of maize. .

Flaich Ukhayang (Sept, date varies). Colourful festival of flowers throughout Kinnaur, marked by a procession of the village deity and goat sacrifice.

Dussehra (late Sept to late Oct). Important throughout India, in Himachal this ten-day festival is particularly spectacular in Kullu. .

RESTRICTED AREAS AND INNER LINE PERMITS/PROTECTED AREA PERMIT FOREIGNERS TRAVELLING BETWEEN SUMDO IN SPITI AND JUST EAST OF SPILLO IN KINNAUR – WHERE THE ROAD PASSES WITHIN A FEW KILOMETRES OF WESTERN TIBET – REQUIRE INNER LINE PERMITS, VALID FOR TRAVEL THROUGH THE BORDER DISTRICTS. OFFICIALLY YOU ARE REQUIRED TO TRAVEL IN A GROUP OF FOUR OR MORE, BUT IN PRACTICE THAT IS NEVER ENFORCED – THOUGH IN MOST PLACES YOU OFFICIALLY HAVE TO APPLY AS PART OF A GROUP.

Inner Line permits are valid for fourteen days and available from Shimla, Manali, Kullu, Rampur, Kaza and Rekong Peo. If travelling independently, you're best off applying at Kaza where you can do the legwork yourself and obtain a permit in an hour or two at no charge. In the other five locations officials normally insist that you can only apply as a group of four through a travel agent – fees are ₹350–400 per person, although these agents are very creative in manufacturing the requisite numbers. Wherever you apply, you will need to provide two photographs and photocopies of your passport and visa.

When travelling through restricted areas, you should never take photographs of military installations or sensitive sites such as bridges. Stick to the main route and you should have no problems with officialdom.

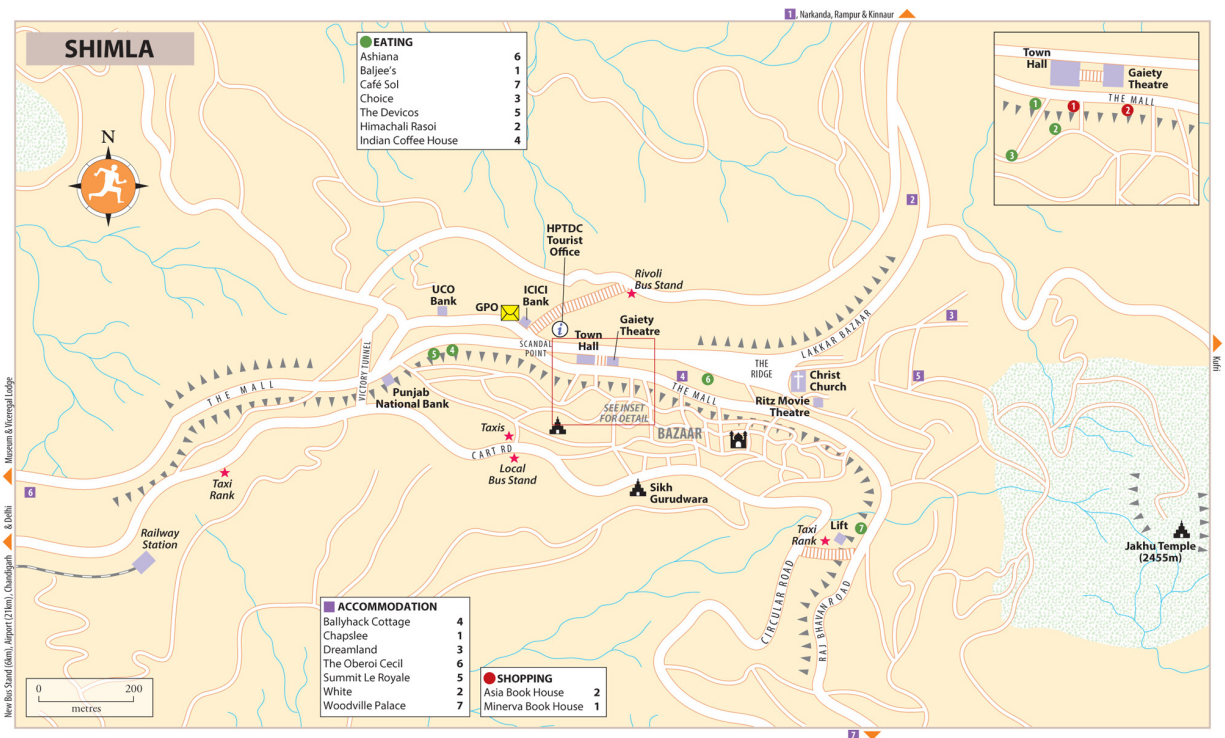

After Independence, the regions bordering present-day Punjab were integrated and named Himachal Pradesh (“Himalayan Provinces”). In 1956 HP was recognized as a Union Territory and ten years later the modern state was formed, with Shimla as its capital. Despite being a political unity, Himachal Pradesh is culturally very diverse. With more than ninety percent of the population living outside the main towns, and many areas remaining totally isolated during the long winter months, Himachal's separate districts maintain distinct customs, architecture, dress and agricultural methods. Though Hinduism dominates, there are substantial numbers of Sikhs, Muslims and Christians, and Lahaul, Spiti and Kinnaur have been home to Tibetan Buddhists since the tenth century. This may explain why the state has traditionally been a stronghold for the more inclusive Congress Party, although recent years have seen the BJP take office.

Shimla and around SHIMLA, Himachal's capital, is India's largest and most famous hill station, where much of the action in Rudyard Kipling's colonial classic Kim took place. While the city is a favourite spot for Indian families and honeymooners, its size does little to win it popularity among Western tourists. It is however, a perfect halfway house between the plains and the Kullu Valley. It's also the starting post for forays into the remoter regions of Kinnaur and Spiti.

Whether you travel by road or rail from the south, the last stretch of the climb up to Shimla seems interminable. Deep in the foothills of the Himalayas, the hill station is approached via a sinuous route that winds from the plains at Kalka across nearly 100km of precipitous river valleys, pine forests, and mountainsides swathed in maize terraces and apple orchards. It's not hard to see why the British chose this inaccessible site as their summer capital. At an altitude of 2159m, the crescent-shaped ridge over which it spills is blessed with perennially cool air and superb panoramas.

Southeast of Shimla, Kasauli is a peaceful place to break your journey from Chandigarh in Punjab, while nearby Nalagarh Fort has been converted into the finest hotel in the state. The southernmost area of the state, Sirmaur, is Himachal's most fertile area, with the major Sikh shrine in Paonta Sahib as a noteworthy sight.

THE VICEROY’S TOY TRAIN UNTIL THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE KALKA–SHIMLA RAILWAY, THE ONLY WAY TO GET TO THE SHIMLA HILL STATION WAS ON THE SO-CALLED CART ROAD – A SLOW, WINDING TRAIL TRODDEN BY LINES OF LONG-SUFFERING PORTERS AND HORSE-DRAWN TONGAS. BY THE TIME THE 96KM NARROW-GAUGE LINE WAS COMPLETED IN 1903, 103 TUNNELS, 24 BRIDGES AND 18 STATIONS HAD BEEN BUILT BETWEEN SHIMLA AND THE RAILHEAD AT KALKA, 26KM NORTHEAST OF CHANDIGARH. THESE DAYS, BUSES MAY BE QUICKER, BUT A RIDE ON THE “TOY TRAIN” IS FAR MORE MEMORABLE – ESPECIALLY IF YOU TRAVEL FIRST-CLASS, IN ONE OF THE GLASS-WINDOWED RAIL CARS. HAULED ALONG BY A TINY DIESEL LOCOMOTIVE, THEY RATTLE AT A LEISURELY PACE THROUGH STUNNING SCENERY, TAKING BETWEEN FIVE AND A HALF AND SEVEN HOURS TO REACH SHIMLA.

Along the route, you'll notice the guards exchanging little leather pouches with staff strategically positioned on the station platforms. The bags they receive in return contain small brass discs, which the drivers slot into special machines to alert the signals ahead of their approach. “Neal's Token System”, in place since the line was first inaugurated, is a fail-safe means of ensuring that trains travelling in opposite directions never meet face to face on the single-track sections of the railway.

Northeast of Shimla, the apple-growing centre of Narkanda and Sarahan, site of the famous Bhimakali temple, set against a backdrop of the majestic Himalayas, can be visited in a two- or three-day round trip from Shimla, or en route to Kinnaur via the characterless transport hub of Rampur.

Brief history Named after its patron goddess, Shamla Devi (a manifestation of Kali), the tiny village that stood on this spot was “discovered” by a team of British surveyors in 1817. Glowing reports of its beauty and climate gradually filtered to the imperial capital, Calcutta, and within two decades the settlement had become the Subcontinent's most fashionable summer resort. The annual migration was finally rubber-stamped in 1864, when Shimla – by now an elegant town of mansions, churches and cricket pitches – was declared the Government of India's official hot-season HQ. With the completion of the Kalka–Shimla Railway in 1903, Shimla lay only two days by train from Delhi. Its growth continued after Independence, especially after becoming state capital in 1966.

Today, Shimla is still a major holiday resort, popular mainly with nouveau riche Punjabis and Delhi-ites who flock here in their thousands during the May–June run-up to the monsoons, and then again in October, when many Bengalis also visit. Its faded colonial charm also appeals to foreigners looking for a taste of the Raj. The burra- and memsahibs may have moved on, but Shimla retains a decidedly British feel: pukka Indian gentlemen in tweeds stroll along The Mall smoking pipes, while neatly turned-out schoolchildren scuttle past mock-Tudor shopfronts and houses with names like Braeside. At the same time, the pesky monkey troupes and chaotic mass of corrugated iron rooftops that make up Shimla's bazaar lend an unmistakably Indian aspect to the town. Note that the entire town is a no-smoking zone.

The Ridge

Although Shimla and its satellite districts sprawl over the flanks of five or more hills, the centre is fairly compact, on and immediately beneath a shoulder of high ground known as "The Ridge". Shimla's busy social scene revolves around the broad and breezy piazza that straddles The Ridge, overlooking rippling foothills with the jagged white peaks of the Pir Panjal and Great Himalayan ranges on the horizon. It is said all water that drains off the north side of The Ridge ends up in the Arabian Sea, while from the south side it ends up in the Bay of Bengal. During high season it is a hive of activity, with entertainment provided by brass bands, pony rides and a giant screen showing sporting events. The Victorian Gothic spire of Christ Church is Shimla's most prominent landmark. The stained-glass windows, the finest in British India, depict (from left to right) Faith, Hope, Charity, Fortitude, Patience and Humility. There is still a service in English at 9am every Sunday. At the other end of The Ridge, Scandal Point is the focus of Shimla's famous mid-afternoon meet when crowds gather here to gossip.

The Mall

From The Ridge, a tangle of roads and lanes tumbles down in stages, each layer connected to the next by stone steps. The Mall, the main pedestrian thoroughfare, curves around the south slope of the hill. Flanked by a long row of unmistakably British half-timbered buildings, Shimla's main shopping street was, until World War I, strictly out-of-bounds to all "natives" except royalty and rickshaw-pullers. These days, rickshaws, man-powered or otherwise, are banned and non-Indian faces are in the minority. The quintessentially colonial Gaiety Theatre (www.gaiety.in) was renovated in 2008 and puts on regular performances and exhibitions, now billing itself as a Heritage Cultural Complex.

The bazaar

Walk down any of the narrow lanes leading off The Mall, and you're plunged into a warren of twisting backstreets. Shimla's bazaar is the hill station at its most vibrant – a maze of dishevelled shacks, brightly lit stalls and minarets, cascading in a clutter of corrugated iron to the edge of Cart Road. Apart from being a good place to shop for authentic souvenirs, this is also one of the few areas of town that feels Himalayan: multicoloured Kullu caps (topis) bob about in the crowd, alongside the odd Lahauli, Kinnauri or Tibetan face.

The state museum 1.5km west of the centre via The Mall – take the right fork at the first intersection after the Classic hotel and left at the second, from where it is signposted • Tues–Sun 10am–1pm & 2–5pm, closed 2nd Sat of month • Charge, camera charge The HP state museum is well worth the effort to get to. The ground floor of the elegant colonial mansion is given over largely to temple sculpture, and a gallery of magnificent Pahari miniatures – examples of the last great Hindu art form to flourish in northern India before the deadening impact of Western culture in the early nineteenth century. The Mughal-influenced Pahari or “Hill” school is renowned for subtle depictions of romantic love, inspired by scenes from Hindu epics. Among the museum's paintings are dozens of Mughal and Rajasthani miniatures and a couple of fine “Company” watercolours, produced for souvenir-hunting colonials by the descendants of the Mughal and Pahari masters. The fakirs, itinerant sadhus and mendicants they depict could have leapt straight from the pages of Kipling. One room is devoted to Mahatma Gandhi, packed with photos of his time in Shimla and amusing cartoons of his political relationship with the British.

THE HIKE TO JAKHU TEMPLE THE EARLY-MORNING HIKE UP TO JAKHU, OR “MONKEY”, TEMPLE IS SOMETHING OF A TRADITION IN SHIMLA. THE TOP OF THE HILL (2455M) ON WHICH IT STANDS OFFERS A SUPERB PANORAMA OF THE HIMALAYAS – PARTICULARLY BREATHTAKING BEFORE THE CLOUD GATHERS LATER IN THE DAY. THE RELENTLESSLY STEEP CLIMB TAKES THIRTY TO 45 MINUTES. THE PATH STARTS JUST LEFT OF CHRIST CHURCH; DURING THE SEASON, ALL YOU NEED DO IS FOLLOW THE CROWDS.

After the hard walk up, the temple itself, a red-and-yellow-brick affair crammed with fairy lights and tinsel, comes as something of an anti-climax, although the new 30m-tall orange concrete statue of Hanuman is an impressive sight. The shrine inside houses what are believed to be the footprints of Hanuman himself. Legend has it that the monkey god, adored by Hindus for his strength and fidelity, rested on Jakhu after collecting healing Himalayan herbs for Rama's injured brother, Lakshmana. Watch out for the troupes of mangy monkeys around the temple. Pampered by generations of pilgrims and tourists, they have become real pests; hang on to your bag and don't flash food. Hold onto your specs too – one or two monkeys have even been trained to swipe them from unsuspecting victims' faces and turn them over to a local, who will hand them back ... for a small fee, of course.

The Viceregal Lodge 3km west of the centre • Daily 9am–5pm; guided tours on the hour except 1 & 2pm • House charge, gardens charge Shimla's single most impressive colonial monument is the old Viceregal Lodge, summer seat of British government until the 1940s and today home to the Institute of Advanced Studies. The solid grey mansion, built in Elizabethan style with a lion and unicorn set above the entrance porch, surveys trimmed lawns fringed by pines and flowerbeds – the grounds and the exterior of the lodge are most impressive. Inside is looking a little tired, with only a few rooms on the ground floor open to the public: a vast teak-panelled entrance hall, an impressive library (formerly the ballroom) and the guest room. The conference room, hung with photos of Nehru, Jinnah and Gandhi, was the scene of crucial talks in the run-up to Independence. On the stone terrace to the rear of the building, a plaque profiles and names the peaks visible in the distance.

Prospect Hill The short hike up to Prospect Hill (2176m), a popular picnic spot, ties in nicely with a visit to the Viceregal Lodge. By cutting through the woods to the west of the mansion, you can drop down to a busy intersection known as Boileauganj, from where a tarmac path climbs steeply up to the small shrine of Kamana Devi, which affords fine views.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE WHEREVER YOU ARRIVE SHIMLA
IN SHIMLA, YOU'LL BE MOBBED BY PORTERS. MOST OF THE TOWN IS PEDESTRIANIZED, AND SERIOUSLY STEEP, SO YOU MAY BE GLAD OF THE EXTRA HELP TO CARRY YOUR GEAR, BUT IT'S BETTER TO POLITELY REFUSE THEIR OFFER TO TOUT YOU A HOTEL.

By plane Shimla's airport lies 20km southwest of town on the Mandi road at Jubarhati. Indigo, Vistara and Air India run several direct and indirect flights from Shimla to Delhi. Note that antiquated facilities and frequent bad weather cause frequent delays.

By train The train station is a 15min walk southwest of The Mall. The toy train connects Shimla with Kalka, where you can change onto the main broad-gauge line for Chandigarh and Delhi, Shatabdi Express #12012 at 5.45pm, arriving in Delhi around 10pm. Toy train (shimlatourism.co.in/kalka-shimla-toy-train) services depart from Shimla at 10.35am, 2.25pm, 4.25pm, 5.40pm and 6.15pm, while from Kalka they leave at 4am, 5.10am, 5.30am, 6am and 12.10pm; they should take around 5hr each, though it's often longer. Reservations for onward journeys from Kalka can be made at Shimla station or the booking booth next to the tourist office.

By bus Long-distance buses use the new multilevel bus stand 6km southwest of the centre, on the Chandigarh road. Frequent minibuses link it to the Local Bus Stand on Cart Rd. Services include Chandigarh (every 15min; 4hr), Delhi (hourly; 10hr), Mandi (12 daily; 5hr), Kullu (8 daily 7–8hr), Dharamsala (4 daily; 9–10hr), Manali (8 daily; 8–9hr), Sarahan (3 daily; 7–8hr) and Rekonig Peo (6 daily; 9–10hr). HPTDC (www.hptdc.in) run a deluxe bus to Manali (8am) and a/c Volvo bus to Delhi (10pm); both depart from more central Victory Tunnel and tickets should be booked at least a day in advance at the tourist office, while state bus tickets can be reserved at the adjacent ticket counter or at the bus stand.

GETTING AROUND BY TAXI TAXIS ARE THE BEST WAY TO GET TO THE PRICIER HOTELS ON THE OUTSKIRTS. THE MAIN VISHAL HIMACHAL TAXI UNION RANK (☎0177 265 7645) IS 1KM EAST OF THE LOCAL BUS STAND, AT THE BOTTOM OF THE LIFT THAT CONNECTS THE EAST END OF CART RD WITH THE MALL. ANOTHER, MORE CENTRAL, TAXI RANK CAN BE FOUND JUST ABOVE THE LOCAL BUS STAND ON CART RD.

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURIST INFORMATION THE HPTDC MAIN TOURIST OFFICE (DAILY: HIGH SEASON 9AM–8PM; LOW SEASON 9AM–6PM; www.hptdc.in) IS LOCATED ON THE RIDGE NEAR SCANDAL POINT. IT ORGANIZES WHISTLE-STOP SIGHTSEEING TOURS TO DESTINATIONS AROUND SHIMLA, INCLUDING NARKANDA, AND OFFERS LIMITED ADVICE ON LOCAL WALKS. TO VENTURE INTO THE MORE REMOTE AND CHALLENGING REGIONS SUCH AS KINNAUR AND SPITI, CHECK OUT OUR RECOMMENDED MOUNTAINEERING AND TREKKING AGENCIES ON THE MALL.

Walking tours Shimla Walks (www.shimlawalks.com) organize guided walks around Shimla and the surrounding area.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Unsurprisingly for a state capital that is also a major holiday destination, accommodation is costlier than average. In May and June prices soar and it's essential to book in advance. At other times, most places are willing to bargain.

Ballyhack Cottage The Ridge, ☎ballyhackcottage.com. Steps from Christ Church is one of the first houses built in Shimla, a historic lodge with breath-taking Himalaya views from the lawns. Choose the family suite (Deodar) from the five antique-filled rooms, as those on the lower ground floor can be damp. Breakfast is hearty and other home-cooked meals can be ordered in advance. ₹₹₹

Chapslee Between Lakkar Bazaar and Long Wood, ☎chapslee.co.in. Exclusive, beautiful old manor house set in its own grounds on the edge of town and stuffed with antiques, plus a library, card room, tennis court and croquet lawn. Half-board, payment by credit card only. ₹₹₹₹

★Dreamland The Ridge, above Christ Church ☎0177 265 3005. Welcoming and excellent value during the low season especially; all rooms are clean, with hot showers and cable TV. The pricier rooms boast fantastic views over to the Himalayas. Large restaurant on the top floor; plus a helpful on-site travel agency. Wi-fi in the lobby only. ₹₹

The Oberoi Cecil The Mall, ☎oberoihotels.com. Raj-era building, frequented by Rudyard Kipling among others. It is now an opulent chain hotel somewhat devoid of historic character, but with fabulous service and an indoor heated pool. Advance online discounts. ₹₹₹₹

Summit Le Royale Jakhoo Rd, ☎summithotels.in. Modern and functional hotel offering great views from high above The Ridge and a variety of smart rooms of varying sizes, all with nice furnishings. Rather overpriced but bargaining is possible. ₹₹₹

White Lakkar Bazaar, ☎hotelwhiteshimla.com. Well-managed hotel with light rooms overlooking the Himalayas. Gleaming white marble and woodwork everywhere. The deluxe suite is excellent. Fixed prices all year. ₹₹

Woodville Palace Raj Bhavan Rd, ☎woodvillepalacehotel.com. A 20min walk south from Christ Church, this elegant – though slightly faded – 1930s mansion boasts huge rooms and suites, period furniture, lawns and a badminton court. ₹₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Few restaurants in Shimla retain any colonial ambience but standards have improved and a number of decent places complement the hotel restaurants, while the many bakeries and ice-cream parlours offer comfort for the sweet-toothed. For a really cheap and filling meal, try the fried potato patties (tikki) or chickpea curry and puris (channa batura) at one of the snack bars that line the steps opposite the Gaiety Theatre. Alternatively, the bazaar is good for cheap dhabas.

Ashiana The Ridge 📞0177 265 8464. Touristy HPTDC restaurant in a converted bandstand offering views of the Mall and mainly non-veg Indian food, including tasty chicken makhanwalla, plus pizzas and a few Chinese dishes. ₹

Baljee's The Mall 📞0177 281 4054. This hectic coffee house does a roaring trade in snacks, sweets and ice cream in the evenings especially. The Fascination restaurant upstairs offers a good selection of Indian and Chinese dishes, as well as sausage, egg and chips. ₹

Café Sol The Mall, on the roof of Combemere Hotel 📞0177 252 2242. Slick neon-lit cylindrical structure, good for reasonable Italian, Mexican and Thai dishes (₹180–500), as well as standard Indian food and tasty bakery items. Wi-fi. ₹₹

Choice Middle Bazaar, down the steps from Baljee's 📞0177 329 4626. Tiny Chinese and Tibetan restaurant with warm red walls and an exhaustive menu of delicious veg and non-veg dishes such as momos and chow mein. ₹

The Devicos The Mall, @devicos.com. The plush restaurant downstairs does south Indian snacks and full-on Indian non-veg portions. The ground floor is occupied by a Coffee Day franchise and there's a bar upstairs. ₹

★Himachali Rasoi 54 Middle Bazaar, 📷
instagram.com/himachali_rasoi. A tiny and cosy spot with just two veg dham thalis (a traditional Himachal festive spread) on the menu, that alternate depending on the day of the week. The smoked spiced black lentil dish is divine. Sides and sweets are available too, or you can pop in for a warm spiced lassi or herbal tea. Free delivery until 6pm. ₹₹

★Indian Coffee House The Mall 📞0177 265 2982. Atmospheric, faded café with colonial ambience, offering the usual range of veg snacks such as masala dosa, and attentive waiter service to the predominantly male clientele, who linger over coffee and put the world to rights. A must visit when in Shimla. ₹

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE VARIOUS ATMS LINE THE MALL, MANY ON SCANDAL POINT, WHILE CASH CAN BE EXCHANGED AT THE PUNJABI NATIONAL BANK AND ONE OR TWO AGENTS.

Bookshops Asia Book House (☎9816430241) and Minerva Book House (☎0177 280 3078), both on The Mall, stock a wide range of paperbacks and reference titles.

Hospitals Indira Gandhi Medical College Hospital; INDUS hospital, 6km from the ISBT at Mount Jakhoo (☎0177 284 1401).

Permits Inner Line permits are issued at the Additional District Magistrate's office (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, closed 2nd Sat of month; ☎0177 265 7005), a short way below The Mall, but it saves a lot of hassle to apply through a travel agency.

Pharmacies Indu Medical, The Mall (9am–8pm).

Post The GPO (Mon–Sat 10am–6pm) is near Scandal Point on The Mall.

Travel agents Reliable operators on The Mall include City Travels, near Scandal Point (☎94180 20899, ✉citytravelshimla@gmail.com) and Great Himalayan Travels (🌐ghtravels.com). The YMCA also organizes treks and jeep safaris, as does Silver Dreams at the Dreamland hotel.

Kasauli

Though it sees few Western tourists, the small, slow-paced town of KASAULI, cradled by pine forests 77km southwest of Shimla, and with a touch of Raj architecture, makes a good stop-off on the way to or from Delhi. Crisscrossed by spindly cobbled streets, spreading along low ridges carpeted with forests and flower-filled meadows, Kasauli offers an abundance of gentle short strolls, such as the one to nearby Sanawar, or the scenic longer trek to Kalka, railhead for the toy train to Shimla.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN THE NEAREST KASAULI RAILWAY STATION IS 11KM AWAY AT DHARAMPUR ON THE KALKA–SHIMLA TOY TRAIN LINE.

By bus There are frequent buses from Dharampur and direct hourly services from Shimla.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING GIAN POST OFFICE RD, DOWNHILL FROM THE BAZAAR NEAR THE LOWER MALL 01792 272244. FAIRLY BASIC YET ATTRACTIVE HOTEL, WHOSE HIGH-CEILINGED ROOMS ALL HAVE FIREPLACES, CARPETS AND BALCONIES, IN TRUE FADED RAJ STYLE. THE RESTAURANT DOES A LIMITED RANGE OF INDIAN, CHINESE AND CONTINENTAL CUISINE. NO WI-FI. ₹

Ros-Common Lower Mall hptdc.in/index.php/the-ros-common-kasauli. Overpriced state-run hotel with reasonable rooms of different prices and a standard restaurant. A more modern annexe is 500m away. ₹₹

Nalagarh

NALAGARH is an excellent place to break the journey between Delhi and Kullu, as it lies 60km from Chandigarh and just 12km off the main Chandigarh–Mandi road. Now an emerging industrial region, the town was capital of the medieval state of Hindur, founded by the Chandella Rajputs in 1100 AD. Its one outstanding feature is imposing Nalagarh Fort, now converted into the classiest heritage hotel in Himachal Pradesh.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE

NALAGARH

By bus Nalagarh is most easily reached by bus from Chandigarh (every 1–2hr; 2hr).

ACCOMMODATION ★THE FORT RESORT, NALAGARH.IN. ACCOMMODATION IS IN BEAUTIFULLY MAINTAINED SUITES, EACH WITH PERIOD FURNITURE, AND SURPRISINGLY GOOD VALUE. AN ATMOSPHERIC LOUNGE BAR OVERLOOKS TERRACED GROUNDS WITH A TENNIS COURT, CROQUET LAWN AND SWIMMING POOL, AND AN AYURVEDIC CLINIC OFFERS MASSAGE. BREAKFAST INCLUDED. ₹₹₹

Paonta Sahib On the border with Uttarakhand, the town of PAONTA SAHIB, where pastel-yellow houses are packed tightly into the cobbled streets, holds an important shrine dedicated to Guru Gobind Singh, the tenth Sikh guru, who lived here in the late 1680s.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS PAONTA PAONTA SAHIB
SAHIB PROVIDES GOOD BUS CONNECTIONS FOR TRAVEL BETWEEN SHIMLA AND POINTS IN UTTARAKHAND SUCH AS MUSSOORIE, DEHRADUN, HARIDWAR AND RISHIKESH.

ACCOMMODATION THE YAMUNA ☎01704 222341, ⓘ
PAONTA@HPTDC.IN. HPTDC HOTEL, ON THE BANKS OF THE RIVER YAMUNA, WITH PLEASANT ROOMS, A RESTAURANT SERVING THE PREDICTABLE RANGE OF INDIAN AND CHINESE DISHES, AND A BAR. ₹

Narkanda

A three-hour (65km) bus ride northeast of Shimla, the scruffy hill town of NARKANDA (2725m) makes a reasonable resting point on the bumpy, six-hour journey to Sarahan, and has a number of dhabas around the bazaar where you can grab a snack. This former staging post on the Hindustan–Tibet caravan route acts as the roadhead and main market town for the area’s widely dispersed apple- and potato-growers. There are some good rambles through the cedar forests that surround the town, and great views of the Himalayas. Hatu Peak (3143m), crowned by a lonely hilltop Durga temple, 7km east of town, looks out over the River Sutlej winding far below, and a string of white-tipped mountains to the north and east.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS NARKANDA NARKANDA HAS GOOD BUS CONNECTIONS WITH SHIMLA (EVERY 30MIN– 1HR; 3HR) AND THE TOWNS OF KINNAUR.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING THE HATU ON A HILLSIDE
ABOVE TOWN, ⓘHOTELHATU.TRIPOD.COM. FAIRLY SMART

HPTDC HOTEL WITH LARGE WELL-APPOINTED ROOMS AND GREAT VIEWS FROM THE MANICURED LAWNS. ALSO HAS SKI EQUIPMENT FOR RENT, CABLE TV AND A BAR. ₹₹

Mahamaya Palace Above the main road 📍hotel-mahamaya-palace-narkanda.business.site. Spruced up Alpine-style hotel with lots of wood panelling, spacious rooms, a huge deluxe suite and a decent restaurant. The downstairs back rooms are best value and still have great views. ₹

Negi Dhaba (New Himalayan Dhaba) Middle of the bazaar 📍01782 242426. By far the best place to eat, with modern wooden seating and fine valley views. ₹

Sarahan

Secluded SARAHAN, erstwhile summer capital of the Bhushar rajas, sits astride a 2000m ledge above the River Sutlej, near the Shimla–Kinnaur border. Set against a spectacular backdrop, the village harbours one of the northwestern Himalayas’ most exotic spectacles – the Bhimakali temple. With its two multitiered sanctuary towers, elegantly sloping slate-tiled roofs and gleaming golden spires, it is the most majestic early timber temple in the Sutlej Valley – an area renowned for housing holy shrines on raised wooden platforms. Although most of the structure dates from the early twentieth century, parts are thought to be more than eight hundred years old.

A pair of elaborately decorated metal doors lead into a large courtyard flanked by rest rooms and a small carved-stone Shiva shrine. After ascending to a second, smaller yard, you pass another golden door, also richly embossed with mythical scenes, beyond which the innermost enclosure holds the two sanctuary towers. The one on the right houses musical instruments, flags, paladins and ceremonial weapons, some of which are on show in the small “museum” in the corner of the courtyard. Non-Hindus who want to climb to the top of the other, more modern tower (no photography) to view the highly polished gold-faced deity must don one of the saffron or red caps, available at the entrance. Bhimakali herself is enshrined on the top floor, decked with garlands of flowers.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS THERE ARE SEVERAL DAILY DIRECT BUSES AND MANY MORE LOCAL SARAHAN

SERVICES FROM JEORI, 17KM BELOW SARAHAAN ON THE BUSY MAIN ROAD BETWEEN RAMPUR AND KINNAUR.

BLOOD SACRIFICE IN SARAHAAN THE BHIMAKALI DEITY, A LOCAL MANIFESTATION OF THE HINDU GODDESS KALI/DURGA, HAS FOR CENTURIES BEEN ASSOCIATED WITH HUMAN SACRIFICE. ONCE EVERY DECADE, UNTIL THE DISAPPROVING BRITISH INTERVENED IN THE 1800S, A MAN WAS KILLED HERE AS AN OFFERING TO THE DEVI. FOLLOWING A COMPLEX CEREMONY, HIS NEWLY SPILLED BLOOD WAS POURED OVER THE GODDESS'S TONGUE FOR HER TO DRINK, AFTER WHICH HIS BODY WAS DUMPED IN A DEEP WELL INSIDE THE TEMPLE COMPOUND. IF NO VICTIM COULD BE FOUND, IT IS SAID THAT A VOICE WOULD BELLOW FROM THE DEPTHS OF THE PIT, WHICH IS NOW SEALED UP.

The tradition of blood sacrifice continues in Sarahan to this day, albeit in less extreme form. During the annual Astami festival, two days before the culmination of Dussehra, a veritable menagerie of birds and beasts are put to the knife, including a water-buffalo calf, sheep, goat, fish, chicken, crab, and even a spider. The gory spectacle draws large crowds, and is a memorable alternative to the Dussehra procession in Kullu, which takes place at around the same time in mid-October.

On foot Keen walkers might fancy ambling along the well-worn mule track to Sarahan from Jeori.

ACCOMMODATION MONAL BEHIND THE TEMPLE ❶
07018458478. SIMPLE, FRIENDLY GUESTHOUSE, WHICH OFFERS A CHOICE OF RATHER COMPACT BUT CLEAN ATTACHED OR NON-ATTACHED ROOMS. NO WI-FI. ₹

The Srikhand Opposite the temple ☎01782 274234. The building is an incongruous concrete monster but its rooms are reasonable and it has a delightful garden and a restaurant serving good veg meals on a relaxing terrace. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹

Temple Guest House In the lower temple courtyard ☎01782 274248. The rooms are basic but pleasant and the dingy basement dorm offers some of the cheapest beds in the Himalayas. ₹

Trehan's Main road, ☎hoteltrehan.com. Welcoming hotel that looks down the valley from the sheer mountainside and offers spacious attached rooms with attractive moulded ceilings and TV. Serves passable food too. ₹

Kinnaur

Before 1992, the remote backwater of KINNAUR, a rugged buffer zone between the Shimla foothills and the wild western extremity of Chinese-occupied Tibet, was strictly off-limits to tourists. Although visitors are now allowed to travel through the “Inner Line”, and on to Spiti, Lahaul and the Kullu Valley, permits are still required. Other areas of Kinnaur, notably the Baspa Valley (also called Sangla Valley) and the sacred Kinner-Kailash massif visible from the mountain village of Kalpa, are completely open.

Straddling the mighty River Sutlej, which rises on the southern slopes of Mount Kailash, Kinnaur has for centuries been a major trans-Himalayan corridor. Merchants travelling between China and the Punjabi plains passed through on the Hindustan–Tibet caravan route, stretches of which are still used by villagers and trekkers. The bulk of the traffic that lumbers east towards the frontier, however, uses the newer NH-22, which veers north into Spiti just short of the ascent to Shipki La pass, on the Chinese border, which remains closed.

In the well-watered, mainly Hindu west of the region, the scenery ranges from subtropical to almost Alpine: wood-and-slate villages, surrounded by maize terraces and orchards, nestle beneath pine forests and vast blue-grey mountain peaks. Further east, largely beyond the reach of the monsoons, it grows more austere, and glaciers loom on all sides. Buddhism arrived in Kinnaur with the tenth-century kings of Guge, who ruled what is now southwestern Tibet. When Rinchen Zangpo (958–1055), the “Great Translator” credited with the “Second Spreading” of the faith in Guge, passed through, he left behind several monasteries and a devotion to a pure form of the Buddhist faith that has endured here for nearly one thousand years. In the sixteenth century, after Guge had fragmented into dozens of petty fiefdoms, the Bhushar kings took control of Kinnaur. They remained in power throughout the British Raj, when this was one of the battlegrounds of the espionage war played out between agents of the Chinese, Russian and British empires – the “Great Game” evocatively depicted in the novels of Rudyard Kipling.

TREKKING IN KINNAUR UNFREQUENTED MOUNTAIN TRAILS CRISSCROSS KINNAUR, OFFERING TREKS RANGING FROM GENTLE HIKEs TO CHALLENGING CLIMBS OVER HIGH-ALTITUDE PASSES. THE ROUTES ALONG THE SUTLEJ VALLEY, PUNCTUATED WITH GOVERNMENT RESTHOUSES AND VILLAGES, ARE FEASIBLE WITHOUT THE AID OF PONIES, BUT AWAY FROM THE MAIN ROAD YOU NEED TO BE COMPLETELY SELF-SUFFICIENT. PORTERS CAN USUALLY BE HIRED IN RAMPUR, REKONG PEO AND THE BASPA/SANGLA VALLEY EXCEPT IN EARLY AUTUMN (SEPT/OCT), WHEN THEY'RE BUSY WITH THE APPLE HARVEST.

THE KINNER-KAILASH CIRCUIT THE FIVE- TO SEVEN-DAY PARIKRAMA (CIRCUMAMBULATION) OF THE MAJESTIC KINNER-KAILASH MASSIF, A SACRED PILGRIMAGE TRAIL, MAKES A SPECTACULAR TREK FOR WHICH YOU WON'T NEED AN INNER LINE PERMIT. THE CIRCUIT STARTS AT THE VILLAGE OF MORANG, ON THE LEFT BANK OF THE SUTLEJ, SERVED BY BUSES FROM TAPRI OR REKONG PEO. A TRACK, PASSABLE BY JEEP, RUNS SOUTHEAST FROM HERE TO THANGI, THE TRAILHEAD, AND CONTINUES THROUGH RAHTAK, OVER THE CHARANG LA PASS (5266M) TO CHITKUL IN THE BASPA/SANGLA VALLEY. THE TRAIL

THEN FOLLOWS THE RIVER DOWN TO THE BEAUTIFUL VILLAGE OF SANGLA, FROM WHERE A COUPLE OF WORTHWHILE DAY-HIKES CAN BE MADE – TO KAMRU FORT BEHIND THE VILLAGE, OR THE STEEP ASCENT TO THE SHIVALING LA PASS, FROM WHERE THERE ARE SUPERB VIEWS OF RALDANG (5499M), THE SOUTHERNMOST PEAK ON THE KINNER-KAILASH MASSIF. THE FINAL STAGE PASSES THROUGH THE LOWER BASPA/SANGLA VALLEY, VIA SHANG AND BRUA TO KARCHAM, WHICH OVERLOOKS THE NH-22 HIGHWAY. THE BEST TIME FOR THE KINNER-KAILASH PARIKRAMA IS BETWEEN JULY AND OCTOBER; AUGUST IS THE MOST POPULAR MONTH WITH LOCAL PILGRIMS.

KAFNU TO KAZA, VIA THE PIN VALLEY THIS CHALLENGING ROUTE ACROSS THE GREAT HIMALAYAN RANGE, VIA THE KALANG SETAL GLACIER AND THE SHAKAROF LA PASS, IS A DRAMATIC APPROACH TO SPITI AND THE PIN VALLEY, AND NO RESTRICTIONS APPLY. THE TRAIL, WHICH IS VERY STEEP, SNOW-COVERED, AND HARD TO FOLLOW IN PLACES, SHOULD DEFINITELY NOT BE ATTEMPTED WITHOUT PONIES, PORTERS, ADEQUATE GEAR AND A RELIABLE GUIDE. IT STARTS IN EARNEST AT KAFNU VILLAGE, NOW CONNECTED TO WANGTU ON THE MAIN ROAD BY A PAVED SURFACE, CONTINUING VIA MULLING, PHUSTIRANG (3750M), AND OVER THE BHABA PASS (4865M), A GRUELLING SLOG THROUGH SNOWFIELDS, BEFORE DROPPING DOWN INTO THE BEAUTIFUL AND ISOLATED PIN VALLEY. YOU CAN THEN TREK ONWARDS OR GET A VEHICLE TO KAZA. MORE OF THIS ROUTE MAY BECOME PAVED AS THE DELAYED WANGTU–MUDH ROAD PROJECT PAINFULLY PROGRESSES.

CHITKUL TO HAR-KI-DUN THIS TEN-DAY TREK TO GARHWAL PASSES ALONG THE EDGE OF THE INNER LINE AND IS SUBJECT TO RESTRICTIONS. STARTING FROM CHITKUL AND CROSSING THE RIVER BASPA TO DOARIA,

THE ROUTE THEN CLIMBS UP A SIDE VALLEY TO FOLLOW A LATERAL MORaine UP TO THE ZUPIKA GAD AND THEN A STEEP ASCENT – THE FINAL SECTION OF WHICH IS UP A CREVASSED GLACIER – TO THE BORSU PASS (5300M). THE OTHER SIDE OF THE PASS IS DOWN A STEEP SNOW- AND BOULDER-FIELD REQUIRING SOME SCRAMBLING; YOU ARRIVE A FEW DAYS LATER IN THE BEAUTIFUL VALLEY OF HAR-KI-DUN IN GARHWAL. A GUIDE IS ESSENTIAL.

THE OLD HINDUSTAN–TIBET ROAD FROM KALPA TO THE RUPA VALLEY ANOTHER ROUTE TO CONSIDER IS THE RELATIVELY EASY FIVE-DAY TREK STARTING AT KALPA AND FOLLOWING THE OLD HINDUSTAN–TIBET ROAD THROUGH THE REMOTE HAMLETS OF UPPER KINNAUR (PERMITS NEEDED), PAST SHI ASU TO THE RUPA VALLEY. THE VIEWS ALONG THE ROUTE ARE SUPERB AND THE VILLAGERS ARE EXTREMELY HOSPITABLE. THE ROAD, NOW CRUMBLING IN PLACES, IS ALSO IDEAL FOR MOUNTAIN BIKING.

Rekong Peo

East of Jeori, the road climbs high above the Sutlej into ever more remote territory, traversing sheer ravines on cable bridges, while tiny wooden villages, each with a pagoda-roofed temple, cling to the mountainsides. At Wangtu bridge, the trailhead for the Kinnaur–Pin Valley–Kaza trek, the highway switches to the north bank of the river. Further east there is a long-term detour at Tapri because of road subsidence, which ends near the sturdy metal bridge beside the huge Karcham Dam hydroelectric project. The route to Sangla and the rest of the Baspa Valley (which is also known as Sangla Valley) lies across the bridge to the south, while the main highway continues to REKONG PEO, district headquarters of Kinnaur. Its batch of concrete houses and government buildings around a small maidan, 7km above the main road, gives it the air of an upstart frontier settlement. Apart from its moderately interesting bazaar, the only reason to stop is to buy trekking supplies, find a connection to Kalpa or obtain an Inner Line permit.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS BUSES REKONG PEO DROP OFF AND PICK UP AT THE BEND IN THE MAIN BAZAAR BEFORE PROCEEDING UP THE HILL ON THE KALPA ROAD FOR 2KM TO THE MAIN BUS STAND, WHICH CAN BE REACHED ON FOOT BY THE 500M PATH FROM THE END OF ITBP RD. THERE ARE SERVICES ALMOST HOURLY TO SHIMLA (9–10HR), EARLY MORNING DEPARTURES DIRECT TO MANDI AND KAZA (10–11HR), AND DIRECT BUSES TO CHANDIGARH, AMRITSAR AND DELHI. SEVERAL MORNING BUSES RUN TO SANGLA (2HR), SOME CONTINUING TO CHITKUL, AND THERE ARE MINIBUSES EVERY 15–20MIN TO KALPA.

Tourist information The Tourist Info Centre (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm; ☎ 01786 222857) is in the open courtyard below the bazaar bus stop. This is also the official agent for Inner Line permits – they charge but can take your photo and make copies of your passport as part of the service. A similar service and other helpful travel advice is available from adjacent The Monk Travels (☎98055 30056).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING THERE ARE A SURPRISING NUMBER OF HOTELS LINING THE UPPER SIDE OF THE MAIN BAZAAR, ALTHOUGH MOST OF THESE ARE RATHER OVERPRICED. THOSE FURTHER UP THE HILL AND ON SIDE ROADS OFFER BETTER VALUE.

Fairyland On the road immediately above the main bazaar ☎98174 11040, ✉hotelfairyland@gmail.com. Most easily accessed via the steps beside Cafeteria Roof, Fairyland's modest but clean attached rooms have TV and great views of Kinner-Kailash. Generous portions in the restaurant. No wi-fi. ₹

Little Chef On the corner of the main bazaar ☎94180 92237. Brightly coloured mosaic tabletops complement a wide-ranging menu of forgettable Indian, Chinese and Continental dishes. They do have a nice view from the balcony and filter water to refill your bottle. ₹₹

Mehfil ITBP Rd ☎94180 07799. Enjoying a central location but slightly removed from the bustling bazaar, this hotel has a range of attached rooms with TV and partial mountain views. ₹

Vikas Bar & Restaurant In the middle of the main bazaar 📍94181 20411. Fairly basic place that does good local food such as soup, dhal, aloo gobi, pakora and mutton cari. ₹

Kalpa (Chini) KALPA can be reached by the twisting 9km road from Rekong Peo or on foot along various steep tracks. Its narrow atmospheric lanes, crammed with rickety wooden shops, and dramatic location, high above the right bank of the Sutlej, make it by far the most attractive base in the immediate vicinity. The ancient Tibetan gompa here was founded by Rinchen Zangpo, and there is also a small Shiva temple. The village and its growing number of hotels are quite spread out up the hill, which is festooned with apple orchards, and along the roads that radiate from the centre. Facing the village, the magnificent Kinner-Kailash massif sweeps 4500m up from the valley floor. The mountain in the middle, Jorkaden (6473m), is the highest, followed by the sacred summit of Kinner-Kailash (6050m) to the north, and the needle point of Raldang (5499m) in the south.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS MINIBUSES KALPA (CHINI) BETWEEN KALPA AND REKONG PEO RUN EVERY 15–20MIN; THERE ARE THREE DAILY BUSES TO SHIMLA (7.40AM, 11.30AM & 2.30PM) AND ONE TO SANGLA AND CHITKUL (8.30AM).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING APART FROM THE HOTEL RESTAURANTS, THERE ARE JUST A FEW BASIC DHABAS AND TEA HOUSES. HOTEL PRICES DOUBLE IN MAY, JUNE AND OCTOBER.

Apple Pie On the upper road, 📍hotelapplepie.com. Friendly place, painted brilliant white and containing three floors of nicely furnished, sizeable rooms with attractive artwork. Good restaurant too. ₹₹₹

★Kinner Villa On the upper road ☎01786 226006, 🌐kinnervilla.com. Expanded in 2012, this is the biggest resort around, with sleek, refurbished rooms, spotless bath-rooms and a grassy lawn out front. Fine restaurant too.

₹₹₹

Rakpa Regency On the upper road ☎80453 25503. Large hotel, popular with holiday-makers from Bengal, set in pleasant grounds. The front rooms have balconies with splendid views and there's a huge upstairs terrace. ₹₹

The Baspa Valley Hemmed in by the pinnacles of Kinner-Kailash to the north and the high peaks of the Garhwal range to the south, the 70km River Baspa rises in the mountain wilderness along the Indo-Tibetan border to flow through what was until recently one of Kinnaur's most beautiful and secluded areas. Much of the lower reaches of the valley below Sangla are now dominated by a massive and ugly hydroelectric plant but beyond Sangla the scenery remains unspoilt.

Although the head of Baspa Valley (which is also known as Sangla Valley) is technically closed to tourists, there are still plenty of walking opportunities through side valleys. There are no official tourist offices nor any ATMs or banks that offer exchange in the Baspa/Sangla Valley, although you may be able to pay in foreign currency or exchange small amounts at the pricier hotels.

Sangla

The valley's largest settlement, SANGLA, makes an excellent base to visit nearby Kamru village, 25 minutes' walk above Sangla, with its warren of lanes and slate-roofed stone houses, and its wood-and-stone gable-roofed fort. Tibetan prayer flags flutter in the breeze and the inhabitants retain Buddhist funerary rites, although they are now mostly Hindu and no longer read Tibetan. The inner sanctum of the temple below the fort is off-limits to visitors unless a goat is paid for and sacrificed.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS SANGLA IS SERVED BY 2–3 DAILY BUSES FROM SHIMLA, REKONG PEO AND KALPA. TWO DAILY BUSES CONTINUE TO CHITKUL (NOON & 2.30PM).

ACCOMMODATION FROM LATE SEPTEMBER THROUGH OCTOBER SANGLA FILLS UP WITH BENGALI HOLIDAY-MAKERS SO HOTEL OPTIONS ARE INCREASING EVERY YEAR; THE BEST PLACES TO STAY ARE MOSTLY DOTTED AROUND THE VILLAGE OUTSKIRTS.

Baspa Guest House Beside the bridge into town  baspaguesthouse.business.site. This moderately attractive building with a flowery courtyard has a variety of attached doubles, the more expensive ones with cable TV, but all at the basic end of the scale. ₹

Igloo Nature Camp 1km north of the village  08860294119. The most conveniently located of several luxury eco-camps in the Baspa/Sangla Valley also organizes trekking tours. The spacious Swiss tents have attached bathrooms and there's a large mess tent. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹

EATING ASHIANA CAFE IN THE MIDDLE OF THE BAZAAR  98058 41254. NO-NONSENSE UPSTAIRS RESTAURANT SERVING A STANDARD RANGE OF INDIAN AND CHINESE MAIN COURSES AT A SNIP. ALSO OPEN FOR BREAKFAST. ₹

Tibetan Cafe In the middle of the bazaar  96252 91706. As the name suggests, this tiny place specializes in inexpensive momos, thukpa and chow mein. Two balcony tables overlook the bazaar. ₹

Chitkul

Twenty-five kilometres beyond Sangla, CHITKUL is as far up the valley as you can officially go, although the checkpoint at the far end of the village that marks the start of the guarded Inner Line is now unmanned and guides sometimes lead trekkers further up the valley. However, it's still better not to wander too far unaccompanied. Visible above the village, which is set on a rise with dramatic views of the opening valley, a trail winds steeply up to a huge saddle below the Charang La pass – the route of the Kinner-Kailash pilgrimage circuit.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS THERE ARE CHITKUL SEVERAL DAILY BUSES TO SANGLA (1HR), OF WHICH AT LEAST ONE OR TWO GO ON TO REKONG PEO AND EVEN KALPA.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING ★THE KINNER HEIGHTS OPPOSITE THE BUS STAND 98056 28801. FRIENDLY NEPALI-RUN PLACE WITH FAIRLY SIMPLE BUT CLEAN ATTACHED ROOMS AND UNINTERRUPTED VIEWS ALONG THE VALLEY. NO WI-FI. ₹

Shahensha Resort Far end of the village 98168 03505. One of the new breed of resorts, painted blue and white, with smart rooms and balconies giving views along the river valley. No wi-fi. ₹

Thakur Guesthouse Near the bus stand 89882 09604. Old-fashioned wooden building with a mixture of pretty basic rooms, some of which are attached. The upper storey affords fine views. No wi-fi. ₹

Upper Kinnaur Inner Line permits are required beyond the dull hamlet of Spillo for upper Kinnaur, the remote region east of Rekong Peo. Sparsely inhabited and increasingly bare, by the time the NH-22 has crossed the metal bridge beyond Pooh and starts to spiral up the greyish-brown slopes towards Nako, the terrain bears much more resemblance to Spiti or Ladakh than the greener Sutlej Valley.

Pooh and around Several hours by road from Rekong Peo and within a day's hike of the frontier, the small town of POOH, perched 4km above the main road, is the first main settlement you encounter. Evidence from inscriptions suggest that Pooh was, in the eleventh century, an important trading centre that fell under the influence of the Tibetan kingdom of Guge when the Great Translator, Rinchen Zangpo, travelled through the area. The temple here is devoted to Sakyamuni, with wooden columns supporting a high ceiling and a circumambulatory path around the altar.

Beyond Pooh, the road bends north, crossing the muddy Sutlej for the last time at Khab, where it meets the turquoise waters of River Spiti. To the northeast, Kinnaur's highest peak, Leo Pargial II (6770m), rises in a near-vertical 4000m wall which marks the border with Tibet and overlooks the old Indo-Tibet road at the Shipki La pass (5569m). The NH-22 continues north through the barren wastes of the Hanglang Valley, very similar to parts of Ladakh.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS VERY POOH AND AROUND FEW BUSES GO RIGHT UP TO POOH, THOUGH YOU CAN GET OFF ANYWHERE ALONG THE MAIN ROAD BELOW.

ACCOMMODATION OM GUEST HOUSE IN THE VILLAGE CENTRE ☎01785 232601. THE BEST OF THE EXTREMELY LIMITED CHOICE HERE, THE OM HAS DECENT ROOMS, TWO DORMS AND A GOOD RESTAURANT SERVING ALL THE USUAL INDIAN AND CHINESE FAVOURITES. NO WI-FI. ₹

Nako

NAKO, the valley's largest village, nestling high above the River Spiti at 3640m around a small artificial lake, is now on the main Rekong Peo–Kaza road, which was redirected uphill to avoid the infamous Malling Slide. Unfortunately, the road still gets blocked during bad weather, as do many other points on the Kinnaur–Spiti circuit. In the northwest corner of the village, the eleventh-century complex of the Nako Chokhor (arrange entry through the Youth Club tent above the bus stand) is attributed to Rinchen Zangpo; although it's in desperate need of restoration, its exquisite interior paintings are comparable to those in Alchi. The finest building of all is the Serkhang or “Golden Hall”, dedicated to the Tathagatas or Supreme Buddhas.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS/TAXI ONE DAILY NAKO BUS AND NUMEROUS JEEPS LEAVE FOR KAZA VIA TABO AND FOR REKONG PEO.

ACCOMMODATION LAKE VIEW GUEST HOUSE BESIDE THE LAKE, LAKEVIEWHOTEL.COM. ENJOYING BY FAR THE MOST SCENIC LOCATION, THE ATTACHED ROOMS IN THIS BRIGHTLY PAINTED PLACE ARE FAIRLY SIMPLE, BUT CLEAN AND COMFORTABLE AND LARGE. BUFFET BREAKFAST AND DINNER, PLUS SUBLIME VIEWS. ₹₹

Reo Purguil Near the bus stand 94594 94111. Best of the central trio of guesthouses, where all rooms have bathrooms (with hot water) and balconies. The restaurant is the best in town too. ₹

Northwest Himachal From Shimla the main road winds west and north to the riverside market town of Mandi, an important crossroads linking the Kullu Valley and the hills to the northwest. The rolling foothills on this side of the state are warmer and more accessible than Himachal's eastern reaches, though less dramatic and considerably lower. The area sees little tourism outside Dharamsala, the British hill station turned Tibetan settlement, home to the Dalai Lama. Dharamsala is an excellent base for treks over the soaring Dhauladhar Range to the Chamba Valley, which harbours uniquely styled Hindu temples in Bharmour and Chamba. South of Chamba, the fading hill station of Dalhousie still has a certain ex-Raj charm, and is popular with Indian tourists who arrive in droves during the hot season and trek in the surrounding mountains.

The following section traces the River Beas and NH-21 as they weave from Mandi to Dharamsala, linking a string of quiet mountain towns and villages. While most visitors make the six-hour journey to Dharamsala in one go, those with more time can detour to sacred Rewalsar, just outside Mandi, or stop in the Kangra Valley to pick up the narrow-gauge train that trundles through patchwork fields and light forest to Kangra, just an hour away from Dharamsala and jumping-off point for a couple of little-visited places of interest.

Mandi

The junction town of MANDI, 158km north of Shimla, straddles the River Beas, its riverside ghats dotted with stone temples where sadhus and pilgrims pray. Once a major trading post for Ladakhis heading south – mandi means market – the town still bustles with commercial activity, now centred on the attractive Indira Market and its sunken garden, in the centre of the town square. A collection of sixteenth-century Nagari-style temples sits above the town on Tarna Hill. On the summit is the main Kali temple, decorated with garish paintings of the fierce mother goddess draped in skulls and blood.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS THE BUS STAND IS MANDI 500M ACROSS THE RIVER ON THE EAST BANK. THERE ARE DEPARTURES EVERY 30MIN OR SO FOR REWALSAR, KULLU, MANALI AND PATHANKOT, ROUGHLY HOURLY FOR

BAIJNATH, DHARAMSALA AND SHIMLA, WITH MORE FREQUENT CONNECTIONS IN BILASPUR.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING RAJ MAHAL NORTH SIDE OF THE MAIN SQUARE, ☎RAJMAHALPALACE.COM. THIS PERIOD-FURNISHED PALACE, SET IN SPACIOUS SHADY GARDENS ON AN EMBANKMENT, HAS SPACIOUS ROOMS, A GOOD RESTAURANT AND AN ATMOSPHERIC GENTLEMEN'S BAR. ₹₹₹

The Regent Palms Northeast corner of the main square ☎01905 222777. Smart, modern business hotel with spacious, well-furnished rooms. Cool a/c restaurant with subdued lighting, serving ample portions of Indian, Chinese and some Continental cuisine. ₹₹₹

Shiva South side of the main square ☎01905 224211. The interior rooms are mostly windowless and not much cheaper than the far lighter ones facing the square. It's a decent budget option and food is available by room service. ₹

Rewalsar

If you've any interest in Buddhism it's worth taking a detour to REWALSAR (Tso Pema in Tibetan), 24km southeast of Mandi, where three Tibetan monasteries (Nyingma, Drikung Kagyu and Drukpa Kagyu) mark an important place of pilgrimage. There are also Sikh and Hindu temples here, all of which draw a steady stream of pilgrims and tourists. The devout complete a chora around the small sacred lake and along narrow lanes full of shrines and stalls selling Tibetan curios, before lounging beneath the prayer flags on the lake's grassy fringes.

It's believed that Padmasambhava left many footprints and handprints in rocks and caves up in the hills around the lake, and steep paths lead up from the lake to caves that are used today as isolated meditation retreats. Of the three monasteries around the lake, Tso-Pema Ogyen Heruka Gompa is the most venerated and atmospheric; check out the tree planted in 1957 by the Dalai Lama, who visited India that year – two years before his exile from Tibet – to celebrate the 2500th anniversary of the Buddha's birth. Towering dramatically over the lake and visually dominating the Rewalsar setting is the large but much newer Drukpa Kagyu Zigar Gompa.

For Hindus, Rewalsar is regarded as the abode of the sage Lomas, for whose sake the lake was created with waters from the Ganga and Yamuna. Three small temples dedicated to Krishna, Lomas and Shiva, along with a Nandi bull statue and lakeside ghats, reflect Rewalsar's Hindu connections. The voracious carp that scrap for treats thrown into the water by visitors are quite a sight too.

On the west shore, the Sikh gurudwara attracts pilgrims retracing the steps of Guru Gobind Singh, who came here in 1702; this is one of the few sites associated with his life in Himachal. To the south a small sanctuary protects deer and Himalayan black bears.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS THERE ARE REWALSAR BUSES ABOUT EVERY 30MIN FROM MANDI (1HR).

By taxi Taxis ply back and forth between Rewalsar and Mandi for around ₹600 and it's easy to organise one to or from Dharamsala (expect to pay around ₹3000).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING THERE ARE SEVERAL SMALL BUT REASONABLE TIBETAN RESTAURANTS NEAR THE LAKE, WHICH SERVE THUKPA, MOMOS AND NOODLES, AND DHABAS ALONG THE MAIN ROAD SERVING NORTH INDIAN FOOD.

CG Homestay Near the post office, south of the lakeshore 📞09882 744092. A real homestay with a welcoming family and home-cooked meals cooked with produce from the garden. Rooms are simple, but quiet and clean and it's around a 10min walk to the lake. Plenty of local info on offer, too. Check ahead about what's included in the rate. ₹

Emaho Café At the entrance to Drikung Kagyu Gompa 📞09418704296. Colourful modern café run by monks, offering a tasty range of cakes and snacks, as well as fine teas and coffees. Free wi-fi. ₹

Nyingma Gompa Northwest lakeshore 📞01905 280226. Pretty basic cell-like rooms, many with lake views and some with attached bathrooms, in the peaceful monastery buildings. No wi-fi. ₹

The Tourist Inn A short way back from the north shore 📞01905 240252, 📧rewalsar@hptdc.in. Both blocks of this HPTDC hotel have fairly comfortable rooms with hot showers, although there are no views. ₹

THE KANGRA VALLEY RAILWAY INDIA HAS FIVE OF THE TWENTY OR SO VINTAGE “TOY TRAINS” OR NARROW-GAUGE MOUNTAIN RAILWAYS IN THE WORLD – THREE IN THE HIMALAYAS AND TWO OF THESE IN HIMACHAL PRADESH. MOST FAMOUS IS THE KALKA–SHIMLA LINE, BUT THE LITTLE-KNOWN 163KM KANGRA VALLEY RAILWAY IS ALSO A MAGNIFICENT ENGINEERING FEAT. UNLIKE THE KALKA LINE, WITH ITS 103 TUNNELS AND TORTUOUS SWITCHBACKS, ENGINEERS OF THIS ROUTE PREFERRED BRIDGES – 950 IN ALL, MANY OF WHICH ARE STILL CONSIDERED MASTERPIECES – THAT GIVE PASSENGERS UNINTERRUPTED VIEWS ALL THE WAY FROM PATHANKOT TO JOGINDER NAGAR. ALTHOUGH IT’S SLOWER THAN THE EQUIVALENT ROAD JOURNEY, THE SCENERY ALONG THE WAY IS FAR MORE IMPRESSIVE, PARTICULARLY THE STRETCH BETWEEN KANGRA AND MANGWAL.

There are six trains daily from Pathankot, departing between 2.15am and 5.45pm; four terminate at Baijnath (6hr 30min–7hr), while two go all the way to Joginder Nagar (10hr). In the opposite direction there are departures from Joginder Nagar at 8am and 12.20pm, and four more from Baijnath between 4.15am and 5.30pm. All services pass through Kangra.

Baijnath

Although the nondescript village of Joginder Nagar is the eastern terminal of the Kangra Valley Railway, BAIJNATH, 21km further northwest, is perhaps a better spot to pick up the toy train, as more services originate here and it gives you a chance to visit the Baidyanath Shiva temple, parts of which are intricately carved and believed to date from 804 AD.

Kangra and around Although most travellers bypass KANGRA on their way to Dharamsala, 18km further north, it's worth a brief detour. Kangra's crumbling, overgrown fort (daily 9am–5pm; charge) was damaged by an earthquake in 1905 and is now inhabited by screeching green parrots that flit through a few simple temples still tended by priests. High gates, some British-built, span a cobbled path to the deserted ramparts. To get here, head 3km south on the road to Jawalamukhi, then turn up the 1km access road just before the bridge.

Masrur

Daily sunrise–sunset • Charge

Thirty-five kilometres southwest of Kangra, the tiny village of MASRUR is the only place in the Himalayas with rock-cut Hindu temples similar to, though nowhere near as impressive or well-preserved, those at Ellora in Maharashtra. The fifteen temples, devoted to Ram, Lakshman and Sita, were hewn from natural rock in the ninth and tenth centuries.

Jawalamukhi A simple whitewashed temple in the otherwise nondescript town of JAWALAMUKHI, 35km south of Kangra, protects one of north India's most important Hindu shrines. The sanctuary, crowned with a squat golden spire, contains a natural blue gas flame emitted from the earth, revered as a manifestation of the goddess of fire, Jawalamukhi.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS KANGRA AND AROUND BUSES FROM ALL OVER THE KANGRA VALLEY AND FURTHER AFIELD PULL INTO THE BUS STAND 1KM NORTH OF THE TOWN CENTRE, WHERE THERE ARE FREQUENT CONNECTIONS TO DHARAMSALA, AS WELL AS HOURLY SERVICES TO BOTH MASRUR AND JAWALAMUKHI.

By toy train Kangra can also be reached from Pathankot and Joginder Nagar by the narrow-gauge railway.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING JWALAJI ON THE OUTSKIRTS OF JAWALAMUKHI ☎01970 222280, ☎
JAWALAJI@HPTDC.IN. ONE OF THE BETTER HPTDC HOTELS, WITH A RANGE OF SPACIOUS ROOMS, A DORMITORY, A FULL-SERVICE RESTAURANT AND A SNACK BAR. DORMS ₹, DOUBLES ₹₹

Preet On the road to the bus stand, Kangra ☎01892 265260. The best rooms at this functional hotel are on the first floor, alongside a cosy little terrace. The restaurant is quite average. ₹

Dharamsala and McLeod Ganj Home to the Dalai Lama and Tibetan government in exile, and starting point for some exhilarating treks into the high Himalayas, DHARAMSALA, or more correctly, its upper town McLEOD GANJ, is one of Himachal's most irresistible destinations. Spread across wooded ridges beneath the stark rock faces of the Dhauladhar Range, the town is divided into two distinct and separate sections, separated by 10km of perilously twisting road and almost 1000m in altitude. Originally a British hill station, McLeod Ganj has been transformed by the influx of Tibetan refugees fleeing Chinese oppression in their homeland. Tibetan influence here is subsequently very strong, with temples, schools, monasteries, nunneries, meditation centres and the most extensive library of Tibetan history and religion. As well as playing host to hordes of foreign and domestic tourists, McLeod Ganj is a place of pilgrimage that attracts Buddhists and interested parties from all over the world, including Hollywood celebrities such as Richard Gere and Uma Thurman. Many people visit India specifically to come here, and its relaxed and friendly atmosphere can make it difficult to leave.

Despite heavy snows and low temperatures between December and March, McLeod Ganj receives visitors throughout the year. Summer brings torrential rains – this being the second wettest place in India – that return in bursts for much of the year. Daytime temperatures can be high, but you'll need warm clothes for the chilly nights.

Dharamsala It's easy to see why most visitors bypass Dharamsala itself, a haphazard jumble of shops, offices and houses that spreads along several kilometres of gradually rising road. Apart from a couple of moderately lively bazaars, the only place of interest is the Museum of Kangra Art (Tues–Sun 10am–5pm; charge), which contains a small collection of Kangra miniatures and some modern art.

McLeod Ganj and around The ever-expanding settlement of McLeod Ganj extends along a pine-covered ridge with valley views below and the near vertical walls of the Dhauladhar Range towering behind. Despite being named after David McLeod, the Lieutenant Governor of Punjab when the hill station was founded in 1848, little evidence of British occupation remains. The focal point of McLeod Ganj is its Buddhist temple, ringed with spinning red-and-gold prayer wheels. Today, Indian residents are outnumbered by Tibetans, who bedeck their ramshackle buildings with fluttering prayer flags: McLeod Ganj is not simply a political haven for them, but also home to their spiritual leader, the Dalai Lama, and to the Tibetan government in exile.

It's easy to find your way around McLeod Ganj. At its northern end, the main road up from Dharamsala arrives at a small chowk, from which all other roads radiate. These include Temple Road and Jogiwara Road, which run closely parallel and constitute a double main strip, before splitting up and leading to the Dalai Lama's residence and main jeep route to Dharamsala respectively. Other smaller roads lead northeast to the village of Dharamkot, the Tushita Retreat Meditation Centre and to Dal Lake, and east to the hamlet of Bhagsu.

The Dalai Lama's Residence Temple Rd

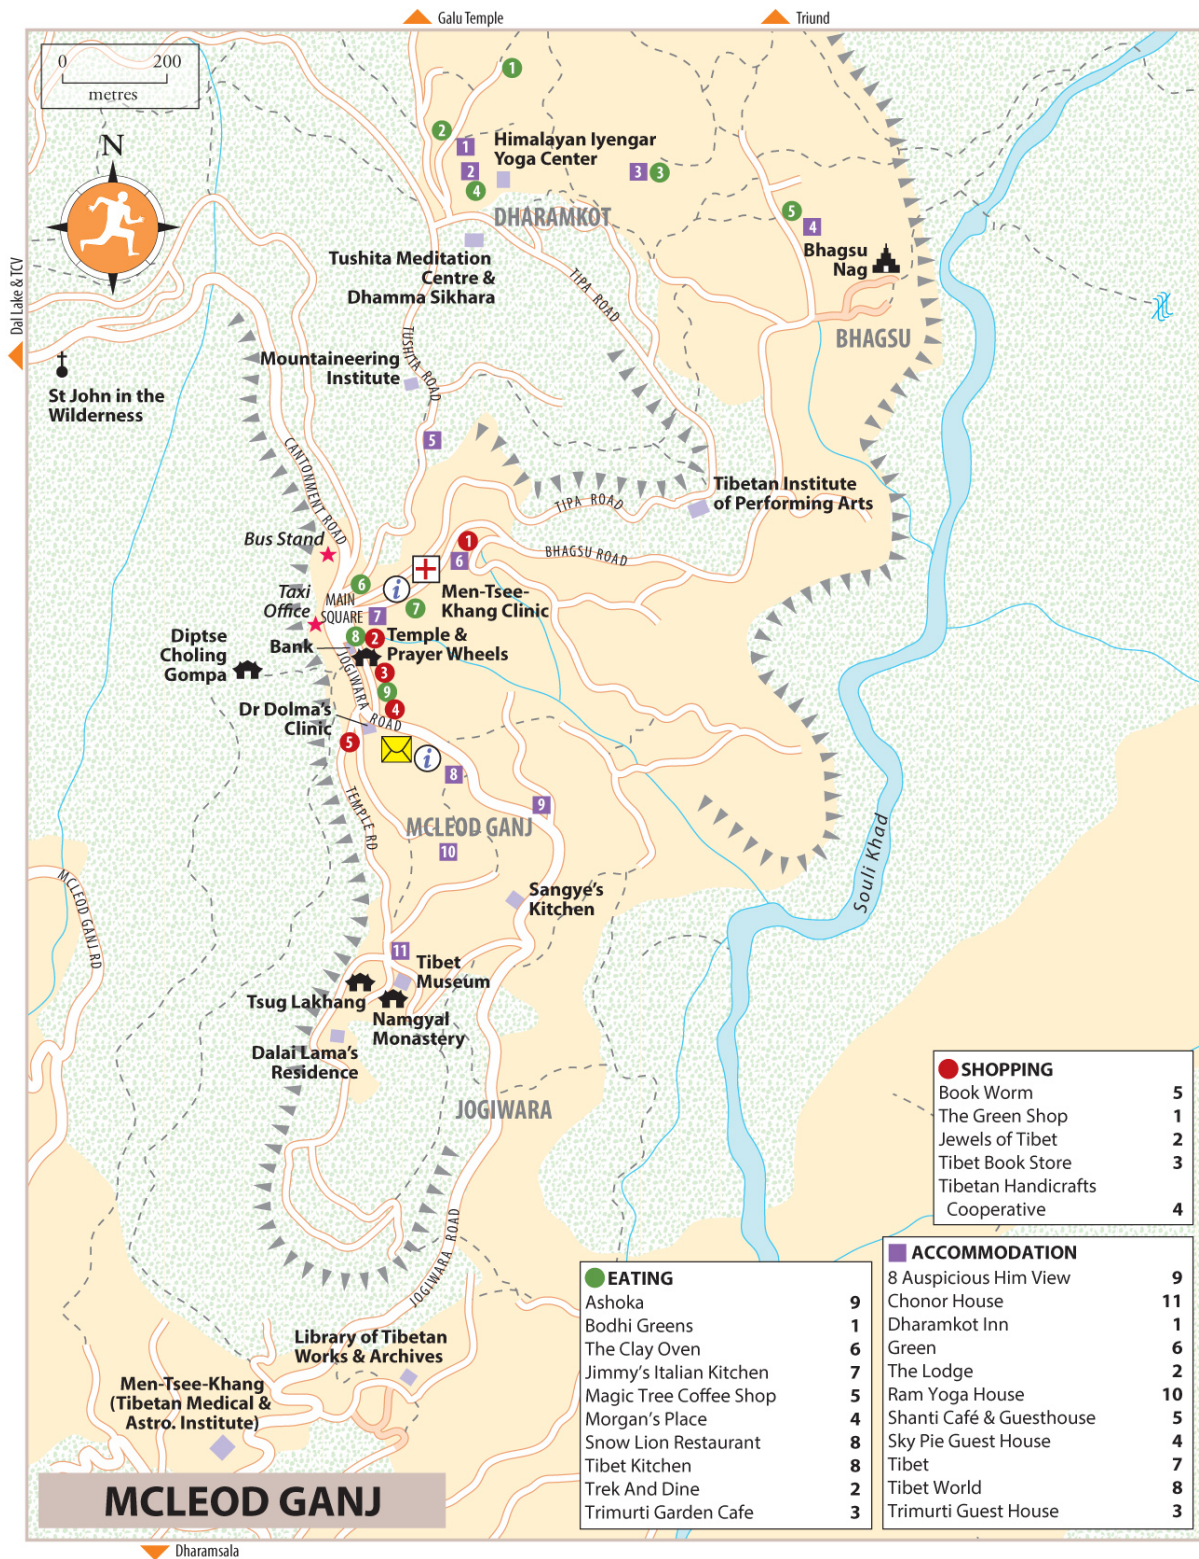

The Dalai Lama settled temporarily in McLeod Ganj in 1960; five and a half decades later he's still here, and his Residence on the south edge of town has become his permanent home in exile. His own quarters are modest and most of the walled compound overhanging the valley is taken up by government offices. In front of the private enclosure, Dharamsala's main Buddhist temple, Tsug Lakhang, shelters images of Sakyamuni (the historical Buddha), Padmasambhava (who introduced Buddhism to Tibet) and Avalokitesvara (the bodhisattva of compassion) seated in meditation postures, surrounded by offerings from devotees. Most afternoons (barring Sunday) monks from the nearby Namgyal monastery hold fierce but disciplined debates in the courtyard opposite the temple.

The Tibet Museum Temple Rd • Tues–Fri & Sun 9am–5pm • Free; documentary screenings charge Next to the monastery, the Tibet Museum displays in graphic detail the plight of the Tibetan people since China invaded Tibet in 1950. Using photographs and video clips, the self-guided tour describes how Tibetan freedom fighters, backed by the CIA, waged an impossible guerrilla war against China that lasted into the 1970s. The upstairs hall features profiles of the museum curators – all refugees and ex-political prisoners – and a memorial to the 1.2 million Tibetans who have died in the conflict.

MEETING HIS HOLINESS THE DALAI LAMA THE DALAI LAMA IS IN GREAT DEMAND. TIBETANS FLEEING THEIR HOMELAND COME TO HIM FOR BLESSING AND REASSURANCE; MONKS AND NUNS FROM ALL OVER INDIA AND NEPAL LOOK TO HIM FOR SPIRITUAL GUIDANCE; AND AN EVER-INCREASING NUMBER OF WESTERNERS ARRIVE IN DHARAMSALA HOPING FOR A MOMENT OF HIS ATTENTION. AS HIS HOLINESS NO LONGER CONDUCTS PUBLIC AUDIENCES, MOST VISITORS SHOULD COUNT ON ATTENDING ONE OF HIS PUBLIC TEACHINGS, WHICH ARE ADVERTISED WELL IN ADVANCE BY THE OFFICE OF HIS HOLINESS THE DALAI LAMA (THEKCHEN CHOELING, MCLEOD GANJ; w DALAILAMA.COM). PRIVATE AUDIENCES

ARE GRANTED TO A SELECT FEW AND CAN ONLY BE ARRANGED BY WRITING AT LEAST FOUR MONTHS
IN ADVANCE. THE DALAI LAMA'S SECRETARY
RECEIVES HUNDREDS OF SUCH LETTERS EACH DAY AND EACH CASE IS REVIEWED ON ITS MERITS.

Kora Circuit Open 24hr • Free

After paying homage to the Buddha inside, devotees complete a kora, a circumambulation of the temple complex (clockwise, starting at the trailhead downhill and to the left of the temple entrance), turning the numerous prayer wheels to send prayers out in all directions. Tibetan prayer flags flutter in the breeze in the hushed forest, and it feels a million miles from the clamour of town.

Library of Tibetan Works and Archives Jogiwara Rd • Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 2–5pm; closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month • Museum charge • tibetanlibrary.org

The Library of Tibetan Works and Archives has one of the world's most extensive collections of original Tibetan manuscripts of sacred texts and prayers, books on all aspects of Tibet, information on Indian culture and architecture and a rich archive of historical photos. Decorated with bright Tibetan motifs, it is housed in the Tibetan Central Administration compound, below the southern end of McLeod Ganj. Tibetan language and philosophy courses are held each weekday, and a small museum on the first floor of the library displays Buddhist statues, finely moulded bronzes and mandalas (symmetrical images, used in meditation to symbolize spiritual journeys and the pattern of the universe).

Men-Tsee-Khang (Tibetan Medical & Astro. Institute) Jogiwara Rd • Daily 9am–1pm & 2–5pm • Free • Museum charge • men-tsee-khang.org

Just down the road from the library compound, the small Men-Tsee-Khang (Tibetan Medical & Astro. Institute) is staffed by monks who diagnose symptoms by examining the eyes, pulse and urine, and prescribe pills made of herbs, precious stones and sometimes animal products, mixed on particularly auspicious lunar dates. You can also have your horoscope prepared here but you need to know the exact time you were born and have at least five thousand rupees to spare. A small but fascinating on-site museum has displays on Tibetan medicine, as well as related thangkas and medical specimens. There's a smaller clinic on the Dharamkot side of McLeod Ganj.

Dharamkot and around From the Dhamma Sikhara the road continues to Dharamkot, starting point for walks to Triund (2975m) and treks over the high passes to the Chamba Valley. Taking one of the paths down through the wooded slopes north of the main road to Dharamkot brings you to the small, murky Dal Lake, the scene of an animal fair and Shaivite festival in September. It stands behind the Tibetan Children's Village (TCV), a huge complex providing education and training in traditional handicrafts for around two thousand students, many of whom are orphans or have been brought to safety by parents who have returned to Tibet.

Dharamkot itself has grown in recent years and become a particular favourite hangout with Israeli travellers, offering an increasing number of cheap guesthouses and chill-out cafés from which to enjoy the scenery. To the south, the creeping development has almost joined the village to the upper reaches of much busier Bhagsu.

Tushita Meditation Centre and Dhamma Sikhara Tushita Rd •
Tushita Mon–Sat 9.30–11.30am & 12.30–4pm • www.tushita.info •
Dhamma Sikhara Registration Mon–Sat 4–5pm • sikhara.dhamma.org

Continuing up the road from the Mountaineering Institute you approach two Buddhist retreat centres, both beautifully situated in the same peaceful neck of the woods (literally): the Tushita Meditation Centre was founded in 1972 by Lama Thubten Zopa Rinpoche, while nearby is Dhamma Sikhara, a Theravada Vipassana centre. Meditation courses and drop-in sessions are held at both centres; there's an hour-long morning guided meditation at Tushita (9.30am).

Bhagsu

Bhagsu Road heads east from McLeod Ganj's main square, skirting the hillside for 2km before reaching the village of Bhagsu with its ancient Shiva temple. The last few years have seen big changes here, with the construction of numerous hotels catering primarily for the domestic tourist market. Consequently, it's become too busy for the taste of many foreigners, although the new string of cafés lining the road up the hill are still popular hangouts, while the older ones near the temple complex are frequented more by Indian tourists and pilgrims. Beyond the temple a path meanders up the boulder-strewn slopes of a small stream up to a waterfall. If you're interested in studying tabla (and sitar or flute), contact Ashoka at the Trimurti Guest House; he runs the Trimurti International Music School from his home. Note that in the past there have been occasional attacks on women walking between Bhagsu and McLeod Ganj, usually at night.

Tibetan Institute of Performing Arts Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 1–5pm, closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month • www.tipa.asia

The Tibetan Institute of Performing Arts was founded in 1959 to preserve the Tibetan identity in exile. Around 150 people live on its campus, in the forests above McLeod Ganj overlooking Bhagsu, including artists, teachers, musicians and administrators. The TIPA troupe perform traditional lhamo operas, which derive from ancient masked dance dramas, and have played a morale-building role at Tibetan refugee camps throughout India, while also sharing Tibet's cultural heritage with international audiences. Visit its office or check online for information on upcoming events and tours.

The Norbulingka Institute 8km from Dharamsala, near the village of Sidpur • Daily shuttle buses from Chonor House, entry charge, free guided tour on request • Daily 9am–5.30pm (workshops & offices closed Sun & second Sat of month) • www.norbulingka.org

The Norbulingka Institute is dedicated to preserving literary and artistic Tibetan culture. The complex of Tibetan-style buildings, built in 1985, is set amid peaceful Japanese gardens, and centres on the two-storey Deden Tsuglakhang temple, which houses 1173 images of the Buddha and frescoes of the fourteen Dalai Lamas in the upper gallery. The gilded copper statue of Sakyamuni in the hall downstairs is the largest of its kind outside Tibet. Elsewhere in the complex, the Losel Doll Museum shows colourful dioramas packed with traditionally clothed dolls and there's a delightful café.

TREKKING FROM DHARAMSALA DHARAMSALA IS ONE OF THE MOST POPULAR STARTING POINTS FOR TREKS OVER THE ROCKY RIDGES OF THE DHAULADHAR RANGE, WHICH RISE STEEPLY FROM THE KANGRA VALLEY TO 4600M. TRAILS PASS THROUGH FORESTS OF DEODAR, PINE, OAK AND RHODODENDRON, CROSS STREAMS AND RIVERS AND WIND ALONG VERTIGINOUS CLIFF TRACKS

PASSING THE OCCASIONAL LAKE WATERFALL AND GLACIER. YOU CAN EASILY TACKLE THE WELL-WORN PATH TO TRIUND BY YOURSELF, BUT FOR LONGER TREKS, UNLESS YOU ARE VERY EXPERIENCED YOU'LL NEED A GUIDE, AS THE ROUTES ARE STEEP AND MEMORIAL STONES TESTIFY TO THOSE WHO DIDN'T MAKE IT. DESPITE THE AVAILABILITY OF ROUGH HUTS AND CAVES, IT'S BEST TO TAKE A TENT. THE BEST SEASON TO TREK HERE IS FROM SEPTEMBER TO NOVEMBER, WHEN THE WORST OF THE MONSOON IS OVER AND BEFORE IT GETS TOO COLD. THE MOUNTAINEERING INSTITUTE ON THE ROAD TO DHARAMKOT (TUSHITA RD; MON–SAT 10AM–1.30PM & 2–5PM; CLOSED 2ND SAT OF MONTH; WHMIDARJEELING.COM) PROVIDES INFORMATION ON THE REGION, INCLUDING BOOKS AND MAPS ON THE DHAULADHAR RANGE, AND CAN HELP ARRANGE GUIDES AND PORTERS: WINTER CLIMBING SHOULD ONLY BE ATTEMPTED BY MOUNTAINEERS EXPERIENCED IN USING CRAMPONS AND ICE AXES.

DHARAMSALA TO TRIUND

A popular outing from Dharamsala is the one-day trek to Triund, which is steep and hard going in places, but the trail is easy to follow and there are tea shops dotted along the way. Take an auto-rickshaw or taxi from Dharamsala to Dharamkot and – with the entrance to Tushita Meditation Centre on your left and the water tank on your right – follow the narrow road 50m around the back of the tank to find the trailhead. The path winds through a shady pine forest for thirty minutes before coming out on the rough jeep road to Gallu Devi Temple and the surrounding tea shops (open daily from around 7am). The trail then goes on to navigate steep rocky terrain for 9km to a grassy plateau at Triund, with its astonishing and unexpected view of the Dhauladhar Range. Most people are content to take it easy here, and there are rudimentary camps if you wish to stay overnight, but it's possible to push up to the snowline and still get back in one day. Avoid walking around the rocks behind the camps, as sadly, a lot of the area is used by tourists as an outdoor toilet.

DHARAMSALA TO CHAMBA OVER INDRAHAR PASS THE MOST FREQUENTED ROUTE FROM DHARAMSALA TO THE CHAMBA VALLEY, OVER THE INDRAHAR PASS (4350M), IS ARDUOUS IN PLACES, BUT MOST TREKKERS MANAGE IT IN AROUND FIVE DAYS. THE FIRST SECTION IS THE 3–4 HOURS FROM DHARAMKOT TO TRIUND (SEE ABOVE). FROM HERE THE PATH CLIMBS TO LAQA GOT, AND THEN ON A SERIOUSLY STEEP SECTION UP TO THE KNIFE-EDGED INDRAHAR PASS WHERE, WEATHER PERMITTING, YOU'LL ENJOY BREATHTAKING VIEWS SOUTH TO THE PLAINS AND NORTH TO THE SNOWY PIR PANJAL PEAKS AND GREATER HIMALAYAS. THE DESCENT IS DIFFICULT IN PLACES AND WILL TAKE YOU VIA THE GADDI VILLAGES OF KUARSI AND CHANNAUTA TO THE MAIN ROAD, FROM WHERE YOU CAN PICK UP TRANSPORT TO BHARMOUR AND CHAMBA BY ROAD.

OTHER ROUTES FROM DHARAMSALA TO CHAMBA SEVERAL OTHER ROUTES CROSS THE DHAULADHAR RANGE, INCLUDING THE TORAL PASS (4575M) WHICH STARTS FROM TANG NARWANA (1150M), 10KM FROM DHARAMSALA. THE MOST DIFFICULT ROUTE NORTH IS THE FIVE- OR SIX-DAY TREK ACROSS BHIMGHASUTRI PASS (4580M), COVERING NEAR-VERTICAL ROCKY ASCENTS, SHARP CLIFFS AND DANGEROUS GORGES. A MUCH EASIER FOUR- OR FIVE-DAY TREK FROM DHARAMSALA CROSSES BLENi PASS (3710M) IN THE Milder Ranges TO THE NORTHWEST, WEAVING THROUGH ALPINE PASTURES AND WOODS AND CROSSING

A FEW STREAMS, BEFORE TERMINATING AT DUNALI, ON THE CHAMBA ROAD.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE DHARAMSALA'S AIRPORT IS 12KM SOUTH MCLEOD GANJ AND DHARAMSALA AT GAGGAL. THERE ARE TWO DAILY FLIGHTS TO DELHI (1HR 45MIN). A TAXI BETWEEN THE AIRPORT AND MCLEOD GANJ COSTS ₹900.

By bus State-run buses from Gaggal (every 30min; 30min), Shimla (4 daily; 10–11hr), Manali (3 daily; 10hr), Mandi (4 daily; 8–9hr), Pathankot (nearest railhead; every 30min; 3hr), Kangra (every 30min; 30min) and Delhi (6–8 daily; 15–16hr) pull into the bus stand on the south side of Dharamsala, though a very few private and deluxe buses from Delhi and Manali continue to McLeod Ganj.

GETTING AROUND BY TAXI A SHARED MINIBUS BETWEEN MCLEOD GANJ AND DHARAMSALA TAKES JUST 15MIN. TAXI UNIONS HAVE FIXED PRICES AND A VEHICLE FROM MCLEOD GANJ TO DHARAMSALA COSTS ₹350. AUTO-RICKSHAWS TRAVEL FREQUENTLY FROM MCLEOD GANJ BUS STAND TO BHAGSU AND THE CHAI SHOP AT DHARAMKOT.

By bus From 7.45am onwards numerous buses run between Dharamsala and McLeod Ganj (30min).

On foot To reach McLeod Ganj from Dharamsala, there is a steep 3km track that starts from the end of Temple Rd, passing the Tibetan Library and Secretariat.

By motorbike Two-wheelers can be rented from some agents, such as Himalayan Journey; a moped costs around ₹500/day, an Enfield Bullet ₹1000/day.

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION MCLEOD GANJ'S TOURIST OFFICE (MON–FRI 10AM–5PM, SAT 10AM–2PM), ON SOUTH END, PROVIDES BASIC ACCOMMODATION AND TRANSPORT INFORMATION. A GOOD SOURCE OF GENERAL

INFO, NEWS AND LOCAL LISTINGS IS ☎MCLLO.COM OR THE FREE MONTHLY NEWS SHEET CONTACT.

Tibetan Secretariat An information centre in Dharamsala's Tibetan Secretariat, beside the entrance to the compound, provides up-to-date news about the Tibetan community in Tibet and around the world.

ACTIVITIES NUMEROUS COURSES ARE AVAILABLE IN MCLEOD GANJ, INCLUDING DHARMA TEACHINGS, TIBETAN LANGUAGE, HINDI, ANCIENT THAI MASSAGE, YOGA, TABLA, KARATE, XI GUNG, TAI CHI, REIKI, AND INDIAN VEGETARIAN AND TIBETAN COOKERY.

Buddhism and Tibetan language Free classes on dharma are given in translation by Buddhist monks from 11am until noon most weekdays at the Library of Tibetan Works and Archives (☎tibetanlibrary.org). Philosophy courses and three-month Tibetan language courses (beginning March, June & Sept) are also run from the library (contact the Secretary for Tibetan Studies; ☎01892 222467).

Cookery courses Several places, such as Sangye's Kitchen (Winstagram.com/sangis_kitchen) near the post office on Jogiwara Rd, offer Tibetan cooking lessons.

Meditation Tushita Meditation Centre has drop in meditation sessions (Mon–Sat 9.30am) and organises Tibetan Buddhist meditation courses and retreats (☎tushita.info). Courses range from short retreats of eight to ten days to an intensive three-month summer purification retreat (Vajrasattva). The Dhamma Sikhara Vipassana Centre (☎dhamma.org), next door, follows teachings more akin to Theravada Buddhism. It runs ten-day silent retreats and daily sittings.

Volunteering An excellent resource for a variety of volunteer jobs is Volunteer Tibet (☎volunteertibet.org), whose office is opposite the Yong Ling School, Jogiwara Rd on the left past the post office. It welcomes volunteer teachers.

Yoga The Himalayan Iyengar Yoga Centre (☎hiyogacentre.com) in Dharamkot runs five-day courses in Hatha yoga, starting every Weds, mid-March to Oct, as well as longer retreats. Drop-in 1hr yoga lessons, taught by volunteers, take place at 9am & 5pm Mon–Fri at Tibet World.

ACCOMMODATION FINDING ACCOMMODATION IS ONLY A PROBLEM DURING LOSAR, THE TIBETAN NEW YEAR (FEB/MARCH). ALMOST ALL FOREIGN VISITORS STAY IN THE UPPER TOWN, MCLEOD GANJ, SO THERE IS LITTLE REASON TO STAY IN DHARAMSALA ITSELF. THOSE PLANNING LONG-TERM STAYS OFTEN HEAD TO THE SMALL SETTLEMENTS OF BHAGSU OR MORE PEACEFUL DHARAMKOT, WHERE THERE IS A MIXTURE OF ROOMS IN FAMILY HOUSES AND A GROWING NUMBER OF HOTELS, SERVING INDIAN TOURISTS AND HIPPIE TRAVELLERS.

MCLEOD GANJ, MAP

8 Auspicious Him View Jogiwara Rd, 8aushimview.com. Fifteen spotless rooms, tastefully decorated with Tibetan art and wood panelling, in a spanking-new block. Café and juice bar downstairs. Breakfast included. ₹₹

★Chonor House Temple Rd, norbulingka.org. Part of the Norbulingka Institute for Tibetan Culture, with very well presented rooms decorated by artists, combining traditional Tibetan decor with modern comfort. There's also wi-fi and an excellent restaurant with garden seating. All proceeds go to Norbulingka. ₹₹₹

Green Bhagsu Rd, greenhotel.in. Wide range of well-kept, comfortable rooms, with valley views, a good restaurant and on-site herbal products shop. Deservedly popular for being one of the better backpacker havens. ₹₹

Ram Yoga House Surya Hotel Rd, behind Norbu House, ramyogahouse.com. A modern block with large bright rooms and unbeatable views from the deluxe options (along with a kitchenette). Service can be grudging and the reality doesn't meet the chilled out hippie pictures online – there was no yoga when we visited, but you could use the rooftop room for practice. Ring ahead to be met on arrival, as it's hard to find. ₹₹

Shanti Café & Guesthouse Tushita Rd, facebook.com/shantishanticafe. Very welcoming lodge with a few colourful, compact rooms, a couple of which have attached bathrooms. The café is nicely decorated and has chill-out cushions. ₹

Tibet Bhagsu Rd, ☎hoteltibetdhasa.com. Popular and central hotel with the superb Snow Lion restaurant; the downstairs valley-facing rooms offer the best value. Prices are fixed all year. ₹₹

Tibet World Jogiwara Rd, ☎tibetworld.org. This guesthouse-cum-cultural centre has simple rooms with twin beds, the costlier ones with great views. Various activities, yoga sessions and cultural events are organized. ₹

BHAGSU, MAP

★Sky Pie Guest House Off the left turning as you approach the temple Whotelskypie.com. Friendly and lively place with standard attached budget rooms in the old block and smarter ones with TV and balconies in the new block. ₹

Trimurti Guest House Upper Bhagsu towards Dharamkot ☎ 09736801557. A few rooms, all with shared bathrooms, in a quiet family place with a lawn, garden café and colourful shrine. The owner runs a small music school, too. ₹

DHARAMKOT, MAP

Dharamkot Inn On the main road through the village, ☎ dharamkotinn.com. Sturdy white block with two wings, offering a range of rooms of varying sizes and comfort levels. The pricier upper-storey ones have balconies with superb views. ₹

★The Lodge Down the path towards Bhagsu from the main junction, ☎ thelodgedharamsala.com. Almost a boutique-style hotel, with classy furniture and decoration in all rooms, plus big flat-screen TVs. ₹

DHARAMSALA, MAP

The Dhauladhar Off Kotwali Bazaar ☎01892 224926, ☎ dharamshala@hptdc.in. Institutional-feeling HPTDC place with spacious attached rooms with constant hot water and balconies giving superb views over the plains to the south. Plus a good mid-priced restaurant, bar, garden terrace and lawns. ₹₹

EATING WHILE EATING OPTIONS IN DHARAMSALA ARE FAIRLY PERFUNCTORY, MCLEOD GANJ AND ITS SATELLITES ARE RENOWNED FOR RELAXED RESTAURANTS SERVING

TRAVELLER STAPLES AND TIBETAN DISHES SUCH AS THUKPA AND MOMOS, AS WELL AS FRESH-BAKED TIBETAN BREAD AND CAKES. THERE'S NOT MUCH NIGHTLIFE BUT ALCOHOL IS AVAILABLE IN A FEW PLACES.

MCLEOD GANJ, MAP

Ashoka Jogiwara Rd 001892 221589. Good spicy Indian food, as well as Chinese, Continental and Israeli dishes are served on two indoor levels and on a pleasant roof terrace. Try the karai chicken. ₹

The Clay Oven Tipa Rd 098161 16862. First-floor restaurant with a narrow balcony overlooking the street. You can enjoy decent Nepali, Tibetan, Thai and Italian cuisine here, with moktuk (swimming momos) or pepperoni pizza. ₹₹

Jimmy's Italian Kitchen Bhagsu Rd 098162 97093. Hip Western-style upstairs café decorated with classic film posters. Good salads, baked potatoes, lattes and home-made desserts, when ingredients are available. ₹₹

★Snow Lion Restaurant Jogiwara Rd 001892 221289. If you're in need of proper coffee, this place has an entire menu page devoted to freshly brewed beans. Breakfast is a particular standout, with pancakes, smoothies and all-veggie set breakfasts. Chilled out jazz soundtrack, comfy booths and efficient service. ₹

★Tibet Kitchen Corner of Jogiwara Rd and the main chowk 097362 54543. Expertly run and stylishly decorated three-level restaurant-cum-café. The huge menu includes pan-Asian noodles, Italian and, most impressively, Bhutanese datse dishes such as pork paa and others in the spicy cheese datse sauce. ₹₹

BHAGSU, MAP

Magic Tree Coffee Shop Up the left turning as you approach the temple 097367 27275. Cosy little spot with a proper espresso machine, a modest selection of cakes and a mixture of rock and ethnic vibes. ₹

Trimurti Garden Cafe Upper Bhagsu towards Dharamkot, 0 trimurtigarden.in. This little hideaway vegetarian cafe is a 15min walk from Bhagsu and surrounded by trees – bring a torch at night. Thalís, salads and homemade bread and cakes are on the menu, plus lassi and herbal tea. You can top up your bottle with filter water, too. ₹₹

DHARAMKOT, MAP

Bodhi Greens Near the main junction, wfacebook.com/bodhigreens. Laidback vegan cafe beloved by local yogis. Breakfast is served until noon and you can order a massive fresh fruit bowl with nuts, seeds and coconut cream or scrambled tofu. Later in the day, soups, wraps, Buddha bowls and Indian dishes are lovingly prepared, or just stop in for a peanut butter shake, kombucha or pot of masala chai. ₹₹

★Morgan's Place Down the path towards Bhagsu 078338 63447. Imaginatively designed place with an outdoor terrace, serving excellent pizza, Indian and Israeli dishes, plus divine desserts such as apple crumble. ₹₹

Trek And Dine Near the main junction 097363 65156. Typically colourful spot with wall hangings and a cushioned corner, serving a range of inexpensive breakfasts, salads, pizza, pasta and Mexican dishes. ₹₹

DHARAMSALA, MAP

City Heart Near Kotwali Bazaar 001892 225290. There's a basic ground-floor canteen and slightly more comfortable upstairs room. The food is mainly Bengali and tandoori, with some Chinese cuisine. ₹₹

Potala Near Kotwali Bazaar 086793 68859. Very authentic Tibetan family restaurant tucked into a tiny upstairs room. ₹

SHOPPING

MAP

Stalls and little shops along the main streets stock Tibetan trinkets, inexpensive warm clothing, incense, prayer bells, rugs and books.

Book Worm South End, wfacebook.com/bookworm.mcleod. Small but well-stocked bookshop opposite the tourist office, specializing in Buddhism, language and literature.

The Green Shop Bhagsu Rd. Eco-conscious place, selling recycled painted cards, hand-painted T-shirts, books on the environment and filtered boiled water for ₹10.

Jewels of Tibet Jogiwara Rd ☎01892 220767. This place is crammed with high-quality jewellery, ornaments and other colourful souvenirs such as prayer flags and incense sticks.

Tibet Book Store Jogiwara Rd ☎01892 221317. A good place to browse for works on Tibetan Buddhism and other religions, as well as coffee-table specials, travel titles and novels.

Tibetan Handicrafts Cooperative Jogiwara Rd ☎01892 221415. This large handicrafts shop sells thangkas of all sizes, along with prayer flags, local garments, plus various ornaments and Buddhist paraphernalia.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE THE PUNJAB NATIONAL BANK (MON–FRI 10AM–2PM, SAT 10AM–NOON) IN MCLEOD GANJ WILL CHANGE CASH, AS WILL THE UPPER BRANCH OF STATE BANK OF INDIA IN DHARAMSALA. THERE ARE THREE ATMS AND SEVERAL AUTHORIZED EXCHANGE AGENCIES IN MCLEOD GANJ.

Cinema A tiny cinema on Jogiwara Rd shows Hollywood flicks, sometimes with a Tibetan or Indian theme. There's a more comfortable Gold Cinema (www.goldcinema.co) in Dharamsala, too.

Donations For enquiries about the Tibetan settlement, call in either at the Welfare Office on Bhagsu Rd in McLeod Ganj or directly at the Reception Centre below the post office, where donations of clothes, books, blankets and pens for new Tibetan arrivals are always gratefully accepted.

Hospitals The Tibetan Delek Hospital (www.delekhospital.org/delek), south of the Secretariat, is one of the best hospitals in the state and has Western doctors on call.

Travel agents General agents for all services include Himalayan Journey (www.himalayanjourney.in), Tibet Tours & Travels (☎01892 221283), both on Jogiwara Rd, Ways Tours & Travels on Temple Rd (☎01892 221910) and Windhorse Tours & Travels on Bhagsu Rd (☎01892 220416).

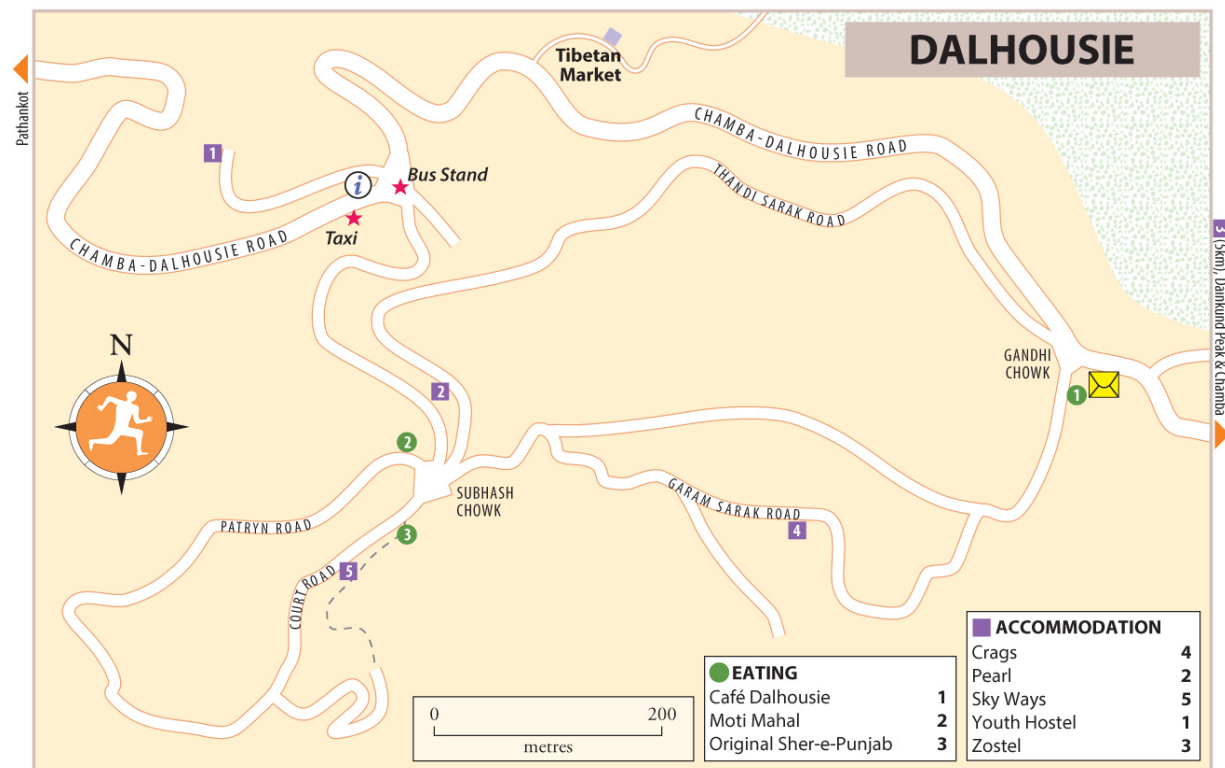

Dalhousie

The quiet, relaxed hill station of DALHOUSIE spreads over five low-level hills at the western edge of the Dhauladhar Range. While the town itself, mostly modern hotels interspersed with Raj-era buildings and low-roofed stalls, is unremarkable, the pine-covered slopes around it are intersected with paths and tracks ideal for short, undemanding walks.

Dalhousie owes its name to Lord Dalhousie, Governor General of Punjab (1849–56), who was attracted by the cool climate to establish a sanatorium here for the many British, who, like himself, suffered ill health. Early in the twentieth century, it was a popular alternative to crowded, expensive Shimla, but thereafter declined. Today Dalhousie is a favourite summer retreat for holidaying Punjabis, but receives only a handful of Western tourists, few of whom stay for more than a day or two. A small population of Tibetans has lived here since the Tibet uprising in 1959.

The town is spread over a series of hills with winding roads and steep paths connecting the two focal points, the chowks. Gandhi Chowk, with its restaurants and post office, is the busiest section. From here The Mall and Garam Sarak dip and curve 2km to Subhash Chowk, at the top end of the largely Muslim Sadar Bazaar. Both chowks have unusual grandstand-style seating, ideal for people-watching. North of here, the bus stand and information office mark the main road out of town.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS DALHOUSIE DALHOUSIE IS USUALLY APPROACHED BY BUS FROM PATHANKOT IN THE PUNJAB, 80KM SOUTHWEST (EVERY 30MIN–1HR; 3HR 30MIN), OR THROUGH THE HIMALAYAN FOOTHILLS FROM DHARAMSALA (2–3 DAILY; 6HR) AND SHIMLA (1–2 DAILY; 13–14HR), BOTH VIA NURPUR. TRANSPORT TO CHAMBA (2HR 15MIN) USUALLY GOES VIA BANIKHET, THOUGH FOUR BUSES ALSO TRAVEL VIA KHAJJIAR. TAXIS TO EITHER CHOWK FROM THE BUS STAND COST A RATHER STEEP ₹200.

Tourist information The tourist information office (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm; ☎01899 242136), 50m from the bus stand, provides transport information.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Numerous hotels cater for Dalhousie's hot-season hordes and it is only between April and June that prices really shoot up.

Crags Garam Sarak Rd, 400m from Subhash Chowk ☎09459144448. A quiet hotel, run by an old gentleman, with old-fashioned but comfortable wood-partitioned rooms, a large terrace, tasty food (if pre-arranged) and great views down to the plains. ₹

Pearl On the hill above Subhash Chowk, ☎hotelpearldalhousie.com. Rambling modern hotel with various levels, affording splendid views. The rooms are spacious and colourful, with flat-screen TVs and fridges. Huge discounts on rack rates out of high season. Wi-fi in lobby only. ₹₹₹

Sky Ways Court Rd, 100m from Subhash Chowk ☎01899 242818. Rather characterless concrete building but the fairly large attached rooms with cable TV are good value and have uninterrupted views. ₹

Youth Hostel 300m behind the dhabas from the bus stand, ☎youthhosteldalhousie.com. Well-organized and extremely clean hostel, which has fifteen-bed dorms and attached doubles. ₹

Zostel Kholpukhar, 5km from town, ☎zostel.com. A 10min drive from Gandhi Chowk lands you in the middle of nowhere at this fun, modern hostel with views of snow-clad mountains from the terrace (where they light a bonfire most nights) and a restaurant with board games and a screen for films. There's an en-suite double and four- or eight-bed dorms, all of which get chilly at night. Great place to organise treks and overnight camping. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹

EATING

MAP

Most hotels have their own restaurants, numerous dhabas crowd the chowks, and there are some independent places to eat. If you want to grab something close to the bus stand, head to the Tibetan Market for momos from a hole-in-the-wall joint.

Café Dalhousie Gandhi Chowk. Atmospheric place with a standard menu of south Indian, Tandoori and Chinese dishes. Service can be slow, but it's a good spot for people watching. ₹₹₹

Moti Mahal Subhash Chowk 01899 242134. Fairly functional restaurant with indoor and courtyard seating, which does a decent selection of Indian and Chinese dishes such as American chop suey, as well as cheaper snacks like masala dosa. ₹₹

Original Sher-e-Punjab Just below Subhash Chowk 01899 242213. The most established and reliable of three adjacent establishments with very similar names. Best for rich and tasty non-veg dishes. Unusually, it has a big screen for sports events. ₹₹

Around Dalhousie From Dalhousie the road east zigzags through forests to the trailhead for Dainkund Peak, which is blanketed with snow in winter, and Khajjiar, a popular local day out, before descending through terraced mountain slopes to Chamba, perched above the rushing River Ravi. It's a slow and relaxed place with some fascinating temples and a small art museum. Bharmour, three hours further east by bus and the final settlement on the road into the mountains, holds even more splendid Hindu temples – both towns make good bases for treks into the remote Pangi Valley. Note that they are often sunny and warm when Dalhousie is shrouded in rain clouds during monsoon.

Dainkund Peak The highest peak close to Dalhousie is Dainkund Peak at 2755m. It's a steep scramble up from the road to an initial viewpoint and then the trail follows the ridgeline for a couple of miles to the peak and Pohlani Mata Temple with its stunning views of the Dhauladhar and Pir Panjal ranges. Most tourists turn around here, but with a guide (or a compass), it's possible to continue three off-the-beaten-track miles to Jot Pass, passing the occasional shepherd hut and roughly following a mule trail.

Khajjiar

Heading east towards Chamba, the road descends through deodar forests to the meadow of Khajjiar where the small twelfth-century temple of Khajjinag looks down over a vast rolling green with a small lake cupped in the centre. Khajjiar is a popular day-trip from Dalhousie for Indian tourists who come to take pony rides. It is also possible to make a stop at Kalatop Wildlife Sanctuary (sunrise–sunset; ₹200 per vehicle), 10km before Khajjiar, a thickly forested area that is home to barking deer, Himalayan bear and rich birdlife. The road beyond Khajjiar dips across denuded and terraced hillsides down towards Chamba.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS PRINCE KHAJJIAR TRAVELS AT THE BUS STAND IN DALHOUSIE RUNS A TOURIST BUS TO KHAJJIAR AND CHAMBA, DEPARTING AT 10AM AND RETURNING TO DALHOUSIE AT 6.30PM; IN ADDITION, FOUR CHAMBA-BOUND STATE BUSES TRAVEL VIA KHAJJIAR (1HR 15MIN) EVERY DAY.

Chamba

Shielded on all sides by high mountains, CHAMBA was ruled for an entire millennium by kings descended from Raja Sahil Verma, who founded it in 920 AD and named it after his daughter Champavati. Unlike Himachal states further south, it was never formally under Mughal rule and its distinct Hindu culture remained intact until the first roads were built to Dalhousie in 1870. When the state of Himachal Pradesh was formed in 1948, Chamba became the capital. These days however, few foreign visitors make it out here; those who do are usually just passing through before or after trekking, but it is worthwhile to stop off to see the unique temples.

The chaugan, a large green used for sports, evening strolls and festive celebrations, marks the centre of town, overlooked by the imposing old Rang Mahal palace, now a government building.

Bhuri Singh museum Tues–Sun 10am–5pm • Free •

bhurisinghmuseumchamba.in

At the south end of the chaugan, the Bhuri Singh museum holds a reasonable display of local arts and crafts. Its eighteenth- and nineteenth-century Kangra miniature paintings, depicting court life, amorous meetings and men and women smoking elaborate hookahs, are much bolder than their Mughal-influenced Rajasthani equivalents. The museum's best feature is its small cache of rumals. Made by women since the tenth century, rumals are like embroidered paintings, depicting scenes from popular myth. Today just a few women continue this tradition, but a weaving centre in the old palace is attempting to revitalize the art.

The temples The intimate complex of Lakshmi Narayan temples, behind Dogra Bazaar west of the chaugan, is of a style found only in Chamba and Bharmour. Three of its six earth-brown temples are dedicated to Vishnu and three to Shiva, all with profusely carved outer walls and curious curved shikharas, topped with overhanging wooden canopies and gold pinnacles added in 1678 in defiance of Aurangzeb's order to destroy all Hindu temples in the hill states. Niches in the walls contain images of deities, but many stand empty, some statues lost in the earthquake of 1905 and others looted more recently.

Entering the compound, you're confronted by the largest and oldest temple, built in the tenth century and enshrining a marble idol of Lakshmi Narayan. The buxom maidens flanking the entrance to the sanctuary, each holding a water vessel, represent the goddesses Ganga and Yamuna, while inside a frieze depicts scenes from the Mahabharata and Ramayana. Temples dedicated to Shiva fill the third courtyard. In the inner sanctuary, you'll see sturdy brass images of Shiva, Parvati and Nandi, inlaid with silver and copper brought from mines nearby. Outside the temple complex, coppersmiths manufacture curved ceremonial trumpets and brass hookahs.

Of Chamba's other temples, the most intriguing is the tenth-century Chamunda Devi temple high above the town in the north, a steep half-hour climb up steps that begin near the bus stand. Decorated with hundreds of heavy brass bells and protecting a fearsome image of the bloodthirsty goddess Chamunda, the temple is built entirely of wood, and commands an excellent view up the Ravi Gorge. Back in town, south of the chaugan near the post office, the small, lavishly carved eleventh-century Harirai temple contains a smooth brass image of Vaikuntha, the triple-headed aspect of Vishnu.

CHAMBA FESTIVALS CHAMBA'S ANNUAL FOUR-DAY SUHI MATA FESTIVAL, IN EARLY APRIL, COMMEMORATES RANI SUNENA, THE WIFE OF THE TENTH-CENTURY RAJA SAHIL VERMA. A CURIOUS LEGEND RELATES THAT WHEN WATER FROM A NEARBY STREAM FAILED TO FLOW THROUGH A CHANNEL SUPPOSED TO DIVERT IT TO THE TOWN, LOCAL BRAHMINS ADVISED RAJA VERMA THAT EITHER HIS SON OR HIS WIFE WOULD HAVE TO SACRIFICE THEMSELVES. THE QUEEN OBLIGED; SHE WAS BURIED ALIVE AT THE HEAD OF THE CHANNEL, AND THE WATER FLOWED FREELY. ONLY WOMEN AND CHILDREN PARTICIPATE IN THE FESTIVAL, DANCING ON THE CHAUGAN BEFORE PROCESSING WITH AN IMAGE OF CHAMPAVATI (RANI SUNENA'S DAUGHTER WHO GAVE HER NAME TO THE TOWN) AND BANNERS OF THE CLAN'S SOLAR EMBLEM TO THE SUHI MATA TEMPLE IN THE HILLS BEHIND THE TOWN.

Minjar, a week of singing and dancing at the start of August to celebrate the growth of maize, is also peculiar to Chamba. Its climax comes on the last day, when a rowdy procession of locals, Gaddis and Gujjars, dressed in traditional costumes, leaves the palace and snakes down to the riverbank, where bunches of maize are thrown into the water. Before Independence, locals followed a custom whereby a male buffalo was pushed into the river; its drowning was an auspicious sign but if the beast managed to swim to the opposite bank bad fortune was expected for the coming year.

TREKS AROUND CHAMBA AND BHARMOUR THE MOST POPULAR TREKS FROM CHAMBA LEAD SOUTH OVER THE DHAULADHAR VIA THE MINKIANI OR INDRAHAR PASS TO DHARAMSALA. EQUIPMENT CAN BE RENTED AND PORTERS AND GUIDES HIRED IN CHAMBA AND BHARMOUR. MANI MAHESH TRAVELS IN CHAMBA ( MANIMAHESHTRAVEL.COM) ORGANIZES AND EQUIPS TREKS.

TREKS IN THE PANGI VALLEY TO LAHAUL FEW TREKKERS MAKE IT TO THE SPECTACULAR, ALL BUT INACCESSIBLE PANGI VALLEY, BETWEEN THE SOARING GREATER HIMALAYAN RANGE IN THE NORTH AND THE OUTER HIMALAYAN RANGE IN THE SOUTH. SEVERAL PEAKS WITHIN IT HAVE NEVER BEEN CLIMBED, AND ONWARD PATHS LEAD TO KASHMIR, LAHAUL AND ZANSKAR. THE TREK TO LAHAUL TAKES NINE OR TEN DAYS FROM TRAILA (90KM NORTH OF CHAMBA) VIA SATRAUNDHI (3500M) OVER THE SACH PASS TO KILLAR, SACH KHAS, AND FINISHING IN PURTHI FROM WHERE YOU CAN TAKE A BUS VIA TINDI TO UDAIPUR. BUSES RUN FROM HERE TO KEYLONG, CAPITAL OF LAHAUL, FOR CONNECTIONS NORTHWARDS TO LEH OR SOUTH OVER THE ROHTANG PASS AND DOWN TO MANALI.

TREKS FROM BHARMOUR TREKKING ROUTES LEAD NORTH FROM BHARMOUR (2130M) OVER THE PIR PANJAL RANGE ACROSS PASSES THAT ARE COVERED WITH SNOW FOR MOST OF THE YEAR. THE CHALLENGING SIX- TO SEVEN-DAY TREK OVER KALICHHO PASS (4990M), “THE ABODE OF KALI”, ENDS IN THE VILLAGE OF TRILOKNATH, WHOSE ANCIENT TEMPLE TO THREE-FACED SHIVA IS SACRED TO BOTH HINDUS AND BUDDHISTS. BUSES RUN FROM HERE TO UDAIPUR, AND ON TO KEYLONG AND MANALI.

Another demanding five- to six-day route crosses the Kugti Pass (5040m). From Hadsar, an hour by bus from Bharmour, the path follows the River Budhil for 12km to Kugti, then up to Kuddi Got, a vast flower-filled meadow (4000m). The next stage, over the pass, requires crampons and ice axes for an incredibly taxing six-hour climb. Having enjoyed views of the towering peaks of Lahaul and Zaskar from the summit, you plummet once again to the head of a glacier at Khardu, continuing down to Raape, 7km from Shansha, which is linked to Udaipur and Keylong by road.

Finally, a delightful three-day trek to the sacred lake of Manimahesh (4183m) starts from and returns to Hadsar. The awesome Manimahesh Kailash massif, with its permanent glaciers and ice fields, overlooks the lake.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS BUSES ARRIVE CHAMBA AT THE CRAMPED BUS STAND IN THE NORTH OF TOWN.

Destinations Amritsar (1–3 daily; 8hr); Banikhet (every 30min; 2hr); Bharmour (every 30min–1hr; 3hr); Dharamsala (2 daily; 8–9hr); Pathankot (hourly; 5hr 30min); Shimla (2 daily; 15–16hr).

Tourist information The uninspiring tourist office (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm; ☎01899 224002) is part of the Iravati complex.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING CHAMBA HAS A FAIR NUMBER OF MOSTLY GRUBBY BUDGET LODGES AND CHEAP RESTAURANTS. TRY THE LOCAL SPECIALITY, MADHRA, A RICH, OILY AND SLIGHTLY BITTER MIX OF BEANS AND CURD.

Chamunda View Below the bus stand, ☎01246201184. The pick of the budget lodges, having had a recent makeover. The compact attached rooms are comfortable enough. ₹

City Heart Above the far end of the chaugan, 📞 hotelcityheartchamba.com. The best hotel in town is a modern affair, with fairly smart attached rooms and probably the best restaurant too. ₹₹₹

The Iravati The nearest corner of the chaugan to the bus stand, 📞 hptdc.in. HPTDC hotel offering comfortable, carpeted attached rooms with cable TV and a reliable, if unexciting, restaurant. ₹₹

Bharmour

BHARMOUR is a delightful small town, made up of of slate-roofed houses, apple trees and small maize fields, draped across a verdant ridge above the river and shadowed on all sides by high snowy peaks. This gem of a place is well worth the effort to travel the extra distance from Chamba and you are likely to be rewarded by being the only foreigner in town. From the bus stand, the main street winds up through the bazaar area to the picturesque main square, which is dominated by the magnificent Chaurasi temple complex.

The temples, whose curved shikharas dominate the large, neatly paved central square, are more dramatic and better preserved than their rivals at Chamba. The sanctuaries are unlocked only for puja in the mornings and evenings, permitting a glimpse of bold bronze images of Shiva, Narsingh, Ganesh and Parvati, unchanged since their installation in the seventh and eighth centuries when Bharmour was capital of the surrounding mountainous region. A life-sized bronze Nandi bull, draped in a colourful cloth, stands under a shelter in front of the main Shiva temple, while a giant 25m deodar tree towers over the temple from behind.

The complex comes particularly alive around the evening puja time, when the whole town seems to crowd into the square, playing games, dancing to impromptu live music, or even taking their sheep for a walk on leads.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS THERE ARE BHARMOUR FREQUENT BUS CONNECTIONS WITH CHAMBA (EVERY 30MIN–1HR; 3HR), FAR FEWER WITH DALHOUSIE.

Tourist information There is no official tourist office but Bharmour Trekking by the bus stand (www.bharmourtrekking.com) provides a full trekking service and other useful advice.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING EXCEPT DURING THE SEPTEMBER PILGRIMAGE WHEN EVERYWHERE IS BOOKED UP, YOU CAN EASILY FIND ROOMS AT THE HANDFUL OF HOTELS AND GUESTHOUSES. FOOD IS MAINLY AVAILABLE IN THE STRING OF SMALL DHABAS AND RESTAURANTS LINING THE MAIN ROAD BETWEEN THE BUS STAND AND THE SQUARE.

Bharmour View Above the main bazaar, near the bus stand www.bharmourview.com. Modern(ish) hotel with huge windows offering sweeping views from the pricier front rooms. Oddly, there's a waterfall running through the back of the building. ₹₹

Chourasi Main bazaar ☎01895 225615. Pretty basic restaurant on the ground floor of a mundane hotel but the veg and non-veg thalis are filling. ₹

Kuki Guest House Middle of the main bazaar, facebook.com/kghotelbharmour84. Friendly place with cosy attached rooms, the front ones having small balconies and partial valley views. ₹

The Kullu Valley The majestic KULLU VALLEY is cradled by the Pir Panjal to the north, the Parvati Range to the east, and the Barabhangal Range to the west. This is Himachal at its most idyllic, with roaring rivers, pretty mountain villages, orchards and terraced fields, thick pine forests and snow-flecked ridges. The valley extends 80km north from the mouth of the perilously steep and narrow Larji Gorge, near Mandi, to the foot of the Rohtang Pass – gateway to Lahaul and Ladakh.

In spite of the changes wrought by roads, immigration and, more recently, mass tourism, the Kullu Valley's way of life is maintained in countless timber and stone villages. Known as paharis ("hill people"), the locals – high-caste landowning Thakurs, and their (low-caste) sharecropping tenant farmers – still sport the distinctive Kullu cap, or topi. The women, meanwhile, wear colourful headscarves and puttoos fastened with silver pins and chains. Venture into the lush meadows above the tree line and you'll cross paths with nomadic Gaddi shepherds.

Most tourists make a beeline for Manali after a gruelling bus ride from Leh or Delhi. With its vast choice of hotels and restaurants, there is something here for everyone. Still an evergreen hippie hangout, it's India's number-one honeymoon spot, and is also popular with outdoors enthusiasts taking advantage of the fine trekking. Few travellers actually stay in Kullu town and the only real attraction is the annual Dussehra festival in October. Flights from Delhi to Bhuntar, just south of Kullu, offer a welcome but weather-dependent alternative to the long overnight bus journeys. To the north, Naggar's castle, ancient temples and relaxed guesthouses make a pleasant change from the claustrophobic concrete of modern Manali, as do Manikaran's sacred hot springs, up the spectacular Parvati Valley.

Brief history Known in the ancient Hindu scriptures as Kulanthapitha, or "End of the Habitable World", the Kullu Valley for centuries formed one of the major trade corridors between Central Asia and the Gangetic plains, and local rulers, based first at Jagatsukh and later at Naggar and Sultanpur (now Kullu), were able to rake off handsome profits from the through traffic. This trade monopoly, however, also made it a prime target for invasion, and in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries the Kullu rajas were forced to repulse attacks by both the raja of Kangra and the Sikhs, before seeing their lands annexed by the British in 1847. Over the following years, colonial families crossed the Jalori Pass from Shimla, making the most of the valley's alpine climate to grow the apples that, along with cannabis cultivation, today form the mainstay of the rural economy. The first road, built in 1927 to export the fruit, spelled the end of the peace and isolation, prompting many settlers to pack up and leave long before Independence. The population expanded again in the 1950s and 1960s with an influx of Tibetan refugees.

Kullu

KULLU, the valley's capital since the mid-seventeenth century, became district headquarters after Independence. Despite being the region's main market and transport hub it has been eclipsed as a tourist centre by Manali, 40km north. Kullu is noisy, polluted and worlds away from the tranquil villages that peer down from the surrounding hillsides, even though a bypass now diverts some of the traffic from the centre. Kullu makes a handy transport hub if you're travelling onwards to the Parvati Valley, and there are several temples dotted around town, some of which provide fine valley views. In October, when the entire population of the valley comes to town to celebrate Dussehra, the city takes on a life of its own. The town is also the centre for the manufacture of the valley's famous shawls, handwoven on looms from lamb's wool, angora or pashmina and increasing in price accordingly.

The temples Kullu's most famous temple, the Raghunathji Mandir is home to a sacred statue of Lord Raghunathji, a manifestation of Rama, brought to Kullu by Raja Jagat Singh in the mid-seventeenth century. The raja had been advised by his priests to install the sacred icon here and crown it king in his place, and to this day the Kullu rajas consider themselves mere viceroys of Raghunathji, the most powerful devta in the valley and the focus of the Dussehra procession. The temple is tucked away behind the Kullu rajas' Rupri Palace above the bus station. Half an hour's walk further up, the paved trail leads beyond the village of Sultanpur to a high ridge, with excellent views over the River Beas to the snow peaks in the east. Vaishno Devi Mandir, a small cave-temple that houses an image of the goddess Kali (Durga), is a stiff 3km further on.

Another important temple, the Bijli Mahadev Mandir, stands 8km southeast of town, atop the bluff that overlooks the sacred confluence of the Beas and Parvati rivers. Although it's closer to Bhuntur than Kullu, you have to approach the temple via the Akhara Bazaar–Tapu suspension bridge and a well-worn track south along the left bank of the Beas. Bijli Mahadev is renowned for its extraordinary lingam. Bolts of lightning, conducted into the inner sanctum by means of the 20m, trident-tipped pole, are said to periodically shatter the icon, which later, with the help of invocations from the resident pujari, magically reconstitutes itself. From the temple, which has a basic resthouse, there are superb panoramic views of the Parvati and Kullu valleys and Himachal's highest peaks.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE THE SINGLE DAILY FLIGHT TO KULLU FROM DELHI ARRIVES IN BHUNTUR, 30MIN SOUTH OF KULLU BY BUS.

By bus All long-distance buses pull in at the main bus stand in Sarvari Bazaar, on the north side of the Sarvari River. Local services heading north also drop and pick up passengers at the top of Dhalpur maidan. There are direct services to Manali (1hr 30min) every 15min and hourly via Naggar (2hr), a far more scenic route. In 2017, an eco-friendly electric bus started plying the route between Kullu and Manali and is expected to operate up to four times daily. Frequent southbound buses via Bhuntur pass right outside the airport.

By taxi Taxis to the airport are exorbitant and should be booked in the union office (☎01902 222322) on the main road close to the tourist office.

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION HPTDC'S TOURIST OFFICE (DAILY 10AM–6PM, UNTIL 9PM APRIL–JUNE; ☎01902 222349), ON THE WEST SIDE OF DHALPUR MAIDAN, CAN BOOK TICKETS ON HPTDC'S DELUXE BUSES TO DELHI, SHIMLA AND CHANDIGARH.

Permits The District Commissioner's office near Dhalpur maidan (Mon–Sat 10am–5pm, closed 2nd Sat of month; ☎01902 222727) issues Inner Line permits but you need to apply through a travel agent. Try Harisons Travels at Akhara Bazaar (☎01902224893).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Kullu has a reasonable choice of accommodation, although prices can double during high season and even quadruple for Dussehra.

Kullu Valley Akhara Bazaar, ☎hotelkulluvalley.com. Smart, brightly lit modern hotel, whose rooms are nicely furnished and spacious; most boast bath-tubs. The cheaper ones without tubs are great value. ₹

The Nest Next to the bus stand, hotelthenest.com. The best hotel by the bus stand but suffers from noise. Clean, good-value attached doubles; two of the pricier second-floor rooms have tubs. The downstairs restaurant is a good option between buses. ₹

The Sarvari South of the maidan and up a small lane, hptdc.in/index.php/the-sarvari-kullu. HPTDC chain hotel in a quiet location with a range of rooms in two blocks. Good valley views, Ayurvedic massage, a restaurant and bar. ₹₹₹

Shobla Royale Dhalpur, shoblaroyale.com. Kullu's top hotel, fully refurbished in recent years. Large, lavishly decorated and furnished rooms, a good mixed-cuisine restaurant, a games room and a relaxing lawn. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

There are few bona fide restaurants outside the hotels but a predictable host of dhabas and chai stalls.

★Annapurna Akhara Bazaar 01902 224162. Very simple restaurant serving superb vegetarian dishes, from both ends of the country, including fine masala dosas. There's a baked goods and sweet counter outside. ₹₹

Sapna Sweets Akhara Bazaar, sapna-sweets-bakers.business.site. The name is slightly misleading as this popular pure-veg place does a range of traditional Himachal thalis (dham), samosas and dosas, as well as sweet items. It suffers from the usual copycats so check the phone number on the sign. ₹

SHOPPING

MAP

Bhuttico Showroom Sarvari Bazaar, near the bus stand, bhutticoshawl.com. The most central of several outlets around town, with others in Manali and further afield. This is the best place to buy high-quality, fairly priced shawls, Kullu caps, jackets and other woven items.

The Parvati Valley Hemmed in by giant-pinnacled mountain peaks, the Parvati Valley, which twists west from the glaciers and snowfields on the Spiti border to meet the Beas at Bhuntur, is the Kullu Valley's longest tributary. It's a picturesque place, with quiet hamlets perching precariously on its sides amid lush terraces and old pine forests. Though the landscape around Jari has been scarred by the ugly Malana hydro project, there is strong local pressure to at least camouflage the site. Visitors to the valley are an incongruous mix – a combination of Western hippies (especially Israelis), young Indian backpackers and van-loads of Sikh pilgrims bound for the gurudwara at Manikaran, 32km northeast of the Beas–Parvati confluence. Crouched at the foot of a gloomy ravine, this ancient religious site, sacred to Hindus as well as Sikhs, is famous for the hot springs that bubble out of its stony riverbanks.

DUSSEHRA IN THE VALLEY OF THE GODS IN THE KULLU REGION, OFTEN DUBBED THE “VALLEY OF THE GODS”, THE VILLAGE DEITY REIGNS SUPREME. NO ONE KNOWS HOW MANY *DEV*TAS AND *DEV*IS INHABIT THE HILLS SOUTH OF THE ROHTANG PASS, BUT NEARLY EVERY HAMLET HAS ONE. THE PART EACH ONE PLAYS IN VILLAGE LIFE DEPENDS ON HIS OR HER PARTICULAR POWERS; SOME HEAL, OTHERS PROTECT THE “PARISH” BORDERS FROM EVIL SPIRITS, SUMMON THE RAINS, OR ENSURE THE SUCCESS OF THE HARVEST. NEARLY ALL, HOWEVER, COMMUNICATE WITH THEIR DEVOTEES BY MEANS OF ORACLES. WHEN CALLED UPON TO PERFORM, THE VILLAGE SHAMAN, OR GAUR – DRAWN FROM THE LOWER CASTES – STRIPS TO THE WAIST AND ENTERS A TRANCE IN WHICH THE *DEV*TA USES HIS VOICE TO SPEAK TO THE CONGREGATION. THE DEITY, CARRIED OUT OF THE TEMPLE ON A CEREMONIAL PALANQUIN, OR RATH, ROCKS BACK AND FORTH ON THE SHOULDERS OF ITS BEARERS AS THE GAUR SPEAKS. HIS WORDS ARE ALWAYS HEEDDED, AND HIS DECISIONS FINAL; THE DEVTA-ORACLE DECIDES THE PROPITIOUS DATES FOR MARRIAGES, AND FOR SOWING CROPS, AND ARBITRATES DISPUTES.

DUSSEHRA THE SINGLE MOST IMPORTANT OUTING FOR ANY VILLAGE DEITY IS DUSSEHRA, WHICH TAKES PLACE IN THE TOWN OF KULLU EVERY OCTOBER AFTER THE MONSOONS. ALTHOUGH THE WEEK-LONG FESTIVAL OSTENSIBLY CELEBRATES RAMA'S VICTORY OVER THE DEMON-KING OF LANKA, RAVANA, IT IS ALSO AN OPPORTUNITY FOR THE DEVITAS TO REAFFIRM THEIR POSITION IN THE GRAND PECKING ORDER THAT PREVAILS AMONG THEM – A RIGID HIERARCHY IN WHICH THE KULLU RAJA'S OWN TUTELARY DEITY RAMA, ALIAS RAGHUNATHJI, IS KING.

On the tenth day of the new, or “white” moon in October, between 150 and 200 devtas make their way to Kullu to pay homage to Raghunathji. As befits a region that holds its elderly women in high esteem, the procession proper cannot begin until Hadimba, the grandmother of the royal family's chief god, arrives from the Dunghri temple in Manali. Like her underlings, she is borne on an elaborately carved wooden rath swathed in glittering silk and garlands, and surmounted by a richly embroidered parasol, or chhatri. Raghunathji leads the great procession in his six-wheeled rath. Hauled from the Rupi Palace by two hundred honoured devotees, the palanquin lurches to a halt in the middle of Kullu's maidan, to be circumambulated by the raja, his family, and retinue of priests. Thereafter, the festival's more secular aspect comes to the fore. Folk dancers perform for the vast crowds, and the maidan is taken over by market stalls, snake charmers, astrologers, sadhus and tawdry circus acts. The revelries finally draw to a close six days later on the full moon, when the customary blood sacrifices of a young buffalo, a goat, a cock, a fish and a crab are made to the god.

Kullu's Dussehra, now a major tourist attraction, has become increasingly staged and commercialized. Book accommodation well in advance, and be prepared for a crush if you want to get anywhere near the devtas.

To make the most of Parvati's stunning scenery you'll have to hike. Two popular trails thread their way up the valley: one heads north from the fascinating hill village of Malana, over the Chandrakhani Pass to Naggar; the other follows the River Parvati east to another sacred hot spring and sadhu hangout, Khirganga, which is becoming increasingly popular with hippie travellers. The trail continues from Khirganga to Mantalai with its Shiva shrine and over the awesome 5400m Pin-Parvati pass into Spiti. This serious snowfield is riddled with crevasses and takes several hours to cross. A guide is absolutely essential.

GETTING AROUND BY BUS BUSES, THE PARVATI VALLEY
SOME OF THEM FROM KULLU, LEAVE BHUNTUR AT LEAST HOURLY FOR MANIKARAN (1HR 30MIN), PASSING THROUGH JARI AND KASOL EN ROUTE. THE LAST BUS BACK TO KULLU, VIA BHUNTUR, LEAVES AROUND 6PM.

Jari and around Spilling down the south side of the Parvati Valley, JARI, 15km from Bhuntur, looks across to the precipitous Malana nala in the north, and to the snow-flecked needles of the Baranagh Range on the eastern horizon. Like many of its lookalike cousins, the tatty settlement supports a small transient population of stoned Westerners, attracted by the top-quality charas. Those wanting a shortcut to Malana can rent a vehicle up to the Malana hydro project roadhead, from where the village is a mere 4km trek.

Jari's unspoilt and far more attractive satellite village of Mateura, just ten minutes' walk up the hill from the main road, has spectacular views over the Parvati Range and is home to the small but important Kali Anagha temple.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING OM SHIVAJARI AND AROUND
ON THE LEFT-HAND SIDE AS YOU ENTER JARI ☎98161 47800.

THE ROOMS ARE RATHER BASIC IN THIS SIMPLE BUT WELCOMING GUESTHOUSE, BUT ALL HAVE ATTACHED BATHROOMS. NO WI-FI. ₹

Rooftop Restaurant & Guest House Upper side of Matheura 📍01902 275434. The rooms here are fairly small and basic, but the real draw is the roof terrace overlooking the village, which serves the best food in the area. No wi-fi. ₹

Village Guest House Centre of Matheura village 📍01902 276070. A traditional wooden-balconied house, whose immaculate rooms have spotless bathrooms and satellite TV. Set in a wonderful garden, it's deservedly popular year-round. ₹

Kasol

Beyond Jari, the road winds down towards the rushing grey-green Parvati, which it meets at KASOL, a pleasant village straddling a mountain stream and surrounded by forest. Kasol has grown in popularity, and now has a large resident population of charas-smoking travellers, most of whom are Israelis – earning it the nickname of “little Israel” from the locals. A trickle of trekkers also plod through on their way to or from the pass of Rashol Jot (2440m), a hard day's climb up the north side of the valley which provides an alternative approach to Malana and the Chandrakhani route to the Kullu Valley.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING

KASOL

Accommodation ranges from basic rooms in village houses and simple lodges to more organized hotels, while Kasol's travellers' cafés are cheap and plentiful.

★Alpine Guest House Off the main road, by the river bank, 📍thealpineguesthouse.in. Attractive two-storey building with spacious attached rooms, set in wooded grounds by the river. Warm and welcoming atmosphere too. ₹₹

Café Rock'n'Roll On the Jari side of the village 📍70283 09425. First-floor rooftop café serving a variety of drinks and meals in a convivial atmosphere, such as the “Thai sexy spice salad” and steaks. Momos are deservedly popular, too. ₹₹

Deep Forest Up the hill just before the bridge, 📍 facebook.com/AccommodationInKasol. The nondescript and functional attached rooms here are nothing like as spectacular as the views which the hotel's slight elevation give it. Large outdoor terrace and restaurant. ₹₹₹

Moondance Restaurant and Bakery Just beyond the bridge 📍 09459901111. Choose between interior seating and a nicely terraced courtyard overlooking the river. All the travellers' favourites such as pancakes and shakes are available, plus there are board games to play. ₹₹

Sandhya Kasol 400m along the road to Manikaran, 📍 sandhyahotels.in. Pleasantly situated away from the centre, this upmarket hotel has comfortable deluxe rooms and wildly fluctuating rates that mean good deals off-season. There's a Coffee Day franchise on the premises. ₹₹₹

Sasi Restaurant Just before the bridge 📍 97363 68505. Blessed with a riverside location and gaily painted stone walls, and serving food from breakfast and snacks to filling Indian, Chinese and Western meals. ₹₹

PARVATI DISAPPEARANCES OVER THE LAST TWO DECADES THE PARVATI VALLEY HAS SEEN THE MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE OF AT LEAST TWENTY TRAVELLERS. MOST WERE TRAVELLING ALONE, ALTHOUGH ONE INCIDENT IN AUGUST 2000 INVOLVED THREE CAMPERS WHO WERE BRUTALLY ATTACKED IN THEIR TENT, THROWN INTO THE GORGE AND LEFT FOR DEAD – ONE SURVIVED. MOST OF THE VANISHED HAVE NEVER BEEN FOUND, INCLUDING A POLISH NATIONAL AND AN AMERICAN, BOTH OF WHOM WERE LAST SEEN IN MANALI, IN 2015 AND 2016 RESPECTIVELY. SEVERAL THEORIES HAVE BEEN PUT FORWARD TO EXPLAIN THESE DISAPPEARANCES, FROM DRUG-RELATED ACCIDENTS ON THE TREACHEROUS MOUNTAIN TRAILS, TO ATTACKS BY BEARS OR WOLVES OR FOUL PLAY BY THE NUMEROUS CANNABIS

CULTIVATORS IN THE REGION; SOME EVEN CLAIM THAT THE DISAPPEARED MAY HAVE JOINED SECRET CULTS DEEP IN THE MOUNTAINS. MOST LIKELY, HOWEVER, THEY WERE VICTIMS OF BANDIT ATTACKS, MOTIVATED SOLELY BY MONEY, WITH THE WILD WATERS OF THE RIVER PARVATI CONVENIENTLY PLACED FOR DISPOSING OF BODIES. INDIVIDUAL TRAVELLERS SHOULD TAKE HEED AND ONLY USE RECOGNIZED GUIDES ON TREKS ACROSS THE MOUNTAINS. DON'T ATTEMPT SOLO TREKS – EVEN ALONG THE RELATIVELY SIMPLE TRAIL OVER THE CHANDRAKHANI PASS BETWEEN NAGGAR AND MALANA AND THE STRAIGHTFORWARD TREK TO THE HOT SPRINGS AT KHIRGANGA. THERE ARE MANY TREKKING AGENCIES IN KULLU AND MANALI WHO CAN PUT YOU IN TOUCH WITH A REPUTABLE GUIDE.

Manikaran

Just 4.5km along the pleasantly wooded main road beyond Kasol, clouds of steam billowing from the rocky riverbank herald the Parvati Valley's chief attraction. Hindu mythology identifies MANIKARAN as the place where the serpent king Shesha stole Parvati's earrings, or manikara, while she and her husband Shiva were bathing in the river. When interrogated, the snake flew into a rage and snorted the earrings out of his nose. Ever since, boiling water has poured out of the ground. The site is also venerated by Sikhs, who have erected a massive concrete gurudwara over the springs.

Boxed in at the bottom of a vast, sheer-sided chasm, Manikaran is a damp, dark and claustrophobic place where you're unlikely to want to spend more than a night. Most of the action revolves around the springs themselves, reached via the lane that leads through the village from the footbridge. On the way, check out the finely carved pale-grey stone Rama temple just beyond the main square, and the pans of rice and dhal cooking in the steaming pools on the pavements. Down at the riverside Shiva shrine, semi-naked sadhus sit in the scalding waters smoking chillums. Sikh pilgrims, meanwhile, make their way to the atmospheric gurudwara nearby, where they take a purifying dip in the underground pool, sweat in the hot cave and then congregate upstairs to listen to musical recitations from the Sikhs' holy book, the Guru Granth Sahib. If you visit, keep your arms, legs and head covered; tobacco is prohibited inside the complex.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING

MANIKARAN

Except during May and June, when Manikaran fills up with Punjabi visitors, accommodation is plentiful and inexpensive. Most hotels have a steaming indoor hot tub, which tends to leave them feeling rather damp. Food, which is strictly veg, is mostly found in local dhabas.

Fateh Guest House In an alley near the Rama temple 📞98168 94968. All the small and simple rooms have hot showers and TVs at this welcoming family guesthouse, the best value in town. The owner has a mountain resthouse a 1hr walk away. No wi-fi. ₹

Royal Palace On the main road before the turn-off to the bus stand, 🌐 royalpalacekasol.in. On the road to Kasol, this snazzy brick hotel has large rooms with TVs and balconies with river views. ₹₹₹

Sharda Classic Beside the bus stand 📞98164 77680. Airy hotel rooftop restaurant, serving good Indian veg dishes, plus items such as half lemon chicken. ₹₹

Sharma Guest House At the gurudwara end of the bazaar 📞98162 73742. Simple lodge with basic rooms, the best of those near the gurudwara. It now also has the smarter New Sharma nearby. ₹

Naggar

Stacked up the lush, terraced lower slopes of the valley as they sweep towards the tree line from the left bank of the Beas, NAGGAR is the most scenic and accessible of the hill villages between Kullu and Manali, roughly 20km from each. Clustered around an old castle, this was the regional capital before the local rajas decamped to Kullu in the mid-1800s. A century or so later, European settlers began to move in. Seduced by the village's ancient temples, peaceful setting and unhurried pace, visitors often find themselves lingering in Naggar – a far less hippified village than those further north – longer than they intended. Numerous tracks wind up the mountain to more remote settlements, providing a choice of enjoyable hikes.

Naggar is a very pleasant place, often sadly overlooked by travellers making a beeline for Manali. The relaxed atmosphere, refreshing elevation, stunning views and a variety of interesting sites combine to make it an excellent spot to while away a few days.

The castle Since it was erected by Raja Sidh Singh (c.1700), Naggar's central castle, astride a sheer-sided bluff, has served as palace, colonial mansion, courthouse and school. It is now a hotel, but non-residents can wander in by paying a minimal charge to admire the views from its balconies. Built in the traditional "earthquake-proof" pahari style (layers of stone bonded together with cedar logs), the castle has a central courtyard, a small shrine and a shop selling local handicrafts downstairs. The Jagti Patt temple's amorphous deity, a triangular slab of rock strewn with rose petals and rupee notes, is said to have been borne here from its home on the summit of Deo Tibba by a swarm of wild honeybees – the valley's devtas in disguise.

Nicholas Roerich Gallery Daily except Monday April–Oct 10am–1pm & 1.30–6pm; Nov–March 10am–1pm & 1.30–5pm • Entry charge; ticket includes admission to Urusvati-Himalayan Folk Art Museum •  irmtkullu.com

Perched on the upper outskirts of the village, the Nicholas Roerich Gallery houses an exhibition of paintings by and photographs of its former occupier, the Russian artist, writer, philosopher, archeologist, explorer and mystic, as well as works by his equally talented son Svetoslav. Around the beginning of the twentieth century, Roerich's atmospheric landscape paintings and esoteric philosophies – an arcane blend of Eastern mysticism and fin de siècle humanist-idealism – inspired a cult-like following in France and the United States. Financed by donations from devotees, Roerich was able to indulge his obsession with Himalayan travel, eventually retiring in Naggar in 1929 and dying here eighteen years later. The beautifully landscaped gardens contain his samadhi memorial.

Urusvati-Himalayan Folk Art Museum Daily except Monday April–Oct 10am–1pm & 1.30–6pm; Nov–March 10am–1pm & 1.30–5pm •

Admission included with Nicolas Roerich Gallery • www.irmtkullu.com

A path winds further up from the Nicholas Roerich Gallery above the road through the forest for around 100m to Urusvati-Himalayan Folk Art Museum. Founded by Roerich's wife in 1928, the museum has a collection of local folk art, costumes, more of Roerich's paintings, several paintings by his Russian followers, and a gallery of Russian folk art.

The temples The largest and most distinctive of Naggar's ancient Hindu temples and shrines, the wooden pagoda-style Tripuri Sundri stands in a small enclosure at the top of the village, just below the road to the Roerich Gallery. Like the Dughri temple in Manali, it is crowned with a three-tiered roof, whose top storey is circular. Its devta is the focus of an annual mela (mid-May) in which deities from villages are brought in procession to pay their respects.

Ten minutes' walk further up the hill – follow the stone steps that lead right from the road – brings you to a clearing where the old stone Murlidhar (Krishna) Mandir looks down on Naggar, with superb views up the valley to the snow peaks around Solan and the Rohtang Pass. Built on the ruins of the ancient town of Thawa, the shrine, set in a large courtyard, is strictly off-limits to non-Hindus.

Finally, on your way to or from the bus stand at the bottom of the village, look out for the finely carved stone shikharas of the Gaurishankar Mandir. Set in its own paved courtyard below the castle, this Shiva temple, among the oldest of its kind in the valley, houses a living lingam, so slip off your shoes before approaching it.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE NAGGAR VILLAGE NAGGAR
PROPER, ITS SIGHTS AND ACCOMMODATION LIE SOME WAY ABOVE THE SMALL BAZAAR ON THE MAIN ROAD WHERE THE BUSES PULL IN. IF YOU HAVE YOUR OWN VEHICLE, YOU CAN DRIVE ALL THE WAY UP TO THE ROERICH GALLERY AT THE TOP OF THE VILLAGE.

By bus Naggar is equidistant (21km) from Kullu and Manali and connected to both by hourly buses along the scenic east bank of the Beas. More frequent and faster services in either direction along the west bank can be joined at Patlikuhl, from where taxis and auto-rickshaws climb the 6km up to Naggar.

On foot You can walk from Patlikuhl on the old mule track – a hike of at least 1hr.

INFORMATION GUIDES IF YOU ARE THINKING OF TREKKING AROUND NAGGAR, YOU ARE ADVISED TO USE GUIDES, ESPECIALLY IF CROSSING THE CHANDRAKHANI PASS TO MALANA. HIMALAYAN MOUNTAIN TREKS AT POONAM MOUNTAIN LODGE (SEE BELOW) HAVE EQUIPMENT, PORTERS AND GUIDES, ALTHOUGH YOU NEED TO MAKE CLEAR WHAT IS INCLUDED IN THE PRICE AND CHASE THEM UP ON PUNCTUALITY. LOCAL GUIDES ARE ALSO EASY TO FIND, THOUGH MAKE SURE THEY ARE REPUTABLE.

ACCOMMODATION ★ALLIANCE GUEST HOUSE HALFWAY BETWEEN THE VILLAGE AND THE ROERICH GALLERY, ☎ ALLIANCENAGGAR.COM. POPULAR FRENCH-OWNED GUEST-HOUSE WITH THREE CATEGORIES OF ACCOMMODATION: SIMPLE, CLEAN ROOMS WITH SHARED BATHROOMS, MEDIUM-SIZED TRADITIONAL WOODEN ATTACHED ROOMS AND SMARTER ROOMS IN THE NEW BUILDING ON THE UPPER LEVEL. ALSO A SMALL LENDING LIBRARY AND LOVELY OUTDOOR PATIO. ₹

Poonam Mountain Lodge Below the castle, ☎ poonammountain.in. Cosy doubles, three with fireplaces for winter stays, in a largely wooden structure with a wraparound balcony beside the family house. Food is available on request. Knowledgeable if rather over-bearing owner. ₹

Ragini Cottages 250m from the castle, ☎ raginiccottagesnagar.com. Run by a Belgian-Indian couple who also have a place in Goa, Ragini offers large suites (two-bed with kitchenette) or en-suite rooms, all with valley or castle views. Breakfast and dinner on request and plenty of help with planning treks or jeep/motorbike tours. ₹₹

Sheetal Hotel 50m from the castle, ☎ hotelsheetal.com. The wood-panelled rooms in this ochre-coloured hotel are comfortable, with TV and balconies. There's also a decent rooftop restaurant and some nearby cottages are available. ₹₹

EATING NIGHTINGALE – THE ITALIAN RESTAURANT 400M FROM THE CASTLE, ☎

FACEBOOK.COM/NIGHTINGALENAGGAR. FRIENDLY RESTAURANT SERVING EXCELLENT FUSION ITALIAN CUISINE AND RAINBOW TROUT SPECIALS IN A TRADITIONAL DINING ROOM OR ON THEIR TERRACE WITH A VIEW. ₹₹

★Ragini Hotel Rooftop Next to the Sheetal Hotel, ☎naggarragini.com. The upstairs restaurant serves fine food, including superb grilled trout with a fine garlic lemon sauce and some Mexican dishes. There is a pleasant café downstairs. ₹₹

Manali

Himachal's main tourist resort, MANALI, stands at the head of the Kullu Valley, 108km north of Mandi. Despite lying at the heart of the region's highest mountain range, it remains easily accessible by road from the plains; after one hour on a plane and a short hop by road, or sixteen hours on a bus from Delhi, you could be staring from your hotel veranda across apple orchards and thick pine forests to the snowfields of Solang Nala, which shine a tantalizing stone's throw away to the north. Manali has become increasingly popular with domestic tourists (more than five million annually), and now greets an eclectic mix of honeymooners, holiday-makers, hippies, trekkers and traders.

The Manali that lured travellers in the 1970s has certainly changed, although the majestic mountain scenery, thermal springs and quality charas can still be enjoyed. Old Manali retains some of its atmosphere, and the village of Vashisht across the valley, with its increasing number of guesthouses and cafés, has become a popular place to chill out. For those preferring to venture into the mountains, Manali makes an ideal trekking base for short hikes and serious expeditions, and countless agencies can help put a package together for you. The relaxing hotels in Manali's cleaner, greener outskirts, and dozens of sociable cafés and restaurants ranged around a well-stocked bazaar, provide a welcome relief from the rigours of the mountain trails. As well as treks around Manali you can also explore the Kullu Valley.

The Mall

Manali's main street, The Mall, quite unlike its namesake in Shimla, is a noisy scene of constant activity, fronted by the bus stand, several shopping markets, travel agents, and a line of hotels and restaurants. It's a great place to watch the world go by – locals in traditional caps, Tibetan women in immaculate rainbow-striped pinafores, Nepali porters, Buddhist monks, the odd party of Zanskaris swathed in fusty woollen gonchas, souvenir-hunting Indian tourists and a curious mix of Westerners. The grid of streets behind The Mall is curiously known as Model Town, though it is hardly a paradigm of town planning.

The bazaar Manali's days as an authentic pahari bazaar ended when the mule trains were superseded by Tata trucks, but it's still great for souvenir shopping. Woollen goods are the town's real forte, particularly the brilliantly patterned shawls for which the Kullu Valley is famous. Genuine pure-wool handloom shawls with embroidered borders, but those made from finest pashmina cost a good five thousand rupees. Shop around and check out the fixed-price factory shops to get an idea of what's available.

Elsewhere around the bazaar, innumerable stalls are stacked with handwoven goods and pillbox Kullu topis. Those with gaudy multicoloured up-turned flaps and gold piping are indigenous to the valley, but you can also pick up the plain-green velvet-fronted variety favoured by Kinnauris. Manali's other specialities are Tibetan curios such as prayer wheels, amulets, dorjees (thunderbolts) and masks, musical instruments and thangkas. Few of the items hawked as antiques are genuine but it takes an expert eye to spot a fake. The same applies to silver jewellery inlaid with turquoise and coral, which can nonetheless be attractive and relatively inexpensive.

The Hadimba Temple Resting on a wide stone platform fifteen minutes' walk northwest of the bazaar, the Hadimba Temple is Manali's oldest shrine and the seat of Hadimba (or "Hirma Devi"), wife of Bhima. Considered to be an incarnation of Kali, Hadimba is worshipped in times of adversity, and also plays a key role in the Dussehra festival. Hadimba is supposed to have given the kingdom of Kullu to the forefathers of the rajas of Kullu, and in veneration and affection the family to this day refer to her as “grandmother”. The massive triple-tiered wooden pagoda, crowned by crimson pennants and a brass ball and trident (Shiva’s trishul), dates from 1553, and is a replica of earlier ones that burned down in successive forest fires. The facade writhes with wonderful woodcarvings of elephants, crocodiles and folk deities. Entered by a door surmounted by wild ibex horns, the gloomy shrine is dominated by several large boulders, one of which shelters the stone on which goats and buffalo are sacrificed during important rituals. The hollow in its middle, believed to be Vishnu’s footprint, channels the blood to Hadimba’s mouth.

Rohtang Pass, Keylong & Leh

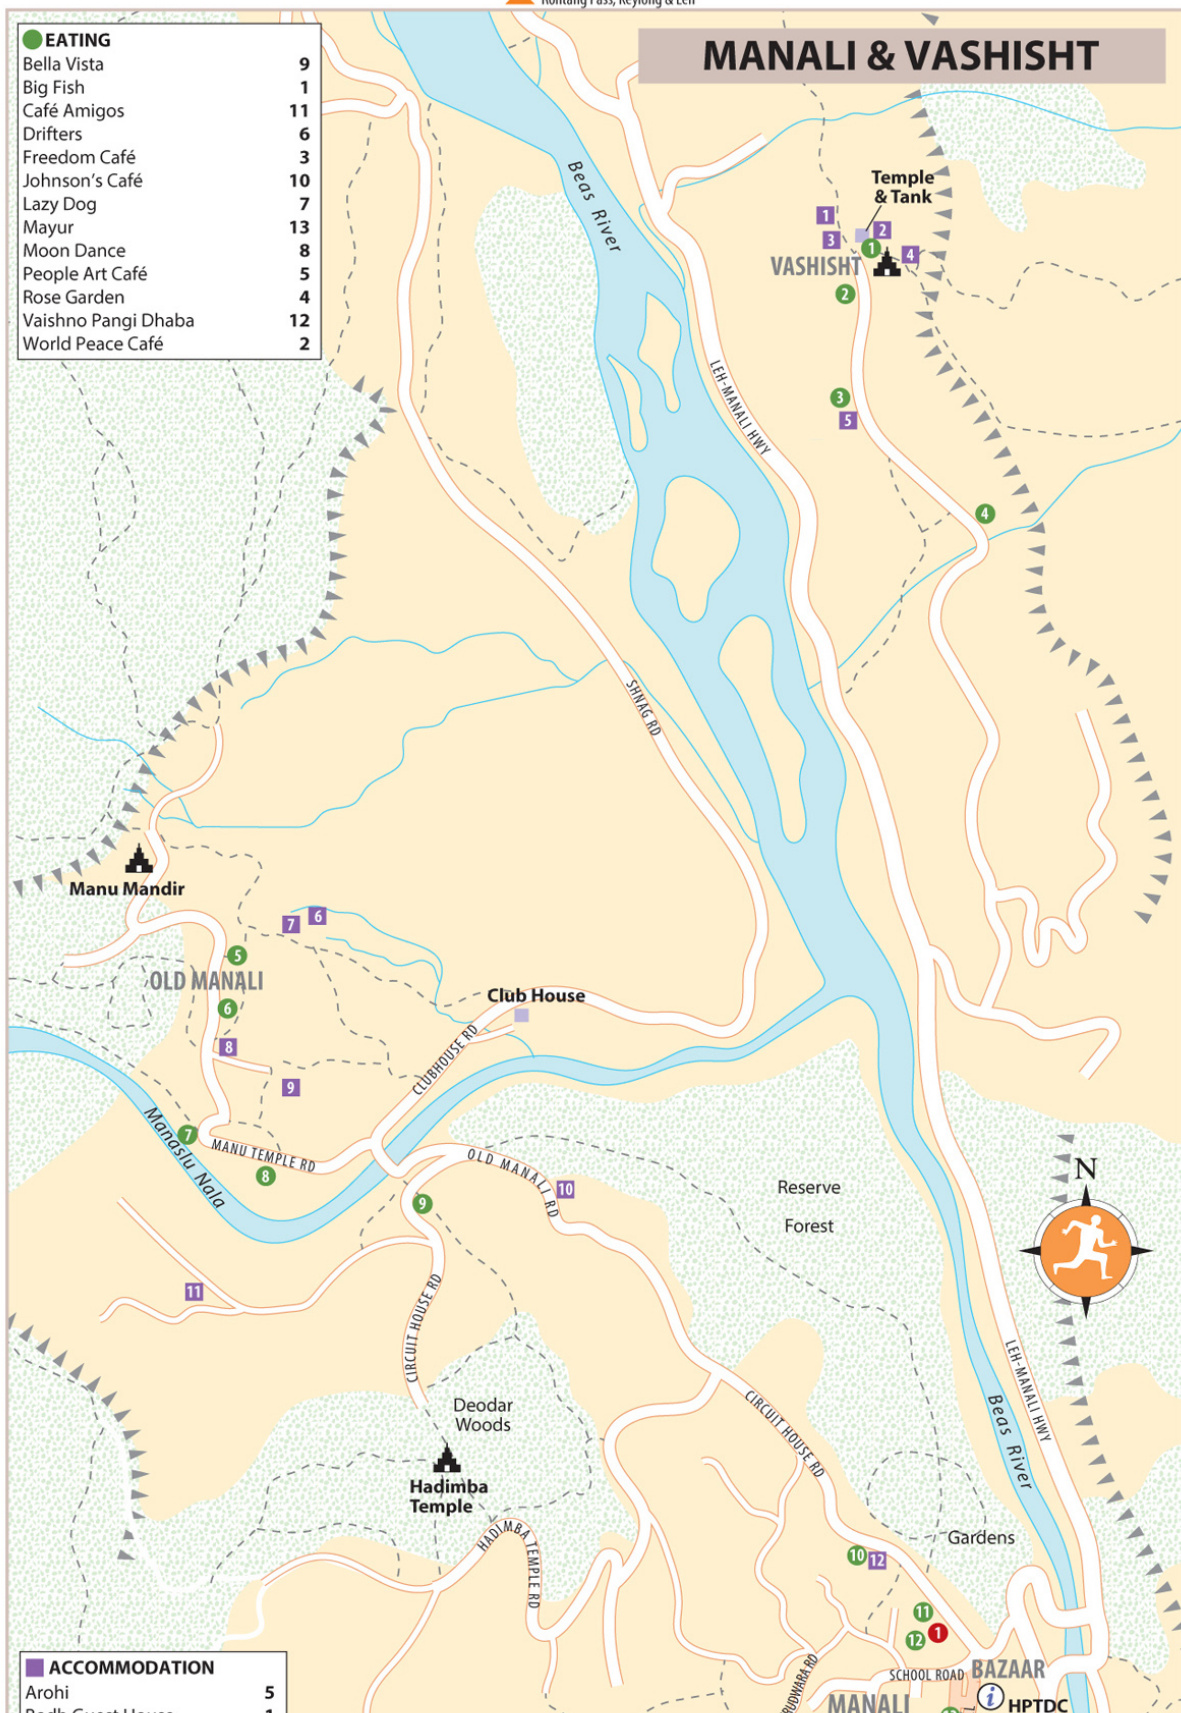

MANALI & VASHISHT

EATING

Bella Vista	9
Big Fish	1
Café Amigos	11
Drifters	6
Freedom Café	3
Johnson's Café	10
Lazy Dog	7
Mayur	13
Moon Dance	8
People Art Café	5
Rose Garden	4
Vaishno Pangi Dhaba	12
World Peace Café	2

ACCOMMODATION

Arohi	5
Redh Guest House	1

Soft-drinks stands, curio stalls and yak rides cater for visitors while the nearby Himachal Culture and Folk Art Museum displays detailed models of the valley's temples.

The gompas Manali harbours the highest concentration of Tibetan refugees in the Kullu Valley, hence the prayer flags fluttering over the approach roads into town, and the presence, on its southern edge, of two gompas.

Capped with polished golden finials, the distinctive yellow corrugated-iron pagoda roof of the Gadhan Thekchhokling Gompa is an exotic splash of colour amid the ramshackle huts of the Tibetan quarter. Built in 1969, the monastery is maintained by donations from the local community and through the sale of carpets handwoven in the temple workshop. When they are not looking after the shop, the young lamas huddle in the courtyard to play cholo – a Tibetan dice game involving much shouting and slamming of wooden tsampa bowls on leather pads. Beside the main entrance, a roll of honour recounts the names of Tibetans killed during the violent political demonstrations that wracked China in the late 1980s.

ADVENTURE SPORTS AND TOURS AROUND MANALI
CONSIDERING THE FIERCE WHITEWATER THAT THRASHES DOWN THE KULLU VALLEY DURING THE SPRING MELT, MANALI'S RAFTING SCENE IS SURPRISINGLY LOW-KEY. RAFT TRIPS DOWN THE RIVER BEAS ARE OFFERED BETWEEN THE END OF MAY AND EARLY JULY, WHEN WATER LEVELS ARE HIGHEST, BEGINNING AT PIRIDI (ABOVE BHUNTUR)
AROUND 15KM DOWNSTREAM AT JHIRI. THE PRICE

(FROM AROUND ₹700 IN LOW SEASON, ₹1500 IN HIGH SEASON FOR HALF A DAY) SHOULD INCLUDE FOOD, LIFEJACKETS, HELMETS AND RETURN TRAVEL; CHECK EXACTLY WHAT YOU'RE PAYING FOR, AS SOME UNSCRUPULOUS OPERATORS EXPECT YOU TO MAKE YOUR OWN WAY BACK AFTER THE TRIP.

Skiing in the Solang Valley is popular from January to April – but the slope isn't much bigger than a cricket pitch and there is no proper ski centre (see wfacebook.com/skihimalayas). A multi-million dollar ski resort proposed by foreign investors has repeatedly been blocked and it looks unlikely that facilities will be improved in the near future; if you have deep pockets then heli-skiing is a great alternative. The valley is also a popular spot for paragliding, rock climbing, zorbing and especially canyoning. For a less strenuous burst of expensive adrenaline and stunning views, helicopter rides of between five and thirty minutes can be had from ₹2500 per person.

One of the best ways to explore Kullu is by mountain biking, which is possible from mid-June to mid-October; rental costs around ₹1000/day for a European bike, with a guide, which is recommended. Popular routes include the descent from Rohtang, the forest trail to the Bijli Mahadev Temple and the back road to Naggar.

Numerous agents offer jeep safaris and other guided tours to remote areas such as Lahaul, Spiti and Ladakh – prices vary wildly, as does what is included, so always shop around. Most of these operations also run treks on the most popular local routes and further afield.

ADVENTURE SPORTS AND TOUR AGENCIES HIMALAYAN ADVENTURERS OPPOSITE THE TOURIST OFFICE, MANALI
☎01902 253050, wHIMALAYANADVENTURESINDIA.COM. RUP NEGI AND HIS EXPERIENCED TEAM OFFER THE FULL RANGE OF ACTIVITIES FROM TREKKING, MOUNTAIN BIKING AND SKIING TO JEEP AND MOTORBIKE TOURS. THERE'S EVEN BIRDWATCHING.

Magic Mountain Jagatsukh, 6km south of Manali, wmagicmountainadventures.com. Owner Raju Sharma specializes in mountain biking and leads tours himself. He can also arrange trekking, skiing and jeep safaris.

Tiger Eye Adventure Old Manali,  facebook.com/TIGEREYE.INDIA. Very efficient Dutch-run agency, which runs reliable trekking, bicycle, motorbike and jeep tours.

The smaller and more modern of the two gompas stands nearer the bazaar, in a garden that in late summer blazes with sunflowers. Its main shrine, lit by dozens of bare electric bulbs and filled with fragrant Tibetan incense, houses a colossal gold-faced Buddha, best viewed from the small room on the first floor.

Old Manali Old Manali, the village from which the modern town takes its name, lies 2km north of The Mall, on the far side of the Manasu Nala. Built in the old pahari style, most of the houses of Old Manali have heavy stone roofs and wooden balconies hung with bushels of drying herbs and tobacco. Unlike its crowded, concrete offspring, the settlement retains an unhurried and traditional feel for most of the year, despite prolific tourist development. The vast majority of the travellers who cram into the many guesthouses and laidback restaurants during the warmer months are Westerners, although the freak element is not as noticeable as before – they prefer Vashisht and the Parvati Valley – and the consumption of charas more discreet. In the wake of the tourists come the Kashmiris, Rajasthani tailors and other opportunists, eager to make good business before returning to Goa in the autumn.

To get here, head north up Old Manali Road, bear right at the fork in the road, and keep going until you reach the iron bridge across the river. A pleasant alternative route during daylight hours is through the forested Nature Park (daily: summer 9am–7pm; winter 9am–5pm; charge), which starts on the right-hand side of the Old Manali Road, not far north of The Mall. The village proper is clustered on top of a steeply shelving ledge of level ground above the nala. It is also known as Manaligarh after its ancient citadel – now a ruined fort surrounded by a patchwork of maize terraces and deep-green orchards. At the centre of the village is an unusual, brash new temple dedicated to Manu, who laid the foundations of Hindu law, as well as varna or “colour” – the basis of the caste system. Inscribed stones dating from the Middle Ages embedded into the concrete paving reveal the site’s antiquity. Although Manali itself is considered safe, women should be wary of walking along the lane from town to Old Manali after dark; it has been the scene of several rapes over the last two decades.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS MOST MANALI
VOLVO/PRIVATE BUSES PULL INTO THE BUS STAND 300M SOUTH OF THE STATE BANK OF INDIA AT THE BOTTOM OF TOWN, WHILE GOVERNMENT ISBT/HRTC BUSES USE THE MAIN BUS STAND IN THE MIDDLE OF THE MALL. THERE IS THE USUAL MIXTURE OF ORDINARY AND DELUXE SERVICES.

Destinations Delhi (8–10 daily; 16–17hr); Dharamsala (2 daily; 9–10hr); Kaza (1 daily; 12–13hr); Keylong (6 daily; 5–6hr); Kullu (every 15min; 1hr 30min–2hr); Mandi (hourly; 4–5hr); Naggar (hourly; 1hr); Shimla (7 daily; 8–9hr).

Railway booking There’s an official Indian Railways reservation booth (Mon–Sat 8am–5pm, Sun 9am–2pm) next to the tourist office.

GETTING AROUND BY MOTORBIKE RELIABLE, WELL-SERVICED ENFIELDS CAN BE RENTED FROM HARDEV MOTORS ON THE ROAD TO VASHISHT (📞 HARDEVMOTORS.COM).

By taxi Manali’s Taxi Operators’ Union kiosk (📞01902 252450) lies just up from the tourist office; the taxis have fixed rates, which are sometimes negotiable off-season. You can book single seats in jeeps and Tempo Traveller taxis to Leh (17–19hr) and Kaza (10–11hr); numerous travel agents book the former, while the Kiran Guest House (near the State Bank of India; Wkiran-guest-house-budget-hotel.business.site) is the best sales and departure point for Kaza.

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION THE FUNCTIONAL BUT NOT OVER-HELPFUL TOURIST OFFICE (MON–SAT 10AM–
5PM, SOMETIMES LONGER HOURS APRIL–JUNE; 📞01902 252175) IS AT THE NORTH END OF THE MALL. YOU CAN MAKE

RESERVATIONS FOR ALL STATE-RUN HOTELS AT THE HPTDC OFFICE (☎01902 253531), TWO DOORS DOWN.

Permits If you want to get an Inner Line permit in Manali, you must do so through a registered travel agent.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

There are three main accommodation areas in Manali. Most longer-stay budget places are clustered in Old Manali, while many of Manali's classic hotels with gardens and character are dotted around the northern and western outskirts. In central Manali, numerous mid-range business and honeymoon hotels cluster on and behind The Mall. Tariffs rocket to at least double in most Manali hotels during high season (April–June), when you might want to check out availability at the Manali Hoteliers Association on The Mall (☎01902 253059). At most other times, competition keeps rates well down.

OLD MANALI DRAGON INN DOWN THE LANE FROM MANU TEMPLE RD, ☎08219410951. NEWER HOTEL WITH BRASH EXTERIOR BUT COMFORTABLE, SPACIOUS ATTACHED ROOMS WITH HOT WATER AND BALCONIES. THE TOP FLOOR OF THE NEW BLOCK HAS SOME GREAT WOODEN-FLOORED DUPLEXES. ALSO A FINE RESTAURANT AND TRAVEL CENTRE.
₹₹₹

Laxmi Guest House On the lane beyond Dragon ☎01902 253569. Small, friendly place with rickety wooden rooms, which stay cheap even in high season. The attached ones cost little more. Largely uninterrupted valley views and a small garden are the best features. No wi-fi. ₹

★Tiger Eye Signposted down the lane towards the top of village ☎01902 252718. Peaceful, modern family guesthouse run by a friendly Indian–Dutch couple. Immaculate rooms and balconies with great views, plus a TV and w-fi in the comfy lounge. Well worth the little extra. ₹₹

Zostel Off Manu Temple Rd at the top of the village, www.zostel.com. This mountain-view hostel with clean and comfy four-bed dorms, twin and double rooms is one of the best in the Zostel chain. Shared areas are laidback and welcoming, tours and activities are well organised and the on-site café does great food. No card payments. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹

NORTHERN AND WESTERN OUTSKIRTS RAJHANS BETWEEN OLD MANALI RD AND LOG HUTS AREA, 📍
HOTELRAJHANSMANALI.IN. STYLISH FOUR-STOREY BRICK BUILDING WITH VALLEY VIEWS FROM THE MORE LUXURIOUS HIGHER ROOMS AND SUITES; ALL ATTACHED WITH TV. ₹₹

The Whispering Inn Club House Rd, 📞08894369347. Billing itself as a Swiss style chalet, this upmarket place adds personal touches to the well-furnished rooms. It also has a restaurant, two bars and a café. ₹₹₹

CENTRAL MANALI ★JOHNSONS HOTEL CIRCUIT HOUSE RD, 📞01902253764. THREE-STAR COMFORT IN AN OLD COLONIAL BUILDING. SPACIOUS AND NEAT WOODEN-FLOORED ROOMS OVERLOOK THE GARDEN; THE CARPETED DOWNSTAIRS ROOMS ARE CHEAPER, WITH WOOD-BURNING HEATERS FOR WINTER. ₹₹₹₹

Snow View Model Town Rd, 📍hotelsnowviewmanali.com. Large, functional hotel with comfort-able, decent-sized rooms, mainly aimed at business travellers. Facilities include cable TV and 24hr room service. ₹₹

EATING

MAP

Manali's wide range of restaurants reflects the town's melting-pot credentials: Tibetan thukpa joints stand cheek-by-jowl with south Indian coffee houses, Gujarati thali bars and Nepalese-run German pastry shops. Old Manali joints offer traveller-friendly breakfasts of eggs, porridge, pancakes, toast and jam, as well as a variety of cuisines.

OLD MANALI DRIFTERS MANU TEMPLE RD, 📍
INSTAGRAM.COM/DRIFTERSINNCAFEMANALI. TRENDY HOTEL CAFÉ-RESTAURANT WITH LOW TABLES AND CUSHIONS DOWNSTAIRS, PLUS AN OUTDOOR TERRACE. SERVES GRILLED TROUT WITH THE TRIMMINGS,

SOMEWHAT LESS FOR OTHER INDIAN, CHINESE AND WESTERN DISHES. ₹₹₹

Lazy Dog Manu Temple Rd, @instagram.com/lazydogmanali. Popular restaurant overlooking the river, beautifully decorated and fine for hanging out, if you like loud Western music. The menu includes a wide range of Indian, Chinese and Continental dishes such as sizzlers. ₹₹

Moon Dance Manu Temple Rd 09816087272. Popular garden café and meeting place above the river with a varied menu that includes Indian, Israeli and Italian dishes. ₹₹

People Art Café Manu Temple Rd 097367 87568. Split-level restaurant, the lower part having crayons to draw with. Dishes like sirniki (curd fritters) and draniki (potato pancakes) make a change, plus they do fine Western breakfasts (English with chicken sausages). ₹₹

CENTRAL AND NORTHWEST MANALI BELLA VISTA LOG HUT RD, JUST ACROSS THE BRIDGE FROM OLD MANALI 098166 99663. THIS SNAZZY PLACE IS A SELF-BILLED SPANISH CAFÉ, WITH A RANGE OF TAPAS, ALTHOUGH IT HAS AS MANY ITALIAN MAIN COURSES AND WOOD-FIRED PIZZA. ₹₹

★Café Amigos North end of The Mall, @facebook.com/CAFE.AMIGOS. Wooden tables, colourful pottery, chilled-out world music and a fab range of cakes, brownies and apple pie, as well as mains. Superb coffee, too. ₹₹

Johnson's Café Johnson Hotel, Old Manali Rd, @johnsonshotel.com. A great café, with garden seating and an inviting menu including beer, fresh trout and crème caramel. Some items are expensive but they're worth it. ₹₹₹

TREKS AROUND MANALI AND THE KULLU VALLEY
THE KULLU VALLEY'S SPECTACULAR ALPINE
SCENERY MAKES IT PERFECT FOR TREKKING.
TRAILS ARE LONG AND STEEP, BUT MORE THAN REPAY THE EFFORT WITH SUPERB VIEWS, VARIED
FLORA AND THE CHANCE TO VISIT REMOTE HILL

STATIONS. WITHIN STRIKING DISTANCE OF SEVERAL MAJOR TRAILHEADS, MANALI IS THE MOST POPULAR PLACE TO BEGIN AND END TREKS. WHILE PACKAGE DEALS OFFERED BY THE TOWN'S MANY AGENCIES CAN SAVE TIME AND ENERGY, IT IS RELATIVELY EASY TO ORGANIZE YOUR OWN TRIP WITH MAPS AND ADVICE FROM THE TOURIST OFFICE AND THE MOUNTAINEERING INSTITUTE AT THE BOTTOM END OF TOWN. PORTERS AND HORSEMEN CAN BE SOUGHT OUT IN THE SQUARE BEHIND THE MAIN STREET. ALWAYS TAKE A RELIABLE GUIDE, ESPECIALLY ON LESS-FREQUENTED ROUTES, AS YOU CANNOT RELY SOLELY ON MAPS. SOME TREKKERS HAVE REPORTED DIFFICULTIES WHEN DESCENDING FROM THE BARA BANGAL PASS, AS MAPS DON'T DO THE TERRAIN JUSTICE.

The optimum trekking season is right after the monsoons (mid-Sept to late Oct), when skies are clear and pass-crossings easier. From June to August, you run the risk of sudden, potentially fatal snow, or view-obscuring cloud and rain. There are several good trekking agencies in Manali.

MANALI TO BEAS KUND THE RELATIVELY EASY TREK TO BEAS KUND, A GLACIAL LAKE AT THE HEAD OF SOLANG NALA, IS THE REGION'S MOST POPULAR SHORT HIKE. ENCIRCLED BY 5000M-PLUS PEAKS, THE WELL-USED CAMPGROUND BESIDE THE LAKE, ACCESSIBLE IN TWO DAYS FROM MANALI, MAKES A GOOD BASE FOR SIDE-TRIPS UP TO THE SURROUNDING RIDGES AND PASSES.

From Palchan, a village thirty minutes north of Manali by bus, follow the jeep track up the valley to Solang, site of a small ski station, rest house and the Mountaineering Institute's log huts. The next two hours take you through pine forests and grassy meadows to the campground at Dhundi (2743m). A more strenuous walk of five to six hours the next day leads to Beas Kund. The hike up to the Tentu La Pass (4996m) and back from here can be done in a day, as can the descent to Manali via Solang.

MANALI TO LAHAUL, VIA THE HAMPTA PASS THE THREE-DAY TREK FROM THE KULLU VALLEY OVER THE HAMPTA PASS TO LAHAUL, THE OLD CARAVAN ROUTE TO SPITI, IS A CLASSIC. RISING TO 4330M, IT IS HIGH BY KULLU STANDARDS; DO NOT UNDERTAKE IT WITHOUT ALLOWING GOOD TIME TO ACCLIMATIZE. DAY ONE, FROM THE TRAILHEAD AT JAGATSUKH OR HAMPTA (BOTH VILLAGES NEAR MANALI) TO THE CAMPGROUND ABOVE SETHEN, IS AN EASY HIKE (4–5HR) UP THE VERDANT, FORESTED SIDES OF THE VALLEY. DAY TWO (5HR) BRINGS YOU TO CHIKHA, A HIGH GADDI PASTURE BELOW THE PASS; STAY PUT FOR A DAY OR SO IF YOU'RE FEELING THE EFFECTS OF ALTITUDE. THE ASCENT (700M) ON DAY THREE TO THE HAMPTA PASS (4330M) IS GRUELLING, BUT THE VIEWS FROM THE TOP – OF INDRASAN AND DEO TIBBA TO THE SOUTH, AND THE MOONSCAPE OF LAHAUL TO THE NORTH – ARE SUBLIME RECOMPENSE. IT TAKES SIX TO SEVEN HOURS OF RELENTLESS ROCK-HOPPING AND STREAM-CROSSING TO REACH CHHATRU, ON THE FLOOR OF THE CHANDRA VALLEY. FROM HERE, YOU CAN TURN EAST TOWARDS KOKSAR AND THE ROHTANG PASS, OR WEST PAST THE WORLD'S LARGEST GLACIER, BARA SHIGRI, TO BATAL, THE TRAILHEAD FOR THE CHANDRATAL–BARALACHA TREK.

NAGGAR TO MALANA VIA THE CHANDRAKHANI PASS AND ONWARDS THE TREK TO JARI IN THE PARVATI VALLEY FROM NAGGAR, 21KM SOUTH OF MANALI, IS QUINTESSENTIAL KULLU VALLEY TREKKING, WITH SUPERB SCENERY AND FASCINATING VILLAGES. THE ROUND TRIP CAN BE COMPLETED IN THREE DAYS, BUT

YOU MAY BE TEMPTED TO LINGER IN MALANA AND EXPLORE THE SURROUNDING COUNTRYSIDE. A GUIDE IS ESSENTIAL FOR SEVERAL REASONS: THE FIRST STAGE OF THE TREK INVOLVES CROSSING A MAZE OF GRAZING TRAILS; MALANA IS CULTURALLY SENSITIVE AND REQUIRES SOME FAMILIARITY WITH LOCAL CUSTOMS; AND A NUMBER OF PEOPLE HAVE DISAPPEARED IN THE PARVATI VALLEY IN RECENT YEARS UNDER SUSPICIOUS CIRCUMSTANCES. THE DESCENT TO THE PARVATI VALLEY IS TOO STEEP FOR PACK PONIES, BUT PORTERS ARE AVAILABLE IN NAGGAR THROUGH THE GUESTHOUSES.

The trail leads through the village of Rumsu and then winds through wonderful old-growth forests to a pasture just above the tree line, which makes ideal camping ground. From here, a climb of 4km takes you to the Chandrakhani Pass (3660m), with fine views west over the top of the Kullu Valley to the peaks surrounding Solang nala and north to the Ghalpo mountains of Lahaul. Some prefer to reach the base of the pass on the first day and then camp below the final ascent.

The inhabitants of MALANA, a steep 7km descent from the pass, are known for their frostiness and staunch traditions. Plans by regional developers to extend a paved road here are vehemently opposed by the insular locals. Although notions of caste pollution are not as strictly adhered to as they once were, you should observe a few basic “rules” in Malana: approach the village quietly and respectfully; stick to paths at all times; keep away from the temple; and above all, don’t touch anybody or anything, especially children or houses. If you do commit a cultural blunder, you’ll be expected to make amends: usually in the form of a ₹1500 payment for a sacrificial offering of a young sheep or goat to the village deity, Jamlu, one of the most powerful Kullu Valley gods. His temple, open to high-caste Hindus only, is decorated with lively folk carvings, among them images of soldiers – the villagers claim to be the area’s sole remaining descendants of Alexander the Great’s army. Popular places to stay include the Renuka Guesthouse, which has hot water, and the Himalaya Guesthouse, run by the former village headman. The owner of Santu Ram’s is an authority on local trails. All the guesthouses offer simple meals and rooms cost ₹500 or less. The official camping ground lies 100m beyond the village spring.

The final stage of the trek takes you down the sheer limestone sides of Malana nala to the floor of the Parvati Valley – a precipitous 12km drop that is partially covered by a switchback road. From the hamlet of Rashol, you have a choice of three onward routes: either head east up the right bank of the river to Manikaran; follow the trail southwest to the sacred Bijli Mahadev Mandir; or climb the remaining 3km up to the road at Jari, from where regular buses leave for Bhuntur, Kullu and Manali.

Mayur Mission Rd, just off The Mall ☎01902 252316. Exciting and extensive Indian menu featuring dishes from all over the Subcontinent– try the excellent jalfrezi. Candles, serviettes and classical Indian music create a pleasant vibe. ₹₹₹

Vaishno Pangi Dhaba School Rd, just off The Mall ☎94186 60693. One of the best cheap joints, serving a range of north and south Indian snacks such as masala dosa and Punjabi thali. ₹

SHOPPING

MAP

Bhuttico On The Mall opposite the tourist office, ☎bhutticoshawls.com. The most famous of the weaver co-operatives offers a huge range of shawls and other woven items.

Bodh Shawl Weavers Just off The Mall south of the bus stand, ☎bodhshawlweavers.com. Factory outlet offering high-quality woven and embroidered shawls.

Vashisht

Famous for its sweeping valley views and sulphurous hot-water springs, the ever-expanding village of VASHISHT, 3km northeast of Manali, is an amorphous jumble of traditional timber houses and modern concrete cubes, divided by paved courtyards and narrow muddy lanes. It is the epicentre of the local budget travellers' scene, with a good choice of guesthouses and cafés, with more of an alternative feel than Old Manali has these days. The tranquil and traditional atmosphere is only interrupted by the occasional rave that takes place in the woods, or if the weather is poor, in one or two obliging hotels.

The only place for a hot soak is in the bathing pools of Vashisht's ancient temple (free), which is far more atmospheric anyway. Divided into separate sections for men and women, they attract a decidedly mixed crowd of Hindu pilgrims, Western hippies, semi-naked sadhus and groups of local kids.

Vashisht boasts two old stone temples, opposite each other above the main square and dedicated to the local patron saint Vashishta, guru of Raghunathji. The smaller of the two opens onto a partially covered courtyard and is adorned with elaborate woodcarvings. Those lining the interior of the shrine, blackened by years of oil-lamp and dhoop smoke, are worth checking out.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE THERE ARE NO BUSES VASHISHT TO VASHISHT, SO MOST PEOPLE ARRIVE ON FOOT OR BY AUTO-RICKSHAW FROM MANALI. CHEAPER SHARED ELECTRIC TAXIS ARE NOW PLYING THIS ROUTE, TOO.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Vashisht is packed with budget guesthouses, many of them old wooden buildings with broad verandas and uninterrupted vistas up the valley. A few larger hotels offer good-value, mid-range rooms. The only time you'll not be spoilt for choice is during high season (May–June).

Bodh Guest House In the lane just beyond the temple,  facebook.com/BodhGuestHouse. Sociable, bright blue and white guesthouse with smallish but cosy rooms, all with common bathrooms. Extra charge for wi-fi access. ₹

★Dharma A 5min walk up behind the temples  01902 252354. Most rooms at this large hotel complex have fantastic views, as does the marble terrace with a swing and loungers. There's even a tiny swimming pool, filled by the hot springs. ₹

Kalptaru Overlooking the temple tanks  01902 253031. You can't get any closer to the baths – with great-value rooms, all attached, with hot showers. Small garden and veranda from which to watch the bathers. ₹

Valley of Gods On the main road into the village,  hotelvalleyofgods.com. One of the smartest options, whose west-facing rooms all have attached bathrooms and superb views from their spacious balconies. Plenty of attractive wood panelling and upmarket furnishings. ₹

₹₹

EATING AND DRINKING

MAP

★Big Fish On the main road, opposite the temples, bigfishrestaurant.wordpress.com. Upstairs restaurant serving trout and more adventurous stuff such as Thai. Choose between the airy terrace and cushioned chill-out zone. ₹₹

Freedom Café On the main road into village 089883 15364. Floor seating and a grassy deck with good views. ₹₹

Rose Garden On the main road into village 01902 253417. A genuine Italian chef cooks up proper recipes from the old country and other parts of Europe, such as pasta and chicken escalope. Ingredients are local and organic where possible. ₹₹₹

World Peace Café On the main road, above the Surabhi hotel, 9805650518. Standard Indian/Western menu and prices but also Turkish coffee, movies, board games and frequent live gigs. Has a roof terrace too. ₹₹

Lahaul and Spiti Few places on earth can mark so dramatic a change in landscape as the Rohtang Pass. To one side, the lush green head of the Kullu Valley; to the other, an awesome vista of bare, chocolate-coloured mountains, hanging glaciers and snowfields that shine in the dazzlingly crisp light, with just flecks of flora deep in the valley to soften the stark image. Until 2019, heavy snow between late October and late March has always closed the pass and sealed off the district of Lahaul and Spiti each winter, not to mention year-round maintenance and the occasional landslide following heavy rain. However, nearly 2000m beneath the pass the longest tunnel in India – Atal Tunnel – connects Himachal’s largest district.

Lahaul

Lahaul, sometimes referred to as the Chandra-Bhaga Valley, is the region that divides the Great Himalayas and Pir Panjal ranges. Its principal river, the Chandra, rises deep in the barren wastes below the Baralacha Pass, and flows south, then west towards its confluence with the River Bhaga near Tandi. Here, the two rivers become the Chenab, and crash north out of Himachal to Kishtwar in Kashmir. Being closer to what rains the monsoon brings across the Rohtang Pass from the south, Lahaul’s climate is less arid than in Ladakh and Zaskar to the north and as a consequence, the key highway passes of Rohtang La and Baralacha La are more prone to early snow than the higher examples further north. Despite such difficulties, Lahaulis, a mixture of Buddhists and Hindus, enjoy one of the highest per capita incomes in the Subcontinent. Using glacial water channelled through ancient irrigation ducts, Lahauli farmers manage to coax a bumper crop of seed potatoes from their painstakingly fashioned terraces. The region is also the sole supplier of hops to India’s breweries, and harvests prodigious quantities of wild herbs, used to make perfume and medicine. Much of the profit generated by these cash crops is spent on lavish jewellery, especially seed-pearl necklaces and coral- and turquoise-inlaid silver plaques, worn by the women over ankle-length burgundy or fawn woollen dresses. Lahaul’s traditional costume and Buddhism are a legacy of the Tibetan influence that has permeated the region from the east.

Keylong

Lahaul's largest settlement and the district headquarters, KEYLONG, 114km north of Manali, is the last significant settlement on the long road journey to Ladakh. Although of little interest itself, the town lies amid superb scenery, within a day's climb of three Buddhist gompas. A couple of stores in the busy market sell trekking supplies – useful if you are heading off to Zaskar.

Lahauli Buddhists consider it auspicious to make a clockwise circumambulation – known as the Rangcha Parikarma – of the sacred Rangcha Mountain (4565m), which overlooks the confluence of the Bhaga and Chandra rivers. A well-worn trail that makes a long and arduous day-hike from Keylong, the route is highly scenic, and takes in the large Khardung Gompa along the way. A rough motorable road leads to Khardung (10km), but closer to Keylong and on the same side of the valley are two quiet and picturesque gompas high up the mountainside, Shasher Gompa (3km) and Gungshal Gompa (5km).

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS THERE ARE KEYLONG SIX BUSES DAILY TO MANALI, THE FIRST ONE LEAVING AT 5.30AM AND THE LAST AT 1.30PM. NOTE THAT ONWARD TRANSPORT TO LEH CAN BE DIFFICULT TO ARRANGE IN HIGH SEASON (JULY & AUG), AS MOST BUSES ARE FULL BY THE TIME THEY GET TO MANALI, THOUGH THE 5.30AM ONE DOES START HERE.

Services There are two ATMs, although it's wiser to have a stock of cash in case they are not working.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING CHANDERBHAGA ON THE MAIN ROAD, 1KM TOWARDS DARCHA ☎01900 222393, 📧 KEYLONG@HPTDC.IN. COMFORTABLE BUT BLAND AND TYPICALLY OVERPRICED HPTDC HOTEL. HALF-BOARD INCLUDED WITH THE MORE EXPENSIVE ROOMS. HPTDC

BUSES OVERNIGHT AT THE TENT CAMP. DORMS ₹, DOUBLES ₹₹₹

Gyespa The Mall, gyespa-hotel-and-restaurant.business.site. Neat three-storey hotel, which has compact but comfortable attached rooms with hot showers and a good multicuisine restaurant. Smarter new sister hotel near the bus stand. ₹

Nordaling Guest House On a path between the main road and the bus stand, 09418045394. Welcoming lodge that has bright, reasonably spacious rooms with bathrooms and cable TV, plus a decent restaurant. ₹

Spiti

From its headwaters below the Kunzum La pass, the River Spiti runs 130km southeast to within the flick of a yak's tail of the border with Tibet, where it meets the Sutlej. The valley itself, surrounded by huge peaks with an average altitude of 4500m, is one of the highest and most remote inhabited places on earth – a desolate, barren tract scattered with tiny mud-and-timber hamlets and lonely lamaseries. Until 1992, Spiti in its entirety lay off-limits to foreign tourists. Now, only its far southeastern corner falls within the Inner Line – which leaves upper Spiti, including the district headquarters Kaza, freely accessible from the northwest via Lahaul. If you are really keen to complete the loop through the restricted area to or from Kinnaur, you will need a permit. The last main stop before reaching the restricted zone is the famed Tabo gompa, which harbours some of the oldest and most exquisite Buddhist art in the world.

Northwestern Spiti From Grampoo, where the road along the Spiti Valley forks east from the Manali–Leh Highway, you have to bump along a wide but rough track for the first 80km. However, the gorge, waterfalls, snowy peaks and not least, the white-knuckle ascent over Kunzum La pass, make for a mind-boggling entry into the region. Near the pass it's possible with your own vehicle to detour 12km north to the small but picturesque Chandertal Lake (4300m). Soon after crossing Kunzum La, the track reaches the sprawling village of Losar (4113m), where you have to sign in at a police checkpoint. There are a couple of basic guesthouses and a few dhabas but little reason to stay here. From this point the track becomes a patchily surfaced road for the last section to Kaza.

Kaza and around KAZA, 76km southeast of the Kunzum Pass, and 201km from Manali, is the subdivisional headquarters of Spiti. Overlooking the north bank of the River Spiti, it's the region's least picturesque town, but as the main market and roadhead it's a good base from which to head off on two- or three-day treks to monasteries and remote villages such as Kibber. Rates for porters and pony-men are comparable to those in Kullu. It is also possible to trek to Dhankar (32km) and on to Tabo (43km).

The town is divided into two parts by an almost dry creek that trickles into the River Spiti. On the west side, New Kaza is rather lacking in character but does boast a colourful modern monastery, just above the main road, which then loops round the head of the gorge towards the bus stand on the far side of Old Kaza. The old village is also accessible from New Kaza by a low footbridge, from the opposite side of which the bazaar winds down through a maze of alleys to the bus stand, passing most of the town's facilities on the way.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS THEREKAZA AND AROUND IS ONE DAILY DEPARTURE FOR MANALI (5AM; 12-13HR) AND TWO FOR TABO (2HR) AT 7.30AM AND 2PM, THE FIRST OF WHICH GOES ALL THE WAY TO SHIMLA (20-22HR) VIA REKONG PEO (11-12HR). THE ONLY BUS TO MUDH (2HR 30MIN) IN THE PIN VALLEY LEAVES DAILY AT 3PM, RETURNING THE NEXT MORNING. LIKEWISE, THERE IS A 4.15PM DEPARTURE TO KIBBER THAT RETURNS NEXT DAY.

By taxi Jeeps are plentiful around the bus stand and cost roughly ₹2500 return for the Pin Valley or Tabo and ₹1350 for Kibber via Ki.

ACCOMMODATION AMAZINGLY, KAZA HAS ABOUT FIFTY MOSTLY SIMPLE PLACES TO STAY, SPREAD ROUGHLY EQUALLY BETWEEN NEW AND OLD KAZA, SO BARGAINING DOWN THE RATHER INFLATED PRICES CAN PRODUCE GOOD RESULTS.

The Parasol Retreat 200m below the monastery, New Kaza 📞 09418845817. Modern building whose attractive rooms have soft furnishings and most have sweeping views. The attached agency runs camping tours and activities. ₹₹

★Sakya Abode Main road near the creek, New Kaza, 🌐 sakyaabode.com. This attractive place, built in traditional monastic style around a grassy lawn, offers smartish rooms and a cheap dorm. It organizes meditation retreats and adventure activities. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹

Tashi Delek Off Main Bazaar, near the bus stand 📞94596 66088. Conveniently placed for early morning departures, this ochre-coloured lodge has basic attached rooms. Those at the back have the best views. No wi-fi. ₹

★Taste of Spiti Delek Opposite Old Circuit House, Main Bazaar, Old Kaza, 🌐 spitiecosphere.com. Nicely located, eco-friendly building that runs on wind and solar energy. There's a range of simple attached rooms, whose water is solar-heated. The restaurant serves delicious fusion food, mixing local and world recipes and it's all run by community social enterprise Ecosphere. ₹

EATING AND DRINKING CHANDERTAL CAFE MAIN BAZAAR, OLD KAZA 📞94189 72250. SIMPLE TIBETAN CANTEEN SERVING GREAT THENTUK, THUKPA AND MOMOS. CHECK OUT THE AMUSING AND INCONGRUOUS RASTA MURAL. ₹

Mahaboudha Main Bazaar, Old Kaza 📞94185 37545. Light upstairs restaurant with fine views from its large windows. It offers reasonable Indian and Chinese, including tasty pork dishes. ₹

★Sòl Café Main Bazaar, Old Kaza, 🌐 spitiecosphere.com. Artistically decorated and run solely on solar power by Ecosphere upstairs, you can get a few savoury snacks such as chaat and tsampa nachos with cheese dip, plus great cakes, handmade chocolates, juices, teas and coffee. ₹₹

DIRECTORY PERMITS THOSE CONTINUING ON TO KINNAUR CAN GET A FREE INNER LINE PERMIT FROM THE ADDITIONAL DEPUTY COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE IN NEW

KAZA (MON–SAT 9AM–1PM & 2–5PM; CLOSED 2ND SAT, ☎ HPLAHAULSPITI.NIC.IN).

Travel agents Spiti Holiday Adventure (☎spitiholidayadventure.com) is the most reliable travel agent and also offers currency exchange, while Ecosphere (☎spitiecosphere.com) has free water refills, a network of homestays, trekking and wildlife info, plus opportunities for volunteering and learning local skills.

Ki Gompa

Set against a backdrop of snow-flecked mountains and clinging to the sides of a windswept conical hillock, Ki Gompa is a picture-book example of Tibetan architecture and one of Himachal's most exotic spectacles. Founded in the sixteenth century, Ki is the largest monastery in the Spiti Valley, supporting a thriving community of lamas whose Rinpoche, Lo Chien Tulkhu from Shalkar near Sumdo, is said to be the current incarnation of the “Great Translator” Rinchen Zangpo. His glass-fronted quarters crown the top of the complex, reached via stone steps that wind between the lamas' houses below. A labyrinth of dark passages and wooden staircases connects the prayer and assembly halls, home to collections of old thangkas, weapons, musical instruments, manuscripts and devotional images (no photography). Many of the rooms have seen extensive renovation since an earthquake struck in 1975; a prayer hall, dedicated by the Dalai Lama, was also added in 2000. During the new moon towards late June or early July, Ki hosts a large festival celebrating the “burning of the demon” when chaam dances are followed by a procession to the ritual ground below the monastery where a large butter sculpture is set on fire.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS THE DAILY BUS KI GOMPA FROM KAZA ARRIVES AROUND 5PM AND CONTINUES TO KIBBER. THE RETURN TO KAZA PASSES THROUGH ABOUT 8AM.

ACCOMODATION KI GOMPA GUESTHOUSE IN THE MONASTERY ☎94186 26613. THE MONKS RENT OUT A FEW EXTREMELY BASIC, CELL-LIKE ROOMS IN THE MONASTERY.

SIMPLE MEALS ARE INCLUDED BUT THERE IS ONLY COLD WATER. NO WI-FI. ₹

Tashi Khangsar Guesthouse After the first bend in the road towards Kibber ☎01906 226277. Small, friendly and clean guesthouse with very simple rooms, most with shared bathrooms. No wi-fi. ₹

Kibber

KIBBER (4205m) is among the highest settlements in the world with a driveable road and electricity. Jeep tracks, satellite dishes and the odd tin-roofed government building aside, its smattering of a hundred or so old Spitian houses is truly picturesque. Surrounded in summer by lush green barley fields, Kibber also stands at the head of a trail that picks its way north across the mountains, via the high glaciated Parang La pass (5600m) to Ladakh. Before the construction of roads into the Spiti Valley, locals used to lead ponies and yaks this way to trade in Leh bazaar. Some Manali-based trekking companies offer a seventeen-day trek from here to the lake of Tso Moriri in Ladakh and on to Leh.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS TAKING THE KIBBER 4.15PM BUS FROM KAZA TO KIBBER (1HR) MEANS YOU HAVE TO SPEND THE NIGHT.

Other options Alternatively you could rent a jeep, hitch with a tour group, or forego transport altogether and walk the 16km of trails, although the outbound trip is nearly all uphill.

ACCOMMODATION NORLING OPPOSITE THE SCHOOL, ☎NORLINGGUESTHOUSE.COM. TYPICAL OF THE HANDFUL OF CONGENIAL LODGES BUT SLIGHTLY NICER THAN THE ADJOINING RAINBOW AND WITH A BETTER RESTAURANT. MOST ROOMS HAVE COMMON HOT BUCKET BATHROOMS. NO WI-FI. ₹

Serkong In the centre of the village ☎01906 200156. Very quaint traditional rooms, all with common bathrooms, and a nice roof terrace for relaxing over a snack or tea in the sun. ₹

Dhankar

Nearly a third of the way between Kaza and Tabo, near the meeting of the Pin and Spiti rivers, a rough road veers off to the east for 8.5km to Dhankar. The Dhankar Gompa (daily 8am–6pm; charge) on the uppermost peak behind the village of DHANKAR (3890m) is famed for its brilliant murals, probably painted in the seventeenth century, depicting the life of the Buddha. Although some of the work has been vandalized, the scenes depicting the Buddha's birth, rebirth and life in Kapilavastu and his rejection of worldly ways are spectacular. The gompa, much of which is in a sad state of repair and on the World Monument Fund's list of the hundred most endangered sites, also affords superb views down to the confluence of the main River Spiti and the Pin tributary.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TAXI/ON FOOT DHANKAR DHANKAR IS NOT ON A BUS ROUTE SO YOU'LL HAVE TO TAKE A TAXI FROM SICHALING ON THE ROAD TO TABO OR WALK – THE SHORTCUT STARTS FROM THE STORM SHELTER
BY THE MAIN ROAD UNDER THE GOMPA 3KM BEFORE SICHALING.

ACCOMMODATION DHANKAR GOMPA GUESTHOUSE IN THE MONASTERY. THE MUCH IMPROVED MONASTERY
GUESTHOUSE HAS SIMPLE ROOMS, THE NON-ATTACHED WITH HOT WATER, PLUS A DORM AND TERRACE
RESTAURANT. NO WI-FI. ₹

Tenzin Homestay Above the monastery near the Old Fort 094592 70036. Welcoming family homestay with small, cosy rooms, all with shared baths, and splendid views across the valley. Food included. No wi-fi. ₹

Pin Valley Thirty minutes east of Kaza a bridge at Attargu crosses the Spiti and begins a 156km run up the PIN VALLEY to Gulling, above which stands the important Nyingma gompa of Gungri, believed to date back to the eighth or ninth century. Across the river lies the slightly larger settlement of Sagnam. At the head of the valley, a rough road veers slightly southwest to Mikim and the Pin Valley National Park (unrestricted free access), which starts beyond the hamlet of Phukchong and is home to the ibex, red fox and snow leopard. Beyond

Sagnam the road deteriorates rapidly, but vehicles can push ahead another 14km to Mudh, an enchanting hamlet with a tiny nunnery that peers over a breathtaking valley flanked at its end by the pyramid-shaped Tordang Mountain.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS THERE IS ONE PIN VALLEY BUS FROM KAZA AT 3PM, WHICH RETURNS THE FOLLOWING MORNING.

ACCOMMODATION THE HERMITAGE ON THE EDGE OF PHUKCHONG ☎94184 39294. BY FAR THE MOST COMFORTABLE PLACE TO STAY IN THE VALLEY, WITH NEAT ATTACHED ROOMS. IT IS PRIMARILY A MEDITATION RETREAT. HALF-BOARD ₹₹₹

Himalayan Pin Parvati Guest House Mudh village centre ☎94185 71167. Probably the best of the several simple guesthouses, with plain but clean rooms, all with common baths, and good healthy food. No wi-fi. ₹

Shambala Guesthouse Sagnam village centre ☎01906 224221. The best of the small bunch at this delightful riverside location, with small but clean rooms and well-kept shared facilities. ₹

Tara Guest House On the edge of Mudh ☎89880 62293, @ facebook.com/Taraguesthousespiti. Providing simple meals and a warm family welcome, the Tara is another good option. All rooms are basic, although the more expensive are en suite. Meals included. ₹

TREKKING IN LAHAUL AND SPITI ALTHOUGH PARTS OF THE OLD TRADE ROUTES TO LADAKH AND TIBET ARE NOW SEALED WITH TARMAC, MOST OF THIS REMOTE AND SPECTACULAR REGION IS STILL ONLY ACCESSIBLE ON FOOT. ITS TRAILS, THOUGH WELL FREQUENTED IN HIGH SEASON, ARE LONG, HARD AND HIGH, SO YOU MUST BE SELF-SUFFICIENT AND HAVE A GUIDE. PACK-HORSES AND PROVISIONS ARE MOST READILY AVAILABLE IN

MANALI, OR IN KEYLONG AND DARCHA (LAHAUL) AND KAZA (SPITI) IF YOU CAN AFFORD TO WAIT A FEW DAYS. A GOOD ROPE FOR RIVER CROSSINGS WILL BE USEFUL, PARTICULARLY IN SUMMER WHEN THE WATER LEVELS ARE AT THEIR HIGHEST.

The best time to trek is July to early September, when brilliant blue skies make this an ideal alternative to the monsoon-prone Kullu Valley. By late September, the risk of snowfall deters many visitors from the longer expeditions. Whenever you leave, allow enough time to acclimatize to the altitude before attempting any big passes: AMS (Acute Mountain Sickness) claims victims here every season.

LAHAUL: DARCHA TO PADUM VIA THE SHINGO LA PASS THE MOST POPULAR TREK IS FROM DARCHA OVER THE SHINGO LA PASS (5000M) TO PADUM IN ZANSKAR. THE TRAIL PASSES THROUGH KARGYAK, THE HIGHEST VILLAGE IN ZANSKAR, AND FOLLOWS THE KARGYAK VALLEY DOWN TO ITS CONFLUENCE WITH THE TSARAP AT PURNE. THERE IS A SMALL CAFÉ, SHOP, AND CAMPING GROUND HERE AND IT'S A GOOD BASE FOR THE SIDE TRIP TO PHUKTAL GOMPA, ONE OF THE MOST SPECTACULAR SIGHTS IN ZANSKAR. DURING THE HIGH SEASON (JULY & AUG), A STRING OF CHAI STALL/TENT CAMPS SPRING UP AT INTERVALS ALONG THE WELL-WORN TRAIL THROUGH THE TSARAP VALLEY TO PADUM, MEANING THAT YOU CAN MANAGE WITHOUT A GUIDE OR PONIES FROM HERE ON. DO NOT BANK ON FINDING FOOD AND SHELTER HERE AT THE START OR END OF THE SEASON.

LAHAUL: BATAL TO BARALACHA PASS LAHAUL'S OTHER POPULAR TREKKING ROUTE FOLLOWS THE RIVER CHANDRA NORTH TO ITS SOURCE AT THE BARALACHA PASS (4920M) AND MAKES A GOOD EXTENSION TO THE HAMPTA PASS HIKE. ALTERNATIVELY, CATCH A KAZA BUS FROM MANALI TO THE TRAILHEAD AT BATAL (3960M) BELOW THE KUNZUM LA (4551M). THE BEAUTIFUL MILKY-

BLUE CHANDRATAL (“MOON”) LAKE IS A RELENTLESS ASCENT OF 7HR FROM BATAL, WITH STUNNING VIEWS SOUTH ACROSS THE WORLD’S LONGEST GLACIER, BARA SHIGRI, AND THE FORBIDDING NORTH FACE OF THE WHITE SAIL MASSIF (6451M). THE NEXT CAMPGROUND IS AT TOKPING YONGMA TORRENT. TOKPO YONGMA, SEVERAL HOURS FURTHER UP, IS THE SECOND OF THE TWO BIG SIDE-TORRENTS AND IS MUCH EASIER TO FORD EARLY IN THE MORNING; FROM HERE IT IS A STEADY CLIMB UP TO THE BARALACHA PASS. YOU CAN THEN CONTINUE TO ZANSKAR VIA THE PHIRTSE LA, OR PICK UP TRANSPORT (PREARRANGED IF POSSIBLE) DOWN TO KEYLONG AND MANALI OR ONWARDS TO LEH.

SPITI: KAZA VIA THE PIN VALLEY TO MANIKARAN OR WANGTU ONE OF THE BEST TREKS IN SPITI IS UP THE PIN VALLEY. THE TRACK ALONGSIDE THE RIVER PIN, WHICH PASSES A STRING OF TRADITIONAL SETTLEMENTS AND MONASTERIES, IS NOW MOTORABLE AS FAR AS MUDH, AROUND 40KM SOUTH OF KAZA. OVER THE NEXT FEW YEARS IT IS EXPECTED TO BE PAVED RIGHT THROUGH TO WANGTU, BUT FOR NOW IT FORKS BEYOND MUDH INTO TWO WALKING PATHS: THE NORTHERN PATH OVER THE PIN-PARVATI PASS (5400M) TO MANIKARAN IN THE PARVATI VALLEY, AND THE SOUTHERN ONE TO WANGTU IN KINNAUR VIA THE BHABA PASS (4865M). THE LAST SECTION TO WANGTU ITSELF HAS ALSO FALLEN TO THE ROADBUILDERS, SO YOU MIGHT DECIDE JUST TO HITCH A RIDE.

Tabo

One of the main reasons to brave the rough roads of Spiti is to get to Tabo Gompa, 43km east of Kaza. The mud-and-timber boxes of the old gompa that nestle on the steep north bank of the Spiti may look drab, but the multihued murals and stucco sculpture they contain are some of the world’s richest and most important ancient Buddhist art treasures – the link between the cave paintings of Ajanta and the more exuberant Tantric art that flourished in Tibet five centuries or so later. According to an inscription in its main assembly hall, the monastery was established in 996 AD, when Rinchen Zangpo was disseminating dharma across the northwestern Himalayas. In addition to the 158 Sanskrit Buddhist texts he personally transcribed, the “Great Translator” brought with him a retinue of Kashmiri artisans to decorate the temples. The only surviving examples of their exceptional work are here at Tabo, at Alchi in Ladakh, and Toling and Tsaparang gompas in Chinese-occupied western Tibet.

The new gompa, inaugurated by the Dalai Lama in 1983, houses nearly fifty lamas and a handful of chomos (nuns), some of whom receive training in traditional painting techniques under a geshe, or teacher from eastern Tibet. Visitors are welcome to attend daily 6.30am puja. It’s also worth exploring the caves across the main road, one of which houses more paintings, but you need to be let in by the gompa caretaker.

The Chogskhar Daily 8am–5pm; unrestricted access to grounds • Donation Enclosed within a mud-brick wall, Tabo’s Chogskhar, or “sacred enclave”, contains eight temples and 24 chortens (stupas). The largest and oldest structure in the group, the Sug La-khang, which includes the Z’al (House of Treasures), stands opposite the main entrance. Erected at the end of the tenth century, the “Hall of the Enlightened Gods” was conceived in the form of a three-dimensional mandala, whose structure and elaborately decorated interior functions as a mystical model of the universe complete with deities. There are three distinct bands of detail – the lower-level paintings depict episodes in the life of the Buddha and his previous incarnations; above are stucco gods and goddesses; and the top of the hall is covered with meditating Buddhas and bodhisattvas. Bring a torch to see the full detail of the murals.

The other temples date from the fifteenth and eighteenth centuries. Their contents illustrate the development of Buddhist iconography from its early Indian origins to the Chinese-influenced opulence of medieval Tibetan Tantricism that still, in a more lurid form, predominates in modern gompas.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS TWO BUSES PER DAY TABO TRAVEL TO KAZA, THE 3AM DEPARTURE GOING ALL THE WAY TO MANALI. IN THE OPPOSITE DIRECTION, A BUS PASSES THROUGH AT AROUND 9.30AM ON ITS WAY FROM KAZA TO REKONG PEO IN KINNAUR AND ON TO SHIMLA.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING CAFÉ KUNZOM TOP IN THE VILLAGE CENTRE 094592 70055. CHOOSE BETWEEN THE FLOWERY COURTYARD AND CUSHIONED INTERIOR TO ENJOY TASTY VEGETARIAN FOOD, INCLUDING VARIOUS TYPES OF TIBETAN TSAMPA, CURRIES AND WESTERN DISHES SUCH AS ROSTIS. ₹

Maitreya Regency In the village centre, @maitreyaregencytabo.in. Friendly family-run hotel with twelve large, bright and comfortable rooms spread over two floors. The convivial restaurant (which has a section with traditional Spitian low tables) does great momos and other food. ₹₹

Millennium Monastic Guest House Outside the main monastery gates 01906 223333. The official monastery guesthouse is run by monks and has simple rooms, some attached, and a dorm. Also has a simple restaurant. No-wi-fi. ₹

★Sidharth On the road to the bus stand 094185 81203. Bright new two-storey hotel with decent-sized rooms, all beautifully decorated and comfortably furnished. Small restaurant downstairs. ₹₹

Tashi Khangsar Hotel Between the monastery and the river 09418817761. Reasonably spacious and excellent-value rooms and a lovely large garden, with a parachute canopy for shade. Camping might be possible if you ask. ₹

The Manali–Leh Highway Since it opened to foreign tourists in 1989, the famous Manali–Leh Highway has replaced the old Srinagar–Kargil route as the most popular approach to Ladakh. In summer, a stream of vehicles set off from the Kullu Valley to travel along the second-highest road in the world, which reaches a dizzying altitude of 5328m at Tanglang La. Its surface varies wildly from fairly smooth asphalt through potholes of differing depths to dirt tracks sliced by glacial streams, traversing a starkly beautiful lunar wilderness.

Depending on road conditions and type of vehicle, the 485km journey can take anything from seventeen to thirty hours' actual driving. Bus drivers invariably stop for a short and chilly night in one of the spartan tent camps along the route. These, however, are few and far between after September 15, when the highway officially closes; in practice, all this means is that the Indian government won't airlift you out if you get trapped in snow. Yet some companies run regardless of this until the passes become blocked by snowfall in late October. Note also that if it's a heavy monsoon the unpaved parts of the road can get extremely muddy in July and August especially and that landslides can cut off sections of road and cause severe delays. Details on transport between Manali and Leh are covered in the respective town accounts – all-year-round (and much faster) travel is possible since the Rohtang Tunnel opened.

Manali to Keylong You can reach Keylong from Manali via the Atal Tunnel, which takes you over the Rohtang pass and has shortened the distance between the two places by 45km. The travel time is about two hours.

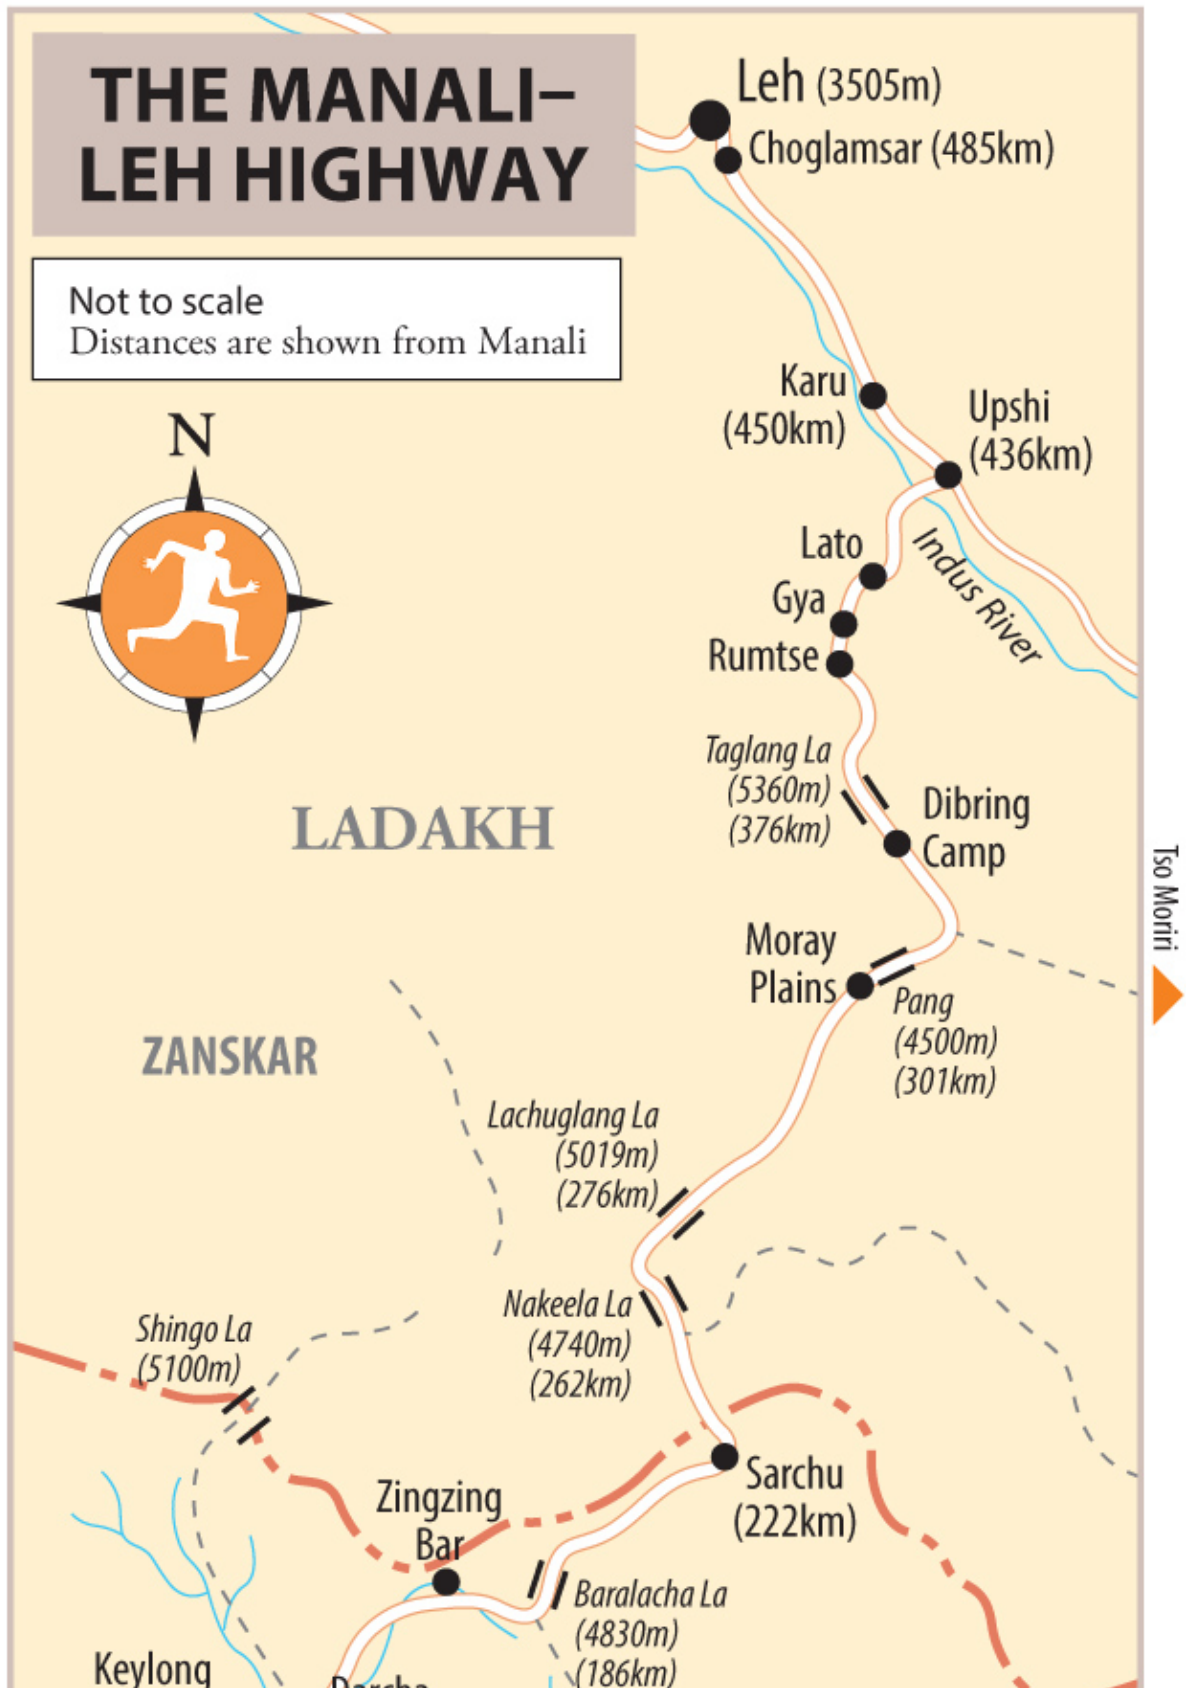

THE MANALI-LEH HIGHWAY

Not to scale
Distances are shown from Manali

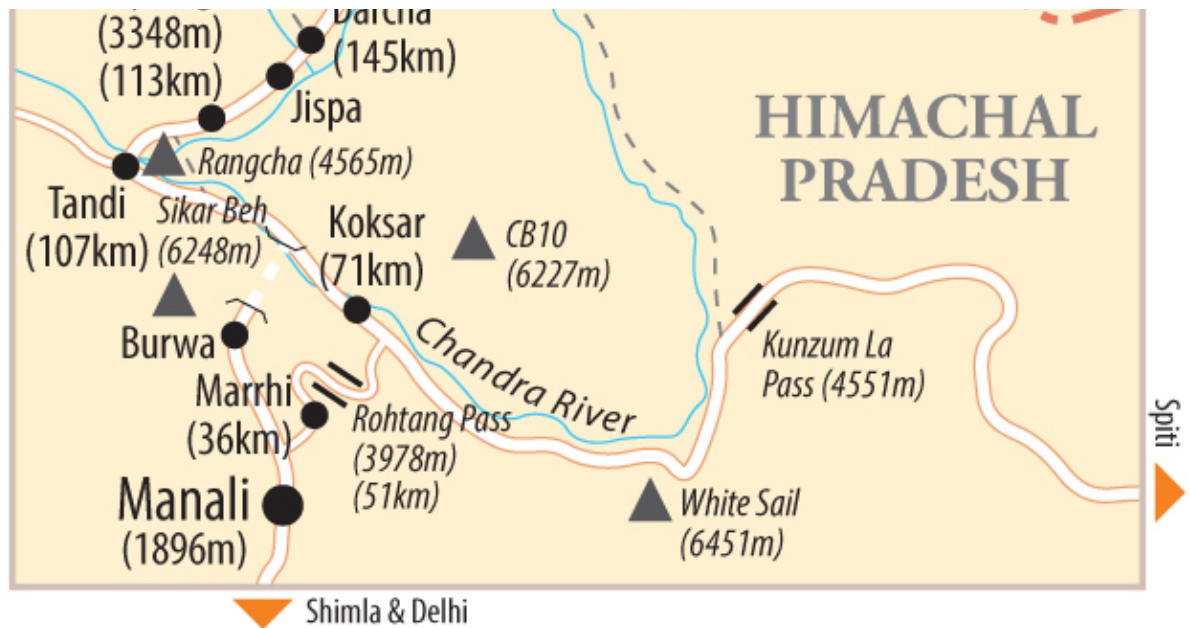

LADAKH

ZANSKAR

Tso Moriri

Though not all that high by Himalayan standards, the Rohtang pass itself is one of the most treacherous in the region and every year locals and tourists alike are caught unawares by sudden weather changes – hence Rohtang’s name, which literally means “piles of dead bodies”.

Keylong to Sarchu Beyond Keylong, the Bhaga Valley broadens, but its bare sides support very few villages. At DARCHA, a lonely cluster of dry-stone huts and dingy tent camps, plus another checkpoint, the landscape is still fairly green. All buses stop here for passengers to grab a hot bowl of Tibetan thukpa from a wayside dhaba. There’s little else to do in Darcha, though the Shingo La trailhead – the main trekking route north to Zaskar – is on the outskirts. If you are not on one of the through Manali–Leh buses, you’re better off stopping at JISPA, 7km south, a pleasant little village with ample camping along the river as well as the route’s one proper hotel.

From Darcha, the surfaced road climbs steadily northeast to the Baralacha La pass (4950m). On the other side, some buses stop for the night at SARCHU, where the state-run tent camp is preferable to several more expensive camps dotted along the road. Note that Sarchu Serai is 2500m higher than Manali, and travellers coming straight from Manali might suffer from the higher altitude here.

CYCLING THE MANALI-LEH HIGHWAY TOURING CYCLISTS REVERE THE MANALI-LEH HIGHWAY AS ONE OF THE MOST CHALLENGING ROAD RIDES IN THE WORLD AND EACH SUMMER UP TO FIVE HUNDRED INTREPID TWO-WHEELERS SET OFF TO ATTEMPT THE NEARLY 500KM ROUTE, WHICH REQUIRES AT LEAST A WEEK TO COMPLETE, PLUS MORE TIME FOR ACCLIMATIZATION. WHILE THE GRADIENTS ARE RARELY UNRIDEABLE, THE TWO-DAY ASCENTS, ROUGH TRACKS OVER THE PASSES AND, MOST CRUCIALLY, THE ALTITUDE DEMAND RESPECT AND SOME PREPARATION.

Hauling a fully laden bike up 50km climbs to well over 5000m may sound daunting, but the exhilaration can be rewarding – especially if you're set up to camp rather than relying on the noisy, dirty parachute camps. You'll need wind- and waterproof clothing, a warm fleece, sunglasses and headwear, plus a good supply of high-energy snacks like the blocks of peanut brittle found in the bazaars. A water filter increases your autonomy too as you'll drink at least three litres a day. Check your bike has a suitably low gearing for crawling up the passes (most MTBs will), and that you have near-new brake pads for the long descents that follow, as well as a secure baggage system. As for clothing, choose quick-drying items that will wick away sweat before it brings on exposure on a chilly pass.

Most riders set off from Manali (1900m) and take eight to ten days to get to Leh (3500m). However, starting in Leh gives you a chance to acclimatize before you set off, and involves less climbing (but no less drama). Whichever direction you take, don't fret too much about you or your bike packing up halfway, as you'll always be able to hitch a lift. If riding alone is not for you, choose between numerous mountain-bike tour operators in Manali. For more information, see himalayabybike.com.

Sarchu to Taglang La Sarchu packs up for the season from September 15. Northbound buses that haven't overnighted in Keylong thereafter press on over Lachuglang La (5019m), the second highest pass on the highway, to the tent camp at PANG (4500m), which stays open longer. Unfortunately, this means that the drive through one of the most dramatic stretches of the route, through an incredible canyon, is in darkness. North of Pang, the road heads up to the fourth and final pass, the Taglang La, the highest point on the Manali–Leh Highway at a literally breathtaking 5328m. Drivers pull in for a quick spin of the prayer wheels and a brief photo session alongside the altitude sign and small shrine. If the weather's clear enough, you can gaze north beyond the multicoloured tangle of prayer flags across Ladakh to the Karakoram Range, just visible on the horizon.

Taglang La to Leh Thirty kilometres beyond the pass is Rumtse, the first Ladakhi village. There are two basic guesthouse-cum-dhabas here, located opposite a store selling unperishable snacks. Just down the road the next village of Gya has a health clinic (with oxygen) and just back below the tree line, Lato has a particularly nice campsite in season, as well as a basic lodge. At Upshi, the road reaches the dramatic Indus Valley, tracing the Indus River past slender poplars, sprawling army camps and ancient monasteries. Traffic builds as you approach Choglamsar, then climb the final dusty 10km to Leh – past the world's highest golf course – through the modern outskirts to the haberdashers, canny traders and wrinkled apricot-sellers of Leh's Main Bazaar.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING THE MANALI–LEH HIGHWAY
THERE ARE ONLY VERY SPARSE ACCOMMODATION OPTIONS
NORTH OF KEYLONG, MOSTLY AT VERY BASIC TENT CAMPS, WITH THE ODD EQUALLY BASIC GUESTHOUSE THROWN IN.
THE ONE EXCEPTION IS THE HOTEL LISTED BELOW. MOST OF THESE PLACES CAN RUSTLE UP SIMPLE MEALS AND THERE ARE A FEW TENTED DHABAS ALONG THE ROUTE TOO.
IF YOU ARE ON A GOVERNMENT BUS, ACCOMMODATION AT THE CHANDERBHAGA IN KEYLONG IS ORGANIZED FOR YOU, WHICHEVER DIRECTION YOU ARE TRAVELLING IN.

Hotel Ibex-Jispa Main Rd, Jispa 🌐 hotelibexjispa.com. Incongruously large four-storey building with twenty-seven smart deluxe rooms and a twenty-bed dorm. Staff can arrange adventure activities. June to mid-Oct. Dorms ₹, doubles ₹₹₹

< Back to Himachal Pradesh

Shutterstock
SHANTI STUPA, LEH

Jammu and Kashmir and Ladakh

Ladakh

Southeast of Leh: the Indus loop

Kashmir

Jammu

Jammu and Kashmir and Ladakh At the northernmost tip of India, the country is crowned by two staggeringly beautiful union territories – Jammu and Kashmir and Ladakh. Ladakh is characterized by towering Himalayan mountain passes that call out to the hordes of trekkers who visit every year; their lofty peaks reflected in the glistening lakes below. While Kashmir offers a much more sedentary beauty that can be well appreciated from the vantage point of a shikara or houseboat on Srinagar's picture-perfect, mountain-encircled Dal Lake or on a trek alongside rolling apple orchards and lush valleys.

Up until 2019, both union territories were a part of one single state, Jammu and Kashmir. In 2019, following the passing of the Jammu and Kashmir Reorganization Act, they were split into two union territories. The Union Territory of Ladakh consists of two districts: Kargil and Leh. The rest of the former State of Jammu and Kashmir is in the Union Territory of Jammu and Kashmir. Most people focus on adorable Ladakh, an extremely mountainous area with an altitude mostly over 3000m, and inhabitants who generally speak Ladakhi, a Tibetan tongue, and follow a strain of Tibetan Buddhism. Ladakh can prove hard to access overland for much of the year, thanks to the region's harsh climate, though many choose to brave the tortuous route from Manali in Himachal Pradesh, or the easier one from Srinagar to the west. Ladakh's enchanting capital, Leh, is surrounded by numerous villages dominated by venerable monasteries, such as Thikse, Hemis and Lamayuru. Exquisite areas worth the bumpy detours involved in reaching them from Leh include the icy lakes of Pangong Tso and Tso Moriri, as well as the almost surreal Nubra Valley, with its sand dunes and wandering camels.

There's a large Muslim population in the western half of Ladakh, though this increases to over 95 percent once across the "border" to Kashmir, a green belt of largely mountainous land whose people mostly speak Kashmiri, a language which, to some, sounds similar to Persian. Kashmir's centrepiece, largest city and main draw is the summer capital of Srinagar, lynchpin of the famed Kashmir Valley, which also offers the green hills and meadows of Gulmarg and Pahalgam.

BEST TIME TO VISIT LADAKH EXPERIENCES THE HARSHTEST CLIMATE WITH PASSES INTO THE REGION OPEN ONLY BETWEEN LATE JUNE AND LATE OCTOBER, WHEN THE SUN IS AT ITS STRONGEST AND THE WEATHER, AT LEAST DURING THE DAY, PLEASANTLY WARM. ALTHOUGH IT IS OFFICIALLY A HIGH-ALTITUDE DESERT, RECENT YEARS HAVE SEEN INCREASING BOUTS OF RAIN IN JULY AND AUGUST, SOMETIMES MAKING TREKKING DIFFICULT. FROM NOVEMBER ONWARDS, TEMPERATURES DROP FAST, OFTEN PLUMMETING TO MINUS 40°C BETWEEN DECEMBER AND FEBRUARY, WHEN THE ONLY WAY IN AND OUT OF ZANSKAR IS ALONG THE FROZEN

SURFACE OF THE RIVER. NOTE THAT NEARLY ALL HOTELS AND GUESTHOUSES ARE CLOSED FROM SOME TIME IN OCTOBER UNTIL APRIL, WHILE MANY GARDEN RESTAURANTS ONLY OPEN IN THE PEAK SUMMER MONTHS.

Kashmir is at its best (though also at its busiest and most expensive) during late March and mid-May, when spring flowers abound, and from September to early November, with its golden days and chillier nights. Although the region's climate is less harsh than Ladakh and the road up from Jammu kept open by the army, the winter months see some seriously subzero temperatures and heaps of snow. By contrast, as much of the Kashmir Valley (including Srinagar itself) is well under 2000m in altitude, high summer can be surprisingly hot, sometimes topping 35°C. It can also get quite wet in July and August.

Sitting at the top of the plains, the Jammu area can be visited at any time of year, though it can get extremely hot and humid between April and August and rather cold and foggy in the middle of winter.

Shutterstock

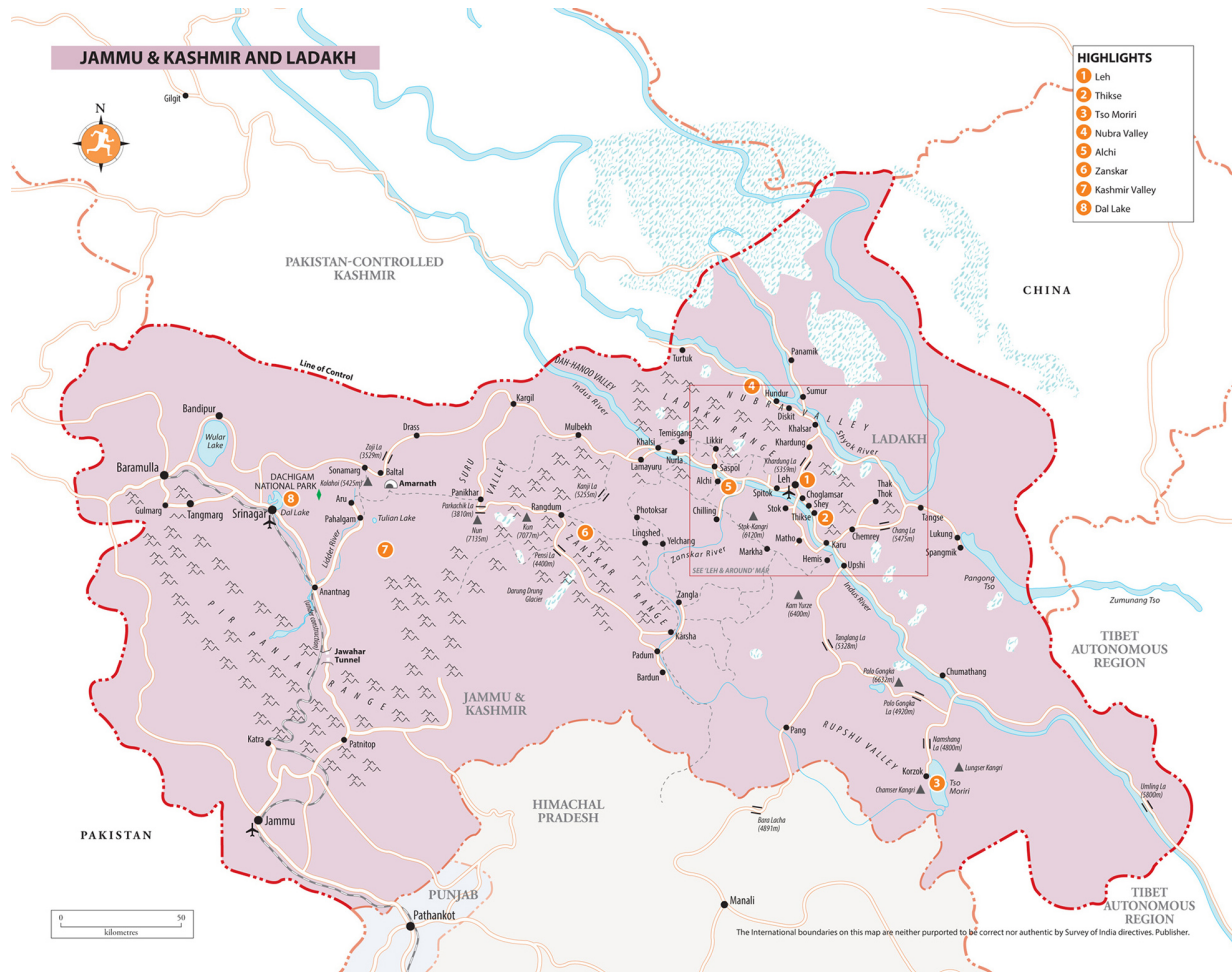

TSO MORIRI, A HIGH-ALTITUDE LAKE IN THE HIMALAYAS

Highlights

- ① Leh Medieval streets, a Tibetan-style palace, bazaars and looming snowy peaks.
- ② Thikse Along with Lamayuru and Hemis, the Indian Himalayas' most impressive monastery complex.
- ③ Tso Moriri This exquisite high-altitude lake inhabited by nomadic herders features snow-fringed desert mountains and rare migratory birds.
- ④ Nubra Valley Sand dunes, Bactrian camels and views of the mighty Karakorams await across one of the world's highest driveable roads.
- ⑤ Alchi Wonderful painted murals and stucco images are hidden behind the simple exterior of this ancient monastery.
- ⑥ Zaskar Walled in by the Himalayas, during the winter this isolated valley can only be reached by following the frozen river route.
- ⑦ Kashmir Valley This lush swathe of green is once more attracting visitors to trekking bases such as Pahalgam and Sonamarg.
- ⑧ Dal Lake Lounging on a Kashmiri houseboat, surrounded by waterlilies, kingfishers and a stunning mountain range – unforgettable.

HIGHLIGHTS ARE MARKED ON THE MAP

FESTIVALS IN JAMMU AND KASHMIR, AND LADAKH LOSAR, LADAKH (LATE JAN TO LATE FEB). CELEBRATED WITH DANCING AND MUSIC THROUGHOUT LADAKH.

Baisakhi, Jammu (Usually April 13/14). Fairs are held to celebrate the north Indian harvest season in Hindu culture. Women are especially prominent, with colourful dress.

Id ul-Fitr, Kashmir. The Muslim festival to mark the end of Ramadan is celebrated with feasting and various events.

Festival of Ladakh Sept 1–15. Held principally in Leh, this event is designed to extend the tourist season. It features archery contests, polo matches, Bactrian camels from Nubra and traditional Ladakhi dance along with some tedious speeches.

Ladakhi gompa festivals. Just about all the major gompas (monasteries) in Ladakh hold annual festivals.

There's an almost sudden 1000m drop from Kashmir to the lowlands of Jammu, a majority-Hindu area where you'll generally hear the Dogri language being spoken. The area is of little interest to travellers, though its eponymous main city is the largest in the union territory; the traditional stepping-stone into the region, it's worthy of a stopover for its imposing fort and admirable collection of temples.

Brief history Both regions have been a cultural, religious and political crossroads for millennia – the area around Jammu may have been part of Harappan, one of the world's oldest civilizations. The first inhabitants of Ladakh itself (for more on Ladakhi history) are thought to have been a mixture of nomadic herdsmen from the Tibetan plateau and a small contingent of early Buddhist refugees from northern India called the Mons, joined in the fourth or fifth century by the Indo-Aryan Dards, who introduced irrigation and settled agriculture. The first independent kingdom in the region was established in the ninth century by the maverick nobleman Nyima Gon, at around the same time as Buddhism was first disseminated by the wandering sage-apostles such as Padmasambhava (alias Guru Rinpoche). This was followed by the Second Spreading, among whose key proselytizers was the “Great Translator” Rinchen Zangpo.

Islam gains traction Kashmir had become an important centre of Buddhism and, subsequently, Hinduism during the first half of the first millennium AD, and these faiths coexisted side by side, regardless of the region's rulers, for the best part of a thousand years. In 1349, Shah Mir became the first Muslim ruler of Kashmir; the area continued to be controlled by followers of Islam, from Mughals to Afghans, until it was taken over by the Sikhs.

Around the fourteenth century, Ladakh passed through a dark age before being reunified by Tashi Namgyal (ruled 1555–70), who established a new capital and palace at Leh. This power eventually succumbed to the mightier Mughals, when Aurangzeb demanded more tribute, ordered the construction of a mosque in Leh and forced the Ladakhi king to convert to Islam. Trade links with Tibet resumed in the eighteenth century, but Ladakh never regained its former status. Plagued by feuds and assassinations, the kingdom teetered into terminal decline, and was an easy target for the Dogra general Zorawar Singh, who annexed it for the maharaja of Kashmir in 1834.

Jammu and Kashmir and Ladakh under Indian rule Jammu and Kashmir became a component state of independent India in 1948, following the first of the three Indo-Pak wars fought in the region. Tensions over the disputed Line of Control still flare up sporadically, and when you consider the proximity of China, another old foe who annexed a large chunk of Ladakh in 1962, it's easy to see why this is India's most sensitive border zone. There is also a degree of internal friction. Long dissatisfied with the state government in Srinagar, a unified group of Ladakhi Buddhist and Muslim parties formed the Ladakh Union Territory Front in 2002, to push for separation from J&K and gain Union Territory recognition from Delhi; this merged with the BJP in 2010, leading to a heavy defeat by Congress in elections, though they emerged with a clear majority in the subsequent 2014 elections.

Across wider J&K, there have been alternative periods of Presidential rule – under the direct authority of central government – and control by the BJP-aligned People's Democratic Party (PDP), whose policy of collaborating with the Modi central government has dismayed many. There was a period of optimism under the Congress-aligned National Conference, with young Omar Abdullah as Chief Minister (2009–15), though chaos followed the premature death of PDP Chief Minister Mufti Mohammed Sayeed, who was succeeded by his daughter, Mehbooba Mufti (2016–18). Presidential rule was reinstated following Mufti's resignation in 2018, with President Rule imposed on the UT since 2019. Similarly, Ladakh is administered by India as a union territory following the passing of the Jammu and Kashmir Reorganization Act, 2019.

Ladakh

Ladakh (La-Dags – “land of high mountain passes”) is mainland India’s most remote and sparsely populated union territory, a high-altitude desert cradled by the Karakoram and Great Himalaya ranges and crisscrossed by myriad razor-sharp peaks and ridges. Variouslly described as “Little Tibet” or “the last Shangri-La”, culturally, this area is one of the last enclaves of Mahayana Buddhism, which has been its principal religion for nearly a thousand years. This is most evident in Ladakh’s medieval monasteries: perched on rocky hilltops and clinging to sheer cliffs, these gompas are both repositories of ancient wisdom and living centres of worship.

RESTRICTED AREAS AND PERMITS PARTS OF LADAKH ARE STILL INACCESSIBLE TO CASUAL TOURISTS, AND SOME OF ITS MOST POPULAR AREAS REQUIRE PERMITS TO VISIT (PHOTO ID ONLY FOR INDIAN TOURISTS), THE COST OF WHICH INCLUDES AN ENVIRONMENTAL FEE (THE RED CROSS FUND AND WILDLIFE FEE). THESE INCLUDE THE NUBRA VALLEY NORTH OF LEH; THE AREA AROUND PANGONG TSO, THE LAKE TO THE EAST OF LEH; AND THE REGION OF RUPSHU WITH THE LAKE OF TSO MORIRI, TO THE SOUTHEAST OF LEH.

Permits are issued by the Deputy Commissioner’s Office in Leh but the office deals only through Leh’s many tour operators, who charge a fee – usually around ₹550–660 per head. As the areas in question are served by infrequent public transport, you may well choose to use a tour operator anyway. In theory, permits are only issued to groups of at least two people accompanied by a guide, but in practice travel agents are generally happy to issue permits to solo individuals travelling independently, though you’ll have an imaginary friend (usually somebody applying at the same time) listed on the permit to fulfil the official requirement. As long as your name and passport number are on the permit, the checkpoints are quite relaxed about how many of you there are. You will need two photocopies of the relevant pages of your passport and visa. Provided you apply in the morning, permits are usually issued on the same day, though don't bank on this. Once you have your permit, which is valid for seven days and covers all restricted areas, make at least five copies before setting off because officers at checkpoints sometimes like to keep a copy when you report in. If you go on an organized trip, however, the driver takes care of all this and you may never even handle your permit.

For the convenience of tourists, District Administration Leh has arranged an online system in which the fee can be paid online from the portal Leh District Tourists Management System (www.lahdclehpermit.in).

The highest concentration of monasteries is in the Indus Valley near Leh, the region's capital. Set in a sublime landscape and crammed with hotels, guesthouses and restaurants, this atmospheric little town, a staging post on the old Silk Route, is most visitors' point of arrival, and an ideal base for side-trips. North of Leh, across Khardung La, one of the highest driveable passes in the world, lies the valley of Nubra, where sand dunes carpet the valley floor. It is also possible to visit the great wilderness around the lake of Tso Moriri in Rupshu, southeast of Leh, and to glimpse Tibet from the shores of Pangong Tso in the far east of Ladakh. For all these areas you will, however, need a permit. West of Leh, beyond the windswept Fatu La and Namika La passes, Buddhist prayer flags peter out as you approach the predominantly Muslim district of Kargil. Ladakh's second largest town, at the mouth of the breathtakingly beautiful Suru Valley, is the jumping-off point for Zaskar, the vast wilderness in the far south that forms the border with Lahaul in Himachal Pradesh.

THE KASHMIR CONFLICT THE HIMALAYAN REGION OF KASHMIR IS THE MAIN REASON WHY INDIA AND PAKISTAN HAVE REMAINED BITTER ENEMIES FOR MOST OF THE SEVENTY OR SO YEARS SINCE INDEPENDENCE. THE REGION'S TROUBLES DATE FROM PARTITION, WHEN THE RULING HINDU MAHARAJA HARI SINGH OPTED TO JOIN INDIA

RATHER THAN PAKISTAN, AND THE GEOPOLITICAL TUG-OF-WAR OVER THE STATE HAS SOURED RELATIONS BETWEEN THE TWO COUNTRIES EVER SINCE, AT LEAST UNTIL THE LAST FEW YEARS.

The conflict in Kashmir has taken two forms: firstly, a military confrontation between the Pakistani and Indian armies along the de facto border – on three occasions leading to fully fledged war (in 1947, 1965 and 1999); and, secondly, a violent insurgency-cum-civil war since 1989, during which both Kashmiri and foreign Muslim fighters have launched various attacks against Indian military and civilian targets inside Kashmir itself, leading to equally bloody reprisals by Indian security forces – a conflict which has now cost an estimated seventy thousand lives.

THE ROOTS OF THE PROBLEM FOLLOWING THE CESSATION OF HOSTILITIES IN 1948, A UN RESOLUTION DEMANDED THAT A PLEBISCITE TAKE PLACE, ALLOWING THE KASHMIRI PEOPLE TO DECIDE THEIR OWN FUTURE; THIS INDIA HAS RESOLUTELY REFUSED TO HOLD. THE CEASEFIRE LINE, OR SO-CALLED LINE OF CONTROL (LOC), BECAME THE EFFECTIVE BORDER BETWEEN INDIA AND PAKISTAN; THE THIRD OF KASHMIR HELD BY PAKISTAN IS REFERRED TO BY THOSE WHO SUPPORT INDEPENDENCE FROM INDIA AS AZAD (FREE) KASHMIR. INDIA LOST A FURTHER SLICE OF KASHMIRI TERRITORY TO CHINA DURING THE 1962 CONFLICT BEFORE A RESUMPTION OF HOSTILITIES WITH PAKISTAN DURING THE SECOND INDO-PAKISTAN WAR OF 1965. AGAIN, KASHMIR WAS THE FOCUS OF ATTENTION, THOUGH AT THE END OF THE WAR BOTH SIDES RETURNED TO THEIR ORIGINAL POSITIONS. THE SIMLA AGREEMENT OF 1972 COMMITTED BOTH SIDES TO RENOUNCE FORCE IN THEIR DEALINGS WITH ONE ANOTHER, AND TO RESPECT THE LOC AND THE DE FACTO BORDER BETWEEN THEIR TWO STATES.

INSURGENCY AND CIVIL WAR SIMMERING KASHMIRI DISCONTENT WITH INDIAN RULE BEGAN TO TRANSFORM INTO ARMED RESISTANCE AROUND 1989 – THE ARRIVAL OF MUJAHIDEEN IN THE KASHMIR VALLEY AFTER THE END OF THE WAR WITH RUSSIA IN AFGHANISTAN IS OFTEN BLAMED FOR THE SUDDEN SURGE OF MILITANCY. THE KEY INCIDENT, HOWEVER, WAS THE UNPROVOKED MASSACRE, IN 1990, OF AROUND ONE HUNDRED UNARMED PROTESTERS, BY INDIAN SECURITY FORCES ON GAWAKADAL BRIDGE IN THE CAPITAL, SRINAGAR. BY THE FOLLOWING YEAR, VIOLENCE AND HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES HAD BECOME ENDEMIC, BOTH IN THE KASHMIR VALLEY ITSELF AND FURTHER SOUTH AROUND JAMMU. CURFEWS BECAME ROUTINE, AND THOUSANDS OF SUSPECTED MILITANTS WERE DETAINED WITHOUT TRIAL AMID INNUMERABLE ACCUSATIONS OF TORTURE, THE SYSTEMATIC RAPE OF KASHMIRI WOMEN BY INDIAN TROOPS, DISAPPEARANCES OF COUNTLESS BOYS AND MEN, AND SUMMARY EXECUTIONS. THE CONFLICT CONTINUED TO EBB AND FLOW THROUGHOUT THE 1990S, WITH REGULAR ATROCITIES ON BOTH SIDES, WHILE THE REGION'S ONCE-THRIVING TOURIST INDUSTRY WAS DEALT A MASSIVE BLOW WHEN THE EXTREMIST AL-FARAN MUSLIM GROUP KIDNAPPED FIVE TOURISTS TREKKING NEAR PAHALGAM IN 1995; ONE WAS BEHEADED AND THE OTHERS WERE NEVER FOUND.

At the end of the decade, the crisis brought India and Pakistan to the verge of yet another all-out war. With both countries now fully fledged nuclear states, Kashmir had become one of the world's most dangerous geopolitical flashpoints. In May 1999, at least eight hundred Pakistani-backed mujahideen crept across the LoC near Kargil and began to occupy Indian territory. India moved thousands of troops and heavy artillery into the area, and swiftly followed up with an aerial bombardment. The conflict was contained, and by July the Indian army had retaken all ground lost to the militants. All-out war was only narrowly averted again in early 2003, after intense diplomatic pressure was brought to bear on both sides by US emissary Colin Powell. Within Kashmir, long-established organizations like the Jammu and Kashmir Liberation Front and the All Party Hurriyat Conference, which had traditionally adopted a secular and nationalist stance, were being increasingly eclipsed by militant Islamic and pro-Pakistani groups such as Lashkar-e-Toiba and Jaish-e-Mohammad.

THE ROAD TO PEACE THE FIRST SIGNS OF GENUINE RAPPROCHEMENT CAME IN MAY 2003, WHEN INDIAN PRIME MINISTER VAJPAYEE MADE A DECLARATION OF PEACE, ANNOUNCING THAT HUNDREDS OF PAKISTANIS DETAINED SINCE THE KARGIL WAR WOULD BE RELEASED. IN 2004 AND 2005 THE INDIAN AND PAKISTANI GOVERNMENTS ALSO HELD THEIR FIRST-EVER TALKS WITH KASHMIRI SEPARATISTS, ESTABLISHING A PEACEFUL “ROAD MAP” FOR PROGRESS IN THE REGION. ANOTHER ROUND OF INDO-PAK TALKS IN 2005 RESULTED IN, AMONG OTHER SIGNS OF PROGRESS, THE INAUGURATION OF A FORTNIGHTLY BUS SERVICE BETWEEN SRINAGAR AND MUZAFFARABAD IN PAKISTANI-CONTROLLED KASHMIR, AND IN OCTOBER THE SAME YEAR THE LINE OF CONTROL WAS OPENED UP TO SPEED UP RELIEF OPERATIONS IN THE AFTERMATH OF A DEVASTATING EARTHQUAKE IN PAKISTANI KASHMIR, WHICH KILLED OVER SEVENTY THOUSAND. 2008 SAW A DOWNTURN IN INDO-PAK RELATIONS, FIRST THANKS TO MILITANT ATTACKS IN KASHMIR, THEN TO A MINOR ISSUE REGARDING LAND TRANSFER SNOWBALLING INTO GIANT PROTESTS; MORE UNREST FOLLOWED IN 2010, THEN AGAIN IN 2016, WHEN THE MOST RECENT CURFEWS WERE IMPOSED. HOWEVER, RELATIONS HAVE REMAINED RELATIVELY CORDIAL DESPITE THE CHEST-BEATING OF THE TWO MAIN PLAYERS: INDIAN NATIONALIST PM NARENDRA MODI HAS NOT BEEN NOT AVERSE TO THE OCCASIONAL BOUT OF ANTI-PAKISTANI, HINDU FUNDAMENTALIST-PLEASING RHETORIC, WHILE HIS PAKISTANI COUNTERPART IMRAN KHAN WAS ELECTED IN 2018 ON A RATHER ANTI-INDIAN TICKET.

Tensions in the region threatened to boil over again in February 2019, when a suicide bombing by Jaish-e-Mohammad killed over forty Indian security personnel. India blamed Pakistan for the attack, who denied any involvement. In the ensuing weeks, both sides launched airstrikes against targets in each other's territories. India struck first, on February 26, against a supposed terrorist training camp in Pakistan-administered Kashmir, with Pakistan retaliating the next day, resulting in an Indian plane being shot down with its pilot taken prisoner. In the following days, tensions increased further and rhetoric was ramped up on both sides, before Pakistan returned the pilot on March 1, helping to diffuse the situation.

Various long-term solutions to the whole Kashmir issue have long been mooted, ranging from India's suggestion that the Line of Control might be converted into a permanent border, to Pakistan possibly being prepared to give up all claims to Kashmir should India allow the region some form of self-government. Kashmir's future looks fairly bright, although there remains the perpetual risk that a single violent incident could trigger a new phase of conflict.

Since 2019, both Union territories are witnessing development. Terrorism has plummeted to an all-time low and travellers are deemed safe to travel in Kashmir (although it is advisable to keep abreast of the current situation before making arrangements). Also, crimes against women are rare in both regions, making them safe for female travellers. The best option is to travel with a well-known local tour guide who knows the lay of the land.

Traditionally beyond the reach of the monsoons, Ladakh receives little snow, especially in the valleys, and even less rain (sometimes as little as 100mm per year). Only the most frugal methods enable its inhabitants to farm the thin sandy soil, frozen solid for eight months of the year and scorched for much of the other four. In recent years, however, climate change has meant even drier winters and less snow; the consequent loss of snowmelt has put pressure on traditional farming and irrigation, resulting in a real risk of drought, though this has been offset to some extent by increased rainfall during the summer months.

ARRIVAL AND GETTING AROUND TWO LEGENDARY LADAKH "HIGHWAYS" CONNECT LADAKH WITH THE REST OF INDIA: THE SRINAGAR-LEH ROAD, AND THE ROUTE UP FROM MANALI, ALMOST 500KM SOUTH. THESE TWO, PLUS THE ROUGH ROAD FROM KARGIL TO PADUM IN ZANSKAR, ALSO

LINK THE MAJORITY OF LADAKH'S LARGER SETTLEMENTS WITH THE CAPITAL.

By plane These days, the majority of visitors arrive at Leh airport, though doing so can raise the risk of altitude sickness.

By bus Services along the main Indus Valley highway are quite frequent and reliable, but become less so the further you get from Leh. Some services have been given as “summer-only”; the season generally runs Apr–Oct.

By jeep or taxi It is much easier to reach off-track side valleys and villages within a single day if you splash out on a jeep or minibus taxi, widely available in Kargil and Leh.

Trekking The alternative, more traditional way to get around the region is, of course, is by trekking.

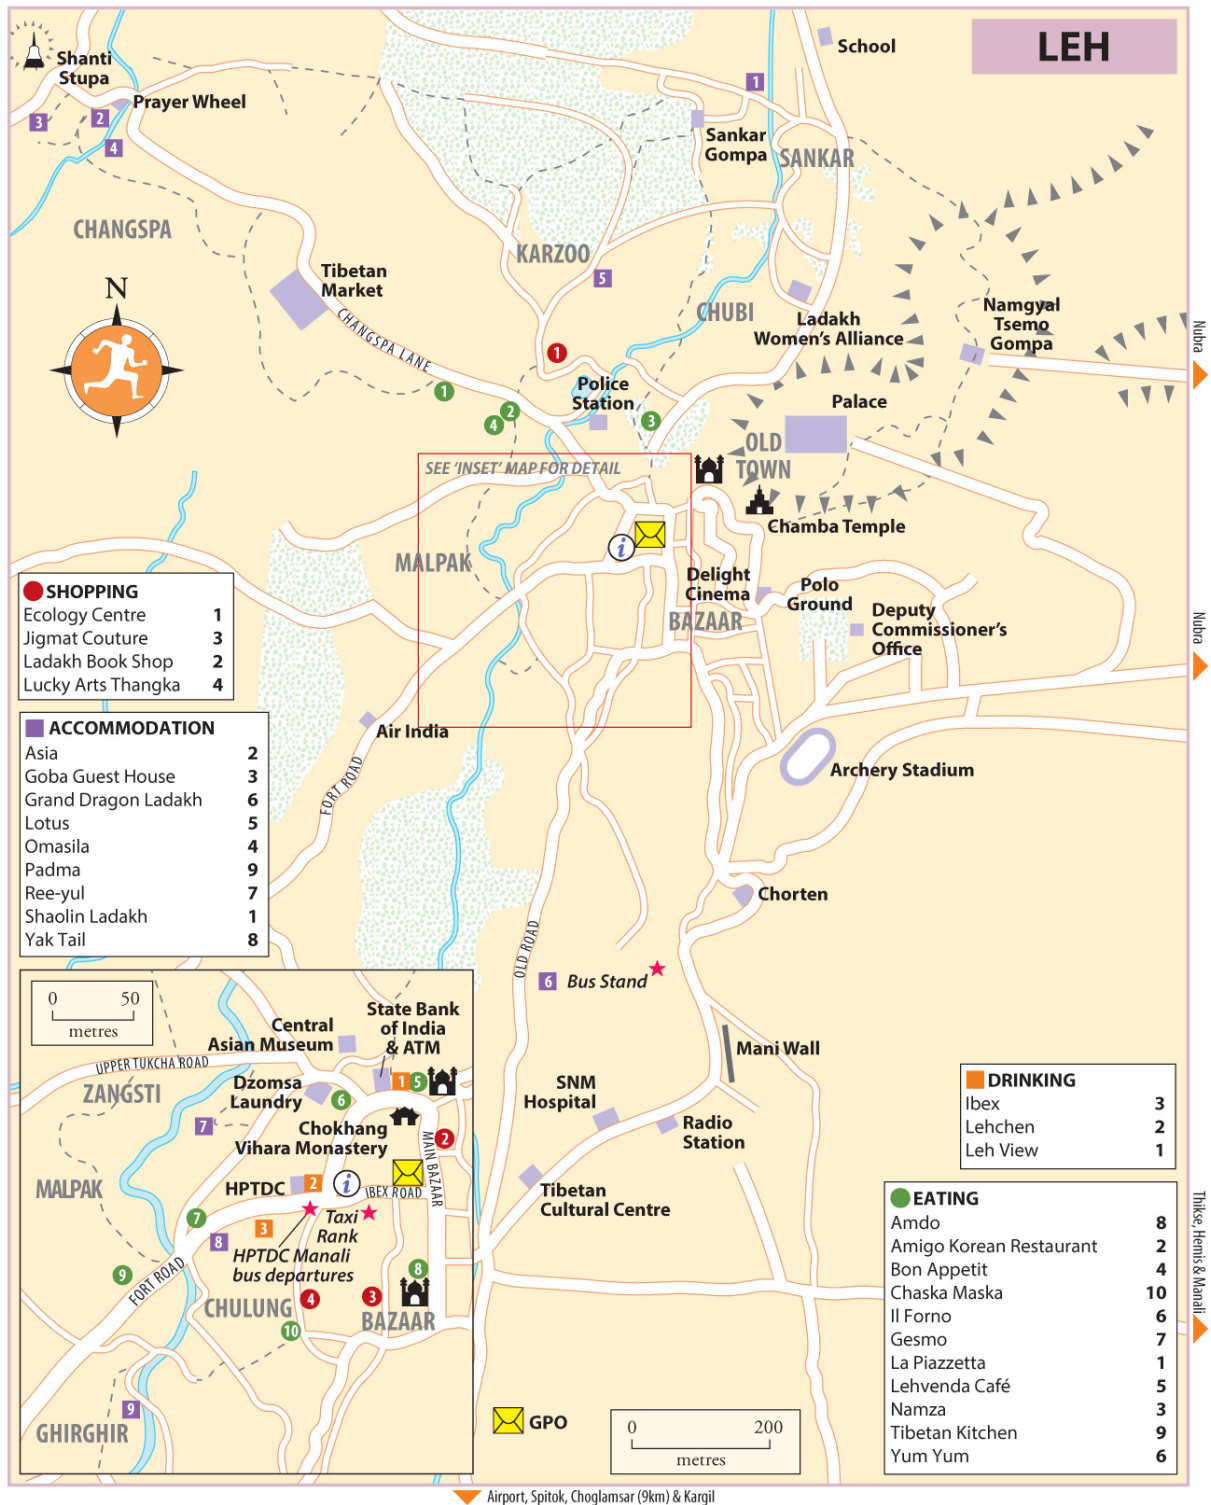

Leh

As you approach LEH for the first time, via the sloping sweep of dust and pebbles that divides it from the floor of the Indus Valley, you'll have little difficulty imagining how the old trans-Himalayan traders must have felt as they plodded in on the caravan routes from Yarkhand and Tibet: a mixture of relief at having crossed the mountains in one piece, and anticipation of a relaxing spell in one of central Asia's most scenic towns. Spilling out of a side valley that tapers north towards eroded snow-capped peaks and looks south towards the majestic Stok-Kangri massif (6120m), the Ladakhi capital sprawls from the foot of a ruined Tibetan-style palace – a maze of mud-brick and concrete flanked on one side by cream-coloured desert and on the other by a swathe of lush, irrigated farmland.

Despite being increasingly touristic, especially during the peak months of July and August, the abiding impression of Leh remains that of a lively yet laidback place – a great spot to unwind after a long journey. Attractions in and around the town itself include the former palace and Namgyal Tsemo Gompa, perched amid strings of prayer flags above the narrow dusty streets of the old quarter, whose layout has changed little since it was founded in the sixteenth century. A short walk north across the fields brings you to the small monastery at Sankar, which harbours accomplished modern Tantric murals and a thousand-headed Avalokitesvara deity. Leh is also a good base for longer day-trips out into the Indus Valley – among the string of picturesque villages and gompas within reach by bus are Shey, site of a derelict seventeenth-century palace, and the spectacular Thikse Gompa.

Brief history Leh only became the capital in the seventeenth century, when Sengge Namgyal shifted his court here from Shey, 15km southeast, to be closer to the head of the Khardung La–Karakoram corridor into China. The move paid off: within a generation the town had blossomed into one of the busiest markets on the Silk Road. Leh's prosperity, managed mainly by the Sunni Muslim merchants whose descendants live in its labyrinthine old quarter, came to an abrupt end with the closure of the Chinese border in the 1950s. Only after the Indo-Pak wars of 1965 and 1971, when India rediscovered the hitherto forgotten capital's strategic value, did its fortunes begin to look up. Today, khaki-clad jawans (soldiers) and their families from the nearby military and air force bases are the mainstay of the local economy in winter, when foreign visitors, to whom the region was opened up in 1974, are few and far between. Leh has more than tripled in size since the advent of tourism, and is a far cry from the sleepy Himalayan town it was in the early 1970s.

The bazaar After settling into a hotel or guesthouse, most visitors spend their first day in Leh soaking up the atmosphere of the bazaar. Eighty or so years ago, this bustling area was the busiest market between Yarkand and Kashmir – merchants from Srinagar and the Punjab would gather to barter for pashmina wool brought down by nomadic herdsmen from western Tibet, or for raw silk hauled across the Karakoram on Bactrian camels. These days, though the pedestrianized streets are awash with kitsch curio shops and handicraft emporiums, it retains a distinctly Central Asian feel. Even if you're not shopping for trekking supplies, check out the surviving provision stores, where bright pink, turquoise, and wine-red silk cummerbunds hang in the windows; tourists stick to the pedestrianized roads, but the local action is in side-alleys to the north and east, which also feature a few little markets.

LADAKH FESTIVALS AND EVENTS MOST OF LADAKH'S BUDDHIST FESTIVALS, IN WHICH LAMAS PERFORM MASKED CHAAM DANCE DRAMAS IN MONASTERY COURTYARDS, TAKE PLACE IN JANUARY AND FEBRUARY, WHEN ROADS INTO THE REGION ARE SNOWBOUND. THIS WORKS OUT WELL FOR THE LOCALS, FOR WHOM THE FESTIVALS RELIEVE THE TEDIUM OF THE RELENTLESS WINTER, BUT IT MEANS THAT FEW OUTSIDERS GET TO EXPERIENCE SOME OF THE NORTHERN HIMALAYAS' MOST VIBRANT AND FASCINATING SPECTACLES. RECENTLY, HOWEVER, A FEW OF THE LARGER GOMPAS AROUND LEH HAVE FOLLOWED THE EXAMPLE OF HEMIS, AND SWITCHED THEIR ANNUAL FESTIVALS TO THE SUMMER TO ATTRACT TOURISTS.

Gompas that hold their chaams (dance festivals) in winter or spring include Matho (mid-Feb to mid-March), Spitok (mid-Jan), Thikse (late Oct to mid-Nov) and Diskit (mid-Feb to early March) in Nubra.

SUMMER FESTIVALS HEMIS TSECHU: LATE JUNE/EARLY JULY.

Karsha Gustor, Zaskar: late June/early July.

Thak Thok Tsechu: late July/early Aug.

Phyang Tsedup: late July/early Aug.

OTHER EVENTS ICE HOCKEY LADAKH JAN/FEB. ORIGINALLY YET ANOTHER ATTEMPT TO SET AN ALTITUDINAL WORLD RECORD, IT LOOKS LIKE THIS INTERNATIONAL ICE HOCKEY TOURNAMENT – HELD WITH THE TEMPERATURE -35°C OUTSIDE – MAY BECOME AN ANNUAL FIXTURE IN LEH.

Ladakh Marathon Sept. The “world’s highest marathon” is a fun event – the main race and shorter events are held in Leh and the Indus valley, though the real nutters run 72km, including a summit of Khardung La.

Leh palace Daily 8am–5pm • Charge

Lording it over the old town from the top of a craggy granite ridge is the derelict palace of the sixteenth-century ruler Sengge Namgyal. A scaled-down version of the Potala in Lhasa, it’s a textbook example of medieval Tibetan architecture, with gigantic sloping buttressed walls and projecting wooden balconies that tower nine storeys above the surrounding houses. Since the Ladakhi royal family left in the 1940s, damage inflicted by nineteenth-century Kashmiri cannons has caused large chunks of it to collapse. Despite recent restoration work, there’s not much to see in the dark interior; most visitors spider up to the rooftop for lovely views out over Leh.

Namgyal Tsemo Gompa Daily 24hr • Free • Gon-khang Daily 7–9am & 5–8pm • Charge Once you are acclimatized to the altitude, the stiff early-morning hike up to Namgyal Tsemo Gompa, the monastery perched precariously on the shale-covered crag above Leh palace, is a great way to start the day. Two trails lead up to “the Peak of Victory”, whose twin peaks are connected by giant strings of multicoloured prayer flags: the first and most popular path zigzags across its south side from the palace road, while a second scales the more gentle northern slope via the north-Leh suburb of Chubi. This is the route followed by the lama from Sankar gompa, who tends to the shrine each morning and evening. Alternatively, the place is accessible by road.

Approaching the gompa from the south, the first building you come to is the red-painted Maitreya Temple. Thought to date from the fourteenth century, the shrine houses a giant Buddha statue flanked by bodhisattvas.

However, its wall paintings are modern and of less interest than those in the Gon-khang (temple of protector deities) at the top.

Central Asian Museum Daily 10.30am–7pm • Charge

The Central Asian Museum is housed in a modern re-creation of a Lhasa mansion, with a gently tapering brick tower crowned by a wooden balustrade. It has a reasonable collection of artefacts, clothing and photographs that focus on the deep connections between Ladakh and the rest of Central Asia, forged through its position on the Silk Route.

Shanti Stupa Daily sunrise–sunset • Free

Easily visible above Leh is the toothpaste-white Shanti Stupa, nearly 3km west of the bazaar by road. Inaugurated in 1985 by the Dalai Lama, the “Peace Pagoda”, whose sides are decorated with gilt panels depicting episodes from the life of the Buddha, is one of several such monuments erected around India by a “Peace Sect” of Japanese Buddhists. It can be reached by car, or on foot via a steep flight of more than five hundred steps, which winds up from the end of Changspa Lane via the café just below the stupa. Its broad terrace makes an excellent spot to watch the sun rise or set, and is popular with early-morning yogis.

Sankar Gompa Gompa Daily 7am–6pm • Charge • Museum Daily 9am–1pm & 2–7pm • Charge Nestled amid the shimmering poplar coppices and terraced fields of barley that extend up the valley behind Leh, Sankar Gompa, 2km north of the town centre, is among the most accessible monasteries in central Ladakh. You can get here either by car or on foot, the latter most agreeably through the fields behind the burgeoning tourist area of Karzoo.

The monastery is the official residence of the Kushok Bakula, Ladakh’s head of the Gelug-pa sect. Above the Du-khang (main prayer hall) stands the gompa’s principal deity, Tara, in her triumphant, one-thousand-armed form as Dukkar, or “Lady of the White Parasol”, presiding over a light, airy shrine room whose walls are adorned with a Tibetan calendar and tableaux depicting “dos and don’ts” for monks – some of which are very arcane indeed. Another flight of steps leads to the gompa library and, eventually, a roof terrace with fine views towards the north side of Namgyal Tsemo hill, and the valley to the south.

ALTITUDE SICKNESS AS LEH IS 3500M ABOVE SEA LEVEL, SOME TRAVELLERS – AND ESPECIALLY THOSE WHO ARRIVE BY PLANE FROM DELHI – EXPERIENCE MILD ALTITUDE SICKNESS. THE BEST WAY TO AVOID THE SYMPTOMS – PERSISTENT HEADACHES, DIZZINESS, INSOMNIA, NAUSEA, LOSS OF APPETITE OR SHORTNESS OF BREATH – IS TO REST ON ARRIVAL. IN FACT, ALL TOURISTS ARE REQUIRED TO ADHERE TO A 48-HOUR MANDATORY ACCLIMATIZATION PERIOD BEFORE THEIR JOURNEY ONWARD TO HIGHER ALTITUDE AREAS. DRINK 3–4 LITRES OF WATER A DAY, AVOID ALCOHOL, AND DON'T EXERT YOURSELF; TRY TO WALK MORE SLOWLY THAN USUAL, ESPECIALLY WHEN GOING UPHILL. FOR THOSE SUFFERING SEVERELY, OXYGEN IS AVAILABLE AT THE TOURIST RECEPTION CENTRE ON IBEX RD, WHERE IT COSTS ₹10 FOR A CHECK-UP AND ₹50/30MIN IF OXYGEN IS REQUIRED. FOR ANYTHING MORE SERIOUS, HEAD TO HOSPITAL.

CHORTENS AND MANI WALLS AMONG THE MORE VISIBLE EXPRESSIONS OF BUDDHISM IN LADAKH ARE THE CHESS-PAWN-SHAPED CHORTENS AT THE ENTRANCE TO VILLAGES AND MONASTERIES. THESE ARE THE TIBETAN EQUIVALENT OF THE INDIAN STUPA – LARGE HEMISPHERICAL BURIAL MOUNDS-CUM-DEVOTIONAL OBJECTS, PROMINENT IN BUDDHIST RITUAL SINCE THE THIRD CENTURY BC. MADE OF MUD AND STONE (NOW ALSO CONCRETE), MANY CHORTENS WERE ERECTED AS ACTS OF PIETY

BY LADAKHI NOBLES, AND LIKE THEIR SOUTHERN COUSINS, THEY ARE IMBUED WITH MYSTICAL POWERS AND SYMBOLIC SIGNIFICANCE: THE TALL TAPERING SPIRE, NORMALLY DIVIDED INTO THIRTEEN SECTIONS, REPRESENTS THE SOUL'S PROGRESSION TOWARDS NIRVANA, WHILE THE SUN CRADLED BY THE CRESCENT MOON AT THE TOP STANDS FOR THE UNITY OF OPPOSITES, AND THE ONENESS OF EXISTENCE AND THE UNIVERSE. SOME CONTAIN SACRED MANUSCRIPTS THAT, LIKE THE CHORTENS, WITHER AND DECAY IN TIME, ILLUSTRATING THE CENTRAL BUDDHIST DOCTRINE OF IMPERMANENCE. THOSE ENSHRINED IN MONASTERIES, HOWEVER, GENERALLY MADE OF SOLID SILVER AND ENCRUSTED WITH SEMIPRECIOUS STONES, CONTAIN THE ASHES OR RELICS OF REVERED RINPOCHES (INCARNATE LAMAS). ALWAYS CIRCLE A CHORTEN IN A CLOCKWISE DIRECTION: THE RITUAL OF CIRCUMAMBULATION MIMICS THE PASSAGE OF THE PLANETS THROUGH THE HEAVENS AND IS BELIEVED TO WARD OFF EVIL SPIRITS. LOOK OUT FOR THE GIANT, BRIGHTLY PAINTED SPECIMEN BETWEEN THE BUS STATION AND LEH BAZAAR.

A short way downhill from the big chorten, near the radio station, stands an even more monumental symbol of devotion. The 500m mani wall, erected by King Deldan Namgyal in 1635, is one of several at important religious sites around Ladakh. Ranging from a couple of metres to more than 1km in length, the walls are made of hundreds of thousands of stones, each inscribed with prayers or sacred mantras – usually the invocation Om Mani Padme Hum: “Hail to the Jewel in the Lotus”. It goes without saying that such stones should never be removed, and visitors should resist the urge to climb onto the walls to have photographs taken.

Right outside the gompa, the single-room Ladakh Rocks & Minerals Museum contains a thoughtfully laid out and labelled collection of geological samples from the region, including a huge chunk of sapphire.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE LEH AIRPORT IS LEH JUST 5KM SOUTH OF THE CITY, ON THE MAIN HIGHWAY; A TAXI INTO TOWN COSTS ₹250–300.

Destinations Delhi (4–6 daily; 1hr 30min); Jammu (3 weekly; 1hr); Srinagar (1–2 daily; 45min).

By bus Long-distance services use the main bus station, a 15min walk or ₹80 taxi ride south of the bazaar, including the deluxe Non-a/c HPTDC buses to Manali (₹2900 including an overnight dormitory stop and breakfast, dinner and tea); tickets for the latter are available at the bus station, but best purchased at their office on Fort Rd. Regional services often depart from the bus station too, local minibuses use a stop near the archery stadium; see the relevant accounts for destinations around Leh.

Destinations Kargil (3–5 daily; 6hr); Manali (every 2–3 days in summer; 2 days); Srinagar (2–4 daily; 16hr).

By jeep Shared jeeps are widely used for transportation around Ladakh and to destinations further afield, such as Kargil (6hr); Manali (16–18hr) and Srinagar (16hr). They're best booked through travel agencies, since the official taxi stands deal with full vehicles only.

GETTING AROUND BY TAXI THE MAIN OFFICE OF THE TAXI OPERATORS CO-OPERATIVE (📞LADAKHTAXIUNION.COM) IS LOCATED NEAR THE TOURIST INFORMATION CENTRE, THOUGH MOST LONG-DISTANCE SHARED TAXIS DEPART FROM A YARD OPPOSITE THE BUS STATION. EACH DRIVER CARRIES A BOOKLET OF FIXED FARES (SEE INDIVIDUAL ACCOUNTS FOR DETAILS) TO JUST ABOUT EVERYWHERE YOU MIGHT WANT TO VISIT IN LADAKH, TAKING INTO ACCOUNT WAITING TIME, VEHICLE SIZE AND NIGHT HALT CHARGES.

Bike rental Mountain bikes can be rented from Ladakh Cycling (📞94195 63761) for ₹700/day, including helmet, repair kit and a spare inner tube. They also whisk riders up to the 5359m-high Khardung La pass by jeep (1hr 30min) for a fun cycle back to Leh (2–3hr; ₹1500/person, plus ₹400 for the permit if you don't have one).

Motorbikes Rates for motorized two-wheelers start at around ₹1000/day for an Enfield; always check the bikes carefully. There are numerous operators on the Old Leh Rd.

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURIST OFFICE THE HIGHLY INFORMATIVE TOURIST RECEPTION CENTRE SITS ON IBEX RD NEAR THE BAZAAR (JUNE TO MID-SEPT MON–SAT 9AM–9PM, SUN 10AM–5PM; MID-SEPT TO MAY MON–SAT 10AM–4PM; ☎ LADAKH.NIC.IN/TOURISM).

Tour operators Innumerable agents around town offer trekking, jeep safaris and the like. Notable ones include Venture Ladakh on Changspa Lane (☎ ventureladakh.in), who offer great trekking advice and have decent second-hand hiking boots to rent or buy; Wet N Wild Explorations on Fort Rd (☎ wetnwildexplorations.com), who specialize in rafting excursions; and Ladakhi Women's Travel on Upper Tukcha Rd (☎ ladakhiwomenstravel.com), an agency run by and specializing in advice for women.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Leh is glutted with accommodation, much of it refreshingly neat and clean. Most places close between October and April; due to the short season prices do not fluctuate much, but you can bargain in the shoulder months. Most of the town's cheaper guesthouses are in the leafy areas of Changspa to the west and Karzoo to the north. Rooms in Leh's mid-range and upmarket hotels all come with piped hot water. Note that because of the early morning flight timings, checkout at most places is 9–10am.

Asia Changspa Rd, ☎ hotelasialadakh.com. Large riverside guesthouse consisting of three blocks, the oldest of which has shared bathrooms. Sociable roof terrace-cum-café, as well as yoga, meditation, reiki, Pranic healing – plus a stuffed yak in reception. May–Oct. ₹

Goba Guest House Down path off Changspa Rd ☎95969 37530, ☎ gobaguesthouse@gmail.com. Well-maintained traditional house with a pleasant, farm-like garden and views of Shanti Stupa. Rooms are immaculate, and those in the newer block have attached bathrooms. Open all year. ₹

★Grand Dragon Ladakh Old Leh Rd, thegranddragonladakh.com. Ladakh's top hotel, featuring professional service, extremely fancy rooms with comfortable beds (some with balconies too) and Ladakhi design flourishes, and an excellent dining hall with views of the mountains to the south. On site you'll also find a fitness centre, games room and souvenir shop; staff are adept at arranging tours to sights throughout the area. Open all year. ₹₹₹₹

ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES AND VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS DAMAGE TO THE ENVIRONMENT HAS BECOME AN ISSUE OF PARAMOUNT IMPORTANCE IN LADAKH. ALTHOUGH PLASTIC BAGS ARE TECHNICALLY BANNED IN LEH, AS THEY CLOG UP THE VITAL RIVER SYSTEMS THAT THE UNION TERRITORY SO DEPENDS ON THE LAW DOESN'T OUTFIT THEM COMPLETELY SO THEY ARE STILL USED. PLASTIC MINERAL-WATER BOTTLES ARE A PARTICULAR HEADACHE; YOU ARE ADVISED TO BRING YOUR OWN FILTRATION SYSTEM WITH YOU, OR REFILL PLASTIC WATER BOTTLES WITH FILTERED WATER, EITHER AT GUESTHOUSES OR AT THE DZOMSA LAUNDRY, NEAR THE MAIN BAZAAR. AS WELL AS PROVIDING SAFE WATER AND DELICIOUS LOCAL JUICES, THIS ESTABLISHMENT PROVIDES A VITAL SERVICE IN ECOLOGICALLY SOUND WASHING, USING BIODEGRADABLE DETERGENT AND WATER AT A SAFE DISTANCE FROM HABITATION. IT ALSO SERVES AS A CO-OP FOR RURAL, SEMILITERATE PEOPLE.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS WITH LIMITED RESOURCES AT THEIR DISPOSAL, A HANDFUL OF VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS BATTLE TO PROTECT LADAKH'S

DELICATE ENVIRONMENT AND ANCIENT CULTURE, INCLUDING THE FOLLOWING.

17000ft 🌐17000ft.org. NPO aiming to strengthen education and employment opportunities in remote Ladakhi villages, with the aim of arresting the exodus of young folk to the cities.

Ladakh Ecological Development Group (LEDeG) 🌐ledeg.org. Local NGO aiming to counter the negative impact of Western-style development by fostering economic independence and respect for traditional culture. Its headquarters are north of the main bazaar at the Ecology Centre.

Local Futures 🌐localfutures.org. Closely aligned to LEDeG, employing volunteers on the “Farm Project” in Ladakh to help local farmers maintain traditional farming methods.

Women’s Alliance of Ladakh (WAL) 🌐womensallianceladakh.blogspot.com. Based in Chubi, north of central Leh, working to reinforce traditional Ladakhi culture. One of their more noticeable achievements was to ban plastic bags from Leh in 1998. The best time to visit them is during one of their festivals; see the website for details.

Lotus Upper Karzoo 🌐lotus-hotel.in. The leafy location and laidback staff make this a relaxing and welcoming option. Decor is in traditional style with quality carvings and colourful fabrics, and the more expensive rooms have mountain views. Feb–Nov. ₹₹₹

Omasila Changspa Rd, 🌐hotelomasila.com. Friendly, accommodating hotel, including suites and centrally heated rooms. The large terrace offers sweeping views, and the dining room serves excellent dishes featuring home-grown vegetables. Open all year. ₹₹₹

Padma Ghirghir, off Fort Rd, 🌐padmaladakh.net. Once a cheap backpacker spot, this is now decidedly middle-market, with an old wing featuring immaculate rooms with attached bathrooms, and a large modern building with even nicer rooms costing slightly more, and a rooftop restaurant; all offer views, mostly of the garden. Meals available; open all year. ₹₹₹

Ree-yul Alley Lane off Upper Tuchpa Rd, Zangsti, 🌐facebook.com/reeyulguesthouse.leh. Tucked in a quiet corner of the centre, boasting a lovely courtyard and exquisitely carved woodwork, this convivial place has clean rooms, some with TV. Apr–Oct. ₹

★Shaolin Ladakh Sankar 07051190599. Set in a quiet area north of the bazaar, this is the best option in town at this price level, so long as you don't mind the 20min walk to and from the centre. The building curls around a delightful garden, bursting with flowers for much of the year, and even the standard rooms are lovely affairs with varnished-log ceilings and large windows. Apr–Sept. ₹₹₹

Yak Tail Fort Rd 01982 252118. Very attractive place with wood panelling and ornate wooden window-frames in its spotless rooms. The courtyard is surprisingly quiet, considering its proximity to busy Fort Rd. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Leh's thriving restaurant and café scene is run by a mixture of refugees, and businessmen from the rest of India looking to cash in. Tibetan food has a high profile alongside classic Indian and Chinese cuisine, plus there's an increasing range of European, Israeli and other international dishes to add variety; unfortunately, most restaurants try to serve absolutely everything, rather than focus on one food type in particular.

RESTAURANTS AMDO 2ND FLOOR OF COMPLEX BESIDE MOSQUE, MAIN BAZAAR, 09797802104. WANT TO FEEL LIKE ONE OF THE HIPPIES FROM BACK IN THE DAY? THIS POPULAR TIBETAN RESTAURANT HAS BEEN HERE FOR DECADES, OFFERING FRESHLY PREPARED FOOD THAT IS GENERALLY EXCELLENT BUT CAN TAKE UP TO HALF AN HOUR TO APPEAR; TRY THEIR RANGE OF MOMOS, OR SOME FRIED MUTTON THUKPA NOODLES. APR–OCT.

Amigo Korean Restaurant Off Changspa Rd 01982 255057. For something a little different, try this pretty place, designed along traditional Korean lines. The food isn't as authentic as it could be, but most meals still hit the spot, including doenjang jjigae (spicy soybean broth) and bibimbap; their ginger honey tea may work wonders for those who've caught a cold. May–Sept. ₹₹

★Bon Appetit Off a lane south of Changspa Rd 01982 251533. One of the smartest places in town, and symptomatic of Leh's turn towards the trendy. Quirky dishes include black pepper paneer, mutton burgers and Burmese and Thai fusion food, while the south-facing view – and the fact that alcohol is available – mean that it's perfect for a sunset meal and drink.

Aug–Oct. ₹₹

Chaska Maska South of Fort Rd 08629826082. Cuisine from both ends of the Subcontinent, plus a few Western dishes. Best masala dosas in town, as well as items like peppered steak. Apr–Oct. ₹₹

Il Forno LBA Complex, Zangshi, ilfornoladakh.com. It's somewhat refreshing to see a restaurant focusing on a single type of cuisine, even though they do have other options as well as their excellent Italian food. Pride of place goes to the lasagne selection, baked in a wood-fired oven like their excellent pizzas; pasta dishes available too (four shapes to choose from, plus gnocchi). Oh, and it has the best castle views in town. Apr–Oct. ₹₹

Gesmo Fort Rd, gesmo-restaurant-jammu.business.site. One of the most popular restaurants in town, this pretty spot has the typical “we serve everything menu, but is perhaps most notable for the yak cheese specials, including yak-cheese veg momos, yak-cheese chicken pizza, and yak-cheese burgers. All of which begs the question: how does one milk a yak? Apr–Oct. ₹₹

La Piazzetta Changspa Rd 09622952080. Ambient courtyard with tented enclosures, candles and open fires creating a pleasant atmosphere. Most meals – non-veg Indian, Chinese, Thai and wood-fired pizza, and it stays open later in the year than all other garden restaurants. Apr–Sept. ₹₹

Namza Zangsti Rd, instagram.com/namzadining. Tucked behind a clothing boutique of the same name, this is the place in which to try modern Ladakhi cuisine. Try the drapu dumplings, made with apricot kernel and walnut sauce; soups such as ayathuk, like a regular mutton soup with spicy chutney; or many other things besides. Seats face out over a small field. May–Sept. ₹₹₹

★Tibetan Kitchen Down an alley off Fort Rd 08492911940. Considered by many, locals and visitors alike, to offer the best Tibetan food in town. Its success means higher prices, with mutton thukpas and momos (try the unusual tuna ones). ₹₹

CAFES, TEAROOMS AND SWEETS LEHVENDA CAFÉ 2ND FLOOR OF COMPLEX ON CORNER OF BAZAAR 80100 77124.

THE BEST OF MANY MODERN CAFES IN TOWN, SHADING THE COMPETITION WITH EXCELLENT COFFEE, A WINNING BALCONY VIEW OF THE PALACE, STEADY WI-FI, AND A GENERALLY CONGENIAL ATMOSPHERE. OPEN ALL YEAR.

★Yum Yum LBA Complex 📞84938 54102. The LBA complex is a hit with independent travellers – tucked between two roads, this courtyard has a few cheap places to snack, and the seating arrangement makes it easy to get chatting to people. This restaurant is the best and friendliest of the bunch, and most notable for its “French bakery” section; try the giant banana crumble with some quality espresso. Apr–Oct.

DRINKING

MAP

Beer is widely available in many of Leh’s tourist restaurants, though it often has to be served surreptitiously. There’s also a busy little liquor store just north of the Ibex bar.

★Ibex Fort Rd 📞94191 89052. If you feel like drinking somewhere more akin to Ladakh “back in the day”, this bar will float your boat. Prices are super cheap, and the courtyard space – where the chairs are really, really comfy – facilitates the making of new friends. Open all year.

Lehchen Zangsti Rd 📞99107 66617. An actual bar, and certainly the prettiest place to drink in town. The beer is overpriced, so it’s best to go for the cocktails, some of which are extremely strong. Apr–Oct.

Leh View Main Bazaar 📞94697 73429. This roof terrace has great views, and although it also a restaurant, it’s a better bet for a drink than a meal; beers and double-shots of local spirit, and they’ve hookahs to puff. Mar–Oct.

SHOPPING

MAP

Between June and September, Leh is swamped by almost as many transient Tibetan and Kashmiri traders as souvenir-hungry tourists. Most of the merchandise hawked in their temporary boutiques and stalls comes from outside the region: papier-mâché bowls, shawls and carpets from Srinagar, jewellery and miniature paintings from Jaipur, and “Himalayan” handicrafts, including thangkas, churned out in Nepal and by Tibetan refugees in Old Delhi. Prices tend to be high, so haggle hard, and don’t be conned into shelling out for cleverly faked “antiques”. Much of the “silver” on sale is in fact cheap white metal.

TRADITIONAL ARTEFACTS AND CLOTHING FOR AUTHENTIC LADAKHI SOUVENIRS, TRY THE OUTFITTERS AND PROVISION STORES DOTTED ALONG THE MAIN BAZAAR. THERE ARE ALSO SOME GENUINE LADAKHI/TIBETAN MARKETS IN THE BAZAAR AND ALONG CHANGSPA LANE. THE LANES RUNNING OFF THE BAZAAR TOWARDS OLD TOWN ARE HOME TO HOLE-IN-THE-WALL SEAMSTRESS SHOPS THAT CAN PRODUCE CUSTOM-FIT LOCAL CLOTHING, INCLUDING DAPPER STOVEPIPE HATS (TIBI), HAND-DYED LADAKHI ROBES (GONCHA), RAW SILK CUMMERBUNDS AND TIE-DYED ROPE-SOLED SHOES (PABBU). THE HANDICRAFT SHOPS AT THE ENVIRONMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS ARE ALSO SOURCES OF QUALITY TRADITIONAL CLOTHING, INCLUDING HAND-KNITTED WOOLLEN JUMPERS, SHAWLS, HATS AND SOCKS.

Ecology Centre Off Changspa Lane ☎01982 253221, 🌐ledeg.org. As well as a small library, the Ecology Centre has a handicraft shop selling locally made clothes, thangkas, T-shirts, books and postcards. Open all year. Daily 10am–4pm, often closed weekends.

Jigmat Couture South of Fort Rd ☎01982 255065, 🌐jigmatcouture.org. Modern takes on Ladakhi clothing – not the cheapest, but all made in Ladakh with local resources such as cashmere, yak and camel hair. Mar–Oct. Mon–Sat 10.30am–7pm, Sun 2.30–7pm.

Lucky Arts Thangka South of Fort Rd ☎95968 01013. Beautiful thangkas and other Tibetan artwork are on sale at this small shop. Mar–Oct. Daily 10am–7pm.

BOOKS THERE ARE QUITE A FEW BOOKSHOPS DOTTED AROUND THE CENTRE AND ALONG CHANGSPA LANE; MOST HAVE THE USUAL SELECTION OF SECOND-HAND TRAVELLERS' NOVELS, BUT ONE OR TWO OFFER A WIDER SELECTION. IN ADDITION, THE ECOLOGY CENTRE'S EXCELLENT LIBRARY KEEPS BOOKS ON EVERYTHING FROM AGRICULTURE TO ZEN BUDDHISM.

Ladakh Book Shop Bazaar ☎01982 256464. Second-floor space crammed with books in English on Ladakhi and Tibetan religion and culture, plus travel and fiction sections. May–Sept.

DIRECTORY BANKS YOU'LL FIND AN INCREDIBLE NUMBER OF BANKS WITH ATMS IN THE VERY CENTRE OF TOWN, BUT VERY FEW OUTSIDE IT.

Hospital The poorly equipped SNM Hospital (☎01982 252014) is 1km south of the centre on Old Road. For urgent medical treatment, contact a doctor through any upmarket hotel.

Laundry Dzomsa Laundry.

Pharmacy Het Ram Vinay Kumar on the bazaar road sells a range of allopathic pills and potions.

Police ☎01982 252018, ☎100 for the operator.

Southeast of Leh: the Indus loop Southeast of Leh, the Indus Valley broadens to form a fertile river basin. For some 35km, both sides are dotted with spectacular Buddhist monuments, and many travellers visit one, some or all of them on day-trips from Leh. The northeastern bank of the river has a better road, and sees the most traffic; here you'll come across Shey, site of a ruined palace and giant brass Buddha, then the stunning monastery of Thikse. After crossing the Indus at Karu, you'll see Hemis, Ladakh's wealthiest monastery and the venue for one of the region's few summertime religious festivals; heading back to Leh, you can also mop up Matho, a gompa boasting superb views from its roof terrace; and Stok Palace, home of the Ladakhi monarchy. Note that there's accommodation outside or nearby most of these sights, giving travellers an easy chance to spend a night outside the “big” city; there are also places to eat dotted here and there.

GETTING AROUND BY SOUTHEAST OF LEH: THE INDUS LOOP
BUS BUSES ARE FAIRLY REGULAR ON THE NORTHEASTERN SIDE OF THE RIVER, LESS SO FOR SIGHTS ON THE SOUTHWESTERN SIDE; ADVICE IS GIVEN AT THE TOP OF EACH ACCOUNT.

By taxi The vast majority of travellers visit these sights by taxi; you could see them all for ₹2000, or just ₹1400 for the “big three” of Shey, Thikse and Stok.

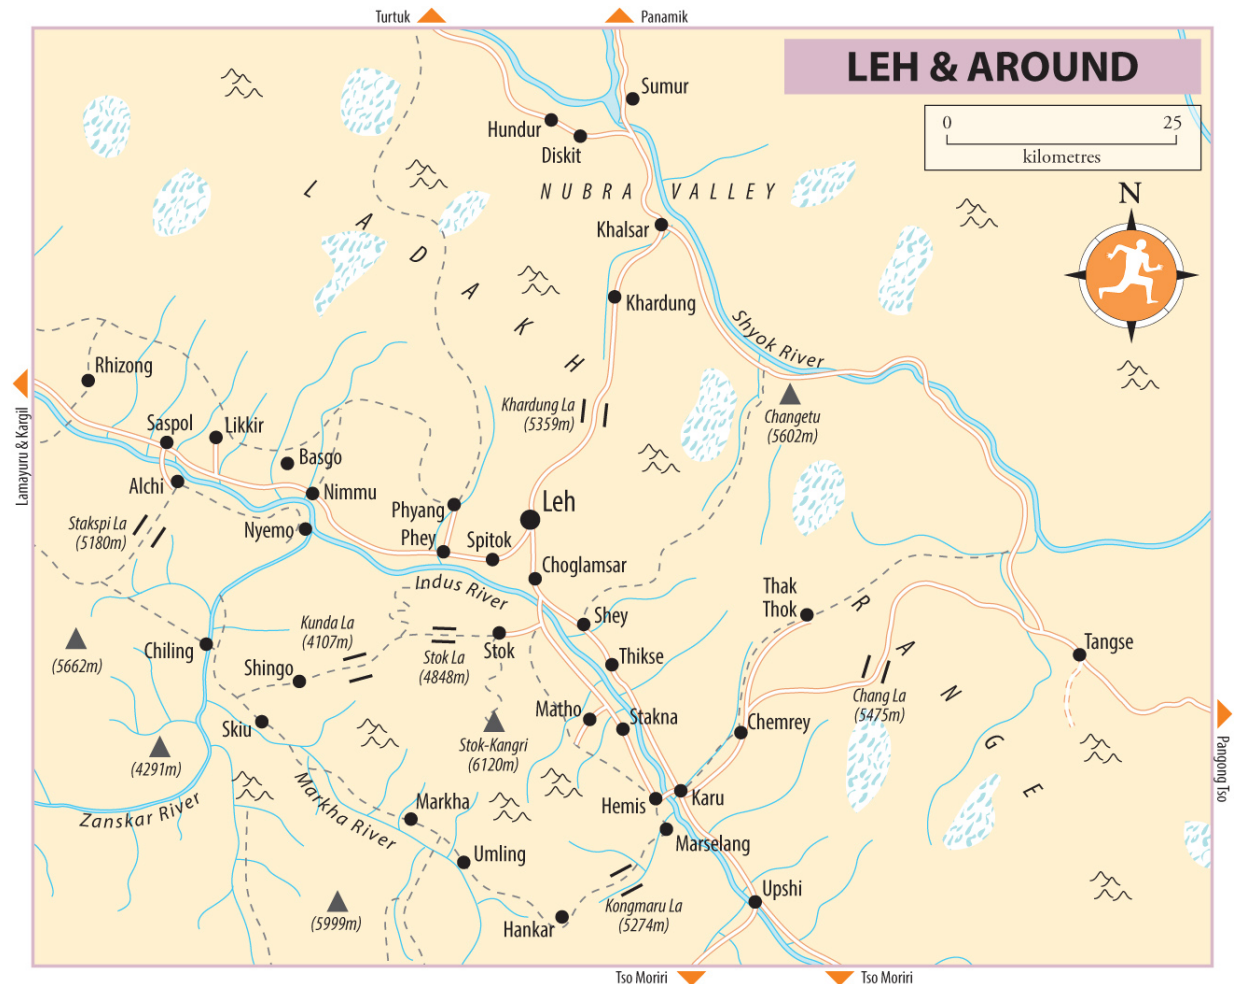

By rented vehicle This route is easy to do with a car – or, more temptingly, a motorbike – from Leh, and as such constitutes a good test-run if you're planning a more ambitious trip.

Shey

Buses from Leh (5 daily; 25min), or more regularly from Choglamsar • Return taxis from Leh ₹500–1000

SHEY, 15km southeast of Leh and once the capital of Ladakh, is now all but deserted, the royal family having been forced to abandon it by the Dogras midway through the nineteenth century. Only a semi-derelict palace, a small gompa and a profusion of chortens remain, clustered around a bleached spur of rock that juts into the fertile floor of the Indus Valley. You can walk from Shey to Thikse monastery along a winding path that passes through one of Ladakh's biggest chorten fields, with hundreds of whitewashed shrines of varying sizes scattered across the surreal desert landscape.

The palace Buddha temple daily 6am–9pm • Charge The palace, a smaller and more dilapidated version of the one in Leh, sits astride the ridge, below an ancient fort. Crowned by a golden chorten spire, its pride and joy is the colossal metal Shakyamuni Buddha housed in its ruined split-level temple. Installed in 1633, the 12m icon allegedly contains a hoard of precious stones, mandalas and powerful charms. Entering from the second level, you come face to face with the massive Buddha, and a balcony allows you to survey the statue's torso. Preserved for centuries by thick soot from votary butter lamps, the gold-tinted murals coating the walls are among the finest in the valley.

Rock carving Easily missed as you whizz past on the road is Shey's most ancient monument. The rock carving of the five Tathagata or "Thus gone" Buddhas, distinguished by their respective vehicles (vahanas) and hand positions (mudras), appears on a smooth slab of stone on the edge of the highway; it was probably carved soon after the eighth century, before the "Second Spreading". The large central figure with hands held in the gesture of preaching (turning the wheel of dharma), is the Buddha Resplendent, Vairocana, whose image is central in many of the Alchi murals.

EATING SHILKHAR ON THE MAIN ROAD 97973 10025. SHEY THIS NO-FRILLS RESTAURANT OFFERS A LIMITED MENU OF INDIAN, CHINESE AND WESTERN FOOD, OR LOCAL DELIGHTS SUCH AS VEGGIE MOMOS, STEAMED OR FRIED. ₹

Thikse 5 daily buses from Leh (40min; last one back leaves at 5pm), and more regularly from Choglamsar; you'll mostly likely have to hike up to the gompa from the main road • Return taxis from Leh ₹500–1000 • Walkable from Shey • Gompa daily 6am–6pm • Charge Ladakh's most photographed and architecturally impressive gompa is at THIKSE, 19km southeast of Leh. Founded in the fifteenth century, its whitewashed chortens and cubic monks' quarters rise in ranks up the sides of a craggy bluff, crowned by an imposing ochre- and red-painted temple complex whose gleaming golden finials are visible for kilometres in every direction.

Thikse's reincarnation as a major tourist attraction has brought it mixed blessings: its constant stream of summer visitors spoils the peace and quiet necessary for meditation, but the income generated has enabled the monks to invest in major refurbishments, among them the Maitreya temple immediately above the main courtyard. Inaugurated in 1980 by the Dalai Lama, the shrine is built around a gigantic, gold-faced Buddha-to-come, seated not on a throne as is normally the case, but in the lotus position. The bright murals on the wall behind, painted by monks from Lingshet gompa in Zanskar, depict scenes from Maitreya's life.

For most foreign visitors, however, the highlight of a trip to Thikse is the view from its lofty roof terrace. A patchwork of barley fields stretches across the floor of the valley, fringed by rippling snow-flecked desert mountains and a string of monasteries, palaces and Ladakhi villages. To enjoy this impressive panorama accompanied by primeval groans from the gompa's gargantuan Tibetan trumpets – played on the rooftop at the 6–7am puja – you'll have to stay overnight or arrange an early taxi from Leh.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING CHAMBA HOTEL THIKSE DOWN BY THE ROAD @ THIKSEYHOTEL.COM. PART OF THE MONASTERY ORGANIZATION, THIS DELUXE HOTEL OFFERS REASONABLY COMFORTABLE ROOMS AT RATHER INFLATED RATES AND A DECENT GARDEN RESTAURANT SERVING A VARIED MENU FROM TIBETAN FOOD TO PANCAKES. APRIL–
SEPT. ROOM ₹₹₹, FOOD ₹₹

★Monastery Guesthouse ☎01982 267385. The rooms behind the gompa's simple restaurant are spacious and clean, and some have private bathrooms. This is one of Ladakh's most atmospheric places to stay, as you end up feeling part of the monastic community. ₹

Stakna Direct bus from Leh daily at 4.30pm, returning at 7.30am the next day; alternatively, take any vehicle along the road and get off by the suspension bridge near the monastery • Gompa Daily 8am–7pm • Charge STAKNA, around 30km south of Leh, sits astride a rocky outcrop just west of the Indus. The gompa was founded in the late sixteenth century by the Bhutanese saint, Chosje Jamyang Palkar. Its main features are some dazzling recently painted Tantric murals and a few original murals and sandalwood statues – oh, and the wonderful mountainous backdrop.

Hemis

In summer usually one daily bus from Leh at 9am, and sometimes also 2pm; in winter there's one at 1pm on Mon, Wed & Sat • Return taxis from Leh ₹1200–2000 • Gompa Daily 8am–1pm & 2–6pm • Charge • Museum Daily 8am–6pm • Charge Thanks to its famous festival – one of the few held in summer, when the passes are open – HEMIS, 45km southeast of Leh, is visited in greater numbers than any other gompa in Ladakh, even though it's certainly not the prettiest. At other times, the rambling and atmospheric seventeenth-century monastery can be disappointingly quiet: although it's one of the region's foremost religious institutions, only a skeleton staff of monks and novices are resident off-season. Still, the richly painted main hall is worth a look, as is the small museum, a winding subterranean hall with a modest collection of thangkas, masks and musical instruments. On your way down, look out for the bicycle on the wall, which was ridden all the way here from Kathmandu by Jigme Pema Wangchen, a rather rare breed of lama.

Each June or July, hundreds of foreigners join the huge crowds of locals, dressed in their finest traditional garb, that flock to watch the colourful two-day pageant. Accompanied by cymbal crashes, drum rolls and periodic blasts from the temple trumpets, the culmination of the event on the second day is a frenzied dismemberment of a dummy, symbolizing the destruction of the human ego, and thus the triumph of Buddhism over ignorance and evil. Once every twelve years, the Hemis Festival also hosts the ritual unrolling of a giant thangka. The gompa's prize possession, which covers the entire facade of the building, it was embroidered by women whose hands are now revered as holy relics. Decorated with pearls and precious stones, it will not be displayed again until 2028.

THE SUPERSTAR LAMA WHILE HE HASN'T YET BEEN A MAJOR CHARACTER IN A BRAD PITT MOVIE, JIGME PEMA WANGCHEN – THE 12TH GYALWANG DRUKPA, OR HEAD LAMA OF THE “DRAGON” SCHOOL OF TIBETAN BUDDHISM – IS CERTAINLY THE TRENDIEST LOCAL LAMA OF MODERN TIMES, AND HAS HARVESTED MORE THAN 750,000 FACEBOOK FOLLOWERS TO DATE. BORN IN HIMACHAL PRADESH IN 1963, HE HAS BECOME AN ACTIVE ENVIRONMENTAL CAMPAIGNER, OFTEN ATTEMPTING TO SOLVE MODERN-DAY PROBLEMS WITH ANCIENT BUDDHIST THOUGHT WITH HIS “LIVE TO LOVE” MOVEMENT. HOWEVER, IT’S HIS NON-ANCIENT ACTS WHICH HAVE CAUGHT THE MOST ATTENTION, INCLUDING WHAT SEEMS TO BE A FIXATION WITH GETTING INTO THE GUINNESS BOOK OF RECORDS; HIS VOLUNTEERS BROKE THE “MOST TREES PLANTED SIMULTANEOUSLY” RECORD IN 2012, AND THE “LARGEST LADAKHI DANCE” AND “HIGHEST ICE HOCKEY GAME” ARE AMONG THOSE TO HAVE FALLEN SINCE. IN 2016, WITH A COHORT OF 240 NUNS, HE CYCLED FROM KATHMANDU TO HEMIS MONASTERY IN ORDER TO RAISE ENVIRONMENTAL AWARENESS ACROSS THE HIMALAYAS – THE BIKE HE RODE IS NOW PART OF THE MONASTERY MUSEUM.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING YOU CAN FIND BASIC HEMIS HOMESTAY ACCOMMODATION IN THE VILLAGE BENEATH THE GOMPA.

Hemis Gompa Restaurant Below the monastery 📞96223 72915. This garden restaurant serves standard Indian and Chinese dishes – some good, some less so, and is a popular lunch spot for those touring the area. You can usually pitch a tent at the back, too. ₹

Matho

Buses from Leh daily at 9am & 3pm, and more regular minibuses from Choglamsar • Return taxis from Leh ₹1000–1500 • Gompa Daily 9am–6pm • Charge MATHO, 27km south of Leh, straddles a spur at the mouth of an idyllic side-valley that runs deep into the heart of the Stok-Kangri massif. Though no less interesting or scenically situated than its neighbours, it sees comparatively few visitors. The gompa is the only representative in Ladakh of the Sakyapa sect, which held political power in thirteenth-century Tibet.

Despite its collection of 400-year-old thangkas, the monastery is best known for its oracle festival, Matho Nagran, held on the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth day of the second Tibetan month (Feb/March). Two oracles, known as rongzan, are elected by lot every three years from among the sixty or so resident lamas. During the run-up to the big days, the pair fast and meditate in readiness for the moment when they are possessed by the spirit of the deity. Watched by crowds of rapt onlookers, they then perform all manner of death-defying stunts that include leaping blindfold around the gompa’s precipitous parapets while slurping kettlefuls of chang, and slashing themselves with razor-sharp sabres without drawing blood. The events are rounded off with colourful chaam dances in the monastery courtyard, and a question-and-answer session in which the rongzan, still under the influence of the deity, make prophecies about the coming year.

You can admire the costumes and masks worn by the monks during the festivals in Matho's small museum, tucked away behind the main prayer hall. Men are also permitted to visit the eerie Gon-khang on the roof, where the oracles' weapons and ritual garments are stored. The floor of the tiny temple is covered by a deep layer of barley brought as harvest offerings by local villagers.

Stok

Buses from Leh daily at 4.30am, with additional 8.30am summer service • Return taxis from Leh ₹600–1000 • Museum Daily 8am–6pm • Charge • Gompa Daily 9am–6pm • Charge Visible from Leh, at the head of a huge moraine, the elegant four-storey Stok Palace stands in the shadow of a TV mast, overlooking barley terraces studded with whitewashed farmhouses. Built early in the nineteenth century by the last ruler of independent Ladakh, it has been the official residence of the Ladakhi royal family since they were ousted from Leh and Shey two hundred years ago. The present queen mother – Deskit Wangmo, a former member of parliament – still lives here during the summer, and has converted one wing of her 77-room palace into a small museum. The fascinating collection comprises some of the royal family's most precious heirlooms, including exquisite sixteenth-century thangkas illuminated with paint made from crushed rubies, emeralds and sapphires. The pièces de résistance, however, are the gyalmo's peraks; still worn on important occasions, the ancient headdresses – thought to have originated in Tibet – are encrusted with slabs of flawless turquoise (a full 401 pieces, on one of them), polished coral, lapis lazuli and nuggets of pure gold.

Stok gompa, twenty minutes' walk up the valley, boasts a collection of dance-drama masks and some lurid modern murals painted by lamas from Lingshet gompa in Zaskar, the artists responsible for the Maitreya statue in Thikse.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING THERE'S A CAFETERIA STOK OUTSIDE THE ENTRANCE TO THE PALACE, GOOD FOR REFRESHMENTS WITH A GRAND VIEW DOWN TOWARDS LEH.

Skittsal 2km down the Choglamsar road, www.skittsal.com. Despite its panoramic valley views, this hotel seems unfeasibly large for such a remote location. The rooms are spacious but seriously overpriced. There's a so-so restaurant on site, too. May–Sept. ₹₹₹

Eastern Ladakh: the lakes To side-step your fellow tourists without spending a night away from Leh, head up the austere beautiful tributary valley back on the opposite side of the river from Hemis to the gompas of Chemrey and Thak Thok, the latter built around a fabled meditation cave.

East of Thak Thok, the road crosses the Chang La pass and then veers east to the high mountain lake of Pangong Tso, most of which lies in Tibet. Far more relaxing and inviting is the vast wilderness of Rupshu, with trekking possibilities around the shores of Tso Moriri, in the deep south of Ladakh. Permits are required for these three areas.

Chemrey Gompa daily 8am–6pm • Charge, including museum • Accessible on buses from Leh to Sakti (5 daily; 1hr 15min) • Return taxis ₹2000–3000 return from Leh Clinging like a swallow’s nest to the sides of a conical hill, the magnificent gompa of CHEMREY sees very few visitors because of its location – tucked up the side-valley that runs from Karu, below Hemis, to the Chang La pass into Pangong.

Founded in 1664 as a memorial to King Sengge Namgyal, the monastery is staffed by a dwindling community of around twenty Drugpa monks and their young novices. Its main Du-khang, off the courtyard on the lower level, boasts a fine silver chorten and a set of ancient Tibetan texts whose title pages are illuminated with gold-and-silver calligraphy. Upstairs in the revamped Guru-La-khang sits a giant brass statue of Padmasambhava. The museum on the top floor houses statues, thangkas, scrolls and utensils.

Thak Thok Gompa daily 8am–6pm • Charge • Bus from Leh to Sakti (5 daily; 1hr 15min), then a 50min walk • Return taxis start from ₹2000 from Leh Up the valley from Chemrey, and a few kilometres above the village of Sakti, THAK THOK (pronounced Tak-Tak and meaning “rock roof”) gompa shelters a cave in which the apostle Padmasambhava is said to have meditated during his epic eighth-century journey to Tibet. Blackened over the years by sticky butter-lamp and incense smoke, the mysterious grotto is now somewhat upstaged by the monastery’s more modern wings nearby. As well as some spectacular twentieth-century wall paintings, the Urgyan Photan Du-khang harbours a collection of multicoloured yak-butter candle-sculptures made by the head lama. For a glimpse of state-of-the-art Buddhist iconography, head to the top of Thak Thok village, where a shiny new temple houses a row of huge gleaming Buddhas, decked out in silk robes and surrounded by garish modern murals.

Apart from during the annual festival, Sakti is a tranquil place, blessed with serene views south over the snowy mountains behind Hemis. There are plenty of ideal camping spots beside the river, although as ever you should seek permission before putting up a tent on someone's field.

Pangong Tso Summer-only bus from Leh (6.30am Sat & Sun; 5hr) to Spangmik village, returning around 7am the following day • Jeep safaris from Leh from ₹1700 per person, more if overnighiting.

Pangong Tso, 154km southeast of Leh, is one of the largest saltwater lakes in Asia, a long, narrow strip of water stretching from Ladakh east into Tibet. Only a quarter of the 134km-long lake is in India, and the army, who experienced bitter losses along its shores in the war against China in 1962, jealously guard their side of the frontier. Until the mid-1990s, this area was off-limits to visitors, and tourists still need a permit to come here. The lake, at an altitude of 4267m, with the dramatic glacier-clad Pangong Range to its south and the Changchenmo Range reflected in its deep blue-green waters to the north, measures 8km across at its widest point and provides a tantalizing view of Tibet in the distance, although the bitter winds blowing over the brackish water make it one of the coldest places in Ladakh. On the way here, your driver may stop to allow a photo-op with some local marmots, who are surprisingly comfortable in the presence of human beings.

ACCOMMODATION THERE IS BASIC PANGONG TSO
ACCOMMODATION AND FOOD AT SPANGMIK BUT IT IS POOR VALUE, ESPECIALLY THE HUGELY OVERPRICED TENT CAMP.
BETTER DEALS CAN BE HAD NEAR OTHER PARTS OF THE LAKE.

Padma Home Stay Where the road first meets the lake ☎94198 19078, tonybuddhist@yahoo.co.in. Meals are included with the rooms, which vary in size but all have shared bathrooms. They also rent tents with full board. ₹

Tso Moriri Summer-only bus from Leh (10th, 20th & 30th of month; 4hr 30min–5hr), returning the following morning • Jeep safaris from Leh start from ₹2000 per person (not including accommodation) • Treks start from ₹3600 per day in a group of four, usually including transport, food and tents Famous for the large herds of kiang, or wild ass, which graze on its shores, the lake of Tso Moriri, 210km southeast of Leh, lies in the sparsely populated region of Rupshu. You need a permit to travel here.

Twenty kilometres long, the lake nestles in a wide valley flanked by some of the highest peaks in Ladakh – Lungser Kangri (6666m) and Chanmser Kangri (6622m) – and is home to flocks of migratory nangpa or bar-headed geese, as well as occasional herds of pashmina goats and camps of nomadic herders.

Located on the shores of the lake at an altitude of 4595m, the only large village in the area is Korzok, a friendly place with a small gompa. To help protect the fragile ecosystem against the influx of tourists, a new directive stipulates that no habitation can be built within 700m of the shoreline. Visitors should bring their own food supplies and make sure they take all their rubbish away.

The open spaces around Tso Moriri make for some pleasant trekking, including the relatively easy – if you are acclimatized – three-day, 40km circuit of the lake. Another route gaining popularity is the trail from Rumtse near Upshi via Tso Kar to Tso Moriri. Some trekking operators in Manali and Leh can arrange more ambitious treks, such as following the ancient trade route linking Spiti to Tso Moriri and Leh via Kibber.

ACCOMMODATION ACCOMMODATION IS IN TSO MORIRI LOCAL HOMESTAYS DOTTED AROUND THE LAKE AREA AND AN OVERPRICED TENT COLONY OR IN KORZOK, 1KM BACK FROM THE LAKE.

Lake View Just below Korzok bus stand, tsomoririhotellakeview.com. Refurbished guesthouse with smart modern rooms that maintain traditional touches and the lake views the name would suggest. Reasonable restaurant too. ₹₹₹

Northern Ladakh: the Nubra Valley Until 1994, the lands north of Leh were off-limits to tourists and had been unexplored by outsiders since the nineteenth century. Now, the breathtaking Nubra Valley, unfolding beyond one of the world's highest stretches of driveable road as it crosses the Khardung La (5359m), can be visited with a seven-day permit, which gives you enough time to explore the stark, cocoa-coloured terrain and trek out to one or two gompas. The valley's mountain backbone looks east to the Nubra River and west to the Shyok River, which meet amid sand dunes and boulder fields. To the north and east, the mighty Karakoram Range marks the Indian border with China and Pakistan. In these valleys the climate is relatively mild, though dust storms are common, whipping up sand and light debris in choking clouds above the broad riverbeds; the altitude is around 3100m, meaning that the risk of developing altitude sickness is quite low, especially if you've spent a day or two in Leh.

Before the region passed into the administrative hands of Leh, Nubra's ancient kings ruled from a palace in Charasa, atop an isolated hillock opposite Sumur, home to the valley's principal monastery. Further up the Nubra River, the hot springs of Panamik, once welcomed by footsore traders, can still be refreshing after a day on a bumpy bus. By the neighbouring Shyok River, Diskit, surveyed by a hillside gumpa, lies just 7km from Hundur, known for its peculiar high-altitude double-humped Bactrian camels. Beyond, it is now possible to travel all the way north to the Muslim village of Turtuk.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY NORTH OF LEH: NUBRA VALLEY
BUS THERE ARE TWO MAIN ROUTES FROM LEH. THE MAIN ONE IS THE DAILY 7.30AM SERVICE TO DISKIT (6–7HR), FROM WHICH HUNDUR IS A SHORT TAXI RIDE (OR A LONG WALK) AWAY; IN SUMMER, AN ADDITIONAL WEEKLY SERVICE (6.30AM SAT; 9–10HR) GOES ALL THE WAY TO TURTUK. THE SECOND IS THE SUMMER-ONLY SERVICE TO PANAMIK (6.30AM; 7–8HR), WHICH PASSES SUMUR ON THE WAY. YOU SHOULD ALWAYS TRY TO BOOK YOUR RETURN JOURNEY AS SOON AS YOU ARRIVE.

By jeep Up to five people can rent a jeep and driver from Leh taxi rank or any tour operator. A complete two-day itinerary, including a visit to Diskit and Panamik, costs ₹10,500 for the vehicle (and therefore from ₹1750 per person), or ₹19,700 for three days including Pangong Tso.

GETTING AROUND BY BUS THERE ARE USUALLY A FEW DAILY SERVICES BETWEEN DISKIT AND PANAMIK.

By taxi There are few jeeps or minibuses in the valley but you can negotiate day-trips from Diskit or Sumur up either of the river branches.

Khardung La Retrun Day-trip from Leh less than ₹3000 per jeep •

Operators such as Ladakh Cycling will drive you up and allow you to cycle back down to Leh First things first – KHARDUNG LA is not the world's highest stretch of road, driveable or otherwise. There are at least two loftier places in Tibet, and another in Bolivia, while the highest of the lot opened in late 2017 in the southeast of Ladakh: Umling La, which tops out at just over 5800m. Regardless, Khardung La is probably still the most dramatic of the lot, and it makes for an exciting journey. Most of the route north from Leh to Nubra is now good, metalled road, though there's still around 7km of rough, bus-battering surface either side of the pass; the ascent from Leh (1h 30min–2hr) is rapid, and on the way you may luck out and see planes landing at the airport, 20km away and a full 2km below – a wonderfully weird feeling. The altitude at the pass itself has been wrongly marked for years; the most “optimistic” reading has been replaced with a more reasonable one (5,480m), though it's still some way off the actual altitude of 5359m. After a few selfies and a cup of masala chai from the military café, most visitors are on their way – some back to Leh, others on to Nubra on a gentler road down. Due to its strategic importance as the military road to the battlefields of the Siachen Glacier, the road to Nubra is kept open all year round, but conditions can see it closed at any time – far more likely in the winter, of course.

Diskit DISKIT is the largest and most appealing population centre north of Leh, and an ideal base for touring the valleys – everything listed here is within easy day-trip distance from Diskit. The town is centred on a bazaar, which courses downhill with its attendant buildings likewise dropping down in a step-like fashion. There's also an appealing old town, whose low, balconied houses lie below the main road.

Diskit gompa Daily 7am–7pm • Charge • Walkable in 30min from main road, though most go up by taxi Located by a decidedly non-ancient 30m seated Buddha statue is Diskit's picturesque gompa, built in 1420. After the long climb up from the main road, further steps up climb past the monks' quarters to the spooky Gon-khang, first of a group of temples. Local legend has it that a Mongol demon, a sworn enemy of Buddhism, was slain nearby, but his lifeless body kept returning to the gompa; you'll see what are reputed to be his wrinkled head and hand clasped by a pot-bellied protector deity at the back of the hall.

The diminutive Lachung temple, higher up, is the oldest here; soot-soiled murals face a huge Tsong-kha-pa statue, topped with a Gelug-pa yellow hat. In the heart of the gompa, the Du-khang's remarkable mural, filling a raised cupola above the hall, depicts Tibet's Tashilhunpo gompa, where the Panchen Lama is receiving a long stream of visitors approaching on camels, horses and carts.

ACCOMMODATION DESERT HIMALAYA NORTHEAST DISKIT
EDGE OF DISKIT, ☎DESERTHIMALAYARESORT.COM.
UPMARKET GLAMPING OPTION JUST OUTSIDE CENTRAL
DISKIT, WITH A SERIES OF LUXURIOUS TENTS FEATURING BEDS, SHOWERS AND TOILET FACILITIES. GOOD FOOD, TOO. ₹
₹₹₹

Olthang Close to the main road prayer wheel ☎01980 220025. Offers a range of smart rooms and camping. Home-grown vegetables from the picturesque garden are served for dinner in the dining hall. ₹₹

Sunrise Diskit Just downhill from the main road prayer wheel ☎01980 220011. This simple place offers cheap rustic rooms, some with shared bathrooms, and a pleasant garden. ₹

EATING AND DRINKING ★BAR & RESTAURANT EAST OF THE CENTRAL VILLAGE CROSSROADS, NO PHONE. YOU'LL HAVE TO LOOK HARD TO FIND THIS PLACE, FOR THERE'S NO SIGN – IT'S NEXT TO THE WESTERN END OF THE MANI WALL BY THE STEN-DEL HOTEL. THE COURTYARD BAR (NOBODY'S HERE FOR THE “RESTAURANT” COMPONENT) LOOKS LIKE IT WOULD BE QUITE AT HOME ON A THAI ISLAND, RIGHT DOWN TO THE BAMBOO WALLS AND COOL-LOOKING STAFF; THE

CUSTOMERS, THOUGH, ARE ALL EARTHY LOCALS QUAFFING CANS OF KINGFISHER, OR SUPPING SHOTS OF SPIRITS. ₹₹

Rinchen Sherpa At the top of the bazaar, no phone. An indisputably local place to eat, with veg momos and bowls of thukpa. It's tucked into a cute little alley, and unsigned, so you may have to ask around. ₹

Hundur Seven kilometres west of Diskit, in a wooded valley beyond some impressive sand dunes, is the village of HUNDUR. Despite a tiny population – even in season – the place is quite spread out, meaning that it lacks the vibe of Diskit; some, however, prefer the even more relaxed atmosphere. Its principal monastery lies just below the main road, near the bridge and the end of the bus route, but most visitors are here for the dunes.

The sand dunes Daily 7am–7pm • Charge • Camel rides Summer only 9am–noon & 3.30–7pm The village is renowned for its herd of Bactrian camels (a vestige of its days on the old trans-Karakoram trade route), which you will invariably encounter if you walk towards the sand dune area that hems Hunder in to its east. Even if you don't want to ride one, you can go a-wandering by yourself, and there are usually ATVs for hire too.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING GOBA GUESTHOUSE HUNDUR
400M DOWN FROM THE ROADSIDE GOMPA, ㊦
GOBAGUESTHOUSE.COM. THIS FRIENDLY HANGOUT IS A QUAINT, LOW-KEY AFFAIR WITH GOOD FOOD, A SUNNY YARD AND HUNDREDS OF FLOWERS. SOME ROOMS HAVE ATTACHED
BATHROOMS. APR–OCT. ₹₹

Snow Leopard Signposted off the main road at the back of the village, ㊦ hotelsnowleopard.com. Completely rebuilt in traditional style to become one of the smartest hotels in the valley, this offers beautifully furnished rooms with satellite TV, and a garden area to relax in. ₹₹₹

Turtuk Almost 80km northwest of Hundur and only seven kilometres short of the Line of Control with Pakistan, the remote and enticing village of TURTUK opened up to foreigners in 2009. The spectacular drive along the Shyok Valley is just as enjoyable as the sense of having arrived at the northernmost point you can reach in India. In fact, the village was in Pakistan until the 1971 war and is a gateway to the inaccessible Siachen Glacier. Despite being predominantly Muslim, Turtuk has a couple of small gompas, as well as the odd simple mosque.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING KHARMANG TURTUK
GUESTHOUSE JUST OUTSIDE THE VILLAGE, ☎KHARMANG-GUEST-HOUSE.BUSINESS.SITE. BY FAR THE MOST PLEASANT PLACE IN THE AREA. THE ROOMS ARE ALL SIMPLY FURNISHED WITH LARGE PANELLED WINDOWS AND THE SHARED BATHROOMS ARE KEPT EXTREMELY CLEAN. ₹

Sumur

Beyond the confluence of the Shyok and Nubra rivers, SUMUR is a sleepy oasis spread over a large area – similar to Hunder, but without some of the charm. It is home to the valley's most influential monastery, Samstem Ling gompa, a pleasant 40min uphill walk behind the village. Built in 1841, the gompa accommodates just under a hundred Gelug-pa monks of all ages; if you want to catch the morning or evening puja, it's best to stay in town for the night.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING AO GUESTHOUSE SUMUR
CENTRE OF VILLAGE, 100M FROM PRAYER WHEEL ☎94697 31976. SIX OF THE BASIC DOUBLES HAVE ATTACHED BATHS, PLUS THERE'S A RELAXING GARDEN, VEGETARIAN CAFÉ AND CAMPING. ₹

Lchang Nang West of village, ☎lchangnang.com. Upscale option with great views of the mountains across the Nubra, featuring beautifully-decorated cottages set beside a lovely garden which makes a grand place to chill out. ₹₹₹

Panamik Twenty-two km up the valley from Sumur, PANAMIK (aka Pinchmik) is as far north as you can go up the Nubra Valley, a dusty hamlet overlooked by the pinpoint summit of Charouk Dongchen. Again, it's a somewhat spread-out place, though this time without any distinct centre; it has, however, found fame for its hot springs, with a few places to enjoy them around 1km south of the village. The sapphire Nubra runs to the west of the village, and splitting into wide rivulets at this point, it seems shallow and tame – it's not, and heed local advice not to ford it, as there have been several reported accidents involving travellers.

The hot springs Main springs daily 9am–5pm • Charge • Oasis springs May–Sept 9am–5pm • Charge The main hot spring centre lies at the end of a dirt track, running a short way uphill from the main road, south of the village. It's cheap but pretty underwhelming, with its two gender-segregated pools set in what can only be described as an ugly concrete building. More fun is the Oasis Herbal Bath centre nearby, on the other side of the main road; here at least a couple of the pools are out in the open, though it's open for less of the year.

Ensa gompa A dot on the mountainside across the river, Ensa gompa is the main historical attraction in these parts, and now accessible by vehicle. The walking route, three hours each way, passes through the village and crosses a bridge beyond the vast boulder field 3km upstream, then joins a track above the river for around the same distance back again. Though the gompa is usually locked, the view from crumbling chorten rows nearby make the climb worthwhile.

ACCOMMODATION HOT SPRINGS GUESTHOUSE PANAMIK
SOUTH END OF VILLAGE, ON THE MAIN ROAD ☎01980 247043.
SET IN A PLEASANT FLOWER-FILLED GARDEN FAIRLY CLOSE TO THE SPRINGS, THIS ONE OF THE ONLY PLACES IN TOWN WITH ATTACHED BATHROOMS, ALTHOUGH THE ROOMS LACK CHARACTER. NO WI-FI. ₹

West of Leh Of the many gompas accessible by road west of Leh, only Spitok, piled on a hilltop at the end of the airport runway, and Phyang, which presides over one of Ladakh's most picturesque villages, are most easily visited on day-trips from the capital; however, Likkir and the temple complex at Alchi, with its wonderfully preserved eleventh-century murals, are also within range, though they're usually seen en route to or from Kargil. The 231km journey, which takes in a couple of high passes and some mind-blowing scenery, can be completed in a single six-hour haul, slightly less by jeep. To do this stretch of road justice, however, you should spend at least a few days making short forays up the side-valleys of the Indus, where idyllic settlements and gompas nestle amid barley fields and mountains.

One of the great landmarks punctuating the former caravan route is the monastery of Lamayuru. Reached via a nail-biting sequence of hairpin bends as the highway climbs out of the Indus Valley to begin its meandering ascent of Fotu La, it lies within walking distance of some extraordinary lunar-like rock formations, at the start of the main trekking route south to Padum in Zaskar. Further west still, beyond the dramatic Namika La pass, Mulbekh is the last Buddhist village on the highway. From here on, gompas and gonchas give way to onion-domed mosques and flowing salwar kameez.

The Leh–Kargil road once struck fear into foreign travellers, though it's now a much smoother affair – only the section around Zoji La remains rough going, though landslides, rockfall and dodgy bridges remain constant sources of peril, and accidents remain common. In summer, transport along the highway is straightforward; getting to more remote spots, however, can be hard and it is worth considering getting a group together to rent a jeep from tour operators in Leh.

RAFTING AND KAYAKING IN LADAKH WHEN WATER LEVELS ARE HIGH, BETWEEN THE END OF JUNE AND LATE AUGUST, LEH'S MORE ENTREPRENEURIAL TRAVEL AGENTS OPERATE RAFTING TRIPS ON THE INDUS AND ZASKAR RIVERS. THE ROUTES ARE TAME IN COMPARISON WITH NEPAL'S, BUT FLOATING DOWNSTREAM IN A TWELVE-SEATER

RUBBER INFLATABLE IS A HUGELY ENJOYABLE WAY TO EXPERIENCE THE RUGGED AND BEAUTIFUL LANDSCAPE. TWO DIFFERENT STRETCHES OF THE RIVER INDUS ARE MOST COMMONLY USED: FROM PHEY NEAR SPITOK TO THE INDUS–ZANSKAR CONFLUENCE AT NYEMO (3HR), AND FROM NYEMO TO BELOW THE ANCIENT TEMPLE COMPLEX AT ALCHI (2HR 30MIN). EXPERIENCED RAFTERS MAY ALSO WANT TO TRY THE MORE CHALLENGING ROUTE BETWEEN ALCHI AND KHALSI, WHICH TAKES IN THE 1KM-LONG SERIES OF RAPIDS AT NURLA. THE ANNUAL MULTIDAY EXPEDITION DOWN THE RIVER ZANSKAR TO THE INDUS IS BY FAR THE MOST REWARDING AS IT ALSO INCLUDES THE SPECTACULAR ROAD APPROACH TO PADUM. A POPULAR SHORTER ROUTE ON THE ZANSKAR IS FROM CHILING TO NYEMO (3HR).

Several adventure tour operators in Leh offer white-water rafting or kayaking on the Indus. Trips should be booked at least a day in advance; depending on how far from Leh you go, prices range from ₹1000–1800 per person for half-day trips (including transport; ₹200 or so extra for lunch). Make sure when you book that they include transport to and from the river, rental of life jackets and helmets, and meals, and that there is a waterproof strongbox for valuables.

TREKKING IN LADAKH AND ZANSKAR THE ANCIENT FOOTPATHS THAT CRISSCROSS LADAKH AND ZANSKAR PROVIDE SOME OF THE MOST INSPIRING TREKKING IN THE HIMALAYAS. THREADING TOGETHER REMOTE BUDDHIST VILLAGES AND MONASTERIES, CUT OFF IN WINTER BEHIND HIGH PASSES WHOSE ROCKY TOPS BRISTLE WITH PRAYER

FLAGS, NEARLY ALL ARE LONG, HARD AND HIGH – BUT NEVER DULL. WHETHER YOU MAKE ALL THE NECESSARY PREPARATIONS YOURSELF, OR PAY AN AGENCY TO DO IT FOR YOU, LEH IS THE BEST PLACE TO PLAN A TREK; THE BEST TIME IS FROM JUNE TO SEPTEMBER.

Most hikers arrange their trips as package treks, sold by agencies in Leh. Prices are pretty standard across the board, and in any case agencies often pool people together. For an idea of prices, Likkir to Temisgang is one of the shortest treks available, and will cost around ₹11,500 all in assuming a group of four or more; Markha Valley expeditions, on the other hand, start at more like ₹26,000 for six days.

Trekking independently is straightforward if you don't mind haggling and are happy to organize the logistics yourself. To find ponies and guides, head for the Tibetan refugee camp at Choglamsar, 3km south of Leh; doing so can work out far cheaper than package tours from Leh. You can rent equipment, including high-quality tents (₹150–300 a day), sleeping bags (₹100–150 a day), gas stoves (₹60–80 a day), sleeping mats (₹30–80 a day), duck-down jackets and boots (₹100–200 a day), either through your chosen agency or at somewhere like Venture Ladakh; if you're intending to climb Stok-Kangri you may need to dish out ₹100–200 for an ice axe. Also consider buying Indian equipment in the bazaar, and then later selling it on.

Minimize your impact in culturally and ecologically sensitive areas by being as self-reliant as possible, especially with food and fuel. Buying provisions along the way puts an unnecessary burden on the villages' subsistence-oriented economies, and encourages strings of unsightly “tea shops” (often run by outsiders) to sprout along the trails. Always burn kerosene, never wood – a scarce and valuable resource. Refuse should be packed up, not disposed of along the route, no matter how far from the nearest town you are, and plastics retained for recycling at the Ecology Centre in Leh (, Wledeg.org). Always bury your faeces and burn your toilet paper afterwards. Finally, do not defecate in the dry-stone huts along the trails; local shepherds use them for shelter during snowstorms.

For information about trekking to Zaskar from the south, see “Trekking in Lahaul and Spiti”.

LIKKIR TO TEMISGANG A DRIVEABLE ROAD ALONG THE OLD CARAVAN ROUTE THROUGH THE HILLS BETWEEN LIKKIR AND TEMISGANG MAKES A LEISURELY TWO-DAY HIKE, WHICH TAKES IN THREE MAJOR MONASTERIES (LIKKIR, RHIZONG AND TEMISGANG) AND A STRING OF IDYLIC VILLAGES. THE “SHAM” TREK, AS YOU’LL SEE IT ADVERTISED, IS A GREAT INTRODUCTION TO TREKKING IN LADAKH, THE PERFECT ACCLIMATIZER IF YOU PLAN TO ATTEMPT ANY LONGER AND MORE DEMANDING ROUTES. PONIES AND GUIDES FOR THE TRIP MAY BE ARRANGED ON SPEC AT EITHER LIKKIR OR TEMISGANG VILLAGES, BOTH OF WHICH HAVE SMALL GUESTHOUSES AND ARE CONNECTED BY DAILY BUSES TO LEH.

THE MARKHA VALLEY THE BEAUTIFUL MARKHA VALLEY RUNS PARALLEL WITH THE INDUS ON THE FAR SOUTHERN SIDE OF THE SNOWY STOK-KANGRI MASSIF, VISIBLE FROM LEH. PASSING THROUGH CULTIVATED VALLEY FLOORS, UNDULATING HIGH-ALTITUDE GRASSLAND AND SNOW-PRONE PASSES, THE WINDING TRAIL ALONG IT ENABLES TREKKERS TO EXPERIENCE LIFE IN A ROADLESS REGION WITHOUT HAVING TO HIKE FOR WEEKS INTO THE WILDERNESS – AS A RESULT, IT HAS BECOME THE MOST FREQUENTED ROUTE IN LADAKH. DO NOT ATTEMPT THIS TREK WITHOUT ADEQUATE WET- AND COLD-WEATHER GEAR: SNOW FLURRIES SWEEP ACROSS THE HIGHER REACHES OF THE MARKHA VALLEY EVEN IN AUGUST.

The circuit takes six to eight days to complete, and is usually followed anticlockwise, starting from the village of Spitok, 10km south of Leh. A more dramatic approach via Stok affords matchless views over the Indus Valley to the Ladakh and Karakoram ranges, but involves a sharp ascent of Stok La (4848m) on only the second day; don’t try it unless you are already well acclimatized to the altitude.

PADUM TO LAMAYURU THE TREK ACROSS THE RUGGED ZANSKAR RANGE FROM PADUM TO LAMAYURU USUALLY COMPLETED IN TEN TO TWELVE DAYS, IS A HUGELY POPULAR BUT VERY DEMANDING LONG-DISTANCE ROUTE,

NOT TO BE ATTEMPTED AS A FIRST-TIME TREK NOR WITHOUT ADEQUATE PREPARATION, PONIES AND A GUIDE.

LAMAYURU TO ALCHI THE FIVE-DAY TREK FROM LAMAYURU, ON THE SRINAGAR–LEH HIGHWAY, TO ALCHI IS ONE OF THE TOUGHEST IN THE REGION, WINDING ACROSS HIGH PASSES AND A TANGLE OF ISOLATED VALLEYS PAST A COUPLE OF ANCIENT GOMPAS, AND OFFERING SUPERB PANORAMIC VIEWS OF THE WILDERNESS SOUTH OF THE INDUS VALLEY. IT'S VERY HARD TO FOLLOW IN PLACES, SO DON'T ATTEMPT IT WITHOUT AN EXPERIENCED GUIDE, PONIES AND ENOUGH PROVISIONS TO TIDE YOU OVER IF YOU LOSE YOUR WAY.

STOK-KANGRI VISIBLE FROM MOST OF LEH, STOK-KANGRI (6120M) IS REPUTED TO BE THE EASIEST PEAK ABOVE 6000M IN THE WORLD. SEVERAL AGENTS IN LEH ADVERTISE FIVE-DAY CLIMBING EXPEDITIONS VIA THE VILLAGE OF STOK WITH A NON-TECHNICAL FINAL CLIMB FOR AROUND ₹5000 PER HEAD PER DAY FOR A GROUP OF FOUR. IT'S STRAIGHTFORWARD TO WALK UP IT INDEPENDENTLY, THOUGH YOU'LL NEED TO CARRY ENOUGH FOOD FOR THREE OR FOUR DAYS.

Spitok Return Taxi including Phyang less than ₹2000 from Leh, or take any bus heading west along the main Srinagar highway The gompa at SPITOK, rising incongruously from the end of the airport runway, makes a good half-day foray from Leh, 10km up the north side of the Indus Valley. Extremely picturesque, the fifteenth-century monastery tumbles down the sides of a steep knoll to a tight cluster of farmhouses and well-watered fields. Approached by road from the north, or from the south along a footpath that winds through Spitok village, its spacious rooftops command superb views. The main complex is of less interest than the Palden Lumo chapel, perched on a ridge above.

Although visiting soldiers from the nearby Indian army barracks consider the deity inside the chapel to be Kali Mata, the key-keeper will assure visitors that what many consider to be the black-faced and bloodthirsty Hindu goddess of death and destruction is actually Yidam Dorje Jigjet. Coloured electric lights illuminate the cobwebbed chamber of veiled guardian deities whose ferocious faces are only revealed once a year. If you have a torch, check out the six-hundred-year-old paintings on the back wall, partially hidden by eerie chaam masks used during the winter festival season.

Phyang Buses from Leh (3 daily at 9am, 2pm & 4.30pm), returning an hour later; however, the main highway, which has many more vehicles to and from Leh, is only a 30min walk away

- Return taxi including Spitok ₹2000 • Gon-khang Charge A mere 17km west of Leh, the gompa at PHYANG looms large at the head of a secluded side-valley that tapers north into the Ladakh Range from the Srinagar highway. The gompa itself houses a fifty-strong community of lamas, but few antique murals of note, most of them having recently been painted over with brighter colours. Its only treasures are a small collection of fourteenth-century Kashmiri bronzes in the modern Guru-Padmasambhava temple and the light and airy Du-khang's three silver chortens, one of which is decorated with a seven-eyed dzi stone. The gem, considered to be highly auspicious, was brought to Phyang from Tibet by the monastery's former head lama, whose ashes the chorten encases. Tucked away around the side, the shrine in the gompa's gloomily atmospheric Gon-khang houses a ferocious veiled protector deity and an amazing collection of weapons and armour plundered during the Mongol invasions of the fourteenth century. Also dangling from the cobweb-covered rafters are several sets of yak horns, believed to be 900-year-old relics of the Bon cult.

Phyang's annual festival, Phyang Tsedup, held between mid-July and early August to coincide with the tourist season, is the second largest in Ladakh after the one held in Hemis. Celebrated with the usual masked chaam dances, the event is marked with a ritual exposition of a giant 10m brocaded silk thangka.

Likkir Bus from Leh in summer (1 daily at 4pm; 2hr), returning in the morning; the main highway, which has many more vehicles to and from Leh, is a 1hr walk away • Taxi including Alchi ₹3000–₹4000 return from Leh • Museum Daily: summer daily 8am–1pm & 2–6pm, winter daily 10am–1pm & 2–4pm • Charge Five kilometres to the north of the main Leh–Srinagar highway, shortly before the village of Saspol, the large and wealthy gompa of LIKKIR is home to around one hundred monks and renowned for its 23m-high yellow statue of the Buddha-to-come that towers serenely above the terraced fields. The gompa, 3km up the valley from Likkir village, was extensively renovated in the eighteenth century and today shows little sign of the antiquity related to the site. There is a small museum in the complex, displaying some antique thangkas and other Buddhist paraphernalia. The gompa overlooks the starting point for the popular two-day hike to Temisgang via Rhizong, which provides a comparatively gentle introduction to trekking in Ladakh.

A pleasant break from the bustle of Leh, the village of Likkir itself offers a small but adequate choice of accommodation which, along with the sheer tranquillity of the surroundings, tempts many travellers to linger a few days.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING CHHUME GUEST HOUSE JUST BEHIND THE GOMPA ☎946 920 0793. BASIC PLACE RUN BY WELCOMING HOSTS, WITH CARPETED, NON-ATTACHED ROOMS AND A HOMELY LOUNGE. ₹

★Norboo Spon Guesthouse East side of the village ☎941 999 1510. Enjoy a unique homestay-style experience with full board in this out-of-the-way guesthouse, with simple non-attached rooms. ₹₹

Alchi

Private buses from Leh at 8am (summer only, returning in the afternoon) and 4.30pm (year-round, returning in the morning); 2hr 30min • Taxi including Alchi ₹3000–₹4000 return from Leh • Daily 8am–1pm & 2–6pm • Charge Driving past on the nearby Srinagar–Leh highway, you’d never guess that the spectacular sweep of wine-coloured scree 3km across the Indus from Saspol conceals one of the most significant historical sites in Asia. Yet the low pagoda-roofed Chos-khor, or “religious enclave”, at ALCHI, 70km west of Leh, harbours an extraordinary wealth of ancient wall paintings and wood sculpture, miraculously preserved for more than nine centuries inside five tiny mud-walled temples. The site’s earliest murals are regarded as the finest surviving examples of a style that flourished in Kashmir during the “Second Spreading”. Barely a handful of the monasteries founded during this era escaped the Muslim depredations of the fourteenth century; Alchi is both the least remote and most impressive of them all.

Legend tells that Rinchen Zangpo, the “Great Translator”, stuck his walking stick in the ground here en route to Chilling and upon his return found it had become a poplar, an auspicious sign that made him build a temple on the spot. One tree near the entrance to the Chos-khor, denoted with a signboard, is symbolic of this event. The Chos-khor itself consists of five near-adjointing temples, various residential buildings and a scattering of large chortens, surrounded by a mud-and-stone wall. Most concentrate on the two oldest temples, the Sumtsek and the Vairocana, although the Lotsa and Manjushree shrines also boast colourful murals, and the latter a huge, brightly painted statue of the Buddha of Wisdom.

The Sumtsek Standing to the left of the Du-khang, the Sumtsek marks the high watermark of early medieval Indian-Buddhist art. Its woodcarvings and paintings, dominated by rich reds and blues, are almost as fresh and vibrant today as they were nine hundred years ago when the squat triple-storey structure was built. The heart of the shrine is a colossal statue of Maitreya, the Buddha-to-come, his head high in the second storey. Accompanying him are two equally grand bodhisattvas, their heads peering serenely down through gaps in the eaves. Each of these stucco statues wears a figure-hugging dhoti, adorned with different, meticulously detailed motifs.

Avalokitesvara, the bodhisattva of compassion (to the left), has pilgrimage sites, court vignettes, palaces and pre-Muslim-style stupas on his robe, while that of Maitreya is decorated with episodes from the life of Gautama Buddha. The robe of Manjushri, destroyer of falsehood, to the right, shows 85 masters of Tantra, the mahasiddhas, adopting complex yogic poses in a maze of bold square patterns.

Among the exquisite murals, some repaired in the sixteenth century, is the famous six-armed green goddess Prajnaparamita, the “Perfection of Wisdom”. Amazingly, when viewed from the centre of the shrine, this – and the multitude of other images that plaster the interior of the Sumtsek – resolves into a harmonious whole.

The Vairocana An inscription records that Alchi’s oldest structure, the Vairocana, was erected late in the eleventh century. Its centrepiece is an unlit, hard-to-make-out image of Vairocana, the “Buddha Resplendent”, flanked by the four main Buddha manifestations that appear all over Alchi’s temple walls, always presented in their associated colours: Akshobya (“Unshakeable”; blue), Ratnasambhava (“Jewel Born”; yellow), Amitabha (“Boundless Radiance”; red) and Amoghasiddhi (“Unfailing Success”; green). The other walls are decorated with six elaborate mandalas, interspersed with intricate friezes.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING THE NUMBER OF ALCHI PLACES TO STAY HAS GROWN AS ALCHI’S FAME HAS SPREAD BUT PRICES ARE GENERALLY QUITE HIGH. MOST SERVE FOOD, SO APART FROM A COUPLE OF DHABAS IN THE VILLAGE CENTRE, THERE IS JUST ONE INDEPENDENT RESTAURANT.

Heritage Home Right beside Chos-kor entrance, 📍heritagealchi.com. Pleasantly welcoming mid-range guesthouse with a shady courtyard. The rooms are quite large and decorated in traditional Ladakhi style, and some look straight into the Chos-kor. ₹₹₹

Lotsava About 50m below the access road 📞9419347729, 📧stanzindorjey@gmail.com. Very basic guesthouse with good views from the attached and non-attached rooms, but layers of dust. Meals usually available, no wi-fi. ₹

Ule Ethnic Resort Uleytokpo, 📍uleresort.com. Not in Alchi, but a short drive away in Uleytokpo, this resort is made up of sweet little huts and cottages, many of which have wonderful views of the Indus below.

Mercifully for a place with little around it, the food here is good. No wi-fi. ₹
₹₹

★Zimskhang Holiday Home On lane to Chos-kor, 001982227086. On one side of the lane to Chos-kor is a smart hotel, and on the other a highly recommended garden restaurant. ₹₹₹

Lamayuru Daily bus from Leh (3pm, return 2pm next day); also accessible on Leh-Kargil buses • A road now goes right up to the monastery, or take a steep footpath up through the village from the highway • Gompa Daily 8am–1pm & 1.30–6pm • Charge If one sight could be said to sum up Ladakh, it would have to be the gompa at LAMAYURU, 130km west of Leh and 107km east of Kargil. Hemmed in by a moonscape of scree-covered mountains, the whitewashed medieval monastery towers above a scruffy cluster of tumbledown mud-brick houses from the top of a near-vertical, weirdly eroded cliff. A major landmark on the old silk route, the gompa numbers among the 108 (a spiritually significant number) founded by the Rinchen Zangpo in the tenth and eleventh centuries. However, its craggy seat, believed to have sheltered Milarepa, a Tibetan Buddhist saint, during his religious odyssey across the Himalayas in the eleventh century, was probably sacred long before the advent of Buddhism, when local people followed the shamanistic Bon cult. Just ten to twenty lamas of the Brigungpa branch of the Kagyu school are now left, as opposed to the four hundred that lived here a century or so ago, though the number increases in summer. Nor does Lamayuru harbour much in the way of art treasures; the main reason visitors make a stop on this section of the Srinagar–Leh road is to photograph the gompa from the valley floor (though the line of poplars makes this hard), or to pick up the trail to Zaskar.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING ★DRAGON JUST LAMAYURU
OFF MAIN ROAD AT BOTTOM OF VILLAGE, 0

DRAGONLAMAYURUBEST.WORDPRESS.COM. THE OLD HOP-COVERED BLOCK HAS A RANGE OF NON-ATTACHED ROOMS, INCLUDING ONE COVETABLE GLASS ROOM, WHILE THE NEWER BLOCK CONTAINS SMARTER EN SUITES. THE PLEASANT GARDEN RESTAURANT MAKES IT A GOOD PLACE TO EAT. IT'S A GOOD TREKKING RESOURCE TOO. ₹

Niranjana Near the gompa entrance 01982224555. This imposing four-storey building has carpeted, concrete rooms with good views of the surrounding valleys; the shared bathrooms have hot running water. Its location allows it to be overpriced. ₹₹

Mulbekh Accessible on Leh-Kargil buses • Gompa Daily 8am–6pm • Charge West of Lamayuru, the main road crawls to the top of Fotu La (4091m), the highest pass between Leh and Srinagar, drops and then ascends Namika La (3760m), so called (it means “Sky-Pillar”) because of the jagged pinnacle of rock that looms above it to the south. Once across the windswept ridge, it drops through a dramatic landscape of disintegrating desert cliffs and pebbly ravines to the wayside village of MULBEKH – the last sizeable Buddhist settlement along the road before the Muslim Purig settlements around Kargil. The village is scattered around the banks of the River Wakha, lined with poplars and orchards of walnut and apricot trees and would be a sleepy hamlet were it not for the endless convoys of trucks and tourist buses that thunder through while the passes are open. Those visitors who stop at all tend only to stay long enough to grab a chai at a roadside dhaba and to have a quick look at the 7m-high Maitreya (“Chamba” in Tibetan) statue carved from the face of a gigantic boulder nearby. The precise origins of the shapely four-armed Buddha-to-be are not known, but an ancient inscription on its side records that it was carved between the seventh and eighth centuries, well before Buddhism was fully established in Tibet. The single-chambered gompa in front of the statue is decorated with particularly beautiful murals, and is dedicated to the thousand-armed Chenrazig (Avalokitesvara).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING PARADISE ON MULBEKH
MAIN ROAD OPPOSITE THE STATUE 01985 270010. A FEW

SHABBY NON-ATTACHED ROOMS NESTLE ABOVE A CANTEEN SERVING THUKPA, DHAL, RICE, MOMOS AND BUTTER TEA DURING THE DAY, AND BOOZE BY NIGHT. ₹

Kargil Though it is surrounded by awesome scenery, most travellers don't spend more than a few hours in KARGIL, capital of the area dubbed "Little Baltistan", which rises in a clutter of corrugated-iron rooftops from the confluence of the Suru and Drass rivers. As a halfway point between Leh and Srinagar, its mundane hotels once filled up at night with weary bus passengers, who then got up at 4am and careered off under cover of darkness; this has not really been necessary since improvements to the road were made, but some choose to stay on, and many actually end up preferring the place to Leh. Bearded, woolly-hatted old men stroll the streets past wholesalers bearing sacks of grains, spices and tins of ghee, and butchers displaying severed goats' heads on dusty shelves.

The majority of Kargil's eighty thousand inhabitants, known as Purig, are strict Muslims. Unlike their Sunni cousins in Kashmir, however, the locals here are orthodox Shias, which not only explains the ubiquitous Ayatollah photographs, but also the conspicuous absence of women from the bazaar; Western women should keep their arms and legs covered and may arouse mild curiosity. You might even spot the odd black turban of an Agha, one of Kargil's spiritual leaders, who still go on pilgrimage to holy sites in Iran and have outlawed male-female social practices such as dancing. Descendants of settlers and Muslim merchants from Kashmir and Yarkand, Purig speak a dialect called Purgi – a mixture of Ladakhi and Balti.

Kargil is often used as a jumping-off point for the Suru Valley and the wider Zaskar area; if pressing on further west towards Srinagar, the first place of note you'll come across is Sonamarg, now out of Ladakh and inside Kashmir.

Brief history Had it not been for the daring Indian re-conquest of the region during the 1948 Indo-Pak War, Kargil would today be part of Baltistan, the region across the Line of Control which it closely resembles. Indeed, Kargil is so close to the LoC and Pakistani positions that it served as the logistics centre in the 1999 war and was repeatedly targeted by Pakistani artillery. Aside from the destruction of the odd building, however, much of the town escaped unscathed, as the army bases and airport lie on the outskirts of town. The dust has settled markedly in recent years and, as dialogue continues between India and Pakistan on Kashmir, tourist numbers have been steadily increasing.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BUSES ARRIVING IN KARGIL KARGIL FROM LEH AND SRINAGAR PULL IN BY THE RIVER, 150M BELOW THE MIDDLE OF THE BAZAAR, WHILE PRIVATE BUSES, MINIBUSES AND JEEPS SHARE A LARGER COMPOUND FURTHER SOUTH, JUST BELOW THE BAZAAR.

By bus Buses to Srinagar (7hr) leave mostly late at night, and to Leh (6hr) early morning. There are also several daily until 2pm to Panikhar (3hr), and afternoon departures to Mulbekh (1hr 30min). Services to Padum (12–13hr) are confined to a weekly summertime bus from Leh.

By jeep Shared jeeps to Leh (5hr) and Srinagar (6–7hr) mostly leave early in the morning. Unfortunately, only whole jeeps can be hired to Padum (9–10hr), but you can try asking around for a shared one.

ACCOMMODATION ROOM TARIFFS SOAR IN JULY AND AUGUST WHEN MOST TRAVELLERS PASS THROUGH; RATES
LOWER THAN THOSE GIVEN HERE ARE USUALLY AVAILABLE AT OTHER TIMES.

Baru La On a rise south of the centre ☎0962 259 2668. The most pleasant place to stay in town by far, with lovely rooms, a garden area (with occasional bonfires), and a viewing terrace. As their website states, “price includes a huge amount of tax, and an excellent breakfast”. ₹₹₹

Royal Inn South of the centre, by the river ☎01985 232114. A fine choice at this price level, and particularly good value given its likelihood to give discounts at any time. Many of their cosy rooms overlook the river; the deluxe options have particularly fine views. ₹₹₹

EATING EATING OPTIONS ARE RATHER LIMITED, BUT THE STREET FOOD CAN BE DELICIOUS – CHAI, CHAPATTIS AND OMELETTES, WITH HOT KASHMIRI BREAD SLATHERED WITH

BUTTER. SPICY SHISH KEBABS ARE ON SALE FROM LATE IN THE AFTERNOON.

Las Vegas Middle of the main bazaar 94691 93900. One of the more salubrious places (these things are relative), serving mainly non-veg Indian, Kashmiri and Chinese food, such as rogan josh and chow mein. ₹₹

Ruby South end of the main bazaar 94197 19903. Popular restaurant serving Kashmiri specialities including yakhani (meat boiled in yogurt) and gustaba (meat balls), typical of Central Asian cuisine. ₹

Tibetan Food Restaurant Middle of the main bazaar 94692 21128. All the favourites like momos and thukpa, dished up in a simple upstairs dining room. Choice can be limited. ₹₹

The Suru Valley Dividing two of the world's most formidable mountain ranges, the Suru Valley winds south from Kargil to the desolate Pensi La, the main entry point for Zaskar. The first leg leads through the broad lower reaches of the Suru Valley, strewn with Muslim villages clustered around metal mosque domes. As you progress southwards, the pristine white icefields and twin pinnacles of Nun-Kun (7135m and 7077m, respectively) nose over the horizon. Apart from a brief disappearance behind the steep sides of the valley at Panikhar, this awesome massif dominates the landscape all the way to Zaskar.

Panikhar Sixty-five km south of Kargil, PANIKHAR is by no means the largest settlement in the Suru Valley, but is nonetheless a good place to break the long journey to Padum. It's also a minor trekking centre, thanks to its position at the start of the Lonvilad Gali-Pahalgam trail.

The main reason to stop is to hike to nearby Parkachik La for panoramic views of the glacier-gouged north face of the mighty Nun-Kun massif. The trail up to the pass begins on the far side of the Suru River, crossed via a suspension bridge thirty minutes south of the village. It may look straightforward from Panikhar, but the three-hour climb up to the ridge gets very tough indeed towards the top, especially if you're not used to the altitude. However, even seasoned trekkers gasp in awe at the sight that greets them when they finally arrive at the cairns. Capped with a plume of cloud and with snow streaming from its huge pyramidal peak, Nun sails 3500m above the valley floor, draped with heavily crevassed hanging glaciers and flanked by its sisters, multi-pinnacled Kun and saddle-topped Barmal.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS AND TAXI THERE PANIKHAR ARE SEVERAL DAILY BUSES FROM KARGIL (2HR 30MIN), WITH THE LAST HEADING BACK AT 5PM, AND OCCASIONALLY SHARED TAXIS TOO, BUT NO SERVICES ON TO PADUM BAR THE WEEKLY (USUALLY) SUMMERTIME BUS FROM LEH, WHICH IS NOT TO BE RELIED UPON.

Hitching If you're looking for a lift to Padum (8–9hr), return to the check post 5km back down on the main road, and try your luck there (the earlier the better).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING APART FROM THE BUNGALOW LISTED BELOW, YOUR ONLY OPTION HERE IS TO HOMESTAY, WHICH IS INCREDIBLY EASY TO ARRANGE; EVEN IF THE FIRST PERSON YOU TALK TO HAS NO ROOM, THEY'LL PROBABLY INTRODUCE YOU TO SOMEONE WHO DOES.

Tourist Bungalow 100m from the bus stand,  kargil.nic.in/accommodation. Large but rather dowdy attached rooms full of old furniture. The restaurant serves simple veg meals, just about the only food available in the village. ₹

Rangdum and around Having wound across a seemingly endless boulder field, closed in on both sides by sheer mountain walls, the road to Zaskar emerges at a marshy open plain surrounded by snow peaks and mountainsides of near-vertical strata. Juldo, a tiny settlement whose fodder-stacked rooftops are strung with fluttering prayer flags, marks the beginning of Buddhist Suru. The most noteworthy place to break the journey is RANGDUM, a village that would be insignificant but for its splendid gompa, 5km east.

Continuing south on the main road, one glistening 6000m peak after another appears atop a series of side-valleys, many lined with gigantic folds of rock and ice. The real high point, though, is reserved for the dizzying descent beyond Pensi La (4401m), as the road's switchbacks swing over the colossal S-shaped Darung Drung Glacier, whose milky-green meltwaters drain southeast into the Stod Valley, visible below.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING RANGDUM AND AROUND
TOURIST BUNGALOW CENTRE OF RANGDUM, ☎
KARGIL.NIC.IN/ACCOMMODATION. ONE OF THE MOST REMOTE PLACES TO STAY IN INDIA, THIS GOVERNMENT
BUNGALOW IS PREDICTABLY BASIC BUT PROVIDES A ROOF
AND VERY SIMPLE FOOD ON REQUEST. NO WI-FI. ₹

Zaskar Walled in by the Great Himalayan Divide, ZANSKAR, literally “Land of White Copper”, has for decades exerted the allure of Shangri-La on visitors to Ladakh. The region’s staggering remoteness, extreme climate and distance from the major Himalayan trade routes has meant that the successive winds of change that have blown through the Indus Valley to the north have had little impact here. The annual influx of trekkers and a driveable road have certainly quickened the pace of development, but away from the main settlement of Padum, the Zanskaris’ way of life has altered little since the sage Padmasambhava passed through in the eighth century.

The nucleus of the region is a Y-shaped glacial valley system drained by three main rivers: the Stot (or Doda) and the Tsarap (or Lingit) join and flow north as the Zanskar. Lying to the leeward side of the Himalayan watershed, the valley sees a lot more snow than central Ladakh: even the lowest passes remain blocked for seven or eight months of the year, while midwinter temperatures can drop to a bone-numbing -40°C. Fifteen thousand or so tenacious souls subsist in this bleak and treeless terrain – among the coldest inhabited places on the planet – muffled up for half the year inside their smoke-filled whitewashed crofts, with a winter’s-worth of fodder piled on the roof.

Until the end of the 1970s, anything the resourceful Zanskaris could not produce for themselves (including timber for building) had to be transported into the region over 4000- to 5000-metre passes. In midwinter, they had to be carried along the frozen surface of the Zanskar from its confluence with the Indus at Nimmu, and this ten- to twelve-day round trip remains the quickest trekking route from Padum to the Srinagar–Leh road. Finally, in 1980, a driveable dirt track was blasted down the Suru and over Pensi La into the Stot Valley. Landslides and freak blizzards permitting (Pensi La can be snowbound even in August), the bumpy journey from Kargil to Padum can now be completed in as little as ten hours.

Padum

After a memorable trek or bus ride, PADUM, 240km to the south of Kargil, comes as a bit of an anticlimax. Instead of the picturesque Zanskari village you might expect, the region's administrative headquarters and principal roadhead turns out to be a desultory collection of typical concrete cubes, oily truck parks and tin-roofed government buildings. The settlement's only real appeal lies in its superb location. Nestled at the southernmost tip of a broad, fertile river basin, Padum presides over a flat patchwork of farmland enclosed on three sides by colossal walls of scree and snow-capped mountains.

Straddling a nexus of several long-distance trails, the town is an important trekking hub – during the short summer season, you'll see almost as many weather-beaten Westerners wandering around its sandy lanes as locals – a mixture of indigenous Buddhists and Sunni Muslims. Even so, facilities are still limited to a small (but growing) number of shops, restaurants and guesthouses. Nor is there much to see while you're waiting for your blisters to heal; the only noteworthy sight within easy walking distance is a small Tagrimo gompa, fifteen minutes' walk to the west.

ORGANIZING TREKS FROM PADUM BASIC TREKKING SUPPLIES ARE SOLD AT THE HOLE-IN-THE-WALL STORES ALONG THE BAZAAR. PRICES ARE MUCH HIGHER THAN ELSEWHERE, SO IT PAYS TO BRING YOUR OWN PROVISIONS WITH YOU FROM KARGIL. MOST TREKKERS ARRANGE PONIES THROUGH THE TOURIST OFFICE OR GUESTHOUSE OWNERS, OR YOU COULD TRY ZANSKAR TREK (📞ZANSKARTREK.COM), WHO ALSO PROVIDE GUIDES. EXPECT TO PAY AROUND ₹600 PER PONY PER DAY, DEPENDING ON THE TIME OF YEAR (PONIES TRANSPORT GRAIN DURING THE HARVEST, SO THEY'RE MORE EXPENSIVE IN EARLY SEPTEMBER). IF YOU HAVE TROUBLE FINDING A HORSE-WALLAH IN PADUM, ASK AT A NEIGHBOURING VILLAGE, SUCH AS PIPITING, A THIRTY-MINUTE WALK NORTH ACROSS THE FIELDS FROM PADUM, WHERE MANY OF THEM LIVE.

ARRIVAL AND GETTING AROUND BY BUS THE PRIVATE PADUM BUS FROM LEH (2 DAYS) VIA KARGIL (12–13HR) IS ERRATIC, BUT USUALLY OPERATES WEEKLY DURING SUMMER – ASK IN LEH WHICH DAY THIS CURRENTLY IS. THE ONLY SERVICES WITHIN THE VALLEY ARE FROM PADUM TO KARSHA (1 DAILY; 1HR), SOME OF WHICH GO ON TO ZANGLA (2 WEEKLY; 1HR 30MIN).

By jeep Due to the short season, jeep taxis in Padum (through the Padum Taxi Union office on the main road) are expensive: a trip to Karsha and back will probably cost ₹1500–2500.

INFORMATION TOURIST OFFICE THE TOURIST OFFICE, AS YOU ENTER THE VILLAGE ON THE MAIN ROAD (MON–SAT 10AM–4PM; ☎01983 245017), IS GOOD FOR GENERAL INFORMATION AND TREKKING ADVICE.

Services There are no official exchange or ATM facilities in Padum. A few places have wi-fi but connections, but they're still slow.

ACCOMMODATION ★MARQ 200M WEST OF THE MAIN BAZAAR ☎01983 245021. THE SMARTEST PLACE IN TOWN, WITH BRIGHT, SPACIOUS ROOMS, ALL OF WHICH HAVE CABLE TV AND SPLENDID VIEWS. RELATIVE LUXURY WITH A HOMELY FAMILY FEEL AND EXCELLENT FOOD. ₹₹₹

Mont Blanc South end of the main bazaar 01983 245183. Friendly French-run place with simple rooms, all with bathrooms and slight Gallic touches; also tent pitches. Good for trekking advice. ₹

Rigyal West of the main road 94692 24500, hotelrigyal.business.site. Relatively new option, with comfortable attached rooms (somewhat amusingly, all ten of them are “standard”), and decent food. ₹₹

EATING AND DRINKING FOOD SUPPLIES ARE PLENTIFUL IN SUMMER, BUT START TO DWINDLE AS AUTUMN APPROACHES. APART FROM THE GUESTHOUSE RESTAURANTS, THERE ARE SOME GOOD CHEAP DHABAS AND THE ODD NOTEWORTHY INDEPENDENT ESTABLISHMENT.

Korean Restaurant West end of the main bazaar, korean-restaurant-padum.business.site. Run by two sisters, this is something out of the ordinary – good Korean staples such as bibimbap, with degrees of spiciness to suit all palates. ₹

Zanskar Restaurant Middle of the main bazaar 94190 25612. The best of the Zanskari-cum-Tibetan joints, good for egg and local bread brekkies and well-prepared momos and thukpas later in the day. ₹

Karsha The hike across the fields from Padum to the gompa at KARSHA, Zanskar’s largest Gelug-pa monastery, is the most rewarding and popular side-trip. This cluster of whitewashed mud cubes clinging to the rocky lower slopes of the mountain north of Padum dates from the tenth to the fourteenth century. Of the prayer halls, the recently renovated Du-khang and Gon-khang at the top of the complex are the most impressive, while the small Chukshok-jal, set apart from the gompa below a ruined fort on the far side of a gully, contains Karsha’s oldest wall paintings, contemporaneous with those at Alchi. The tiny village is also a nicer place to stay than Padum.

En route to Karsha, you pass another large gompa, Sani, lauded as the oldest in Zanskar, and the only one built on the valley floor. Local legend attributes its foundation to the itinerant Padmasambhava (Guru Rinpoche) in the eighth century. Set apart from the temples a little to the north is a 2m-high Maitreya figure, carved out of local stone sometime between the eighth and tenth centuries.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE ON FOOT THE QUICKEST KARSHA WAY TO GET TO KARSHA ON FOOT (AROUND 2HR–2HR 30MIN) IS TO HEAD NORTH FROM PADUM TO THE CABLE BRIDGE ACROSS THE STOT, IMMEDIATELY BELOW THE MONASTERY.

By road Karsha can also be reached by road, via the bridge at Tungri, 8km northwest of Padum. There's a daily bus in summer that leaves Padum at 4pm, returning at 7am.

ACCOMMODATION SOME VILLAGERS RENT ROOMS TO TOURISTS – ASK AROUND. IT'S ALSO POSSIBLE TO NAB A ROOM AT THE MONASTERY ITSELF.

Kashmir Long before Kashmir was immortalized in the eponymous Led Zeppelin song it had already achieved legendary status with Western travellers, from officers of the British Raj to the first hippie overlanders in the 1960s. No stint in the Subcontinent was complete without an idyllic sojourn on the famous houseboats of the capital Srinagar, which sits at the heart of the idyllic Kashmir Valley. By the end of the 1980s, the tourist business was booming alongside agriculture, and had in fact overtaken it as the region's main source of income. This all came to an almost overnight halt with the onset of the conflict in 1989. With the situation stabilizing in recent years, visitor numbers have risen again (mostly domestic, thanks to the burgeoning Indian middle class), though they are still well below the 1980s zenith.

There could hardly be a greater contrast than that between the hot and dusty plains around Jammu and the cool green belt of the Kashmir Valley. Apart from the geographical divide, separated as they are by a rise in altitude of more than 1000m, there are huge cultural and religious differences. While the whole area around Jammu is predominantly Hindu, the Kashmir Valley and its capital, Srinagar, are distinctly Muslim, a key factor in the sectarian problems.

Most people content themselves with a visit to Srinagar, although the towns of Gulmarg and Pahalgam, both in prime trekking territory, are regarded as safe these days, as is the lovely town of Sonamarg on the Kargil road. Nevertheless, before setting off for Kashmir, it is wise to check on the current security situation.

The initial impression of the Vale of Kashmir, whether you approach it via the Jawahar Tunnel, which cuts through the mountains from Jammu in the south, or via the Zoji La pass from Kargil to the east, remains one of a lush rural paradise guarded by the grandeur of the surrounding peaks, the mighty Pir Panjal range snow-capped except in the very height of summer. Vivid green fields of corn and wheat form a patchwork quilt with fruit orchards and groves of nut trees, principally walnut and almond. These are most often lined with towering poplars and willows, hence the preponderance, on the approach to the capital, of shops selling high-quality cricket bats.

Srinagar Steeped in tradition, SRINAGAR is the summertime (May–Oct) administrative capital of J&K, and set in one of the most dramatic locations in India – a mile above sea level, with majestic mountains pressing in on three sides. All too often associated with strife in recent times, this city of almost one million inhabitants is most famous with tourists for the houseboats that line the fringes of Dal and Nageen lakes, as well as the central section of the Jhelum River, a tributary of the Indus. In September 2014, the river flooded vast areas of Srinagar up to first-floor level; the eventual death toll in the valley was nearly two hundred, but mercifully the city is now back on its feet.

Like the rest of Kashmir, Srinagar is predominantly Muslim, even more so since the advent of serious trouble in 1990, when almost all the Hindu Pandits were driven out – though for centuries this region was known for its religious tolerance, where adherents of all the major Eastern faiths lived side by side. As such, away from the lake, most of the sights here are religious in nature, including two venerated mosques – Jama Masjid, deep in the heart of the atmospheric Old City, and the lakeside Hazratbal – and the Sufi shrine of Makhdoom Sahib, as well as the Shankaracharya Mandir, a Hindu temple atop a hill overlooking Dal Lake.

The bustling centre of Srinagar, which revolves around the two main thoroughfares of Residency Road and Moulana Azad (MA) Road, is not particularly appealing; the bazaar area of Lal Chowk at the western end of these streets holds more interest, while the quieter area to the southeast of Dal Gate is even more appealing. Of the city's secular sights, options include the engaging Sri Pratap Singh Museum and the Mughal pleasure gardens around Dal Lake.

Dal Lake and around Shikara hire ₹1000/hr; some houseboats can arrange self-paddle boats for ₹40/hr • Floating market 5.30–7.30am Srinagar would be a major draw on the strength of its Himalayan scenery alone, but it is the city's serene lakes and grand gardens that make it irresistible. There are actually several large bodies of water dividing the urban sprawl into its constituent neighbourhoods but by far the largest is Dal Lake, with a surface area of approximately 21 square kilometres. The lake is usually as flat as a mirror and incredibly photogenic, with the surrounding peaks reflected in its greenish-blue waters, the natural beauty now “enlivened” by cheesy fountains dotted around the fringe. Apart from the houseboats that cover its southern end, nearest the town centre, the lake is famous for its floating gardens, as well as a floating flower and vegetable market – well worth the 4am wake-up you'll need to see it at its best. The best way to tour the lake is on a shikara, a colourful flat-bottomed water taxi that is steered with a heart-shaped paddle.

SECURITY CONCERNS IN KASHMIR ALTHOUGH THE SITUATION IN KASHMIR IS CALMER THAN IT HAS BEEN FOR DECADES, IT IS STILL ESSENTIAL TO

CHECK THE CURRENT STATE OF AFFAIRS WITH REPUTABLE MEDIA SOURCES BEFORE TRAVELLING (www.kashmirtimes.com IS A GOOD LOCAL RESOURCE). NO TOURISTS HAVE BEEN DIRECTLY TARGETED SINCE 1995, BUT IF TROUBLE DOES FLARE UP, AS IT DID IN EARLY 2019, YOU WILL HAVE TO ENDURE A VERY HEAVY MILITARY PRESENCE.

Once you are in Jammu and the Kashmir Valley, you will find that security is taken very seriously – the vast majority of tourist sites, such as temples, mosques, museums and forts, are heavily guarded. You are usually prohibited from taking bags or electronic items inside; tokens are given when you check them, but if you are not comfortable about leaving cameras or mobile phones in the cloakroom, then lock them in your hotel. Both Jammu and Srinagar airports have extra-high security, including at the perimeter fences, and passengers are sometimes not allowed into the terminal until a certain period of time before departure – usually two hours, but occasionally less. At times hand luggage is not permitted on board (and shoes usually have to go in the hold), so it is best to do your research in advance.

Nehru Park A shikara ride from the mainland • charge • Swimming free, water skiing charge Nehru Park is the lake's largest island, but still pretty tiny. Here you'll find pontoons for swimming, and even water skiing facilities, the latter available at rates that must be among the world's lowest. It's also home to the excellent Gulshan Books café.

The Mughal gardens Daily 6am–7pm • Each garden charged individually The perimeter of Dal Lake is punctuated by lavishly ornamental gardens, a legacy of the seventeenth-century Mughal period. Incredibly popular with locals and Indian tourists alike, who flock here to picnic and frolic in the fountain pools, these collections of terraced lawns and flowerbeds – containing an array of flowers and plants sufficient to delight any botanist – reach their zenith in Nishat Bagh, halfway along the eastern shore, and Shalimar Bagh, set a little way back from the northeastern corner. A short way back from the southeastern shore, Cheshmashahi Bagh is a smaller but equally delightful spot, which attracts people for the curative properties of its spring waters.

Shankaracharya Mandir Accessed from Boulevard Rd • Daily 7.30am–5pm • Free The city's main Hindu temple, Shankaracharya Mandir stands imperiously above Dal Lake, occupying the crest of the eponymous hill south of the Boulevard. The temple itself is nothing special architecturally speaking and security is predictably tight, but the views across the city and lakes to the mountains beyond are quite breathtaking. The walk up is a gentle thirty-minute stroll, although security guards sometimes demand that you take an auto-rickshaw.

Hazratbal mosque Daily 9.30am–5.30pm • Free

On the northwestern shore of Dal Lake stands Hazratbal mosque, whose huge white marble dome towers above its spacious courtyard. It is considered Kashmir's holiest shrine, as its plain but vast interior houses a single hair of the prophet Mohammed, purportedly brought from Medina centuries ago. The scene of heavy fighting during the worst of the insurgency, it is now a tranquil spot that welcomes outsiders along with the constant stream of worshippers. The surrounding area is a lively mishmash of trinket and food stalls, making it a good place to snack on treats such as delicious Kashmiri halwa.

Nageen Lake Tucked between the spit of land behind Hazratbal mosque and the Old City, Nageen Lake is much smaller than more famous Dal Lake. It does not have any particular sights but is more peaceful for that very reason, and quite a popular choice for anyone wanting a more serene houseboat experience.

The Old City The most atmospheric and fascinating part of Srinagar away from the lakes is undoubtedly the venerable and atmospheric Old City, crammed with wooden buildings displaying the typical Kashmiri architectural style of carved balustrades and ornate frames on windows and doors.

Jama Masjid Srinagar's largest mosque, Jama Masjid stands in the heart of the Old City. Built of sturdy stone and brick with the distinctive pagoda-style wooden minarets unique to Kashmir, it was erected between 1398 and 1402 by Sikander But-Shikoh but has been destroyed by fire and rebuilt several times, most recently in 1961. Look out for the fascinating family tree of the Prophet Mohammed going all the way back to Adam and Eve, which hangs on the wall near the main niche.

Khanqah Mosque of Shah Hamdan Sitting on the east bank of the River Jhelum, the Khanqah Mosque of Shah Hamdan was originally built in 1395 by Shah Sikandar, though the current structure dates from 1732. It is inaccessible to non-Muslims but still worth a visit for the intricate woodcarvings of its exterior. You can also get a glimpse of the equally beautiful interior from the door.

Rozabal A couple of kilometres to the southeast of Jama Masjid, the small square mosque of Rozabal, with its simple octagonal dome, is purported to enshrine the tomb of Jesus by those who subscribe to the theory – the subject of Holger Kersten's Jesus Lived In India – that Christ actually lived to a ripe old age and died here in Kashmir. The mosque is kept locked but you may be able to peep inside through the gate. Note that this is one place where foreigners sometimes encounter hostility from locals, so it is best to move on if asked.

Makhdoom Sahib Cable car daily 9am–5pm • Charge One of Kashmir's most vibrant places of worship, with frequent live music, the Sufi shrine of Makhdoom Sahib is located on the northern edge of the Old City, halfway up towards Hari Parbat Fort on the hill of the same name. The inner shrine housing the tomb of the saint is open to men only. Good views across Nageen Lake and further afield can be enjoyed by all from the nearby steps, though it's now possible to save yourself a gentle walk by taking the cable car.

Hari Parbat Fort Sat–Thu 10am–3pm • Charge • Best to arrange a visit through the Tourist Reception Centre; bring your passport, or a copy of the visa and picture pages Atop the eponymous ridge that dominates the Old City, Hari Parbat Fort is officially called Durrani Fort, after the emperor who had the current structure built in 1808. It is also known locally as Akbar Fort, however, because the first battlements were constructed here under the reign of Akbar in the late sixteenth century. For many years the fort was completely off limits as a military zone, but it re-opened to the public in 2015, despite an ongoing army presence. Though there are plans for development, there's not much to see inside; the ramparts are the main surviving feature, and you may content yourself to admire them from afar.

Sri Pratap Singh Museum Tues–Sun 10am–5pm • Free •
jkarchives.nic.in

The outstanding Sri Pratap Singh Museum is in Lal Mandi, south across the Jhelum River from Lal Chowk. The former maharaja's palace (and an adjacent newer wing) house a huge collection that includes archeological findings such as terracotta tiles and Buddhist tablets, decorative arts from enamelware to papier-mâché, textiles, manuscripts and miniature paintings.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE SRINAGAR'S SRINAGAR AIRPORT ( SRINAGARAIRPORT.COM) LIES 14KM SOUTH OF THE CITY CENTRE. TAXIS INTO TOWN COST ₹700–800; AUTO-RICKSHAWS AROUND HALF THAT.

Destinations Amritsar (1 daily; 1hr 10min); Delhi (1–3 hourly; 1hr 30min); Jammu (1–2 hourly; 40min); Leh (1–2 daily; 55min).

By bus Government buses pull in on Residency Rd, a few minutes' walk south of Dal Gate, while the private bus stand is around 1km further west.

Destinations Delhi (2 daily; 22–24hr); Jammu (10–12 daily; 11–12hr); Kargil (6–8 daily; 10–11hr); Leh (2–4 daily; 16hr, or with overnight stay in Kargil).

By jeep/minibus Jeeps, which also pull in on Residency Rd, run to Jammu (8–9hr; ₹800), Kargil (6–7hr; ₹1000) and Leh (14–15hr; ₹2300) and operate more flexible hours. Shared minibuses are the best way to travel within the Kashmir Valley.

By train Srinagar does have a railway station, but at the time of writing it was only for local services west to Baramulla, and south to Anantnag. The Jammu–Baramulla line due to complete by early 2024 will connect Kashmir Valley with Jammu railway station, and onwards with the rest of the country.

WALKING DAL LAKE ON A MAP, IT LOOKS LIKE DAL LAKE'S PERIMETER SHOULD MAKE IDEAL WALKING TERRITORY – SADLY THIS IS NOT REALLY THE CASE. FOR MOST OF THE STRETCH, THERE'S A PATH OF SORTS RUNNING THROUGH THE GREENERY SEPARATING LAKE AND ROAD, BUT YOU'D BE FORCED INTO THE ROAD FROM TIME TO TIME BY STACKED-UP PILES OF WEEDS PULLED FROM THE LAKE. FAR BETTER IS WHAT, ON MAPS, LOOKS LIKE A ROAD RUNNING CLEAN ACROSS THE LAKE; IN REALITY, THE EASTERN SEGMENT OF THIS IS A DIRT TRACK TRAVERSED BY ONLY THE MOST SKILFUL MOTORBIKE DRIVERS, AND IT'S MOST COMMONLY USED AS A FISHING SPOT. BRAVE SORTS CAN START THEIR WALK AT THE NISHAT BAGH GARDENS; YOU'LL SEE THE "ROAD" BRANCHING OFF TO THE RIGHT AFTER 500M. PADDING ALONG THE DIRT TRACK, AND OCCASIONALLY THE WALL, YOU'LL HAVE WONDERFUL VIEWS OF THE LAKE AND THE MOUNTAINS. AFTER A FEW KILOMETRES, YOU’LL SEE THE FIRST OF SEVERAL “FLOATING” VILLAGES; ACCESSIBLE BY BOARDWALK, THEY’RE USUALLY HOME TO BETWEEN TEN AND FIFTY HOMES, THOUGH MOST HAVE A MOSQUE, AND SOME HAVE SIMPLE SHOPS (AND THERE ARE EVEN A COUPLE OF TAILORS AND SALONS). WHEN YOU START TO SEE THE FIRST SEMBLANCES OF URBANITY, THINK ABOUT HAILING AN AUTO-RICKSHAW; THE ROADS GET BUSIER AND MORE CONFUSING, AND THINGS GET LESS FUN.

Back in town, the pedestrianized lane north of Dal Gate also makes for a nice walk, though you’ll be offered shikara rides and marijuana every minute or so. Walking the entirety of Boulevard Rd is pretty fun; to return to the city centre without meeting any pests whatsoever, return along Old Gagribal Rd, sketching a near-parallel to the south; this is, without doubt, the most charming non-lake part of the city, featuring old mansions to the east, then butchers, bakers and (probably) candlestick-makers in a lively area south of Dal Gate.

INFORMATION TOURIST OFFICE THE SURPRISINGLY FANCY – THOUGH SLIGHTLY HARD TO FIND – TOURIST RECEPTION CENTRE (📍JKTDC.CO.IN) IS BESIDE THE GOVERNMENT BUS STAND ON RESIDENCY RD, AND CLAIMS TO BE OPEN 24HR. STAFF ARE USUALLY HELPFUL, AND CAN ASSIST WITH BUS TICKETS.

Tours Green Kashmir Travels off Boulevard Rd (📍greenkashmirtravels.com) can book tickets and arrange treks or give useful advice on them, as can Euphoria Travels on 3rd Cross Rd, just to the south (📞01942500772).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Although most foreign tourists stay on houseboats, there are plenty of conventional hotels and lodges. During the domestic high season (April–June) the prices below are likely to double.

Akbar North of Dal Gate, 📍hotelakbar.com. Quite a grand complex of white, colonial-style buildings set in pleasant, grassy grounds beside Dal Lake. The rooms are spacious and brightly decorated, with quality furniture.

₹₹₹

Chachoo Palace New Rd, Khon Khan, Dal Lake 📞99068 20423. This quaint hotel – with a wooden balcony, lakeside lawn and comfortable, attached rooms – has the charm of a houseboat with easier access and cheaper prices. The friendly proprietors can also provide food on request. ₹₹

JH Bazaz Backstreet behind Dal Gate no.2, Whotel.jhbazaz.com. Tucked in the lanes south of the lake, this welcoming and efficient hotel has rooms of different shapes and sizes, a modern annexe and grassy garden. ₹₹₹

★John Friends Guest House North of Dal Gate, 📍john-friends-guest-house.business.site. A real budget winner, located in the lake-lanes north of Dal Gate. As well as a super-quiet atmosphere, it has pretty rooms (some with views) and friendly staff, and they rent out boats to guests for peanuts. ₹

Paradise Boulevard Rd, Dal Lake, 📍hotelparadisesgr.in. Several blocks of rather classy rooms that vary in size. Set just off the lakefront, and cheaper than its mid-range competitors. Decent restaurant. ₹₹

★Sarovar Portico Gupkar Rd, behind UN head office, 📍sarovarhotels.com. An excellent choice if you're worried about visiting Srinagar – it's located right behind the UN compound, so security is high. Set across three blocks, the rooms are all plush affairs, while staff are very professional; breakfast-with-a-view is served on the top of the main block. ₹₹

EATING

MAP

The local cuisine of Kashmir is known as wazwan and is heavily meat-based, its signature dish being rogan josh, richly spiced mutton in a tomato sauce. Dishes often include saffron, as the costly spice is grown locally and therefore less expensive than elsewhere. Kashmiris are also famed for their green kahwa tea, drunk sweet and milkless but often spiced with cardamom or almond. Alcohol is still pretty hard to come by, though you may find it in a few flashy hotel bars, and even from some shikara salesmen.

RESTAURANTS ★AHDOO'S RESIDENCY RD, 📍

AHDOOSHOTEL.COM. SO SMART THAT YOU'LL FORGET

YOU'RE IN SRINAGAR, THIS FIRST-FLOOR DINING ROOM IS BY FAR THE MOST APPEALING PLACE TO EAT IN TOWN.

SPECIALIZES IN KASHMIRI WAZWAN DISHES, THOUGH THEY OFFER CHEAPER INDIAN MAINS, AND THERE'S A GOOD BAKERY DOWNSTAIRS TOO. ₹₹₹

Delhi & Rasoī Boulevard Rd 094197 78141. Simple pure-veg restaurant with courtyard or interior seating, where you can enjoy south Indian snacks like masala dosa and uttapam, or thalis for about double that. ₹

Fat Panda Off Boulevard Rd 097965 25252. For something a little different, hit this pretty place, tucked into the same land as the Paradise. Indian and Thai dishes are woven into a mainly Chinese menu; try filling noodle or rice meals, such as the spicy pad Thai. ₹₹₹

Mughal Darbar Residency Rd, 0mughaldarbar.in. Popular, mildly pretty spot serving a range of tandoori, biryani and traditional wazwan dishes, and some fish too. ₹₹

Shahi Darbar Khayam Chowk 094190 67777. The best of a host of small local joints specializing in mutton and chicken kebabs and tikka dishes. The upstairs room with a delightful carved ceiling is better than the cramped downstairs seating area. ₹₹

Shamyana Boulevard Rd 00194 250 1629. The best of the Boulevard Rd restaurants, serving a mix of Indian and Kashmiri dishes (try the gushtaba, meatballs in soup), as well as Chinese and even a few Mexican choices (such as chicken enchiladas). Local trout also pops up as a special from time to time. ₹₹₹

CAFES AND SWEETSHOPS ★GULSHAN BOOKSTORE NEHRU PARK 094190 11110. YOU'LL HAVE TO TAKE A SHIKARA RIDE TO THIS ISLAND BOOKSTORE, WHICH IS MORE NOTABLY ALSO A CAFE, WITH VERY GOOD COFFEE (CAPPUCCINO, TEAS AVAILABLE), AND WINNING VIEWS OVER THE LAKE. ₹₹

★Nathu's Sweets Boulevard Rd 005062 38104. Prepare yourself – these are, without doubt, the prettiest Indian sweeties in the union territory, and you'll want to buy more than you can eat. You can eat them in the outside yard (a restaurant or sorts, but forget about that), or have them packed up into a cute little box. ₹₹

SLEEPING ON A HOUSEBOAT FEW EXPERIENCES ARE AS ROMANTIC AS LOUNGING ON AN EXQUISITELY CARVED HOUSEBOAT, WATCHING KINGFISHERS DIVING FOR THEIR DINNER BETWEEN THE FLOATING LILIES, OR GAZING AT THE MOON REFLECTED IN THE LAKE'S DARK WATERS. THESE FLOATING HOTELS OF ONE TO FOUR ROOMS HAVE EXISTED FOR GENERATIONS; MANY ORIGINATED AT THE PEAK OF THE BRITISH RAJ, WHEN VICTORIAN FAMILIES WOULD SPEND THE ENTIRE HOT SEASON HERE. THEY ORIGINALLY CHOSE TO STAY ON BOATS TO GET AROUND LAWS THAT FORBADE THEM FROM OWNING LAND.

CHOOSING A LOCATION SRINAGAR HAS NO FEWER THAN 1200 HOUSEBOATS LINING THE SHORES OF THE TWO MAIN LAKES, DAL AND NAGEEN, AND THE BANKS OF THE JHELMUM RIVER – AND THAT'S JUST THE OFFICIAL ONES. CONSEQUENTLY, IT CAN SEEM LIKE A BEWILDERING BUSINESS TO KNOW WHERE TO START LOOKING.

First, have a think about what you want from your houseboat experience, and where on the two lakes you would like to be based. The default option is staying at one of the many houseboats facing Boulevard Road at the southwestern corner of Dal Lake; the westernmost ones are accessible by footpath, which makes things easier, if a little less romantic, and the rest are a set ₹50 ride by shikara from the road. There's another glut of houseboats a little further north; again, some are accessible on foot, and many of these have the benefit of having the city out of eyeshot. Also quiet are the boats on Nageen Lake, which are usually accessible by footpath; there are also some houseboats floating on their lonesome at various points around Dal Lake, though their peace is often interrupted by the lake's perimeter road.

CHOOSING A HOUSEBOAT ALTHOUGH IT'S NOW VERY EASY TO BOOK A HOUSEBOAT STAY ONLINE, THIS COMES WITH

AN ELEMENT OF RISK – WHILE THE REVIEWS ON CERTAIN BOOKING ENGINES MAY BE GENUINE AND INFORMATIVE, THE BOAT'S PURPORTED POSITION ON THE LAKE CAN BE WAY, WAY OFF, WITH OBVIOUS IMPLICATIONS WHEN TRYING TO ACTUALLY FIND IT. THE BEST BET REMAINS TO HOLE UP IN A TOWN HOTEL FOR THE FIRST NIGHT, THEN EITHER WALK OR HIRE A SHIKARA TO EMBARK ON A SCOUTING MISSION, ARMED WITH A FEW IDEAS FROM ONLINE RESEARCH; THIS WAY YOU CAN COMPARE THE PRICES, AMENITIES AND LOCATION OF A NUMBER OF BOATS, THOUGH DO NOTE THAT YOU'LL BE PESTERED REGULARLY ON THE WAY.

Another approach is to organize your stay through the Houseboat Owners Association (daily 8am–6pm; www.khboa.com), whose office is opposite the Tourist Reception Centre on Residency Road. They can arrange rooms in different categories of boat from Deluxe Class (₹4000 for a double with full board, though often discounted to ₹2500) down to D Class (₹600 for the same). They do, however, often seem keen to push the boats of their buddies.

HOUSEBOAT TIPS

- The golden rule is to ignore the many touts in town who try to get you to commit yourself with all sorts of promises. Never pre-book in Delhi.
- Check with other travellers and on booking websites or forums to see which houseboats have been offering positive experiences.
- Always try to view the houseboat in person before agreeing to stay there, checking things like bedding, plumbing and security issues.
- Be sure to agree exactly what is included in the price, such as the number of meals, drinks or whether a daily shikara ride to the shore (if necessary) is part of the deal.
- Make it clear that you do not want to be pestered by floating salesmen and that there should be no deterioration in houseboat service if you do turn them away.
- Do not be pressured into accepting other services the owner might offer you, such as shikara rides round the lake or trekking trips.

- Do not leave valuables such as your passport or electronic devices unattended, or even with the houseboat owner for safekeeping.

SHOPPING

MAP

Kashmir is synonymous with quality carpets, rugs and shawls of various materials, though knowing what is authentic can be a veritable minefield. There are salesmen everywhere, even touting their wares around the lake on shikaras. Beware of houseboat owners on commission bringing them to your vessel and be firm that you are not interested if you don't want to buy. Also note that there's a fun floating market on Dal Lake.

Gulshan Bookstore Nehru Park 📞09596600055. Although more popular as a café, this island bookstore also has plenty of literature pertaining to Kashmir.

Kashmiri Government Art Emporium Boulevard Rd, Dal Lake 📞01942452783. Conveniently located shop offering a good range of rugs, fabrics, papier-mâché, walnut woodcarvings and bronze sculptures, all at fixed prices.

Pick N Choose Residency Rd 📞09906510670. Western-style supermarket stocking a host of local goodies, from kahwa tea and halwa sweets to nuts, dried fruits and pure Kashmiri honey.

Gulmarg Some 56km west of Srinagar and at an elevation of around 2700m, GULMARG, whose name means “flower meadow”, is a pleasant escape from the city, but can get very crowded with domestic tourists – especially in winter, when it becomes a ski resort of-sorts. The season usually runs from mid-December to mid-March, but in recent years, possibly due to climate change, this has contracted to just over a month, starting in January. Gulmarg is rather spread out, with the taxi rank at the junction its only discernible centre; the meadow itself is 1km wide and more than 3km long, allowing ample room for picnics, pony rides and even one of the world's highest golf courses. The surrounding pine slopes can be ascended for a distant view of Nanga Parbat (8126m) to the north, in Pakistan-controlled Baltistan.

Gulmarg Gondola First phase Daily 9am–5pm in summer, 10am–4pm winter • Charge • Second phase Daily 10am–4pm in summer, 10.30am–3.30pm winter • Charge • www.jammukashmircablecar.com

Visitors can ascend the slopes on the Gulmarg Gondola, the world's second highest cable car at the time of writing. During ski season, the gondola is used to get to the top of Gulmarg's ski slopes, which are underused but highly recommended for the quality of powdery snow.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS GULMARG IS GULMARG ACCESSIBLE BY BUS, THOUGH YOU'LL HAVE TO CHANGE IN TANGMARG; IT'LL COST ₹110 IN TOTAL FOR THE TWO LEGS.

By taxi The best way to get to Gulmarg from Srinagar is by shared taxi, or you can hire a whole vehicle for ₹1850, or more like ₹3000 for a day-trip.

ACTIVITIES SKIING AND TREKKING GOVERNMENT RATES FOR SKIING ARE DISPLAYED ON BOARDS AROUND THE RESORT; EQUIPMENT RENTAL COSTS AROUND ₹1000/DAY. ONE PRIVATE OPERATION THAT CAN ARRANGE PACKAGES AND LESSONS IS KASHMIR ALPINE (www.gulmargalpineguides.com), WHICH PURPORTS TO BE THE WORLD'S SMALLEST SKI SHOP AND ALSO RUNS TREKKING EXPEDITIONS DURING THE WARMER MONTHS.

Other activities Pony riding, and ATVs. In winter, try snow mobiles, or rent ski equipment.

ACCOMMODATION ACCOMMODATION IS PLENTIFUL, BUT UNIFORMLY OVERPRICED; GULMARG HAS TWO HIGH SEASONS, ONE BETWEEN APRIL AND JUNE, AND ANOTHER FROM MID-DECEMBER TO THE END OF FEBRUARY, AND PRICES OUTSIDE THESE TIMES DIP ACCORDINGLY.

Heevan Retreat West of the village, www.ahadhotelsandresorts.com. There's a palpable alpine feel at this higher-end option, set back in the woods; there are walnut furnishings and hand-woven curtains in many of its 31 rooms, central heating throughout, and a good restaurant. Due to be rebranded as the Apple Tree by 2020. ₹₹₹₹

★The Khyber South of the gondola, 🌐khyberhotels.com. By far the best hotel this side of Delhi, a large and immaculately designed affair with courteous staff and truly splendid rooms; you should ask for one facing the mountains, which is the same direction that the fitness centre and stunner of a swimming pool are oriented. ₹₹₹₹

TREKKING IN KASHMIR DESPITE BEING PRIME TREKKING TERRITORY, THE SECURITY CONCERNS OF RECENT DECADES MEAN THAT RELATIVELY FEW FOREIGNERS TAKE TO THE HILLS. THE ONCE BOOMING INDUSTRY IS SLOWLY PICKING UP, HOWEVER, AND THERE HAVE BEEN NO UNPLEASANT INCIDENTS INVOLVING FOREIGN TOURISTS SINCE 1995. GIVEN THE TRICKY TERRAIN AND THE DELICATE POLITICAL SITUATION, HOWEVER, IT IS NOT RECOMMENDED TO SET OFF WITHOUT AT LEAST A LOCAL GUIDE. TREKKING AGENCIES IN SRINAGAR AND ARU, AND SOME HOTELS MENTIONED IN THE TEXT, CAN PROVIDE FULLY ORGANIZED TREKS WITH PONIES, PORTERS AND ALL THE REQUISITE EQUIPMENT.

Pahalgam and Aru are still the main bases for treks, which vary in length and level of difficulty from two-day round trips within the Lidder Valley to the week-long hike to Panikhar in Ladakh's Suru Valley. You can also do some good walking from Sonamarg, the last main town in Kashmir before the Zoji La pass. Conditions for trekking are pretty hot and uncomfortable in high summer; the shoulder seasons of late spring and early autumn are the optimum time. The best map is Sheet 1 in Leomann's India Himalaya series. For more general advice about trekking, see Basics.

AMARNATH TREK KASHMIR'S MOST TRODDEN ROUTE BECOMES CROWDED DURING THE JULY/AUGUST FULL MOON WITH THOUSANDS OF PILGRIMS, WHO FLOCK TO SEE THE NATURAL ICE LINGAM IN THE AMARNATH CAVE, AT AN ALTITUDE OF 3962M. THE TREK FROM PAHALGAM USUALLY TAKES FOUR DAYS AND INCLUDES OVERNIGHT STAYS AT CHANDANWARI (2900M), SHESHNAG (3720M) AND PANCHTARNI (3933M). THE FINAL STAGE INVOLVES CROSSING THE MAHAGUNAS PASS. AFTER VISITING THE CAVE, YOU CAN EITHER RETURN THE SAME WAY OR MAKE THE MORE DIRECT DESCENT TO BALTAL, 8KM EAST OF SONAMARG ON THE SRINAGAR-LEH ROAD. NATURALLY, THE ASCENT CAN ALSO BE MADE FROM SONAMARG VIA BALTAL.

TULIAN LAKE TREK FOR THOSE WITH LIMITED TIME, THE OVERNIGHT TWO-DAY TREK TO PEACEFUL TULIAN LAKE (4000M) FROM PAHALGAM IS A GOOD WAY TO GET A TASTE OF THE KASHMIRI MOUNTAINS. THE ROUTE WINDS UP THROUGH MEADOWS, PINE FORESTS AND PAST WELCOMING GYPSY TENTS, WHERE YOU MAY WELL BE OFFERED REFRESHMENTS. THE BEST PLACE TO SPEND THE NIGHT IS AT THE KANIMARG BASE CAMP.

KOLAHOI GLACIER TREK THE FIVE-DAY TREK FROM PAHALGAM TO THE IMPRESSIVE BUT RECEDING KOLAHOI GLACIER (3400M) CAN BE SHORTENED BY A DAY IF YOU START IN PICTURESQUE ARU (2414M;). THE NEXT DAY'S ASCENT IS VIA ALPINE MEADOWS AND STREAMS TO LIDDERWAT (3049M), BEFORE A GENTLER STAGE TO SATLANJAN (3150M), WHICH ALLOWS YOU TO CONSERVE ENERGY FOR THE STEEP CLIMB TO THE GLACIER AND BACK TO LIDDERWAT ON THE FOLLOWING DAY. YOU CAN THEN WALK BACK DOWN TO ARU OR PAHALGAM ITSELF ON THE FIFTH DAY.

SONAMARG TO WANGAT TREK THIS POPULAR ROUTE TAKES YOU THROUGH A BEAUTIFUL STRETCH OF THE MOUNTAINS VIA A NUMBER OF DELIGHTFUL HIGH ALTITUDE LAKES, WHERE FISHING IS PERMITTED WITH A PERMIT (AVAILABLE THROUGH AGENTS IN SRINAGAR). THE FIRST STAGING POST AT NICHNAI (3620M) AFFORDS VIEWS OF THE THAJIWAS GLACIER BEFORE THE SECOND DAY'S WALKING UNDULATES TO KISHANAR (3819M). ON THE THIRD DAY YOU CROSS OVER THE 4191M BAZKAL GALI PASS AND DESCEND PAST GADSAR LAKE TO OVERNIGHT AT DUBTA PANI (3280M). NEXT DAY'S WALKING TAKES IN THE SEVEN TIERED LAKES OF SATSAR EN ROUTE TO THE REGION'S LARGEST BODY OF WATER, GANGABAL LAKE (3507M), FOR A FINAL NIGHT'S CAMPING BEFORE THE DESCENT TO WANGAT, WHERE THERE ARE BUSES AND JEEPS TO SRINAGAR.

New Mount View By the bazaar ☎09596527556. Backpacker inn that's just about the cheapest place to stay hereabouts. Rooms are all heated, with attached bathrooms, and rates drop out of season. ₹₹

EATING BAKSHI IN THE MIDDLE OF THE BAZAAR, ☎GULMARGSKIRESORT.COM. SIMPLE AND POPULAR CANTEEN-STYLE RESTAURANT SPECIALIZING IN JAIN PURE-VEG DISHES, INCLUDING FILLING MAINS; ALTERNATIVELY, TRY THEIR EXCELLENT HOMEMADE KEHWA. ₹₹

The Khyber South of the gondola, ☎khyberhotels.com. Even if you can't afford to stay here, dinner is very affordable, with many of the curries and continental mains. It's around the same for a hookah in the lounge opposite the restaurant – less than you'll pay at most “standard” places, let alone a five-star hotel. ₹₹₹

Pahalgam Kashmir's number-one trekking base, PAHALGAM enjoys a stunning location around 100km east of Srinagar, 2139m above sea level in the deep-cut Lidder Valley, whose pine-crested ridges ascend sharply from both banks of the chilly, fast-flowing river. The town mostly occupies the slightly flatter east bank and the lower surrounding slopes. Main Market, the central thoroughfare of the modern town, runs parallel to the river and contains most of the facilities, while the old village – more pleasant, though with little to do – lies 1.5km north, beyond Pushwan Park with its fancy flowerbeds and topiary. Eager pony-men tout rides at fixed government rates to various local beauty spots.

Note that Pahalgam becomes extremely busy and security is tightened during the Amarnath pilgrimage in July and August. During that time especially, nearby Aru makes a quieter and more relaxing base.

ARRIVAL AND ACTIVITIES BY BUS/JEEP THE BUS PAHALGAM SERVICE FROM SRINAGAR TO PAHALGAM IS RATHER UNRELIABLE BUT IT IS EASY TO GET A BUS OR SHARED JEEP (2HR) TO ANANTNAG (KNOWN LOCALLY AS ISLAMABAD) AND ANOTHER FROM THERE TO PAHALGAM (1HR 30MIN).

Trekking Staff at the Beach Resort (see below) can arrange very reliable treks of various lengths.

Pony rides Eager pony-men tout rides at fixed government rates to various local beauty spots.

ACCOMMODATION BEACH RESORT OLD VILLAGE, ☎ BEACHRESORTPAHALGAM.COM. SMALL GUESTHOUSE WITH NEWLY RENOVATED ROOMS OF VARYING SIZES, THE BEST OF WHICH OVERLOOK THE LUSH LAWN AND RIVER. EXCELLENT FOOD IS AVAILABLE ON REQUEST AND THE WELCOMING OWNERS ALSO RUN TREKS. ₹

Grand Abdullah Main market, ☎ hotelgrandabdullahpahalgam.com. A solid mid-range choice, which certainly looks old and alpine from the outside, but has modern rooms with large windows. The owner is a friendly sort who'll be on hand to solve any issues that you may have regarding treks, pony rides or onward transport. ₹₹₹

★Heevan West of the village, ☎ ahadhotelsandresorts.com. Located all on its lonesome across the river, this is the most charming place to stay hereabouts, with gorgeous rooms (try to nab one with a river view), filling

buffet breakfasts, and staff determined to make their guests' stay enjoyable. ₹
₹₹₹

EATING DANA PANI MAIN MARKET 01936 243234. CLEAN, MODERN PLACE, GREAT FOR FILLING PUNJABI VEG MEALS. ALSO OFFERS GOOD SOUTH INDIAN CUISINE SUCH AS DOSAS. ₹

Paradise Main Market 01936 243368, W
hotelparadiseandrestaurant.com. Standard but reliable hotel restaurant that does a brisk trade in tasty veg and non-veg Kashmiri staples, such as the signature rogan josh. ₹₹

★The Trout Beat Pahalgam Hotel, Main Market 01936 243252. Trout and chips, masala trout, trout a l'orange, tandoori trout – this may sound a bit like Bubba Gump's shrimp, but they're all excellent. The fish are sourced locally. There's also a good coffee-and-cake wing down the road, but they're often combined into the same space. ₹₹₹

Aru

Twelve km northwest of Pahalgam, the peaceful village of ARU is located in an eponymous valley amid splendidly verdant mountain terrain; hemmed in on all sides by lushly carpeted ridges, it boasts several burbling streams that traverse the grassy meadows.

Aru makes a good base for local hikes and longer treks, such as the three-day treks to the Thajiwas Glacier or Amarnath cave. The T-shaped village contains half a dozen places to stay, and a few dhabas to supplement the guesthouse restaurants. It has a growing reputation as a relaxed hangout and is particularly popular with chillum-toting Israelis.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY JEEP OR TAXI A SEAT IN ARU A SHARED JEEP SHOULD COST AROUND ₹300 FROM PAHALGAM; A WHOLE RETURN TAXI WILL COST ₹2000.

On foot Traffic from Pahalgam is light, so it's actually quite easy to walk – it'll take over two hours each way, though.

Trekking The Milky Way guys (see below) are by far your best contact for local trekking.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING ★MILKY WAY JUST OFF THE MAIN BAZAAR, ☎MILKYWAYKASHMIR.COM. BY FAR THE MOST COMFORTABLE PLACE HERE, WITH BEAUTIFULLY FURNISHED ROOMS SPREAD OVER TWO BUILDINGS BESIDE A LOVELY LAWN. THE BROTHERS WHO OWN IT SERVE GOOD FOOD ON REQUEST, AND RUN RELIABLE TREKS. ₹₹₹

Rohella On the road into the village ☎rohella-guest-house.business.site. Friendly, basic guesthouse with basic but clean rooms, very popular with Israelis. The pick of the cheapies, it also does decent food. ₹

Sagar Main bazaar ☎94699 69844. The best of the village dhabas, serving up a range of Kashmiri, Indian and Chinese dishes, as well as simple snacks like pakora. ₹₹

Sonamarg Located on the Ladakh road, 84km northeast of Srinagar, SONAMARG has started to see a return of foreign travellers in recent years. Perched beside the River Sindh and surrounded by forests of pine, fir, beech and sycamore, with towering peaks all around, it is a scenic spot to break the journey to Kargil or Leh (for details of the route through Western Ladakh). This is also the place with the best display of spring and early summer flowers. The Thajiwas Glacier is just a 4km hike away, and the town is also a good base for the famous Amarnath trek.

Sonamarg itself is not particularly attractive, with its main bazaar strung along the vital Srinagar–Leh road, which means there is a constant flow of traffic and a noticeable military presence. Most of the more established hotels, restaurants and shops line the north side of the bazaar, with the opposite side given over to government complexes, the bus and taxi stands, plus a couple of the larger new hotels.

Thajiwas Glacier To reach the Thajiwas Glacier, take any of the paths on the hillside that run below the treeline from behind the Glacier Heights hotel (see below). These unite into a single path as you go on, which skirts the ridge through the woods and emerges after about half an hour above the main car park for vehicles visiting the glacier. It is best to carry on for a while longer before descending to the meadows, which are populated by grazing sheep and picnicking Indian tourists. There is usually a steady stream of people heading along the path into the valley that holds the glacier itself, although climate change means that the ice has rapidly receded in recent years.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS FREQUENT SONAMARG BUSES PLY THE MAIN ROUTE BETWEEN SRINAGAR AND LADAKH, ALTHOUGH THOSE HEADING EAST ARE MORE LIABLE TO BE FULL. BUSES TAKE AROUND 3HR TO SRINAGAR, AROUND 5HR TO KARGIL.

By jeep A seat in a shared jeep to Srinagar should cost around ₹170, while a whole vehicle will cost ₹2400 one way.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING GLACIER HEIGHTS JUST ABOVE WEST END OF MAIN BAZAAR ☎0194 241 7215, 🌐 HOTELGLACIERHEIGHTS.IN. ATTRACTIVELY DESIGNED ALPINE-STYLE HOTEL CONSISTING OF TWO BLOCKS. THE WOOD-PANELLED ROOMS ARE LARGE AND COMFORTABLE, WHILE THE BATHROOMS HAVE UNUSUALLY POWERFUL SHOWERS. ₹₹₹

Green Town Middle of main bazaar ☎97970 30206. Just about the cheapest place in town, with small but adequate rooms above commercial premises. Rather prone to street noise. ₹

JKTDC West end of main bazaar, 🌐 jktcdc.co.in. Just like its government-run counterpart in Jammu, this is a steady choice for Kashmiri food. ₹₹

Jammu

Despite its location on the easier of the two main overland routes to Kashmir, Jammu Division remains somewhat off the tourist radar, and is without doubt the runt of the J&K litter, well behind Kashmir in terms of scenic beauty and cultural interest. Those who pass through are mainly determined overlanders heading to or from Kashmir; Jammu City is certainly not without interest, while an hour's ride to its north is the revered shrine of Vaishno Devi.

Brief history Archeological evidence suggests that the area around Jammu, whose name appears in the Mahabharata, was part of the Harappan civilization, based in the Indus Valley, one of the oldest in the world. Remains of other powerful kingdoms, such as the Mauryas and Guptas, have also been found near the city, although the foundation of Jammu itself is credited to the Raja Jambu Lochan in the late fourteenth century. It later fell under the control of the Sikhs but after their defeat by the British in 1846 became part of the Hindu Dogra dynasty. The majority of its people still identify themselves as Dogras, and speak the Dogri dialect.

Jammu City Known as “the city of temples” because of the many shrines that dot the town, JAMMU is an increasingly attractive place, and worthy of at least a full day en route to or from Srinagar. The most revered place of worship in Jammu itself is Ragunath Temple, a pretty place just north of the Tawi River, which bisects the town. The mildly absorbing Amar Mahal museum is a little north again, while overlooking the river to its south is the impressive Bahu Fort, from which topple the splendid Bagh-e-Bahu gardens.

Ragunath Temple Daily 6am–10pm • Free • Entrances on south and east sides of complex If you only have time to visit one of Jammu’s many temples, it should be the buzzing Ragunath, about 10min walk uphill through the commercial lanes east of the bus stand. Once you’ve got through the tight security, you enter a large courtyard surrounded by multiple shikharas and two gardens. Within, the inner courtyard houses the main shrine of Lord Ragunath, an incarnation of Vishnu, and his two consorts, watched over by an orange-robed statue of Hanuman nearby.

Bahu Fort and around Fort: daily 9am–1pm & 2–9pm • Free • A tuk-tuk ride or half-hour uphill walk from town, and also the terminus of several town bus routes The town’s most imposing attraction is Bahu Fort, which stands proudly on a high bluff above the south bank of the Tawi River. The solid, squat battlements of the fort enclose some beautifully manicured lawns, although the principal draw for Hindus is the small Mata Kali temple within the complex. Beneath the fort are an aquarium and the lovely Bagh-e-Bahu Gardens; on a hot day it makes sense to visit the fort first, then the aquarium just underneath, then enter the gardens via an adjacent entrance, descending to the lower exit, and returning to town from there.

Aquarium Awareness Centre Daily 9am–9pm • Charge, mobile phone photo permit charged Plonked between the fort and the gardens, the Aquarium Awareness Centre contains a mildly diverting assortment of more than four hundred varieties of fish and other marine creatures. Hilariously designed with a metallic casing in the shape of a fish, the museum is entered through its mouth and exited via the tail.

Bagh-e-Bahu Gardens Daily 9am–9pm • Charge • Entrances at top and bottom of gardens Descending in attractive tiers below the fort, the impressive Bagh-e-Bahu Gardens contain a series of well-tended flowerbeds and decorative pools, which act as swimming baths for the local monkeys. It's a favourite picnic spot for Indian tourists, as the upper reaches afford splendid views across the city and river; for refreshments, there's a small café near the lower entrance.

Amar Mahal Museum Srinagar Rd, 2km northeast of the bus stand • Tues–Sun 10am–12pm & 3–7pm • Charge Housed in a converted palace hanging over the river, and modelled along the lines of a grand chateau, the Amar Mahal Museum is basically an art gallery with some regal memorabilia. Its most impressive architectural feature is the grandiose Durbar Hall. Pride of place among the regal artefacts is Maharaja Hari Singh's solid gold throne. The portraits and miniatures in the gallery date mostly from the early twentieth century and there is an interesting collection of Nepali objets d'art in the Nepal Room.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE MOST TRAVELLERS JAMMU CITY USE JAMMU AS A STEPPING-STONE TO OR FROM SRINAGAR; RIDES IN A JEEP (₹800 FOR A SEAT, ₹6,000 FOR THE WHOLE VEHICLE) USUALLY TAKE AN HOUR OR TWO LESS THAN THE

BUSES (FROM ₹500). ALTERNATIVELY, YOU CAN SAVE MOST OF A DAY BY FLYING; TICKET PRICES OFTEN DIP UNDER ₹2,000.

By plane Jammu's surprisingly busy airport (☎0191 243 7843) is 7km southwest of the city; a taxi to the centre or railway station costs around ₹300. Security is tight, so arrive with plenty of time in hand.

Destinations Amritsar (1 daily; 1hr); Delhi (1–3 hourly; 1hr 30min); Leh (3 weekly; 55min); Srinagar (1–2 hourly; 40min).

By train Trains from all over India pull into Jammu Tawi station, which sits south of the river. The best night service to Delhi is the Uttar S Kranti #12446 (departs 9.40pm; arrives New Delhi 6.55am), while the most convenient daytime service is the Malwa Express #12920 (10.30am; arrives Delhi 8.15pm). Construction of the much-delayed line to Srinagar is set to be completed by 2024.

Destinations Delhi (9–13 daily; 9–14hr); Katra (5–8 daily; 2hr); Pathankot (11–15 daily; 1hr 40min–2hr 35min).

By bus The main bus stand is located north of the river, in the old centre of town. Most buses to Srinagar depart between 5am and 8am, though there are overnight sleeper services too (₹700); buses often depart from the railway station. City minibuses connect the railway station to the centre of town, via the main bus stand, every few minutes.

Destinations Amritsar (4–5hr); Delhi (9–14hr); Pathankot (2–3hr); Katra (1hr); Srinagar (10–12hr).

By jeep Shared jeep rides to Srinagar (9–10hr) or Katra (1hr) can be organized at one of the numerous travel agencies located where the jeeps gather, just south of the bus stand.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

★Fortune Inn Riviera Gulab Singh Marg, ☎fortunehotels.in. Excellent mid-range choice with attentive staff, plush rooms, and a decent choice of restaurants and bars. There's a fitness centre on site, and breakfast is included in the rates. ₹₹₹

Ramada Gulab Singh Marg, ☎wyndhamhotels.com. This is the largest and most luxurious accommodation option in Jammu, with a prime location overlooking the river to the south; it's just about visible from the stylish rooms, most of which face east or west. Breakfast included, and guests usually have other meals (and drinks) within the complex; options include the Sky Bar, sat on the rooftop by the river-facing infinity pool. ₹₹₹₹

Vivek Just south of bus stand 📍9419153454. Simple hotel in a convenient location, with comfortable a/c rooms and a snazzy lobby; the restaurant isn't great, so dine elsewhere, and wi-fi can be scratchy. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Jammu has plenty of cheap snack joints and vegetarian vaishno dhabas, especially east of Ragunath Temple. Hotel restaurants remain the best choice if you want meat and more comfortable surroundings; recent years have also witnessed the introduction of Western fast-food outlets, as well as a few independent modern venues catering to local youth.

Falak 7F KC Residency, Residency Rd 📍0191 252 0770. Set atop a business hotel, this revolving restaurant serves good Indian and international cuisine. Try the gosht shahi korma, in a creamy cashew sauce. They also have a decent list of alcoholic drinks. ₹₹

Fortune Deli Gulab Singh Marg, 📍fortunehotels.in. The ground-floor café of this hotel (see above) is a good spot for coffee and breakfast; try their tasty toasted “eggwiches”. ₹₹₹

JKTDC Restaurant Off Residency Rd 📍0191 257 9554. Tucked into a hotel, and a little hard to find, this is the best place in town for mutton-centric Kashmiri cuisine; portions of rogan josh or dhaniwal korma, and are best washed down with a cup of kehwa, a yummy tea made with saffron, cardamom and almond. ₹₹₹

Smugglers Bahu Plaza Park 📍87130 20784. One of several modern choices in the double-winged Bahu Plaza complex, this two-level spot claims to serve “illegally healthy” food – an odd way to describe peanut butter pancakes or choco-banana smoothies, although they do have a range of salads too, as well as decent coffee. ₹₹

DRINKING

MAP

Many of Jammu's hotels have bars, and there are some earthier ones south of the bus stand, as well as a fair few liquor stores dotted around town – more in the area east of Ragunath Temple than the relatively Muslim area around the bus stand. The importance of all this may be clear if you've just arrived from alcohol-lite Kashmir; if you're heading that way, you may wish to take the opportunity to cut loose here in Jammu.

Sky Bar 5F Ramada Hotel, Gulab Singh Marg 📞0191 274 0070, 🌐ramadajammu.in. Catch the sunset from this lofty bar, sat atop the Ramada. You could indulge in a hookah session.

Katra

Around 40km north of Jammu on the way to Srinagar – a route predictably punctuated by army signs spouting militaristic slogans such as “the power behind the punch” – a road branches off to the small, unassuming town of KATRA, famed for nearby Vaishno Devi temple, the second most visited shrine in India after Tirumala in Andhra Pradesh.

Vaishno Devi temple 13.5km from Katra, a 6hr 30min–8hr 30min walk, charged pony or palanquin ride • Free, though donations expected Lying at a comfortable altitude of 1615m, the revered Vaishno Devi temple draws around eight million pilgrims a year. It's a fair hike from Katra, though on a relatively easy and well-trodden path; the cave shrine itself is entered via an ankle-deep stream, whose chilly waters you must brave in order to get darshan of the image of the goddess, a triple incarnation of the female Shakti.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS OR JEEP THERE ARE KATRA REGULAR BUSES AND JEEPS TO KATRA FROM JAMMU (1HR 20MIN).

By taxi A taxi from Jammu (1hr) will set you back ₹1450 one way, or ₹2290 return including waiting time.

By train Trains from Jammu take far longer than any other form of transport (5–8 daily; 2hr), but can be of use if you want to get straight here from Delhi (4–7 daily; 12–16hr) or destinations south without stopping in Jammu City itself.

ACCOMMODATION SARASWATI NEAR SHALIMAR PARK, KATRA, 🌐JKTDC.CO.IN. NESTLED BELOW THE VERDANT MOUNTAINS NEAR THE START OF THE TEMPLE HIKE, THIS THREE-STOREY CONCRETE GOVERNMENT BLOCK CONTAINS

A VARIETY OF ROOMS, SOME OF THEM DELUXE WITH A/C.
STANDARD GOVERNMENT RESTAURANT. ₹₹

Patnitop Regular buses and jeeps from Jammu (2hr 30min) or Srinagar (around 7hr) Around 110km north of Jammu on the way to Srinagar, just as the pines start to take over from the deciduous forest, the main road passes by PATNITOP. This alpine-style resort is popular with lowland Indians for its views and fresh air, as well as its relative accessibility – it’s still deemed “safe”, even when curfews and rock-hurling see domestic tourism come to a relative standstill in the Srinagar area. (☎ hotelsinpatnitop.co.in) accommodation Forest View On Patnitop a hill above the centre of Patnitop ☎94191 60615. Set amid tall pines around 2km from the highway, this is the nicest place in the area, with 43 rooms across its three floors; all have heating and mod-cons, and many have prime views. Forget the rack rates – you’ll probably end up paying half of these. ₹₹₹

< Back to Jammu and Kashmir and Ladakh

iStock
LE CORBUSIER'S BRUTALIST CAPITAL COMPLEX

Punjab and Haryana

Amritsar

Chandigarh and around

Patiala

Gurgaon

Punjab and Haryana Crossed by the five major tributaries of the Indus River, the region of Punjab (“Five Rivers”) was split down the middle at Independence, with Indian Muslims fleeing west into Pakistan, and Sikhs and Hindus doing likewise to the east. In 1966, the plains on the Indian side of the border were further divided into the predominantly Sikh Punjab and the 96-percent Hindu Haryana, and both remain governed from the purpose-built capital of Chandigarh. The states of Punjab and Haryana have both prospered on account of their position in the fertile river plain northwest of Delhi, and are often referred to as India’s breadbasket.

They're somewhat less important to international visitors, though Amritsar's astonishingly beautiful Golden Temple is deservedly one of the country's major draws, and Chandigarh a must-visit for fans – and such people do exist – of brutalist architecture.

The region as a whole is very important to the nation's economy – its farmers produce nearly a quarter of India's wheat and one third of its milk and dairy foods, while Ludhiana churns out ninety percent of the country's woollen goods. Helped by remittance cheques from millions of expatriates in the UK, US and Canada, the states' per capita income is almost double the national average.

Punjab contains the vast majority of tourist interest in the two states. Pride of place, of course, goes to the stunning Golden Temple in Amritsar, a hugely holy city which deserves at least a couple of days of your time – this will also enable a visit to the bizarre border ceremony, which takes place each evening just to the west in Wagha. Southeast across the plains, Patiala is a far more low-key city, and one which is not yet making the most of its array of sights – unlike Amritsar, you'll see very few tourists knocking about here. There are a few more in nearby Chandigarh, the purpose-built state capital; concrete testament to a Corbusier vision, it's also home to the wacky Rock Garden.

Chandigarh is also the capital of Haryana state, which has very little to detain the visitor apart from its bars and the modern high-rise buildings of Gurgaon, a city which most, in any case, refer to as part of greater Delhi.

Brief history Punjab's first urban settlement was the Harappan civilization of around 3000 BC, while later on the epic battles in the Mahabharata drew on real-life encounters between ancient Punjabi kings at Karnal. Conquered by the Mauryans in the third century BC, the Punjab saw further action as various invaders passed through on their way from the Khyber Pass to Delhi – including the Mughal emperor Babur, who routed Ibrahim Lodi at Panipat in 1526.

Sikhism began in the region under the tutelage of Guru Nanak (1469–1539). Based on the notion of a single formless God, the guru's vision of a casteless egalitarian society found favour with both Hindus and Muslims, in spite of Mughal emperor Aurangzeb's attempts to stamp it out. Indeed, one result of his intolerance was that the Sikhs – eager to avoid a Mughal resurrection – willingly helped the British to quash the great uprising in 1857, though their relationship with the British soured after the Jallianwalla Bagh massacre of 1919.

BEST TIME TO VISIT AS EVER IN NORTHERN INDIA, SPRING (MARCH–APRIL) AND AUTUMN (OCT & NOV) ARE THE BEST TIMES TO VISIT. WINTER (DEC & JAN) CAN BE RATHER NIPPY, AND SUMMER (JUNE–AUG) VERY HOT, ALTHOUGH NOTHING LIKE THE SOUTH, OF COURSE. SUMMER IS ALSO THE WETTEST SEASON, WITH RAINFALL PEAKING IN AUGUST, BUT THE MONSOON IS LARGELY SPENT BY THE TIME IT GETS THIS FAR, SO IT ISN'T ANYTHING LIKE AS FULL-ON AS IT IS FURTHER SOUTH AND EAST.

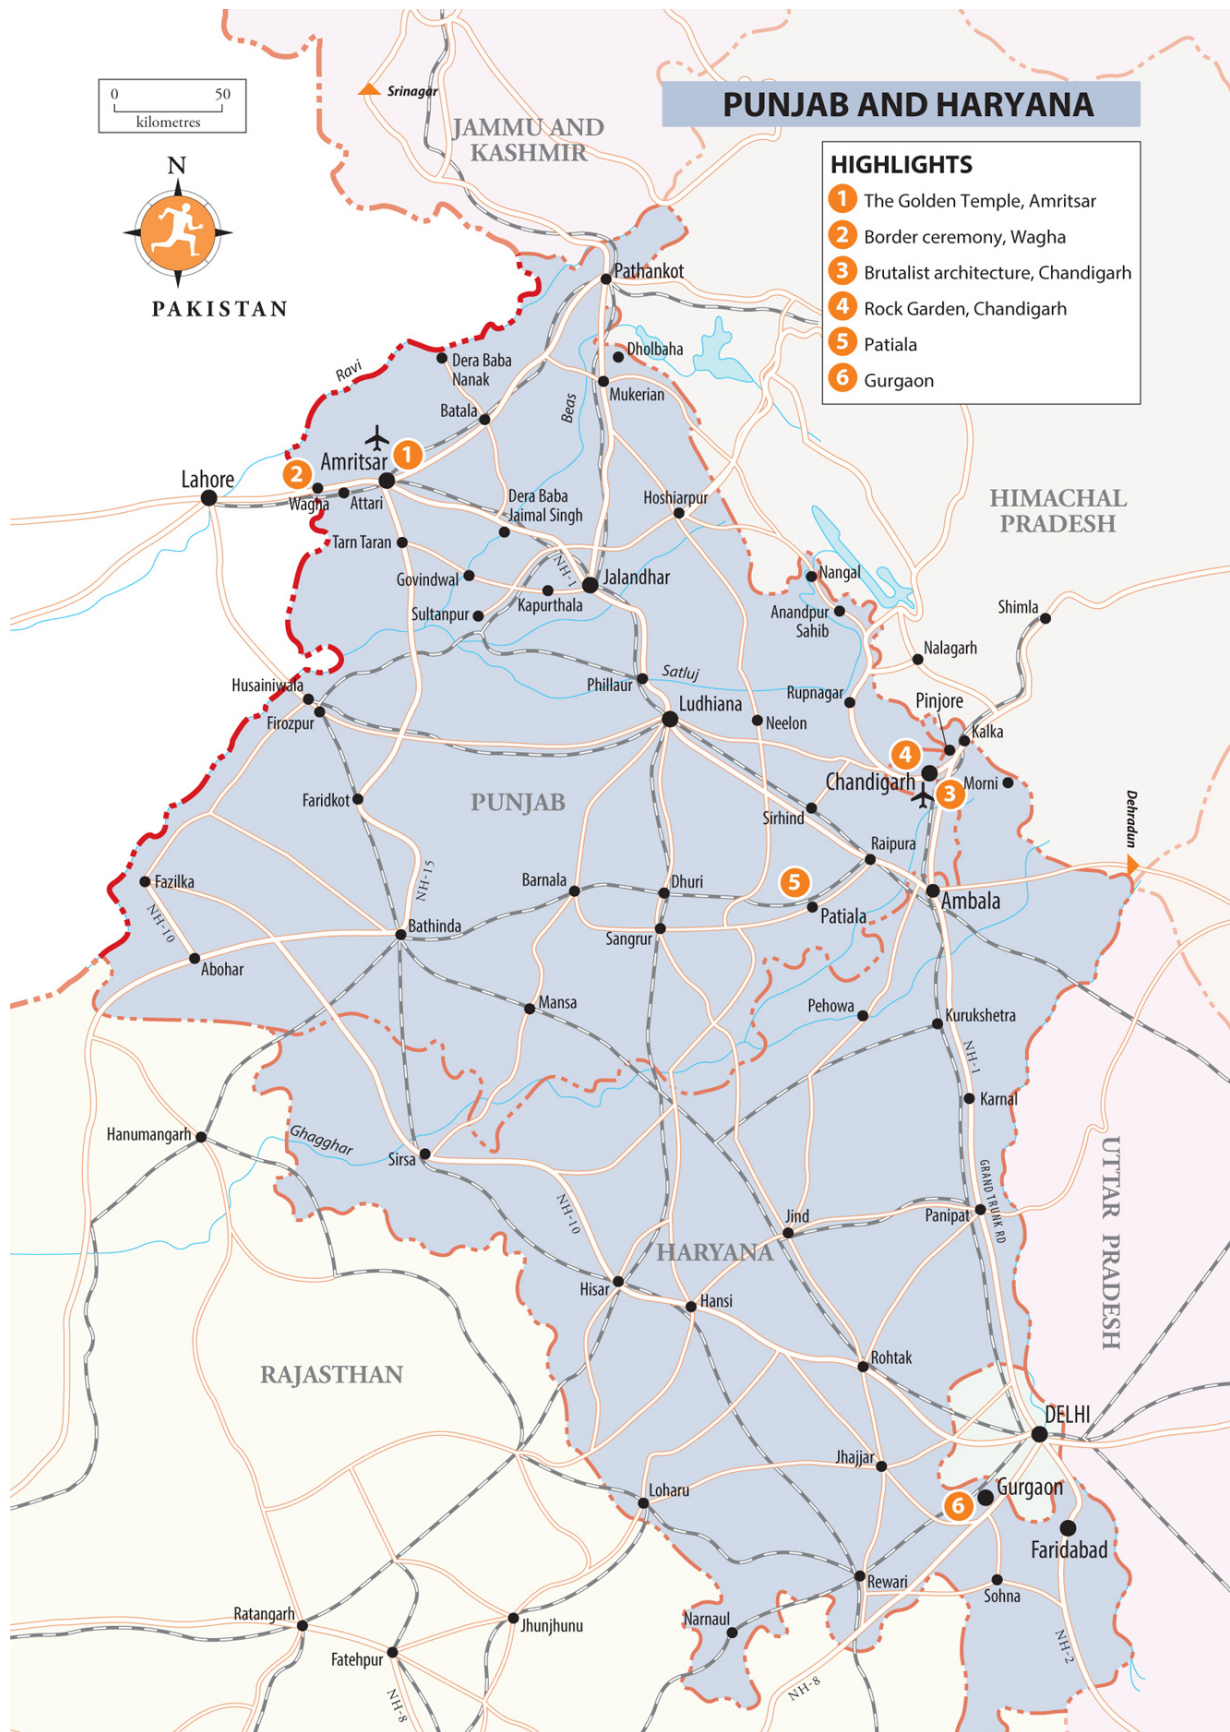

Shutterstock
AMRITSAR'S GOLDEN TEMPLE

Highlights

- ① The Golden Temple, Amritsar One of the great sights, and sounds, of India – kirtan (devotional songs) are performed throughout the day and into the night from the breathtaking golden Harmandir.
- ② Border ceremony, Wagha Shorter and more colourful than a cricket match, the border ceremony is a highly charged event, where thousands of people chant and cheer from the Indian and Pakistani sides.
- ③ Brutalist architecture, Chandigarh A whole city designed from blueprints created by Le Corbusier, with the brutalism particularly, well, brutal in the Capital Complex.
- ④ Rock Garden, Chandigarh This bizarre and seemingly haphazard sculpture garden, assembled from rubbish by a local eccentric, offers a curious contrast to the ordered city that surrounds it.
- ⑤ Patiala A friendly and atmospheric eighteenth-century city, formerly the capital of a princely state, where you can do a heritage tour of the old town and check out one of India's great palatial fortresses.
- ⑥ Gurgaon Inside Haryana state but essentially a suburb of Delhi, this relatively modern city is where many young folk from the capital come to let their hair down.

HIGHLIGHTS ARE MARKED ON THE MAP

FESTIVALS IN PUNJAB AND HARYANA BABA BAKALA (MARCH). SIKH PILGRIMAGE TO BAKALA TO COMMEMORATE THE INDUCTION OF THE TENTH SIKH GURU, GOBIND SINGH.

Baisakhi (April or early May). Anniversary of the establishment of the Sikh Khalsa by the tenth Sikh guru, Gobind Singh, in 1699, celebrated with a morning of bathing and praying, followed by parades and distribution of sweet prasad in the afternoon.

Pinjore Mango Mela (early July). Gorge on mangoes at this annual two-day mango fest held in the Yadavindra Gardens in Pinjore.

Guru Nanak Jayanti (late Oct/early Nov). The birthday of the first Sikh guru is celebrated with a three-day reading of the Granth Sahib (Sikh holy scriptures) and processions in most Punjabi cities.

Harballabh Sangeet Sammelan (last weekend in Dec; harballabh.org). Held in Jalandhar since 1875, this is the world's oldest festival of Indian classical music, lasting three days, with no admission or accommodation fees.

Partition in 1947 brought sectarian hatred to the surface, with an exodus of Muslims from the Indian half of the Punjab, and of Hindus and Sikhs from the Pakistani half, amid great slaughter. After Independence, the Indian part grew wealthy on its agricultural output; militant Sikhs began to press for the creation of an independent state called Khalistan. In 1966, the mainly Hindu area of Haryana was hived off, but that failed to silence the separatists, whose party, the Akali Dal, trounced Congress in state elections.

With covert support from the national government (who saw the group as a way to defeat the Akali Dal), a more radical separatist movement led by Sant Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale began a campaign of sectarian terror, coming to a head in 1984 with the occupation of Amritsar's Golden Temple. Indira Gandhi's brutal response, Operation Blue Star, plunged the Punjab into yet another ugly bout of communal violence; four years later, a less threatening occupation of the temple was crushed by Operation Black Thunder. Most Akali Dal factions boycotted the 1992 elections, which saw Congress returned on a 22 percent turnout. Chief minister Beant Singh was killed by a car bomb in 1995, but that was the militants' last gasp, and subsequent state elections have seen a return to normality.

Pathankot The dusty town of PATHANKOT, 270km northwest of Chandigarh and 101km to the northeast of Amritsar, is an important cantonment and railway junction, close to the frontier with Pakistan and near the borders with Himachal Pradesh and Jammu. Pathankot itself is a friendly enough place, but there's nothing special to see here, and most travellers just pass through to pick up bus connections to Dharamsala, Dalhousie, Chamba and Kashmir, or to take the slow train east through the picturesque Kangra Valley.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN THE SLOW, PATHANKOT NARROW-GAUGE PASSENGER TRAINS TO JOGINDERNAGAR (DAILY 2.15AM & 10AM) WIND THROUGH THE SCENIC KANGRA VALLEY, AND MAKE A PLEASANT ALTERNATIVE TO THE BUSY ROAD TO BOTH DHARAMSALA (CHANGE AT KANGRA) AND THE KULLU VALLEY (BUS FROM JOGINDER NAGAR OR BAIJNATH).

Destinations Amritsar (10 daily; 2–3hr); Baijnath (2 daily; 8hr); Jogindernagar (2 daily; 9–10hr); Kangra (5 daily; 4–5hr).

By bus Pathankot's bus station is on Railway Rd, 300m west of the railway station.

Destinations Amritsar (every 10min; 3hr); Chandigarh (1–2 hourly; 6hr); Dharamsala (1–2 hourly; 4hr); Jammu (every 10–15min; 3hr); Manali (9 daily; 12hr); Shimla (7 daily; 12 hr).

MICROBREWERIES IF YOU LIKE A GOOD BEER AND HAVE HAD ENOUGH OF THE USUAL INDUSTRIAL INDIAN BRANDS, YOU'LL BE GLAD TO KNOW THAT

MANY CITIES IN PUNJAB AND HARYANA – INCLUDING ALL LARGE CITIES LISTED IN THIS CHAPTER – HAVE MICROBREWERY BARS SERVING THEIR OWN BEERS. THOUGH STILL GENERALLY IN THE “EXPERIMENTAL” PHASE OF ALE DEVELOPMENT, EXPECT QUALITY TO INCREASE AS TIME GOES BY; ALSO NOTE THAT, LIKE DELHI, THE LEGAL DRINKING AGE IS A RIDICULOUS 25.

ACCOMMODATION DARSHAN GUEST HOUSE RAILWAY RD (200M EAST OF THE RAILWAY STATION) ☎ DARSHANGUESTHOUSE.BUSINESS.SITE. THE BEST (AND PINKEST) OF THE CHEAPIES ALONG THIS STRETCH OF RAILWAY ROAD – LIKE ALL OF THEM IT’S CLEAN AND SPARSE, BUT FRIENDLY ENOUGH, AND THE ROOMS ARE ATTACHED, WITH HOT WATER ALTHOUGH WI-FI REACHES UP ONLY AS FAR AS THE FIRST FLOOR. ₹₹₹

Venice 300m east of station, then 400m south of Railway Rd on Dhangu Rd ☎ venicehotelindia.com. This is Pathankot’s top business hotel, and its most comfortable address, with good rooms ranging from semi-deluxe to super-deluxe (the only real difference being the size), as well as a restaurant and a bar. ₹₹₹

Amritsar The Sikhs’ holy city of AMRITSAR is the largest city in Punjab, and one of the most popular tourist destinations in this whole chunk of India. Sikh pilgrims, domestic tourists and international visitors arrive en masse for one gleaming reason – the fabled Golden Temple, whose domes soar above Amritsar’s teeming streets, is certainly one of the most captivating sights in the whole country. The temple aside, Amritsar is a little noisy and congested, but its old city in particular is as lively as any in India, and a stretch of it was recently pedestrianized and gentrified, which at least provides temporary escape from the hubbub. Some stay in town for a couple more days than they need – it’s the kind of place that grows on you, even if there’s not too much else to see other than Jallianwalla Bagh, host to the greatest single atrocity of colonial times, and the new Partition Museum. Amritsar is also an important staging post for those crossing the Indo-Pakistan frontier at Wagha, 29km west – or, much more commonly, for those seeking to witness the astonishing border-closing ceremony, which takes place there each evening.

Brief history Amritsar was founded in 1577 by Ram Das, the fourth Sikh guru, beside a bathing pool famed for its healing powers. The land around the tank was granted in perpetuity by the Mughal emperor Akbar to the Sikhs. When merchants moved in to take advantage of the strategic location on the Silk Route, Amritsar expanded rapidly, gaining a grand new temple under Ram Das's son and heir, Guru Arjan Dev. Sacked by Afghans in 1761, the shrine was rebuilt by the Sikhs' greatest secular leader, Maharaja Ranjit Singh, who also donated the gold used in its construction.

Amritsar's twentieth-century history has been blighted by a series of appalling massacres. The first occurred in 1919, when thousands of unarmed civilian demonstrators were gunned down without warning by British troops in Jallianwalla Bagh – an atrocity that inspired Gandhi's Non-Cooperation Movement. During Partition, Amritsar experienced some of the worst communal blood-letting ever seen on the Subcontinent. In 1983, heavily armed Sikh fundamentalists under the preacher-warrior Sant Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale occupied the Golden Temple's Akal Takht, and in early June 1984 Indira Gandhi ordered a paramilitary attack on the temple, code-named Operation Blue Star, in which two thousand people were killed, including pilgrims trapped inside.

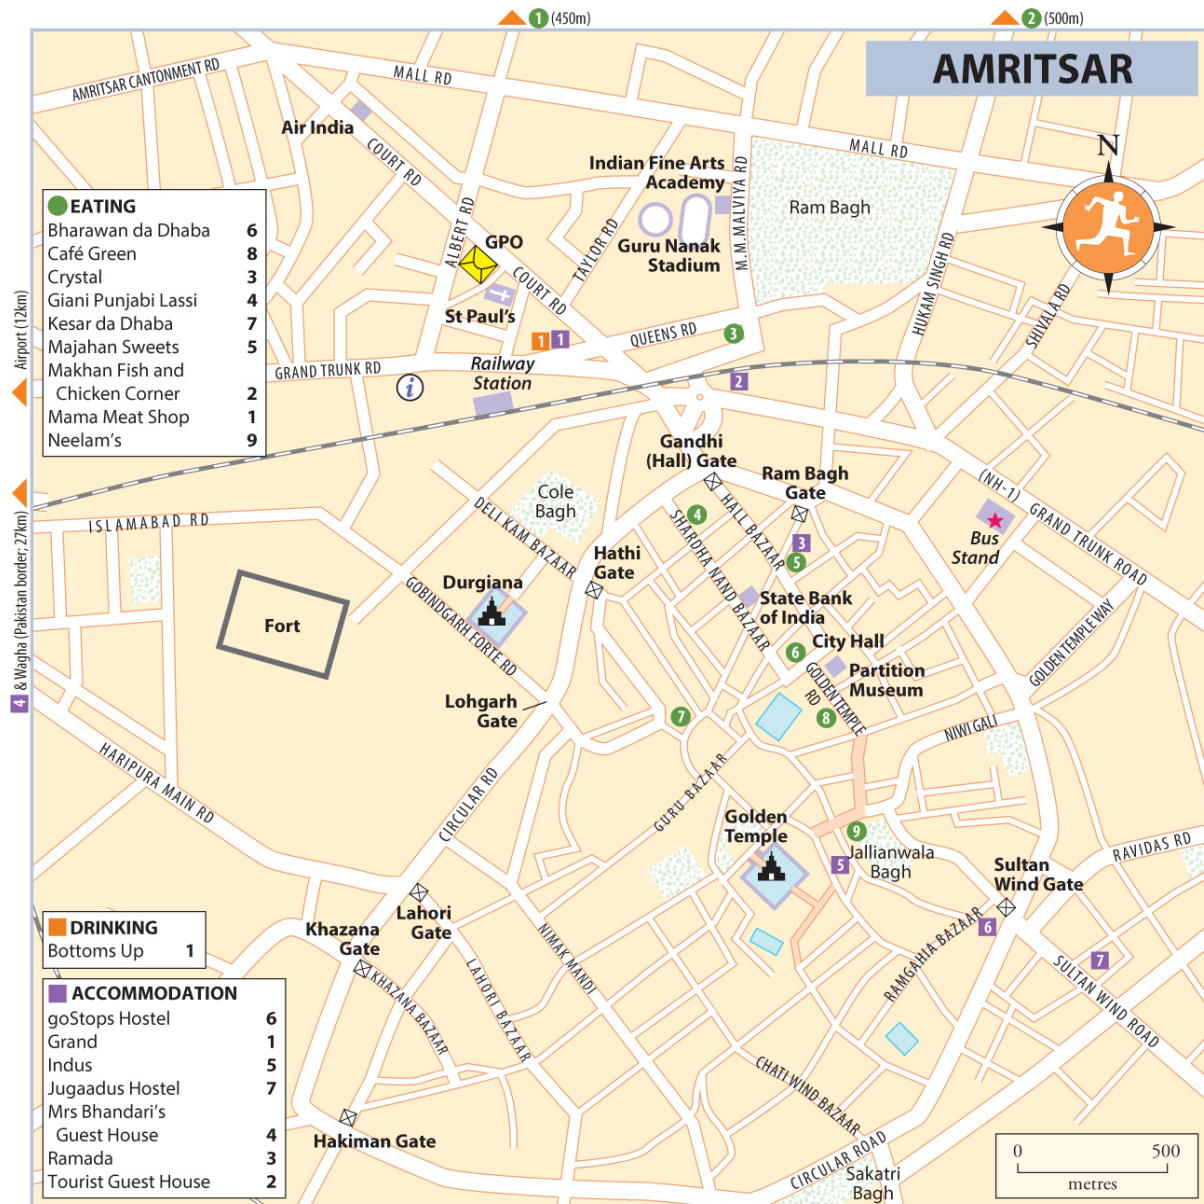

Indira Gandhi's assassination by her Sikh bodyguards just four months later provoked the worst riots in the city since Partition. But Congress learned little from its mistakes and in 1987, Indira's son Rajiv reneged on an important accord with the main Sikh party, Akali Dal, strengthening the hand of the separatists, who retaliated by occupying the temple again. This time, the army responded with more restraint, leaving Operation Black Thunder to the Punjab police. Neither as well provisioned nor as well motivated as Bhindranwale's martyrs, the fundamentalists eventually surrendered.

The Golden Temple Golden Temple Rd •

goldentempleamritsar.org • Daily 24hr • Free • Free bus from railway station forecourt (every 30min 5am–10pm) Even visitors without a religious bone in their bodies cannot fail to be moved by Amritsar’s resplendent Golden Temple, spiritual centre of the Sikh faith and open to all. Built by Guru Arjan Dev in the late sixteenth century, the richly gilded Harmandir rises from the middle of an artificial rectangular lake, connected to the surrounding white-marble complex by a narrow causeway. Every Sikh tries to make at least one pilgrimage here during their lifetime to listen to the sublime music (shabad kirtan), readings from the Adi Granth and also to bathe in the purifying waters of the temple tank – the Amrit Sarovar or “Pool of Immortality-Giving Nectar”.

The best time to visit is early morning, to catch the first rays of sunlight gleaming on the bulbous golden domes and reflecting in the waters of the Amrit Sarovar. Sunset and evenings are an excellent time to tune in to the beautiful music performed in the Harmandir.

The Parikrama The principal north entrance to the temple, the Darshini Deori, leads under a Victorian clock tower to a flight of steps, from where you catch your first glimpse of the Harmandir, floating serenely above the glassy surface of the Amrit Sarovar. Dropping down as a reminder of the humility necessary to approach God, the steps end at the polished marble Parikrama that surrounds the tank, its smooth white stones set with the names of those who contributed to the temple's construction.

The shrines on the north edge of the enclosure are known as the 68 Holy Places. Arjan Dev, the fifth guru, told his followers that a visit to these was equivalent to a pilgrimage around all 68 of India's most sacred Hindu sites. Several have been converted into a Gallery of Martyrs, in which paintings of glorious but gory episodes from Sikh history are displayed.

Four glass-fronted booths punctuate the Parikrama. Seated in each is a priest, or granthi, intoning verses from the Adi Granth (Sikh scriptures). The continuous readings are performed in shifts; passing pilgrims touch the steps in front of the booths with their heads and leave offerings of money.

At the east end of the Parikrama, the two truncated Ramgarhia Minars – brick watchtowers whose tops were blasted off during Operation Blue Star – overlook the Guru-ka-Langar (see below) and the main bathing ghats. Hang around here long enough and you'll see a fair cross-section of modern Sikh society parade past: families of Jat farmers, NRIs (Non-Resident Indians) on holiday from Britain and North America, and the odd group of fierce-looking warriors carrying lances, sabres and long curved daggers. Distinguished by their deep-blue knee-length robes and saffron turbans, the ultra-orthodox nihangs (literally "crocodiles") are devotees of the militarist tenth guru, Gobind Singh. Lastly, the gnarled old Jubi Tree in the northwest corner of the compound was planted around 450 years ago by the Golden Temple's first high priest, or Babba Buddhaya, and is believed to have special powers.

The Guru-ka-Langar For Sikhs, no pilgrimage to the Golden Temple is considered complete without a visit to the Guru-ka-Langar. The giant communal canteen, which overlooks the eastern entrance to the temple complex, provides free food to all comers. Sharing meals with strangers reinforces one of the central tenets of the Sikh faith, the principle of equality, instigated by the third guru, Amar Das, in the sixteenth century to break down caste barriers.

Some 20,000 chapatti and black dhal dinners – a whopping 100,000 at peak times – are dished up here each day in an operation of typical Sikh efficiency, which you can witness for yourself by joining the queues that form outside the hall, around the clock. The meal begins after grace has been sung by a volunteer, or sevak, and continues until everyone has eaten their fill. By the time the tin trays have been collected and the floors swept for the next sitting, another crowd of pilgrims has gathered at the gates, and the cycle starts again. Although the meals are paid for out of the temple's coffers, most visitors leave a small donation in the boxes in the yard outside.

GOLDEN RULES VISITORS OF ALL NATIONALITIES AND RELIGIONS ARE ALLOWED INTO THE GOLDEN TEMPLE PROVIDED THEY RESPECT A FEW BASIC RULES, ENFORCED BY PATROLLING GUARDS. FIRSTLY, TOBACCO, ALCOHOL AND DRUGS OF ANY KIND ARE FORBIDDEN. BEFORE ENTERING, YOU SHOULD ALSO LEAVE YOUR SHOES AT THE FREE CLOAKROOMS (YOU'LL RECEIVE A NUMBERED METAL TOKEN, AND THE PROCESS IS USUALLY FAST), COVER YOUR HEAD (COTTON SCARVES ARE AVAILABLE OUTSIDE THE MAIN ENTRANCE, OR WEAR A KULLU HAT) AND WASH YOUR FEET IN THE POOL BELOW THE STEPS. PHOTOGRAPHY IS PERMITTED AROUND THE POOL, BUT NOT INSIDE ANY OF THE SHRINES.

The Akal Takht Directly opposite the ceremonial entrance to the Harmandir, the Akal Takht is the second most sacred shrine in the Golden Temple complex. A symbol of God's authority on earth, it was built by Guru Hargobind in the seventeenth century and came to house the Shiromani Gurudwara Parbandhak Committee, the religious and political governing body of the Sikh faith founded in 1925.

During the 1984 siege, Bhindranwale and his army used this golden-domed building as their headquarters, fortifying it with sandbags and machine-gun posts. When Indian paratroopers tried to storm the shrine, they were mown down in their hundreds while crossing the courtyard in front of it: the reason why the army ultimately resorted to much heavier-handed tactics to end the siege. Positioned at the opposite end of the Amrit Sarovar, tanks pumped a salvo of high-explosive squash-head shells into the delicate facade, reducing it to rubble within seconds. The destruction of the Akal Takht offended Sikh sensibilities more than any other aspect of the operation. The shrine has been largely rebuilt and now looks almost the same as it did before June 6, 1984. Decorated with elaborate inlay, its ground floor is where the Adi Granth is brought each evening from the Harmandir, borne in a gold-and-silver palanquin.

The Harmandir Likened by one guru to “a ship crossing the ocean of ignorance”, the triple-storey Harmandir, or “Golden Temple of God” was built by Arjan Dev to house the Adi Granth, which he compiled from teachings of all the Sikh gurus; it is the focus of the Sikh faith. The temple has four doors indicating it is open to people of all faiths and all four caste divisions of Hindu society. The large dome and roof, covered with 100kg of gold leaf, is shaped like an inverted lotus, symbolizing the Sikhs’ concern for temporal as well as spiritual matters.

The long causeway, or Guru’s Bridge, which joins the Harmandir to the west side of the Amrit Sarovar, is approached via an ornate archway, the Darshani Deorh. As you approach the sanctum check out the amazing Mughal-style inlay work and floral gilt above the doors and windows.

The interior of the temple – decorated with yet more gold and silver, adorned with ivory mosaics and intricately carved wood panels – is dominated by the enormous Adi Granth, which rests on a sumptuous throne beneath a jewel-encrusted silk canopy. Before his death in 1708, Guru Gobind Singh, who revised the Adi Granth, declared that he was to be the last living guru, and that the tome would take over after him – hence its full title, the Guru Granth Sahib. Granthis intone continuous readings from the text as the worshippers file past, accompanied by singers and musicians – all relayed by loudspeakers around the complex. Known as Shri Akhand Path, a single continuous reading of the Guru Granth Sahib is carried out in three-hour shifts and takes around 48 hours to complete.

Jallianwalla Bagh Off Golden Temple Rd • Daily 6.30am–7.30pm • Free Just 100m northeast of the Golden Temple, a narrow lane leads between two buildings to Jallianwalla Bagh, a grassy compound whose prettiness belies a rather gruesome history – this was the site of one of the bloodiest atrocities committed by the British Raj, and today the park functions as a memorial to those martyred here. A wall at the southwest corner sports 36 bullet holes created during the massacre; oddly, this has become a popular selfie spot with smiling domestic tourists. Coins are also thrown into Martyrs' Well, housed under a pretty pink structure to the east of the park.

THE JALLIANWALLA BAGH MASSACRE IN 1919, A SERIES OF ONE-DAY STRIKES, OR HARTALS, WAS STAGED IN AMRITSAR IN PROTEST AGAINST THE RECENT ROWLATT ACT, WHICH ENABLED THE BRITISH TO IMPRISON WITHOUT TRIAL ANY INDIAN SUSPECTED OF SEDITION. WHEN THE PEACEFUL DEMONSTRATIONS ESCALATED INTO SPORADIC LOOTING, THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR OF PUNJAB DECLARED MARTIAL LAW AND CALLED FOR REINFORCEMENTS FROM JALANDHAR. A PLATOON OF INFANTRY ARRIVED SOON AFTER, LED BY GENERAL R.E.H. DYER.

Despite a ban on public meetings, a mass demonstration was called by Mahatma Gandhi for April 13, the Sikh holiday of Baisakhi. The venue was a stretch of waste ground in the heart of the city, hemmed in by high brick walls and with only a couple of alleys for access. An estimated twenty thousand people gathered in Jallianwalla Bagh for the meeting. However, before any speakers could address the crowd, Dyer and his 150 troops, stationed on a patch of high ground in front of the main exit, opened fire without warning. By the time they had finished firing, ten to fifteen minutes later, hundreds of unarmed demonstrators lay dead and dying, many of them shot in the back while clambering over the walls.

Others perished after diving for cover into the well that still stands in the middle of the bagh.

No one knows exactly how many people were killed. Official estimates put the death toll at 379, with 1200 injured, although the final figure may well have been several times higher; Indian sources quote a figure of two thousand dead. Hushed up for more than six months in Britain, the Jallianwalla Bagh massacre caused an international outcry when the story finally broke. It also proved seminal in the Independence struggle, prompting Gandhi to initiate the widespread civil disobedience campaign that played such a significant part in ridding India of its colonial overlords.

Moving first-hand accounts of the horrific events of April 13, 1919, and contemporary pictures and newspaper reports, are displayed in Jallianwalla Bagh's small martyrs gallery. The well, complete with chilling bullet holes, has been turned into a memorial to the victims.

Partition Museum Town Hall • Tue–Sun 10am–6pm • Charge A relatively recent addition to the city is its Partition Museum, set in the pretty, red-brick Town Hall buildings; it's the default thing to see in Amritsar when you've seen the Golden Temple and been to the border ceremony, and have run out of things to do. Still, the exhibits are absorbing enough, with a series of artefacts, photos and documents charting the course of the independence movement, the subsequent demands for separation, and finally the partition and its consequences.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE THE AMRITSAR AIRPORT IS 12KM NORTHWEST OF TOWN (YOU CAN GET THERE BY TAXI OR BY AUTO-RICKSHAW).

Destinations Delhi (5 daily; 1hr 15min); Mumbai (2 daily; 2hr 40min); Srinagar (1 daily; 1hr).

By train The railway station is centrally located, just north of the old city, though since it faces north you'll have to get across the tracks – time-consuming, even in a vehicle. The fastest trains for Delhi are the daily a/c Shatabdis – the #12014 (dep. 5am, arr. 11.15am) and the #12030 (dep. 4.50pm, arr. 11.05pm). If you prefer to travel overnight, there's the #12904 Golden Temple Mail (dep. 9.25pm, arr. 7.05am), which continues to Mumbai (arr. 5.20am, two calendar days after departure). Other trains include the daily #13006 Amritsar–Howrah Mail (dep. 6.45pm) via Varanasi (arr. 4.40pm next day) to Kolkata (arr. Howrah 7.20am the day after that).

By bus For Pathankot (every 10min; 3hr) and HP destinations, you are restricted to state transport buses from the large bus stand on Grand Trunk Rd (NH-1), north of the old city, where there are also services to Chandigarh (approximately every 30min; 5–6hr). Most private buses, including a/c services, leave from just north of Gandhi (Hall) Gate. Agencies outside Gandhi (Hall) Gate and on Queens Rd operate deluxe and a/c buses to Chandigarh (5hr) and Delhi (10hr), but Delhi is a long and tiring road journey, and most people prefer to travel by train.

GETTING TO PAKISTAN FOR PAKISTAN, TAKE ONE OF THE FREQUENT BUSES TO ATTARI (1HR 45MIN), FROM WHERE IT'S JUST 2KM TO THE BORDER AT WAGHA (HOME TO THE FAMOUSLY COLOURFUL CEREMONIES;), OR HIRE A TAXI OR AUTO FROM AMRITSAR. RICKSHAWS ARE AVAILABLE BETWEEN ATTARI AND WAGHA. YOU'LL HAVE TO CROSS INTO PAKISTAN BY FOOT – IT CAN TAKE UP TO TWO HOURS TO COMPLETE FORMALITIES. THERE IS A CROSS-BORDER TRAIN – THE TWICE-WEEKLY SAMJHAUTA EXPRESS TO LAHORE IN THE PAKISTANI PART OF THE PUNJAB – BUT WHETHER IT RUNS DEPENDS ON THE POLITICAL SITUATION, AND AT PRESENT IT MUST BE BOARDED AT DELHI OR ATTARI, NOT IN AMRITSAR.

GETTING AROUND BY RICKSHAW YOU MAY FIND AMRITSAR TOO LARGE AND LABYRINTHINE TO NEGOTIATE ON FOOT; IF YOU'RE CROSSING TOWN OR ARE IN A HURRY, FLAG DOWN AN AUTO-RICKSHAW. OTHERWISE, STICK TO CYCLE RICKSHAWS, WHICH ARE THE BEST WAY TO GET AROUND THE NARROW, PACKED STREETS OF THE OLD QUARTER.

By taxi If you've got the app, it's often worth giving Ola taxis a try – they're often the same price as (or even cheaper than) auto-rickshaws, and you won't even need to haggle.

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION PTDC'S TOURIST OFFICE (TUES–SUN 9AM–5PM; ☎0172 504 2969, 🌐 PUNJABTOURISM.PUNJAB.GOV.IN), AT THE WESTERN EXIT FROM THE RAILWAY STATION ON QUEENS RD, IS USUALLY FRIENDLY AND HELPFUL. THEY ALSO RUN A HERITAGE WALK THROUGH THE OLD CITY (CHARGE PER PERSON), STARTING AT THE CITY HALL DAILY AT 8AM AND FINISHING AT THE GOLDEN TEMPLE.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

As well as the places reviewed below, it's also possible to stay at the niwas within the Golden Temple complex itself

HOTELS

Grand Queens Rd, opposite railway station ☎0183 256 2424. Kicking around since 1950, this hotel is showing its age a bit, but is generally clean, with attached rooms surrounding a pleasant garden courtyard, though windows all face inward. There's an adjacent bar, and they also offer day and night tours, the latter including the Wagha border ceremony. ₹₹₹₹

Indus 211/3 Sri Mandir Harmandar Sahib Marg ☎0183 253 5900. A decent enough budget hotel, although the “deluxe” (ie, standard) rooms lack windows. The big thing about it is the amazing view over the Golden Temple from the rooftop café-restaurant and the two “luxury” rooms (₹₹₹₹). All rooms are in any case pretty cosy, with attached bathrooms, hot water and TV. ₹₹₹₹

Mrs Bhandari's Guest House 10 Cantonment  bhandari_guesthouse.tripod.com. Wonderful old-fashioned rooms with wood fires and bathtubs in a colonial home with lawns, gardens and even a small swimming pool. Three-course meals are available, but pricey. You can camp in the grounds for ₹/person. Popular with overland package tours, it's become an Amritsar institution. ₹₹₹₹

STAYING AT THE GOLDEN TEMPLE COMPLEX UNDOUBTEDLY THE MOST AUTHENTIC PLACES TO STAY IN AMRITSAR ARE THE FIVE NIWAS OR PILGRIM HOSTELS RUN BY THE GOLDEN TEMPLE
MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE. INTENDED FOR SIKH
PILGRIMS, THESE CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS
ALSO OPEN THEIR DOORS TO FOREIGN TOURISTS.
CHARGES ARE NOMINAL (BY DONATION, WHICH IS AT YOUR DISCRETION), BUT STAYS ARE LIMITED TO A MAXIMUM OF THREE NIGHTS.

The first building as you approach on the east side of the temple is the Guru Arjan Dev Niwas, which has the check-in counter for Indian citizens. Foreigners have their own dedicated room at the Sri Guru Ramdas Ji Niwas, which is the next one along. The Sri Guru Nanak Niwas was where Bhindranwale and his men holed up prior to the Golden Temple siege in 1984.

The downside of staying at these niwas is that facilities can be basic (charpoy beds and communal washbasins in the central courtyard are the norm) and security can be a problem, although lockers are available. Alternatively, private rooms are available by the eastern entrance to the temple itself. It is advisable to book in advance ( 0183 255 3957,  goldentempleamritsar.org) as rooms and beds are almost always at a premium.

★Ramada 117 Hall Bazaar,  ramadaamritsar.com. Amritsar has plenty of competition at this price level, but this colonial-yellow wedding-cake of a building is the stand-out for one main reason – it's close, as in very close, to the Golden Temple. Rooms are just as good as you'd expect from the chain, and there's a coffee area by reception, a fitness centre further into the complex, and best of all, a swimming pool on the roof. ₹₹₹₹₹

Tourist Guest House 1335 Grand Trunk Rd, touristguesthouse.com. Popular with budget travellers since hippie trail days and still the city's best-value cheapie, offering a variety of rooms, of which the simplest have shared bathrooms and hot water in buckets; a large attached room with hot water doesn't cost much more. It backs onto the railway line however, so expect trains rattling past at all hours (one of the great sounds of India!). ₹₹

HOSTELS

★goStops Hostel 44 Kishangarh Colony b/s Gurdwara baba deep singh ji, Chatiwind Gate, gostops.com. Part of a growing chain, this is by far the best hostel in town, with comfy rooms (but "No Gangnam Style" allowed in them, as the signs say), a relaxing common area-cum-kitchen with more power points than you could possibly imagine, and a rooftop with a kick-ass view towards the Golden Temple. Guests find it easy to mingle, and the friendly staff are adept at lassoing together groups for runs to the border ceremony. Breakfast included. Dorm beds ₹₹, doubles ₹₹₹

Jugaadus Hostel Near Kalra Hospital, Ajit Nagar, Sultanwind Rd), Jahaj Ghar 085688 00020. A backpackers' hostel that's hip and laidback in a slightly uptight kind of way – no booze allowed. The atmosphere is great, and furnishings are made from natural or recycled materials. Each dorm has its own bathroom, and there's a communal kitchen. Dorm beds ₹
₹

EATING

MAP

For inexpensive food, try the simple vegetarian dhabas around the Golden Temple and bus stand, which serve cheap and tasty puris and chana dhal. Local specialities include Amritsari fish (fillets of river fish fried in a spicy batter – sohal or river sole is the best, but singara is cheaper).

RESTAURANTS

★Bharawan da Dhaba Hall Bazar Rd, Town Hall 00183 253 2575. One of the best dhabas in Amritsar, founded in 1912 and now a full-sized restaurant, serving simple and inexpensive but good veg curries (₹). Their speciality, however, is Amritsari kulcha (bread stuffed with potato), which is very buttery and simply wonderful here – it'll cost ₹ for a set including raita and channa, both pleasingly sweet and creamy. Daily 7am–12am.

Crystal Crystal Chowk 0183 222 5555. One of the city's most popular restaurants, with Indian, Chinese and Western food served in comfortable surroundings, by waiters in proper uniform. If you've made here, you might as well go for one of the pasta dishes – there are loads of options including lasagne and cannelloni, but their chicken dishes are pretty luscious too, and there's cold beer to wash it down. Daily 11am–11.30pm. ₹₹

Kesar da Dhaba Passian Chowk Passian (between Golden Temple and Durgiana Temple) 98760 22122. Old-school to the max here, in an establishment that's been going since 1916, and is well hidden away in the back streets (ask around if you get stuck). They have a limited menu of basic veg curries, tempting thalis and the lassies are pretty great too. Daily 11am–10:30pm. ₹

★Makhan Fish and Chicken Corner 21A Majitha Rd (near Madaan Hospital) 98760 22122. Everyone in Amritsar seems to recommend this attractive restaurant, which is certainly the best place in town for the city's signature fish – you can have it several ways, including tikka or tandoori-style, but locals prefer it fried. Served with a mayo-like sauce, it's not unlike a spicy fish and chips, without the chips. Daily 11am–11.30pm. ₹

Mama Meat Shop Maqbool Rd, 750m north of Mall Rd 099140 66000. One of a clutch of locally renowned dhabas that together form an Amritsar institution, frying up spicy mutton tikka or (for the brave) brain curry, on tawas (griddles) out front. Daily noon–11:30pm. ₹

Neelam's Golden Temple Rd near Jallianwalla Bagh 98760 22122. Indian veg dishes, plus some Chinese and Continental, at reasonable prices including good Punjabi thalis. The main appeal, however, lies in its location on the pedestrianized street – you can walk all the way here from the Golden Temple without fear of getting clonked by a rickshaw. Daily 9am–11pm. ₹

CAFÉS AND SWEET SHOPS

Café Green Town Hall, Golden Temple Rd 95698 95800. There are almost no decent places to scratch your caffeine cravings in central

Amritsar, and this one's smack-bang next to the Golden Temple. Daily 24hr. ₹

Giani Punjabi Lassi Golden Temple Out Rd  gianipunjabilassi.business.site. You'll see plenty of lassi spots around the Golden Temple, and most are very good. However, a little further afield, this is even better, one of a trio of super-simple, similarly-named spots with similarly spurious claims to longevity. Daily 5am–10pm. ₹

Majahan Sweets Chowk Bijli (just off Hall Bazaar)  0183 254 1078. An excellent and long-established sweet shop (since 1947), and a very good place to try local sweet specialities such as lentil-based badam dal pinni and savoury matthi. Little selection boxes give you three types of goodies. Daily 8.30am–9.30pm. ₹

BEDLAM AT THE BORDER EVERY EVENING AS SUNSET APPROACHES, THE INDIA–PAKISTAN BORDER CLOSES FOR THE NIGHT WITH A SPECTACULAR AND SOMEWHAT MONTY PYTHONESQUE SHOW. IT TAKES PLACE AT A REMOTE LITTLE PLACE 27KM WEST OF AMRITSAR CALLED WAGHA (THE NEAREST TOWN, 2KM AWAY, IS ATTARI), TO WHICH HUNDREDS – OFTEN THOUSANDS – OF INDIANS MAKE THEIR WAY EACH EVENING TO WATCH THE POPULAR TOURIST ATTRACTION FROM WHAT IS EFFECTIVELY A SMALL HALF-STADIUM. THE OTHER (CONSIDERABLY SMALLER) HALF IS OVER THE BORDER IN PAKISTAN, AND IT LIKEWISE RECEIVES CROWDS EACH EVENING – STRICTLY GENDER-SEGREGATED, YOU'LL MOST LIKELY WONDER WHAT THEY MAKE OF THE INDIAN SIDE, AT WHICH FEMALES ARE OFTEN ENCOURAGED TO DANCE LIKE MAD TO THE SOUND OF EAR-SPLITTING INDOPOP.

After the crowd has been built into something of a flag-waving frenzy, guards from both side – all sporting outlandish hats – perform synchronized speed marching along a 100m walkway to the border gate, where they turn and stomp back. Raucous cheering, clapping and much blowing of horns accompanies the spectacle. The guards strut their military catwalk several times and then vanish into the guardhouse. Flags are simultaneously lowered, the gates slammed shut and the crowds on either side rush forward for a massive and congenial photo session. On both sides, more empathy than ever occurs on a cricket pitch permeates the air; photos are taken with the stone-faced guards and then everyone heads home – back to business as usual.

Tourists wishing to watch the bizarre border spectacle can rent taxis for the round trip. You can ask drivers yourself (₹₹ per vehicle), but hotels and hostels – most pertinently goStops – often pool together interested parties. Alternatively, tour-style buses run daily from outside the Town Hall at 2.30pm (priced per person), or you can get your butt nice and sore in a cramped auto-rickshaw.

DRINKING

MAP

There's essentially nowhere to drink within the city gates, though venture outside and it won't be long until you find a liquor store – most of them seem to be called “English Wine & Beer Shop”.

Bottoms Up Grand Hotel, Queens Rd 0183 256 2424. This “grand” old dame of a hotel has a decent bar attached to it – nothing special, but the Kingfisher's cold, and it's not too far from the old town. Daily 11am–9pm.

SHOPPING TABLAS (HAND-DRUMS), HARMONIA AND OTHER MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS ARE AVAILABLE AT THE SHOPS NEAR THE GOLDEN TEMPLE. OTHER POSSIBLE SOUVENIRS INCLUDE A PAIR OF TRADITIONAL ARABIAN NIGHTS-STYLE PUNJABI LEATHER SLIPPERS (JOOTIS), SOLD AT A ROW OF SHOPS OPPOSITE THE OUTSIDE OF GANDHI (HALL) GATE, AND IN MANY PLACES NEAR THE GOLDEN TEMPLE.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE THERE ARE ATMS ACROSS TOWN, INCLUDING SEVERAL IN THE RAILWAY

STATION FORECOURT AND THE BUS STATION, AND AROUND JALLIANWALLA BAGH. THERE'S A CLUTCH OF FOREX BUREAUX OPPOSITE THE TRAIN STATION ON RAILWAY LINK RD, MANY OF WHICH WILL CHANGE PAKISTANI RUPEES.

Hospitals The best in the city are Kakkar Hospital, 45 Green Ave Rd (📍0183 250 6015), and Muni Lal Chopra Hospital, 361 Mall Rd (📍0183 222 2072).

Left luggage Baggage can be left for short periods at the Golden Temple's gurudwaras, or at the railway station or bus-stand cloakroom.

Chandigarh and around CHANDIGARH is the state capital of both Punjab and Haryana, but part of neither, being a Union Territory administered by India's federal government. Its history begins in 1947, when Partition placed the Punjab's main city of Lahore in Pakistan, leaving India's state of Punjab without a capital. Nehru saw this as an opportunity to realize his vision of a city "symbolic of the future of India, unfettered by the traditions of the past, (and) an expression of the nation's faith in the future". The job of designing it went to controversial Swiss-French architect Charles-Edouard Jeanneret, alias Le Corbusier.

Begun in 1952, Chandigarh was to be a groundbreaking experiment in town planning. Le Corbusier's blueprints were for an orderly grid of sweeping boulevards, divided into 29 neat blocks, or Sectors, each measuring 800m by 1200m, and interspersed with extensive stretches of green. Chandigarh's numbered sectors are further subdivided into lettered blocks, making route-finding relatively easy. Le Corbusier saw the city plan as a living organism, with the imposing Capital Complex to the north as a "head", the shopping precinct (Sector 17) a "heart", and the green open spaces as "lungs".

Some applaud Le Corbusier's brainchild as one of the great architectural achievements of the twentieth century, but detractors complain that the design is self-indulgent and un-Indian. Le Corbusier created a city for fast-flowing traffic at a time when few people owned cars, while his cubic concrete buildings are like ovens during the summer. The city has expanded from the first phase comprising sectors 1 to 30 (there is no Sector 13), through a second phase – sectors 31 to 47 – and is now into the third phase with (half-size) sectors 48 to 61. Satellite towns emulating Chandigarh's grid plan and sterile concrete architecture, such as Panchkula in Haryana and Mohali in Punjab, have sprung up on either side.

Despite Chandigarh's shortcomings, its inhabitants are proud of their capital, which is cleaner, greener and more affluent than other Indian cities of comparable size, and its rock garden is Punjab's second-most visited tourist site after the Golden Temple.

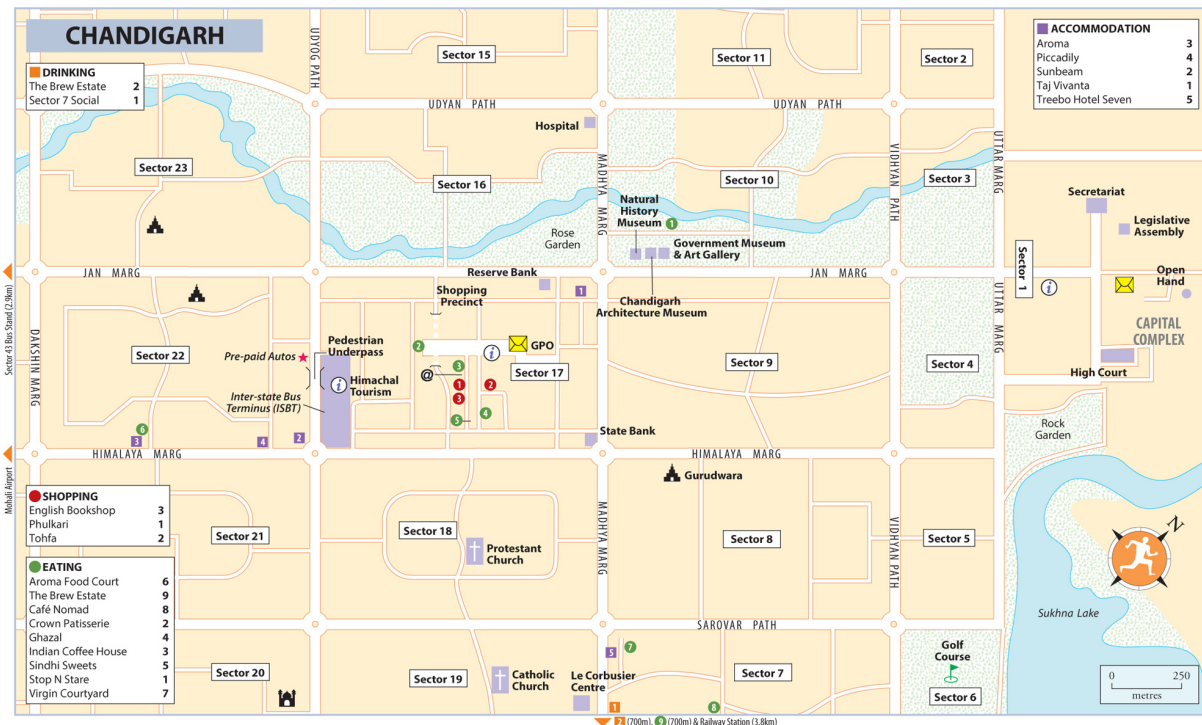

The museums Sector 10 • All Tues–Sun 10am–5pm • Charge joint ticket for the Art Gallery and Natural History Museum, Charge for the Architecture Museum; Charge for each camera Situated in the green belt known as the Leisure Valley, Chandigarh's museums form part of a cultural complex that includes the neighbouring Rose Garden. The Government Museum & Art Gallery is best of the lot, housing a sizeable and informatively displayed collection of textiles, Harappan artefacts, miniature paintings and contemporary art, including five original Roerichs and a couple of A.N. Tagore's atmospheric watercolours. The ancient sculptures are the most compelling exhibits, notably the Gandhara Buddhas with their delicately carved "wet-look" lunghis and distinctly Hellenic features – a legacy of Alexander the Great's conquests.

A stone's throw to the west, the small but appropriately modernist Chandigarh Architecture Museum illustrates the planning and construction of Chandigarh, with models and photographs in a concrete pavilion based on one of Le Corbusier's designs. Beyond that, the Natural History Museum has a few stuffed animals, some bits of fossilized mammoths and diorama depictions of early humans, and is thus most popular with school kids.

The Capital Complex Sector 1 • Guided visits daily at 10am, noon & 3pm • Visitors must obtain permission from office of Chandigarh Tourism at the Complex; arrive half an hour early to allow time for this, or apply in advance online (chandigarhtourism.gov.in) • Bring passport or other ID

Visits to the Capital Complex are by guided tour only – security is tight here, and has been since 1995, when Punjab chief minister Beant Singh was assassinated in front of the Assembly building by Sikh nationalist hardliners. The complex's most imposing edifice is the eleven-storey Secretariat, Chandigarh's highest building, which houses ministerial offices for both Haryana and Punjab, and has a roof garden with good views over the city. The resemblance of the adjacent Legislative Assembly building, or Vidhan Sabha (home to the legislatures of both states) to a power station is no coincidence: Le Corbusier was allegedly inspired by a stack of cooling towers he saw in Ahmedabad. Opposite the Secretariat is the most colourful building in the complex, the High Court (also serving both states), which is said to incorporate elements of the Buland Darwaza in Fatehpur Sikri, and is decorated inside with huge woollen tapestries. North of this is the black, 13m-high Open Hand monument, Chandigarh's adopted emblem. Weighing all of 45 tonnes, it revolves on ball bearings like a weathervane and stands for "post-colonial harmony and peace".

The Rock Garden Uttar Marg, Sector 1 • Daily: April–Sept 9am–7pm; Oct–March 9am–6pm • chandigarhdistrict.nic.in • Charge Close to the Capital Complex, the Rock Garden is a surreal fantasyland fashioned from fragments of shattered plates, neon strip-lights, pots, pebbles, broken bangles and assorted urban-industrial junk. The open-air exhibition was a labour of love by retired Public Works Department road inspector Nek Chand. Inspired by a recurrent childhood dream, he began construction in 1957. His intention was to create just a small garden, but by the time it was discovered in 1975 – to widespread astonishment – it covered twelve acres. Though it was completely illegal, the city council recognized it as a great artistic endeavour and, in a conspicuously enlightened decision, awarded Chand a salary to continue his work (which he did until his death in 2015), and a workforce of fifty labourers to help. Opened to the public in 1976, the garden now covers 25 acres and contains several thousand sculptures.

The site is a labyrinth of enclosures interconnected by narrow passages, arched walkways, streams, bridges, grottos, waterfalls, battlements and turrets. Stick to the path, or you could end up wandering the maze until the chowkidar finds you at closing time.

Le Corbusier Centre Sector 19 • Tue–Sun 10am–5pm • Free
Though less interesting (in an architectural sense) than the City Architecture museum, Sector 19’s Le Corbusier Centre has a more interesting array of exhibits, including a lot of black-and-white photos of the fella himself boating around Sukhna Lake, plans of the envisioned city, and more photos of the buildings during and after creation.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE CHANDIGARH IS A CHANDIGARH MAJOR REGIONAL HUB, AND ALSO A USEFUL JUMPING-OFF POINT FOR SHIMLA, TO WHICH THERE ARE DIRECT BUSES, AS WELL AS THE “TOY TRAIN” FROM KALKA, 26KM NORTHEAST OF CHANDIGARH AND CONNECTED TO IT BY TRAINS AND FREQUENT BUSES.

By plane Chandigarh’s airport is at Mohali, 8km east of the city. It’s a cheap trip by auto from the ISBT, by taxi, or even more so by local bus #38A from Sector 17 ISBT.

Destinations Delhi (9 daily; 1hr); Mumbai (5 daily; 2hr 35min); Srinagar (2 daily; 1hr).

By train The railway station sits an inconvenient 8km southeast of the centre – it’ll cost ₹ by auto or app taxi, or ₹ on a local bus. Superfast a/c Shatabdi trains run to Delhi (#12046 & #12012 dep. at noon & 6.23pm), and there’s a rail reservation centre at the Sector 17 ISBT (Mon–Sat 8am–8pm, Sun 8am–2pm).

Destinations Amritsar (2 daily; 4hr 20min); Delhi (10 daily; 3hr 30min–5hr); Jodhpur (1 daily; 17hr 45min); Kolkata (1 daily; 30hr 45min); Mumbai (1 daily; 27hr 25min).

By bus The main Inter-state Bus Terminal (ISBT) is on the south edge of the main commercial and shopping district, Sector 17, with regular services to Delhi (via Delhi airport). However, daytime services to Punjab and Himachal Pradesh use the Sector 43 bus stand, connected to the ISBT by frequent local buses. Tickets can be pre-booked at both terminals, or for less busy services, bought on the bus. There's a prepaid auto-rickshaw counter across the road from the west side of the Sector 17 ISBT (next to the pedestrian underpass exit).

GETTING TO SHIMLA CHANDIGARH IS AN IMPORTANT TRANSPORT HUB FOR SHIMLA, MOST SWIFTLY REACHED BY BUS FROM SECTOR 43 (EVERY 15MIN; 4HR–4HR 30MIN). YOU CAN ALSO GET THERE ON THE SLOWER BUT MORE CONGENIAL VICEROYS' "TOY TRAIN" FROM KALKA, 26KM TO THE NORTHEAST AND CONNECTED TO CHANDIGARH BY TRAINS AND FREQUENT BUSES. THE SCENIC 75KM JOURNEY FROM KALKA TO SHIMLA TAKES AROUND 5HR (DEP. 4AM, 5.10AM, 5.30AM, 6AM & 12.10PM).

Destinations Delhi (32 daily; 4–5hr); Shimla (every 15min; 4hr–4hr 30min).

GETTING AROUND ON FOOT CHANDIGARH IS RATHER SPREAD OUT, BUT WITH ACTUAL PATHS AND SOME QUIET INNER-SECTOR ROADS AND PARKS, IT CAN ACTUALLY BE A PLEASANT PLACE TO EXPLORE ON FOOT.

By auto-rickshaw Cycle and auto-rickshaws cruise the streets; a prepaid auto from the ISBT to the Rock Garden is an inexpensive way to get around.

By taxi There's a taxi stand (☎98158 32555; 24hr) in the northwest corner of Sector 17 ISBT, with others dotted around town. Uber and Ola cabs operate in the city, and are usually about the same price as the auto-rickshaws.

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURIST INFORMATION
CHANDIGARH TOURISM 🌐 CHANDIGARHTOURISM.GOV.IN;
HAS INFORMATION BOOTHS IN SECTOR 17 (DAILY 11AM–10PM) AND AT THE STATION (DAILY 6AM–6PM), AS WELL AS AN OFFICE AT THE CAPITAL COMPLEX (DAILY 9AM–5PM), WHERE THEY ISSUE VISITORS’ PERMITS FOR THE COMPLEX. THE HIMACHAL PRADESH TOURIST OFFICE (MON–SAT 9.30AM–5.30PM; 🌐 HIMACHALTOURISM.GOV.IN), AT THE SECTOR 17 ISBT, IS USEFUL FOR BOOKING TOURS AND BUSES TO MANALI AND SHIMLA.

Tours run a half-day tour around town in an open-top tourist bus (daily 10am & 2.30pm; ₹per person; 📞0172 467 2222), departing from the Shivalik View hotel in Sector 17 (next to the Taj Vivanta).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Chandigarh’s high property prices make accommodation here expensive, especially at the bottom end where choice is limited, and places are very often full (so book ahead if possible).

★Aroma Himalaya Marg, Sector 22-C 🌐 hotelaroma.com. A vintage Austin guards the doorway of this attractive-looking hotel, whose rooms are mock-classic, with laminated floors and slightly scuffed walls imitating an old-fashioned feel. They’ve a good restaurant on site, and more choice in the attached food court (see below). Breakfast included. ₹₹₹₹

Piccadily Himalaya Marg, Sector 22-B 🌐 thepiccadily.com. Despite the missing “L” in the name, this is a rather plush establishment, tastefully refurbished in blue and grey decor, with thickly carpeted corridors and a/c rooms, and an excellent bar (see below) which doubles as a restaurant and coffee shop. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹₹

Sunbeam Udyog Path, Sector 22-B 🌐 hotelsunbeam.com. Upmarket hotel opposite the ISBT with a swish marble lobby and comfortable rooms, though the decorative brickwork in front of the windows makes them a bit dark. ₹₹₹₹

★Taj Vivanta Block 9, Sector 17-A 🌐 tajhotels.com. Chandigarh’s poshest option by a long chalk, in a well-designed building whose minimalist modern decor in cool, light colours makes it something like an elegant, beautiful version of one of Le Corbusier's concrete boxes. Ignore the rack rates, which you can usually discount by up to half. ₹₹₹₹

Treebo Hotel Seven 8-A, Sector 7-C www.hotelseven.in. A good find at this neglected price level, this simple hotel is convenient for Chandigarh's main nightlife area. Staff are well drilled, and rooms clean and pretty comfy, though noise does carry a bit from the reception area. Simple breakfast included and served to your room. ₹₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

You'll most likely eat well in Chandigarh, where a number of great international options have popped up in recent years.

RESTAURANTS

Aroma Food Court Himalaya Marg, Sector 22-C www.hotelaroma.com. It may seem a bit dull to eat in a food court, but the one attached to this hotel (see above) is actually pretty good. Ignore the McDonald's and Subway, and try something from the biryani cart, chai (or really tasty samosa chaat) from Chaayos, a milkshake from Keventer's, or coffee from the Café Coffee Day. Daily 7am–midnight. ₹₹

The Brew Estate 25 Madhya Marg, Sector 26 www.brewestate.in. Though primarily a bar, this is also a good spot for food, with an extensive menu including great pizzas, burgers and Indian mains. Daily 11am–midnight. ₹₹

★Café Nomad 1914 Sarovar Path, Sector 7C www.thewhisperingwillows.com. Though little out of the way, this is a real find – not a café at all (though the coffee's okay), but a surprisingly stylish restaurant serving Middle Eastern food. Try something simple like falafel and hummus, or more adventurous selections like a clay-pot tajine. Licensed. Daily 10am–midnight. ₹₹

Ghazal 189–91 Sector 17-C 0172 270 4448. Refined Punjabi non-veg cuisine, with tasty Punjabi and Mughlai chicken and mutton dishes, as well as freshwater sole fish tikka. The house speciality is a superb creamy, mildly spiced Ghazal special murg and the place is licensed, with a surprisingly good range of whiskies. Daily noon–11pm. ₹₹

Indian Coffee House 63–64 Sector 17-E 📞0172 270 2804. Budget co-op chain with a cheap menu, including masala dosas, sandwiches and coffee. Daily 9am–10pm. ₹

Stop N Stare Sector 10, no phone. This snack shack is the only place to eat around the museums, but the food here is super cheap (samosa with channa, lassis), and the place is surrounded by greenery. Daily 8am–7pm. ₹

★Virgin Courtyard 1-A Madhya Marg, Sector 7-C 🌐virgincourtyard.com. The best choice on this busy side-road, this swanky spot wouldn't look out of place in Delhi, and its candle-lit courtyard is a great evening spot (reservations required). Most of the menu choices are Italian – try something from the bruschetta bar for starters, and a risotto, wood-fired pizza or hand-made ravioli dish for mains. They also have an extensive alcohol selection. Daily 11.30am–11.30pm. ₹₹

CAFÉS AND SWEET SHOPS

Crown Patisserie 14 Sector 17-E, 📞99151 5060. Chandigarh's best coffee spot, a gaily decorated place tucked up on the first floor, with a small balcony overlooking the pedestrianized shopping area. Coffees and tasty cupcakes on display by the counter. Daily 9.30am–10.30pm. ₹

Sindhi Sweets 110 Sector 17-B 🌐sindhisweets.com. An excellent a/c sweets emporium with several branches around town, all packed to the gunwales with silver-coated confections of all sorts, and translucent kesar or angoora petha. Daily 9am–10.30pm. ₹

DRINKING

MAP

Most of the best nightlife action takes place along a strip running down the west flank of Sectors 7 and 26.

★The Brew Estate 25 Madhya Marg, Sector 26 🌐brewestate.in. There are almost too many microbreweries in Chandigarh now, but this attractive venue is just ahead of the rest, with a good selection of craft beer of which you'll be given a free sampler set as soon as you've sat down. Awesome cocktails, too, some involving betel leaf, cloves or litchi, and great food available (see above). Daily noon–midnight. ₹₹

Sector 7 Social 37 Madhya Marg, Sector 7-C 🌐socialoffline.in. The Social team have opened up a branch in Chandigarh, and it replicates the success of their establishments in Delhi. Inventive drinks available (try the banarsi patiala, sugar cane juice and triple-shot of rum), and often live music – and, sadly, also often an extortionate “stag entry” fee for unaccompanied males. Daily 9am–1am. ₹₹

SHOPPING

MAP

English Bookshop 30 Sector 17-E 📞0172 270 2542. One of the oldest bookstores in Chandigarh and well-stocked with plenty in the way of novels and travel guides, centrally located in the middle of Sector 17’s main shopping area. Mon-Sat 10am–9pm, Sun noon–9pm.

Phulkari 27 Sector 17-E 📞0172 270 6246. Several states run handicraft emporiums in the Sector 17 shopping complex, among them Punjab, whose Phulkari store stocks a good range of embroidered silk, woodwork and traditional pointed Punjabi shoes. Tues-Sun 11am–8pm.

Tohfa 98–100 Sector 17-C 📞98141 14085. Pile ‘em high, flog ‘em cheap clothes store full of brightly coloured, jolly Punjabi phulkaris and shawls. Daily 10am–9pm.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE SEVERAL BANKS AROUND BANK SQUARE IN THE NORTHEAST CORNER OF SECTOR 17 CHANGE MONEY. ATMS ARE COMMON AROUND TOWN, INCLUDING AT THE RAILWAY AND BUS STATIONS.

Hospitals Chandigarh’s Government Multi Specialty Hospital is in Sector 16 (📞0172 275 2042), but is not as good as the PGI, Sector 12 🌐pgimer.edu.in).

Left luggage There is a cloakroom in the ISBT (₹/day; 24hr except 12.30–1pm & 8.30–9pm).

Pharmacies Apollo Pharmacy, 16–17 Sector 34-A 🌐apollopharmacy.in (24hr).

Pinjore Buses between Chandigarh and Kalka (every 10min from Chandigarh Sector 43 ISBT, slightly less frequently from Sector 17 ISBT; 1hr) stop right in front of Yadavindra Gardens PINJORE, 22km north of Chandigarh and 7km south of Kalka on the Shimla road, is one of many sites associated with the exile of the Pandavas as chronicled in the Mahabharata, and is best known for its walled gardens, and it makes a good half-day trip from Chandigarh.

Yadavindra Gardens Off Kalka-Shimla Rd • Daily 7am–9:30pm • Charge The Yadavindra Gardens originally belonged to the rajas of Sirmaur, but under the Mughals were taken over by Aurangzeb's foster brother, Fidai Khan, who erected three pleasure palaces for his wife amid the cypress trees. Legend tells that the raja reclaimed his summer retreat by sending a female fruit-seller with goitre to the imperial impostors. On being told that the woman's unsightly swelling was caused by the local water, the begum and her entourage fled. The gardens are on seven levels, bisected by waterways with fountains; the best time to visit is in the evening, when it's all aglow with pretty lights. And, as befits former pleasure gardens, there's now an adjacent amusement park, though it's maybe something to avoid.

Bhima Devi Temple Off Kalka-Shimla Rd • Daily 9am–5pm • Free Near the gardens, excavated remains of the tenth-century Bhima Devi Temple – destroyed during the Muslim conquest of the area – have been assembled in a pleasant park with four exhibition rooms that the caretaker will open for you if he's about. The temple is contemporary with Khajuraho, and one or two of the reliefs are similarly erotic, though well worn.

ACCOMMODATION TOURIST COMPLEX MOTEL PINJORE
YADAVINDRA GARDENS 01733 231877, PINJORE@HRY.NIC.IN. ONE OF THE PALACES IN THE GARDENS HAS BEEN CONVERTED BY HARYANA TOURISM INTO A MOTEL, WITH A RANGE OF CLEAN, FRESH ROOMS – NOTHING FANCY, BUT GOOD VALUE AND RIGHT NEXT TO THE SITE. ₹₹

Patiala The capital of a princely state under the Raj, and a city with much charm and few visitors, PATIALA dates back to the early eighteenth century. It was founded as the capital of a state that featured a unique power-sharing arrangement, in which the maharaja was always a Sikh and the army commander a Muslim. Buffeted by rival powers, be they Hindu, Muslim or Sikh, Patiala's maharajas finally secured their state's survival in 1808 by allying themselves with the British. Like India's other princely states, Patiala was absorbed into the Republic in 1947, but the city remained capital of its own state (the Patiala and East Punjab States Union, aka PEPSU) until 1956. To this day, there's still something special about Patiala, and even the local measure of whisky – the Patiala peg – is bigger than a standard peg that you get elsewhere (60ml, versus the normal 30ml). The old city is full of bazaars and temples, and still has its fort and several of its original gates, although the walls are long gone. The tourist board have designated a self-guided “heritage walk” around the city’s main sights, with signposts marking out the route, although they’re a bit patchy, and a map is more helpful; in addition, most of them those sights been under renovation for quite some time, but hopefully Patiala will soon make some proper use of its past.

Quila Mubarak Quila Chowk • Tues–Sun 10am–5pm • Durbar Hall • Charge At the very heart of the old city, the Quila Mubarak was founded in 1763 as a crude mud-walled fortress, but subsequently became the palace of Patiala’s maharajas, who embellished and enlarged it. It’s certainly impressive, but it has fallen into a terrible state of disrepair and is currently undergoing extensive restoration work. Unfortunately, this includes the Durbar Hall, which until recently remained open to the public, and was worth a look on account of its huge mirrors and chandeliers – hopefully it, and the fortress, will open fully in due course.

Shahi Samadhan Tues–Sun 10am–5pm • Free Southeast of the Quila Mubarak, at Shahi Samadhan, an ornate gateway marks the mausoleum of the founder and first ruler of Patiala, Baba Ala Singh, whose tomb lies inside it. The arch subsequently became a cenotaph for his successors, with memorials inscribed across the top of the gate in Urdu, English and Punjabi.

Kali Devi Temple Mall Road, 500m southwest of the bus stand • www.maakalidevimandirpatiala.com • Daily 24hr • Free Being a Sikh didn't stop Maharaja Bhupinder Singh from endowing this Hindu Kali Devi Temple in 1936. The six-foot statue of the terrifying Bengali goddess Kali, to whom the temple is dedicated, was brought over from Kolkata and presides over it, tongue out, sword raised, and holding a human head in her hand. During Diwali – which is also Kali Puja – in particular, people come here to make offerings of sweets, coconuts, dhal and even booze to the goddess. The same complex also contains the rather older Raj Rajeshwari temple.

Sheesh Mahal Old Moti Bagh • Daily 10am–5pm • Free To the southwest of the city, the flamboyant Sheesh Mahal (Palace of Mirrors) was commissioned in 1847 by Maharaja Narendra Singh, a great patron of the arts, who had it decorated with murals, inlays and the mirrors that give it its name. Since then, alas, it has fallen on hard times and its grandeur has become rather dilapidated; at the time of writing in 2019 it was closed completely, but restoration is promised in the near future.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BUS THE BUS PATIALA STAND IS AT THE NORTHERN END OF THE OLD CITY.

Destinations Ambala (every 10min; 40min); Amritsar (every 30min; 5hr); Chandigarh (every 15min; 1hr 30min).

By train The station, just north of the bus stand, has one daily train to Delhi (dep. 1.53pm, arr. 8.20pm) and one to Amritsar (dep. 10.40am, arr. 4.30pm). The only train to Chandigarh travels inconveniently during the early hours (dep. 2.30am, arr. 5.10am).

Tourist information The tourist office is at the Punjab State Archive on Mall Road, 300m southwest of the bus stand (Tues–Sun 9.30am–5.30pm; punjabtourism.punjab.gov.in). They run guided one-hour heritage walks starting at the Shahi Samadhan (Fri–Sun: March–Nov 8.30am; Dec–Feb 9.30am).

ACCOMMODATION ★ BARADARI PALACE BARADARI GARDENS neemranahotels.com. THE CITY'S BEST OFFERING BY FAR: A GRAND, SPACIOUS HERITAGE HOTEL IN A PALACE BUILT FOR THE MAHARAJA IN 1876. SERVICE IS EXCELLENT – AND THERE'S A RANGE OF DELUXE ROOMS, EACH DONE OUT IN INDIVIDUAL STYLE. DISCOUNTS USUALLY AVAILABLE OFF SEASON, AND ALSO A GOOD PLACE TO EAT OR DRINK (SEE BELOW). ₹₹₹

Corner Northern end of the bus stand ☎0175 6544054, cornerhotel1960@gmail.com. Best of the hotels around the bus station (others are cheaper, but very grubby), and situated on a prominent corner, as its name suggests, it makes for a convenient stay. Some rooms are impressively large, there's hot water, plus a good restaurant in the same building; things can, however, get a little noisy. ₹₹₹

EATING AND DRINKING AMRITSARI KULCHA ANARDANA CHOWK, amritsari-kulcha-restaurant.business.site. THERE ARE FEW NOTABLE PLACES TO EAT IN THE OLD TOWN, BUT THIS SMALL SPOT JUST NORTH OF THE FORTRESS IS GREAT FOR AMRITSAR-STYLE KULCHA (BREAD STUFFED WITH STUFF, MOST COMMONLY POTATO). DAILY 9AM–3.30PM. ₹

Baradari Palace Baradari Gardens neemranahotels.com. The tile-floored bar of this heritage hotel (see above) is the prime place for a “Patiala peg” – a cheap, large shot of local whisky. The restaurant is also very fancy, with a good, affordable range of Indian mains. Daily noon–10pm, food noon–3pm & 7–10pm. ₹₹

The Brew Estate Punjabi Bagh www.brewestate.in/the-brew-estate-punjabi-bagh. Chandigarh’s best microbrewery has opened up a branch in little Patiala, and it’s actually larger and even more attractive – try some of their tasty beers, or a pizza, burger or curry. Daily 11am–11.30pm. ₹₹

Gurgaon Essentially the only place of note in Haryana state, and now in a slow-motion process of being rechristened “Gurugram”, GURGAON is effectively a satellite city of Delhi, though it draws young people from the capital in their droves for two big reasons. Firstly, relaxed licencing laws have made for a simply ridiculous number of brewpubs, with a full dozen of them staring at each other out in Sector 29. Secondly, and more importantly, a lack of historical and cultural baggage has seen the city become, in parts, more modern than Delhi, especially in the gleaming, high-rise Cyber City area – here, in its umpteen bars and eateries, you’ll often hear Delhi millennials wondering aloud why their city can't be more like this, and it's not hard to imagine their wishes coming true after the next generational shift.

Kingdom of Dreams Sector 29 • kingdomofdreams.in • Tue–Sun 12.30pm–midnight • entry fee redeemable against food and drink; show tickets extra Gurgaon's only real "sight", the wistfully named Kingdom of Dreams is a sort of Indian Disneyland, arranged like a Bollywood film set. The entry ticket will allow you to roam the family-friendly grounds, which are peppered with places to snack, drink (even booze) or have a full meal; however, for many the highlight is a chance to sample one of the lurid, Bollywood-style shows.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY METRO DELHI'S GURGAON YELLOW LINE CROSSES STATE LINES TO TERMINATE IN GURGAON'S HUDA CITY CENTRE STATION, AROUND 40MIN FROM CENTRAL DELHI; THREE STATIONS NORTH, AT SIKANDERPUR STATION, THERE'S AN INTERSECTION WITH GURGAON'S OWN RAPID METRO LINE, WHICH PROVIDES ACCESS TO CYBER CITY.

By train Gurgaon railway station, located over 7km west of the area of interest, is a stop for some trains running between Delhi and Jaipur (4–5hr away).

ACCOMMODATION BLOOM BOUTIQUE B1/B NEAR SIGNATURE TOWERS • STAYBLOOM.COM. A RELAXED, ATTRACTIVE OPTION LOCATED NEAR THE SECTOR 29 BARS (THOUGH GIVEN THE ROAD LAYOUT, YOU'LL STILL NEED TO TAKE A TAXI OR AUTO-RICKSHAW). ROOMS ARE HIGHLY COMFORTABLE, AND THERE'S A DECENT RESTAURANT BY

RECEPTION, AS WELL AS A SMALL FITNESS CENTRE; THE ROOFTOP MAKES A GREAT PLACE TO DRINK IN THE EVENING. ₹₹₹₹

EATING BURMA BURMA 8/6 TOWER C, DLF CYBER CITY 📍 BURMABURMA.IN. CYBER CITY'S RESTAURANT OFFERINGS ARE ESSENTIALLY A ROSTER OF CHAINS THAT HAVE DONE WELL IN DELHI. THIS IS ONE OF THE BEST SUCH OFFERINGS, WITH A MENU FULL OF BURMESE CURRIES, MOHINGA NOODLES AND THE LIKE. SERVICE IS SLICK AND THE MEALS VERY PHOTO-WORTHY, AND THERE ARE PLENTY OF TEAS TO TRY TOO. DAILY NOON-3PM & 7-11PM. ₹₹

Made in Punjab Ground Floor, DFL Cyber Hub, Cyber City 📍 madeinpunjab.co.in. Great if you want some Punjabi flair in culinary-cosmopolitan Cyber City. The lamb dishes are highly recommended, with soft meat just falling from the bone; alternatively, go for the chicken tikka, or fill up at the weekday lunch buffet. Licenced. Daily noon-11.30pm. ₹₹

DRINKING BRONX BREWERY 38, SECTOR 29, 📞99711 10974, 📍 FACEBOOK.COM/BRONXBAREXCHANGE; 📍IFFCO CHOWK. THE BEST OF THE STAGGERING NUMBER OF BREWPUBS CLUSTERED CORRAL-LIKE IN SECTOR 29. IT'S A MULTI-LEVEL AFFAIR, WITH EACH FLOOR HAVING ITS OWN AMBIENCE; MOST HEAD STRAIGHT TO THE ROOFTOP, TO DRAIN ONE OF THEIR SLIGHTLY OVERSWEET BREWS. DAILY NOON-2AM. ₹

Soi 7 205-208 Cyber Hub, DLF Cyber City 📞81302 61166, 📍 facebook.com/soi7pub; 📍Cyber City. Located in the modern Cyber City mall, this is one of the wider Delhi area's best brew-bars, with their own excellent beers including a lager, a wheat beer and a dark ale. The cocktails and nibbles are good too. Daily 2pm-3am. ₹

< Back to Punjab and Haryana

Shutterstock
MAHABAT AND BAHAUDDIN MAQBRA, GUJARAT

Gujarat

Ahmedabad

Around Ahmedabad

Northern Gujarat

Kutch

Saurashtra

South-eastern Gujarat

Gujarat Heated in the north by the blistering deserts of Pakistan and Rajasthan, and cooled in the south by the gentle ocean breeze of the Arabian Sea, Gujarat forms India's westernmost bulkhead. The diversity of its topography – forested hilly tracts and fertile plains in the east, vast tidal marshland and desert plains in the Rann of Kutch in the west, with the rocky shoreline jutting into its heartland – can be compared to the multiplicity of its politics and culture. Home to significant populations of Hindus, Jains, Muslims and Christians, as well as tribal and nomadic groups, the state boasts a patchwork of religious shrines and areas steeped in Hindu lore. Gujarat is the homeland of Mahatma Gandhi, born Mohandas Gandhi in Porbandar and a long-time resident of Ahmedabad. In line with his credo of self-dependence, Gujaratis consistently rank at or near the top of the chart in terms of India's economic output, and have fanned around the world to settle abroad.

The region's prosperity dates as far back as the third millennium BC, when the Harappans started trading shell jewellery and textiles. The latter, Jain-dominated industry, remains an important source of income to the state. India's most industrialised state, Gujarat also boasts some of the Subcontinent's biggest diamond trading, oil refineries; thriving cement, chemicals and pharmaceutical manufacturing units; and a lucrative yet secretive ship-breaking yard at Alang. Kandla is one of west India's largest ports, while much of the country's diamond cutting and polishing takes place in Ahmedabad and Bhavnagar. Rural poverty remains a serious problem, however, and health and education developments still lag behind economic growth.

Despite Gandhi's push for political change through nonviolent means, his home state has often followed a different course, and Muslim-Hindu tensions have boiled over into violence on a number of occasions. Following the devastating earthquake of January 2001, centred in Kutch, Gujarat suffered India's worst communal rioting since Partition, with more than a thousand people killed in 2002. Six years later, dozens more died in a string of bomb attacks in Ahmedabad. All these events added to the woes of a state already beleaguered by severe water shortages and drought. The current scene is less fraught, and Gujarat – and Bhuj in particular – is showing signs of renewal; take the splendid new Shree Swaminarayan temple in Bhuj as an example.

Given this, Gujarat has plenty to offer those who take time to detour from its more famous northerly neighbour, Rajasthan. The lure of important temple cities, forts and palaces is balanced by the chance to search out unique crafts made in communities whose way of life remains scarcely affected by global trends. Gujarat's architectural diversity reflects the influences of its many different rulers – Buddhist Mauryans, Hindu rajas and Muslim emperors.

BEST TIME TO VISIT THE BEST MONTHS TO VISIT GUJARAT, CLIMATE-WISE, ARE BETWEEN NOVEMBER AND FEBRUARY WHEN THE TEMPERATURE STAYS A COMFORTABLE 17–27°C. SUMMERS (APRIL TO MAY) ARE DRY, SUNNY AND VERY HOT, WITH TEMPERATURES REACHING AROUND 41°C IN THE DAY AND 30°C AT NIGHT. MONSOON SEASON (JULY–SEPT) KEEPS TEMPERATURES LOWER, AROUND 30°C, ALTHOUGH SOME AREAS, LIKE SAURASHTRA AND KUTCH, DON'T ACTUALLY RECEIVE MUCH RAIN.

iStock

AN ASIATIC LIONESS AND HER CUB

Highlights

- ① Ahmedabad Superb Indo-Islamic architecture, bustling bazars and Mahatma Gandhi's Sabarmati Ashram.
- ② Sun Temple, Modhera This beautiful eleventh-century temple is the finest example of Solanki architecture in the country.
- ③ Kutch Distinct from the rest of Gujarat: traditional embroidery, costume and culture still thrive in this harsh and remote landscape.
- ④ Dwarka Krishna's ancient capital and India's westernmost holy town is always abuzz with pilgrims.
- ⑤ Gir National Park The last remaining habitat of the rare Asiatic lion and home to a host of other animals.
- ⑥ Diu West India's most congenial beach venue, this relaxed island has a Portuguese flavour in its colonial architecture.
- ⑦ Statue of Unity Currently the tallest statue in the world. It is a depiction of Vallabhbhai Jhaverbhai Patel, India's Deputy Prime Minister from 1947 to 1950.
- ⑧ Champaner and Pavagadh A Solanki fortress guarding a lost Muslim city and a sacred hill dotted with Hindu and Jain temples.

HIGHLIGHTS ARE MARKED ON THE MAP

ALCOHOL IN GUJARAT GUJARAT IS OFFICIALLY A DRY STATE, BUT TOURISTS CAN GET FREE ONE-WEEK ALCOHOL PERMITS FROM THE BIGGER INTERNATIONAL HOTEL CHAINS AND AHMEDABAD AIRPORT (USUALLY BEFORE 8PM) – AS WELL AS ONLINE AT www.EPS.GPEONLINE.CO.IN. AVOID ILLICITLY PRODUCED ALCOHOL – THE STATE HAS IMPOSED THE DEATH PENALTY FOR ITS MANUFACTURE AND SALE, FOLLOWING A JULY 2009 INCIDENT IN WHICH 136 PEOPLE DIED FROM DRINKING TOXIC ALCOHOL. NOTE THAT ALCOHOL IS LEGALLY SERVED IN THE UNION TERRITORY

ENCLAVES OF DIU AND DAMAN, AS THEY ARE GOVERNED SEPARATELY FROM GUJARAT.

Ahmedabad, state capital until 1970 and the obvious place to begin a tour, harbours the first mosques built in the curious Indo-Islamic style, along with richly carved temples and step-wells dating from the eleventh century. Just north is the ancient capital of Patan and the Solanki sun temple at Modhera, while south is the Harappan site, Lothal, home of the world's oldest-known dock. In the northwest, the barren region of Kutch was largely bypassed by Gujarat's foreign invaders, and consequently preserves a village culture where crafts long forgotten elsewhere are still practised.

The Kathiawar Peninsula, or Saurashtra, is Gujarat's heartland, scattered with temples, mosques and palaces bearing testimony to centuries of rule by Buddhists, Hindus and Muslims. Highlights include the superb Jain temples adorning the hills of Shatrunjaya, near Bhavnagar, and Mount Girnar, close to Junagadh. The temple at Somnath is said to have witnessed the dawn of time, and that at Dwarka is built on the site of Krishna's ancient capital. At Junagadh, ancient Ashokan inscriptions stand a stone's throw from flamboyant mausoleums and Victorian Gothic-style palaces. There's plenty of scope for spotting wildlife, too, including Asia's only lions, found in Gir National Park, blackbucks at Velavadar National Park and the Indian wild ass in the Little Rann Sanctuary. Separated from the south coast by a thin sliver of the Arabian Sea, the island of Diu, a Union Territory and not officially part of the state, is fringed with beaches, palm groves, whitewashed Portuguese churches – and, unlike the rest of the region (see box above), bars.

Brief history The first known settlers in what is now Gujarat were the Harappans, who arrived from Sindh and Punjab around 2500 BC. Despite their craftsmanship and trade links with Africans, Arabs, Persians and Europeans, the civilization fell into decline in 1900 BC, largely due to severe flooding. From 1500 to 500 BC, little is known about the history of Gujarat but it is popularly believed the Yadavas, Krishna's clan, held sway over much of the state, with their capital at Dwarka. Gujarat's political history begins in earnest with the powerful Mauryan empire, established by Chandragupta with its capital at Junagadh and reaching its peak under Ashoka. After his death in 226 BC, Mauryan power dwindled; the last significant ruler was Samprati, Ashoka's grandson, a Jain who built fabulous temples at tirthas (pilgrimage sites) such as Girnar and Palitana. Rule then passed among a succession of warring dynasties and nomadic tribes throughout the first millennium AD, among them the native Gurjars (or Gujjar), from whom the modern state would derive its name.

A golden age In the eleventh and twelfth centuries, Gujarat came under the sway of the Solanki (or Chalukyan) dynasty, originating from a Gurjar clan, which ushered in a golden era in the state's architectural history. The Solankis built and rebuilt (following the devastating raid of Mahmud of Ghazni in 1027) splendid Hindu and Jain temples and step-wells throughout the state.

Foreign conquests Muslim rule in Gujarat was established by the Khalji conquest in 1299. A century later, the Sultanate of Gujarat was founded when Muzaffar Shah declared independence from Delhi. Setting up a new capital at Ahmedabad, the Muzaffarid dynasty ruled for two hundred years before the Mughal conquest of Emperor Akbar in the sixteenth century. In the ensuing period, Muslim, Jain and Hindu styles were melded to produce remarkable Indo-Islamic mosques and tombs.

In the 1500s, the Portuguese, already settled in Goa, turned their attention to Gujarat. Having captured Daman in 1531, they took Diu four years later, building forts and typically European towns. The British East India Company set up its headquarters in Surat in 1613, sowing the seeds of a prospering textile industry. British sovereignty over the state was established in 1818 when governors general signed treaties with about two hundred of Saurashtra's princely and petty states. The introduction of machinery upgraded textile manufacture, bringing substantial wealth to the region while putting many manual labourers out of business. Their cause was valiantly fought by Gujarat-born Mahatma Gandhi, who led the momentous Salt March from Ahmedabad to Dandi. After Partition, Gujarat received an influx of Hindus from Sindh (Pakistan) and witnessed terrible sectarian fighting as Muslims fled to their new homeland.

The birth of modern Gujarat In 1960, after the Marathi and Gujarati language riots (demonstrators sought the redrawing of state boundaries according to language, as had happened in the south), Bombay state was split and Gujarat created. The Portuguese enclaves were forcibly annexed by the Indian government in 1961. After Independence, Gujarat remained a staunch Congress stronghold until the BJP took control in 1991. The communal violence of 2002 pitted Muslim and Hindu neighbours against one another (see box below), but, despite this past infighting, Gujarat remains one of India's most wealthy and prosperous states.

GODHRA AND GUJARAT'S COMMUNAL VIOLENCE
THE BJP'S LANDSLIDE VICTORY IN THE 2002
ELECTION WAS SEEN BY MANY AS A SHOCK, BUT THE EVENTS OF THAT YEAR MADE IT MUCH LESS SURPRISING. AFTER THE BRUTAL ATTACK ON HINDU PILGRIMS AT GODHRA ON FEBRUARY 27,
2002, WHEN 58 WERE KILLED, RIOTS RAMPAGED
ACROSS GUJARAT. THE DEATH COUNT REACHED
ALMOST ONE THOUSAND AND GUJARAT'S THEN
CHIEF MINISTER NARENDRA MODI FACED HEAVY
BACKLASH FOR STANDING BY AS THE VIOLENCE
CONTINUED. THERE WERE EVEN ALLEGATIONS THAT THE OFFICIALS "WERE DIRECTLY INVOLVED" AND HELPED TO COVER UP THE STATE'S
INVOLVEMENT. PM ATAL BIHARI VAJPAYEE LATER
APOLOGIZED AND ANNOUNCED A US$31 MILLION REHABILITATION PACKAGE, BUT A POLITICAL

CAMPAIGN PLEDGING TO PREVENT ANOTHER GODHRA SAW MODI GO ON TO A LANDSLIDE WIN.

In 2004, however, following protests against biased state authorities, the Supreme Court ordered further investigation into the riots, calling for a reopening of more than two thousand dismissed cases. In 2007, Tehelka magazine published secretly filmed footage of senior Gujarati Hindu politicians, mainly from the BJP, describing their involvement in fanning the riots. The report alleged that Modi ordered the police to side with Hindu rioters and sheltered the perpetrators from justice. Still, he was resoundingly re-elected and his ascension has continued unhindered; on May 26, 2014, he became prime minister, gaining a majority in the Lok Sabha (the lower house of the Indian parliament) – for the first time, for any party, since 1984. The Supreme Court eventually found Modi not guilty, concluding that there was not enough evidence to convict him.

In 2011, dozens of those guilty of the Godhra fire were convicted and sentenced, and a year later hundreds more of the rioters were convicted, including a former state minister, the first political figure to be officially implicated in the events.

FESTIVALS IN GUJARAT

Even the smallest of Gujarat's farming villages celebrates with grandeur and effervescence during their festivals, which can celebrate anything from the harvest to various gods or new relationships.

Diu Festival (Dec–Feb; festadiu.com). Music, fashion shows and even bungee jumping take place in Diu at Nagoa beach, the fort and an open-air theatre at Sunset Point.

Kite Festival/Uttarayan (14 Jan). The biggest of its kind in the world, this festival marks the beginning of the harvest season (Makar Sankranti) where kite-makers from more than four hundred countries descend on the Sabarmati riverfront in Ahmedabad (see below).

Suth Tera (Feb/March). A one-day event in which fifty thousand pilgrims hike up to the hilltop temple complex of Shatrunjaya.

Tarnetar Fair (Aug/Sept). Turbans, embroidered jackets and decorative umbrellas abound at this celebration of youth in Sayla, where tribal music and poetry set a backdrop for young men and women to meet their future spouses.

Janmashtami (Aug/Sept). Krishna's birthday is important all over Gujarat, but the "sacred abode" of Dwarka is one of the best places to be to witness the most vibrant celebrations.

Navratri (late Sept/early Oct). In Vadodara, thousands of people dance through the night across ten days (navratri means "nine nights"), worshipping nine forms of the Hindu goddess Durga. One of the main highlights during Navratri celebrations in the state is the traditional dance form 'Garba' which is a symbol of devotion and worship.

Ahmedabad A tangled medley of factories, mosques, temples and skyscrapers, Gujarat's commercial hub, AHMEDABAD (pronounced "Amdavad"), sprawls along the banks of the River Sabarmati, about 90km from its mouth in the Bay of Cambay. With an extended population of more than 7.2 million, it is the state's largest city (and was the capital until it was moved to Gandhinagar in 1970) and India's sixth largest. It is a congested metropolis of step-wells, ashrams and mosques with a tranquil lake, overshadowed by pollution and by occasional outbreaks of communal violence.

That withstanding, its mix of medieval and modern makes Ahmedabad a compelling place to explore – a wander through the bazars of the old city is particularly rewarding. The city is packed with diverse architectural styles throughout, with more than fifty mosques and tombs, plus Hindu and Jain temples and grand step-wells (vavs). The Calico Museum of Textiles is one of the world's finest, while Gandhi's Sabarmati Ashram is a must-see for anyone with an interest in the Mahatma.

In 2002, a controversial canal project diverted water from the River Narmada into the Sabarmati, which previously had virtually dried up outside the monsoon. This has given the city a cooler feel, but Ahmedabad, which has been plagued by high carbon monoxide levels in the past, has a long way to go before it can breathe easily.

Brief history When Ahmed Shah inherited the Sultanate of Gujarat in 1411, he moved his capital from Patan to Asawal, on the east bank of the Sabarmati, renaming it after himself. It quickly grew as artisans and traders were invited to settle, and its splendid mosques, intended to assert Muslim supremacy, heralded the new Indo-Islamic style of architecture. In 1572, Ahmedabad became part of the Mughal Empire and, on the back of a flourishing textiles trade, came to be regarded as India's most handsome city. However, two devastating famines, coupled with political instability, led the city into decline. The merchants only returned in 1817, when the newly arrived British lowered taxes. A new wave of prosperity came from the burgeoning opium trade, while the introduction of modern machinery re-established Ahmedabad as a prominent textile exporter. In the run-up to independence, while Mahatma Gandhi was revitalising small-scale textile production, the "Manchester of the East" became an important seat of political power and a hotbed for religious tension. Today, having largely stepped out of the darkness caused by violent communal rioting, Ahmedabad remains a booming economic powerhouse.

The old city The historic heart of Ahmedabad is the old city, an area of about three square kilometres on the east bank of the river, dissected by the main thoroughfares of Relief Road and Mahatma Gandhi (MG) Road, and reaching its northern limits at Delhi Gate. It's best to start exploring in the Lal Darwaja area, taking in the squat buildings of the original citadel, Bhadra, the mosques and tombs of Ahmedabad's Muslim rulers, as well as vibrant bazaars and pols – labyrinths of high wooden havelis and narrow cul-de-sacs.

climb to the roof via a winding staircase just inside the main gateway. Across from the fort to the east is Alif Shah's Mosque, gaily painted in green and white. Further on, beyond the odoriferous meat market in Khas Bazaar, is Teen Darwaja, a triple gateway built during Ahmed Shah's reign that once led to the outer court of the royal citadel. A trio of pointed arches engraved with Islamic inscriptions and detailed carving spans the busy road below.

Sidi Saiyad's Mosque Mirzapur Rd, Lal Darwaja • Daily 6am–11pm Famed for the ten magnificent jali (lattice-work) screens lining its upper walls, Sidi Saiyad's Mosque sits in the centre of a busy roundabout. Built in 1573, the two semicircular screens on the western wall are its most spectacular, with floral designs exquisitely carved out of the yellow stone. The stonework within depicts heroes and animals from popular Hindu myths – one example of Hindu and Jain craftsmanship influencing an Islamic tradition that rarely allowed the depiction of living beings in its mosques. Women cannot enter this mosque, but the gardens around it afford good views of the screens.

Ahmed Shah's Mosque Jijabai Marg, west of Bhadra Fort, across from Victoria Gardens • Daily 5am–11pm Small but artfully simple, Ahmed Shah's Mosque was the private place of worship for the royal household. Sections of an old Hindu temple, perhaps dating back to 1250 AD, were used in its construction – hence the incongruous Sanskrit inscriptions on some of the pillars in the sanctuary. The zenana (women's chamber) is hidden behind pierced stone screens above the sanctuary in the northeast corner.

Jama Masjid Mahatma Gandhi Rd • Daily 6am–10pm • Charge The spectacular Jama Masjid, completed in 1424, stands today in its entirety except for two minarets destroyed by an earthquake in 1957. Always bustling, the mosque is busiest on Fridays (“Jama Masjid” literally translates as “Friday Mosque”), when thousands converge to worship. The 260 elegant pillars supporting the roof of the domed prayer hall (qibla) are covered with unmistakeably Hindu carvings, while close to the sanctuary’s principal arch a large black slab is said to be the base of a Jain idol inverted and buried as a sign of Muslim supremacy.

Immediately outside the east entrance of the mosque, the square Tomb of Ahmed Shah I, who died in 1442, stands surrounded by pillared verandas. Women are not permitted to enter the central chamber, the site of his grave, or those of his son and grandson.

Manek Chowk Manek Chowk Rd, east of Jama Masjid The jewellery and textile market of Manek Chowk is filled with craftsmen working in narrow alleys amid newly dyed and tailored cloth. Further into the market, to the east, and surrounded by the dyers’ colourful stalls, is the mausoleum of Ahmed Shah’s queen, Rani-ka-Hazira. Its plan is identical to Shah’s own tomb (see above), with pillared verandas clearly inspired by Hindu architectural tastes.

Mosque of Rani Sipri Swami Vivekananda Rd, near Astodia Darwaja • Daily 5am–8pm The small, elegant mosque of Rani Sipri was commissioned in 1514 at the queen’s orders, when her husband ordered the execution of their son for reasons not fully understood. Her grave now also lies in front, sheltered by a pillared mausoleum. The stylish mosque, also known as Masjid-e-Nagira (“Jewel of a Mosque”) shows more Hindu influence than any other in Ahmedabad: its pillared sanctuary has an open facade to the east and fine tracery work on the west wall.

Swaminarayan Temple Swaminarayan Mandir Rd, Kalupur • Daily 6am–7pm • www.swaminarayan.in

The brightly coloured Swaminarayan Temple presents a delicate contrast to the many hard-stone mosques in the city. Both the temple and the houses in the courtyard surrounding it are of finely carved wood, with elaborate and intricate patterns typical of the havelis of north and west Gujarat. The temple’s main sanctuary is given over to Vishnu and his consort Lakshmi.

Shaking minarets Indulal Yagnik Rd, near Sarangpur Darwaja • Daily 8am–6pm The minarets are all that remain of the Sidi Bashir Mosque, built in 1452, which was named after one of Ahmed Shah's favourite slaves. More than 21m high, these are the best existing example of "shaking minarets" – built on a foundation of flexible sandstone, probably to protect them from earthquake damage – once a common sight on Ahmedabad's skyline, and now useful protection against the vibration of nearby trains.

SEWA ALMOST NINETY PERCENT OF WOMEN WHO WORK IN INDIA ARE SELF-EMPLOYED. OUTSIDE THE PROTECTION OF LABOUR LAWS AND THE MINIMUM WAGE, THEY ARE SUBJECT TO EXPLOITATION, OFTEN BY UNSCRUPULOUS BANKS AND LENDERS. AHMEDABAD, HOWEVER, HAS MAINTAINED A TRADITION OF SELF-HELP SINCE THE DAYS OF GANDHI, ACHIEVING GLOBAL RECOGNITION AS THE BASE OF THE GROUND-BREAKING SELF-EMPLOYED WOMEN'S ASSOCIATION, SEWA (@SEWA.ORG). FOUNDED IN THE EARLY 1970S, SEWA PROVIDES LEGAL ADVICE, TRAINING, SUPPORT AND CHILDCARE, AND RUNS ITS OWN COOPERATIVE BANK.

Following a major slump in the textile industry in 1984, SEWA set up training centres in weaving, sewing, dyeing and printing, providing efficient machinery. This helped to re-establish many women in the textile labour force, providing an outlet for their products. In 1987, a SEWA protest against sati (widow burning) and a campaign to have verbal divorce and polygamy banned in Gujarat resulted in a change in the law. SEWA also strongly opposes female foeticide, which is particularly widespread in Gujarat. With more than a million members nationwide, more than 600,000 of which are in Gujarat, the organisation now tackles projects throughout India and overseas.

Hathi Singh Temple Shahibaug Rd, north of Delhi Gate • Daily 8am–1pm & 4–8pm The Jain Hathi Singh Temple is easily distinguished by its high, finely carved columns. Built entirely of white marble embossed with smooth carvings of dancers, musicians, animals and flowers, this serene temple is dedicated to Dharamnath, the fifteenth tirthankara, one of 24 great teachers sanctified by the Jains.

Calico Museum of Textiles In the Sarabhai Foundation, The Retreat, opposite Shahibagh Underbridge • Compulsory tours (2hr) Thurs–Tues 10.30am & 12.30pm; book in advance as they are each open to twenty people only and fill up quickly • Free • ☎079 2286 8172, 🌐 calicomuseum.org • Bus #102 or #105 from Lal Darwaja bus stand; an auto-rickshaw costs approximately ₹120

The Calico Museum of Textiles displays India's finest collection of textiles, clothes, furniture and crafts. Highlights of the morning tour include exquisite pieces made for the British and Portuguese, an embroidered tent and Shah Jahan's robes from India's royal households. There are patola saris from Patan and extravagant zari work that gilds saris in heavy gold stitching, bringing their weight to nearly ten kilos. Other galleries are dedicated to embroideries, bandhani tie-and-dye, Kutch work, textiles made for overseas trade and woollen shawls from Kashmir and Chamba. The afternoon tour includes the galleries of pichwais and other temple paintings and decorations, including Jain statues housed in a replica haveli temple and centuries-old manuscripts and mandalas painted on palm leaves.

Dada Hari-ni Vav and around Haripura, Asarwa, opposite railway yard, northeast Ahmedabad • Daily 8am–6pm • Free • Auto-rickshaw from Lal Darwaja Charge Northern Gujarat abounds with remarkable step-wells – deep, with elaborately carved walls and broad flights of covered steps leading to a shaft – but Dada Hari-ni Vav, just outside the city's old northeast boundaries, is among the finest. While it's a Muslim construction, built in 1500, the craftsmen were Hindu, and their influence is clear in the lavish and sensuous carvings on the walls and pillars. Visit around 11am when the sculpted floral patterns and shapely figurines inside are bathed in sunlight.

Bai Harir's lofty mosque and lattice-walled tomb stand just west of the well, while a couple of hundred metres north of the complex is the neglected Mata Bhava-ni Vav, constructed in the eleventh century, before Ahmedabad was founded. It's profoundly Hindu in character, and dedicated to Bhavani, an aspect of Shiva's consort Parvati.

Sanskar Kendra Museum Bhagatcharya Rd • Tues–Sun 10am–6pm • Free; no photos • ☎079 2657 8369 • Bus #33 or #34 from Lal Darwaja bus stand to Sardar Patel Bridge; auto-rickshaw costs approximately ₹150

The Sanskar Kendra Museum is worth a visit, covering subjects such as the history of the city, urban growth, sociological development and the activities of Gandhi and the freedom movement. The Patang Kite Museum (same hours) in the basement showcases the city's Kite Festival – the world's largest.

Sabarmati (Gandhi) Ashram Ashram Rd • Daily 8.30am–6.30pm, ☎ gandhiashramsabarmati.org • Buses #13/1 and #83 connect the ashram to Lal Darwaja The Sabarmati (Gandhi) Ashram is where the Mahatma lived from 1917 until 1930, holding meetings with weavers and Harijans as he helped them find security and re-establish the manual textile industry in Ahmedabad. In keeping with the man's uncluttered lifestyle, the collection of his personal property is modest but poignant – wooden shoes, white seamless clothes and a pair of round spectacles which he was famous for. The ashram itself is no longer operational, but many people come here simply to sit and meditate.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE SARDAR AHMEDABAD VALLABHBHAI PATEL INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT THE AIRPORT (☎079 2286 9211), ☎ AHMEDABADAIRPORT.COM 10KM NORTH OF AHMEDABAD, IS CONNECTED TO THE CENTRE BY PREPAID TAXIS (₹550–700), AUTO-RICKSHAWS (AROUND ₹250–300) AND BUS #106 (HOURLY 7AM–10PM; ₹20), WHICH TERMINATES AT THE LOCAL (LAL DARWAJA) BUS STAND IN THE WEST OF THE OLD CITY. FREE LIQUOR PERMITS CAN BE OBTAINED FROM THE DOMESTIC TERMINAL (☎079 2286 0631),

FROM A COUNTER ACROSS FROM THE LUGGAGE BELT (DAILY 8AM–10PM).

Airlines Air India and SpiceJet have offices in the terminal, as well as in town, near Sidi Saiyad's Mosque (☎079 2658 5622) and near Old High Court respectively (☎079 2285 8022). IndiGo also has an office in the airport (☎012 4661 3838).

Destinations Bengaluru (4 daily; 2hr 5min); Delhi (17 daily; 1hr 30min); Jaipur (1 daily; 1hr 5min); Kolkata (3 daily; 2hr 30min); Mumbai (24 daily; 1hr 15min).

BY TRAIN AHMEDABAD IS ON THE DELHI–MUMBAI TRAIN LINE, AND SERVES AS THE JUMPING-OFF POINT FOR MOST DESTINATIONS WITHIN GUJARAT.

RECOMMENDED TRAINS FROM AHMEDABAD THE SERVICES LISTED BELOW ARE THE MOST CONVENIENT AND/OR FASTEST TRAINS FROM AHMEDABAD. ALL RUN DAILY.

Destination	Name	No.	Departs	Arrives
Bhavnagar	Bhavnagar Express	12971	5.15am	10.35am
Bhuj	Sayaji Nagari Express or Dadar Bhuj Express	19115	11.59pm	7.00am+
Delhi	Swarna J Raj Express	12957	5.40pm	7.30am+
Dwarka	Saurashtra Mail	22945	5.35am	2.41pm
Jamnagar	Saurashtra Mail	22945	5.35am	11.38am
Jodhpur	Ranakpur Express	14708	11.55pm	9.45am

Mumbai	Shatabdi Express	12010	2.40pm	9.20pm
	Gujarat Mail	12902	10.00pm	6.25am+
Porbandar	Saurashtra Express	19015	7.45pm	5.35am+
Udaipur	Udaipur City Express	19944	11.00pm	9.20am+

+ = next day

Railway stations The main railway station, Ahmedabad Junction (known locally as Kalupur station), is on Station Rd, a 2km walk (or ₹100 auto-rickshaw ride) from Lal Darwaja; the less-used Gandhigram station, for destinations in Saurashtra, is on the west side of the river, just off Ashram Rd; and a few north- or southbound services also stop at Sabarmati Junction railway station, just northwest of the Sabarmati River. There are reservation centres (Mon–Sat 8am–8pm, Sun 8am–2pm) at all stations.

BY BUS BUS STANDS THE STATE BUS STAND IS IN THE SOUTHEAST OF THE OLD CITY, ON GITA MANDIR RD (☎079 25463409) BY ASTODIA GATE. RESERVATION CENTRES ARE LOCATED ON PLATFORMS 1 AND 5 (DAILY 7AM–2PM, 2.30–7.30PM & 8–9.45PM). FROM HERE, GOVERNMENT BUSES LINK THE ENTIRE STATE AND BEYOND, WHILE A/C “VOLVO” BUSES, OPERATED JOINTLY BY THE GUJARAT STATE ROAD TRANSPORT CORPORATION (GSRTC; ☎079 2270 3083, 🌐 GSRTC.IN) AND VARIOUS PRIVATE COMPANIES, LINK RAJKOT, VADODARA AND BHUJ. NUMEROUS PRIVATE BUS AGENCIES NEAR THE STATION AND ON PALDI RD, WEST OF SARDAR BRIDGE, OFFER SERVICES THROUGHOUT THE STATE AND INTO RAJASTHAN, MAHARASHTRA OR MADHYA PRADESH.

Agencies Some of the most useful agencies are on Paldi Rd, among them Patel Tours & Travels (🌐 pateltoursandtravels.com), which has buses to Bhuj (12 daily; 7–8hr), and Gujarat Travels (🌐 gujarattravels.co.in) to Mount Abu in Rajasthan (5 daily; 4–6hr). Shree Sahjanand Travels on Satellite Rd (☎ 079 2657 5988 or www.shreesahjanandtravels.com) serves Diu (1 nightly at 11pm; 9hr) and Mumbai (3 nightly; 10–11hr).

Destinations Bhavnagar (hourly; 4–5hr); Bhuj (20 daily; 7–8hr); Dhrangadhra (every 30min; 3hr); Dwarka (7 daily; 11hr); Gandhinagar (every 45min; 1hr); Jamnagar (12 daily; 7hr); Jodhpur (4 daily; 11–13hr); Mehsana (every 30min; 2hr); Mumbai (2 daily; 10hr); Palitana (10 daily; 5–6hr); Rajkot (every 30min; 4hr 30min); Udaipur (12 daily; 10–7hr); Vadodara (every 15min; 2hr).

GETTING AROUND BY BUS AHMEDABAD AMTS (AHMEDABAD MUNICIPAL TRANSPORT SERVICE; www.AMTS.CO.IN) IS USEFUL FOR GETTING AROUND THE CITY, CONNECTING ALL PARTS OF TOWN WITH LAL DARWAJA'S LOCAL BUS STAND. IN ADDITION, AHMEDABAD'S MUCH-HERALDED BRTS (BUS RAPID TRANSIT SYSTEM; www.AHMEDABADBRTS.ORG), ALSO KNOWN AS JANMARG, BEATS THE TRAFFIC WITH EXCLUSIVE LANES AND MEDIAN BUS STATIONS.

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURIST INFORMATION THE HELPFUL TOURIST OFFICE IS IN HK HOUSE, JUST OFF ASHRAM RD, ON THE WEST SIDE OF THE RIVER (MON–SAT 10.30AM–1.30PM & 2–6PM, CLOSED 2ND & 4TH SAT OF MONTH; ☎079 2658 9172 www.GUJARATTOURISM.COM); THE ATTACHED TRAVEL SERVICE CAN BOOK AIRLINE TICKETS AND ARRANGE TOURS.

Tours The Ahmedabad Municipal Corporation (AMC; ☎079 2539 1811, www.ahmedabadcity.gov.in) runs non-a/c city bus tours (daily 9am–1pm & 2–5pm; ₹100; ☎079 2550 7739) from platform D of the Lal Darwaja bus stand. Gujarat Tourism, partnered with Pinks Travels, runs a/c city bus tours (daily 12pm–8 pm; ₹450 ☎98250 13563) from the City Civic Centre, opposite the GLS School in the Law Garden, as well as full-day bus tours that take in more than a dozen Hindu and Jain temples (Sun 8am–8pm; ₹300) starting from Jalaram Temple. The House of MG hotel (www.houseofmg.com) run two heritage walks, one in the morning and one in the evening, both starting at the hotel (daily 7.30–10.30am and 9.30–11pm; call in advance to reserve; rates are ₹413 and ₹295 each respectively). There are other walking tours from Swaminarayan Temple to Jama Masjid as well.

ACCOMMODATION LAL DARWAJA, MAP

Cama Khanpur Rd 📞079 2560 1234, 🌐camahotelsindia.com. Large, brightly coloured rooms with baths and carpets, overlooking the Sabarmati. The businessperson clientele is reflected in the 9am checkout time, but the manicured garden, pool, two restaurants, gym, liquor shop (noon–7pm) and 24hr coffee shop make it worthwhile. Breakfast included. ₹₹

Good Night Opposite Sidi Saiyad's Mosque, Mirzapur Rd 📞079 2550 6997, 🌐hotelgoodnight.co.in. Neat and tidy rooms with private, white-tiled bathrooms and TVs; some have a/c. Breakfast included. ₹₹

★House of MG Opposite Sidi Saiyad's Mosque, Mirzapur Rd 📞079 2550 6946 🌐houseofmg.com. This 1920s heritage hotel has spacious, individually decorated rooms fitted with flatscreen TVs, most with four-poster beds. The private courtyards have period furniture and old photos lining the walls, while playful touches like popcorn makers are found in each suite (₹11,000). Two excellent restaurants and an indoor pool complete the package. The hotel also organizes excellent walking tours (see above). ₹₹₹₹

Serena Mirzapur Rd 📞079 2551 0137 or 98250 58906. Beyond the unprepossessing exterior are reasonable attached rooms with slightly grubby bathrooms and 24hr checkout; the more expensive have a/c and extra space. A decent budget fall-back option if Volga and Good Night are full. ₹₹

Volga Near Ankelsharia Hospital off Relief Rd 📞079 2550 9497, 🌐hotelvolga.in. Friendly service and spotless pastel-shaded attached rooms, each with TV, phone and 24hr checkout; some of the cheaper rooms are a bit stuffy with only internal windows. As quiet as it gets in Lal Darwaja. ₹₹

AROUND THE RAILWAY STATION, MAP

Moti Mahal Kalupur Rd 📞079 2212 1881, 🌐hotelmotimahal.com. Very well-kept, clean hotel offering identikit rooms with attached bathrooms and TVs. There's a decent a/c restaurant, too. ₹₹

Ritz Inn Kalupur Rd 📞 hotelritzinn.com. A three-star establishment with classy Art Deco flourishes and smart service. The charming rooms have black-and-white bathrooms, TVs and writing desks; prices include station transfers. Breakfast included. ₹₹₹

OUTSIDE THE CITY CENTRE, MAP

Crowne Plaza SG Rd 📞 ihg.com. Service and standards are as high as you'd expect from this international chain, with an excellent restaurant and fantastic breakfast spread included in the rates, outdoor pool, steam room, sauna, Jacuzzi and gym. ₹₹₹₹

Ginger Drive-In Rd, behind Himalaya Mall, 7km north of the centre 📞 079 6666 3333, 📞 gingerhotels.com. This slick branch of Tata's chain of stylised hotels is the most useful for the airport, with pared-down a/c attached rooms with coffee makers, fridges and "self-check-in". Breakfast included. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP AND THIS MAP

Ahmedabad's most popular restaurants are mainly vegetarian and clustered around Relief Rd, Salapose Rd and Badhra; great snack stalls line Khas Bazaar. If you are making only a brief stop in Gujarat, be sure to sample the state's delicious thali.

★Agashiye House of MG, opposite Sidi Saiyad's Mosque, Mirzapur Rd 📞 079 2550 6946, 📞 houseofmg.com. One of the state's finest restaurants, with a roof terrace, cushions to sit on and an open kitchen: prices are slightly steep but the mouth-watering Gujarati thalis are as good as they get. A series of recipe books is on sale, and cookery classes are in the pipeline. Daily noon–3.30pm & 7–10.30pm. ₹₹₹

Chef's Pizza Opposite Cadillac hotel, Advance Cinema Rd 📞 079 7373 9900 or 📞 9173739900. The deep-pan pizzas are surprisingly good at this tiny, clean and friendly fast-food joint that's popular among a younger crowd. Also serves burgers, sandwiches and wraps. Daily 11am–11pm. ₹₹

Gandhi Cold-Drink House Khas Bazaar 📞 079 2550 7555. Friendly, hole-in-the-wall place with plastic chairs out front and a range of refreshing milk and ice cream concoctions (around ₹50), including an Indonesian-style "Royal Faluda", unique to Ahmedabad, and a chaas made from yoghurt and digestive spices such as fenugreek seeds Daily 10am–11pm. ₹

Gopi Dining Hall Pritamrai Rd, west side of Ellis Bridge 📞079 2657 6388 or 9879514277. Named by Newsweek as one of the 101 Best Places to Eat Around the World in 2012, Gopi is a welcoming all-veg place offering generous Gujarati and Kathiawadi thalis with unbeatable prices and top service. It's very popular, so reserve ahead or be prepared to wait in line. Daily 10.30am–3pm & 6.30–10pm. ₹₹

Green House House of MG, opposite Sidi Saiyad's Mosque, Mirzapur Rd 🌐houseofmg.com. Cheaper than Agashiye and almost as appealing: sit on wooden benches under an ivy-covered pavilion and tuck into snacks, light meals and sorbets, frozen yogurts, ice creams and yoghurt-based cool drinks: try the saffron or rose flavours (₹230). Daily breakfast specials are also fantastic Daily 7am–11pm. ₹₹

Havmor Near Rupam Cinema, Relief Rd 📞079 2535 7373, 🌐havmor.com. On one of Ahmedabad's most fume-choked streets, this tidy, white-tiled branch of Gujarat's most famous ice-cream company (now one of many in the city) was founded here in 1944 and has spread as far as Punjab and even Pune. It serves South Indian dishes, fast food and lots of ice cream. Daily 11.30am–11pm. ₹₹

Jayhind Manek Chowk 📞079 2214 0714; 🌐jayhindsweets.com. One of the best places to sample Ahmedabad's famous sweets, Jayhind has sold wonderful dry-fruit halwa, ghari and mithai by the kilo, as well as kaju pista roll since 1948. See website for sweets and up-to-date rates Daily 8am–8.30pm. ₹

Nishat Khas Bazaar 📞079 2550 7335. With its huge flashing neon sign, this a/c restaurant is hard to miss. Being one of the main spots serving meat dishes in the city, its mutton kadai and chicken tikka are excellent. A cheaper, non-a/c restaurant with the same name is just up the street, serving chicken tikka, which is just as popular with the locals. Daily 10am–11pm. ₹₹

Simran FG Tower, Khanpur Rd 📞099 2575 8786 or 📞079255 11002. Handy for the big hotels nearby, this a/c restaurant has cosy booths, an old fish tank, and curtains blocking out the bustle of Khanpur Rd; good choices include tawa jhinga (prawns in a masala concoction) mutton kebabs chicken “lolli-pops” and fish curry (₹210). Daily 11.30am–11pm. ₹₹₹

★Vishalla Narol Sarkhej Rd, 7km southwest of city centre 📞079 2660 2422, 🌐vishalla.com. This fabulous open-air restaurant serves generous portions of pure-veg Gujarati cuisine in a charming village setting, complete with floor seating under thatched-roof huts and a variety of cultural performances. The set lunches and dinners are served on banana leaves. Don't miss the attached utensil museum (Tues–Sun 3–10pm; Charge; vechaar.com). It's well worth the trip to get here: from Lal Darwaja, take bus #35 or an auto-rickshaw (about ₹170 return). Tues–Sun 3–10pm. ₹₹

ZK Relief Rd, opposite Relief Cinema 079 2550 6121. A dimly lit restaurant with a pink-and-maroon colour scheme and an ancient fish tank. Trawling through the exhaustive menu – there's well over two hundred dishes – certainly builds up an appetite: the local dishes are particularly good. Daily 11am–11pm. ₹

SHOPPING

MAP

You can pick up a selection of clothes and accessories, including saris, shoes and wallets in the lanes of Lal Darwaja, while the narrow alleys around Manek Chowk are good for fresh vegetables and sweets – and fun to wander around merely to soak up the atmosphere. In the evening, head to the Law Garden on the west bank of the river for cholis (blouses) and wall hangings.

Art Book Centre Just off Mangaldas Rd, 350m east of Ellis Bridge 079 2658 2130, artbookcenter.net. Huge range of books, mainly about arts and architecture of India and beyond, with good prices and friendly staff. Daily 10am–6pm.

Bujodi Showroom Netaji Rd, Mithakali Circle 079 4848 1122. Broad collection of Gujarati handicrafts and fabrics, especially the unique craft of Kutch work which is woven on scarves, handbags and quilts. Mon–Sat 10.30am–8.30pm, Sun 11am–7pm.

Crossword Shri Krishna Complex, near the Mithakali crossroad 079 26582130, crossword.in. Great selection of books including bestsellers and new titles, plus magazines and book readings held on a regular basis. Daily 10.30am–9pm.

Hansiba Banascraft Chandan Complex, CG Rd; 079 2640 5784. Official outlet selling handicrafts from the Self-Employed Women's Association. Mon–Sat 11am–9pm, Sun 11.30am–7pm.

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE FOREIGN EXCHANGE IS AVAILABLE AT, AMONG MANY OTHER PLACES, THE BANK OF INDIA ON MG RD, THE CENTRAL BANK OF INDIA OPPOSITE SIDI SAYYID'S MOSQUE AND THE STATE BANK OF INDIA OPPOSITE LAL DARWAJA BUS STATION (ALL MON-FRI 11AM-3PM, SAT 11AM-1PM); THOMAS COOK AND CITIBANK HAVE BRANCHES ON CHIMANLAL GIRDHARLAL RD.

Cinemas City Gold Cinema (☎079 2658 7780 or 079 6605 8392), near the tourist office on Ashram Rd, screens English and Hindi films (tickets ₹250).

Hospitals Vadilal Sarabhai Hospital, Ellis Bridge (☎079 2657 7621), is a large government hospital; for traditional treatments, try Akhandanand Ayurvedic, just off Swami Vivekananda Rd (Mon-Sat 8.30am-7.30pm; ☎079 2550 7796).

Post office The GPO is on Salapas Rd (Mon-Sat 10am-7.30pm).

Around Ahmedabad The most obvious day-trips from Ahmedabad are north to Adalaj, with its impressive step-well, and beyond to Gandhinagar, with its extraordinary Swaminarayan religious complex. South of town, the lake, pavilions and mausoleums of Sarkhej make a pleasant break from the crowded city, while further south is the ancient Harappan site at Lothal.

Adalaj Vav 19km north of Ahmedabad • Daily 8am–6pm • Charge • Connected by frequent buses between Ahmedabad and Gandhinagar; Adalaj village is 1km from the bus stop One of Gujarat's most spectacular step-wells, Adalaj Vav stands in large, well-kept gardens. The monument, built in 1498 and now out of use, is best seen around noon, when sunlight penetrates to the bottom of the five-storey octagonal well-shaft. Steps lead down to the cool depths through a series of platforms raised on pillars. Alive with exquisite sculptures, the walls, pillars, cornices and niches portray erotica, dancing maidens, musicians and animals.

Gandhinagar The second state capital after Chandigarh to be built from scratch since Independence, uninspiring GANDHINAGAR is laid out in thirty residential sectors in an ordered style influenced by the architect Le Corbusier. There's little to warrant spending much time here, unless you wish to visit the headquarters of the Swaminarayan sect, Akshardham. Just like the version in Delhi, this Hindu revivalist movement promotes Vedic ideals pronounced by Lord Swaminarayan (1781–1830) in what feels rather like a theme park devoted to religion.

Swaminarayan complex J Rd, Sector 20, west side of Gandhinagar near the Sabarmati • Tues–Sun: park 9.30am–7.30pm; exhibitions 10am–6pm; rides noon–8pm • Free, no cameras or video allowed; audio animatronic shows Charge • www.akshardham.com/gujarat

The Akshardham may advocate simplicity and poverty, but the colossal Swaminarayan complex is hugely extravagant. Built of six thousand tonnes of pink sandstone, it houses the gold-leafed statues of Swaminarayan and two other prominent gurus. The rest of the complex is a veritable, if surreal, theme park, with a Hall of Holy Relics containing possessions of Swaminarayan and state-of-the-art audio-visual shows. On September 24, 2002, 33 people were killed and 72 injured here by Pakistani suicide terrorists. Links were quickly made between the attack and the post-Godhra rioting. Today, the only evidence of the massacre is the security presence at the entrance.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS BUSES GANDHINAGAR CONNECT GANDHINAGAR'S ST BUS STAND (IN SECTOR 11 IN THE CITY'S CENTRE) WITH AHMEDABAD'S ST BUS STAND (6
DAILY; 1HR 30MIN).

By train The station is in Sector 13C /14, about 2km north of the centre (auto-rickshaw ₹80).

Destinations Ahmedabad (4 daily; 1hr 15min); Gandhinagar Cap (4 daily; 1hr 15min).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING 7WONDERSHOTEL UGATI
CORPORATE PARK KUDASAN 🌐7WONDERSHOTEL.COM. A BOUTIQUE HOTEL WITH A RESTAURANT AND ROOFTOP BAR (NOT LICENCED), THIS THREE-STAR PROPERTY OFFERS DELUXE AND PREMIUM ROOMS, WITH BREAKFAST INCLUDED. ₹₹

Fortune Inn Haveli Plot No 235, Sector 11 🌐fortunehotels.in. Business-oriented, comfort-able hotel with modern wood-finished rooms. The hotel's multi-cuisine restaurant, Orchid, has a good breakfast buffet, and there is also a gym, wine shop, snooker table, steam room and sauna. Breakfast included. ₹₹

Sarkhej 10km southwest of Ahmedabad • Daily 6am–10pm •
Bus #31, #31 Shuttle or #31/3 from Lal Darwaja (45min) Sarkhej holds a complex of beautiful monuments arranged around an artificial lake. On the southwest side of the lake, the square tomb of the revered saint Sheikh Ahmed Khattu, the spiritual mentor of Ahmed Shah, who died in 1445, is Gujarat's largest mausoleum. It was constructed by Ahmed Shah's successor, Mohammed Shah, in 1446. The later Sultan

Mohammed Beghada (died 1511) added palaces, a harem, a vast lake and, eventually, his own tomb as well. Sarkhej became a retreat of Gujarati sultans and today remains a charming escape from Ahmedabad.

Lothal 80km south of Ahmedabad, near the mouth of the River Sabarmati • Site Daily dawn to dusk • Free • Museum Daily except Fri 10am–5pm • Charge • Direct bus from Ahmedabad's ST bus stand (2 daily; 2hr); Ahmedabad's Gandhigram station is connected by a metre-gauge railway to Lothal-Burkhi station (2 daily; 2–3hr), 3km from the site: either walk the rest of the way or take an auto-rickshaw Near the mouth of the River Sabarmati, by the Gulf of Cambay, is Lothal, one of the largest excavated Harappan (or Indus Valley) sites (see box below). Foundations, platforms, crumbling walls and paved floors are all that remain of the prosperous sea-trading community that dwelled here between 2400 and 1900 BC, when a flood all but destroyed the settlement. A walk around the central mound reveals the old roads that ran past ministers' houses and through the acropolis. The lower town comprised a bazar, workshops and residential quarters. Evidence has been found here of an even older culture, perhaps dating from the fourth millennium BC, known as the Red Ware Culture. You can see remains from this period and from the Indus Valley Civilization in the illuminating museum adjacent to the site.

THE INDUS VALLEY CIVILIZATION BEFORE THE MAURYANS TOOK OVER IN THE FOURTH CENTURY BC, INDIA'S GREATEST EMPIRE WAS THE INDUS VALLEY CIVILIZATION. SOPHISTICATED SETTLEMENTS DATING BACK TO 2500 BC WERE

FIRST DISCOVERED IN 1924 ON THE BANKS OF THE INDUS IN PRESENT-DAY SINDH (PAKISTAN), AT MOHENJO DARO. FURTHER EXCAVATIONS IN 1946 IN PUNJAB REVEALED THE CITY OF HARAPPA, FROM THE SAME ERA. IN ITS PRIME, THIS GREAT SOCIETY SPREAD FROM THE PRESENT-DAY BORDERS OF IRAN AND AFGHANISTAN TO KASHMIR, DELHI AND SOUTHERN GUJARAT. IT LASTED UNTIL 1900 BC, WHEN IT WAS DESTROYED BY HEAVY FLOODS.

A prosperous and literate society, importing raw materials from regions as far west as Egypt and trading ornaments, jewellery and cotton, it also had a remarkable, centrally controlled political system. Each town was almost identical, with complex drainage systems. Lothal, close to the Gulf of Cambay in southern Gujarat, was a major port. Although much about this complex society remains unknown, similarities exist between the Indus Valley Civilization and present-day India. For example, like Hindus, the Indus Valley people had a strong custom of worshipping a mother goddess, and there is evidence of phallic worship, still popular among Shaivites.

Northern Gujarat North of Gandhinagar, the district of Mehsana was the Solankis' seat of government between the eleventh and thirteenth centuries. Some remains of their old capital, Anhilawada Patan, still stand, including the extraordinary Rani-ki-Vav step-well, situated just outside the modern city of Patan, home to Gujarat's last remaining patola weavers. The big draw here is undoubtedly the ancient Sun Temple at Modhera, easily reached from the crowded city of Mehsana (Mahesana); it's also worth visiting the striking shrines at the Jain temple at Taranga.

Sun Temple at Modhera Daily 8am–6pm • Charge • Modhera is linked by road to Patan (every 30min by bus; 1hr 15min), Zainabad (4 daily; 1hr 30min), Ahmedabad (2 daily; 2–3hr) and Mehsana (every 30min; 45min – or return taxi fare around ₹650) If you visit just one town in northern Gujarat, make it MODHERA, where the eleventh-century Sun Temple is the state's best example of Solanki temple architecture. Almost a thousand years old, the temple has survived earthquakes and Muslim iconoclasm; apart from a missing shikhara and slightly worn carvings, it remains largely intact. The Solanki kings were probably influenced by Jain traditions; deities and their vehicles, animals, voluptuous maidens and complex friezes adorn the sandy brown walls and pillars. Within the mandapa, or pillared entrance hall, twelve adityas set into niches in the wall portray the transformations of the sun in each month of the year. Closely associated with the sun, adityas are the sons of Aditi, the goddess of infinity and eternity. Aditya in Sanskrit is often a synonym or another name used for the sun. Modhera's sun temple is positioned so that at the equinoxes the rising sun strikes the images in the sanctuary, which at other times languishes in a dim half-light. In front of the temple, 108 shrines adorn the rim of Surya Kund, a 100-square-metre step-well.

Patan and around The bustling modern town of PATAN was built on the ruins of the old city of Anhilwara, long-time capital of Gujarat. The old city served several Rajput dynasties between the eighth and the twelfth centuries before being annexed by the Mughals, and fell into decline when Ahmed Shah moved the capital to Ahmedabad in 1411. Little remains now except traces of fortifications scattered in the surrounding fields, as well as the stunning Rani-ki-Vav.

While modern Patan has few monuments, in the Salvivad area of town you can watch the complex weaving of silk patola saris. Once the preferred garment of queens and aristocrats, and an important export of Gujarat, the saris are now made by just one extended family, the Salvis (Salvivado, Patolawala St; www.patanpatola.com). They fetch anywhere from one to seven lakhs (₹100,000–700,000) and take around four to six months to produce. For smaller wallets, scarves are also available from ₹6000.

Rani-ki-Vav 2km northwest of Patan • Daily 8am–6pm • Charge Gujarat's greatest step-well, the Rani-ki-Vav (literally “the queen's step-well”) was built for the Solanki queen Udaimati in 1050 and extensively restored during the 1980s, re-creating as perfectly as possible the original extravagant carving. Near the well are the remains of the Sahastralinga Talav, the “thousand-lingam tank” built at the turn of the twelfth century, but razed during Mughal raids. There's a modest open-air museum in the same complex.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE FREQUENT BUSES FROM PATAN
THE ST BUS STAND IN THE CENTRE OF PATAN CONNECT WITH MEHSANA (EVERY 30MIN; 1HR 15MIN) AND AHMEDABAD (EVERY 30MIN; 3HR).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING

Navjivan 46 GIDC, southeast corner of Sidhpur Circle 📞027 6623 1035, www.hotelnajjivan.com. A no-frills hotel that has been in business for more than three decades, offering simple and clean rooms with attached bathrooms, and a pure-veg restaurant on site. ₹

Tulsi Siddhapur Char Rasta, in the town centre 📞027 6622 5440, www.hoteltulsi.in. Bright neon-green lighting makes this place easy to find at night. The decent rooms here have attached bathrooms and TVs; there are both non a/c and a/c options and it is worth spending extra for AC rooms. More impressive are the smart restaurant, serving good Gujarat thalis, and the paan parlour at the front of the building. ₹₹

Ajitanath Temple Taranga, 56km northeast of Mehsana • Buses from Ahmedabad (3hr 30min) and Mehsana (1hr 30min) drop you off at Timba (near Danta), from where shared jeeps (₹50) ply the remaining 8km to Taranga Well off the tourist trail, the hilltop temple complex at TARANGA was built during the Solanki period. Its striking shrines are better preserved than the more famous sites of Mount Abu, Girnar and Shatrunjaya. The Ajitanath Temple, built of durable sandstone, is dedicated to the second of 24 tirthankaras, whose 5m statue stands just inside, his gaze remarkably calm and unmoving, even for a statue. There is little in the way of tourist facilities here, although you can get an inexpensive lunch at one of the dharamshala rest houses.

Kutch Bounded on the north and east by marshy flats and on the south and west by the Gulf of Kutch and the Arabian Sea, the province of Kutch (also written Kuchchh or Kachchha) is a place apart. All but isolated from neighbouring Saurashtra and Sindh (Pakistan), the arid landscape is shot through with the colours of the heavily embroidered local dress. Kutchi legends can be traced in sculptural motifs, and its strong folk tradition is still represented in popular craft, clothing and jewellery designs. Few tourists make it here, but those who do are invariably enchanted. Launching from the central city of Bhuj – which has now recovered following devastation in the 2001 earthquake – you can explore the region's craft villages, ancient fortresses, medieval ports and isolated monasteries. The treeless salt marshes to the north and east, the Great and Little Ranns of Kutch, breathtaking expanses of cracked white earth, can flood completely during a heavy monsoon, effectively turning much of the region into an inland sea from July to September. Home to the rare wild ass, the Ranns are also the only region in India where flamingos breed successfully. The southern district of Aiyar Patti supports crops of cotton, castor-oil plants, sunflowers, wheat and groundnuts. Northern Kutch, or Banni, by contrast, is semidesert with dry shifting sands and arid grasslands.

Brief history Remains from the third millennium BC in eastern Kutch suggest migrating Indus Valley communities crossed the Ranns from Mohenjo Daro in modern Pakistan to Lothal in eastern Gujarat. Despite being so cut off, Kutch felt the effect of the Buddhist Mauryan Empire, later coming under the control of Greek Bactrians, the Western Satraps and the powerful Guptas. The Arab invasion of Sindh in 720 AD pushed refugees into Kutch's western regions, and tribes from Rajputana and Gujarat crossed its eastern borders. Later in the eighth century, the region fell under the sway of the Gujarati capital Anhilawada (now Patan), and by the tenth century the Samma Rajputs, later known as the Jadejas, had infiltrated Kutch from the west and established themselves as rulers, making their capital at Bhuj. Jajeda rule was eventually interrupted by a brief period of British domination in the early nineteenth century, and soon afterwards Kutch was absorbed into the Indian Union in 1948. The region has largely retained its customs, laws and a thriving maritime tradition, built originally on trade with Malabar, Mocha, Muscat and the African coast.

KUTCHI PASTORAL GROUPS KUTCH HAS THE MOST SIGNIFICANT POPULATION OF PASTORAL COMMUNITIES IN GUJARAT. EACH TRIBE CAN BE IDENTIFIED FROM ITS COSTUME, AND GAINS INCOME FROM FARMING OR CRAFTS SUCH AS WEAVING, PAINTING, WOODCARVING AND DYEING.

The Rabari, the largest group, rear cattle, buffalo and camels; sell ghee; weave; and are known for their fine embroidery. Most of the men sport a white turban, white cotton trousers tight at the ankle and with baggy pleats above the knee, a white jacket (khediyun), and a blanket thrown over one shoulder. Rabari women dress in black pleated jackets or open-backed blouses, full black skirts and tie-dyed head cloths, and always wear heavy silver jewellery and ivory bangles around the upper arms. In Bhujodi, near Bhuj, the Rabari weave camel wool into blankets and shawls.

The Bharvad tribes infiltrated Gujarat from Vrindavan, close to Mathura in Uttar Pradesh. The men are distinguishable by the peacock, parrot and flower motifs sewn into their khediyun, and the women by their bright backless shirts, kapadun, rarely covered by veils. Mass marriages take place among the Bharvad every few years.

The wandering Ahir cattle-breeders, today prosperous entrepreneurs, came to Gujarat from Sindh, and settled as farmers. The men sport baggy trousers and the khediyun, together with a white loosely wound headcloth; the women dress like the Rabaris, with additional heavy silver nose-rings. The children's bright topis, or skullcaps, resemble those commonly worn in Pakistan.

The Charans, long-established bards of Gujarat, encompass in their clans the Maldharis, who raise prize cattle, and the leatherworkers known as Meghwal. They claim descent from a celestial union between Charan and a maiden created by Parvati. The women are often worshipped by other tribes, as their connection with Parvati links them closely to the mother goddess, Ashpura, highly popular in Kutch.

Said to have migrated from Pakistan, the Jats are an Islamic pastoral group. The men can be identified by their black clothing, while young Jat girls have dainty plaits curving round the sides of their faces, and wear heavy nose rings.

Bhuj

In the heart of Kutch, the narrow streets and old bazars of the walled town of BHUI retain a medieval flavour unlike any other Gujarati city. While much of it was reduced to rubble in the earthquake of January 2001 (which killed around twenty thousand people, destroyed 1.2 million homes in the region and severely damaged the famed Aina Mahal, known as the “Palace of Mirrors”), a US$2 billion reconstruction process resulted in new infrastructure, new businesses and new jobs. And although reconstruction was slow and not always smooth, the city seems to have finally emerged from the tragedy.

Bhuj is overlooked from the east by the old, crumbling fort on Bhujia Hill, while the vast Hamirsar Tank, with a small park on an island in its centre, stands on its western edge. The remnants of the old city form an intricate maze of streets and alleyways leading to the palace complex, guarded by sturdy walls and high heavy gates, enclosing the Aina and Prag mahals.

Aina Mahal Darbargadh • Daily except Thurs 9am–noon & 3–6pm • Charge plus extra for camera and video camera • www.ainamahalbhuji.com

An eighteenth-century palace built during the reign of Maharao Lakho, and later turned into a museum showcasing the opulence of the royal dynasty, the Aina Mahal suffered considerable damage in the 2001 earthquake. Fortunately, despite its roof collapsing, the famed Hall of Mirrors remained largely intact; the interior has now been fully restored, but work is ongoing on the exterior. The chief architect of the palace, Ram Singh Malam, was an Indian seafarer who studied in Europe for seventeen years after being rescued from a shipwreck by Dutch sailors off the coast of Africa. His masterpiece was the tiled pleasure chamber at the heart of the palace where the maharaja, soothed by an ingenious system of fountains, would compose poetry and listen to music. Royal heirlooms on display include a couple of original Hogarths; a scroll depicting Nagpanchami Ashwari (an ancient Hindu snake-worshipping festival); and a portrait of Catherine the Great.

Prag Mahal Darbargadh • Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 3–6pm • Charge plus extra for camera and video The once-grand Prag Mahal, built in the 1860s and combining Mughal, British, Kutchi and Italian Gothic architectural styles, also suffered damage during the quake. Its main tower appears to be precariously held together by skewed stones. Visitors are currently only allowed inside the cavernous main hall.

Sharad Baug Palace Sanjog Nagar, west of Hamirsar Tank • Daily 9am–noon & 3–6pm • Charge plus extra for camera and video The small but stately Sharad Baug Palace was built in 1867 as the retreat of the last maharao of Kutch. Its small porticoed buildings are delicately proportioned and include a plush drawing room, decked with hunting trophies, photographs and old clocks, and a dining room containing Maharao Madansinji's coffin. The palace's most appealing feature, however, is its well-tended garden.

Shree Swaminarayan Temple City Police Station Rd • Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 3–6pm • ☎028 3225 0231, 🌐bhujmandir.org

While Bhuj's palaces showcase the grandeur of the old city, the Shree Swaminarayan Temple adds an element of modern-day splendour. Only inaugurated in 2010, the temple was built, at a cost of ₹1 billion, to replace the former Shri Swaminarayan Mandir that was all but wiped out by the earthquake. The complex, devoted to the Swaminarayan Sampraday sect of Hinduism, houses beautifully carved marble pillars, golden domes and images of Nar Narayan and Radha Krishna, salvaged from the old temple.

Kutch Museum Ghanshyam Nagar, southeast of Hamirsar Tank • Daily except Wed 10am–1pm & 2.30–5.30pm • Charge plus extra for camera and video The worthwhile Kutch Museum is the oldest museum in Gujarat, with two storeys of topographical, historical and cultural exhibits on the region. Kutchi textiles and crafts are showcased, along with life-size mannequins representing major Kutchi communities. There are also some interesting finds from the Indus Valley Civilization at Dholavira, dating back four millennia.

Ram-kund Tank South of Hamirsar Tank, off Vijayrajji Rd From the southwest corner of the Hamirsar Tank, a path leads between the Ram Dhun and Satya Narayan temples to the 250-year-old Ram-kund Tank. Made of hard grey stone and shaded with trees, it is decorated with skilfully crafted images of Kali, Vishnu, Nag and Ganesh, and bears small niches in the walls where oil lamps once glittered in the dusk as devotees prayed at the evening puja.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE THE AIRPORT (☎ BHUJ 028 3224 4147, 🌐 AAI.AERO) IS 4KM NORTH OF THE CENTRE. DAILY FLIGHTS TO MUMBAI (1HR 30MIN) AND DELHI (4HR) ARE OFFERED BY AIR INDIA (☎1860 233 1407, 🌐 AIRINDIA.IN).

By train The railway station is about 1.5km north of Aina Mahal (reservations office Mon–Sat 8am–8pm, Sun 8am–2pm). The best train services to Ahmedabad are the Sayaji Nagari Express, also called the Bhuj Dadar Express #19116 (daily; dep. 10.25pm, arr. 5.15am), which continues to Mumbai’s Bandra Terminus (arr. 1.45pm), and the Ala Hazrat Express #14312 (Tues, Thurs & Sun; dep. 12.45am, arr. 8.35pm), which continues to reach Jaipur and Delhi at 8.35am and 2.35pm respectively, the following day. Several daily trains travel to Gandhidham (1hr), but it’s easier to take the bus.

By bus The ST bus stand is on Middle School Rd, about 500m east of Harmirsar Lake. Private operators are strung along Station Rd. Patel Tours and Travels (☎099 2524 4252, 🌐 pateltoursandtravels.com), 100m west of the station, has buses to Ahmedabad (9 daily; 8hr), including a nightly a/c sleeper bus (10.45pm). Jay Somnath Travels (☎028 3222 1919), opposite Green Rock, has buses to Rajkot (6 daily; 7hr).

Destinations Ahmedabad (every 30min; 9hr); Dhordo (2 daily; 2hr 30min); Jamnagar (6 daily; 7hr 15min–8hr 15min); Khavda (4 daily; 2hr); Mandvi (hourly; 1hr 30min).

By shared jeep There’s a small shared-jeep stand about 200m east of the bus stand on the opposite side of ST Rd, with regular jeeps departing for Mandvi (45min).

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION BHUJ’S TOURIST INFORMATION BUREAU (☎028 3222 4910, 🌐 GUJARATTOURISM.COM) IS ON THE FIRST FLOOR OF THE CITY’S EXHIBITION HALL, OPPOSITE BAHUMALI BHAVAN.

ALSO USEFUL IS THE TOURIST DESK AT AINA MAHAL (DAILY EXCEPT SAT 9AM–NOON & 3–6PM; ☎028 3229 1702 OR ☎937 423 5379, ✉PKUMAR_94@YAHOO.COM OR ✉PRAMODJETHI2013@GMAIL.COM), MANNED BY THE FRIENDLY AND WELL-INFORMED PRAMOD JETHI, WHO ALSO ORGANIZES HERITAGE WALKS (3HR; ₹700).

Services The State Bank of India on Hospital Rd changes cash, as does ICICI across the street. There are numerous ATMs. Budhbhatti Cycle Stores Centre, near the ST bus stand, rents bicycles (₹70–150/day; ☎028 3222 2711).

ACCOMMODATION THE BHUJ HOUSE OPPOSITE CAMP POLICE CHOWKI, CAMP AREA ☎90981 87346, 🌐THEBHUJHOUSE.COM. THIS 150-YEAR-OLD COURTYARD HOME HAS BEEN IMMACULATLY RESTORED INTO A HERITAGE HOMESTAY. THE FOUR ATMOSPHERIC ROOMS ARE DECKED OUT IN KUTCHI FABRICS, AND STAFF CAN ARRANGE ACTIVITIES AND TOURS. RATES INCLUDE BREAKFAST; LUNCHEES AND DINNERS ALSO AVAILABLE. ₹₹

Hotel Mangalam Bhuj, near Mangalam Cross Roads, Sanskar Nagar 🌐mangalamhotels.com Brightly decorated central lobby area, large verdant courtyard and modern rooms, some with a Jacuzzi. The restaurant on site offers a wide variety of cuisines ranging from North Indian, regional to South Indian fare as well as sandwiches and pizzas. ₹₹

★Regenta Resort Bhuj by Royal Orchid GMDC House, Mirjapur Highway 🌐royalorchidhotels.com/regenta-resort-bhuj. Located about 3km from Bhuj airport, Regents boasts a swimming pool, bright large rooms decorated in pastel shades and dining under the stars at the outdoor Gazebo restaurant. ₹₹₹

Ilark Station Rd ☎02832 258999, 🌐hotelilark.com. A modern red-and-black-glass exterior shields one of the more chic hotels in town: all rooms have laminate floors, large beds and big TVs. There are also two smart restaurants, a bookshop, flower shop and – incongruously – a tree in the lobby. ₹₹

Kutch Safari Lodge 14km north of Bhuj, overlooking the Gorudra Reservoir ☎98250 13392 or 🌐kutchsafarihbuj.com. This luxurious camp has traditional Kutchi bhungas (mud-brick and straw homes) and white concrete huts, a pool and a restaurant that often features live music; a good choice if you've got your own vehicle. ₹₹₹

Prince Station Rd 🌐hotelprinceonline.com. Long-established mid-range choice with large and spotless attached a/c rooms and suites, a foreign exchange counter, two restaurants and welcoming staff. ₹₹₹

Raj Mahel Near ST bus stand, behind Sur Mandir Cinema ☎0283 222 3000, 🌐hotelrajmahalkutch.com. This red-coated hotel in the centre of town gives Bhuj's older hotels a run for their money, with spotless attached rooms, some with a/c and all with 24hr hot water. ₹₹

Shiv Chhathi Bari, near ST bus stand 🌐shivhotel.com. Nicely decorated central lobby area and good, basic modern rooms, all with LCD TV. There's no on-site restaurant but the helpful staff will order a takeaway from a nearby restaurant and bring it to your bedroom. ₹₹

EATING STATION RD IS THE PLACE TO PICK UP THE LOCAL SNACK, DABELI (SPICED LENTILS AND PEANUTS IN A BUN). THE PRINCE HOTEL HAS A WINE SHOP AND CAN PROVIDE ALCOHOL PERMITS.

Gopi's – The Bite Bazaar ST Rd, 100m west of ST bus stand ☎099 7959 5293. With cosy blue booths and plenty of fans, this tiny creamery serves floats, faloodas, slushies and genuine thick milkshakes A welcome retreat from the bustle of Bhuj's busy centre. Daily 10am–10.30pm. ₹

Green Rock ST Rd, opposite Gopi's ☎028 3225 3644. Smart a/c restaurant with photos of Bollywood and cricket stars on the walls and an all-veg menu of North and South Indian, Chinese and Western dishes. Lunch thalis are a bargain too. Daily 11am–3pm & 7–10.30pm. ₹

Jesal/Toral Prince hotel, Station Rd. If you're feeling homesick, you'll enjoy the fish fingers and beans on toast at Jesal. They also serve interesting north Indian fish dishes, plus veg and non-veg Indian and Chinese staples. Toral, meanwhile, offers a lavish all-you-can-eat Gujarati thali. Daily Jesal 7am–3pm & 7–11pm; Toral 11.30am–3pm & 7.30–11.30pm. ₹₹

Nilam Opposite Prince hotel, Station Rd ☎028 3222 4786. Courteous staff serve excellent veg Indian and Chinese food – the sweetcorn and green pepper masala is recommended – plus inexpensive breakfasts and a vegetarian kebab special loved by the locals and veg thali Daily 11am–10pm. ₹₹

Park View NK Tower, ST Rd ☎028 3222 5655. Over-looking Bhuj's busiest street, this plush and popular a/c restaurant serves Punjabi, South Indian, Chinese and Mexican cuisine, to name just a few. The mouth-watering thalis here may well be the best deal in Bhuj while the Kaju curry is also fantastic. Daily 11am–11pm. ₹₹₹

Around Bhuj Bhuj is a useful base for visiting outlying craft villages. From Mandvi, Mundra and Kandla on the coast to Hodka, Dhordo and Khavda to the north, Kutch's ethnic diversity, including Rabari, Ahir, Jat, Muthwa, Harijan and Rajput communities, is reflected in its wide-ranging handicrafts. As well as the local villages, sights of interest include the ancient sights of Dholavira, the Khanpatha monastery at Than and, of course, the vast and desolate salt flats also known as the Great Rann of Kutch.

KUTCHI HANDICRAFTS KUTCH HAS LONG BEEN RENOWNED FOR ITS DISTINCTIVE TRADITIONAL CRAFTS, PARTICULARLY ITS EMBROIDERY, PRACTISED BY PASTORAL GROUPS LIKE HINDU RABARIS AND AHIRS, AND MUSLIM JATS AND MUTHWAS, AS WELL AS MIGRANTS FROM SINDH INCLUDING THE SODHA RAJPUTS AND MEGHWAL HARIJANS. TRADITIONALLY, EACH COMMUNITY HAS ITS OWN STITCHES AND PATTERNS, THOUGH THESE DISTINCTIONS ARE BECOMING LESS APPARENT WITH TIME.

The northern villages of Dhordo, Khavda and Hodko are home to the few remaining communities of leather embroiderers, who stitch flower, peacock and fish motifs onto bags, fans, horse belts, wallets, cushion covers and mirror frames. Dhordo is also known for its woodcarving, while Khavda is one of the last villages to continue the printing method known as ajrakh. Cloth is dyed with natural pigments in a lengthy process similar to batik, but instead of wax, a mixture of lime and gum is used to resist the dye in certain parts of the cloth when new colours are added. Women in Khavda also paint terracotta pots.

Rogan painting is practised by only a few artisans at Nirona in northern Kutch. A complex process turns hand-pounded castor oil into coloured dyes that are used to decorate cushion covers, bedspreads and curtains with simple geometric patterns. Craftsmen also make melodic bells (once used as a communication system by shepherds) coated in intricate designs of copper and brass. Silver jewellery is common, featuring in most traditional Kutchi costumes, but Kutchi silver engraving, traditionally practised in Bhuj, is a dwindling art form. The anklets, earrings, nose rings, bangles and necklaces are similar to those seen in Rajasthan; many are made by the Ahir and Rabari communities living in both areas. The main centres for silver are Anjar, Bhuj, Mandvi and Mundra.

Kutchi clothes are distinctive not only for their fine embroidery and bold designs. The most common form of cloth printing is bandhani (tie-dye), a practice concentrated in Mandvi and Anjar. Another unique craft is ilacha (mashroo-weaving), a combination of dyeing and weaving with silk yarn to create designs so detailed and complex as to appear embroidered.

In recent times, the future of many local craft centres has become doubtful, especially since the post-earthquake reconstruction of Bhuj and its surrounds. The consequent creation of many largely unskilled labouring jobs, with higher wages, lured many workers away from handicraft making. NGOs like Kala Raksha are striving to keep local traditions alive.

GETTING AROUND BY PUBLIC TRANSPORT AROUND BHUJ VILLAGES ARE BEST REACHED BY PRIVATE TRANSPORT;

INFREQUENT BUSES RUN FROM BHUJ TO DHORDO (2 DAILY) AND KHAVDA (4 DAILY).

Taxi and motorbike rental Exploring the area by taxi or motorcycle gives you the most freedom. Most hotels in Bhuj will organize motorbike rental, though many bikes are in a poor state of repair; a better bet is MK Auto (Mon–Sat 10am–8pm; ☎098 9898 3999; approximately ₹8000/day with ₹5000 refundable deposit), a motorbike rental place a few metres west of Green Rock.

Permits Permits are required for many of the outlying villages, and are available for free from the District Superintendent of Police's Office on Ghanshyam Nagar in Bhuj, a 5min walk southeast of the Hamirsar Tank (Mon–Sat 11am–2pm & 3–6pm); the process takes about 15min. Bring photocopies of your passport and visa as well as the originals. In the off-season, you'll need to go to the Bhirandiyara police post (Mon–Sat 9am–6pm) for your permit. It's 50km north of Bhuj, marking the junction where the road turns northwest for Hodka and north for Khavda.

Tours For advice on where to visit, talk to Pramod Jethi, who runs tours to the craft villages (₹1400 by car; ₹200 by auto-rickshaw). Ral Laxmi Tours & Travels on Kansara Bazar Rd (Mon–Sat 9am–9pm; ☎094 0883 7409) offers a range of regional tours.

Mandvi The compact town of MANDVI, situated on the west bank of a wide tidal estuary, 60km southwest of Bhuj, faces the Arabian Sea to the south and supports a dwindling dhow-building industry. Merchants, seamen and later the British settled in this once-flourishing port; though few remained long, they left behind grand European-style mansions. Today, Mandvi has a leisurely feel, its cluttered shops and markets stocked with bandhani and silver. Shifting sands block the estuary along on its south side, forming a long, uncrowded beach that is good for swimming. By the estuary, you can see dhows being built by hand: around fifty men spend two years building each ship, the largest of which cost upwards of US$500,000, and are bought by wealthy Gulf Arabs.

Vijay Vilas Palace 8km west of town (turn left after 4km) • Daily 9am–1pm & 3–6pm • Charge plus extra for camera and video Mandvi's Vijay Vilas Palace is a sandy-coloured domed building bounded by 700 acres of land, built as a summer retreat by Kutch's Maharaj in the 1940s and now often used as a film set or a wedding venue. Behind the decidedly worn facade, European furniture fills the high-ceilinged carpeted rooms, hunting trophies deck the walls and a grand stairway leads to the ladies' quarters on the first floor. The palace estate has a royal pavilion and a long private beach with a hotel (see below).

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS AND JEEP MANDVI REGULAR BUSES RUN FROM BHUJ'S ST BUS STAND TO MANDVI'S ST BUS STAND (EVERY 30MIN; 1HR 30MIN). SHARED
JEEPS (45MIN–1HR; ₹100) ALSO LINK THE TOWNS.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING HV BEACH HOTEL WIND FARM BEACH ● MANDVIBEACHHOTEL.COM. THIS LUXURY
HOTEL IS RIGHT ON THE BEACH AND HAS VILLAS WITH SEA
VIEWS. THERE ARE ALSO STANDARD A/C DOUBLES AVAILABLE, TOGETHER WITH A MULTI-CUISINE
RESTAURANT AND FREE LAUNDRY SERVICE. ₹₹₹₹

★Rukmavati Guest House On the waterfront near Bridge Gate ●028
3422 3558 or ●942 9040 484. Housed in a former hospital, this is Mandvi's best budget option: all rooms have private bathrooms with solar-heated water while some have a/c and nice balconies. There's a breakfast terrace, small library and friendly manager, Vinod Bhatt, who has loads of local information. ₹

Sea View Jain Dharmshala Rd, on the waterfront near ST bus stand ● 098 2537 6063, ●hotelseaviewmandvi.com. Although they don't exactly have "sea views", rooms at the front look straight out onto the dhow builders. Rooms and suites are decent and brightly lit by large windows; most have a/c. ₹

Zorba the Buddha First floor of Osho hotel, KT Shah Rd ●098 7919
4555. Set behind the old Bhid Gate downtown, this is the best bet for food other than the HV Beach Hotel, offering great service and excellent veg thalis Daily 11am–3pm & 7–10pm. ₹

Southeast of Bhuj The 50km journey southeast from Bhuj to Kandla, one of the busiest ports on India's west coast, takes you past dry scrubland. In the small village of BHUJODI, about 9km out of Bhuj and 1km off the NH-42 eastward, artisans weave thick shawls and blankets on pit looms dug into the floors of squat mud houses. You can buy their products from the small shop run by the Bhujodi Handweaving Co-op Society; then check out the Kutchi Art Gallery in town, opposite Ramdevpir Temple (daily 9am–8pm).

Further along on this road are the villages of PADDHAR, known for Rabari embroidery, and DHANETI, a centre for Ahir embroidery. Dhamadka remains a centre for ajrakh block-printing, although it has struggled to recover from the 2001 earthquake, after which many of its artisans were moved to the village of AJRAKHPUR. Around 10km east of Bhuj, Ajrakhpur is home to the enterprise of UNESCO Award of Excellence-winning Dr Ismail Mohammed Khatri (☎028 3229 9786, ✉ dr.ismail2005@gmail.com 🌐 megastores.com/), who can trace his ajrakh block-printing heritage back at least nine generations.

The first main town beyond Bhuj, ANJAR was the capital of Kutch until 1548. Badly affected by the earthquake, the town recovered much more slowly than Bhuj, with serious disruption to traditional craftmaking – Ahir embroidery, bandhani, batik and nutcrackers. However, things have improved now, and a crafts market is held here every Monday when Rabari people from more than 130 villages set up shop (8.30am–1pm).

North of Bhuj North of Bhuj are some of the most interesting craft centres in Kutch, their colours accentuated by an increasingly desolate landscape. From the village of BHIRENDIARA, 50km north of Bhuj, known for its embroidery and patchwork as well as its beautiful mudwork (liponkan) interiors, the road forks. To the northwest is HODKA, followed by DHORDO at the end of the road, each of which features a cluster of grass-roofed mud huts decorated with traditional clay and whitewash patterns.

Sumeraser Sheikh South of Bhirendiara and closer to Bhuj is SUMERASER SHEIKH, where NGO Kala Raksha (🌐 kala-raksha.org) maintains an archive of antique textiles, a handicraft workshop, a museum and a fixed-price shop. Most of Kala Raksha's participants are women from marginalized communities, and this is a great place to learn about local embroidery, tie-dyeing, patchwork and inlay techniques. Call ahead to arrange a tour.

Kalo Dungar 90km north of Bhuj • Private transport is best; weekend buses depart in the evening from Khavda and return early morning Kalo Dungar (the Black Hills), Kutch's highest point, rise 462m over the vast salt flats (or inland sea during monsoon season), offering unparalleled views of the Great Rann disappearing into the vast horizon – a truly edge-of-the-world vista. Pleasant pathways and viewing huts have been built along the slopes facing the Rann, and a 400-year-old temple nearby marks the spot where Dattreya, the three-headed incarnation of Lords Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva, once offered a band of starving jackals his own body as a meal (it regenerated itself as they ate). The priests here attract today's wild jackals with heaps of boiled rice offered as prasad, spilled onto a concrete platform at noon each day while visitors watch from a safe distance. For a donation, the neighbouring dharamshala also offers meals and lodgings to Kalo Dungar's trickle of visitors.

Banni Grasslands 50km north of Bhuj • Private transport is best; the Centre for Desert and Ocean (see below) offers pick-up from Bhuj Skirting the southern edge of the Great Rann are the semiarid Banni Grasslands, home to a vast array of birds, including flamingos, pelicans, cranes, painted storks and hornbills. Ecologist Jugal Tiwari of the Centre for Desert and Ocean (☎028 3522 1284, or ☎98252 48135 🌐cedobirding.com) organizes informative birdwatching trips in the area; the centre also sells local handicrafts.

Than and Dhinodar 60km northwest of Bhuj • Daily bus from Bhuj departs 5pm (2hr); return departs early morning The Siddha Shree Dhoramnath monastery at THAN is home to a Tantric order of Hindu sadhus, known as Kanphata (“split-ear”) after the heavy agate rings (kundals) they traditionally wear in their ears. This whitewashed complex at the foot of the hill encloses a handful of medieval temples, tombs and domed dwellings. Hardy travellers can spend the night in its dharamshala for a small donation. From Than, you can walk up a rocky ravine via an ancient pilgrims’ trail to the mountaintop behind (3hr return), where Dhinodar is the site of a small painted temple, home to a Kanphata yogi, Hiranath Baba, and his acolytes; take ample water supplies.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING

NORTH OF BHUJ

Devpur Homestay Darbargadh, Devpur village, 40km northwest of Bhuj ☎028 3528 3065 or 9825711852, 🌐 sites.google.com/site/devpurhomestay. A sandstone fort built in 1905 in the Kutchi (or Roha) style and converted into a charming homestay with fancy suites (non-a/c slightly cheaper than a/c rooms) and simple bungalows. Elegant courtyard, a tennis court and a vintage dining room (breakfast included in rates) plus car rental. ₹₹₹

Shaam-e-Sarhad Village Hodka village, 50km north of Bhuj ☎02832 654124 or 02832 296220, 🌐 hodka.in. This full-board resort is a sustainable tourism project run by the local Halepotra people. “Sunset at the Border”, as the name means, offers accommodation in bhungas (circular mud huts, ₹₹₹ for a couple including all meals) or luxury tents, all with attached Western-style toilets and some with a/c. The resort offers craft workshops, birdwatching excursions and trips to local villages. A permit is required to visit, obtainable from Bhuj’s District Superintendent of Police’s Office. Closed April to mid-Oct. ₹₹₹

Dholavira 250km northeast of Bhuj • Daily 9am–dusk • No video In the far north of Kutch, on an island surrounded by snow-white salt flats, the tiny village of DHOLAVIRA surrounds the remnants of a Harappan city, perhaps the fifth largest in India, which thrived six thousand or more years ago. Archaeological digs started here in the 1970s after a local farmer ploughed up a small terracotta seal. Soon, the existence of a major planned city with monumental structures, a palace complex and an extraordinary water management system was revealed. Until recently, the archeological remains attracted barely a trickle of visitors, but that changed in 2014 with the creation of an international running event, Run the Rann (runtherann.com), which is bringing in competitors in their hundreds.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS THERE'S A DHOAVIRA DAILY BUS FROM BHUJ TO DHOAVIRA, DEPARTING AT 2.30PM (7HR 30MIN) AND RETURNING AT 5.30AM, OR THERE ARE TWO DAILY BUS SERVICES FROM BHUJ TO RAPAR, WHERE YOU CAN TAKE A MINIBUS THE REMAINING 90KM. DUE TO THE INCONVENIENT SCHEDULE, IT'S BEST TO VISIT WITH PRIVATE TRANSPORT.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING TORAN TOURIST COMPLEX 1KM SOUTH OF DHOAVIRA SITE 098 2502 6813. THE SIMPLE BHUNGA-STYLE COTTAGES AT THE STATE-RUN TORAN HOTEL ARE DHOAVIRA'S ONLY CHOICE FOR ACCOMMODATION, ALL WITH ATTACHED BATHROOMS AND SOME WITH A/C WHICH IS WORTH CONSIDERING THE HEAT IN THE STATE, A BASIC CAFETERIA OFFERS GUJARATI THALIS. ₹

Little Rann Wild Ass Sanctuary Entrance to the sanctuary is near Bajana village, a 30min drive from Dasada • Oct–May daily 6am–6pm • Charge for vehicle and camera Spanning 4850 square kilometres, the Little Rann Wild Ass Sanctuary, a vast salt-encrusted desert plain that becomes inundated during the rains (July–Sept), is home to an abundance of wildlife, including the endangered Indian wild ass. Usually seen in loosely knit herds, this handsome chestnut-brown-and-white member of the horse family is capable of running up to 80 km/h. The sanctuary is also home to wolves, foxes, jackals, jungle and desert cats, blackbuck and nilgai antelopes and the chinkara gazelle. Large flocks of flamingos, pelicans and winter-visiting cranes can be seen at Bajana Lake; October to March is the time to see the migratory birds.

ARRIVAL AND GETTING AROUND WHILE THE SANCTUARY HEADQUARTERS IS AT LITTLE RANN WILD ASS SANCTUARY DHRANGADHRA NEAR ITS SOUTHERN EDGE, MOST TOURIST FACILITIES ARE AT DASADA, 70KM TO THE NORTHEAST. ALTHOUGH RECOMMENDED, HIRING A GUIDE IS NOT MANDATORY.

By train Dhrangadhra is linked by train to Ahmedabad (2 daily; 4hr) and Bhuj (5 daily; 5hr 15min). Dasada is 33km from Viramgam railway station, connected by regular buses and autos/taxis; from Viramgam there are frequent trains to Ahmedabad (hourly; 2hr) and Bhuj (4 daily; 6hr).

By bus Dhrangadhra is linked by buses to Ahmedabad (every 30min; 4hr), while buses from Dasada also connect with Ahmedabad (every 30min; 3hr), Patan (2 daily; 3hr) and Bhuj (4 daily; 6hr).

By jeep You can rent a jeep and guide (around ₹4000/day) to take a tour of the sanctuary from Dasada, Dhrangadhra or the resort hotels (see below).

ACCOMMODATION DESERT COURSERS ZAINABAD, 10KM WEST OF DASADA ☎099 9830 5501 🌐DESERTCOURSERS.NET. ALSO KNOWN AS CAMP ZAINABAD AFTER ITS LOCATION, THIS IS A FRIENDLY ALL-IN ECO-CAMP OFFERING COMFORTABLE THATCHED-ROOF KOOBA (TRADITIONAL HUT) ACCOMMODATION, ALL MEALS AND ONE JEEP SAFARI. HORSE AND CAMEL SAFARIS CAN BE ARRANGED (FROM ₹2000). THE CAMP IS ALSO HIGHLY INVOLVED IN NUMEROUS LAUDABLE SOCIAL AND CULTURAL PROJECTS. FREE PICK-UP FROM DASADA BUS STATION INCLUDED IN RATE. ₹₹₹

Eco Tour Camp Jogad village, 20km north of Halvad and about 45km northwest of Dhrangadhra 🌐littlerann.com. Among the best options for the Little Rann is wildlife photographer Devjibhai Dhamecha's excellent eco-camp close to Sumera Lake, on the very southern edge of the sanctuary. The camp offers full-board accommodation in their family home in Dhrangadhra, with all meals included. Safaris cost ₹2000/₹3000 for morning and evening respectively. ₹₹₹

Rann Riders 2km east of Dasada @rannriders.com. This eco-resort has twenty-eight a/c cottages with tiled or living roofs, a restaurant, pool, gardens, several inviting hammocks and a friendly and helpful owner. Accommodation packages include full board and the choice of a jeep, horse or camel safari. Free pick-up from Dasada bus station included in rate. ₹₹₹

Saurashtra SAURASHTRA, or the Kathiawar Peninsula, forms the bulk of Gujarat state, a large knob of land spreading south from the hills and marshes of the north out to the Arabian Sea, cut into by the Gulf of Cambay to the east and the Gulf of Kutch to the west. This is Gujarat at its most diverse, populated by cattle-rearing tribes in the countryside and industrialists in urban centres such as Rajkot. Fabulous architecture includes the royal palaces at Wankaner and Gondal, while one of the region's most flamboyant festivals, the Tarnetar Fair, comes to the town of Sayla in the autumn.

Rajkot RAJKOT is a typically sprawling, crowded and congested Indian metropolis. Founded in the sixteenth century, Rajkot was ruled by the Jadeja Rajputs until Independence, after which it merged with the Union of Saurashtra, and has since grown into a large industrial centre with a significant middle class. Best known for its association with Mahatma Gandhi, Rajkot has few tourist sights other than a museum and Gandhi's family residence in the old city, which is still home to a plenitude of typical Gujarati wooden-fronted houses with intricately carved shutters and stained-glass windows. It also makes a good base for day-trips to nearby palaces.

Kaba Gandhi No Delo Off Ghikantha Rd, 300m west of Sanganwa Chowk • Mon–Sat 9am–noon & 3–6pm, Sun 10am–noon & 3–6pm • Free • ☎028 1222 6544

The Gandhis moved to Kaba Gandhi No Delo from Porbandar in 1881 when the Mahatma's father accepted an appointment as the diwan of Rajkot state. Tucked away in the narrow streets off the old city, the house has several rooms lined with artefacts and pictures stringing together the story of Gandhi's life.

Watson Museum Jubilee Bagh • Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 3–6pm; closed 2nd & 4th Sat of month • Charge Named after Colonel Watson, a British political agent from 1886 to 1893 largely responsible for documenting Saurashtran history, the Watson Museum features a somewhat dishevelled collection of artefacts and artworks. Gathered from some of the region's erstwhile royal families, the displays range from Mohenjo Daro relics to medieval statues and manuscripts, nineteenth-century oil paintings and Indus Valley remnants.

Shri Ramakrishna Ashrama Dr Yagnik Rd • Daily: March–Oct 5am–noon & 4–9pm; Nov–Feb 5am–noon & 3.45–8.45pm • Free • 🌐 rkmrjkot.org

An unbelievably peaceful spot in the centre of the chaotic Rajputpara district, Shri Ramakrishna Ashrama is dedicated to the man, born to poor

Bengali parents, who in the nineteenth century became a religious visionary (paramahansa) and advaitya philosopher. The entrance is designed to resemble the Ajanta caves in Maharashtra, with four sculptured columns supporting a keystone denoting a shivalingam. Inside are murals showing Ramakrishna's teachings, a murti (statue) of the man himself, and steps up to a balcony with great views over the city.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE AIR INDIA RAJKOT (OPPOSITE GEB OFFICE, DHEBAR RD; ☎026 5233 0466) HAVE DAILY FLIGHTS TO MUMBAI. THE AIRPORT IS NORTH-WEST OF THE CENTRE (₹100 AUTO-RICKSHAW RIDE).

By train Rajkot's railway station is about 2km north of the city centre (₹100 by auto-rickshaw). Plenty of daily trains link Rajkot to Ahmedabad (5hr 30min), including the #19016 Saurashtra Mail (dep. 1.25am, arr. 6.40am, which continues to Mumbai Central (arr. 7.15pm). Several daily trains also head to Junagadh (2hr 30min) and Veraval (5hr).

By bus From the ST bus stand on Dhebar Rd there are regular state buses to Ahmedabad, Jamnagar and Junagadh. In addition, numerous private bus companies have offices clustered at Limda Chowk, each operating shuttles to private terminals on the outskirts of town: Eagle Travels (Ring Rd, opposite the Adani Hyper Market; ☎079 6155 5555, eaglecorporate.com) has comfortable a/c buses to Ahmedabad (hourly; 4hr) and Mumbai (3 daily; 11hr); and Jay Somnath (Gondal Rd, 50m south of the Telegraph Office; ☎99798 69669) has buses to Bhuj (daily; 5–6hr).

Destinations (private buses) Ahmedabad (every 30min; 4hr 30min); Jamnagar (every 30min; 2hr 15min); Junagadh (hourly; 2hr 45min).

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION RAJKOT'S TOURIST OFFICE (MON–SAT 10.30AM–1.30PM & 2–5.30PM, CLOSED 2ND & 4TH SAT OF MONTH; ☎028122 34507, GUJARATTOURISM.COM) IS IN BHAVNAGAR HOUSE, OFF JAWAHAR RD NORTH OF SANGANWA CHOWK, BEHIND THE STATE BANK OF INDIA.

Services The post office is on Sadar Rd, off Jawahar Rd, opposite Jubilee Gardens.

ACCOMMODATION BHABHA KINGSTONE PANCHNATH RD, OFF JAWAHAR RD 📞760 0071 000, 🌐
HOTELBHABHAKINGSTONE.COM. STYLISH PROPERTY, WITH EXPOSED BRICKWORK AND WOOD FINISHES, ACROSS FROM MKG HIGH SCHOOL. THE COSTLIER OF THE SIXTEEN
ROOMS COME WITH TUBS AND A/C. ₹₹

Galaxy Jawahar Rd, 100m north of Sanganwa Chowk 🌐 thegalaxyhotelrajkot.com. Sizeable a/c rooms with TVs – but the attached bathrooms could be better. It's on the third floor of a shopping complex.
Breakfast included. ₹₹

Imperial Palace Dr Yagnik Rd 🌐imperialpalace.in Rajkot's classiest hotel with lush gardens and large fountains attracts cricketers and Bollywood stars with their sophisticated rooms, a pool and fitness suite and an excellent restaurant. Rates include breakfast too. Wheelchair-accessible.
₹₹₹

Jyoti Kanak Rd, 200m north of bus stand 🌐hoteljyoti.net. Smartly decorated business-oriented hotel 500m from Shri Ramakrishna Ashrama. ₹
₹

Regenta RPJ Everest Park, Kalawad Road 📞 028 1616 7777. Located close to the Sacred Heart Syro Malabar Cathedral, this three-star property offers deluxe rooms of varying standards much like its other branches in the state. As part of the Royal Orchid group, the Regenta has a gym, a business centre and a multi-cuisine restaurant. All rooms have mini-bars and coffeemakers. ₹₹₹

EATING LOOK OUT FOR THE KATHIAWADI VERSION OF THE GUJARATI THALI, SPICED WITH GINGER AND GARLIC.
RAJKOT IS ALSO KNOWN FOR MILK SWEETS LIKE THABDI
HALWA AND THE SAFFRON-FLAVOURED KESAR PEDAS.

Dhola Maru Grand Regency hotel, Dhebar Rd 📞915 2433 497. Elegant hotel restaurant serving Indian, Chinese, Italian and Mexican dishes. The kitchen is an attraction in itself; you can watch cooks prepare your food through its glass walls. Daily 11am–11pm. ₹

Kitchen Stories Regenta, RPJ, Everest Park, Kalawad Road 📞028 1616 7777. Besides Italian, cuisines served here include Arabic, Chinese,

Mexican and Italian. The breakfast buffet costs ₹450 per head. Dinner is à la carte; mains include falafel, sandwiches and pasta. Daily 7–10.30am & 7–10.30pm. ₹₹

★Lord's Banquet Kasturba Rd 0940 9484 094. This efficient a/c place, serving superior North Indian food is where locals go for a treat. You can tailor the spiciness of your dish and even the crispiness of your roti. Paneer butter masala is the star of the menu. Daily 12.30–3.30pm & 7.30–11.30pm. ₹₹

Temptations Kasturba Rd 0281 247 5010. Next to Lord's Banquet and run by the same management, this classy restaurant offers Chinese, Italian, Indian, American and Mexican dishes as well as snacks and ice cream. Unique renditions of The Last Supper adorn the entrance.. Daily 11am–midnight. ₹₹

Sayla In August or September, the quiet pastoral town of SAYLA bursts into life with one of Gujarat's most unique and colourful festivals, the Tarnetar Fair. To a flurry of Barwhadi tribal songs, dances and battles of poetry in a sport known as duhas, the local men strut in colourful turbans and embroidered jackets, and sporting brightly decorated umbrellas. Tarnetar aims to celebrate youth, joy and artistry, and many of the bejewelled young women are there to choose their future husbands. As the tradition goes, women have first choice.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS SAYLA'S BUS STAND SAYLA LIES AT THE SOUTHERN ENTRANCE TO TOWN, 600M NORTH OF THE BUSY RAJKOT–AHMEDABAD HIGHWAY, 87KM FROM RAJKOT (1HR 30MIN) AND 135KM FROM AHMEDABAD (3HR). SEVERAL DAILY BUSES TO BOTH CITIES DEPART FROM HERE, BUT MORE FREQUENT CONNECTIONS ARE AVAILABLE FROM THE BUS STAND ON THE HIGHWAY ITSELF.

ACCOMMODATION BELL GUEST HOUSE OFF SAYLA ROUNDABOUT, NH-8A 097 2467 8145, ☎

BELLGUESTHOUSE.COM. BUILT BY SAYLA'S ROYAL FAMILY FOR BRITISH COLONIAL OFFICERS, THIS OLD BUNGALOW HAS BEEN CONVERTED INTO A COMFORTABLE HOMESTAY OFFERING LARGE A/C, ATTACHED ROOMS AND A FINE RESTAURANT. THE SHADY GROUNDS ARE HOME TO A GIANT CHESSBOARD AND AN AGED TENNIS COURT. ₹₹₹

Wankaner The small city of WANKANER is named for its setting at the bend of the River Machchhu (wanka means “bend” and ner means “river”). Overlooking the city from a hill, the flamboyant Ranjit Vilas Palace (₹200; call ahead to visit; 028 2822 0000) was home to the family that once ruled the state of the same name. Built between 1899 and 1914, it has an arched facade featuring a frenzy of architectural styles, combining Mughal domes with Doric columns, Victorian Gothic arches, stained-glass windows, chandeliers and Franco-Italian windowpanes that overlook the palace grounds, where stables are stocked with thoroughbred Kathiawadi stallions. The interior is at least as eccentric, with a stuffed animal collection that includes rhinos, Kodiak bears, several now-extinct Indian wildcats, and no less than seventeen tiger heads.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS WANKANER'S WANKANER BUS STAND IS IN THE SOUTHEAST OF TOWN; REGULAR BUSES RUN TO RAJKOT (EVERY 30MIN; 1HR). BE SURE TO CALL THE PALACE AHEAD BEFORE VISITING AND TAKE A TAXI THERE (₹100).

ACCOMMODATION ROYAL OASIS 2KM FROM RANJIT VILAS PALACE 📍 WANKANERHERITAGEHOTELS.COM. SPLURGE ON THE ART DECO SPLENDOUR OF THE ROYAL FAMILY'S SUMMER HOME, BUILT BETWEEN 1875 AND 1940, OFFERING FULL BOARD WITH SUMPTUOUS ROOMS, TWO FINE RESTAURANTS AND A SPACIOUS INDOOR POOL. ₹₹₹

Gondal Once the capital city of a Jadeja Rajput clan, GONDAL houses a handful of extravagant royal residences. All contain memorabilia from the life of the widely admired scholar-maharaja Bhagwat Sinhji, responsible for making Gondal one of India's most prosperous states. The city is now a centre for beadwork embroidery, handloom weaving, silverware, brassware and Ayurvedic medicine. Good places for shopping include the market on Darbargadh Road and the Udyog Bharati emporium.

Naulakha Museum Fort Darbargadh • Daily 9am–noon & 3–6pm • Charge with extra for camera.

Housed in a crumbling riverside palace, the Naulakha Museum displays various artefacts from Gondal's glory days, including the royal wardrobe and library and the weighing scale on which Bhagwat Sinhji measured himself against gold to be distributed as charity on his own golden jubilee.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS THE BUS STAND GONDAL IS NEAR THE CITY CENTRE, ABOUT 500M SOUTH OF ORCHARD PALACE; REGULAR BUSES LINK GONDAL WITH RAJKOT (EVERY 30MIN; 1HR).

ACCOMMODATION ORCHARD PALACE HUZOOR PALACE COMPLEX • HERITAGEPALACESGONDAL.COM. BUILT AS AN ANNEXE TO THE HUZOOR PALACE, THE CURRENT ROYAL RESIDENCE, ORCHARD PALACE WAS THE OFFICIAL GUESTHOUSE OF THE MAHARAJAS FROM THE LATE NINETEENTH CENTURY, DERIVING ITS NAME FROM A NEIGHBOURING GROVE OF FRUIT TREES. ALTHOUGH A BIT PRICEY, ALL ROOMS HAVE HIGH CEILINGS, FOUR-POSTERS AND PERIOD FURNITURE, WHILE THE PALACE ITSELF HOUSES A ROYAL CAR COLLECTION SPANNING A CENTURY. PRICE INCLUDES A GUIDED TOUR OF GONDAL'S PALACES. ₹₹

₹

Jamnagar The busy hub of JAMNAGAR in northwest Saurashtra, founded in the sixteenth century, was one of the region's most important princely states. K.S. Ranjitsinhji, who played cricket for England alongside W.G. Grace, ruled Jamnagar at the start of the twentieth century, replacing run-down buildings with attractive constructions that still attest to his prosperous and efficient rule. In recent years, the city has become the world's undisputed refining hub, with the Reliance Industries' refinery just west of town stacking up well over a million barrels of oil each day. Visitors come to Jamnagar for its fabulous mix of architecture and renowned bandhani (tie-dye), sold in the markets near the Darbargadh; from October to May, a small number use the city as a base from which to explore the diverse intertidal sea life of the Marine National Park (60km west; ☎0288 2679357), India's first national marine park, which encompasses 42 islands strung along 120km of coastline.

The Old City The most remarkable of Ranjitsinhji's constructions is Willingdon Crescent, the swooping arches of its curved facade overlooking the wide streets of Chelmsford Market and the old palace, the Darbargadh. In the heart of town, just off Ranjit Road, southwest of Bedi Gate, stands the late nineteenth-century Ratan Bai Mosque. This grand, domed prayer-hall, its sandalwood doors inlaid with mother-of-pearl, is the unlikely neighbour to a magnificent pair of Jain temples, both decorated with extraordinary murals. The more spectacular of the two, Shantinath Mandir, is a maze of brightly coloured columns. The outer side of the large dome over Adinath Mandir is inlaid with gold and coloured mosaic and both temples have cupolas enriched with a design of mirrors above the entrance porch. The temples form the hub of Chandni Bazaar, an almost circular market area enlivened by carved wooden doors, mosaics and balconies.

Ranmal Lake and around Some of Jamnagar's most interesting sites are set to the east of the man-made Ranmal Lake, at the centre of which stands the Lakhota Palace, an island fort built in the eighteenth century. It's only accessible from the north side, and upon entering you'll pass a guardroom containing muskets, swords and powder flasks, and the museum (Daily except Wed and 2nd & 4th Sat of month 10.30am–2pm & 2.30–5.30pm; Charge on the upper floor, which holds a mediocre display of paintings, sculpture, folk art and coins.

South of the lake stands the crumbling, circular Bhujia Fort, closed since becoming a casualty of the 2001 earthquake. To its northwest, on the edge of the old city, the Bala Hanuman Temple has been the scene of round-the-clock nonstop chanting ("Shree Ram, Jai Ram, Jai Jai Ram", a reference to Lord Rama being everywhere) since August 1, 1964, a feat cited in the Guinness Book of Records.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE THE JAMNAGAR AIRPORT IS 6KM WEST OF TOWN – A TAXI WILL BE ABOUT DOUBLE THE PRICE OF AN AUTO. AIR INDIA (RATHOD NIVAS NEHRU ROAD 📞 0288 2550211) OPERATES FLIGHTS TO MUMBAI (DAILY; 1HR).

By train The main railway station is 5km northwest of town. Regular trains connect with Ahmedabad (6–7hr), Rajkot (1hr 30min–2hr) and Dwarka (2–3hr). The # 22946 Saurashtra Mail departs at 3.40pm and arrives in Rajkot at 5.45pm, Ahmedabad at 10.40pm, and Mumbai Central at 7.10am. In the other direction, the #22945 Saurashtra Mail departs Jamnagar at 11.40 pmpm and arrives in Dwarka at 2.40pm.

By bus The bus station is 2km west of the town centre; an auto-rickshaw will cost around ₹70. When heading to Rajkot, buses can be hailed from outside the President hotel. Private buses leave from Pancheshwar Tower near Teen Batti: Patel Tours & Travels (📞099 2524 4252, 🌐 pateltoursandtravels.com) has buses to Ahmedabad (18 daily; 7hr) and Bhuj (5 daily; 6hr).

Destinations (private buses) Ahmedabad (hourly; 7hr); Junagadh (hourly; 4hr 30min); Rajkot (every 30min; 2hr).

INFORMATION SERVICES THOMAS COOK, OPPOSITE THE TOWN HALL, AND SEVERAL BANKS ON RANJIT RD, CHANGE MONEY. JAMNAGAR'S AYURVEDIC UNIVERSITY (🌐 AYURVEDUNIVERSITY.COM), 1KM NORTHWEST OF TEEN BATTI, RUNS A VAST ARRAY OF COURSES, AND OFFERS MASSAGE, YOGA AND MUD-THERAPY TREATMENT SESSIONS.

ACCOMMODATION ARAM NAND NIWAS, PANDIT NEHRU MARG, BEDI RD 📞0288 2551701, 🌐HOTELARAM.COM. PALATIAL WHITE BUILDING – ONCE THE HOME OF A SCION OF THE STATE'S RULING FAMILY – WHOSE BLUE AWNINGS GIVE IT SOMETHING OF THE FEEL OF A BRITISH SEASIDE HOTEL. ITS LARGE A/C ROOMS AND SUITES APPEAR NOSTALGIC FOR THE DAYS OF THE RAJ AND FILLED WITH EUROPEAN ANTIQUES, HAVE A FADED CHARM. BREAKFAST INCLUDED. ₹

Hotel Ashiana Third Floor, New Super Market, Bedi Gate Rd 🌐 ashianahotel.com Jamnagar's best budget option: spacious attached rooms with TV, some with carpets and a/c, set right in the centre of town. The helpful staff can arrange onward bus, train or air tickets. There is a restaurant where you can have some local specialities serving Gujarati food. ₹

President Teen Batti 🌐hotelpresident.in. A well-managed hotel, home to a/c rooms with wood-panelled walls and non-a/c rooms with somewhat grubby bathrooms. All have private balconies and TVs, while there's a currency exchange, a good restaurant and nautically themed decor throughout. Staff can organize birdwatching and sailing trips and visits to the nearby marine park. Free airport transfers can be arranged in advance. Opt for this only if completely strapped for cash. ₹

Punit Pandit Nehru Marg, just northwest of Teen Batti 📞028 8255 9275, 🌐hotelpunit.com. A popular place with a small but pleasant roof terrace and airy turquoise rooms, which come with carpets and slightly dated decor. ₹

EATING ★7 SEAS PRESIDENT HOTEL, TEEN BATTI 📞028 8255 7491, 🌐HOTELPRESIDENT.IN. IN LINE WITH THE HOTEL'S MARITIME THEME, WITH A PORTHOLE-LIKE DOOR AND PAINTINGS OF THE SEA, 7 SEAS SERVES UP SOME OF JAMNAGAR'S BEST NON-VEG FARE, WITH FISH CURRIES (MUTTON) SHEEK KEBAB, WHICH STANDS OUT; THE PINEAPPLE LASSI IS NOT TO BE MISSED EITHER. DAILY 24HR.

₹₹

Café Paradise Ranjit Rd 0288 267 0561. Look for the orange sign for this friendly, low-key restaurant, stacked with booths and offering a photo menu of Chinese and Punjabi meals, including chicken fried rice, biryani dishes and chicken lollipop. Daily 10am–11pm. ₹₹

Madras Hotel Old Station Rd, Teen Batti 02 88254 1057. A cramped dining room with separate, slightly more spacious a/c area, serving great Punjabi, South Indian, Jain and Chinese dishes, as well as fresh juices, ice cream and pizzas. Daily 10am–10pm. ₹

Sankalp First Floor, Dhiraj Building 0sankalprestaurents.com. This may be a popular chain with top cleanliness levels and serving southern dosas in quirky ways (some have chips and beetroot) but a combination of a dosa with a fresh lime soda certainly hit the spot. Daily 9.30am–11pm. ₹₹

Dwarka Poised at the tip of the peninsula, at India's western edge, DWARKA is one of Hinduism's sacred Charm Dham, or "four abodes", thanks to its legendary role as Lord Krishna's capital following his flight from Mathura to the coast. In vivid contrast to the arid expanses further inland, Dwarka is surrounded by fertile wheat, groundnut and cotton fields, while the city itself is a labyrinth of narrow winding streets cluttered with crumbling temples. Today, these still resonate with the bustle of saffron-clad pilgrims and the clatter of celebratory drums. Dwarka really comes to life during the major Hindu festivals, especially Janmashtami (Aug/Sept), marking Krishna's birthday.

Dwarkadhish Temple 100m north of Gomti Ghat • Daily 7am–12.30pm & 5–9.30pm • No camera nor video camera Jagat Mandir, the elaborately carved tower of the sixteenth-century Dwarkadhish Temple, looms 78m over the town, comprising five storeys and 72 pillars while hoisting a giant flag made from more than 46m of cloth. It is believed that the original structure was built 2500 years ago by Vajranabha, Krishna's grandson, and that it has been destroyed by raging seas and rebuilt no less than six times. Non-Hindus may be required to sign a form declaring respect for the religion before they enter.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN THE RAILWAY DWARKA STATION IS 2KM NORTHEAST OF TOWN. SEVERAL DAILY TRAINS CONNECT JAMNAGAR (16 DAILY; 2–3HR) AND RAJKOT (12 DAILY; 3HR 50MIN–5HR), WHILE AT LEAST ONE DAILY TRAIN GOES TO AHMEDABAD (9HR). THE # 22946 SAURASHTRA MAIL DEPARTS DAILY AT 1.35PM, TRAVELLING TO JAMNAGAR (ARR. 3.40PM), RAJKOT (ARR. 5.45PM), AHMEDABAD (ARR. 10.40PM) AND MUMBAI CENTRAL (ARR. 7.10AM).

By bus The bus stand is a 10min walk north of the old city centre on the Okha Rd. More comfortable private bus companies have offices along Bhadrakali Rd, among them Shiv Shakti Travels (opposite Guruprerna hotel; ☎02892 234601, 🌐shivshaktibus.com), which has buses to Jamnagar (hourly; 3hr), Rajkot (hourly; 5hr) and Bhuj (7.30pm daily; 11hr).

Destinations (from the main stand) Jamnagar (4 daily; 3hr); Porbandar (3 daily; 3hr); Veraval (daily; 8hr).

INFORMATION AND TOURS TOURS DWARKA DARSHAN (VEGETABLE MARKET; ☎02892 234093) RUNS TOURS (8AM & 2PM; ₹100) TO THE UNDERGROUND JYOTIRLINGA AT THE NAGESHWAR TEMPLE, 16KM FROM DWARKA.

Services There are several banks with ATMs along Bhadrakali Rd.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING DWARKADHISH LORDS ECO INN NEAR GAYATRI TEMPLE, DWARKA BEACH SEA FRONT, 🌐 LORDSHOTELS.COM CLEAN, SEA-FACING LARGE ROOMS, WITH IN-ROOM DINING FACILITIES. A ROOMS HAVE A/C. A GENEROUS VEGETARIAN BUFFET BREAKFAST IS INCLUDED.

₹₹

Shreenath Dining Hall Teen Bati chok 📞95742 07070. Small but extremely popular diner serving all-veg regional Gujarati meals, including excellent chaas (buttermilk). Daily 11am–11pm. ₹

Shri Dwarkesh Bhojnalay Next to HDFC, Bhadrakali Rd. A hole-in-the-wall thali joint offering fantastic Gujarati food for those on a tight budget. Daily 11am–2pm & 6–10pm. ₹

Tulsi Opposite Dr Ambadker Statue, Bhadrakali Rd 📞028 9223 5232. A bland business hotel with mostly clean and modern a/c and fan-cooled rooms with TVs. Hot water 5–10am only. ₹₹

Porbandar Despite its links to legends of Krishna, PORBANDAR, once an international port and princely state capital, owes the bulk of its fame to Mahatma Gandhi, born here in 1869. Today, shrouded in a dim haze of excretions from the cement and chemical factories on its outskirts, the town is pretty grimy, despite the flow of remittances from its many emigrants overseas. Still, the Gandhi connection isn't Porbandar's only draw. Several lavish palaces are strung along the coast near the city's Chowpatty Seaface, including Daria Rajmahal Palace, now a college, and Huzoor Palace, occupied by the descendants of the former maharaja when they visit from London. An impressive old arched pavilion, Grishmabhawan, built for eighteenth-century poet Maharaja Sartanji, stands near the bus stand, while Porbandar's lake is a designated bird sanctuary (although you're more likely to spot flamingos – along with dhow-builders – at the creeks along the coast than here). Meanwhile, more than a thousand whale sharks visit the coast each year near Porbandar and Veraval: the Wildlife Trust of India (wti.org.in) can help organize dives or trips on research boats.

MAHATMA GANDHI – INDIA’S GREAT SOUL
GUJARAT’S MOST FAMOUS SON, MOHANDAS
KARAMCHAND GANDHI, WAS BORN ON OCTOBER 2,
1869, IN PORBANDAR. ALTHOUGH MERCHANTS BY CASTE – GANDHI MEANS GROCER – BOTH HIS GRANDFATHER AND FATHER ROSE TO POSITIONS
OF POLITICAL INFLUENCE. YOUNG MOHANDAS
WAS SHY AND SICKLY, JUST AN AVERAGE SCHOLAR,
BUT FROM EARLY ON HE QUESTIONED THE CODES
OF POWER AROUND HIM, EVEN FLOUTING
ACCEPTED HINDU PRACTICE: HE ONCE ATE MEAT FOR A YEAR BELIEVING IT WOULD GIVE HIM THE PHYSICAL EDGE THE BRITISH APPEARED TO POSSESS. AS A TEENAGER, HE BEGAN TO DEVELOP AN INTEREST IN SPIRITUALITY, PARTICULARLY THE JAIN PRINCIPLE OF AHIMSA (NONVIOLENCE).

At 19, he moved to London to study law, outwardly adopting the appearance and manners of an Englishman while obeying his mother’s wish that he resist meat, alcohol and women. Studying the Bible alongside the Bhagavad Gita, he came to view different religions as a collective source of truth from which all could draw spiritual inheritance.

After a brief spell back in India, Gandhi left again to practise law in South Africa. The plight of his fellow Indians there, coupled with his own indignation at being ejected from a first-class train carriage, fuelled his campaigns for racial equality. Gaining crucial victories for minorities against the usage of indentured labour, his public profile grew. At this time, he opted to transcend material possessions, donning the peasant’s hand-spun dhoti and shawl and taking a vow of celibacy. This turn to ascetic purity he characterised as satyagraha, derived from Sanskrit ideas of “truth” and “firmness”; it would become the touchstone of passive resistance.

Returning to India with his messianic reputation well established – the poet Tagore named him “Mahatma” (Great Soul) – Gandhi travelled the country campaigning for swaraj (home rule). He also worked tirelessly for the rights of women and untouchables, whom he called Harijans (children of God), and founded an ashram at Sabarmati outside Ahmedabad where these principles were upheld. Gandhi stepped up his activities in the wake of the brutal massacre of protesters at Amritsar, leading a series of self-sufficiency drives during the 1920s, which culminated in the great salt march from Ahmedabad to Dandi in 1930. This month-long 386km journey led a swelling band of followers to the coast, where salt was made in defiance of the British monopoly on production. It drew worldwide attention: although Gandhi was promptly imprisoned, British resolve was seen to have weakened. On his release, he was invited to a round-table meeting in London to discuss home rule. The struggle continued for several years and Gandhi served more time in jail, his wife Kasturba dying by his side in 1944.

As the nationalist movement gained strength, Gandhi grew more concerned about the state of Hindu-Muslim relations. He responded to outbreaks of communal violence by subjecting his own body to self-purification and suffering through fasting. After Independence, Partition left him with a deep sense of failure. In a bid to stem the ensuing violence, he again fasted in Calcutta as large numbers of Hindus and Muslims flowed between the new countries. Gandhi's commitment to the fair treatment of Muslim Indians and his intention to visit and endorse Pakistan as a neighbour enraged many Hindu fundamentalists. He survived an attempt on his life on January 20, 1948, only to be shot dead from close range by a lone gunman, nationalist Nathuram Godse, in Delhi ten days later. Prime minister Jawaharlal Nehru announced the loss on national radio: "Friends and comrades, the light has gone out of our lives and there is darkness everywhere."

Gandhi's birthplace Near Manek Chowk, Kasturba Rd • Daily 10am–noon & 3–6.30pm • Free but guides expect small donation Porbandar's biggest attraction is Gandhi's birthplace, an old three-storey haveli. A floral swastika on the floor marks the exact point where he was born. Faded traces of old paintings adorn some of the walls in the reading and prayer rooms on the upper floors, but little else remains. The neighbouring Kirti Mandir, completed in 1950, is a memorial to Gandhi and his wife Kasturba, blending various religious architectural styles and displaying photographs and artefacts from the Mahatma's life.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE PORBANDAR PORBANDAR'S AIRPORT IS 7KM EAST OF TOWN (LESS THAN ONE HUNDRED RUPEE AUTO-RICKSHAW RIDE). SPICEJET
HAS DAILY FLIGHTS TO MUMBAI (DEP. 11.10AM; 1HR 20MIN).

By train The railway station is 1km northeast of the town centre; the daily #19216 Saurashtra Express departs at 9.05pm, reaching Ahmedabad at 6.10am and Mumbai at 7.15pm the following day.

By bus The ST bus stand is a short walk south of the town centre. Private bus offices are strung along MG Rd; Shree Ramkrupa (☎078 7878 0702) and Eagle Travels (☎079 6155 5555, 🌐eaglecorporate.com), both with buses to Rajkot (4hr 30min) and Ahmedabad (10–11hr), are two of the better options.

Destinations Jamnagar (3 daily; 3hr 15min–4hr); Junagadh (3 daily; 4hr).

INFORMATION BANKS THE BANKS ALONG MG RD CHANGE FOREIGN CURRENCY, AS DOES JK FOREX (MON–FRI 9AM– 6PM), ALSO ON MG RD, ACROSS FROM NATRAJ.

Travel agents Thankys Tours & Travel (MG Rd, near Dreamland Cinema; ☎028 6224 7153) can book taxis, trains and domestic flights.

ACCOMMODATION LORDS INN CHOPATI RD 🌐
LORDSHOTELS.COM. ONE OF THE BETTER-VALUE MID-
RANGE CHOICES IN PORBANDAR WITH SPACIOUS A/C
ROOMS AND SUITES IN WARM COLOUR SCHEMES WITH TVS.
A THIRD OF THE ROOMS ARE SEA-FACING. ₹₹

Moon Palace MG Rd, 100m east of the main square, 🌐 porbandaronline.com/moonpalace. The rooms here, all attached and with TV, somehow have a European-holiday-home vibe; some have a/c. Clean, comfortable and good value; suites (₹1900) probably aren't worth the splurge. ₹

★Natraj MG Rd, close to Moon Palace ☎099 2533 3399, 🌐 hotelnatrajp.com. A notch above the competition: surprisingly cool, minimalist, fan-cooled and a/c attached rooms at bargain prices, plus cute suites and a fine restaurant, currency exchange. ₹

Silver Palace Silver Complex Rani Baug, just off MG Rd 0094 2955 0881. Another good choice despite the somewhat grimy entrance, with spotless fan and a/c rooms with TVs, fridges and various superfluous pieces of furniture, such as padded stools and mini tables. Some have lurid decor, so ask to see a few first. ₹

EATING MOON PALACE MOON PALACE HOTEL, MG RD 0028 6224 1172, www.PORBANDARONLINE.COM/MOONPALACE.

POPULAR RESTAURANT SERVING GUJARATI THALIS (₹120), PUNJABI DISHES AND WESTERN SNACKS. IT ALSO OPENS EARLY FOR BREAKFAST. DAILY 7.30AM–11PM.

National MG Rd 0098 7942 9988. This unassuming Muslim-run place serves delicious (but small) meat and veg meals to a steady stream of contented customers. Daily 8am–10.30pm. ₹

Natraj Natraj hotel, MG Rd 0099 2533 3399, www.hotelnatrajp.com. Run with the same style and quiet efficiency as the hotel, Natraj has an elegant, modern dining room and a varied menu of Indian and Chinese and even decent pizzas and pasta dishes – the last a real rarity for Gujarat. Dining is limited to the fast-food menu until dinner begins at 7pm. Daily 11am–11pm. ₹

Swagat MG Rd, 250m east of the main square. A relaxed, softly lit place that offers good-quality, reasonably priced Punjabi and south Indian veg dishes. It can get very busy at weekends. Daily 8.30am–3pm & 5.30–11pm. ₹

Junagadh (Junagarh) Little-visited JUNAGADH (or Junagarh) is an intriguing small city with a striking skyline of domes and minarets. Its lively bazaars, Buddhist monuments, Hindu temples, mosques, Victorian Gothic-style archways and faded mansions – plus the magnificent Jain temples on Mount Girnar, 4km away – make it well worth exploring. Because of the sanctity of Mount Girnar, the Shivratri Mela (Feb/March) assumes particular importance here, when thousands of saffron-clad sadhus set up camp in town. Fireworks, processions, chanting, chillum-smoking and demonstrations of body-torturing ascetic practices run for at least five days and nights. In addition, every November, up to a million people take part in the Parikrama, a three-day 36km walk around the base of Mount Girnar and the surrounding hills to Bhavnath.

Brief history From the fourth century BC to the death of Ashoka (c.232 BC), Junagadh was Gujarat's capital under the Buddhist Mauryas. The brief reigns of the Kshatrapas and the Guptas came to an end when the town passed into the hands of the Hindu Chudasanas, who in turn lost out to Muslim invaders. Muslim sovereignty lasted until Independence when, although the nawab of Junagadh planned to unite with Pakistan, local pressure ensured that the city became part of the Indian Union.

Chitta Khana Chowk and around Junagadh is fairly compact, focused on the busy market area around Chitta Khana Chowk. To the north, near the railway station, quiet wide roads lead past the majestic maqbara monuments, while to the south, congested streets surround Circle Chowk, a fine semicircular terrace between towering Victorian Gothic-style gateways. Nearby is the extravagant Durbar Hall Museum, while MG Road continues south to bustling Kalwa Chowk.

Maqbara MG Rd, opposite the High Courts Junagadh's chief Muslim monuments, the boldly decorated nineteenth-century maqbara (tombs), are unlike any other in Gujarat. These outstanding mausoleums blend European, Indian and Islamic styles, crowned with a multitude of bulbous domes. The most opulent tomb is the 1892 sepulchre of Mahabat Khan II, but more outstanding is that of Vizir Sahib Baka-ud-din Bhar, completed four years later and flanked on each corner by tall minarets hugged by spiral staircases.

Uparkot Eastern end of Dhal Rd • Daily except 2nd & 4th Sat of month 7am–6pm • Charge The imposing fortified citadel of Uparkot is perched on a thickly walled mound to the east of the city and colonized by eagles, egrets and squirrels. Legend dates the fort's origins to the time of the Yadavas (Krishna's clan) who fled Mathura to settle in Dwarka, but historians believe it was built by Chandragupta Maurya in 319 BC. Rediscovered and repaired in 976 AD by Muslim conquerors, it regained its defensive importance, withstanding sixteen sieges over the next eight hundred years. A grand sequence of three high gateways cut into solid rock during the Muslim occupation stands at the entrance to the citadel, spanning a cobbled walkway that winds upwards to the summit of the raised fort, where the fort-like Jama Masjid, converted from a palace by a conquering Sultan in the fifteenth century, stands abandoned with its unique octagonal courtyard. Climb up to the roof for superb views over the city and Mount Girnar.

The two fierce cannons opposite the mosque were brought here in 1538 after being used in Diu fort against the Portuguese in 1530. About 200m northeast, more than 170 steps descend to the Adi Chadi Vav step-well, believed to date from the fifteenth century. As impressive is the eleventh-century Navghan Kuva in the southeast of the citadel, consisting of a superb staircase winding around a well shaft to the dimly lit water level more than 52m below.

Buddhist caves 100m north of Jama Masjid • Daily 8am–6pm • Charge Near the Jama Masjid is a two-storey complex of monastic cells cut into the rock and arranged around courtyards. These Buddhist caves are the most recent of their kind in Junagadh, built in the third or fourth century AD. Worn traces of figurines and foliage can still be made out on the columns in the lower level.

Baba Pyara caves 100m south of Uparkot walls • Daily 9am–5.30pm • Charge Two clusters of Buddhist caves are found just beyond the walls of Uparkot. The Baba Pyara caves, hewn from the rock between 200 BC and 200 AD, consist of more than a dozen rooms opening to colonnades and a spacious courtyard, and were used by Buddhists until the time of Ashoka, then afterwards by Jains. Cut into a hill climbing towards Uparkot's southern walls, the caves are worth a wander.

Khapra Kodia caves 300m north of Uparkot walls • Daily 9am–5pm • Charge A little to the north of Uparkot the Khapra Kodia caves, of which only the uppermost storey has survived, are slightly older and plainer than the Baba Pyara caves on the other side of the citadel.

Darbar Hall Museum Post Office Rd, just west of the main entrance to Uparkot • Mon, Tues & Thurs–Sat 10am–1.15pm & 3–6pm, except 2nd & 4th Sat of each month • Charge with extra for cameras The Darbar Hall Museum takes up part of the former palace of the babis of Junagadh, offering an intimate glimpse into their lavish lives. Silver chairs in the great hall stand in regal splendour around a large carpet, valuable silver clocks encase scruffy stuffed birds, huge coloured chandeliers hang from the ceiling and a royal gallery displays old portraits of the nawabs themselves.

Ashokan edicts 2km east of town on road to Girnar • Daily 8am–1pm & 2–6pm • Charge A rock engraved with the Buddhist edicts of Ashoka, Junagadh's most famous monarch, remains where it was placed in the third century BC, its impact somewhat marred by a modern shelter and concrete platform. Written in ancient brahmi script, the worn verses etched into the granite encourage the practice of dharma and equality, and beseech different religious sects to live in harmony and repent the evils of war. Situated on the pilgrim trail to Girnar, Ashoka's edicts had a lasting influence: as late as the seventh century AD there were about three thousand Buddhists in Junagadh, and more than fifty convents. Sanskrit inscriptions on the same rock were added during the reigns of King Rudraman (150 AD) and Skandagupta (455 AD), while both Gujarati and English translations accompany them today.

Mount Girnar 6km east of Junagadh • An auto-rickshaw costs approximately ₹150-170

At more than 1116m, Mount Girnar, a steep-sided extinct volcano, is a major pilgrimage centre for Jains and Hindus, and has been considered sacred since before the third century BC. It's best to start the roughly eight-thousand-step ascent around 6am. The trail (6–7hr return), scattered with chai stalls, climbs through eucalyptus forests before zigzagging across the sheer rock face. On a plateau below the summit, the picturesque huddle of Jain temples has been renovated a little since its erection between 1128 and 1500. In the marble Neminath temple, the first on the left as you enter the “temple city”, Neminath, the 22nd tirthankara – said to have died on Mount Girnar after seven hundred years of meditation and asceticism – is depicted as a black figure in the lotus position holding a conch.

The final two thousand steps to the summit of Mount Girnar are worth the effort, offering breathtaking views. At the top, a temple dedicated to the Hindu goddess Amba Mata attracts both Hindu and Jain pilgrims. Steps lead down from this temple and then up again along a narrow ridge towards Gorakhnath Peak, where a small shrine covers what are supposedly the footprints of the pilgrim Gorakhnath, and further to a third peak where the imprints of Neminath's feet are sheltered by a small canopy. At the most distant point of the ridge, a shrine dedicated to the fierce Hindu goddess Kalika, the eternal aspect of Durga, is a haunt for near-naked Aghora ascetics who express their absolute renunciation of the world by ritually enacting their own funerals.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN JUNAGADH (JUNAGARH) JUNAGADH JUNCTION IS JUST OFF STATION RD, TO THE NORTHWEST OF THE TOWN CENTRE. THE SOMNATH EXPRESS #22958 DEPARTS DAILY AT 11.05 PM TO RAJKOT (ARR. 01.10 AM) AND AHMEDABAD (5.25 AM).

Destinations Ahmedabad (3–4 daily; 7hr); Delvada for Diu (1 daily at 7.15am; 6hr); Rajkot (11 weekly–7 daily; 2hr 30min); Sasan Gir (1 daily at 7.15am; 2hr 45min); Veraval (9 daily; 1hr 50min).

By bus The long-distance ST bus stand is 300m west of Chitta Khana Chowk. Mahasagar Travels (☎028 5262 9340), which has a bus terminal just east of Majevasi Gate, plus offices on Dhal Rd near the railway station and at Kalva Chowk, operates private buses to Ahmedabad (hourly; 7hr); Rajkot (hourly; 2hr 30min) and Mumbai (1 daily; 17hr); shuttle services are available from city offices to the main terminal. Services to Porbander leave regularly from the local bus stand on Azad Chowk.

Destinations (from ST bus stand) Ahmedabad (hourly; 7hr); Porbandar (hourly; 4hr); Rajkot (hourly; 3hr); Sasan Gir (6 daily; 2hr); Una for Diu (hourly; 4hr 30min); Veraval (hourly; 2hr 30min).

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION THE OFFICIAL TOURIST OFFICE IS IN THE GIRNAR HOTEL, NEAR THE NORTHERN MAJEVASI GATE (☎028 5262 1201) BUT STAFF AT THE RELIEF HOTEL (SEE BELOW) PROVIDE THE BEST INFORMATION ON THE TOWN'S SITES AND GIR NATIONAL PARK.

Services The main post office is 2km south of town; there's also a smaller branch on Post Office Rd near Azad Chowk. The State Bank of India opposite the Durbar Hall Museum changes dollars and sterling, and there are several ATMs scattered around town, including the Bank of Baroda near the local bus stand.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

If you're arriving in Junagadh during either Shivratri Mela or the Parikrama, it's advisable to book rooms well in advance.

Girnar 2km north of town, near Majevasi Gate ☎028 5262 1201. Run (without much enthusiasm) by Gujarat Tourism, the modern Girnar has reasonable, attached rooms; some also have balconies and a/c and there's a decent restaurant serving thalis. ₹₹

Lotus Station Rd ☎thelotushotel.com. A tranquil contrast to the dust and noise outside, Lotus is the town's smartest hotel. The swish rooms have marble floors and beige furniture, along with hot water, TV and refrigerator. Breakfast included. ₹₹

President Station Rd ☎028 5262 5661. Handy if you have to catch an early train, this place has acceptable attached rooms, some with a/c. The larger, more expensive rooms face the noisy main road, so opt for one facing the courtyard. ₹

★Relief Dhal Rd reliefhotel.com. Welcoming and extremely knowledgeable staff, clean and cheap attached rooms and a superior restaurant (in season) make Relief easily the best bet in town for backpackers. ₹

EATING

MAP

Jay Ambe Juice Centre Post Office Rd, 50m south of Circle Chowk, no phone; map. The place to come for fresh fruit juices, milkshakes and ice cream: don't miss the drinks made from Junagadh's famous kesar mangos and the sapodilla shakes (around ₹60). Daily 10am–11pm.

Modern Jayshree Rd opposite the Civil Hospital 028 5262 0928. An a/c dining hall serving bottomless spicy-sweet thalis (₹110). Tourists are unusual here, however, so you may have an audience while you eat. Meal for two will cost around ₹350. Daily 10am–10.30pm.

Patel Parotha House Jawahar Rd, north of Kalwa Chowk 098 9899 6023. A clean and busy a/c restaurant with big windows overlooking Kalwa Chowk, serving generous Gujarati and Jain thalis (₹120). Daily 9am–11pm.

Santoor MG Rd, northwest of Kalwa Chowk 028 5262 5090 or 9152669368. Delicious, reasonably priced Chinese, Punjabi and south Indian dishes (masala dosa ₹70), plus juices from locally grown fruit and milkshakes served in cosy, dimly lit booths. Daily 11am–11pm.

Veraval Midway between Porbandar and Diu sprawls the chaotic, congested fishing port of VERAVAL. While most visitors today use Veraval as a jumping-off point for the area's pilgrimage sites – such as Somnath, 6km to the east – it was also once a major port for hajjis en route to Mecca. The vicinity's various shrines to Vishnu and connection with Krishna – said to have lived here with the Yadavas – make it equally important for Vaishnavites today.

The city itself has little to hold visitors' interest, although its enormous fishing harbour, crammed with a dizzying number of colourful *dhow*s, is worth a look. A kilometre along the road to Somnath is Bhalka Tirtha, a modest temple marking the spot where Shri Krishna was fatally mistaken for a deer, taking an arrow wound while he slept on a deerskin. Beneath a tree planted in his memory is a marble statue of the reclining deity.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN VERAVAL'S VERAVAL RAILWAY STATION (☎028 7627 1411) IS JUST OVER 1KM NORTH OF TOWN. FOR LONGER JOURNEYS, IT'S OFTEN QUICKER TO CHANGE AT RAJKOT. THE SOMNATH-JABALPUR EXPRESS #11463 DEPART AT 9.50 AM, CONNECTING JUNAGADH (1HR 30MIN), RAJKOT (4HR) AND AHMEDABAD (8HR 30MIN). THERE ARE ALSO TWO DAILY DEPARTURES FOR SASAN GIR (9.45AM & 1.55PM; 1HR 30MIN-2HR) AND ONE FOR DELVADA (4.20PM; 3HR 30MIN), THE NEAREST STATION TO DIU.

By bus Veraval's bus stand (☎028 7622 1666, 🌐gsrtc.in) is on ST Bus Stand Rd near the centre of town, connecting major cities throughout Gujarat. Several private offices are set nearby, some of which offer overnight bus services.

Destinations Ahmedabad (6 daily; 9hr); Dwarka (4 daily; 6hr); Junagadh (6 daily; 2hr); Porbandar (4 daily; 3hr 30min); Rajkot (6 daily; 4hr); Sasan Gir (every 4hr; 1hr 30min).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING KAVERI 2ND AKAR COMPLEX, ST RD ☎028 7622 0842, 🌐HOTELKAVERI.IN. JUST TO THE LEFT WHEN EXITING THE BUS STAND, THIS IS THE BEST OPTION IN TOWN, WITH CLEAN, BRIGHT AND WELL-APPOINTED A/C (₹1500) AND NON-A/C ATTACHED ROOMS WITH TV. ₹

Divine Resort Somnath Highway Near Dari Toll Plaza 🌐thedivineresort.com. Just off the busy road, this hotel has surprisingly quiet rooms that are much more habitable than the entrance to the grubby complex would suggest, with views high over the highway and an outdoor pool. ₹₹

Somnath The town of SOMNATH consists of little more than a few streets between the bus stand and its giant temple, famed across India as the first of the twelve jyotirlinga of Shiva. The temple is visible from all over town, towering over a reclaimed beach, which now has a great market selling nautical trinkets and offering camel rides.

Somnath Temple Temple Daily 6am–9.30pm • Aarti (prayer) times: 7am, noon & 7pm • Photography prohibited • Sound-and-light show 8–9pm • Charge • www.somnath.org

Legend has it that the site of Somnath Temple, formerly known as Prabhas Patan, was dedicated to Soma, the juice of a plant used in rituals and greatly praised for its enlightening powers (and hallucinogenic effects) in the Rig Veda. The temple itself is believed to have appeared first in gold, at the behest of the sun god; next in silver, created by the moon god; a third time in wood at the command of Krishna; and finally, in stone, built by King Bhimdev, the strongest of the five Pandava brothers from the Mahabharata epic. The earliest definite record, however, dates the temple to the tenth century when it became rich from devotees' donations.

Unfortunately, such wealth came to the attention of the brutal iconoclast Mahmud of Ghazni who destroyed the shrine and carried its treasure off to Afghanistan. The next seven centuries saw a cycle of rebuilding and sacking, though the temple lay in ruins for more than two hundred years after a final sacking by Aurangzeb, before the most recent reconstruction began in 1950. Although very little of the original structure remains, the latest reconstruction follows the elegant style of the Solanki period, and merits a visit for its physical and spiritual grandeur.

Prabhas Patan Museum 300m north of Somnath Temple • Daily except Wed and 2nd & 4th Sat of the month 10.30am–5pm • Charge The Prabhas Patan Museum preserves the scant remains of previous constructions of the Somnath Temple. In addition to the array of carved stone statues lined up in the open courtyard, the museum's collection includes lintels, vials of sacred water, sections of roof pillars, friezes and toranas from the tenth to twelfth centuries.

Other temple sites Tongas and rickshaws gather outside the bus station, ready to take pilgrims to the temple sites east of Somnath. Most important of these is Triveni Ghat, mentioned in the epics of the Ramayana and Mahabharata. Also called Triveni Sangam, this newly renovated bathing ghat lies at the confluence of the Hiran, Saraswati and Kapil rivers where they meet the Arabian Sea. A dip in the waters here is believed to be highly propitious. Before reaching the confluence, the road passes the ancient Surya Mandir, the Sun Temple, probably built during the Solanki period and now cramped by a newer temple and concrete houses built almost against its walls.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY BUS AND AUTO- SOMNATH
RICKSHAW SOMNATH'S BUS STAND IS JUST A FEW HUNDRED METRES EAST OF THE TEMPLE. BUSES RUN TO VERAVAL'S ST
BUS STAND (EVERY 15–30MIN; ₹30). AUTOS WILL CHARGE
AROUND ₹100 FOR THE TRIP.

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING AASTHA KHODIYAR ST,
BEHIND CENTRAL BANK 094 2818 9792. JUST BEHIND CENTRAL BANK AND VERY CLOSE TO THE TEMPLE, WITH SMALL BUT CLEAN, TILED ATTACHED ROOMS, NON A/C AND ALL WITH TVS. ₹

Bhabha Restaurant Khodiyar St. The original Bhabha sits just outside the Aastha hotel, while about 200m east is a new restaurant with the same name and owner. Both are popular, friendly joints offering good breakfasts. Daily 8.30am–10.30pm. ₹

Mayuram Triveni Rd, southeast of the bus stand 028 7623 1286. The once-sparkling, tiled rooms here all have attached bathrooms and are among Somnath's best-value options but book ahead. **₹

Gir National Park Mid-Oct to mid-June daily 6–9am, 9am–noon & 3–5.30pm; late monsoons can delay opening until Nov • Six-person jeep ₹13,000 (₹5300) including permit (from park information centre or buy online), guide, camera and hotel pick-up and drop-off • www.girnationalpark.in

The Asiatic lion, which, on account of hunting, forest-clearance and poaching, has been extinct in the rest of India since the 1880s, survives in the wild in just 1150 square kilometres of the gently undulating Gir Forest. Gir National Park, accessed via Sasan Gir, lies 60km southeast of Junagadh and 45km northeast of Veraval, and boasts more than five hundred lions in its 260 square kilometres. The park also shelters around three hundred leopards, as well as sambar (large deer), chou singha (four-horned antelope), chinkara (gazelle), jackal, striped hyena and wild boar. The wildlife shares the land with Maldhari cattle-breeders, many of whom have been relocated outside the sanctuary. Those who remain are paid compensation by the government for the inevitable loss of their livestock to marauding lions. In 2008, it emerged that some tourists had been paying to watch lions devour tethered cattle in cruel – and illegal – “baitwalla shows”; if anyone approaches you about one of these shows, inform the park’s management team. Sightings of the lions aren’t guaranteed, although summer is the best time to spot them.

THE ASIATIC LION

The rare Asiatic lion (Panthera leo persica) is paler and shaggier than its more common African cousin, with longer tail tassels, more prominent elbow tufts and a larger belly fold. Probably introduced to India from Persia, the lions were widespread in the Indo-Gangetic plains at the time of the Buddha. In 300 BC, Kautilya, the minister of Chandragupta Maurya, offered them protection by declaring certain areas abharaya aranyas, “forests free from fear”. Later, in his rock-inscribed edicts, Ashoka admonished those who hunted the majestic animals.

The lion was favourite game for India’s nineteenth-century rulers and by 1913, not long after it had been declared a protected species by the nawab of Junagadh, its population was reduced to twenty. Since then, Gir Forest has been recognized as a sanctuary (1969), and a national park (1975), while the number of lions has swelled to more than five hundred. However, they remain under serious threat from poachers, while illegal timber-felling in the forest is still common. Three major roads and a railway line bisect the park, which also has four temples that attract more than 84,000 pilgrims each year; all this produces noise, pollution and littering. Moreover, when lions stray from the sanctuary – a common occurrence – there have been attacks on humans and livestock. Plans, meanwhile, to create another reserve outside Gujarat, possibly in Madhya Pradesh – to reduce the risk of the cats being wiped out by a particularly contagious disease or infection – continue to be resisted (for political rather than conservation reasons) by the state government. For more information, see Wasiaticlion.org.

Devalia Daily except Wed 8–11am & 3–5pm • Mon–Fri ₹2400 (₹150); Sat, Sun & public holidays ₹3000 (₹190) • Jeeps (₹250 return) leave regularly from Sasan Gir For a guaranteed lion sighting, head for Devalia, a partially fenced-off area of the park known as the Gir Interpretation Zone, just 12km from Sasan Gir. You get a surprisingly good impression of the lions “in the wild” here – they still have to hunt for their food, even if the deer have limited space to escape.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY PUBLIC GIR NATIONAL PARK TRANSPORT BUSES AND TRAINS CONNECT SASAN GIR TO JUNAGADH (2 DAILY; 1HR 45MIN), RAJKOT (2 DAILY; 3HR)
AND VERAVAL (2 DAILY; 1HR). FROM DIU, HEAD TO UNA AND THEN CATCH A BUS (2HR 15MIN).

Park information centre The park’s reception centre is in Sasan Gir village, next to Sinh Sasan Guest House (daily: mid-Oct to mid-Feb 6.30am–noon & 3–5pm; mid-Feb to mid-June 6.30am–1pm & 4–5.30pm; ☎ 028 7728 5541).

ACCOMMODATION AND EATING AMIDHARA RESORT OFF RAILWAY STATION RD, SASAN GIR ☎

AMIDHARARESORTS.COM. THESE FULL-BOARD LODGINGS ARE THE PLUSHEST TO BE FOUND NEAR GIR, WITH COMFORTABLE ATTACHED ROOMS AND PRIVATE COTTAGES (UP TO ₹₹₹₹). THE ATTRACTIVE GROUNDS INCLUDE A POOL, GYM, BILLIARDS HALL, BADMINTON COURT AND RESTAURANT. ₹₹₹

Fern Gir Forest Resort Sasan Gir, ☎fernhotels.com. With lovely gardens and pretty cottages that have wooden floors and cane furniture, this is among Gir's best options. There's also a pool and an excellent restaurant overlooking the Hiran River. ₹₹₹₹

Gir Birding Lodge 2km west of Sasan Gir, opposite Bambhafod Naka, girbirdinglodge.com. This full-board option has rooms in the main building and in cottages, complete with wood fittings and four-posters; there's also a fine restaurant. The hotel's friendly naturalist guide takes guests for birdwatching walks, too. ₹₹₹

Umang Off Station Rd, Sasan Gir, 100m west of Sinh Sadan 099795 53755. One of the better cheap hotels, in a convenient location, offering twenty bright but spartan attached rooms. ₹₹

Diu

Set off the southern tip of Saurashtra is the tiny island of Diu, just 12km long and 3km wide. Under Portuguese control for more than four hundred years, until 1961, it is now governed as a Union Territory from Delhi along with its sister city of Daman. The combination of relaxed atmosphere, historic charm, broad beaches and lack of alcohol restrictions makes Diu one of the most popular tourist destinations in the region. While its beaches are admittedly not as idyllic as Goa's, most visitors stay longer than intended.

Diu Town in the east is the island's main focus. A maze of alleys lined with distinctive Portuguese buildings form the hub of the old town, while the fort stands on the island's easternmost tip, staring defiantly out at the Gulf of Cambay. Along the northern coast, the island's main road runs past salt pans that give way to mudflats sheltering flocks of waterbirds, including flamingos that stop to feed in early spring. The route skirting the south coast passes rocky cliffs and beaches, the most developed of which is Nagoa Beach, before reaching the tiny fishing village of Vanakbara in the very west of the island.

Brief history The earliest records of Diu date from 1298, when it was controlled by the Chudasana dynasty. Soon after, it fell into the hands of invading Muslims and by 1349 was ruled by Mohammed bin Tughluq who successfully boosted the shipbuilding industry. Diu prospered as a harbour and in 1510 came under the government of the Ottoman Malik Ayaz, who repelled besieging Portuguese forces in 1520 and 1521. Aware of Diu's strategic position for trade with Arabia and the Persian Gulf, and having already gained a toehold in Daman, the Portuguese did not relent. Under Nuno da Cunha, they once more tried, but failed, to take the island in 1531. However, in 1535, Sultan Bahadur of Gujarat, facing pressure from both the Mughals and Portuguese, allowed Da Cunha to build a fort in Diu. Three years later an Ottoman siege of Diu was repelled, cementing Portuguese control of Diu. The Portuguese held sway for more than four centuries, making Diu one of the world's longest-held colonial possessions. They were finally forced out in 1961 by Nehru's government, which, after a swift bombing campaign, declared Diu to be part of India.

Diu Town Little Diu Town DIU TOWN is protected by the fort in the east and a wall in the west. Nagar Sheth Haveli, one of the grandest of the town's distinctive Portuguese mansions, is on Makata Road, hidden in the web of narrow streets that wind through the residential Old Portuguese District. Fishermen make daily trips from the north coast in wooden boats; their catch is sold in the fish market opposite the bus stand (daily 9am–noon).

Diu's churches Although the Christian population is dwindling along with the old language, a few old whitewashed churches in Diu's Farangiwada (Foreigner's Corner) are still used. Portuguese Mass is celebrated beneath the high ceilings and painted arches of St Paul's, widely considered to be India's most elaborate Portuguese church. To the northwest, the church of St Thomas now houses a sparsely stocked museum (daily 9am–9pm) and a guesthouse, while to the south, the church of St Francis of Assisi is partly occupied by the local hospital.

The fort East end of Fort Rd • Daily 8am–6pm • Free Diu's serene fort, built by Nuno da Cunha in 1535, still stands robust, resisting the battering of the sea on three sides and sheltering birds, jackals and the town jail. Its wide moat and coastal position enabled the fort to withstand attack by land and sea, but there are obvious scars from the Indian government's air strikes in 1961 – notice the hole above the altar of the church in the southwest corner. Now abandoned almost completely to nature, and littered with centuries-old cannonballs, it commands excellent views out to sea and over the island. Just offshore, the curious, ship-shaped old prison known as Pani Kotha Fort – connected to the mainland by tunnel, according to lore – is off-limits due to partial collapse, but when the waters are calm, passenger boats (there is a fee) circle the island from the port for a closer look.

Beaches Nagoa can be reached by bus from Diu Town – check with the tourist office for up-to-date details; Gomtimata Beach can only be reached by private vehicle. Cliffs and rocky pools make up much of the southern coast of the island, giving way to the occasional sandy stretch. South of Diu Town is the idyllic Jalandhar Beach; the larger Chakratirth Beach, overlooked by a high mound, is a little to the west, just outside the city walls. In many ways this is the most attractive beach and usually deserted, making it the best option for an undisturbed swim, especially for female travellers. At its western end, Sunset Point provides the regular spectacle of a golden disc sinking into the waves. The longest and only developed beach is at Nagoa, 7km west of town, where there are several hotels, but sunbathers, particularly women, are more likely to get hassled here. The often deserted Gomtimata Beach lies between Nagoa and Vanakbara, and is home to some of Diu's biggest waves.

Fudam Fudam, 3km west of Diu bus stand, 400m south of Airport Rd, is an attractive village of pale yellow and sky grey Portuguese houses. The highlight is the old white-washed church, known as Our Lady of Remedies, where a carved wooden altar with the Madonna and Child remains inside.

Shell Museum Just east of the airport on the Airport Rd Nagoa Beach Road • Daily 9am–5pm • Charge The Shell Museum is the vast personal collection – 42 years in the making – of Captain Devjibhai Vira Fulbaria, who spent a lifetime on the ocean picking up shells wherever he weighed anchor. With 2500 shells and detailed descriptions, this quirky, unexpected exhibit is certainly worth a look.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE DIU'S AIRPORT (📍 DIU 028 7525 4743), 6KM WEST OF TOWN, HAS FLIGHTS TO MUMBAI WITH AIR INDIA (MON–THURS; 2PM; 1HR 5MIN).

By train The nearest railway station to Diu is at Delvada, 8km up the Diu–Una road. From here, train #52951 Delvada Junagadh Passenger (daily 1110 am) departs for Sasan Gir (arr. 2.54pm) and Junagadh (arr. 5.10pmpm), while the slow #52950 runs to Veraval (daily 8.05am; arr. 11.20am), where there are daily trains for Ahmedabad.

By bus Buses remain the most convenient means of transport, and private buses are most often well worth the slight jump in price. Be warned that some buses may be inundated with drunken passengers on weekend nights, particularly on Sun. Services arrive and depart from the bus stand by the bridge in Diu Town, just a few minutes' walk to the west of town. State bus services run to Porbandar, Rajkot, Junagadh and Veraval; for Palitana, take a bus to Bhavnagar and change at Talaja. Private tour operators offer more comfortable buses to Ahmedabad and Mumbai. Far better transport connections are found on the mainland, at Una bus stand, connected to Diu by auto-rickshaws and buses (6.30am–8pm; hourly; 40min; ₹30).

Destinations Ahmedabad (daily; 9hr); Bhavnagar (5 daily; 6hr); Junagadh (8 daily; 5hr); Mumbai (6 daily; 19hr); Porbandar (3 daily; 7hr); Rajkot (5 daily; 7hr 30min); Veraval (10 daily; 3hr).

GETTING AROUND BY AUTO-RICKSHAW WIDELY AVAILABLE ACROSS THE ISLAND: ₹50 FOR TRIPS WITHIN TOWN AND ₹80 TO REACH NAGOA BEACH.

By bus DMC (Diu Municipal Council) buses depart from the main bus stand to Nagoa Beach at 7am, 11am and 4pm (returning 30min later), stopping at the airport along the way.

By bike or moped Numerous places near the main square, Bunder Chowk, rent out bikes (₹100/day), as well as mopeds and scooters (₹250–350/day).

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION THE TOURIST OFFICE, NEXT TO BANDAR GATE AT THE PORT (MON–SAT 10AM–1PM & 2–6PM; ☎028 7025 2653, 🌐DIUTOURISM.CO.IN), OFFERS LITTLE BEYOND MAPS AND BROCHURES. A–Z TOURIST CENTRE (DAILY 9AM–11PM; ☎098 2546 3245, 🌐ATOZTRAVELDIU.COM) ON VANIYA ST NEAR PANCHVATI RD IN THE OLD PORTUGUESE DISTRICT, OFFERS BASIC INFORMATION ON THE ISLAND AND CAN ARRANGE CAR, MOPED AND SCOOTER RENTAL, AS WELL AS TRAIN, BUS AND FLIGHT TICKETS.

Services The main post office is on the western side of Bunder Chowk (Mon–Sat 8am–noon & 2–5pm). The State Bank of India nearby exchanges money, while ICICI, Axis and State Bank all have ATMs.

ACCOMMODATION PRICES RISE DURING FESTIVAL PERIODS – PARTICULARLY DIWALI, HOLI AND NEW YEAR’S – WHILE IN THE OFF-SEASON THEY COME DOWN BY AS MUCH AS SEVENTY PERCENT (SOME PLACES MAY EVEN CLOSE FOR THE SEASON, SO CALL AHEAD). SOME PEOPLE, ESPECIALLY WOMEN, MAY BE PUT OFF AT FESTIVAL TIMES BY THE ROWDY ATMOSPHERE.

DIU TOWN, MAP

Cidade de Diu Off Collectorate Rd 🌐cidadedediu.in. A wedding cake of a building, with clashing paint jobs illuminated by neon lights at night; the rooms are thankfully more tasteful. While the cheaper options are a bit worn, all are brightly painted with hues of turquoise and white and clean – the more expensive rooms are much more spacious. ₹₹

Heranca Goesa Behind Diu Museum, Farangiwada ☎028 7525 3851. A handful of a/c and non-a/c, attached rooms in the very friendly Goan-style family home of Francisco and Alina: all are immaculate but those at the top of the house are the best. There’s a large, breezy terrace for sunbathing with a view of all three of Diu’s old churches. ₹

Nilesh Guesthouse Next to Bank of India, 50m south of the mosque ☎028 7525 2319. This is one of Diu’s best-value cheapies, with clean

although somewhat characterless rooms with TVs and balconies, some with a/c. ₹

Samrat Collectorate Rd 028 7525 2354, hotelsamratdiu.com. Samrat has the same owners (and similar clashing colour schemes) as Cidade de Diu, with which it shares a pool and bar. The pink and beige rooms here have TV and attached private bathrooms, while some also have a/c and balconies. ₹₹

Super Silver Super Silver Complex 028 7525 2020, supersilverdiu@yahoo.com. A warm welcome and clean, excellent value attached double occupancy rooms with TVs, some with a/c make Super Silver a safe choice with overseas budget travellers. ₹

THE REST OF THE ISLAND, MAP

Ganga Sagar Nagoa Beach 02875 275449. While it may be a bit of a dive, Ganga Sagar has budget tiled rooms (some a/c), a lively bar (sometimes a tad too lively on weekends), a restaurant, and best of all, a great location right on the beach. ₹₹

Kohinoor Airport Rd, 1.5km west of Diu town hotelkohinoordiu.com. Diu's first three-star hotel, this resort has a Mediterranean feel, with comfortable attached rooms, pool, Jacuzzi, restaurant, pastry shop, bar, gym and the Footloose disco. Breakfast is included too. ₹₹₹

Hotel Palms Kodhidhar Beach Nagoa 02875 275375 or 082389 63356 hotelpalms.co.in. Located in the touristy Kodhidhar Beach, the hotel offers economic and standard double bedrooms. It has a restaurant and wheelchair access; it is pet friendly too and offers great views of sunrise and sunset. ₹₹

The Palms Beach Resort Nagoa Beach 982 429 4048, thepalmsbeachresort.com. Formerly the Hoka Island Villa, all the good things about this place have thankfully remained unchanged. Pleasant hotel with seventeen enticing rooms, hammocks hanging in the communal areas, groves of palm trees, a small pool and a restaurant offering delicious fish dishes such as coconut prawn and tamarind fish curry. ₹₹₹

Radhika Beach Resort and Spa Nagoa Beach Rd, radhikaresort.com. This hotel with contrasting neon signs above a tranquil leafy courtyard remain a popular travellers' haunt for its quiet setting and service. Rooms are quite spacious and bright, and there's a bar, restaurant, 24hr hot water, balconies and views of the sea from the rooftop terrace. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Apana Foodland Apana hotel, Fort Rd, @apanahoteldiu.com. Large a/c restaurant with a garden terrace overlooking the sea, serving tasty north Indian cuisine and other specialities – the surmai fish tava fry, prawn biryani and grilled lobster stand out. Daily 7am–4.30pm & 7–11pm. ₹₹

Heranca Goesa Behind Diu Museum ☎028 7525 3851. One of the only places that serves Portuguese and Goan food in Diu. The seafood is excellent, and don't miss the delicious bebinca pudding, a rich, seven-layer cake made by the kilo on request. Lunch and dinner available only by booking in advance, but the restaurant is open regularly for breakfast. Daily 8–10.30am. ₹₹₹

O'Coqueiro Lane behind Cidade de Diu hotel; ☎982 468 1565. A family-run garden restaurant with hanging lanterns and palm trees, serving home-made muesli and yogurt, pasta dishes made with imported Italian olive oil and parmesan, and a handful of Goan- Portuguese options such as prawn curry. There's a slim selection of books and magazines to read too, and the friendly owners are very happy to strike up a conversation with diners. Daily 8am–9pm. ₹₹₹

★Shri Ram Vijay Just off Bunder Chowk (Main Square), no phone. A wonderful slice of small-town Americana transported to Diu Town, this tiny parlour started up in 1933, still serves home-made ice cream, sundaes, banana splits, cream sodas and milkshakes. Daily 8.30am–1.30pm & 3.30–9.30pm. ₹

Uma Shakti Behind vegetable market. This hotel restaurant and bar serves good breakfasts of cornflakes, toast or pancakes, as well as more substantial Indian or Chinese meals. The breezy roof terrace, with views over Diu Town, is a great spot for a sundowner.. Daily 9am–10.30pm. ₹

DRINKING AND NIGHTLIFE

MAP AND THIS MAP

The availability of alcohol seems to be the greatest Portuguese legacy in Diu. Expect to pay around ₹100 for a Kingfisher.

Casa Luxo Bunder Chowk (Main Square), Diu town. Caught in a bit of a 1960s time-warp, this is one of Diu's more welcoming bars. Tues–Sat 9am–1pm & 4–9pm. ₹

Footloose Discotheque Kohinoor hotel, Airport Rd, 1.5km west of Diu Town ☎028 7527 5301, 🌐hotelkohinoordiu.com. In addition to the welcoming, modern Rio Bar (daily 11am–3pm & 7–11pm), the Kohinoor hotel houses Diu's only nightclub, Footloose Discotheque, a/c with a spacious dance floor complete with flashy lighting effects. Sat & Sun 8–11pm. ₹₹

Bhavnagar The port of BHAVNAGAR, founded in 1723 by the Gohil Rajput Bhavsinghji, whose ancestors came to Gujarat from Marwar (Rajasthan) in the thirteenth century, is an important trading centre whose principal export is cotton. It has also produced a string of artists and writers, notably poet Jhaverchand Meghani. For Gujarati industrialists, it serves as the jumping-off point for the massive, controversial and booming ship-breaking yard at Alang. The yard, which employs twenty thousand labourers, has been off-limits to foreigners since Greenpeace red-flagged it for environmental damage, toxic spills and hazardous work in the early 2000s.

With few sights of its own, Bhavnagar is nonetheless an obvious place to overnight before heading southwest to the Jain temples of Palitana. The focus of interest is the old city, overlooked by delicate wooden balconies and the pillared facades of former merchants' houses, which boasts a fascinating bazar, clustered around the Becharaji railway station. The marble temple, Ganga Devi Mandir, by the Ganga Jalia Tank in the town centre, has a large dome and intricate latticework on its walls, while the Takhteshwar Temple, raised on a hill in the south of town, affords a good view over to the Gulf of Cambay in the east.

Gandhi Smriti and Barton museums Off Crescent Circle • Gandhi Smriti Museum Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 2–6pm, closed 2nd and 4th Sat of the month • Free • Barton Museum Mon–Sat 9am–1pm & 3–6pm, open on Sundays from 9 am-2 pm. closed 2nd and 4th Sat of the month

 • ₹50 (₹2) • 027 8242 4516

In the east of town by the clock tower, the Gandhi Smriti Museum exhibits old sepia photos of the Mahatma, who studied here at the Shamaldas Arts College & Sir PP Science Institute. Downstairs, the Barton Museum shows off a huge, haphazard collection of Buddhist, Jain and Hindu statues, medieval bronzes, Harappan terracotta and the odd skeleton.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE THE BHAVNAGAR AIRPORT (AAL) IS 5KM SOUTHEAST OF TOWN ON

AIRPORT RD, A TAXI OR AUTO WILL COST ₹150 OR ₹100 RESPECTIVELY.

By train Bhavnagar's railway station is a few hundred metres north of the old city, at the top of Station Rd. The #19260 Bhavnagar–Kochuveli Express train connects to Ahmedabad (5 hr 30 min) on Sun, departing at 7.15am and arriving at 12 50 pm while the daily Bhavnagar–Bandra Express #12972 departs at 6.30pm, arriving in Ahmedabad at 11.40pm, Vadodara at 1.47am and Mumbai's Bandra Terminus at 8.35am.

By bus The ST bus stand is on ST Rd, a 10min walk from the centre of Bhavnagar. Private buses are operated by numerous firms along and around Waghawadi Rd, such as Tanna Travels (☎027 8242 5218) at the Aristo Complex, with services to Ahmedabad (almost every hour; 4hr), Vadodara (7 daily; 4–5hr) and Mumbai (daily at 4pm; 13hr).

Destinations Ahmedabad (7 daily; 4hr); Bhuj (6 daily; 11hr); Junagadh (4 daily; 6hr 30min); Palitana (every 30min; 1hr); Rajkot (10 daily; 4hr); Vadodara (8 daily; 6hr); Velavadar National Park (2 daily; 1hr).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Bluehill Jasunath Chowk, opposite Pil Gardens ☎027 8242 6951, 🌐 hotelbluehill.com. Spacious, clean rooms with a/c, TVs, desks, fridges and cute separate seating areas. The more expensive ones, including the suites also have views of the stork-filled Pil Gardens. ₹₹

Nilambagh Palace ST Station Rd ☎027 8242 4241, 🌐 heritagehotelsofindia.com. Built in 1859 by a German architect for the local crown prince, Nilambagh Palace is Bhavnagar's most luxurious hotel, with vast rooms, peaceful gardens, a pool, tennis courts, and remnants of European influence in the chandeliers and period furniture. A separate annexe houses the less atmospheric but still good-value Narayani Heritage Hotel (☎027 8251 3535). ₹₹

★Sun 'n' Shine ST Station Rd ☎027 8251 6131 or 9879535103, 🌐 hotelsunnshine.com. The high expectations generated by the elegant green marble lobby are matched by swish rooms with carpets and bathtubs. Breakfast and airport transfers are included. Choose between deluxe and executive rooms and suites. ₹₹

Vrundavan Guest House Darbargadh 📞0278 251 9149. This rambling and, from the exterior at least, quite dramatic-looking hotel has tired attached rooms with tiny bathrooms and TV, some with a/c. It's not the friendliest place, however. ₹

EATING

MAP

Koyla Apollo hotel, opposite ST bus stand 📞027 8242 5251. A shiny orange dining area with glass partitions between the tables and a nice selection of Chinese, North Indian and Punjabi meals, but mainly non vegetarian. The butter chicken stands out. Daily 11am–3pm & 7–10.45pm. ₹

★Nilambagh Palace Nilambagh Palace hotel, ST Station Rd 📞027 8242 4241, 🌐heritagehotelsofindia.com. Superb and keenly priced dishes including chicken, mutton, fish and prawn curries. The real draw, however, is the atmosphere in the stately dining room and on the veranda, where the bustle of the city seems a world away. Daily 7–10am, 1–3pm & 7–10pm. ₹

RGB Sun 'n' Shine hotel, ST Station Rd 📞027 8251 6131, 🌐hotelsunnshine.com. Excellent vegetarian Indian Jain and Chinese food – the rich paneer dishes are particularly good – as well as ice cream sundaes. Staff are professional and happy to adjust spicing levels to suit personal tastes. Veg tawa masala is a must-try. Live music Sat and Sun. Daily 7.30–10am & 11.30am–11pm ₹

Tulsi Kalanala Chowk 📞0278 300 4942. Appealing veg Chinese and Indian food, including a comforting chana masala, and less appealing muzak are on offer at the quiet, relaxed Tulsi. Steer clear of the handful of Western dishes, however, especially the pineapple and vegetable macaroni. Daily noon–4pm & 7–11pm. ₹

DIRECTORY BANKS AND EXCHANGE THE STATE BANK OF SAURASHTRA AND THE BANK OF INDIA, BOTH ON AMBA CHOWK, HAVE EXCHANGE FACILITIES AND ATM.

Hospital The government hospital, Sir T Hospital (🌐sirthospitalbhavnagar.org) is on Dr Hemantkumar Vaidya Rd.

Post office The GPO is at 336 High Court Rd, with branches just off Station Rd a block south of the railway station, and opposite the southeastern corner of Ganga Jalia Tank.

Blackbuck National Park Velavadar, 65km north of Bhavnagar
• Mid-Oct to mid-June daily 6am–6pm • ₹350 (₹20), plus ₹1500 (₹200)/vehicle, camera ₹250, mandatory guide ₹600
(₹100) • ☎027 8288 0342, 🌐gujarattourism.com • No jeeps available to hire on site; taxis available by Ganga Jalia Tank in Bhavnagar – day-trips ₹2500

Outside the tiny village of Velavadar, the 34-square-kilometre Blackbuck National Park is Gujarat's own slice of savannah. Bounding through the tall golden grass, however, are not impalas but blackbucks, spiral-horned Indian antelopes of which the park has the country's highest concentration. Prior to Independence their number stood at eight thousand, but habitat loss and hunting cut this figure down to two hundred by 1966. The park's blackbuck now number well over three thousand, making it a laudable success story. It is also home to endangered Indian wolves, striped hyenas, nilgai antelope, jackals, jungle cats and Indian foxes, as well as birds of prey like Stoliczka's bushchat and harrier hawks, at least 1500 of the latter arriving from Siberia each winter.

Palitana For many visitors, the highlight of a trip to Saurashtra is a climb up the holy hill of Shatrunjaya, India's principal Jain pilgrimage site, just outside the dull town of PALITANA, 50km southwest of Bhavnagar.

Shatrunjaya 6km south of Palitana • Daily 7am–6pm • Free, but with additional charge for camera usage. Auto-rickshaws (₹90) run from Palitana's bus stand to the foot of Shatrunjaya (10min) More than nine hundred temples crown Shatrunjaya, said to be a chunk of the mighty Himalayas where the Jains' first tirthankara, Adinath, and his chief disciple gained enlightenment. While records show that the hill was a tirtha as far back as the fifth century, the existing temples date only from the sixteenth century, anything earlier having been lost in the Muslim raids of the 1500s and 1600s.

Climbing the wide steps up Shatrunjaya takes one to two hours, but, as with all hilltop pilgrimage centres, dholis (seats on poles held by four bearers; ₹1500–1900 return) are available for those who can't make it under their own steam. The views as you ascend are magnificent, and you should allow at least two more hours to see even a fraction of the temples.

The temple complex The individual tuks (temple enclosures) are named after the merchants who funded them. Together they create a formidable city, laid over the two summits and fortified by thick walls. Each tuk comprises courtyards chequered in black-and-white marble and several temples whose walls are exquisitely and profusely carved with saints, birds, animals, buxom maidens, musicians and dancers. Many are two or even three storeys high, with balconies crowned by perfectly proportioned pavilions. The largest temple, dedicated to Adinath, in the Khartaravasi tuk on the northern ridge, is usually full of masked Svetambara nuns and monks, dressed in white and carrying white fly-whisks. The southern ridge and the spectacular Adishvara temple in its western corner are reached by taking the right-hand fork at the top of the path. On a clear day the view from the summit takes in the Gulf of Cambay to the south, Bhavnagar to the north and Mount Girnar to the west.

A path leads along the ridge and down into the valley of Adipur, 13km away; it's open for one day only, during the festival of Suth Tera (Feb/March), when up to fifty thousand pilgrims come to Shatrunjaya for this unique display of devotion.

Shri Vishal Jain Museum 400m from the start of the steps to Shatrunjaya • Daily 10am–1pm & 3–8.30pm • ₹10, no photos The Shri Vishal Jain Museum displays a haphazard collection of artefacts, including centuries-old Jain idols, artwork and palm-leaf manuscripts, with a small temple set down the stairs towards the back. Despite being labelled only in Gujarati, the exhibits are worth the minuscule entry fee.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY TRAIN PALITANA STATION IS 1.5KM NORTH OF THE TOWN CENTRE, WITH FOUR DAILY TRAINS TO BHAVNAGAR (1HR 25MIN).

By bus Regular buses arrive and depart from the bus stand in the north of town, 400m north of the bridge.

Departures Bhavnagar (hourly; 1hr 30min); Junagadh (2 daily; 6hr); Talaja for Diu (hourly in the morning; 1hr); Una for Diu (daily; 4hr 30min).

Tourist information The owner of the Shravak hotel, opposite the bus stand, is a good source of regional information.

ACCOMMODATION TAKHATGADH DHARMSALA OPPOSITE SHRI VISHAL JAIN MUSEUM ☎028 4825 2167. A FEW HUNDRED METRES FROM THE STEPS TO SHATRUNJAYA, THIS THREE-STOREY DHARAMSHALA IS ONE OF PALITANA'S BEST DEALS, WITH NON-ATTACHED A/C AND FAN-COOLED ROOMS, MOST SLEEPING THREE, FACING ONTO A SPACIOUS, PINK COURTYARD. ₹

Vijay Vilas Palace Adpur, 4km from the bus station 🌐 heritagehotelsofindia.com. A good option if you have your own vehicle (auto-rickshaw around ₹100), the rooms in this converted 1906 European-style palace guesthouse have four-posters, old dressers and other early twentieth-century paraphernalia, some overlooking the western slopes of Shatrunjaya. There's a great veg restaurant, and an alternate path to the summit starts nearby. No wi-fi. ₹₹₹

EATING BHOJAN SHALA PARSHWANATH JAIN TRUST, BESIDE SHRI VISHAL JAIN MUSEUM. THIS LARGE DINING HALL ON THE GROUND FLOOR OF A FOUR-STOREY YELLOW BLOCK, DOUBLING AS A DHARAMSHALA (YOU'LL PAY DOUBLE FOR A/C ROOMS), SERVES GENEROUS AND TASTY JAIN MEALS. DAILY 7.30–9AM, 11.30AM–1.30PM & 4.30–6PM. ₹

Jagruti Restaurant Opposite the bus stand ☎942 627 1900. The best place to eat other than in Palitana's hotels, this basic but friendly and busy restaurant serves excellent Gujarati meals and snacks for pennies. No thalis but meals with roti and curry or dal chawal (rice with a hearty lentil-based stew). Daily 9am–10.30pm. ₹

South-eastern Gujarat Sandwiched between Maharashtra and the Arabian Sea, the seldom-visited south-eastern corner of Gujarat harbours few attractions to entice you off the beaten path to or from Mumbai. Vadodara (Baroda), former capital of the Gaekwad rajas, is most appealing for its proximity to the old Muslim town of Champaner and the ruined forts and exotic Jain and Hindu temples crowning Pavagadh Hill. Further south, dairy pastures gradually give way to a swampy, malaria-infested coastal strip of banana plantations and shimmering saltpans cut by silty, sinuous rivers, before reaching the former Portuguese territory of Daman.

Vadodara (Baroda) VADODARA, also known as Baroda, is congested and industrial but with a youthful vibe owing to the presence of Gujarat's largest university, Maharaja Sayajirao University (MSU). Although its old core retains some interest, with beautiful havelis, palaces and traditional bazars, its main draw lies in its being the most convenient base for visiting the nearby sites of Champaner and Pavagadh.

Sayaji Baug Entrance on Tilak Rd

Built and dedicated to the people of Vadodara by the beloved reformer Maharaja Sayajirao Gaekwad III, the sprawling green park of Sayaji Baug (also known as Kamati Baug) extends for 113 acres and contains two museums and a planetarium, an interesting zoo, a floral clock and vintage toy train. The large Indo-Saracenic Baroda Museum and Picture Gallery, reached from University Rd (daily 10.30am–5pm; Charge 026 5279 3801), originally built to resemble the V&A Museum in London, holds art and textiles from all over the world, plus Gujarati archeological remains and Mughal miniatures.

Laxmi Vilas Palace Nehru Rd • Laxmi Vilas Palace Daily 9.30am–5.30pm; audiotours (1hr) are available • Charge • Maharaja Fateh Singh Museum Tues–Sun 10.30am–4pm • ₹150 (₹30); no photography • 026 5242 6372 or 07227 939902

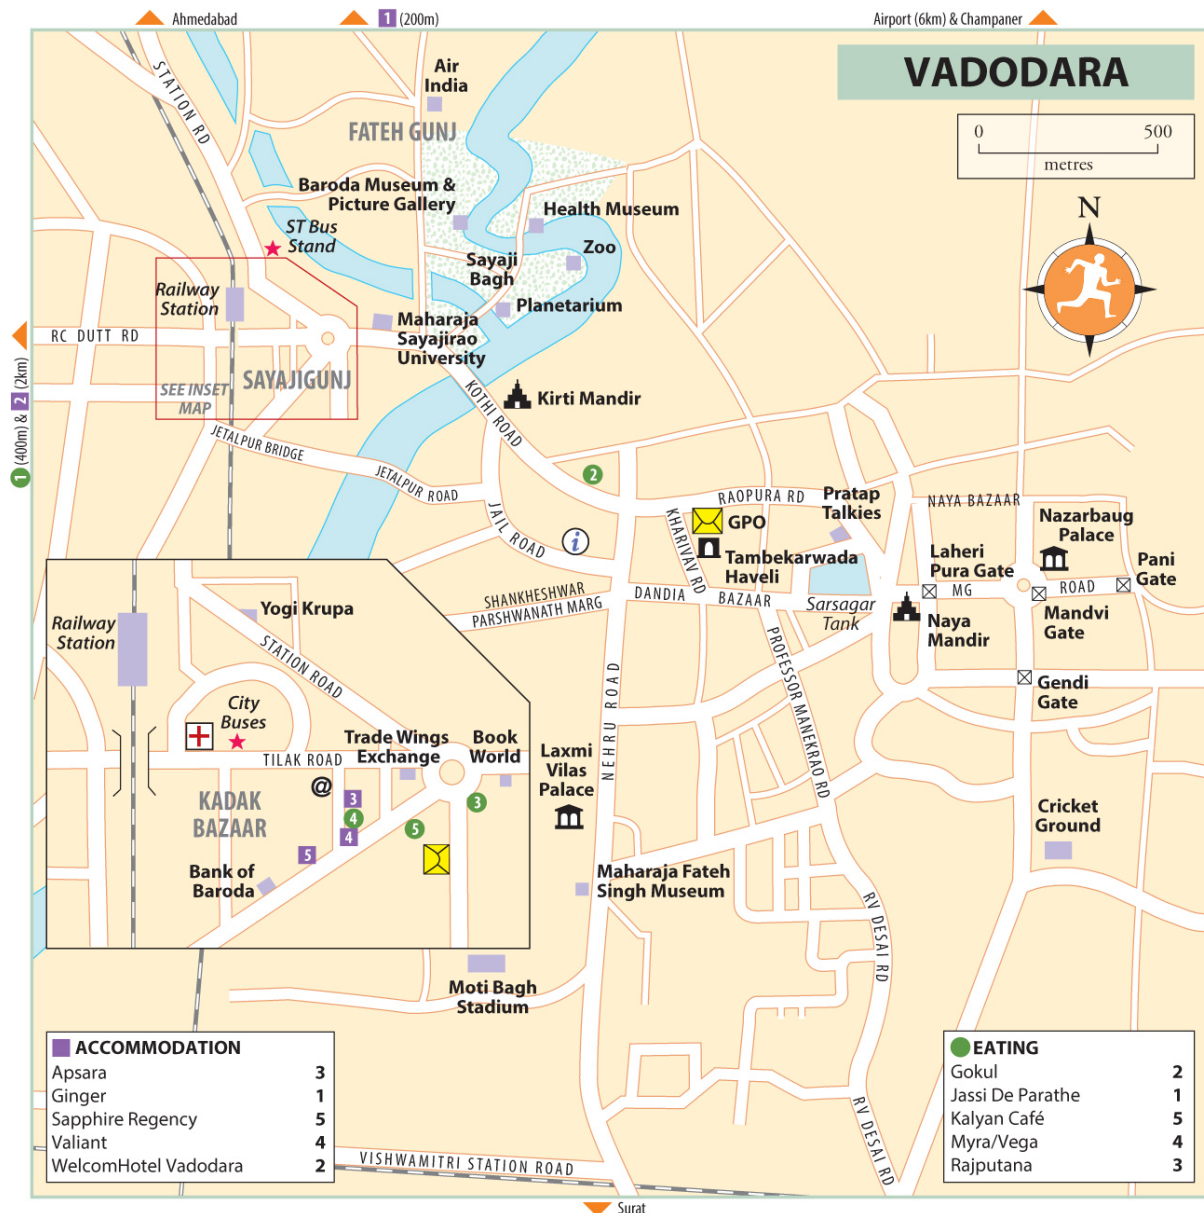

Laxmi Vilas Palace is the most extravagant of Vadodara's palaces, designed by Major Charles “Mad” Mant and commissioned at great expense by Maharaja Sayajirao Gaekwad III in 1890. Audiotours take in its Durbar Hall, armoury and palm-filled mosaic courtyards. The palace grounds are home to the Maharaja Fateh Singh Museum, which holds a modest selection of European, Chinese, Japanese and Indian art, including many epic works of Raja Ravi Varma, personally commissioned by the maharaja of Baroda.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY PLANE VADODARA (BARODA) CIVIL AIRPORT HARNI IS 6KM NORTHEAST OF THE CITY (AROUND ₹100 BY AUTO-RICKSHAW). INDIGO (HARNI RD),

AND AIR INDIA (OLD PADRA RD; ☎026 5233 0466) HAVE DAILY FLIGHTS TO DELHI (1HR 30MIN) AND TO MUMBAI (1HR).

By train Vadodara railway station is in Sayajigunj, within easy walking distance of most of the hotels. The crowded ticket reservation office is upstairs; you can bypass the hassle for a small fee if you buy your ticket from Yogi Krupa on Station Rd (daily 8.30am–8.30pm; ☎966 2798 198). All trains travelling on the main Delhi–Mumbai line stop here. The Suryanagari Express connecting Bandra at Mumbai to Jodhpur stops at Vadodara and runs to Ahmedabad (daily; dep. 7.13pm, arr. 9.05 pm), while the Shatabdi Express #12010 is the quickest train to Mumbai (Mon–Sat; dep. 4.16pm, arr. Mumbai Central 9.20pm).

By bus The ST bus stand is in the west of town, 300m north of the railway station. However, few buses to Mumbai (frequent; 9–10hr) start at Vadodara, so they may be full when they arrive – the train is far better. Private bus companies with frequent services to Mumbai, Rajasthan and Madhya Pradesh line Station Rd.

Destinations (private buses) Ahmedabad (hourly; 3hr); Champaner (hourly; 1hr 30min–2hr); Diu (3 daily; 9hr); Mumbai (hourly; 8hr); Rajkot (hourly; 6hr).

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION GUJARAT TOURISM IS ON NARMADA BHAVAN, JAIL RD (MON–SAT 10.30AM–6PM, CLOSED 2ND & 4TH SAT OF MONTH; ☎026 5242 7489, 🌐 GUJARATTOURISM.COM).

Services Currency exchange is offered at the Trade Wings Exchange Bureau (Alankar Tower, Sayajigunj, opposite Kalyan restaurant), and at the Bank of Baroda (Suraj Plaza, Sayajigunj), which has one of several ATMs in Sayajigunj. The GPO is on Kharivav Rd, near the centre of town; there's also a branch in Sayajigunj (just south of Kalyan).

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Vadodara's numerous mid-range hotels are often full, so book ahead. The few budget options are in serious need of some loving care. Most hotels are in Sayajigunj, just a short walk southeast of the railway station.

Apsara Sayajigunj ☎026 5222 5533. Probably the best of the shoestring options – hardly a ringing endorsement – with ramshackle but (just about) habitable attached rooms and a friendly manager. ₹

Ginger Fatehgunj Camp Rd, 1km north of railway station 🌐 gingerhotels.com. This branch of the über-modern hotel chain has colourful, minimalist, attached rooms, friendly staff and a buffet restaurant. Perks include filtered water dispensers and a branch of Café Coffee Day. ₹

Sapphire Regency Sayajigunj ☎026 5236 1130, 🌐 sapphireregency.in. Business-oriented hotel, with sixty-one sparkling attached rooms and suites (₹4700) that boast flatscreen TVs, stylish bathrooms and white leather seating. Rates include a breakfast buffet. 24hr checkout. ₹₹

Valiant 7th floor, BBC Tower, Sayajigunj 🌐 hotelvaliant.com. Accessed via an aged private lift, Valiant is another decent, if somewhat impersonal, business hotel; the twenty-nine rooms have clean attached bath-rooms and TVs, and some have a/c (₹1600). Breakfast included, plus 24hr checkout and room service. ₹₹

WelcomHotel Vadodara RC Dutt (Racecourse) Rd 🌐 itcwelcomgroup.in. One of Vadodara's few five-stars, with 133 swanky attached rooms, plus an outdoor pool, gym, salon and spa. Rates include a breakfast buffet at its fine restaurant. ₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Gokul Kothi Rd ☎026 5247 7632. Small snack bar serving excellent south Indian dishes, Punjabi and Gujarati thalis and ice cream, all at low prices. Daily 11am–3pm & 7–10pm. ₹

Jassi De Parathe Panorama Complex, Alkapuri 📞997 888 1313. One of the most sought after and authentic Punjabi eatery. There is a queue here for lunch, especially on weekends. Besides the thalis and the parathas, not to be missed are the paneer tikka, the dum biriyani and the dal makhani. Wash them down with special Patiala lassi or a local lighter chaas. Daily 10.30am–11pm ₹₹

Kalyan Café Sayajigunj 📞026 5236 2211 🌐kalyanhotel.com. Lively ‘veg food mall’ with multi-coloured stools and thin, thatched shutters where students come to chat and tuck into anything from chow mein as well as Indian and Chinese snacks. Daily 7am–11pm. ₹

Myra/Vega Surya hotel, Sayajigunj 📞026 5222 6161, 🌐hotelsurya.com. Two superior restaurants under one roof: head to Myra for a hearty Gujarati thali, while Vega offers well-prepared curries, Chinese dishes and a good Punjabi lunch buffet. Vega daily 11.30am–2pm, 3.30–6.30pm & 7.30–11pm; Myra daily 11.30am–2pm & 7.30–11pm. ₹₹

Rajputana Dhanvantri Complex, Sadar Patel Chowk, Sayajigunj 📞026 5662 2799. Tasty north Indian and Chinese dishes (paneer butter masala ₹190) served up in eccentric surroundings; the restaurant is kitted out with hanging chains, bells, dolls and fake wood beams. The Royal Lunch an all-veg feast, on offer from noon to 3pm. Daily 11am–3pm & 6.30–11pm. ₹₹

Champaner and around 49km northeast of Vadodara • Daily 8am–6pm • ₹250 (₹20) • Services from Vadodara (every 15min; 1hr 30min) and Ahmedabad (6 daily; 2hr 45min) arrive at Halol, 7km west of Champaner; hourly buses leave Halol for Champaner’s bus stand, opposite the south gate Rising 820m above the plains of Panchmahal, the almost forgotten city – and World Heritage Site – of CHAMPANER stands overlooked by the solitary hill of Pavagadh. Although the city was fortified centuries earlier, in 1297 the Chauhan rajputs made Champaner their stronghold, fending off three Muslim attacks. It remained Gujarat’s capital until 1536, when the courts moved to Ahmedabad, and Champaner fell into decline. When the British arrived in 1803 it was almost completely overrun by the forest.

Some of the massive city walls with inscribed gateways still stand, encompassing several houses, exquisite mosques and Muslim mausoleums, all imbued with a strange, time-warped atmosphere. The largest mosque is the exuberant Jama Masjid, east of the walls; two minarets stand either side of the main entrance, and the prayer halls are dissected by almost two hundred pillars supporting a splendid carved roof raised in a series of domes.

Pavagadh 4km south of Champaner • Regular shuttle buses depart from opposite Champaner's southern gate to the end of Pavagadh Hill Rd (halfway up the hill; 15min); otherwise it's a 1hr 30min walk from the trailhead opposite Champaner's southern gate to the halfway point – from here, the trail to the summit is a 2hr walk or quick cable-car ride (7am–11pm; ₹100) The patha (pilgrim's route) ascends 4km from Champaner to Pavagadh, passing the old battered gates of the fortress. Roughly midway up, the road ends along with a cluster of snack, souvenir and chai stalls and the cable-car station. Continuing the ascent on foot, pilgrims pass numerous Jain temples and several sacred lakes along the trail to the summit, where the eleventh-century Kalikamata Temple stands, along with a shrine to the Muslim saint Sadan Shah on its roof.

Daman As a Union Territory, independent of the dry state that surrounds it, DAMAN is a weekend target for busloads of Gujarati men who come here to drink themselves senseless. The rest of the time it is quiet but generally disappointing, its pair of grubby beaches subject to massive tides. It does, however, offer fantastic seafood and some well-preserved Portuguese churches, houses and forts. To the north of the Damanganga River is Nani (“Little”) Daman, home to most of the hotels, restaurants and bars, while on the south side is Moti (“Great”) Daman, the old Portuguese quarter.

Brief history Straddling the mouth of the Damanganga River, Daman made an obvious target for the Portuguese, who took it in 1531 from the Sultanate of Gujarat's Ethiopian governor, Siddu Bapita. The governor of Goa, Dom Constantino de Bragança, cajoled the sultan into ceding the territory 28 years later, after which it became the hub of the Portuguese trans-Arabian Sea trade with East Africa. The British occupation of Sindh in the 1830s strangled the town's opium business and led to decline. Colonial rule, however, survived until 1961 when Nehru lost patience with the Portuguese and sent in the troops.

Nani Daman Most of the action in Nani Daman centres on Seaface Road, which runs west from the market past rows of hotels, seedy bars and liquor stores to the beach, which is often too polluted for a comfortable swim or sunbathe. To the south and directly behind the quay, the ramparts of St Jerome's Fort, erected between 1614 and 1672, offer views of the riverfront, dominated by fishing trawlers. The citadel encircles a Catholic church (now a school) and a walled Portuguese cemetery.

Moti Daman The town's most impressive monuments lie in the colonial compound of Moti Daman. Inside its hefty walls, elegant mansions with verandas and colour-washed facades overlook leafy courtyards. Moti Daman's highlights are its churches, among the oldest and best-preserved Christian monuments in Asia. The grandest is the Church of Bom Jesus on the main square. Built in 1603, its gigantic gabled Baroque facade opens onto a lofty vaulted hall. Across the square, the Church of Our Lady of the Rosary is crammed with ornate woodwork. Main Road links Moti Daman's two gates, installed in the 1580s following a Mughal invasion. A small cottage next to the northern Sea Gate was once home to the Portuguese poet Bocage, while atop the bastion facing the southern Land Gate is the cell where condemned prisoners spent their final days.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN THE NEAREST DAMAN STATION TO DAMAN IS AT VAPI; TRAIN TICKETS CAN BE RESERVED AT THE RESERVATION CENTRE (DAILY EXCEPT WED 9.30AM–1.30PM & 4–9PM) OPPOSITE DAMAN’S TOURIST OFFICE. THE SHATABDI EXPRESS #12009 NORTH CONNECTS

AHMEDABAD (DEP. 8.20AM ARR. 12.45PM) AND THE #12010 SOUTH SERVES MUMBAI (DEP. 7.50PM; ARR. 9.20PM).

By bus Daman's main bus stand is east of Seaface Rd in Nani Daman; buses connect to Vapi, 13km east (every 30min; 25min), as do shared taxis (20min; ₹50), private taxis (₹160) and auto-rickshaws (₹120). From Vapi, there are many bus connections, including to Mumbai (12 daily; 3hr 30min–5hr) and Vadodara (14 daily; 4hr 30min–6hr).

INFORMATION TOURIST INFORMATION THE TOURIST OFFICE (MON–FRI 9.30AM–1.30PM & 2–6PM; ☎026 0225 0002, 🌐 DAMANDIUTOURISM.COM) IS ON ZAPABAR MAIN RD, JUST SOUTH OF THE BUS STAND.

Services There are two post offices: one in Nani Daman 100m west of the bus stand and one in Moti Daman opposite the Municipal Council Building. Fly Worldwide Travels (daily 10.30am–7.30pm; ☎093 2773 2779) in the basement of the Maharaja hotel is the best place to change money, and there are several ATMs on Kavi Khabardar Rd.

ACCOMMODATION

MAP

Fern Seaside Light house beach, Moti Daman, 🌐fernhotels.com. Large, luxurious tent rooms that feel like you're in a yurt and glamping. A verdant expanse of an outdoor space overlooks the sea and there are several hammocks to relax with a drink and a book. ₹₹₹₹

Gurukripa Seaface Rd ☎026 0225 5046, 🌐hotelgurukripa.com. Though beginning to show its age, Gurukripa is well run, boasting large a/c attached rooms, plus a roof garden and the Daman Delite (see below) and Sovereign restaurants. ₹₹

Praveg Beach Resort Lighthouse Beach, near Moti Daman Fort 🌐pravegbeachresortdaman.com. This friendly, nautical themed, brightly lit resort, is a minute away from Moti Daman Sunset Point and offers excellent views of the sea and also has a well-stocked bar. ₹₹₹₹

EATING

MAP

Aqua Lounge/Garden Restaurant Royal Garden hotel 🌐hotelroyalgardendaman.in. Aqua, Daman's slickest bar lounge, serves beers and cocktails under subtle neon lights with comfy seating. The restaurant, Garden, features a high-end terrace space serving tasty – if pricey – tandoori pomfret and lobster, as well as Goan meat and veg specialities. Daily 11am–11pm. ₹₹₹

Daman Delite Gurukripa hotel, Seaface Rd 📞026 0225 5046, 🌐 hotelgurukripa.com. The place to come for a slap-up meal: choose from an extensive seafood menu, especially the prawn dishes and finish with a nip of some potent Goan feni (coconut spirit). Daily 7.30am–11pm. ₹₹

< Back to Gujarat

iStock
ICE CREAM SELLERS AT THE GATEWAY OF INDIA

Mumbai

Colaba

Kala Ghoda and around

Fort

Central Bazaar District

Marine Drive

Malabar Hill

Central Mumbai: Mahalakshmi to Byculla

Gorai

Elephanta

Mumbai

Ever since the opening of the Suez Canal in 1869, the principal gateway to the Indian Subcontinent has been Mumbai (Bombay). Your first impression of India is likely to be Mumbai, the arrival point for most international flights. While the buzzing metropolis has a reputation of being noisy and chaotic, it's the land of opportunity for many Indians who move here to fulfil their dreams. Travellers tend to regard time spent here as a rite of passage to be survived rather than savoured. But as the powerhouse of Indian business, industry and trade, and the source of its most seductive media images, the Maharashtrian capital can be a compelling place to kill time. Whether or not you find the experience enjoyable, however, will depend largely on how well you handle the heat, humidity, traffic fumes and relentless crowds of India's most dynamic city.

First impressions of Mumbai tend to be dominated by its chronic shortage of space. Crammed onto a narrow spit of land that curls from the swamp-ridden coast into the Arabian Sea, the city is technically an island, connected to the mainland by bridges and narrow causeways. In less than five hundred years, it has metamorphosed from an aboriginal fishing settlement into a megalopolis of more than sixteen million people – India's largest city and one of the biggest urban sprawls on the planet. Being swept along broad boulevards by endless streams of commuters or jostled by coolies and hand-cart pullers in the teeming bazaars, you'll continually feel as if Mumbai doesn't stop at all.

The roots of the population problem and attendant poverty lie, paradoxically, in the city's enduring ability to create wealth. Mumbai alone generates one third of India's tax income, its port handles half the country's foreign trade, and its movie industry is the most prolific in the world. Symbols of prosperity are everywhere: from the towering homes of the country's popular billionaires to the phalanx of office blocks clustered along Nariman Point, Maharashtra's Manhattan.

The flip side to the success story is the city's much-chronicled poverty. Each day, an estimated five hundred economic refugees pour into Mumbai from the Maharashtrian hinterland. Some find jobs and secure accommodation; many more end up living on the already overcrowded streets, or amid the squalor of some of Asia's largest slums, reduced to rag-picking and begging from cars at traffic lights.

However, while it would definitely be misleading to downplay its difficulties, Mumbai is far from the ordeal some travellers make it out to be. Once you've overcome the major hurdle of finding somewhere to stay, you may begin to enjoy its frenzied pace and crowded, cosmopolitan feel.

Nowhere reinforces your sense of having arrived in Mumbai quite as emphatically as the Gateway of India, the city's defining landmark. Only a five-minute walk north, the Prince of Wales Museum should be next on your list of sightseeing priorities, as much for its flamboyantly eclectic architecture as for the art treasures inside. The museum provides a foretaste of what lies in store just up the road, where the cream of Bartle Frere's Bombay – the University and High Court – line up with the open maidans on one side, and the boulevards of Fort on the other. But for the fullest sense of why the city's founding fathers declared it Urbs Prima in Indis, you should press further north still to visit the Chhatrapati Shivaji Terminus (CST), the high-water mark of India's Raj architecture.

BEST TIME TO VISIT

As a coastal city, the temperature in Mumbai hovers around 30°C for much of the year; the weather is most pleasant from October to March, when it's not too humid. If possible, avoid visiting the city during April and May when it's particularly hot and humid, and during the monsoon (June–Sept), which often causes flooding in the low-lying areas and disruptions to public transport.

iStock
HAJI ALI'S TOMB

Highlights

- ① The Gateway of India Mumbai's defining landmark, and a favourite spot for an evening stroll.
- ② Chhatrapati Shivaji Museum A fine collection of priceless Indian art, from ancient temple sculpture to Mughal armour.
- ③ Maidans \(parks\) Where Mumbai's citizens escape the hustle and bustle to play cricket, eat lunch and hang out.
- ④ CS \(Victoria\) Terminus A fantastically eccentric pile, and the greatest railway station ever built by the British.
- ⑤ Haji Ali's Tomb Mingle with the crowds of Muslim worshippers who flock to the island tomb of Sufi mystic Haji Ali to listen to qawwali music on Thursday evenings.
- ⑥ Elephanta Island Catch a boat across Mumbai harbour to see one of ancient India's most wonderful rock-cut Shiva temples.
- ⑦ Bollywood blockbusters Check out the latest Hindi mega-movie in one of the city centre's gigantic Art Deco cinemas.

HIGHLIGHTS ARE MARKED ON THE MAP

Beyond CST lie the crowded bazaars and Muslim neighbourhoods of central Mumbai, at their liveliest and most colourful around Crawford Market and Mohammed Ali Road. Possibilities for an escape from the crowds include an evening stroll along Marine Drive, bounding the western edge of downtown, or a boat trip out to Elephanta, a rock-cut cave on an island in Mumbai harbour containing a wealth of ancient art.

Brief history

Mumbai originally consisted of seven islands, inhabited by small Koli fishing communities. In 1534, Sultan Bahadur of Ahmedabad ceded the land to the Portuguese, who subsequently handed it on to the English in 1661 as part of the Portuguese Infanta Catherine of Braganza's dowry during her marriage to Charles II. Bombay's safe harbour and strategic commercial position attracted the interest of the East India Company, based at Surat to the north, and in 1668 a deal was struck whereby they leased Bombay from Charles for a pittance.

Elephanta Festival (Feb/March). Two- to three-day festival that sees classical Indian dance performed against the backdrop of the eponymous caves.

Ganesh Chaturthi (Aug/Sept). Ten days celebrating the beloved elephant-headed god Ganesha: street processions, loud music and lots of dancing culminate in idols of the god being immersed in the sea on the final day.

Krishna Janmashtami (Aug). The birthday of Lord Krishna sees mass celebrations in the city, including special decorations and chanting of hymns at temples and homes, and rangoli (colourful floor designs).

As the most prosperous city in the nation, Bombay was at the forefront of the Independence struggle; Mahatma Gandhi used a house here, now a museum, to coordinate the struggle through three decades. Fittingly, the first British colony took pleasure in waving the final goodbye to the Raj, when the last contingent of British troops passed through the Gateway of India in February 1948. Since Independence, Mumbai has prospered as India's commercial capital and the population has grown tenfold, to more than sixteen million. Though the modern city has also been plagued by a deadly mixture of communal infighting and terrorist attacks in the last few decades, Mumbaikers are known across India for their resilience and unshakable spirit.

Tensions due to the increasing numbers of immigrants from other parts of the country, and the resultant overcrowding, has fuelled the rise of the extreme right-wing Maharashtrian party, the Shiv Sena, founded in 1966 by Bal Thackeray, whose death and cremation in 2012 brought the state to a standstill.

Thousands of Muslim Mumbaikars were murdered by Hindu mobs following the destruction of the Babri Masjid in Ayodhya in 1992–93, while in March 1993, ten massive retaliatory bomb blasts killed 260 people. The involvement of Muslim godfather Dawood Ibrahim and the Pakistani secret service was suspected, and both Ibrahim and the Pakistanis have been linked with subsequent atrocities. These include the bomb blasts in August 2003, which killed 107 tourists next to the Gateway of India; the subsequent explosions in July 2006, when coordinated bomb blasts simultaneously blew apart seven packed commuter trains across the city; and, most dramatically, the horrific attacks of November 26, 2008, when a group of rampaging gunmen ran amok across the city, killing 166 people.

Despite these setbacks, Mumbai has prospered like nowhere else in India as a result of the country's ongoing economic liberalization. Following decades of stagnation, the textiles industry has been supplanted by rapidly growing IT, finance, healthcare and back-office support sectors.

Whole suburbs have sprung up to accommodate the affluent new middle-class workforce, with shiny shopping malls and rooftop restaurants. Even so, corruption in politics and business has drained away investment from socially deprived areas. Luxury apartments in Bandra may change hands for half a million dollars or more, but an estimated seven to eight million people (just under fifty percent of Mumbai's population) live in slums with no toilets, on just six percent of the land.

Colaba

Ask any Indian that's travelled to Mumbai and they are likely to talk about Colaba. Mumbai's main tourist enclave is the district of Colaba, at the far southern end of the peninsula. Even though it's a long, sweaty drive from the airport and far from representative of the city as a whole, most visitors base themselves in the neighbourhood and rarely venture beyond it. As the home of the super-swanky Taj Mahal Palace hotel, as well as some of the city's trendiest bars and restaurants, Colaba certainly has its glamorous side. But the dimly lit streets between its dozen or so blocks of dilapidated colonial tenements are also awash with junkies and touts, and after a day of being hissed at from doorways by sellers of "brown sugar" most people head for the bazaars and brighter lights of uptown.

MUMBAI OR BOMBAY?

In 1996 Bombay was renamed Mumbai, as part of a wider policy instigated by the right-wing Maharashtra nationalist Shiv Sena Municipality to replace names of any places, roads and features in the city that had connotations of the Raj. The Shiv Sena asserted that the British term “Bombay” derived from the Marathi title of a local deity, Mumba Devi. In fact, historians are unanimously agreed that the Portuguese, who dubbed the harbour “Bom Bahia” (“Good Bay”) when they first came across it, were responsible for christening the site and that the later British moniker had nothing to do with the aboriginal Hindu earth goddess.

The name change was widely unpopular when it was first imposed, especially among the upper and middle classes, and non-Maharashtrian immigrant communities, who doggedly stuck to Bombay. A couple of decades on, however, “Mumbai” seems to have definitively taken root with the newer generation.

The Gateway of India Commemorating the visit of King George V and Queen Mary in 1911, India’s own honey-coloured majestic looking archway, the Gateway of India, is Colaba’s principal monument and the landmark most iconic of Mumbai in the Indian imagination. Featured in several Hindi and Marathi movies, it was built in 1924 by George Wittet, whose brief was to combine the grandeur of a Roman triumphal arch with decorative motifs from Hindu and Muslim architecture. The resulting structure, every bit a symbol of “power and majesty”, was originally intended to be a ceremonial disembarkation point for passengers alighting from the P&O steamers, but is, ironically, more closely associated with the moment in August 1947 when, amid much pomp and ceremony, the last remaining British soldiers on Indian soil slowly marched to their waiting troop ship as the Union Jack was lowered – to euphoric cheers from a vast crowd. The hour around sunset when thousands of visitors mill about the archway and plaza, munching bhel puri and having their photos taken, is the best time to visit.

The Taj Mahal Palace and Tower Apollo Bunder

Local pride in the face of colonial oppression is the subtext of the Taj Mahal Palace and Tower complex, directly behind the Gateway. Its patron, the Parsi industrialist J.N. Tata, is said to have built the old Taj as an act of revenge after he was refused entry to what was then the best hotel in town, the “whites only” Watson’s. The ban proved to be its undoing. Watson’s disappeared long ago, but the Taj still presides imperiously over the seafront, the preserve of Mumbai’s air-kissing jet set, visiting cricket teams and heads of state. Lesser mortals are allowed in to experience the tea lounge, shopping arcades and vast air-conditioned lobby (there’s also a fabulously luxurious loo off the corridor to the left of the main desk).

Almost as emblematic of Mumbai as the Gateway, the building featured prominently in news coverage of the 2008 terror attacks, in which a team of Islamist jihadis occupied it for three days, killing 31 people. The subsequent refit cost US$40 million and took a year to complete but has restored the hotel to its glittering former splendour.

BOMBAY DUCK

Its name suggests some kind of fowl curry, but Bombay duck is actually a fish – to be precise, the marine lizard fish (Harpalon nehereus), known in the local dialect of Marathi as bombil. How this long, ribbon-like sea creature acquired its English name no one is exactly sure, but the most plausible theory holds that the Raj-era culinary term derives from the Hindustani for mail train, dak. The nasty odour of the dried fish is said to have reminded the British of the less salubrious carriages of the Calcutta–Bombay dak when it pulled into VT after three days and nights on the rails, its wooden carriages covered in the stinking mould that flourished in the monsoonal humidity. You can often smell the pungent odour of Bombil in the air during the monsoon months say many Mumbaikers. The Koli fishermen along this part of the coast use traditional methods of hanging and drying this fish on large racks by the sea. The fish is marinated and batter fried with semolina. Unfortunately, the bombil fish is rapidly disappearing from the city's coastal waters, owing to climate change and overfishing.

Colaba Causeway

Reclaimed in the late nineteenth century from the sea, Colaba's main thoroughfare, Shahid Bhagat Singh Marg, better known as Colaba Causeway, leads south from the tourist enclave towards the quieter military cantonment area. Few tourists stray much further down it than the claustrophobic hawker zone at the top of the street, whose shops are fronted by a line of jewellery, bags and knick-knack stalls, but it's well worth doing so, if only to see the neighbourhood's earthy fresh produce market a couple of blocks south of the Strand cinema.

Sassoon Docks

One of Mumbai's oldest docks that is home to the city's wholesale seafood market, Sassoon Docks, lies a ten-minute walk beyond the southern end of Colaba Causeway. The greasy quaysides are at their liveliest immediately before and after sunrise, when coolies haul the night's catch in crates of crushed ice over gangplanks, while Koli women cluster around the auctioneers. The stench, as overpowering as the noise, comes mostly from bundles of one of the city's traditional exports, Bombay duck. Note that photography is strictly forbidden as the docks are adjacent to a sensitive naval area.

Afghan Memorial Church of St John the Baptist Nanabhai Moos Marg • Buses #3, #11, #103, #123 or #125 or #137 from SBS Marg (Colaba) and VT

The Afghan Memorial Church of St John the Baptist was built in 1847–54 to commemorate British victims of the ill-fated First Anglo-Afghan War between the British Empire and the Emirate of Kabul, in which Elphinstone's expeditionary force was famously wiped out while trying to withdraw from Kabul. Of the 16,500 troops and camp followers who set out on January 1, 1842, only forty survived the massacre, and only one British soldier – William Brydon – arrived alive. The battle-scarred colours of the 44th Regiment of Foot are among those displayed inside the church. It's by no means an impressive structure, with plain walls and wooden beams, but there are a few memorial plaques listing officers killed in action during the conflict.

Kala Ghoda and around Immediately north of Colaba, Kala Ghoda (“Black Horse”) district is named after the large equestrian statue of King Edward VII that formerly stood on the crescent-shaped intersection of MG Road and Subhash Chowk. Flanked by Mumbai's principal museum and art galleries, the neighbourhood today is something of a "cultural enclave" where small galleries, boutiques and top Indian designers occupy its many historic buildings. Fancy stainless-steel interpretive panels now punctuate the district's walkways, and on Sundays in December and January, the Kala Ghoda Fair sees portrait artists, sculptors, potters and mehendi artists plying their trade in the car park fronting the Jehangir Art Gallery.

Chhatrapati Shivaji Museum MG Rd • Daily 10.15am–6pm • charge • www.csmvs.in

The Prince of Wales Museum of Western India, or Chhatrapati Shivaji Maharaj Vastu Sangrahalaya as it was renamed by the Shiv Sena, ranks among the city's most distinctive Raj-era constructions. It stands rather grandly in its own gardens off MG Road, crowned by a massive white Mughal-style dome, beneath which one of India's finest collections of paintings and sculpture is arrayed on three floors. The building was designed by George Wittet, of Gateway of India fame, and stands as the epitome of the hybrid Indo-Saracenic style – regarded in its day as an "educated" interpretation of fifteenth- and sixteenth-century Gujarati architecture, mixing Islamic touches with typically English municipal brickwork.

The ticket price includes a good audio tour, which you collect at the admissions kiosk inside and takes around one hour to complete. The heat and humidity inside the building can be a trial, but the on-site café serves cold drinks and snacks. To exit the museum and re-enter (which you're entitled to do) you'll have to get your ticket stamped in the admissions lobby first.

Ground floor

The Key Gallery in the central hall of the ground floor provides a snapshot of the collection's treasures, including the fifth-century-AD stucco Buddhist figures unearthed by archaeologist Henry Cousens in 1909. The main sculpture room in the east wing displays other fourth- and fifth-century Buddhist artefacts, mostly from the former Greek colony of Gandhara. Important Hindu sculptures include a seventh-century Chalukyan bas-relief depicting Brahma seated on a lotus, and a sensuously carved torso of Mahisasuramardini, the goddess Durga, with tripod raised ready to skewer the demon buffalo.

Upper floors

The main attraction on the first floor of the Chhatrapati Shivaji Museum has to be the museum's famous collection of Indian paintings, which includes works emanating from the Mughal emperors' private collections. More fine medieval miniatures are housed in the Karl & Meherbai Khandalavala Gallery, on the renovated east wing of this floor, along with priceless pieces of Ghandaran sculpture, Chola bronzes and some of the country's finest surviving examples of medieval Gujarati woodcarving. Indian coins are the subject of the House of Laxmi Gallery, also in the east wing, while the second floor showcases a vast array of Oriental ceramics and glassware. Finally, among the grisly weapons and pieces of armour stored in a small side gallery at the top of the building, look out for the cuirass, helmet and jade dagger which belonged to the Mughal emperor Akbar. There are also impressive displays of handlooms that include various styles of sarees and traditional wear.

Jehangir Art Gallery MG Rd • Daily 11am–7pm • Free

Technically in the same compound as the Prince of Wales Museum, though approached from further up MG Road, the Jehangir Art Gallery is Mumbai's longest-established venue for contemporary art, with five small halls specializing in twentieth-century arts and crafts from around the world. You never know what you're going to find – most exhibitions last only a week, exhibits are usually for sale and the artists themselves are often found hanging around their hall and most will happily chat about their work with visitors.

National Gallery of Modern Art MG Rd, facing the museum and Mukharji Chowk • Tues–Sun 11am–6pm • charge •
ngmaindia.gov.in

Charting the development of modern Indian art from its beginnings in the 1950s to the present day, the National Gallery of Modern Art (NGMA) holds a mix of permanent and temporary exhibitions. The works are arrayed over five wonderfully light, semicircular galleries, interconnected by teak-and-chrome staircases. The installations tend to be a lot more adventurous than those you'll find in the Jehangir across the road.

Around Oval Maidan Northeast of Kala Ghoda stretches the yawning expanse of Oval Maidan, where impromptu cricket matches are held almost every day, against a backdrop of giant palms and even taller Raj-era buildings. Green during the monsoons and parched yellow for the rest of year, it is flanked on its eastern side by some of Mumbai's finest Victorian piles, dating from the high point of British power. On its western side is an ensemble of fabulous Art Deco apartment buildings. The entire area was inscribed on the UNESCO World Heritage List in 2018 as a testimony to the various phases of modernization Mumbai has undergone in the last three hundred years.

High Court

Karmaveer Bhaurao Patil Marg

Dominating the east side of Oval Maidan is the Mumbai High Court, originally the Old Secretariat, which the Raj historian G.W. Forrest described in 1903 “a massive pile whose main features have been brought from Venice, but all the beauty has vanished in trans-shipment”. With its gigantic, pitched roofs and balconies shaded by enormous rattan blinds, the building has changed little since. Take a peek inside, where lawyers in black gowns, striped trousers and white tabs bustle up and down the staircases, and office desks are piled high with dusty beribboned bundles of documents – a vision of Indian bureaucracy at its most Dickensian.

Mumbai University MG Rd

Across AS D'Mello Road from the High Court stand the two major buildings comprising Mumbai University (established 1857), which were designed in England by Sir Gilbert Scott, architect of the Gothic extravaganza that is London's St Pancras railway station. Funded by the Parsi philanthropist Cowasjee “Readymoney” Jehangir, whose white marble statue appears in front of it, the Convocation Hall greatly resembles a church. Above the entrance, a huge circular stained-glass window features a wheel with spokes of Greek pilasters separating the signs of the zodiac. With all its polished teak and brass, the interior, currently closed to visitors for security reasons, could have been transported from a Victorian public school in the home counties of England. Gilbert Scott's 79.2m-high Rajabhai Clock Tower is said to have been modelled on Giotto's campanile in Florence and formerly chimed tunes such as Rule Britannia and Home Sweet Home.

Fort

East of Oval Maidan stretches the spectacular Fort district, site of Mumbai's original British settlement and the first East India Company fort – hence the name. The sloping ramparts, moats and fortified gateways were pulled down in the mid-nineteenth century following the demise of the French threat to British supremacy in India, but this is still the commercial hub of the southern city. It's a great area for aimless wandering, with plenty of old-fashioned cafés, department stores and street stalls crammed in between the imposing Victorian buildings.

Horniman Circle

At the heart of the Fort district lies the spacious Horniman Circle, conceived in 1860 as the centrepiece of a newly planned Bombay by the then Municipal Commissioner, Charles Forjett, on the site of Bombay's "Green". Later, the space served as a cotton market and parade ground. The garden's wrought-iron gates and fences enclose a haven of vegetation where office workers bring their lunches and newspapers. Surrounding it are ranks of grand buildings whose paved arcades, crowned by grim-faced keystone heads, today provide accommodation for families of street sleepers.

The Asiatic Society Library Shahid Bhagat Singh Marg • Mon–Sat 10am–5.30pm • asiaticsociety.org.in

The splendid Neoclassical building on the east side of Horniman Circle served as the city's former Town Hall, one of the few buildings in Mumbai that pleased the English writer and philosopher Aldous Huxley: "(Among) so many architectural cads and pretentious bounders," he wrote in 1948, "it is almost the only gentleman." The Doric edifice, dating from 1833, was originally built to house the vast collection of the Asiatic Society Library, which is still open to the public. Save for the addition of electricity, little has changed here since the institution was founded. Reading rooms, lined with wrought-iron loggias and teak bookcases, are filled with scholars poring over mouldering tomes dating from the Raj. Among the ten thousand rare and valuable manuscripts stored here is a fourteenth-century first edition of Dante's Divine Comedy, said to be worth around US$3 million, which the Society famously refused to sell to Mussolini. Visitors are welcome but should sign in at the Head Librarian's desk on the ground floor.

St Thomas' Cathedral Veer Nariman Rd • Daily 7am–6pm

Just west off Horniman Circle stands the diminutive St Thomas' Cathedral, reckoned to be the oldest British building in Mumbai, blending Classical and Gothic styles. After the death of its founding father, Governor Aungier, the project was abandoned; the walls stood 5m high for forty-odd years until enthusiasm was rekindled in the second decade of the eighteenth century. It was finally opened on Christmas Day, 1718, complete with the essential “cannonball-proof roof”. The whitewashed and polished brass-and-wood interior looks much the same at it did in the eighteenth century. Lining the walls are memorial tablets to British parishioners, many of whom died young, either from disease or in battle.

DABBAWALAS

Mumbai's size and inconvenient shape create all kind of hassles for its working population. One thing the daily tidal wave of commuters does not have to worry about, however, is where to find an inexpensive and wholesome home-cooked lunch. The members of the Nutan Mumbai Tiffin Box Suppliers Charity Trust (NMTSCT), known colloquially as “dabbawalas”, see to that. Every day, around 5000 dabbawalas deliver freshly cooked meals from 200,000 suburban kitchens to offices in the downtown area. Each is prepared early in the morning by a wife or mother while her husband or son is enduring the crush on the train. She arranges a meal that ordinarily consists of rice, dal, subzi, curd and chapathis or parathas into cylindrical steel trays, stacks them on top of one another and clips them together with a neat little handle which makes a typical Indian lunchbox.

This tiffin box is the linchpin of the whole operation. When the runner calls to collect it in the morning, he uses a special colour code on the lid to tell him where the lunch has to go. At the end of his round, all the boxes are carried to the nearest railway station and handed over to other dabbawalas for the trip into town. Between leaving the cook and reaching its final destination, the tiffin box will pass through at least half a dozen different pairs of hands, carried on heads, shoulder-poles, bicycle handlebars and in the brightly decorated handcarts that glide with such insouciance through the midday traffic.

WHERE TO FIND THEM TO CATCH THEM IN ACTION, HEAD FOR CST (VT) OR CHURCHGATE STATIONS AROUND LATE MORNING, WHEN THE TIFFIN BOXES ARRIVE IN THE CITY CENTRE TO A CHORUS OF “LAFKA! LAFKA” – “HURRY! HURRY!” – AS THE DABBAWALAS RUSH TO MAKE THEIR LUNCH-HOUR DEADLINES. NEARLY ALL COME FROM THE SAME SMALL VILLAGE NEAR PUNE AND ARE RELATED TO ONE ANOTHER. THEY COLLECT AROUND ₹2000–4000 PER MONTH IN TOTAL.

One of the reasons the system survives in the face of competition from trendy fast-food outlets and delivery companies is that dabba lunches still work out a good deal cheaper, saving precious rupees for the middle-income workers who use the system. Competition has recently arisen from high-end takeaway joints in Mumbai, some of whom offer freshly prepared gourmet food delivered in tiffin tins. But the dabbawalas are not sitting on their heels in the face of the new competition, with a website (mumbaidabbawala.in) to facilitate booking online and by SMS. An excellent initiative called “Share my Dabba” has also been launched to prevent wastage of uneaten food and distribute it to the needy.

Chhatrapati Shivaji Terminus (Victoria Terminus) Heritage Tours available with companies like Viator and Bombay Heritage Walks that include this terminus in their tour.

Inspired by St Pancras Station in London, F.W. Stevens designed Victoria Terminus, the barmiest of Mumbai's buildings, as a paean to "progress". Built in 1887 as the largest British edifice in India, it's an extraordinary amalgam of domes, spires, Corinthian columns and minarets that was succinctly defined by the journalist James Cameron as "Victorian-Gothic-Saracenic-Italianate-Oriental-St Pancras-Baroque". In keeping with the current re-Indianization of the city's roads and buildings, this icon of British imperial architecture has been renamed Chhatrapati Shivaji Terminus or CST as the locals also abbreviate it in honour of the famous Maratha warlord. The new name is a bit of a mouthful, however, and locals mostly still refer to it as VT (pronounced "vitee").

Few of the three million or so passengers who fill almost a thousand trains every day notice the mass of decorative detail. A lion and tiger stand guard at the entrance, and the exterior is festooned with sculptures executed at the Bombay Art School by the Indian students of John Lockwood Kipling, Rudyard's father. Among them are mythical beasts, monkeys, plants and medallions of important personages. To minimize the sun's impact, stained glass was employed, decorated with locomotives and elephant images. Above it all, the statue of "Progress" stands atop the massive central dome.

A polished black marble memorial next to the station's main entrance commemorates the 58 passengers and staff gunned down by terrorists during the 26/11 attack.

Central Bazaar District Sir JJ Rd, 1km north of CST (VT) station Lining the anarchic jumble of streets beyond Lokmanya Tilak Road is Mumbai's bustling Central Bazaar District – a fascinating counterpoint to the wide and Westernized streets of downtown. In keeping with traditional divisions of guild, caste and religion, most streets specialize in one or two types of merchandise. If you lose your bearings, the best way out is to ask someone to wave you in the direction of Mohammed Ali Road, the busy road through the heart of the district (now surmounted by a gigantic flyover), from where you can hail a cab.

Crawford Market

Crawford (aka Mahatma Phule) Market, ten minutes' walk north of CST, is an old British-style covered market dealing in just about every kind of fresh food and domestic animal imaginable. Before venturing inside, stop to admire the friezes wrapped around its exterior – a Victorian vision of sturdy-limbed peasants toiling in the fields, as designed by Rudyard Kipling's father, Lockwood, principal of the Bombay School of Art in 1865.

The main hall is still divided into different sections: pyramids of polished fruit and vegetables down one aisle, sacks of nuts or oil-tins full of herbs and spices down another. Around the back of the market, in the atmospheric wholesale wing, the pace of life is more hectic. Here, noisy crowds of coolies mill about with large reed-baskets held high in the air (if they are looking for work) or on their heads (if they've found some). Animal lovers should steer well clear of the market's eastern wing, where all kinds of unfortunate creatures are crammed into undersized cages; beyond the pet section, the meat hall is not for the squeamish.

Jama Masjid and Zaveri Bazaar Sheikh Memon St

The streets immediately north of Crawford Market and west of Mohammed Ali Road form one vast bazaar area, dominated by the domes and minarets of the chintzy white Jama Masjid, or “Friday Mosque” (c.1800). The nucleus of the building is an ancient water tank, which now serves as an ablution pool. Pillars rise directly from the murky green pond to support the main body of the mosque, whose halls are reached by stairways. Cutting north from the Jama Masjid is Zaveri Bazaar, the jewellery market where Mumbaikars come to shop for dowries and wedding attire. An estimated 65 percent of all India’s gold, silver and precious gems trading is carried out in the brightly lit emporia lining the market’s lanes.

Mumba Devi Temple Sheikh Memon St, Bhuleshwar

An important centre of Devi worship, the Mumba Devi Temple rises from one of the most densely populated square miles on the planet – a maze of twisting lanes and alleyways, lined by five- or six-storey wooden-balconied tenement buildings. The present structure, with its tapering polychrome sanctuary tower, dates only from the nineteenth century, but the black-stone deity inside it, patron goddess of the city’s Koli fisherfolk, is much older. Originally, she occupied a shrine further south, just outside the walls of the East India Company’s fort, but that site was commandeered to make way for VT station. Colourful stalls selling floral offerings and other religious paraphernalia line the streets around it, where you’ll encounter plenty of saffron-clad sadhus, their foreheads smeared with vibrant red vermilion powder.

Marine Drive

Netaji Subhash Chandra Marg, better known as Marine Drive, is Mumbai’s seaside prom, an eight-lane highway with a wide pavement built in the 1920s on reclaimed land. The whole 3km stretch – still often referred to by Mumbaikars as the “Queen’s Necklace” after the row of lights that illuminates its spectacular curve at night – is a favourite place for a stroll; the promenade next to the sea has uninterrupted views virtually the whole way along, while the peeling, mildewed Art Deco apartment blocks on the land side remain some of the most desirable addresses in the city.

Chowpatty Beach

Situated at the top of Marine Drive, Chowpatty Beach is a Mumbai institution. On evenings and weekends, Mumbaikars gather here in large numbers – not to swim (the sea is isn't suitable for swimming) but to wander, sit by the marina and eat bhel puri and gaze across the bay while the kids ride a pony or a rusty Ferris wheel.

At the back of the beach, a bronze bust recalls the bravery of Tukaram Omble, the policeman who lost his life capturing terrorist Ajmal Kasab during the 2008 attacks. Omble held on to the gunman's AK47 long enough for his colleagues to overpower the attacker, but was shot several times in the process and later died of his injuries. To many Mumbaikers, Chowpatty is a favourite spot during sunset.

Mani Bhavan

19 Laburnum Rd • Daily 9.30am–5.30pm • Free, with optional donation • www.gandhi-manibhavan.org • If coming by taxi, ask for the nearby Gamdevi Police Station A ten-minute walk north from the middle of Chowpatty Beach along Pandita Ramabai Marg, Mani Bhavan was Gandhi's Bombay base between 1917 and 1934. Set in a leafy upper-middle-class road, the house has now been converted into a permanent memorial to the Mahatma. The lovingly maintained polished-wood interior is crammed with historic photos and artefacts – the most disarming of which is a friendly letter to Hitler suggesting world peace.

THE TOWERS OF SILENCE HIGH ON MALABAR HILL, SCREENED FROM PRYING EYES BY A HIGH WALL AND DENSE CURTAIN OF VEGETATION (AND STRICTLY CLOSED TO VISITORS), STAND THE SEVEN TOWERS OF SILENCE, WHERE THE CITY'S DWINDLING ZOROASTRIAN COMMUNITY (BETTER KNOWN AS PARSIS) DISPOSE OF THEIR DEAD. IT IS THE MOST FUNDAMENTAL PRECEPTS OF THE 3000-YEAR-OLD PARSI FAITH, FIRST IMPORTED TO INDIA WHEN ZOROASTRIANS FLED FROM SASSANID PERSIA TO ESCAPE ARAB PERSECUTION IN THE SEVENTH CENTURY. SO INSTEAD OF BEING BURIED OR CREMATED, THE BODIES ARE LAID OUT ON TOP OF OPEN-TOPPED, CYLINDRICAL TOWERS, CALLED

DOKHMAS, FOR THEIR BONES TO BE CLEANED BY VULTURES AND THE WEATHER. THE REMAINS ARE THEN PLACED IN AN OSSUARY AT THE CENTRE OF THE TOWER. OVER THE LAST TWO DECADES AS MUMBAI CONTINUES TO GROW AND EXPAND, A LACK OF VULTURES THREATENS THE CITY'S TOWERS OF SILENCE.

Malabar Hill

Its shirt-tails swathed in greenery and brow bristling with gigantic skyscrapers, Malabar Hill, the promontory enfolding Chowpatty Beach at the north end of Back Bay, has been south Mumbai's most desirable neighbourhood almost since the city was founded. The British were quick to see the potential of its salubrious breezes and sweeping sea views, constructing bungalows at the tip of what was then a separate island – the grandest of them the Government House, originally erected in the 1820s and now the seat of the serving governor of Maharashtra, Raj Bhavan.

Although none of Malabar's landmarks can be classed as unmissable, its Hindu shrines and surviving colonial-era residences form an interesting counterpoint to the modernity towering on all sides. Bal Gangadhar Kher Marg (formerly Ridge Road) is the district's main artery. You can follow it from Mumbai's principal Jain Temple, with its mirror-encrusted interior dedicated to Adinath, all the way to the tip of the headland, where the famous Walukeshwar Temple stands as the city's oldest Hindu shrine surviving in situ. According to the Ramayana, Rama fashioned a lingam out of sand to worship Shiva here, which over the centuries became one of the Konkan's most important pilgrimage centres. Today's temple, erected in 1715 after the original was destroyed by the Portuguese, is of less note than the Banganga Tank below it – a rectangular lake lined by stone ghats and numerous crumbling shrines.

Central Mumbai: Mahalakshmi to Byculla
The centre of Mumbai, beyond Malabar Hill, is mostly made up of working-class neighbourhoods: a huge mosaic of dilapidated tenements, markets and industrial eyesores left over from the Victorian cotton boom. For relief from the urban cauldron, residents travel west to the seashore to worship at the Mahalakshmi Temple (if they're Hindus) or the island tomb of Haji Ali (if they're Muslims). Both make great excursions from south Mumbai, and can be combined with a foray across town to the recently revamped Dr Bhau Daji Lad Museum in Byculla, calling en route at the Mahalakshmi dhobi ghats – one of the city's more offbeat sights.

Mahalakshmi Temple Just off Bhulabhai Desai Rd • Daily 6am–10pm • Buses #81, #83, #86 or #132 will take you from Colaba to Haji Ali, within a stone's throw of the Mahalakshmi Temple • mahalakshmi-temple.com

Mumbai's busy Mahalakshmi Temple, dedicated to the Hindu goddess of wealth and prosperity – the city's most sought-after attributes – stands on the shoreline off the frenetic Bhulabhai Desai intersection. The approach is via an alley lined with stalls selling spectacular floral offerings and devotional pictures. A heavy security cordon has to be crossed before entering the main shrine, where a statue of the devi glittering with gold jewellery and bangles, and seated astride a tiger and demon, is propitiated by a constant stream of worshippers. While you're here, find out what your future holds by joining the huddle of devotees pressing rupees onto the rear wall of the shrine room. If your coin sticks, you'll be rich.

Haji Ali's Tomb

Just off Lala Lajpatrai Marg • Daily 5.30am–10pm • Buses #81, #83, #86 or #132 will take you from Colaba to Haji Ali • hajialidargah.in Occupying a small islet in the bay just north of the Mahalakshmi Temple is the mausoleum of the Muslim saint, Afghan mystic Haji Ali Bukhari. The site is a great place to head on Thursday and Friday evenings, when large crowds gather around the promontory to watch the sunset and listen to live qawwali music.

The tomb is connected to the mainland by a narrow concrete causeway, only passable at low tide. When not immersed in water, its entire length is lined with beggars supplicating passers-by and chanting verses from the Koran. Non-Muslims are welcome, but all visitors need to keep well covered (a headscarf should be worn by women).

Haji Ali Juice Centre Daily 5am–1am

The traditional way to round off a trip to the mausoleum is to take a glass or two of fresh fruit juice at the legendary Haji Ali Juice Centre, just to the right of the entrance to the causeway. Customers either cram into the tiny dining hall or else order from their cars.

Mahalakshmi dhobi ghats Bapurao Jagtap Marg • Buses #124 (from Colaba) and #153 (from Haji Ali) go to the dhobi ghats; trains run from Churchgate to Mahalakshmi station. Emerging from the station, turn left and follow the road over the rail tracks – the ghats will be below you on your left (hawkers from the nearby slums will show you the way) On the face of it, the idea of going out of your way to ogle Mumbai's dirty washing sounds like a very strange thing to do. If you're passing, however, the Mahalakshmi dhobi ghats, near Mahalakshmi suburban railway station, are a sufficiently memorable spectacle to break a trip across town to see. Washing from all over the city is brought here each morning to be soaked in concrete vats and thumped by the resident dhobis. A trickle of curious foreign tourists gathers on Mahalakshmi Road bridge for this unique photo opportunity.

DHARAVI: THE £700 MILLION SLUM SPRAWLING OVER 550 ACRES, DHARAVI'S MAZE OF DILAPIDATED SHACKS AND NARROW ALLEYWAYS IS HOME TO MORE THAN A MILLION PEOPLE. AN AVERAGE OF FIFTEEN THOUSAND OF THEM SHARE A SINGLE TOILET. INFECTIOUS DISEASES SUCH AS DYSENTERY, MALARIA AND HEPATITIS ARE RIFE; AND THERE AREN'T ANY HOSPITALS.

Despite the poverty, Dharavi has been described by the UK's Observer newspaper as "one of the most inspiring economic models in Asia": hidden amid the warren of ramshackle huts and squalid open sewers are an estimated fifteen thousand single-room factories, employing around a quarter of a million people and turning over a staggering £700 million (US$1 billion) annually. The majority of small businesses in Dharavi are based on waste recycling of one kind or another. Slum residents young and old scavenge materials from across the city and haul them back in huge bundles to be reprocessed. Aluminium cans are smelted down, soap scraps salvaged from schools and hotels are reduced in huge vats, leather reworked, disused oil drums restored and discarded plastic reshaped and remoulded. An estimated ten thousand workers are employed in the plastics sector alone. Ranging from ₹3000–15,000 per month, wages are well above the national average, and though Dharavi may not have any health centres, it does hold a couple of banks, and even ATMs.

As India's most iconic slum, Dharavi has also found an unlikely niche in the history of Indian and international cinema. The district provided many of the settings for Danny Boyle's multiple-Oscar-winning Slumdog Millionaire and Zoya Akhtar's Gully Boy.

Despite its burgeoning international fame, Dharavi's future remains uncertain. The entire district is living in the shadow of a proposed US$40 billion redevelopment project which aims to bulldoze the entire slum. In return for agreeing to eviction, residents will be entitled to apartment space in new multi-storey tower blocks. Schools, roads, hospitals and other amenities have also been promised. Opposition to the scheme among Dharavites has been all but unanimous, however, with slum dwellers insisting any future development should focus not on erecting a swanky new suburb but on improving existing conditions.

ANTILIA

If Mumbai is notorious for its poverty, then the city is no less famous for the glittering wealth of its richest inhabitants, and they don't come richer than Mukesh Ambani, chairman of the Reliance Industries petrochemical corporation. With a net worth of US$84 billion, Ambani is officially India's richest man, and his towering, futuristic home on Altamount Rd in the Cumballa Hill district of south-central Mumbai is said to be the world's most valuable piece of real estate. The Jenga-like, 27-storey skyscraper – known as Antilia – enjoys a majestic view over the Arabian Sea on one side, and Dharavi slum area on the other. Completed in 2010, it cost an estimated US$500–600 million to build and is valued at somewhere between US$1–2 billion. Six floors are given over to a 168-car parking area. The building boasts nine lifts, three helipads, a glittering ballroom with solid silver balustrades and ceilings festooned with crystal chandeliers, hanging gardens of hydroponic plants and an ice room where the Ambanis can beat the summer heat in flurries of man-made snow.

Reaction to this behemoth on Mumbai's skyline has been mixed, to say the least. While most of the locals and sightseers regard it with wide-eyed wonder, members of India's intelligentsia – from industrialist J.R.

Tata to novelist Arundhati Roy – have been less than complimentary, deploring the Ambanis’ apparent lack of social conscience.

Dr Bhau Dadji Lad Museum Rani Baug, Dr Ambedkar Rd, Byculla East • Daily except Wed 10am–6pm • charge • Free tour 11.30am on weekends • Buses #1, #6 or #7 from Colaba •
bdlmuseum.org

Way out in the post-industrial area of Byculla, the Dr Bhau Dadji Lad Museum was originally opened in 1872 as the Victoria and Albert Museum – “one of the greatest boons the British have conferred on India”, according to contemporary reports. The elegant, Palladian-style building, set amid classically planned botanical gardens (now home to a rather depressing zoo) has been restored to its former glory – see the story of the pain-staking process on a video in the café out the back – and houses a collection of fascinating lithographs, prints, documents, uniforms and models relating to the development of Bombay, including a replica of those mysterious Towers of Silence. In the adjacent garden, the carved stone pachyderm after which the Portuguese are said to have named Elephanta Island presides over a collection of forlorn British statues, moved here during Independence beyond the reach of angry mobs. Closed at the time of writing for maintenance.

Gorai

Just beyond the northern limits of Mumbai, Gorai is a low-lying, sparsely populated peninsula separated at its tip from the mainland by tidal creek. Among the city’s residents, this isolated green belt, settled by Portuguese priests and Catholic converts in the sixteenth century, is famous for two starkly contrasting attractions: if you’ve a day to kill in Mumbai between flights, and can’t face exploring the city, either the Esselworld amusement park complex or adjacent Global Vipassana Pagoda might be worth considering – though be warned that getting to and from Gorai from downtown can take upwards of two hours at peak times.

Esselworld

Daily 10am–7pm • charge • www.esselworld.in Mumbai's answer to Disneyland, Esselworld is the first-choice destination for local families who can afford the trip – an island of American-style fun and frolics on the city's green fringe. It consists of two parts: the Esselworld amusement park, with its white-knuckle roller coasters, gentler kiddies' rides, ice rink and bowling alley; and the adjacent Water Kingdom, a vast complex of aqua slides featuring the world's largest wave pool, a huge play lagoon and some brilliant family-friendly rides.

Global Vipassana Pagoda Daily dawn–dusk • globalpagoda.org

Chugging across Gorai Creek on the ferry, you could be forgiven for thinking yourself on a river somewhere in Southeast Asia. From the far bank, the ethereal, gold-painted Global Vipassana Pagoda rises like something you'd expect to see shimmering over the waters of Burma's Ayeyarwady Delta. In fact, the pagoda was built as a replica of the resplendent Shwedagon Paya in Yangon (Rangoon), Myanmar's most venerated Buddhist monument. Its gleaming golden pinnacle soars 99m – the height of a thirty-storey building – above the shoreline peaks and the adjacent amusement park, making it the world's largest freestanding dome, taller even than Vijayapura's Gol Gumbaz.

An entranceway leads to a cavernous meditation hall measuring 280m in diameter and capable of accommodating eight thousand worshippers. Genuine relics of the Buddha, donated by the government of Sri Lanka and the Mahabodhi Society of Bodh Gaya, are enshrined in the upper dome above the hall. Other structures in the landscaped complex include a 21m-tall seated Buddha carved from a single piece of marble, a massive entrance gateway and towers containing a colossal Burmese-style bell and gong.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE BY TRAIN AND LAUNCH GORAI MAKE FOR BORIVALI OR MALAD STATION ON THE SUBURBAN TRAIN LINE. YOU CAN PICK UP BEST BUS #294 OR
#247 TO GORAI CREEK FROM BOTH STATIONS – OR BETTER STILL, JUMP IN AN AUTO-RICKSHAW FOR THE 4KM TRIP TO THE RIVER. ONCE AT THE JETTY, TAKE THE ESSELWORLD LAUNCH (₹50), NOT THE CHEAPER LOCAL GORAI FERRY, AS THE LATTER DROPS YOU A LONG WAY FROM THE PARK.

By bus Modern Tours and Travels (☎022 2353 0888) run a private service (2hr 30min; ₹700 plus ferry) that also runs direct to Esselworld from Colaba each day, departing from outside the Regal Cinema at 8.30am. Book in advance.

By taxi Taxis charge around ₹1000 for the 68km journey from Colaba, and can be in short supply for the return leg.

Elephanta

An hour's ride northeast across Mumbai harbour from Colaba, the island of Elephanta offers the best escape from the seething claustrophobia of the city – as long as you time your visit to avoid the weekend deluge of noisy day-trippers. Populated only by a small fishing community, it was originally known as Gherapura, the “city of Ghara priests”, until the island was renamed in the sixteenth century by the Portuguese in honour of the carved elephant they found at the port – now on display outside the Dr Bhau Dadji Lad Museum in Byculla. Its chief attraction is its unique cave temple, whose massive Trimurti (three-faced) Shiva sculpture is as fine an example of Hindu architecture as you'll find anywhere.

ARRIVAL AND INFORMATION BY BOAT BOATS ELEPHANTA SET OFF EVERY 30MIN FROM THE GATEWAY OF INDIA (DAILY
9AM–3PM; RETURNING FROM ELEPHANTA NOON–5.30PM; BOOK THROUGH THE GATEWAY PLAZA KIOSKS NEAR THE GATEWAY OF INDIA); NOTE THAT BOATS MAY BE CANCELLED DUE TO ADVERSE WEATHER CONDITIONS
DURING THE MONSOON. LUXURY LAUNCHES (₹200 RETURN ADULTS; ₹125 CHILDREN) INCLUDE A 30MIN TOUR WITH A

GOVERNMENT GUIDE – ASK FOR YOUR GUIDE AT THE CAVE’S TICKET OFFICE ON ARRIVAL. ORDINARY ECONOMY LAUNCHES (₹125 RETURN ADULTS; ₹95 CHILDREN) DON’T INCLUDE THE GUIDED TOUR AND ARE USUALLY MORE PACKED. THERE’S A TOURIST TAX OF ₹5 PAYABLE ON ARRIVAL, AND A FURTHER ADMISSION CHARGE OF ₹10.

Information Cool drinks and souvenir stalls line the way up the hill, and, at the top, the MTDC Chalukya restaurant offers substandard food and warm beer, served on a terrace with good views out to sea. If you don’t want to walk up the 120 steps to the caves there’s a miniature train up from the jetty (₹10 return). Note that you cannot stay overnight on the island and that the caves are closed on Mondays.

The cave

Tues–Sun 9.30am–5pm • charge

Elephanta’s impressive excavated eighth-century cave, covering an area of approximately 5000 square metres, is reached by climbing more than one hundred steps lined by souvenir and knick-knack stalls (try the coal roasted corn if you can), to the top of the hill. Inside, the massive columns, carved from solid rock, give the deceptive impression of being structural. To the right as you enter, note the panel of Nataraj, Shiva as the cosmic dancer. Though spoiled by the Portuguese who, it is said, used it for target practice, the panel remains magnificent: Shiva’s face is rapt, and with one of his left hands he removes the veil of ignorance. Opposite is a badly damaged panel of Lakulisha, Shiva with a club (lakula).

IN TRANSIT

